STATEMENT OF THE OWNERSHIP, MANAGEMENT, CIRCULATION, ETC., REQUIRED BY THE ACT OF CONGRESS OF AUGUST 24, 1912.

Of St. Joe News, published weekly at St. Joe, Indiana, for April 1, 1916.
State of Indiana, County of DeKalb, ss:

Before me, a Justice of the Peace in and for the state and county aforesaid, personally appeared Fred B. Leighty, who, having been duly sworn according to law, deposes and says that he is the Editor and Publisher of the St. Joe News, and that the following is, to the best of his knowledge and belief, a true statement of the ownership, management, etc., of the aforesaid publication for the date shown in the above caption, required by the Act of August 24, 1912, embodied in section 443, Postal Laws and Regulations, printed on the reverse of this form, to wit:

1. That the names and addresses of the publisher, editor, managing editor, and business manager are:

Publisher, Fred B. Leighty, St. Joe, Ind.

Editor, Fred B. Leighty, St. Joe, Ind.

Managing Editor, Fred B. Leighty, St. Joe, Ind.

Business Manager, Fred B. Leighty, St. Joe, Ind.

2. That the owners are:

Fred B. Leighty, St. Joe, Ind.

3. That the known bondholders, mortgagees, and other security holders owning or holding 1 per cent or more of total amount of bonds, mortgages, or other securities are:

None.

4. That the two paragraphs next above, giving the names of the owners, stockholders, and security holders, if any, contain not only the list of stockholders and security holders as they appear upon the boods of the company but also, in cases where the stockholder or security holder appears upon the books of the company as trustee or in any other fiduciary relation, the name of the person or corporation for whom such trustee is acting, is given; also that the said two paragraphs contain statements embracing affiant's full knowledge and belief as to the circumstances and conditions under which stockholders and security holders who do not appear upon the books of the company as trustees, hold stick and securities in a capacity other than that of a bona fide owner; and this affiant has no reason to believe that any other person, association, or corporation has any interest direct or indirect in the said stock, bonds, or other securities than as so stated by him.

FRED B. LEIGHTY.

Sworn to and subscribed before me this 1st day of April, 1916.

S. S. WIDWAY, J. P.

EASTER'S MEANING

God's Wondrous Love for His Children, and the Greatest of All Miracles.

YES, it's Easter. Don't you hear the bells chiming? The very air seems charged with enthusiasm Even the birds seem to chirrup a new song, for the whole world is full of joy. You smile whether you feel like it or not, for the smile on every face you meet challenges you to it. Surely, Easter must mean much to the world. What does it mean to you?

To some Easter means an excuse to rival Cleopatra.

That dame of notorious name and unsavory reputation was an adept in suggestive dressing. With a wizard's skill she catered to the emotions of men, toyed with them a little and then abandoned them for a more promising subject for excitement. Masculine conquest is dear to the feminine heart, and some sweet maids seem unconscious of the price they pay to win Compromised modesty is intoxicating in its appeal, the results are not unlike in any other intoxication. Every such occasion has its sobering time usually it means consciousness of loss and shame. Oh, I know that you may not go the limit. Yet you will not deny that others will. There will be grand parades at fashionable resorts and every little hamlet will try to show itself as the "best ever." If this is all Easter means to you you surely are in need of a missionary.

To many others the day offers an acceptable occasion for making gormands of themselves.

Easter eggs are the rule. Many a husky lad will try to see how many eggs he can eat today so that he can brag about it the rest of the year. Here and there the physician will be needed to relieve the egg-pain that results from the abuse of nature. That fellow is less man and more beast whose greatest glory lies in the quantity of eggs he can consume. If an occasion for excused gluttony is the meaning you attach to Easter you, too, are in need of a missionary.

Easter commemorates the greatest of the world's miracles.

It has been said to be beyond reason. Probably it is beyond the reasoning caliber of mortal thinkers just as it is not common to experience. Yet the same argument would apply to many practical inventions that are now common. Once they were thought impossible, and their advocates were scoffed at. Some have even been slain in ages past for daring to advocate daring theories. Some day, also, the veil will be lifted from the Resurrection and men will see a reasonableness where now they see only perplexity. The fact is not less real because I cannot explain it any more than a complicated machine is a fiction because I cannot understand all about it. By applying myself I can learn about the machine if I have a mechanical mind, by trusting the teachings of the Master I can have his witness in my heart that what he has taught me is true.—Pennsylvania Grit.

St. Joseph's Lily.

St. Joseph's lily, or the lily of the annunciation, is said to have been brought to Europe from North Syria, where it is said to have bloomed upon Lebanon, and Mount Hermon. It soon established itself in British gardens, and playing truant occasionally ran wild, rioting in luxuriant bloom in meadows in the south of England.

50 sheets of writing paper and 25 No. 1 rag envelopes for 10 cents at NEWS office.

Local Briefs

Leora George, of west of Concord, is the guest of John George and family, this week.

Schloss of Auburn are showing their New Spring Materials and Ready-to-Wear.

Wm. Curie continues to be on the sick list. He is not able to do any work about the store.

Lileth Yeiser is attending school here, this week, and is staying in the home of Mrs. H. C. Hathaway.

P. W. Perish, of Ferry, Mich., came Tuesday evening to be the guest of G. W. Milliman and family.

Mrs. F. M. Thornton was called to Fostorie, Monday, by the critical illness of her uncle, Mr. Hugh McMahan.

Dr. Sheffer and wife, and Craig Sheffer and family were Sunday guests of John Knight and family, at Fairview.

Mr. Frye, of Harlan, is here assisting Frank Shaffer with the oil business. As soon as the Grabill station is open Mr. Frye will have charge of it.

Leon Sechler is erecting a small house on his 20 acre tract of land, and expects to move there as soon as completed Glen Freeburn and wife will move in the Kees home now occupied by Leon.

Mr. and Mrs. F. M. Thornton left Tuesday evening for a few days visit with friends and relatives at Garrett, Chicago, Millers, Fostoria, Republic, and Chicago Jct., Ohio.

Glen Wineland and wife received a message Tuesday of the death of her grandfather, Mr. Morris, who was making his home with Bert Woodcox and wife, at Columbus. They left Wednesday to attend the funeral.

Before going to press we learn that St. Joe will have a new hay barn built by the Four Store of Hicksville, just north of the B. & O. tracks, on the ground owned by Iona Woodcox. The building will be 40 x 60 feet, with 2o feet mows for the storing of loose hay. This will be a fine thing for our farmers as they will be able to sell any quantity of hay. Work will begin at once.

The Wabash Passenger Traffic Department has just issued a neat folder describing 10,000 acres of farming and pasture lands which have been placed on the market at prices ranging, for unimproved lands, from $5 00 to $20.00. These lands are located in Warren County adjacent to Jonesburg, Mo., on the St. Louis-Kansas City line of the Wabash and only 70 miles from St. Louis, the greatest farm produce market in the West. Copies of this folder may be obtained by addressing J. D. McNamara, Passenger Traffic Manager, Wabash Railway Company, St. Louis.

Patronize the advertisers.

Use Daily Bread Flour The Flour of Quality.

Jacob Klingele and Howard Jolly were in town, Monday.

Orlie Woodcox and Orlow McMillon have the measles.

WANTED—To buy your Hay. C. E. Frye, Phone 73-31, St. Joe.

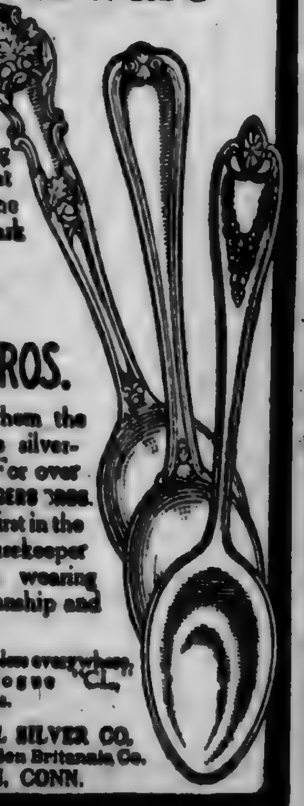
C A. Patterson was at Wayne and Hicksville, last Friday, on business.

Genuine Lump Pocahontas for early June shipment at $4.10 ton from car. A good convenient season for laying in your next winter's supply. Quality guaranteed. ST. JOE MILLS.

Miss Mabel Overholt, of Fostoria, Ohio, and Mrs. Fred DeMusey and son Stanley, of Elkhart, were guests of F. M. Thornton and wife, from Thursday until Saturday. Mrs. DeMusey is a cousin of Mrs. Thornton.

Announcement was made last Thursday that the Fort Wayne postoffice had been made a distributing center of six counties of Northern Indiana, comprising sixty postoffices, and hereafter all supplies, with the exception of stamps, will be furnished by the Ft. Wayne office and not by the department at Washington.

Famous Silverware



Care should be exercised when selecting forks, spoons and fancy serving pieces to see that they bear the famous trade mark
1847 ROGERS BROS.
which stamps them the genuine Rogers silver-plated ware. For over 65 years 1847 ROGERS BROS. silver has been first in the heart of the housekeeper because of its wearing quality, workmanship and design.
Sold by leading dealers everywhere. Send for catalogue "CL" showing all patterns.
INTERNATIONAL SILVER CO.
Successor to Meriden Britannia Co.
MERIDEN, CONN.

DENTIST
C. R. PRICE
ST. JOE, IND.
Office: first door south of Patterson's Dept. Store.
Bell Phone No. 64.

Farmers' Farmers'
NOTICE!
Scoville's Thoroughbred Registered
Imported Percheron Stallion

LANCIER No. 99,094-103,650

will stand this season at his Big Stock Farm, one mile east and one mile south of Butler. This prize winning stallion is five years old, weighs 2,040 pounds right now, is jet black with a star in the forehead, and is the finest and highest priced horse ever brought to this part of the country. Stands at $15.00. Colt insured to stand and suck. Both local and long distance phones at the farm. Call us up. Visitors welcome daily. Call and see our Registered Percheron Mares and this last years colts from this horse You will find nothing better in the state.

FreeColumn

All advertisements in this department are free to subscribers only.—EDITOR NEWS.]

For Sale:—Good quality Early Rose potatoes at $1.00 per bushel. Come quick if you want some of them. Frank Milliman, St. Joe, Ind., R. 1.

FOR SALE:—Durham cow, will be fresh in about 2 weeks. James Irvin.

2 nice furnished bedroom for rent. Mrs. Alice Warner.

FOR SALE:—Pekin duck eggs, Mrs. Robert Nicholls.

FOR SALE:—good Parlor Table. Will be sold cheap. Mrs. H. L. Dunkle.

I will sell 50-60 or 80 feet front and 264 feet deep, off of the south part of my acre. If interested see Mrs. W. R. Weirs.

GOOD COOKING POTATOES for sale: Early Ohio, Early Rose, Early Patalkin, Good Times Potatoes. Price $1.00 per bu. Free delivery any place in St. Joe or Spencerville. Price subject too change. W. L. HALLABAUGH.

FOR SALE:—Two thoroughbred Rhode Island Red Cockerels. Mrs. Saxe Hadsell.

Two good milk Cows for sale, one of them with calf by side, the other will be fresh soon. ORANGE HERRICK.

FOR SALE:—Good cooking potatoes, not raised on muck. Delivered to any part of town at $1.00 bu. C. A. Patterson.

For Sale:—Good driving horse, and buggy and harness in good condition. Lloyd Coburn.

FOR SALE:—H. D. Motor Cycle, single, in good condition, will sell cheap if taken at once. F. KEESLER, Spencerville, Ind.

Legal Blanks for Sale at This Office

100 Per Cent.
INCREASED EARNINGS.

The following is fac-simile of certificate of Bond issued to each Depositor in this Bank.

No. ______ Grabill, Ind., ______ 19__
Mr. ______
THIS IS TO CERTIFY that your DEPOSITS in this bank are INSURED under a bond of THE AMERICAN GUARANTY COMPANY of Columbus, Ohio.
THE GRABILL STATE BANK.
PRESERVE THIS. By Albert Egly, Cashier.

Postal Savings pay 2 per cent. Interest and the money is placed in banks who have to furnish a Bond to the government to guarantee that the funds are safe in that Bank.

We pay 4 per cent. Interest and give you the same guarantee. An increased earning of 100 per cent.

THIS is the only Bank in this community thus insuring its depositors.

Total Assets, over $175,000

The Grabill State Bank
Established 1906
Joseph Witmer, President
David Klopfenstine, v. pres.
Albert Egly, Cashier
Joseph A. Grabill, Director
Peter W. Amstutz, Director
Julius Gehrig, Director
John B. Haifley, Chairman Board Directors

APRIL

L 908

0117

Has Your Subscription Expired? Come in and renew it next time you are in town.

ST. JOE NEWS.

NO newspaper can succeed without advertising, therefore we solicit the patronage of our readers for those who by their advertising help to make this paper possible.

VOL. XXX | ST. JOE, DeKALB COUNTY INDIANA, THURSDAY APRIL 20 1916 | NO. 16

What
J. N. George
of St. Joe
has to say about cream separators this week.

IT will be worth your while to find out what some of your neighbors who use De Laval Cream Separators think of their machines before you buy any separator.

About the best thing we can say for the De Laval is that all the farmers around here who use it are boosters.

It does good work for them and pleases them, and we know it will please you.

Make it a point to ask your neighbor about his De Laval.

There are nearly two million satisfied De Laval users throughout the world. More De Laval Separators are in use than all other makes combined. It isn't the cheapest, but the majority of separator users have found out by experience that it is the best and by far the most economical separator to own.

We want to tell you about an arrangement we have whereby you can make partial payment at time of purchase and pay the balance on such liberal terms that the De Laval will save its cost while you are paying for it.

Come in and see us the first time you have a chance and talk it over.

Sooner or later you will buy a DE LAVAL

JUNK!

Having now completed and arranged my new Junk Yard I am prepared to handle any quantity at HIGHEST price:

Mixed Iron, Rubber and Metals of all kind; Old Papers, Magazines, Books, Rags, Tallow, Beef Hides, Sheep Pelts, Furs.

Am now ready for your WOOL in any quantity.

Everything Guaranteed Satisfactory.

SOL BARNEY

Don't Forget

Movies

Three times each week, for the Summer Season. On Tuesday—Thursday and Saturday Evenings.

The Gossips Say-

Patronize the advertisers.

Mrs. Harriett Bill is the guest of Hicksville relatives.

See Wallace for Building Material at St. Joe Saw Mill.

WANTED—To buy your Hay. C. E. Frye, Phone 73-31, St. Joe.

Frank Shaffer and family motored to Syracuse, Saturday, returning on Sunday.

Schloss of Auburn are showing their New Spring Materials and Ready-to-Wear.

C. T. Bayman made a business trip to Hicksville, Monday, and W. E. Peterson at Auburn.

Grandma Scholes is at home now after making a few weeks visit with Chas Tustison and wife, east of town.

Wm. Staman and S. W. Tustison are owners of new Overland cars, purchased from Steward & Beams, agents at Spencerville.

The time for oiling our streets is fast approaching and everyone is anxious for it. Last Monday was a bad day for the dust and dirt.

Mrs. Homer Stackhouse and baby were guests of Norman Wyatts' at Auburn, several days last week. They returned Sunday.

Arthur Fitz-Harris, section foreman on the Wabash, will leave Friday evening for his home at Richmond, Ind., to spend a couple days with his family.

D. C. McCann purchased the barn that was in connection with the old lumber sheds and Frank Hart moved it Monday, to the west part of town.

The unified program carried out at the Christian Church, Sunday morning, proved quite a success and will be used hereafter at each morning service.

Wilson Sanders underwent an operation on last Wednesday for goiter, which came upon him rather sudden and was alarming. He is at the Lutheran hospital and is getting along fine.

Mesdames Eva Sheffer, Alma Brown, Amanda Coburn, Nellie Perry, Rose Meese, Mary Meek and Ada Bassett, spent Friday afternoon with Mrs. Leota Wallace and helped her celebrate her birthday anniversary. She served fruit and cake.

Little Miss Wanda Brunson, of Chicago Junction, Ohio, came Monday noon and was the guest of her aunt, Mrs. C. C. Bassett and family, until Tuesday evening when she went to her grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. A. D. Brunson, for several weeks.

Card of Thanks.

We wish to express our heartfelt thanks to our neighbors and friends for their sympathy and kindness in our time of sadness.

Mr. and Mrs. F. Bachtel.
Mr. and Mrs A. Wilmot.

100 Reasons Why.

You should do a checking business if you do any business at all. One of them is that a check is proof positive that you have paid a debt. The other 99 reasons we can give you if you will come in and talk them over with us.

They'll Interest You.

St. Joe Valley Bank--State Bank

4 per cent. paid on certificates if left 1 Year.

EASTER JOY

By Kathleen Wheeler Ross

WE might have known in the winter
That spring would come again;
We might have known that the future
Would bring an end to pain.
But, oh, to be sure that the suffering
Is over, and all made clear,
And to feel 'neath the blazing sunshine
That spring is really here!

We might have known through the snowtime
That flowers were underneath;
We might have sensed the Eternal
Knows no such thing as death.
But, oh, the joy of an Easter
After long winter drear,
And to feel by the soul's awakening
That spring is really here!

We might have known mid the darkness
That sorrow with joy is blent,
And that gladness would end in the morning
The night of our discontent.
But, oh, to forget the shadows;
To mock at unfaith and fear!
And to laugh like jubilant children,
Now spring is really here!

Church Notes

M. P. Church Announcements.
J. C. Coons, Pastor.

All three churches of the Circuit have prepared Easter programs which will be rendered in connection with the regular Sunday School session.

St. Joe:—Sunday School and Easter program, 9:00 a. m.; Christian Endeavor, 6:30 p. m.; Preaching 7:30 p. m.; Prayer Meeting on Thursday evening, 7:30.

Fairview:—Sunday School 9 a. m.; followed by Easter program.

Concord:—Sunday School 9 a. m.; followed by Easter program.

Lutheran Church Announcements.
A. K. Mumma, Pastor.

St. Joe:—Sunday School, 9:00 a.m.; Easter Exercises, 7:00 p. m.; regular program. A good attendance is desired. Preaching and Communion services, 10:30 a. m. Christian Endeavor, 6:00 p. m.; Prayer Meeting, Thursday at 7:30 p. m.; followed by Teachers Training Class.

Christian Church Announcements.
St. Joe:—Bible School at 9 a. m.; Easter Exercises, 7:30 p. m.

Daily Jots

Wilbur Yeiser is at Avilla spending a week with relatives.

Ett Walker and family, of Hicksville, were Sunday guests of W. A. G. Smith and wife.

Alfalfa, Timothy and Clover Seed for sale at the St. Joe Elevator. Buy now.

Anthony B. Trentman, sixty-one, who shot and killed a negro in a Fort Wayne hotel, and who has served thirteen months of the two to twenty-one year sentence imposed for his crime, was paroled by Governor Ralston, Saturday afternoon. Trentman, who was intoxicated at the time of the killing was not mentally responsible for his act, according to the views of the governor and two members of the state pardon board, who recommended the parole two weeks ago. The conditions of the parole are such that Trentman is forbidden to drink intoxicants or go where they are sold. He is warned that "the parole may be revoked at any time when the good of the prisoner and the interests of society warrant."

HEARD AROUND THE CORNER

Suckers are biting good now.

Mrs. Alice Warner was at Wayne Monday.

The township schools will close this week.

Extremely high winds prevailed all day, Monday.

Revenue cannot compensate for wrecked manhood.

Joseph Koch, Sr., was taken quite sick Sunday morning, but is better at this time.

Dr. Morr and family, of Albion, were in St. Joe, Sunday, the guest of relatives.

Glen Bowen and family, of Ft. Wayne, were Sunday guests of relatives here.

John George and family were guests of Alfred Reasoner and wife, west of Concord, Saturday evening and Sunday.

The Nathan Grain Co., is repairing their Coal Sheds, in the way of straightening up the shed, residing and painting.

Miss Dessa Carson, of Pennsylvania, will arrive the first of the month to spend the summer with W. E. Peterson and wife.

W. L. Wallace has put down a drove well on his lot purchased of Lydia Grill. He is making cement brick to build a residence.

Aaron Thomas, of Auburn, was the guest of St. Joe relatives from Thursday until Monday. He has been in ill health all winter and is just able to be about.

Claude Mason has purchased the Anthony property in Hamburg of Wm. Curie and expects to move there by May 1st. Mr. Egler will occupy the Widney residence to be vacated by Mr. Mason.

Mrs. George Wade returned Monday from Hillsdale, Mich., where she was the guest of her daughter, Mrs. A. H. Cole and husband. Mrs. Cole will come this week to spend Easter with her parents.

Clifford Wade and family left this week for their home at Meridian, Mich. They have spent the winter here with his parents and work has opened up so as to take him home. Mr. Wade is working at the carpenter trade and he expects to erect a new barn for his father this spring.

While in the Big 4 trading, Monday, Mrs. Derwood Ridgway left her baby in the cab on the west side of the store. The extremely high winds that prevailed all day, started the cab down the walk at a good rate. After going about 50 feet it struck the cement steps and was stopped. The little one was knocked from the cab seat but was not hurt.

The Public Service Commission has ordered a depot built at Shipshewana, this summer, for the accomodation of the traveling public over the Valley Line. D. W. Carson, publisher of the Advertiser at that place, has through his kindheartedness been keeping his office open to accomodate the people. The people had to force the matter by calling on the commission for a decision.

Mrs. Wm. Randall is in a very critical condition at this time, having been compelled to submit to an operation, last Friday noon, at the St. Joseph hospital at Wayne, for appendicitis, gall stone and peritonitis. Mrs. Randall has been in poor health for years and only until Wednesday had she been feeling worse. Thursday afternoon she was taken to the hospital, and it was found that upon operating that the appendix had bursted. She would have died in a short time had the operation been delayed.

What we Sell.

Salt, Bran, Middling, Hog food, Perfection Nappanee flour, Timothy, Alfalfa, Clover and Alsike Seed.

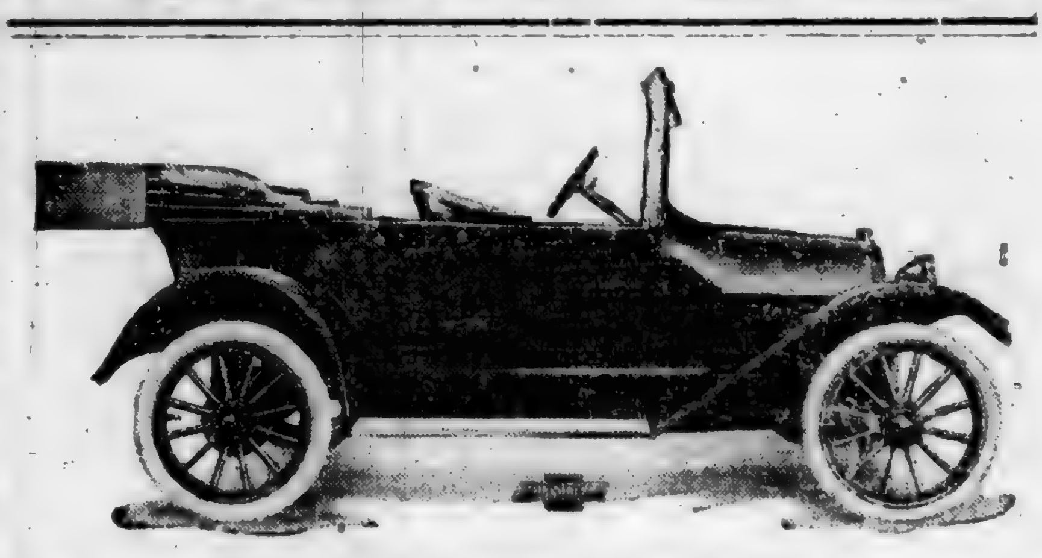
We buy your grain and pay the highest market prices.

St. Joe Elevator
The Nathan Grain Co.
OWNERS
Fort Wayne, Indiana
SAMUEL KEESLER, Local Manager.

Just A LOOK

and you will notice we have not had to advance our prices on Wall Paper on account of Colors, in fact we are doing better for you than ever because we bought a tremendous stock and we now have the goods so you can get what you want at from 5c per double roll up to 50c. Here is the place to get it already trimmed. Bring back what you don't use, get more if needed and no skin game extra on borders. Paints the same way—50c quart, 95c half-gallon, and $1.85 per gallon.

Dunkle's Drug Store
"Is a Good Place to Trade"



The Sensation of the year

The New Chevrolet

MODEL 490

4 cylinder, 22 horse power, 5 passenger—steamline body, concealed hinges, 102 inch wheel base, mohair top, left hand drive, center control, 3 speeds forward and reverse — Electric lights and starter complete,

$550.

Better order it now as factory is behind on orders at present and will get more so as season advances — Let us show you the bargain Car.

C. A. PATTERSON,
St. Joe, Ind.

TANLAC

Our customers will bear in mind that we now have a good supply of this wonderful medicine on hand. Don't put it off any longer—you can find relief in Tanlac. It's made from the roots, barks and herbs gathered from all the countries of the globe and blended so as to give the best results.

Miss GOLDEN MURRAY,
St. Joe, Indiana

APRIL

L 908

0118

THE BLUE BUCKLE

by William Hamilton Osborne

The day passed and Craig accomplished nothing, for all his high resolves of the morning. Dusk was setting gently over the ship. The tender witchery of the twilight was not yet invaded by the triumphant magic of electricity, which should transform the vessel into a floating miracle of light. Thoroughly dispirited with his feeling of helplessness, Craig entered one of the dim corridors which led toward his stateroom.

Then, as if in answer to his great desire for action, came a sudden interruption. A woman's low, startled cry rang above the mellow monotone of the ship's sounds. Again it arose, frightened, pleading, followed by the husky, imperative tones of a man's voice.

"Coming!" cried Rutherford, running at top speed toward the voices, certain that it was a woman crying for help.

He was not mistaken. Turning the corner of the passage which led to his own door, he came full upon two struggling figures. A woman was endeavoring to ward off a man. She was young and slight, the man short and stocky, yet the woman seemed to hold her own in a manner which showed surprising strength, for every move of her assailant was met and foiled.

All this Craig took in at a single glance. The next look showed him that one of the two was Mrs. Talcott—the woman of all the world that he had been wanting to aid—and in a trice he had sprung upon the man and grappled with him. This action, as it transpired, required no special heroism. The man's defense was surprisingly weak; indeed, he seemed desirous only of getting away. Meanwhile, he sought to shield his face, either from discovery or from attack, with his left arm. Craig struck at the shielding hand. With a quick twist of his body the man tore himself loose and fled down the corridor.

Rutherford started to give chase, when an imploring call from the girl brought him to a standstill.

"Don't go! Oh, don't, please!"

She was leaning against the wall, panting for breath, and seemed almost ready to drop from the unusual exertion. Craig sprang to her side, his arms extended. Involuntarily, she shrank back and drew herself upright, lithe and firm. Howbeit, the trembling hands pressed against her breast, and the startled eyes gleaming large and bright from the white oval of her face told eloquently of her need of protection.

"Who was that man?" Craig demanded.

"I—I don't know," she whispered, uncertainly, peering over her shoulder, and unconsciously moving nearer to Rutherford. "I don't think—I ever saw him before."

Craig wondered momentarily why she hesitated, and why she had seemed afraid for him to follow the fugitive.

"Oh, what shall we do, what shall we do!" she sobbed. "I had no idea that any one on board knew about this! I thought we were safe!"

She lifted her hands, and there, dangling from the torn edge of her cloak, Craig glimpsed the blue buckle Her nervous fingers sought to loosen or secure it, he could not tell which. and in his usual masterful way, which had been successful with womankind until he met Mrs. Henry Talcott, he reached out to help her with it.

Instantly she pressed both hands tightly over it and shrank away from him.

"No, no! I can trust no one—not even you!" she cried.

Her words and gesture, though of refusal, set Craig's heart to pounding in his breast. "Not even you!" It seemed to be a sort of acknowledgment that she was willing to trust him above all others. Perhaps she realized the confession underlying her words, for she loosened the buckle by a final tug and turned aside. Craig knew that she was hiding it in the sacred security of her breast.

Just as she faced him again the ship's lights glowed above their heads. The girl glanced timidly up at him and found him regarding her with a steady eye. The blood rushed into her cheeks until they lost the pale drawn look of fright and glowed, whether from confusion or guilt, Craig could not discover. She seemed to realize his right to the explanation he had not as yet asked in words.

"I thought that we had evaded them. It was such a surprise and shock to find that any one knew about it—and was trying to get it," she began, hesitatingly and ill at ease.

"You mean?"——prompted Craig.

"Who—the blue buckle, of course. I know it looks odd, of course, but I don't see why any one else should want it, unless they know what it means."

"What does it mean?" asked Craig deliberately. He must sacrifice politeness to get to the bottom of this mystery if possible, for it came to him suddenly that Helderman had led the subject up abruptly to this same blue buckle.

The look which the young woman flashed back at him was a mute plea for indulgence, a charming apology for being not wholly frank with him.

"I'm not quite sure. That is, I—well, I don't exactly know," she evaded.

A half smile crept aroung Craig's lips, as he continued to look in her eyes.

"Oh, I know it seems silly!" she exclaimed. "I really don't know what it means; but I know that I mustn't lose it—that something dreadful would happen! That is the reason why I've kept it always in my sight."

"Mrs. Talcott," he said, in a voice vibrant with suppressed emotion, "a moment ago you said you could trust no one—not even me! You are wrong. You can trust me. I may seem presumptious in prying thus into your affairs, but it is only because I want to help you. You may be in danger—you seem alone. Will you not trust me—and let me help you—in any and every event?"

"Mr. Rutherford, I thank you," she said with simple sincerity. "Perhaps there will be no danger—let us hope there will be none—but if there is, or any other occasion arises—I shall remember!"

It was a confused but effective little speech—yet Craig, manlike, was disappointed, and showed it. She was seized with a kindly impulse to explain.

"You hee, no one must know"—

"But I"—

"No, not even you—at least, not now. I must try to carry it through alone."

Before he could speak again she turned and hurried away.

CHAPTER III.

A Summons

Craig Rutherford felt as if some one had struck him a well-directed blow, driving a terrible and insistent question into his brain. "I must try to carry it through alone!" What else did she mean—what else could she mean, except the smuggling?

The glamour of that beautiful, confiding smile was still upon him, fighting back the meaning conveyed by her last words.

During the succeeding days, as the steamer neared her port, the young man grew more and more restless. He sought other opportunities to speak to Mrs. Talcott alone, but found none. Meanwhile, the story of the smugglers poisoned the minds of nearly every one else. Rumors flitted about among the passengers. Those who had formed pleasant acquaintances during the voyage suddenly found chill and suspicion spoiling them. The entire first cabin became a place of ferment and discontent. The few bearded men dodged about as inconspiciously as possible, or appeared unwarrantably brazen in their efforts to seem above suspicion.

Rutherford's discomfort and uneasiness were not lessened when, on his return to his stateroom, one morning, he found many trifling evidences that his things had been disturbed. He hurried into the smoking room and found other men fuming and fussing over similar surreptitious searches in their quarters. This was strange. Certainly, all the passengers could not be under suspicion, and if they were, he knew no legal right for such overhauling.

Nevertheless, it was decidedly annoying, and Rutherford listened in silent sympathy while the men poured out their vials of wrath upon the whole situation. Presently a voice at his side claimed his attention.

"Mr. Helderman would be glad to have you join him in his room, sir."

Craig started up, glad of any distraction. The financier's valet was standing respectfully waiting for a reply.

Very well. Tell him I shall be there in fifteen minutes—if that's agreeable."

On the way thither he passed his own stateroom.

As he walked noiselessly ahead, over the rubber carpet, he saw two men standing between his own door and that of Mrs. Talcott. They were so absorbed in their investigation that they did not notice his approach.

"The door's always locked!" one complained.

"She keeps the key," the other asserted.

The two men hurried off in opposite directions, the moment they glimpsed Rutherford, but a flash of understanding came to him as he saw the square. stocky back of one of them. He was the secret service man, and likewise the man who had tried to take the blue buckle away from Mrs. Talcott.

This put another and very disturbing idea into Rutherford's head. Certainly the man could have no possible use for the buckle; was that, then, what he had really been after—or had the girl used the buckle as a blind? Had the man really wanted the diamond necklace, concealed upon her person.

Presently he heard the door just across the corridor open softly, almost stealthily. His own door stood open by a tiny crack and cautiously he stepped to it and peered through. He saw a slender figure in a gray cloak, her back turned to him, as she tried, evidently, to turn the key in the lock. The key stuck, [illegible]ng it she dropped it to the floor. It struck against the metal trim with a sharp clang. She did not stoop to pick it up; on the contrary, with a swift and, he thought, frightened glance along the corridor in both directions, she hurried off.

Eager to aid the girl, he rushed out into the hall, picked up the key she had dropped and started after her. At the turn he saw her figure a little way ahead.

"Mrs. Talcott!" he called.

But she either did not hear or would not heed. He chose to believe the first, and quickened his pace into a run.

"Mrs. Talcott, one moment"—

The girl, however, did not pause, although she could not have helped hearing him. She seemed to be actually running away from him.

His pride made him pause, then the thought of her peril and loneliness urged him to forget himself in her. Obviously she was frightened. It was enough to scare any woman to have her door tampered with. In her haste she was confusing him with one of the fellows who had been annoying her.

Rutherford thrust the key savagely into his pocket and turned the other way. After all, what concern was it of his where the girl was going? Why should he care? But his self-revealing heart told him that, willy-nilly, he did care. Angrily, he turned toward Helderman's suite once more.

Just as he reached the private corridor leading to the suite, he found himself atacked by a human catapult. A man fled by him with such haste that he was dashed back against the wall. The door from which the man had emerged slammed, cutting in two attended the ejection.

Craig pulled himself together, fairly sizzling with indignation, and laid hold of the man who had bumped into him so uncermoniously. It was the stocky student, the secret service man. The man recognized him no les quickly, and with one of his quick dodges was off again down the passage. Rutherford's anger of a moment before was as nothing to the rage that now possessed him. With a quick leap he seized the thick shoulder and swung the man around.

"Not so fast, my fine fellow!" exclaimed Craig. "You might at least stop long enough to apologize. Besides, I have been looking for you for some time."

The man shifted uneasily, but was silent.

"Talk, you sneak!" said Craig, shaking him. "Government officer, or not, I don't believe you have any license to search rooms, or attack young women in the halls'" And Craig punctuated his remarks by a shaking such as a terrier would give a rat.

Curiously enough, the man again made no attempt to fight; but at the words, "Government officer," he glanced furtively at his assailant.

"Let up!" he growled.

"Not till you tell me what I want to know! What do you mean by sneaking into my room, trying to get into Mrs. Talcott's and nosing around in Helderman's? He served you just about right! And if I had caught you down my way, you'd have come out just about the way he sent you!"

The fellow flashed another quick glance at Rutherford.

"You rich guys think you ought to be left alone," he muttered, "but we've got to stick to our job. 'Taint no use huntin' for diamonds in the steerage, so I just took a look in the royal suite."

In spite of himself, Rutherford chuckled at the idea of Helderman—the blatant, self-appreciative Helderman who believed that his money could do anything—being subjected to surveillance like the others.

"It seems like a mighty bad way to go about it," observed Craig, momentarily relaxing his grasp. "I suppose you want to prove us all. Do you suspect any one in particular?"

His concern for Mrs. Talbott had taken the place of his anger. The detectives were searching every one, and the fact that they had tried to enter her room might not mean anything in particular.

"Don't I, though!" the man exclaimed with a wink; then profiting by the other's absorption, he turned quickly and made off down the hall.

Craig turned back toward Helderman's suite.

He reached the private hall again. The door stood slightly open, giving a glimpse of the reception room, luxuriously furnished. A long mirror was set in the panelling directly opposite the door. Rutherford saw reflected therein the entire room.

Helderman, straight, cold, an expression of contempt on his face, was in the center. He stood looking down upon a woman whose arms were clasped about his neck, whose attitude expressed love and entreaty.

The woman wore a gray coat and a blue veil. Hers was the same slender form that had flitted ahead of Craig, from the door of the stateroom opposite his own.

CHAPTER IV.

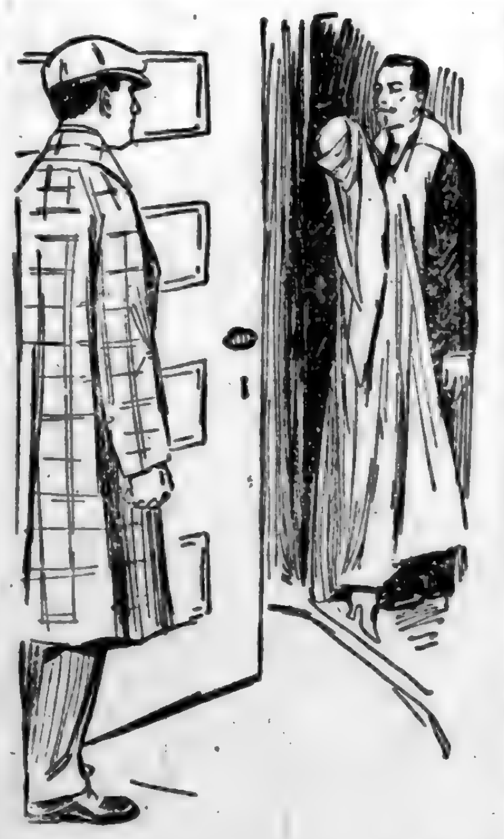
The House in Tenth Street

Home again! The great ship had passed Sandy Hook and the outer and the inner bay.

Rutherford was detained a moment by the custom officers. They seemed to take him pretty much at his word, and he hurried beyond the retreating ropes with a determined set of his eyes ahead.

Rutherford called a cab and started to help the cabby load his leathers, including golf bag and gun cases; then seeing the man was willing to do it alone, he got inuo the cab and waited until the things were stowed aboard.

"Where to, sir?"



A Long Mirror Was Set in the Panelling Directly Opposite the Door

Before Craig could reply the man stood quickly aside to make way for a lady, who sprang into the taxi.

"Number —— West Tenth street," she instructed, calmly.

The cabby closed the door and the woman promptly pulled down the shade. The driver, assuming the two to be together, climbed into his seat and whirled away from the pier.

Craig looked around in cold wonder at the intruder. It was Mrs. Talcott.

"You—you are not—oh, I am afraid I have offended you!" she exclaimed softly. "But there was no other way!"

"I understand. I offered you my services, and I am glad you could avail yourself of them," he replied with studied courtesy.

She sank back against the cushions and made no further effort to talk to him.

The cab drew up to a curb in a side street, and the driver sprang down and opened the door.

"This is No. —— West Tenth, sir," said the cabby.

Rutherford got out and extended a hand to Mrs. Talcott.

"Let me assist you," he said, smiling.

At this moment a spick-and-span young man who had perched on the stone railing of the stop came down the steps.

"Is this?"—he began.

"You are Mr. Maxwell?" she interrupted, before he could finish his question.

"I'm his son," the young man acknowledged, with a buoyant breeziness the volley of German oaths which had which Craig keenly enjoyed as a pure product of the homeland to which he was returning. "The governor sent me down with the keys and wanted me to say that if everything wasn't all right, he would do anything necessary."

"Thank you, Mr. Maxwell," she said, smiling at him. "Now," will you go in with us and see?"

Her next words, when they were scarcely inside the house, gave Rutherford a slight shock.

"Mr. Maxwell—the pistol, please!"

"Oh, of course!" said that young man, producing a box from his pocket, and taking from it a hammerless revolver. 'You are accustomed to firearms, Miss—Mrs.—?"

"Oh, yes!" she interrupted quickly, with a glance at him.

Laying the gun on the table, she took three rectangular boxes from the small pigskin bag, which she had carried constantly in her hand.

"You know what these are, Mr. Maxwell?" she asked.

"Of course!" replied Maxwell.

"Will you kindly adjust them according to the instructions you have received?"

Without another word Maxwell took the three boxes and left the room. Rutherford heard him ascend to the next floor, where he was occupied for about five minutes; then he rejoined them.

"Now if there's anything more I can do, just call one me," he announced heartily.

Then he made a hasty adieu and disappeared.

"I'll say goodby now, Mrs. Talcott," began Craig, somewhat awkwardly.

"Don't go—yet," she said. Could you take time to look over the house with me?"

"Do you mean to live here—alone?" he ventured to inquire.

"Why not?" she parried, and it seemed to him that she waited a trifle anxiously for his reply.

"I fancied you might be afraid," he replied.

"Oh, is that all!" she exclaimed, in apparent relief. "I—I fancied it did not seem quite the proper thing to you. I shall live here quite alone."

The room to which she now led him occupied the width of the house, on the second floor, and was designed evidently as a study. A flat-topped desk stood in the middle of the floor, a graceless though perhaps convenient piece of furniture, with two tiers of drawers. Its only ornament was the finely mounted head of a Rocky Mountain goat.

"George, what a bully specimen!" exclaimed Craig, his hunting instinct aroused. "Who got him? Where did he come from?"

"Mr. Talcott shot him—in the Rockies, I believe."

"A beauty—but look at this—it's a downright shame! He's such an unusually fine fellow, it's a pity he isn't perfect!"

Rutherford was looking with lively regret at the tip end of one of the long, curved horns. It was broken off. He reached out and touched the blemish. Mrs. Talcott, who had been standing beside him, moved away uneasily.

"Do you not trust me?" he demanded bluntly.

"Oh, how can you ask that when I am trusting you here—when I have trusted you all along!" she breathed.

Hardly knowing what he did, Craig reached out and took both of her hands in his.

At the same instant a voice, angry, exultant, was heard in the lower hall:

"Trapped! Caught like a rat in a trap!"

CHAPTER V.

Necklace or Buckle—Which?

Rutherford started guiltily, then straightened up and faced the door. He had recognized the voice of Mr. Henry Talcott, and momentarily waited for him to enter and create a scene.

Mr. Henry Talcott, however, did not choose to appear.

"You are not alone in the house, then?" Craig half asked, half asserted.

"Will you be good enough to give me the buckle? That is why I asked you in."

"What buckle?" he asked in amazement.

"The blue buckle," she answered; "the one you saw me wear on board ship."

"Give you the buckle, Mrs. Talcott? How can I? You know I haven't had it!"

"I think you will find it in your pocket, if you try," she insisted.

He thrust his hands into the pockets of the light top-coat he wore.

"Not there!" she said: "in your other coat, please."

He reached sceptically into the left pocket of his coat, and an expression of complete bewilderment crept over his face. The girl smiled at his dismay. "Out with it!" she said jestingly.

Slowly he drew forth his hand and offered her its contents.

It was a diamond necklace—a gorgeous strand of stones, worth at least $50,000.

"No, no! I don't want that! I want the buckle, please, quick!" she begged.

Obedient to the whims of this astonishing person, he felt in his other pocket. The sharp corners of the blue buckle pricked his fingers. He drew it out, and with a rapturous joy which would seemingly have welcomed the necklace, she extended both hands for this simple trinket.

"May I examine it?" he asked quietly, retaining possession of the buckle.

She clasped and unclasped her fingers nervously and watched him with manifest concern, while he leisurely scrutinized the object.

It proved to be more interesting than he had thought. It was ancient and battered and scarred. Its workmanship, by hand, was that of a day when metal smiths were less accomplished. Its chief distinction, however, and one that added to the mystery which seemed to surround this girl, lay in an inscription scratched deeply into the steel and running across the upper and lower edge of the oblong buckle. Craig traced the puzzling letters with an effort:

OXB IV ESAF IPSE

"What does it mean?" he asked.

"Ah, if I only knew!" she exclaimed. "How often have I puzzled over it! It may mean something—a great deal to both of us. It may mean nothing at all. And if it means nothing—I—I don't think I can bear it!"

Suddenly she stood alert, looking wildly about.

"A vehicle has stopped in front of the door. Do you think we could have been followed from the pier?"

"I don ot think so. I saw no one," he replied.

"Look out and see who it is, she whispered, drawing insensibly closer to him. "Don't let them see you!"

Craig went to the window, pulled aside the hangings a trifle, and peeped out.

"It's a woman with a big leather bag," he announced. "She's young, and she looks harmless. Come and see."

She came and their heads almost touched as she peered out. One glance and she gave a little cry of delight; the next moment she was speeding across the room and down the stair.

"Sophie! Sophie! I am so glad! I thought you were not coming!" her voice was heard exclaiming, in the lower hall.

Rutherford guessed from the humbly delighted manner of the young woman who now entered, that she was the maid to whom Mrs. Talcott had previously alluded.

"Mademoiselle, when they fight your dear—"

"Yes, yes, Sophie, you may tell me later! It is enough that I have you again!" her mistress interrupted, evidently not desiring any further disclosures at this time.

The maid followed her mistress up to the second floor, and as she passed Rutherford she gave a quick, sidewise glance at him. Rutherford knew that it was one of those keen, inquiring looks by which a clever observer gains much information.

Presently Mrs. Talcott returned to the study.

"You cannot imagine how relieved I feel to have my maid with me again!" she said.

Rutherford picked up the gems and handed them to her.

"Aren't these diamonds yours?" he asked pointedly.

"I never saw them before. How can you be so absurd? You produced them from your own pocket!"

"Also the blue buckle. You do not deny ownership of that, I suppose?"

"No, I put that there myself. It was the only way I felt it would be safe, after that attack. I was afraid that the persons who seemed to know about it might try to get it again. But we are at cross-purposes about the gems. Please state plainly what you mean!"

"Mrs. Talcott, didn't you place those diamonds in my pocket?"

"How could I? I never owned such a necklace."

Rutherford crumpled the stones together and was dropping them in his pocket when a peremptory voice halted him.

"Stop!"

He whirled around. A man sprang into the room and seized his arm in an attempt to secure the jewels.

"We'll trouble you for that," a second man asserted, also approaching Rutherford.

But the latter, with the trained instincts and muscles of an athlete, had not waited to parley. With one swift wrench he escaped the grasp of the first intruder and retreated until he stood with his back against the desk.

"How did you get in?" he demanded.

"Like anybody else would: rang the bell," said one of the men insolently, as though assured that the situation was entirely in their own hands.

"You let them in!" cried Mrs. Talcott, reproachfully, to Sophie, who now thrust a scared face in the doorway.

"Oui, Mademoiselle, how should I know?" the girl exclaimed, wringing her hands.

"I did not hear the bell ring," Craig said, looking sharply at the maid.

Rutherford himself had recognized both the men at once. They were the secret service men from the ship. Plainly he was in a tight corner, with the smuggled booty visible in his possession. Nevertheless, he endeavored to gain time by dissembling.

"What brought you here?" he demanded.

"Oh, that's all right!" said the other. "Give up the necklace quietly now and we can fix it up at the office later. That's the best way to keep out of trouble. Give it up!"

But the fellow had over-reached himself. Rutherford had noted the look of cupidity which came into his eye, and also realized that it was a decidedly unofficial proceeding to allow a suspect to go merely upan release of property. With a swift motion of his wrist he slipped the jewels into his pocket.

"None of that!" cried the man, lunging at him.

But he reckoned without his host. Rutherford met him half way with a firm set of his muscles which halted the man with a jolt. The other sprang to his side and tried to glower Rutherford out of countenance.

"You're getting in bad," he said, "resisting an officer! Better give up the diamonds without any fuss!"

"Mr. Rutherford, don't do it?" cried Mrs. Talcott. "I warn you! If these men are not what they claim to be you will have to reimburse the government for the diamonds. Please be sure before you act.

Craig struck out vigorously with his right and left; but the men were too close, and quickly pinioned his arms.

Mrs. Talcott snatched up the pistol.

"If you take another step in this direction I shall shoot!" she said in even tone to the men.

Her back was turned to the second man as she spoke and with a bound he had sprung forward and wrested the weapon from her grasp.

"Now take the diamonds away from him, Sam!" he announced, triumphantly. "I've got the gun!"

Mrs. Talcott tried to run to the desk.

"Stay where you are!" the holder of the weopon commanded.

She halted, gazing despairingly at her goal, but two short feet away.

"I'll get it! Don't shoot!" panted the stocky fellow, evidently not wanting to make a disturbance that might be heard outside.

By a lucky twist he reached Rutherford's pocket. Craig writhed about until he had forced the man's hand out; then he plunged his own in and grasped the necklace. Across the floor he sent it spinning, in hope that his assailant would dart after it and give him a chance to attack at better advantage.

The necklace slid across to a spot near where Mrs. Talcott stood. She made a feint of seizing it. The other man darted toward her and pushed her violently upon the desk, but as she fell she managed to push the jewels with her foot back under the rear part of the desk. The man tried vainly to reach them and swore savagely under his breath.

Suddenly a voice that fairly roared its vigorous shout came to the man under the desk and the two struggling on the floor.

"Coming! Coming!" the great voice shouted. "Hands up, you cowards! We've got you this time!"

"Trapped! Trapped like rats. Caught like rats in a trap!" another voice shouted in triumph.

It was Mr. Henry Talcott and some companion in the nick of time, Rutherford, suddenly released, looked toward the door, expecting to see that strange man who had kept himself in the background once before now come rushing in with this welcome aid.

His stocky assailant had sprung up like a creature at bay and also gazed at the door. The other fellow had crawled so hastily out from under the desk that the revolver slipped out of his hands. This Mrs. Talcott promptly seized and fired twice, just above their heads. The two men fled wildly, fairly falling down the stairs in their eagerness to escape. A moment later the front door slammed after them.

"Why, where are they?" Rutherford asked.

(Continued next week.)

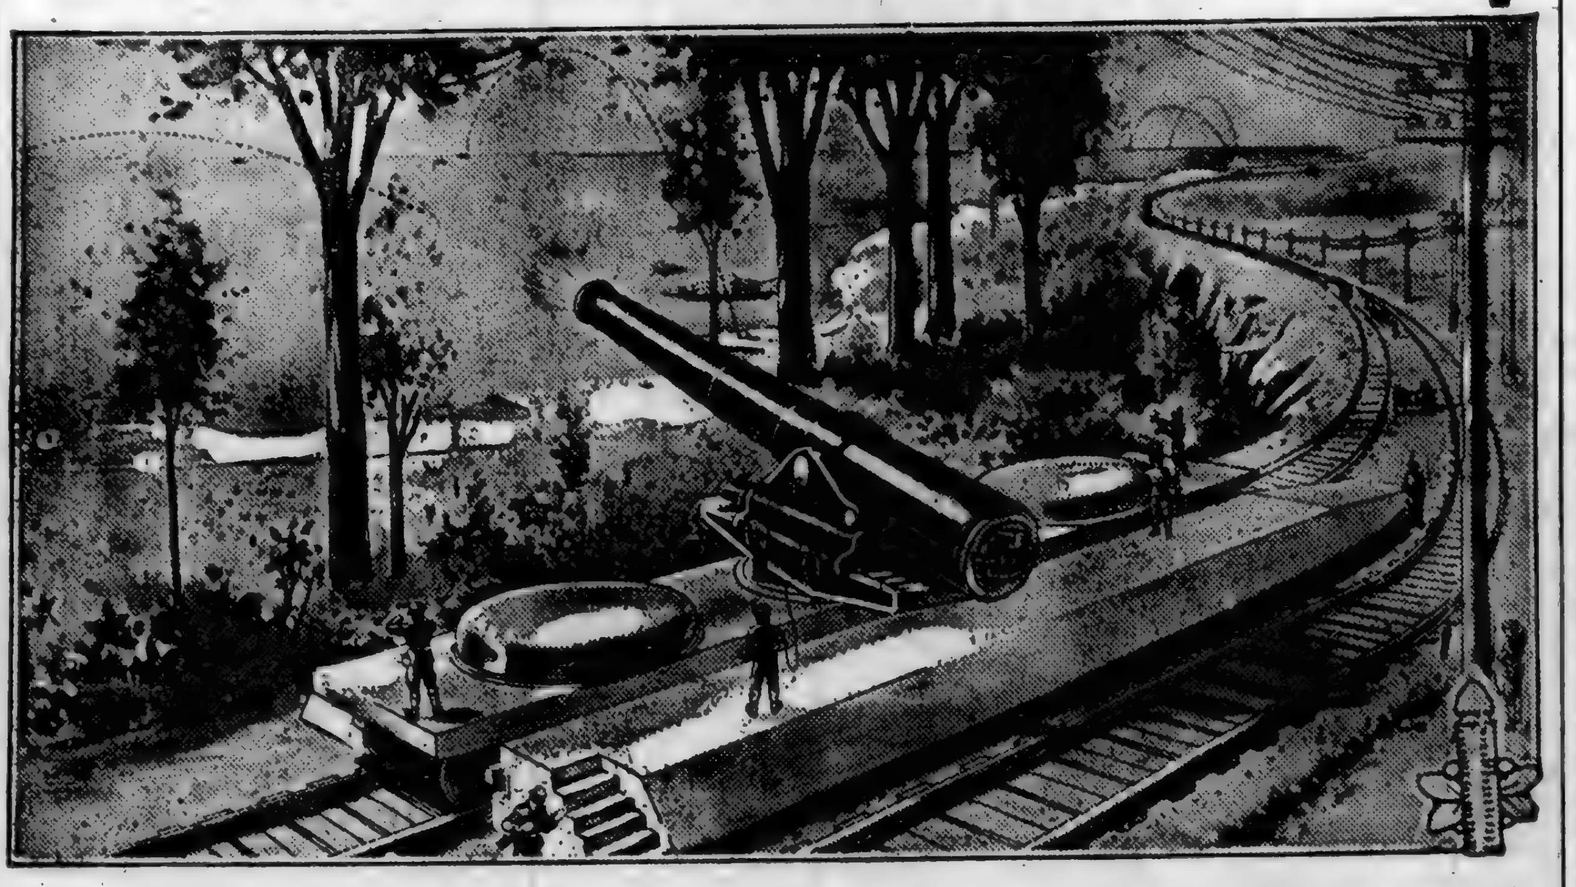
The Publisher's Co-Operative Co.
440 So. Dearborn St. CHICAGO 16-16

APRIL

L 908

0119

WANTS MOVABLE GUNS TO PROTECT US



Representative J. H. Capstick of New Jersey has introduced a coast defense bill asking $50,000,000 for largest guns and mortars, permanently mounted on especially constructed railroad cars, which, it is asserted, can be quickly transported to and securely locked upon previously constructed heavy concrete bases distributed on short spurs in railroad cuts behind hills. This new plan for national defense is the invention of Lawrence W. Luellen and Cecil F. Dawson, both of New York city.

MILLIONAIRE WAS ONCE A TRAMP

MAKES FORTUNE IN CENTRAL AMERICA IN 20 YEARS RAISING SUGAR AND BANANAS

OWNS 72,000 ACRE PLANTATION

That Government Anxious to Welcome Citizens Who Will Develop the Country

Los Angeles, Cal.—Leslie R. Drake of Central America walked past Central Park and pointing at the benches and fountain beneath the trees said:

"Twenty years ago I sat in that plaza on a bench, and I had neither a place to sleep nor anything to eat. I was a tramp, and as I sat there looking up at the sky I planned on how many beefsteaks I would buy if I had a million dollars."

Mr. Drake neglected to say that, according to Dun and Bradstreet, he is today rated at more than a million dollars, but he did say that now he had enough money to buy all the beefsteaks he would want for the rest of his life.

Mr. Drake has made his fortune in Central America, but he does not advise others that they may hope to do likewise. However, he talks interestingly of Central America, and his views are lucid as to what the average American may expect from the land which has so lately opened new vistas before the eyes of those who are obsessed with the pioneer spirit.

"Because the tropical fruits grow in abundance and most of them furnish sufficient food for mankind is no reason to suppose that any one may go to Central America and become rich," said Mr. Drake.

Mr. Drake has a plantation covering 72,000 acres in the district of Donosa, Province of Colon, on the Atlantic side, the principle products of his immense ranch consisting of sugar and bananas.

"German and English syndicates own most of the railroads, stores and commercial enterprises, but many citizens from the United States have taken up plantations and are forming districts and building roads.

"Central America needs roads and improvements of all kinds and the government is anxious to welcome any substantial citizen who will develop the country, but there is no room for promoters who will return to the Aladin lamp variety.

"There is money to be made in Central America, but it is no place for a man who has no capital, for the simple reason that native labor is so cheap and there are no large cities with manufacturing industries.

"The climate is splendid, but for the Northern man it is extremely trying because of the monotony. One day is exactly like the other—neither hot nor cold—just the same day after day. The first year or two the man from the United States is ambitious, but after that he is content to sit in the shade and watch the natives work.

"The soil is extremely fertile and averages 120,000 pound of food stuffs to the acre each year. Most of the plantations have their own ice plants and everything for the comfort of their families and employes, but there are always many disadvantages.

"There is room and opportunity in Panama for young American men who have a little capital and who are ambitious and energetic, but I would not say that they would come out with millions—although there are many advantages not found in the United States."

Costs 27 Cents Before You Eat

Cleveland—Every time a guest sits down to eat in a first class hotel it costs about 27 cents, Henri Rigo, chef, says. This is for heat, light, waiter service clean nappery and dishes, iced water, butter, bread, salt and pepper.

FUR CENTER OF WORLD SHIFTS TO ST. LOUIS

Sales of More Than $1,000,000 In Four Days are Recorded—Big Future Seen

St. Louis, Mo.—The world's great central fur market has shifted. It used to be in London, England. It is now in St. Louis. The million dollar fur sale held here recently, at the Funsten Fur Exchange, announced this new era in the fur business.

What this achievement means to the United States can best be realized by noting the effect on the great traders who control the world's fur business. They were all there. All the large fur houses of France, Russia, Germany and other European countries, as well as those of Canada and the United States, had their expert buyers on the floor of the exchange. Over 300 of them came in a special train of their own.

The bidding was spirited and competition keen. In the four days of the sale over a million dollars worth of furs changed hands.

The scene on the exchange floor was not unlike a legislative chamber. Each of the 300 expert buyers sat behind his own desk facing the elevated court like bench of the auctioneer Pages and messenger boys scurried about. The selling was rapid—and exciting. A bid of a dollar might actually be a bid of a thousand if the lot chanced to be one in which there were a thousand pelts. In the same way, a 10-cent raise might easily mean a cool hundred dollars. Yet the buyers, seasoned veterans, took all the excitement calmly enough, tho the sale of a single pair of silver fox skins for $2,350 did bring a ripple of applause. For such skins to bring $1,820 and $1,900 was a mere nothing. The furs of fifteen different countries were represented at all kinds of prices—from 6 cents upward. The prices for the fur of common blue and black house cats went up as high as 46 cents each and the demand was lively. On the whole, the prices commanded were high, in some cases showing an advance of 30 per cent over last year. Domestic skins from American trappers were much in evidence.

Among the buyers present were experts representing Goetz Freres, Paris; J. Arionwitch & Co., Moscow; The Eitingon Schild Co., another Russian concern; G. Gaudig & Blum, Theodore Thorer, Inc., Otto Erler and H. Jaeckel Sons, all German fur companies; H. M. Koenigswerther of Leipsic; The T. Eaton Co. of Winnepeg, and many others.

EXCHANGE POETIC TELEGRAMS

Mr. Wood Can Now Wed—No Obstacle Seen Ahead

Jefferson City—When W. C. Eaves, recorder of St. Francois county, died, Governor Major a few days ago, appointed former State Senator John S. Clay of Farmington, to fill the vacancy.

The commission evidently was delayed in transit, for the Governor's office received the following telegram, written in rhyme, from William Good, a marrying justice of the peace at Farmington.

Recorder dead;
Mr. Wood wants to wed.
What shall we do—
It's up to you.

Governor Major was out of town. His private secretary, N. E. Williams wired back:

Governor has appointed Clay
Mr. Wood may name the day.
Justice Good is on the spot
More than willing to tie the knot.

A Truthful Boy.

A farmer who was blessed with a son with an engaging frankness of speech sent him to the local miller's one day.

The lad got hold of the miller and submitted for his inspection a handful of wheat.

The miller studied the wheat attentively and then said to the boy.

"How much more has your father got of this?"

"He ain't got no more like it," the boy answered. "He's been all mornin' pickin' that out."

Every man is a hero in his mind.

HEAD BUMPS THE BEST ALTER GUIDE

PHRENOLOGIST TELLS MILWAUKEE MAIDS THE BEST WAY TO PICK HUSBANDS

SOULFUL EYES ARE A POOR GUIDE

The Nose an Appendage of the Intellect and the Ears have Characteristics

Milwaukee, Wis.—Maids of Milwaukee may depend upon phrenology instead of palpatation to guide them in exercising their privilege of proposing. Instead of picking a husband by the cut of clothes he wears, the luxuriance of his hair or the mannerisms he affects the girl may take shrewd cognizance of the shape of his head and the features that adorn him.

Instead of rushing thoughtlessly into matrimony the girls are pausing a while since they learned that the traits of a man may be fairly accurately gaged by certain outward signs. Joseph Blumenthal, vocational expert and student of phrenology, who has selected hundreds of employes for various jobs, declares that a helpmate can be chosen by much the same methods.

Girls, don't just look into a man's soulful eyes and let it go at that. Take a "slant" at his nose, his lips and his ears as well.

This is the inference from the information Mr. Blumenthal says these features will reveal.

Want one of the husbands to whom life means just one smack after another? Then propose to a man whose lips are full with an added fullness at the center.

But if you would miss the morning's parting kiss and the evening's greeting, don't propose to a man whose lips are thin and straight. He may be a decent enough sort of a chap with an abiding affection, but he isn't demonstrative. He probably is a believer in the germ theory.

These are only types mentioned by Mr. Blumenthal, who was in Milwaukee Monday and Tuesday.

"Certain marks indicate certain tendencies in men," Mr. Blumenthal said. "Of course their testimony isn't final. Other features may show opposing tendencies and again a man may have himself so well under control that the tendencies cannot assert themselves. But it is well enough to take note of them.

"Observe the nose. It might be called an appendage of the intellect; for its shape is highly significant. It is more than just an organ of respiration. The man with a short nose is usually inclined to remain out late of nights. On the other hand, the man with a long nose is usually not so inclined because he is a thinker and probably studies consequences more.

"The nose that is long and 'turns under' usually has a melancholy owner. If one has any secrets to hide he should avoid a person with a long nose that turns up. That is the inquisitive nose."

So with the ears, he explained; the ear that cups out or that lies flat, that join at the end with the cheek or appears to be cleft from the face—each has a characteristic that may mean much to the happiness of a home.

But it isn't enough for the fair suitor merely to learn the disposition of the man she has pointed out. Is he a good provider? How shall she tell? She can find that out by studying vocational training and determine whether her choice is a money maker or a hopelessly improvident, a saver or a squanderer. An arc of his cranium or a tilt of his forehead, taken with other characteristics, may determine whether the wife will ride in a limousine or trudge in a pair of rundown shoes.

Women's clubs are springing up in India.

OLD SLAVE CELLS STILL IN PLACE

Hotel Basement Prison for Convenience of Slaveholders Who Visited City and Wished to be Freed of Responsibility

Savannah, Ga.—Except perhaps for old slave market at Milledville, Savannah probably has, in the foundations of the old Pulaski Hotel, on the corner of Bull and Bryan streets, Georgia's most remarkable memento of the days when men were sold as chattels.

The basement of this ancient hostelry is honeycombed with bricked up cells used during the period before the war by slave owners for the safekeeping of their charges en route to and from the big slave markets to the north. There are very few people of this generation who know of this famous "underpinning" of the old hotel.

Some of the cells are large enough to contain a half dozen men. Others are smaller, there not being room in them for more than one or two human beings. In each of the underground apartments there is a door with grated iron bars, through which food and water were handed to the inmates detained at the request of their masters.

When the Pulaski hotel was built it was necessary to have something of this character, because many of its patrons were among the most famous slave owners of Georgia and the Carolinas.

Savannah was a great stopping point for the slave owners enroute to their rich plantations, who wished to spend a short time in Savannah, then the metropolis of Georgia, or who went through toward the North carrying their slaves to sell in the markets at Milledgeville, Augusta, Charleston or Richmond. It was a matter of convenience to these slave owners that the underground apartments were provided when the Pulaski was built something like 100 years ago.

Since that time the hotel has undergone many above ground changes, but, except in a few instances, the slave cells have remained as they were originally constructed. Now they are valuable only as a reminder of days that have long passed in Georgia. These dungeons are a point of great interest to those who know about them, but there are very few people, even in Savannah, who are aware of their existence.

One of the largest of these human safety vaults was torn out about 10 years ago to make room for the elevator machinery in the hotel, and another was torn away to secure room for the large boiler that supplies the hotel with heat. Except for these invasions in the name of progress and the installation of modern ideas, the underground compartments remain as they were constructed in the days before the war.

They are a submerged link between the new South and the old.

The underground passages now are inhabited only by cats. Hundreds of felines make their homes there. Many of them seldom come above ground and as a consequence they are gradually losing the use of their eyes in the daylight, although it is presumed that their sight in the darkness of their underground habitation is intensified. These cats have bred and multiplied in the gloom of the old dungeons for fifty years, and each new generation finds their eyes of less use in the glare of the sun.

The cats are never molested. Indeed nobody ever goes into the dungeons for any purpose whatever. The cats keep the hotel clean of rodents, and so are regarded as useful. Usually, they wait until night to come above ground. Each new generation of cats shun the daylight more and more.

Casket Held Booze

Charleston, W. Va.—Varied and ingenious have been the expedients adopted to irrigate arid throats since this state went dry, but the most startling was one revealed when promoters of a fake funeral came to grief.

A hearse, a hack and a casket were used in the plot. Waiting at a local railroad station were the two vehicles, the hack containing three mournful-faced men. From a passenger train stepped a veiled woman garbed in deep black. At the same time a child's casket was removed from the baggage car.

As the woman walked toward the waiting hack to join the three men the crowd gazed at her in compassion and there was a murmur of sympathy as station employes started to carry the little casket toward the hearse.

Just as the white receptacle containing the "remains" was being lifted to be deposited in the hearse the bottom dropped out. To the astonishment of the onlookers, quart, pint and half pint bottles fell with a smash to the sidewalk.

The black gowned woman gave vent to her feelings by uttering a word descriptive of a region supposed to be even drier than West Virginia. The entire funeral party was arrested.

The plan was actually to bury "the child" in a grave that already had been dug and then to go to the cemetery at night and disinter the "body."

Must Take Wife to Movies

New York—Can a woman run her home on 35 cents a day? Mrs. Samuel Cohen of Jersey City says it can't be done, and had her husband in court because he only allowed her that sum. He was sentenced to give her $6 a week, and to take her to the movies occasionally or go to prison for a year.

And some men are so full of human nature that they have no room for principle.

SEEING SNAKES STILL A MYSTERY

TO MEDICAL MEN AND TRUTH IS YET UNDISCOVERED BY THEM

MANY THEORIES ARE ADVANCED

Some Believe Poison Accumulates in Brain and Delirium Tremens Result.

New York—That delirium tremens is the direct result of over indulgence in alcohol is well understood. But how does such over indulgence act? And why should some hard drinkers never "see snakes," while other and much milder victims visualize them to such a degree that loss of life follows?

Theories of delirium tremens are not wanting; but they are so many as to indicate that the truth is yet undiscovered in its completeness. There appears to be an interesting, though disquieting reason for revival of research in the subject now. Since the Harrison narcotic law went into effect many drug habitues, having exhausted their supply and failing to obtain more, have turned to alcohol as a substitute. In some who had been drinking for years the sudden and marked increase in the amount of liquor consumed has led to the frequent occurrence of delirium tremens. After noting that "chronic alcoholic poisoning produces some well known changes in the central and peripheral nervous system," a writer in the journal of the American Medical Association says, in substance:

"As yet, however, no changes have been found in the brain which explain why a man who has been drinking for years suddenly develops a delirium which runs a definite course of from three to five days or even longer.

"It has been thought that delirium tremens is an acute infection occurring in chronic alcoholics. Nevertheless many cases run their entire course without fever, and Nonne found blood cultures negative in 15 consecutive cases examined by him. Doellken believes that continued drinking of alcohol results in the production of a poisonous substance in the brain itself, and that an accumulation of concentration of this substance produces delirium tremens.

"Jacobson explains the delirium as an autointoxication, the kidney, or the intestinal tract, and acting on a brain which has been poisoned over a long period of time by alcohol. The view of Hertz differs from this in that the supposed poison which precipitates the delirium comes from an insufficiency on the part of the kidney.

"According to Bonhoeffer, chronic alteration in the intestinal tract is responsible for the elaboration of poison which is normally excreted through the lungs. Wagner Von Jauregg believes that the liver, rather than the lungs is the organ which fails to eliminate the poison, and he thinks that this failure is due to the changes occurring in the liver in chronic alcoholism.

"Kauffman has asserted that this poison is a carbon derivate acting on a medulla altered as a result of chronic alcoholism. He believes that the delirium will persist until the production of this carbon derivate stops."

All of these theories presuppose a poisoned central nervous system. It has been objected, however, that many chronic drinkers never suffer delirium. It has been suggested that different poisons may result from excessive drink and that only one of these may cause delirium tremens. There are, however, still other theories:

"The possibility that delirium is due to an increase in the pressure and amount of the spinal fluid has recently been considered. Jauregg of Vienna assumes that the body of the chronic alcoholic protects itself by the production of an antialcohol which is of the nature of an antitoxin. When a hard drinker suddenly stops taking alcohol this antialcoholic substance, having no alcohol to which to affix itself, acts on the body in such a manner as to produce delirium tremens. Hare maintains that the development of delirium is due to a sudden fall in the amount of alcohol circulating in the blood of alcoholics. His evidence is drawn from a study of 75 cases, in nearly all of which there was a great reduction in the amount of alcohol absorbed prior to the onset of delirium.

"Numerous objections have been raised to each of these theories. The views concerning poisons and autointoxications have been vigorously attacked because there is as yet no definite proof that poison is elaborated. There are already adversaries to the recent notions concerning an increased pressure of the spinal fluid and the fall of alcohol in the circulating blood, all of which indicates that much work remains to be done before the final answer to the problem is reached."

FINDS RING AFTER 23 YEARS

Girl Restores Mother's Long Lost Gold Loop

Seaford, Del.—A little over twenty-three years ago Mrs. George E. M. Stengle, while playing in the yard of S. A. Brown lost a plain gold band ring with her initials on it. All efforts on the part of several members of the family and nighbors to find it were futile.

One day this week while Ethel, the 9 year old daughter of Mrs. Stengle, was playing in the yard with a sister she noticed something shining in a spot where snow was melting fast and picking it up, discovered it was a ring. When she took it to her mother it was quickly recognized as the ring lost nearly a quarter of a century ago.

During the time the ring has been in the yard the ground has been plowed and tilled many times. The ring was in perfect condition and not the least bit worn by the weather.

French Eat Snails off Lawn

Oakland, Cal.—Although he is a retired gardener, Harry W. Weiss, Fruitvale, has been sadly watching the luxuriant plants, lawns and flowers surrounding his home pine away and die. A plague of snails, hordes of them, were the cause. As fast as one army had been patiently destroyed by seeking them out at night with candles and lanterns and putting salt on them, another army appeared. There seemed no escape from complete ruination of Weiss' entire grounds.

He was ready to give up when there came a knock at his door.

"It is that you have of the snails a great many, is it not?" politely inquired the bowing little man whom Weiss greeted.

"Yes," said Weiss, despondently, "it is."

"I wish merely to ask the great favor of monsieur," said the visitor, bowing again with an ingratiating smile. "Go ahead," said Weiss, mournfully surveying his gardens.

"Could it be possible that you would allow me to collect these snails, all of them, I and my friends? They are so good to eat and it is such a waste, that they are not used. If monsieur will only consent."

When Weiss finished consenting his French visiting angel brought five friends into the gardens. Now the snails are gone. Weiss is happy. The Frenchmen are happy. So is everybody but the snails.

Wire Bending Machine

Patent has been granted for a wire bending machine invented by an Iowa man. The machine is used for making a hot pan lifter, also the production of the same inventor.

Joshua—"Sile has awful high ideals of wimmin. Won't pay no attention to any of the girls around here"

Abner—"I know it. The blamed gilley'll set an' admire the pictures of girls in the corset advertisements for hours at a time."

THE Country Home Weekly Newspaper is eagerly sought, and in passing from hand to hand of the entire family, is reasonably sure to give returns to the advertiser.

This paper fills the bill—
The bills fill the till:
Get that?

APRIL

L 908

0120

The St. Joe News

Fred B. Leighty, Editor
Mrs. Iora Leighty, Associate

One Year, - - $1.00
Six Months, - - - .50
Three Months, - - .25

Entered at the postoffice at St. Joe, Indiana, as second class matter.

INDIANA ASSOCIATED WEEKLIES
THE CONCERN OF ALL

Sunday School Report.

The following is a true and correct report of the various Sunday Schools in this neighborhood for last Sunday.

M. P	98	$ 3 27
Lutheran	95	3.13
Christian	63	1.90
Fairview	20	.38
Coburntown	80	1.98
Concord	85	2.45
M. E. Spencer	69	2.67

How About This?

The Hicksville Tribune is authority for the following, which might be the cue for DeKalb county officials to get busy:

"A condition of hypocrisy is said to exist at St. Joe, liquor being sold there in large quantities, even minors being able to get it."—The Bee.

Well, Mr. Tribune man! "A condition of hypocrisy exists in St. Joe," Eh? Who told you? We wonder if the young bloods who gave an exhibition of their histrionic talent in the play "Muldoon's Wedding" and demonstrated that "Old John" got the best of the argument in the second round; so that the second act had to be omitted, leaving two of the "hamfatters" "Hors de Combat" on the floor, had anything to do in convincing the Tribune Editor that St. Joe is a veritable cesspool of iniquity? Of course, they could not have brought the nose paint with them, perish the thought! But one thing we have noticed particularly: St Joe has never had such demonstrations as occurred in our midst a few weeks ago, unless assisted by some of the young sports (?) of our neighboring Buckeye village across the line. Why is this? We are not perfect, and we have our faults, but the insinuation that we corrupt the morals of our visitors is not borne out by the real facts. So go slow, Mr. Tribune, go slow.

—CONTRIBUTED

HATS
and CAFs

of the latest styles for the summer season, in felts and straws. We invite you to our store to look at our fine display. The prices are reasonable.

Remember
Go to Erick's

Wm. G. ERICK,
SPENCERVILLE

P. A. Walker
Trustee
Spencer Township

OFFICE DAY—
Tuesday of each week at the residence ¾ mile east of the Dills River Bridge
Phone—St. Joe, 21-6
Spencerville, - Indiana

SPENCERVILLE.

Subscriptions taken for new or renewals of any magazine published, at The News office.

Frank Baltz and Stanley Nelson, of Auburn, were Friday evening supper guests of Jacob Baltz and wife.

Mrs. William Henderson and little son Richard, of Auburn, visited Mrs. Anna Baker and family, Saturday.

Joel Betz and wife left Saturday morning to visit their son, Glenn and family, of near Maples, for several days.

School was held on Saturday and several pupils of the Coburntown school and their teacher, Howard Pervines, visited different rooms of the school on that day.

A Pie Social will be given by the Spencerville High School at the School Building, Friday evening, April 21. Each lady is requested to bring a pie. A Negro Minstrel will be put on by different members of the High School, which will add much merriment to the evening's entertainment.

The Loyal Workers Class of the Lutheran Sunday School were entertained Wednesday evening at the home of Miss Vera and Walter Silberg, north of town. After the business hour, games and music was enjoyed. Besides 25 members the following guests were present: Misses Leone Widderfield, Dale Shull and Emma Washler, and the Messrs. Harry Hersh and Dewey Beaber.

Pay Less Taxes

By filing a mortgage exemption each year, and now is the time to file. See S. S. Widney.

A Friend in Need.

When Glando Gargle is used for a cold in the head it is surprising to see how quickly the clogged nostrils are opened. Adenoids are caused by a neglected cold. If the mucus which forms is allowed to remain in the nostrils, a diseased condition will result, which causes chronic catarrh and adenoids. Glando Gargle was prepared to meet these special needs. Equally effective for sore mouth or sore throat. Price 50 cents. For sale by All Druggists.

EASTER OFFERING

Gone are the winter's ice and snow,
The south wind bids the bluebird sing;
Sap in the willow is aflow,
The world stands at the gate of spring.

Soul, art thou winter bound by grief?
Enter the garden of the spring!
Earth's resurrection brings relief—
Joy be thine Easter offering.

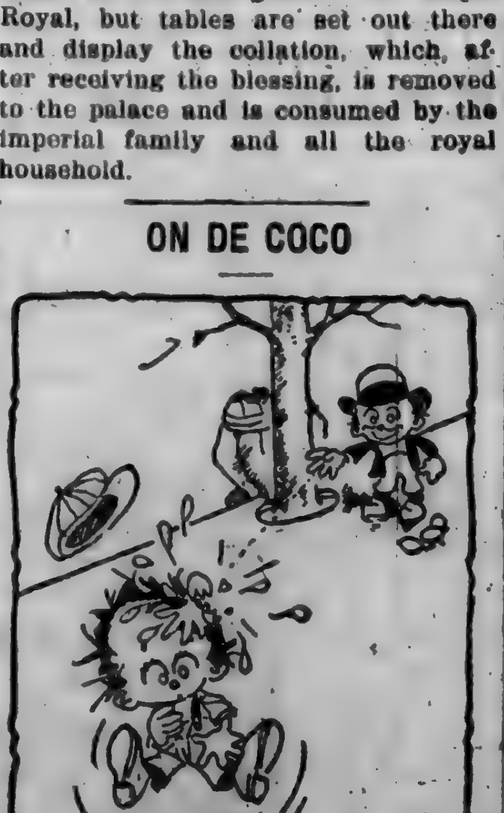
Welcome Easter.

Man likes to rule, not merely to wait upon nature. So it is that he has learned through the ages to look for, and love the tiny things that mark the coming of the soil's great Easter session, and give him a hint that spring is waiting for him to commit his hopes and promises to her, that she may carry them on strong and hearty to her more vigorous successor, the sunny summertime.

First Bless the Supper.

At the close of the midnight mass in Russia the people partake of a bountiful supper to celebrate the close of their weary days of fasting, but—the supper is taken to church! Each family brings all that will appear later on the festive board, to be blessed, and the heads of the family carry it in baskets which are deposited in the place of worship during service. Naturally such primitive arrangements do not hold good in the Chapel Royal, but tables are set out there and display the collation, which, after receiving the blessing, is removed to the palace and is consumed by the imperial family and all the royal household.

ON DE COCO



The Big One—Dere! Youse been hollerin' all day for a Easter egg an' here it is.

Local Briefs

Read the Free Column.

Send in your news items.

P. A. Shurts was at Ft. Wayne yesterday.

Fancy work and baked goods for sale Saturday in J. P. Buckingham's rooms.

Ed Leighty is at work excavating for to install a furnace under his residence.

Shipshewana voted on incorporation, Tuesday of this week. The Advertiser says: "Why not turn over a new leaf on that day? Forget all strife and jealousy and pull together for the good of the place."

Tri-Township Farmers' Institute Announcement, Prizes for 1917.

Due to the fact that the greatest good from the contests held by this association at the annual meeting to interest the school children in agriculture and home making can come only by a well planned and long preparation, the officers think it best to announce the prizes they expect to give at the 1917 session.

We realize that much good can be done by these contests; that much better and more elaborate displays could be made than we are making but this would require a great deal of time in supervision, etc., and the officers feel that they are giving all the time they can afford to the work at the present time. This work can never reach the zenith of possibilities until someone can give a large part of their time to its promotion. The county agents are doing this in neighboring counties. We hope we get ours soon.

For the same reason the registered O. I. C. gilt offered by F. E. Johnston to the boy who brought in the best ten ears of corn that he grew in an acre plat himself cannot be given. However Mr. Johnston says it is a standing proposition, and so when we get our county agent this offer will undoubtedly be taken up.

The same statements that were required last winter will be required this next exhibit, that is, regarding having done the work themselves, etc. Some fault was found in that the parents did the work, etc., but we think this not likely. No parent will sell their child's honor for a paltry dollar or two, and teach them dishonesty to boot. God have mercy on them if they are so unprincipled as that. That would be stealing the money from the boy or girl to whom it rightfully belonged, also we believe our people are above such things.

CORN EXHIBIT

Best 10 ears grown by boy, father or guardian: Boy's own selection, 1916 crop. One entry allowed to each boy in Public Schools of the Tri-Townships. Essays volitional. Honor statements required.

Sweepstakes $2.00
(Best of all)

	Pure White	Pure Yellow	Mixed Corn To be all dented varieties
1st. Prize	$1.00	$1.00	$1.00
2nd Prize	.50	.50	.50
3rd Prize	.25	.25	.25

POTATOE EXHIBIT

Must be grown by boy himself.

Must be pure stock, true to name.

One peck in each entry.

One entry allowed to each boy in public schools of Tri-Townships.

Must choose one of the six common varieties named.

Essays volitional. Honor statements required.

Sweepstakes $2.00
(Best of all)

	Main Crop Potatoes	Early Crop Potatoes
	Good Times	Early Rose
	Gold Coin	Early Ohio
	Rural N. Yorker	Irish Cobler
1st Prize	$1.00	$1.00
2nd Prize	.50	.50
3rd Prize	.25	.25

BAKING EXHIBIT

All work must be done by enterer

One entry in bread allowed each girl, 13 years and over, in public schools of the Tri-Townships.

One entry in cake allowed each girl, 8 years and over, in public schools of Tri-Townships, who are not eligible to bread contest.

Cakes must be baked from recipe herein given.

Bread and Cake to be baked in pans 8 to 9½ inches long by 3½ to 4 inches wide and 3 inches deep.

(Sweepstakes of $2 00 divided among 1, 2, 3, etc., prizes)

	Bread (13 yrs on)	Cake (8 to 13 yrs)
1st. Prize	$1.50	$1.50
2nd. Prize	1.00	1.00
3rd. Prize	.75	.75
4th. Prize	.50	.50
5th. Prize	.25	.25

CAKE RECIPE:

1⅗ cups sugar
⅗ cup butter
3 eggs
1 cup milk
3 cups flour
4 teaspoon Baking Powder
1 teaspoon vanilla

Cream butter and sugar together, akd well beaten yolks of eggs. Sift flour and baking powder together. Add milk and flour alternately to the first mixture, beat until smooth and fine grained. Fold in stiffly beaten whites of eggs, add vanilla. Bake in loaf pan as required about 45 minutes. Other fats may be substituted for the butter. Use a little salt, about ½ teaspoon, and plenty of flavoring.

Use the following icing:

1 cup sugar
2-3 cup hot water
1 teaspoon vanilla, 1 teaspoon lemon juice, white of 1 egg

Boil sugar and water until it threads from spoon: add gradually to WELL BEATEN EGG, beating until smooth; add flavoring.

Score Card, BREAD

General appearance 20
  Size 5
  Shape 5
  Crust 10
  Color, Character, Depth
Flavor 35
Odor and Taste
Lightness 15
Crumb 30
  Character 20
  Course-fine
  Tough-tender
  Moist-dry: Texture
  Elastic or not
  Color 5
  Grain-distribution of gas 5
100

Score Card, CAKE

Flavor 30
Lightness 15
Texture 20
Icing 20
Appearance 15
100

A Cure for the Blues.

Have you ever met with the man or woman who is a victim of the blues? They feel that fate is against them. They worry and stew about imaginary ills until life becomes a burden.

Many a man has made a business failure and given up in dispair all because he had the blues.

We should not consider such conditions lightly, for there is a deep secret underlying every case of the blues.

The person whose physical condition is normal, is optemistic: adversities only make them more cautious and more determined to succeed.

If the liver is not acting properly the system becomes full of poisonous accumulations, the kidneys and the stomach and intestinal glands become suggish and a general debilitateed and nervous condition exists.

The blood becomes impure, the circulation sluggish and the brain clouded.

GLANDO is the best remedy for the blues. It is a general gland tonic that starts up the glandular action, drives off the accumulated poisons and builds up the system. A 50 cent package contains three seperate treatments, each treatment having a specific part to perform in effecting a cure.

For sale by All Druggists.

WANTED:—Maple syrup on subscription.

For EXPERT
Auto Repairing
and Painting
GO TO
CAMPBELL & SON
AUBURN, IND.

Satisfaction guaranteed.
Our Painter and Mechanic are high class workman.
Special attention will be given to your Electrical equipment and Magneto work
We also charge storage batteries.
Get Our Prices.

DENTIST
O. R. PRICE
ST. JOE, IND.
Offices first door south of Patterson's Dept. Store.
Bell Phone No. 44.

Oldest in America Strongest in the World
Mutual life
INSURANCE COMPANY
of New York
J. C. HULL, Agent
Phone No. [illegible]

BULLETIN!

For a few weeks yet you can buy your fencing at the old prices:

◆ ◆ ◆

Lion Fence Prices:
10-47 All No. 9 wire, 12 inch stay 50c
10-47 All No. 9 wire, 14 inch stay 48c
10-46 No. 11 Filler, 12 inch stay 39c
10-46 No. 11 Filler, 6 inch stay 50c
10-46 No. 12 Filler, 12 inch stay 35c
10-46 No. 12 Filler, 6 inch stay 42c
9-39 No. 12 Filler, 12 inch stay 30c

◆ ◆ ◆

New Page Fence Prices:
10-47 All No. 9 wire, 12 inch stay 46c

Brace Wire and three styles of Barb carried in stock.

We can also supply your needs in Chick Feed, Meat Scrap, Cut Bone, Oyster Shells.

STEWARD LUMBER & GRAIN Co
SPENCERVILLE, IND.
Highest Prices Paid for Grain and Seeds.

Hopes Women Will Adopt This Habit As Well As Men

Glass of hot water each morning helps us look and feel clean, sweet, fresh.

Happy, bright, alert—vigorous and vivacious—a good clear skin; a natural, rosy complexion and freedom from illness are assured only by clean, healthy blood. If only every woman and likewise every man could realize the wonders of the morning inside bath, what a gratifying change would take place.

Instead of the thousands of sickly, anaemic-looking men, women and girls with pasty or muddy complexions; instead of the multitudes of "nerve wrecks," "rundowns," "brain fags" and pessimists we should see a virile, optimistic throng of rosy-cheeked people everywhere.

An inside bath is had by drinking, each morning before breakfast, a glass of real hot water with a teaspoonful of limestone phosphate in it to wash from the stomach, liver, kidneys and ten yards of bowels the previous day's indigestible waste, sour fermentations and poisons, thus cleansing, sweetening and freshening the entire alimentary canal before putting more food into the stomach.

Those subject to sick headache, biliousness, nasty breath, rheumatism, colds; and particulary those who have a pallid, sallow complexion and who are constipated very often, are urged to obtain a quarter pound of limestone phosphate at the drug store which will cost but a trifle but is sufficient to demonstrate the quick and remarkable change in both health and appearance awaiting those who practice internal sanitation. We must remember that inside cleanliness is more important than outside, because the skin does not absorb impurities to contaminate the blood, while the pores in the thirty feet of bowels do.

"TIZ" GLADDENS SORE, TIRED FEET

"TIZ" makes sore, burning, tired feet fairly dance with delight. Away go the aches and pains, the corns, callouses, blisters and bunions.

"TIZ" draws out the acids and poisons that puff up your feet. No matter how hard you work, how long you dance, how far you walk, or how long you remain on your feet, "TIZ" brings restful foot comfort. "TIZ" is wonderful for tired, aching, swollen smarting feet. Your feet just tingle for joy; shoes never hurt or seem tight.

Get a 25 cent box of "TIZ" now from any druggist or department store. End foot torture forever—wear smaller shoes, keep your feet fresh, sweet and happy.

SALTS IS FINE FOR KIDNEYS, QUIT MEAT

Flush the Kidneys at once when Back hurts or Bladder bothers—Meat forms uric acid.

No man or woman who eats meat regularly can make a mistake by flushing the kidneys occasionally, says a well-known authority. Meat forms uric acid which clogs the kidney pores so they sluggishly filter or strain only part of the waste and poisons from the blood, then you get sick. Nearly all rheumatism, headaches, liver trouble, nervousness, constipation, dizziness, sleeplessness, bladder disorders come from sluggish kidneys.

The moment you feel a dull ache in the kidneys or your back hurts, or if the urine is cloudy, offensive, full of sediment, irregular of passage or attended by a sensation of scalding, get about four ounces of Jad Salts from any reliable pharmacy and take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys will then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia and has been used for generations to flush clogged kidneys and stimulate them to activity, also to neutralize the acids in urine so it no longer causes irritation, thus ending bladder disorders.

Jad Salts is inexpensive and cannot injure; makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink which all regular meat eaters should take now and then to keep the kidneys clean and the blood pure, thereby avoiding serious kidney complications.

Buy your next writing tablet and package of envelopes at this office.

Are You in Need of Cement?
WABASH PORTLAND CEMENT
Is Best For Sidewalks, Foundations, Floors, Walls, Concrete Blocks, Bridges, Etc.
Look for the Turkey on Every Bag You Buy
WABASH PORTLAND CEMENT CO.
General Offices, Detroit, Mich. Works, Stroh, Indiana
Mrs. L. W. STEWARD, Spencerville, Indiana.

APRIL

L 908

0121

WE WELCOME
LARGE&SMALL
DEPOSITS

Your Business Is never too large for us to handle successfully, or too small for us to appreciate. The small depositors receive the same courteous attention as the large depositors.

EVERY GUSTOMER A BOOSTER

That's why we want your account. We want you to tell your friends and neighbors. They need a good BANK also, and all will be benefited.

Farmers & Merchants
State Bank
Capital Stock $25,000.00
Spencerville, - - - Indiana

SPENCERVILLE

Slide in the $1:00 Do it now.

John Moudy, wife and son Chas and family, of Robinson Chaple, spent Sunday with Miss Mary Comskey.

Mrs. Wm. Henderson and son Richard, of Auburn, visited Chas. Henderson and family, Sunday.

Clyde Sharp, wife and daughter Irma, of Hamilton, spent Saturday and Sunday with their daughter, Mrs. Bert Fisher and family.

Mrs. Myrtle Beams will entertain the C C Club, Saturday afternoon.

Dr. B O. Shook and family attended an infair dinner of their nephew, Harry Shook and bride, Sunday, at the home of the groom's parents, David Shook and wife, west of Auburn.

Mrs. Beulah Vallieu and son James, spent Sunday with her parents.

Jacob Lochner and wife, of near Huntertown, visited their daughter, Mrs. Edith Akey and family, Sunday.

Mrs. William Zimmerman and son, who has been occupying rooms in the Amanda Bowman residence, moved near St. Joe, Monday.

R. U. Bowser and family, Homer Bowser and family, of Huntertown; Ivan Bowser, of Mongo; Jerome Gloyd and family, of Robison Chapel, visited Sunday with Theodore Bowser, of Union Chaple, and also Mrs. Molly Hyndman, who recently came from Oklahoma to spend the summer at the Theo. Bowser home.

Mrs. Hattie Beams spent Saturday and Sunday in Ft. Wayne visiting her mother, Mrs. Mary A. Shutt, at the home of her daughter, Mrs. W. W. Carey and family.

J. S. Hollabaugh and family visited Henry Goldsmith and wife, of Hurshtown.

Frank House wife and son John, attended the funeral of the former's sister, Mrs. Frank Smith, of Fort Wayne, whose funeral occurred on Monday morning at Harlan.

Ett Walker and wife, of Hicksville, were Sunday guests of Mrs. Fanny Beams.

Harvey Kimes, wife and sons Walter and Donald, spent Sunday with Eli Fales and wife.

Clarence Gloyd left Monday morning to accept a position at Toledo for the summer.

Messrs. John and Stanley Shutt, of Ft. Wayne, spent Sunday with their father, G. M. Shutt and family.

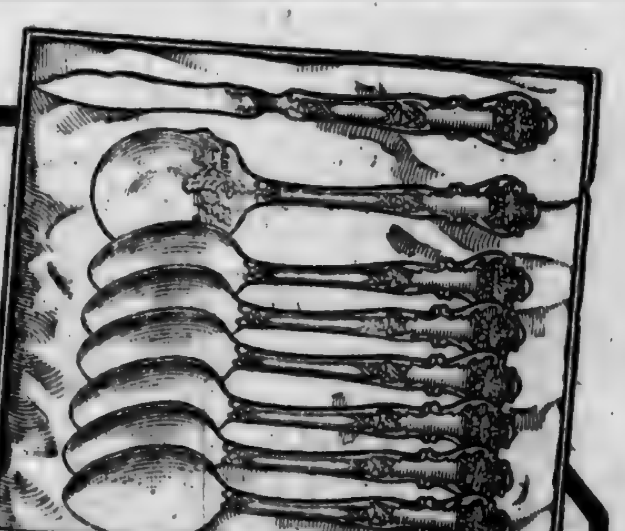
The Misses Ethel and Gertrude Shutt spent Saturday at Wayne.

Harvey Beam and wife, and Mrs. Nancy Rummel, of this place, and P. A. Shurts and daughter Pearl, of St. Joe, were Sunday guests of Wm. Lucas and wife, of west of St. Joe.

Alfred Bachmann, of Ft. Wayne, spent Sunday and Monday the guest of his parents, John Bachmann and wife.

Mrs. Shiffer, of Ft. Wayne, gave a birthday surprise for William Beninghoff, Monday. Those present were:—John Beninghoff, wife and son Golden, of this place; Miss Helen Bowman, of St. Joe; and many guests of Wayne. All report a fine time.

Silver of Quality and Beauty



Unquestioned durability and exquisite design —the highest ideals in plated ware—are assured in spoons, forks, and fancy serving pieces bearing the renowned trade mark

1847 ROGERS BROS.

There are various makes of silver-plated tableware which are claimed to be "just as good," but, like all imitations, they lack the beauty and wearing quality identified with the original and genuine 1847 ROGERS BROS. ware, popularly known as "Silver Plate that Wears."

Sold by leading dealers everywhere. Send for catalogue "CL," showing all designs.

International Silver Co., Successor to Meriden Britannia Co., Meriden, Conn.

Dr. Scudder Hull, of Hicksville, was a caller here, Thursday.

Chris Goldsmith and daughter Rosa, of Harlan, visited Mrs. J. S. Hollabaugh and family, Wednesday.

Jack Beams made a business trip to Newville, Garrett and Wayne, Thursday.

John House is papering, varnishing and painting the residence of Milton Chaney.

Mrs. Clyde Fredrick received word of the serious illness of her sister, Mrs. George Fredrick, of Grabill.

John Hursh, of Auburn, was here last week taking care of his parents, Chris Hursh and wife. Mrs. Hursh is very poorly.

Mrs. Sarah Cole, who has been suffering for the past eight weeks with a fellon on her thumb, reports it a little better.

R. U. Bowser assisted by Clarence Kelley erected a new windmill on the Gust Heffner farm, last week. Mr. Heffner is also building a new slaughter house.

The Ladies Guild of the M. E. Church held their regular business meeting, Thursday afternoon, at the church.

Jack Beams, George Shutt, Geo. Rochapman and John Shutt motored to Wayne, Sunday evening.

Mrs. Jane Butler was a Sunday guest of Mrs. Mary Jane Silberg.

Mrs. George Jenkins is on the sick list.

Mrs. Walter Newman and daughter Tressa, of Defiance, Ohio, spent several days the latter part of last week with her parents, C. A. Rhoades and wife.

Mrs. Edith Ackey and family spent several days visiting her parents, Jacob Lochner and wife, of near Huntertown, last week.

Isadore Badica and family, of near Ft. Wayne, visited with Geo. Gloyd and family, Sunday.

Mrs. Simeon Maurer returned home this week, from Auburn, where she has been assisting in caring for Grandma Little, an aged lady of Anburn, who fell and injured herself quite badly, last week.

Mann Kyle and wife, Mrs. Frank Kyle and son, of Hicksville, Ohio, and Miss Sarah Kyle, of east of town, spent Wednesday at the home of Jack Beams and wife.

Master David Mumma had as his guests Monday for supper in honor of his eighth birthday, Vaugh Allen and Forest Beams.

Mrs. Arthur Furnish and children, and James Furnish, of the County Line, and Mrs. Walter Newman and daughter Tressa, of Defiance, were Sunday dinner guests of C. A. Rhoades and wife.

Len Parker and sister Ester, and Glenia Emrick, of Huntertown; Mrs. Thornberg and daughters, Bertha and Margarite, and the Misses Vera Silberg and Mary Pervines were Sunday guests at the home of Greeley Wearley and family, east of town.

The 2-yr. old son of Cal Laux and wife, north of town, ran under the wheels of a wagon belonging to Mart Hull, Saturday, as the latter was on his way to this place. Mr. Laux and Mr. Hull had loaded some grain to take to mill and did not notice the babe until the mother saw it. The wheels ran over its shoulder, barely missing the head. The child is very low at this writing.

The report of the eighth grade examination of the Coburntown school, of which Howard Pervines of this place, is the teacher, came Monday. There are six graduates which are as follows:—Misses Minnie Walker, Luella Evans, Berniece Hart and Estella Headley, and the Messrs. Roscoe Place and Garth Shull. Miss Minnie Walker carrying the honors of the township of 93%; and Garth Shull, a close second, with a grade of 91%.

Significant Festival.

How fitting it is that Easter, the great festival of the resurrection, should be celebrated in spring!

There is a marvel of significance for all humanity in Easter day. It reminds us that death is not the end, that life has triumphed over death.

A $5 Vacuum and Sweeper for $3.95 at Beams & Co., store.

Miss Elma Wilmot visited friends at St. Joe, Friday and Saturday.

Mrs. Granville Erick and Rolla Moffett and wife were Thursday dinner guests of Jacob Baltz and wife.

Greatly reduced prices on Shoes and Oxfords. You can't afford to be without, at the prices we are quoting. BEAMS & Co.

Jacob Baltz and wife and Wm. Sommers and wife attended the funeral of the former's sister, Mrs. Peter Repp, of Ft. Wayne, Thursday at 1 o'clock at Harlan. Mrs. Repp suffered a stroke of paralysis several months ago and died Tuesday at her home in Ft. Wayne. The services were conducted by the Rev. Oberholtzer at the Lutheran church at Harlan. Interment at the Harlan cemetery.

Dr. Winfield Scott Hall, of the Chicago University of Medicine, appeared on the lecture course here last Friday evening. This address was on the Social Ethics problem and was instructive to his audience He gave the conditions existing in the large cities like Chicago, how the young folks from the rural districts are attracted to the city by the lure of good wages (so they think) and he showed how unprepared they were to meet the great many temptations that were put before them and how so many fall as the result. A large audience should have greeted him, as the information received was a great lesson, even though we do not know of the existing conditions in the congested portions of our cities. A statement made by the speaker was that there are less people in the rural districts today than there were 10 years ago; and unless this tide of emigration can be changed the rural districts will become more streneous.

Frank W. Silberg
Veterinarian
OFFICE and HOSPITAL
—ON—
Main Street
SPENCERVILLE. - IND.
Phones—Office No. 7
(18) Residence No. 101

Dr. H. R. Farnham
MEDICINE AND
GENERAL SURGERY
ST. JOE, INDIANA
Office Hours—Week Day
10:00 to 11:00 a. m.
1:00 to 3:00 p. m.
6:30 to 8:00 p. m.
Sunday—By appointment.
Telephone
Office, ... No. 2

Office at Residence. Second house west of Widney Opera House.

H. C. Hathaway
TRUSTEE
Concord Township

Office Day Thursday's of Each week in Town Hall, St. Joe.

Wall Paper

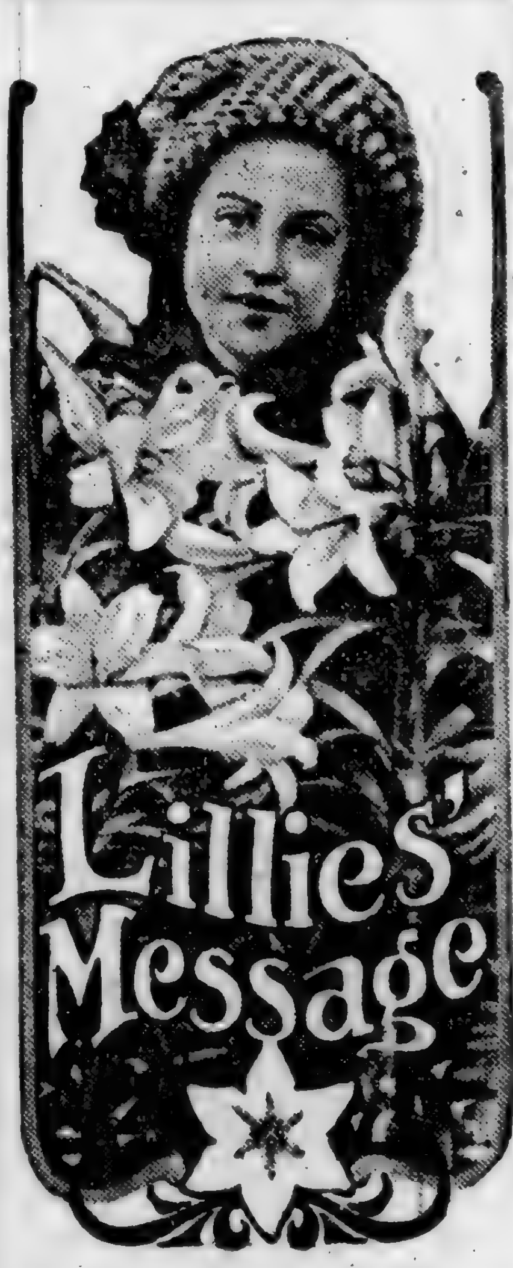
this year is a bad proposition for most dealers when it comes to the question of color, but here you will find a sample line that can't be beaten anywhere.

With the Spring Housecleaning Necessities we suggest the use of Smoky City Wall Paper Cleaner and our Household Paints would help out the looks of that wood work wonderfully. Come and see our line.

SPRAYING!

Scalecide—That's the spraying material to use. 1 gallon of spray to 15 gallons of water. Full instruction given. We handle in gallon size only. There is nothing better for your fruit trees and, besides it is so easy to fix— try it now is the time.

Golden Murray,
SPENCERVILLE, IND.



My Easter lilies, pure and fair and sweet,
I know that hidden in your hearts of gold
Still lies the secret you each year repeat—
An oft-told story that can ne'er grow old—
Of birds that sing,
Of bells that ring,
As o'er the earth now steals the spring.

A Home Guard.

Every family should be provided with a good, safe and reliable cough remedy. Coughs, croup and colds often come on very suddenly and it is of the greatest importance that they be treated promptly. You can best guard your home by getting three ounces of Pynine to which you add thirteen ounces of syrup and you will have a cough remedy which is second to none. It is highly recommended for hacking coughs as well as bronchial and lung affections.

You can feel it open up the air passages and cells of the lungs. Makes you breathe easy. Children love to take it. Directions accompany each bottle. Price 50 cents. For sale by All Druggists.

Transfer paper at NEWS office, 2 sheets for 5c. Get some now for that pattern you wish to transfer

S. S. Widney
Justice of the Peace
Insurance and Real Estate
Phone No. 10
ST. JOE, - - - IND

How's This?

We offer One Hundred Dollars Reward for any case of Catarrh that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure.

F. J. CHENEY & CO., Toledo, O.

We, the undersigned, have known F. J. Cheney for the last 15 years, and believe him perfectly honorable in all business transactions and financially able to carry out any obligations made by his firm.

NATIONAL BANK OF COMMERCE,
Toledo, O.

Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. Testimonials sent free. Price 75 cents per bottle. Sold by all Druggists.

Take Hall's Family Pills for constipation.

SAGE TEA BEAUTIFIES AND DARKENS HAIR

Don't Stay Gray! It Darkens So Naturally that Nobody can Tell.

You can turn gray, faded hair beautifully dark and lustrous almost over night if you'll get a 50-cent bottle of "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound" at any drug store. Millions of bottles of this old famous Sage Tea Recipe, improved by the addition of other ingredients, are sold annually, says a well-known druggist here, because it darkens the hair so naturally and evenly that no one can tell it has been applied.

Those whose hair is turning gray or becoming faded have a surprise awaiting them, because after one or two applications the gray hair vanishes and your locks become luxuriantly dark and beautiful.

This is the age of youth. Gray-haired, unattractive folks aren't wanted around, so get busy with Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound to-night and you'll be delighted with your dark, handsome hair and your youthful appearance within a few days.

This preparation is a toilet requisite and is not intended for the cure, mitigation or prevention of disease.

PRINTING Of All Kinds
not the cheap kind but the good kind done here.

Lehman's CLOTHING HOUSE
ESTABLISHED 1887
MENS AND BOYS OUTFITTERS
808-810 CALHOUN STREET
Fort Wayne, Ind.
BEN LEHMAN PROP

APRIL

L 908

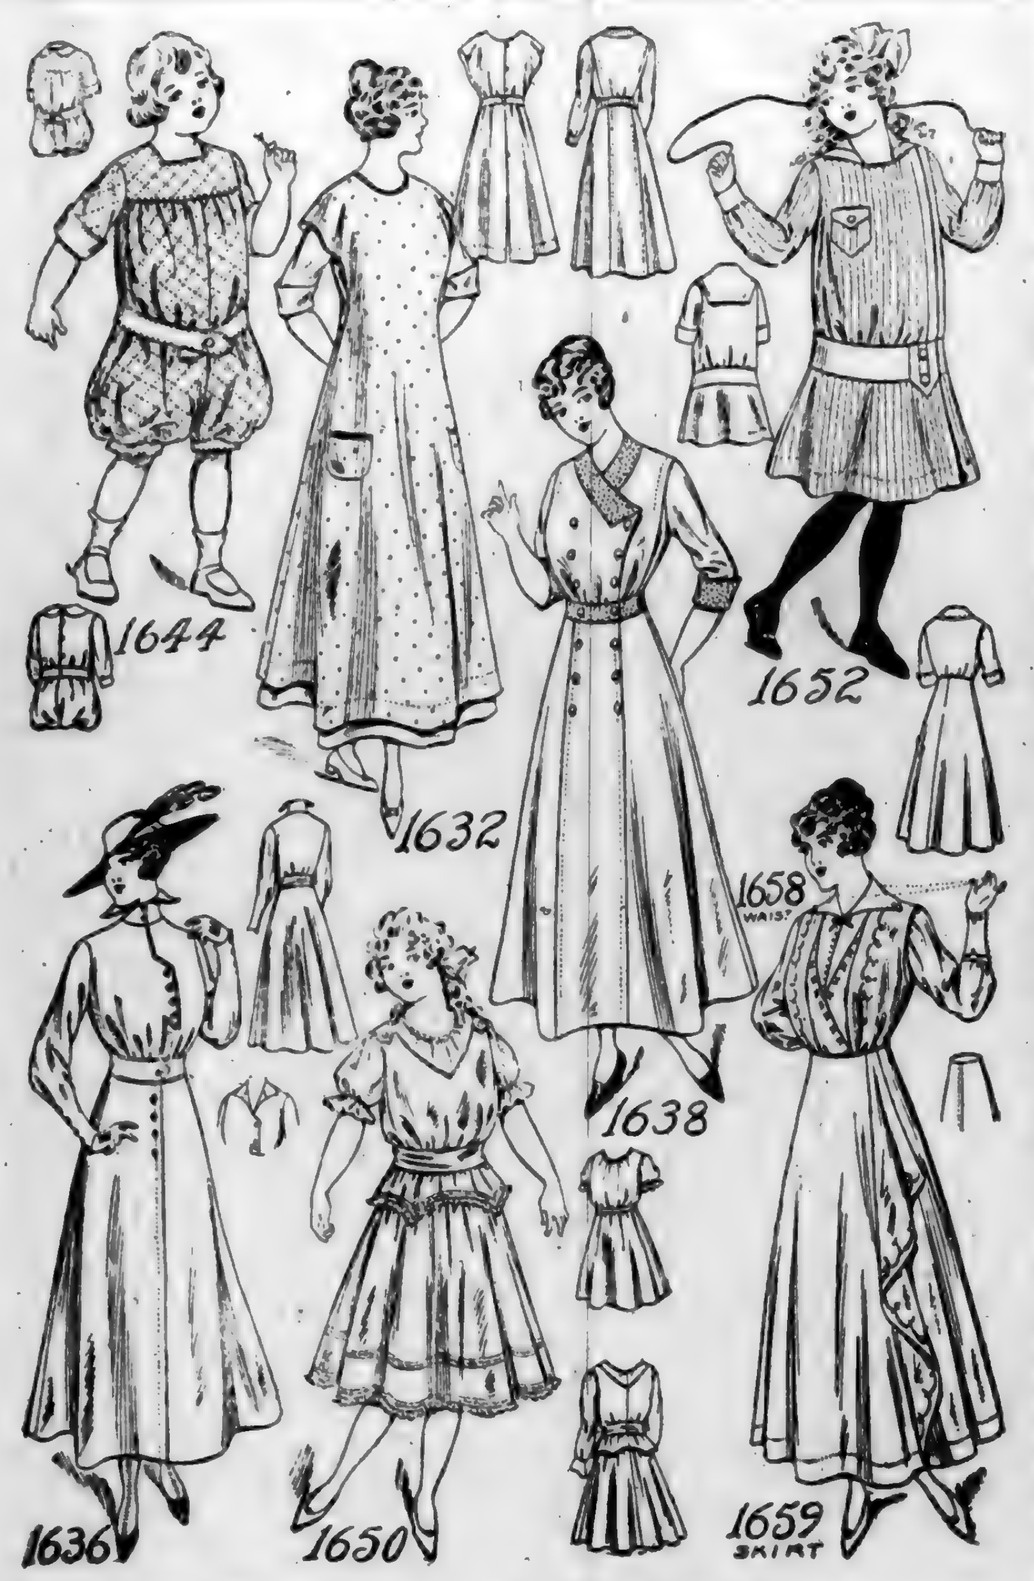
0122

Our Fashion Department

Prepared Especially for this Paper

Send All Orders Direct to this Paper



1644. Child's Rompers.

Cut in 5 sizes: 1, 2, 3, 4 and 5 years. It requires 3 yards of 27-inch material for a 4-year size. Price, 10 cents.

1632. Ladies' Apron.

Cut in 3 sizes: Small, Medium and Large. It requires 5 yards of 36-inch material for a Medium size. Price, 10 cents.

1638. Ladies' House Dress.

Cut in 7 sizes: 32, 34, 36, 38, 40, 42 and 44 inches bust measure. It requires 7¼ yards of 36-inch material for a 36-inch size. Price, 10 cents.

1652. Girl's Dress.

Cut in 4 sizes: 4, 6, 8 and 10 years. It requires 2¾ yards of 44-inch material for a 6-year size. Price, 10 cents.

1636. Ladies' Dress.

Cut in 6 sizes: 34, 36, 38, 40, 42 and 44 inches bust measure. It requires 6 yards of 44-inch material for a 36-inch size. The skirt measures about 3¼ yards at the foot. Price, 10 cents.

1650. Girl's Dress, with or without Over Blouse.

Cut in 4 sizes: 8, 10, 12 and 14 years. It requires 3⅝ yards of 44-inch material for a 10-year size for the dress with 1½ yard for the over blouse. Price, 10 cents.

1658-1659. Ladies' Costume.

Waist 1658 cut in 6 sizes: 34, 36, 38, 40, 42 and 44 inches bust measure. Skirt 1659 cut in 6 sizes: 22, 24, 26, 28, 30 and 32 inches waist measure. It requires 7¾ yards of 44-inch material for the entire gown for a 36-inch size. This calls for TWO separate patterns, 10 cents FOR EACH pattern.

PATTERN ORDER.

Patterns
No.	Size

I enclose .... for Patterns

Name ....

Town ....

State ....

St. No., R. F. D. ....

Mail Your Order Direct to Publisher.

THE CHIEF LEGATEE

Herewith we publish another ending to the continued story finished last month in this paper. The error was made in printing "Continued Next Week" instead of "The End," which mislead the reader:

Ransom softly drew her aside where her eyes could not fall upon the bed.

Harper stopped still where he was, the picture of gloom and uncertainty.

"It must be settled now," said Ransom. "As we leave this room, our relations must remain."

"I cannot but think your fears all folly," muttered Harper. "Yet the responsibility you force upon me is terrible. If it were not for that will! How can I present it to the Surrogate when I know the testator is still alive?"

"You need not. I will do that," said Ransom.

"And the property! Given to a man we none of us know. Property that is not legally his."

"I will make it so," cried Georgian with a burst of new and uncontrollable hope as she saw, as she thought, this conscientious lawyer yielding. "There is paper here; draw up a deed of gift. I will sign it and you shall hold it so that whether I live or die, Auchincloss' title to his money shall be absolute. This much I wish to do, that Alfred's life should not have been sacrificed for nothing."

"Let me think."

Harper was wavering.

* * *

A half hour later the door of Ransom's room was flung hurriedly open, and loud cries for Mrs. Deo and the office clerk rang through the house. And when they and others came running at the call, it was to find Mr. Ransom and the lawyer hanging over the recumbent figure of the dead Hazen, and the deaf girl Anitra pointing at the group, with wild and inarticulate cries.

THE END.

ANOTHER PAPER ADOPTS SIMPLIFIED SPELLING.

Philadelphia, April 3.—Simplified spelling of twelve words recommended by the National Educational Association was adopted today by the Philadelphia North American. The words are tho, altho, thru, thruout, thoro, thoroly, thorofare, program, prolog, catalog, pedagog and decalog. Use of these spellings, the newspaper says, has been advocated by the simplified spelling board "as the first step to a greater form."

CONCERNING WOMEN.

Of the 1,680 county and township officers in Kansas 159 are women.

Eugenie, formerly empress of France, has a fortune estimated at $30,000,000.

Mrs. Carrie T. Powers has been appointed a deputy labor commissioner in California.

Mrs. Hagel Grossman of Neffsville, Pa., has been spinning on the same wheel for the last eighty years.

THE OFFENDING SKILLET

By Mrs. L. S., Thomasboro, Illinois

PRIZE STORY NO. 5

Below we print another story of our Story Contest. This is an ideal method for amateur authors to secure recognition. Stories of love, adventure, descriptive, etc., will be printed in this and 75 to 100 other papers, if acceptable to the contest editor. Manuscript must be legibly written on one side of the paper, and will be printed in an early edition if accepted. If return of manuscript is desired, in the event of refusal, first class postage must be enclosed. Send all manuscripts to the editor of this paper.—Ed.

They had been friends, Lettie and Tressie, as long as they could remember, and longer too, for they played together before they could even walk. At school they sat together, studied together, recited together, and when circumstances required it,—which was very seldom—were punished together. Outside of their respective homes they could almost invariably be found arm in arm telling their most interesting tales, exchanging their sweetest compliments, confiding their most sacred secrets and all the while almost devouring each other with sparkling eyes that seemed to have been set into their respective sockets for the sole purpose of mutual admiration.

But how quickly do they pass, those blissful days of childhood and girlhood. "O, Lettie, how can you go and get married to that back-woods preacher and let him carry you off to the mountains so far away. You will break my heart. I will just grieve and pine till there is nothing left of me." And with that Tressie put her arms around her bosom friend as if to signify her intention of shielding her against the usurpation of that "mean young minister" who had come in between them. "Dear Tressie, let us not make ourselves miserable, I can't bear the thought of leaving you, when you talk like that. Never mind, I will find you a gallant rich land owner in my new circle of acquaintances and he shall carry you to our beautiful mountains and build a grand home for you near the parsonage." How little did Lettie realize that her promise made in an attempt at light-heartedness would one day be literally fulfilled.

"O Tressie," she wrote in one of her letters from her mountain home a year later, "I have just learned that our neighbor's son, Walter West, has actually laid siege to your castle and will carry you off captive to his beautiful home a few hundred yards from the parsonage. How lucky he decided to stop with his parents in dear old Etherton while they visited old friends in that locality. Surely, you will "set the day" soon and not let us wait too long for your coming, I am just homesick to see you." And she came, did Tressie, the happy bride of Mr. West, the most prosperous young farmer in that vicinity. Mrs. Letitia Sommers the "Parson's" wife and Mrs. Theresa West retold the experiences of happy childhood, and laughed the same happy laugh as of old. The bonds of friendship grew stronger day by day, as they worshiped, and visited and worked together. Yes "worked together" for they took their needlework with them when they called for an afternoon chat which was almost daily.

"Hello," called Mr. Edward West, the younger brother of Tressie's husband who made his home with them, since their parents moved to town a few weeks after their son Walter's marriage. His "Hello" was addressed to Mrs. Sommers who sat on her front veranda at some needle-work enjoying the cool breeze and the beautiful mountain scenery, neither of which she could ever tire of. "Excuse me for being so ill-mannered as to ask a favor of you, mounted as I am on this restless, unmanageable colt. But if I dismount those cows will be sure to go where they please and get themselves and me into trouble." "Never mind the 'manners,' Mr. West," said Lettie cheerily. "What can I do for you?" "We are expecting the threshers tomorrow and Tressie finds herself short of one skillet." "Thank you Mrs. Sommers" and with a bound he was off with the skillet after the herd of cows he was driving home for the evening milking. "Ho, Brindle, Spottie! Get out of this! Cut out that horning Jers." And forgetting the nature of the object in his right hand, the skillet was brought down with a bang on the bossy "Jersey."

Next morning all was hustle and bustle about the West premises. The thresher had pulled in and Mrs. Tressie and the neighbor women who had come to help cook and wait on the table were busy as bees in the big kitchen. Skillets of chicken were frying and innumerable viands delicious and savory filled the house with a most irresistable aroma. "What can be the matter with this skillet of chicken," said Mrs. West, "it is continually scorching and I have added lard a dozen times." "Why, don't you see," said Mrs. Crosby, "its cracked." "Well I declare," said Tressie and to herself she added: "How could Lettie send me a broken skillet, and for threshers too." From that moment it was noticed that Mrs. West was absent minded during the rest of the preparations for dinner. She heard the queries: "Have you salted the potatoes? Where do you keep your nut meg? and others of a like nature, but whether she replied or not she afterwards could not have told. Other thoughts occupied her mind and made her most miserable. Had Lettie resented her sending her brother-in-law to borrow that skillet instead of coming herself; or had she thought it necessary to "nip a propensity toward borrowing in the bud." But she could remember of borrowing from Lettie but once before, and she had returned the favor when Mrs. Sommers had had the conference to entertain by lending her all her best china. "Or was her friend becoming selfish, and that to such a degree as to keep her best skillet and lend a cracked one?" Ponder as she would, she could arrive at no conclusion. Her dear Walter, to whom she confided her trouble, thus, like a true daughter of Eve, making him a participant in her suspicions, could give her no consolation nor offer a solution to the problem. "A question too knotty for my bright and quick-witted Tressie must be referred to a better authority than a mountaineer farmer," and soon he was fast asleep, while Tressie dreamed of a skillet with an ever widening fissure. She saw the two parts of that useful kitchen utensil separate and float like two clouds in opposite directions, on one half, she was seated weeping as if her heart would break, on the other sat Lettie, with a scornful defiant look upon her usually calm, pleasant countenance, while her Walter roared angrily: "We'll take it to court, to court, to court," and at that she awoke with a start to hear her husband snoring as if for wages.

The day following she helped at the neighbor's to prepare another threshing dinner, and thus, it was on the third day after borrowing it that she returned the skillet to the parsonage as she drove by to the village post-office in her bright new buggy. "No, she could not invite Lettie to come with her for a drive as was her custom. She felt too badly, too grieved. But poorly concealing her embarrassment, she handed the offending kitchen utensil to Lettie, who with scarf thrown over her head had come to the front gate when she saw her friend coming over the hill behind her dapple gray. She noticed the gapping fissure as she took the proffered skillet and asked: "Is that my skillet?" "Yes," and the flush of confusion suffused Tressie's cheeks, as she soliloquised: "Has it come to this, that my dearest friend would not only lend me a broken skillet but afterward try to make it appear as though she did not know it. Or would she stoop to a plain falsehood"—as Lettie's: "I did not know my, my skillet was broken," jarred upon her ears and nerves. And to think that she would deem her capable of bringing her back a broken utensil for a perfect one. Oh, she could have wept a flood of tears, had not her wounded pride prompted her to touch her whip and say with ill-concealed chagrin: "Come Dapple, we must hurry away for the mail or master will have to wait for his dinner today." And as they sped away leaving Lettie standing at the half opened gate with a letter in her hand which she had hoped to mail at the office—for she had not doubted her friend would extend the usual invitation—that poor soul too mortified, too grieved and—yes—too angered to contain herself turned and ran weeping into the house. "O would Tressie return a broken skillet for a perfect one? Or if it was the same she had received and had by accident been broken while in her possession, would she bring it back and say nothing about it? Not even, as would have been accepted with mirth, "Here Lettie is your old skillet; we broke it because we thought you didn't need it." Or if she really believed she had received a broken skillet from the parsonage, could she not have jokingly remarked as she returned it: "If that is the best Pastor Sommers can afford to fry his buckwheat cakes in, we'll have to raise his salary." Or upon her, Lettie's, querie: "Is this my skillet?" Could she not have laughingly replied: "Yes, don't you recognize the mark?" Any one of these remarks would have led to a good laugh and an explanation. "O how could Tressie act so despicably. And her confusion proved her guilt. But for her to be so rude and unkind as to leave her standing at the gate, letter in hand, and without a 'Good Bye;' O, Tressie, how could you!" And Mrs. Sommers threw herself upon the couch weeping bitterly. "What is the trouble, wifie? Is the bread a failure or did the cow eat up the wash line, or has old Nannie been among your flower beds?" At the first sound of her husband's cheery voice, Lettie's sobs were hushed and as she hastened to give him the accustomed greeting, her troubles were forgotten for the moment. When Mr. Sommers had explained how it happened he arrived a day earlier than expected and had related some of his most interesting experiences during his three day's absence, he asked: "And now litle wifie, can you not tell me what ill-fated event flung you sobbing upon the couch?" And when Lettie had finished, that embodiment of cheerful complacency, said pleasantly but not without an undertone of loving sympathy: "Of course, tomorrow you will take your favorite needle-work and go over to neighbor Wests' and have a heart to heart talk with Tressie, and then you will both be supremely happy." But in spite of the fact that similar advice was given to the other belligerent in this unhappy clash, days—yes weeks—passed and the two erstwhile friends either avoided each other entirely or, when this was impossible, greeted with a cold, almost imperceptible inclination of the head.

One evening in early autumn when the first log fire had been kindled in the old-fashioned fire place in the comfortable living-room of the West home, Mr. Edward West and a young man of his acquaintance who had dropped in to spend the evening, were discussing the good and bad traits of different breeds of cattle. "The full bred Jersey" remarked Mr. West is docile and tractable to a remarkable degree, but we have one of that breed that can be as stubborn and indifferent at times as the worst of cows. But I surprised her once, 'believe me,' when she supposed me to be without a whip and was obstinately belaboring a yearling calf with her crooked horns, while I vainly called to her at the top of my voice. I had just borrowed Mrs. Sommers skillet for sister and was carrying it in my right hand. Urging the colt I was riding close up to old 'Jers' and forgetting I had a skillet instead of a whip I brought it down with a bang on her side just as she was in the act of rushing forward for another cruel thrust." At this point in the narrative, Mrs. West, flushed with excitement, came in from the kitchen, where she had been canning peaches and interrupted the Ha, Ha, Ha's of the two young men. "And that is how, that skillet from Rev. Sommer's happened to be cracked. O Edward, and you said nothing about it, leading me to the false conclusion that Mrs. Sommers had sent me a broken skillet. O such thoughtless, irresponsible men!" And with that she hurried back to her peaches which were boiling over. But try as she might she could not fill a jar of fruit after the astounding discovery she had just made. How could she wait till the morrow to speak to Lettie and implore her forgiveness for her false conclusions and wicked thoughts. Had she been unable that first night of that deplorable skillet affair to sleep on account of soul disturbing conjectures concerning the possible motives of her friend in committing that "luckless breach of friendship" now the chagrin and the torturing regrets on account of her own part in the unfortunate affair kept her tossing all night on her pillow. Next morning bright and early she was at the parsonage gate. Lettie could hardly believe her eyes as she opened the door at her light tap. There was no groping for words, no beating about the bush.

"Lettie, Lettie, what can you have thought of me when I brought back that skillet and in my ignorance treated you so badly. O I am so miserable." And with that she told of her discovery of the previous evening. "Can you forgive your old chum, Lettie, for the awful thoughts she entertained concerning you?

"Forgive you, Tressie? With all my heart! Did I not entertain the most ignoble thoughts and suspicions concerning you also?" And hereupon they did as they had so often done in childhood when imaginary or real offences were commited,—they "kissed and made up again."

No wonder the "parson's wife" that night dreamed of a dappled gray hitched to a bright new skillet in which Tressie and she sat munching peanut brittle, chatting and laughing as in the days of yore when there was no "offending skillet" to mar their happiness.

THE END.

Brass or copper may be easily cleaned by rubbing with a wet, soapy rag dipped in powderd bath brick. Polish with a soft cloth or newspaper.

DRAINAGE PAYS FOR ITSELF.

Only Small Per Cent of Farmers Thoroughly Drain Farm Land.

"Less than 5 per cent of farms are thoroughly drained," says M. F. P. Costelloe, agricultural engineer.

"It costs on the average of $4,000 to drain thoroughly a 160 acre farm. On most of those farms where there is any drainage at all only about one-fourth of this amount is expended. The average farmer drains out the wet spots from his land in order to get a uniform tillage area and thinks his draining duty is over. It has just begun.

"Thorough drainage pays," maintains Mr. Costello. "Conservatively speaking such drainage will surely increase the yield on a corn area over three bushels per acre which increase itself will pay the interest on the amount invested in drainage on that acre."

Drainage even the rougher land is advised to prevent washing.

STABLE NOTES.

Suggestions for marketing the draft horse:

An attractive article always attracts the highest market price. The draft horse is no exception.

Before marketing it is well to have the horse properly shod. A shapely foot adds much to the animal's appearance.

Thorough grooming brings out the shiny coat and emphasizes the degree of finish.

Thinning or shortening the tail to a few inches below the hocks shows off the muscling of the hindquarters and the cleanness of leg.

The head and neck can be made much neater by shortening or evening the mane.

Matched teams sell at a premium. For this reason farmers with horses of similar breeding will do well to get together when marketing their horses.

An important thing in marketing horses is proper training. The horse should show lots of snap and move off readily at both walk and trot.

BIDDY STILL OLD RELIABLE.

One of Best Incubators On Market If Given Proper Care.

A mighty good incubator is the old hen.

She's not going to produce the goods, however, unless she's allowed to sit in peace and is given a good nest in which to do her sitting.

Move the broody hen at night, so as not to "break her up," to a separate building which is clean, well ventilated and provided with good nests. The best hatch will be secured, says the extension poultrymen at Ames, by filling the nest, which ought to be about 13 inches square and 6 inches deep, with earth or sod about three inches deep. Cover with clean straw. The sod will gradually mold itself to the shape of the hen and eggs will thus be kept warmer.

During the sitting period allow the hen a dust box, a small yard to feed in and plenty of corn and water.

The Winsted (Conn.) high school has a department where the girl students are taught to wash, scrub and iron.

Story Contest

Opportunity for subscribers of this paper to try their literary talent and gain a reputation.

MANY magazine writers are secured from the rural communities. We want our subscribers to have every advantage to utilize their talent, and have joined with a number of other publishers in a great story contest.

Do you think you can write a story?

Suppose you try anyhow. For the best story received we will pay

$50.00

Stories may run from 2,000 to 15,000 words. Decision will be made by popular vote of the subscribers of this and several other papers. Stories acceptable for entry will be published in this paper and not less than fifty others. This is a chance to gain popularity at once. Send manuscript direct to editor of this paper.

APRIL

L 908

0123

Flickerings from Filmland

Interesting to the Movie Fans.

ETHEL TEARE'S GOWNS "MADE IN AMERICA."

"Perhaps it would sound better to say they were imported from France," says Ethel Teare of her bewitching gowns which have been commented on so much by followers of Ethel Teare comedies, "but I really can't. I'll have to confess that all my gowns are made in America. That's good enough for me."

Such engaging frankness in the face of so much film press agent talk about Paris creations is typical of Ethel Teare, whose rise to popularity has been one of the most rapid and surprising of recent screen evolutions. Miss Teare is in every way the typical American girl, bubbling over with energy and enthusiasm. Indeed, it is her breezy, natural manner that brought her from small bits to stardom with that organization. Her captivating methods can only be described by the word "personality" and are well worth the study of girls with screen ambitions.

Born in California, there is nothing of the artificial about Ethel Teare. She first caught the eye of a picture producer while playing a vaudeville engagement in a Los Angeles theatre when a director was struck by her ability to capture the hearts of the audience.

SIS HOPKINS UNCHANGED IN COMING TO SCREEN.

The elder folks, who remember Sis Hopkins as the most popular comedy character ever seen on the American stage, will welcome the news that Rose Melville continues to play the same familiar gingham-aproned girl on the screen. The moving picture comedies in which she appears are all written around the quaint personality of the rural maid who blunders into all sorts of mix-ups, but meets life always with a broad smile and odd philosophy that is said to be as effective on the screen as it was in the old days.

In deciding to continue Rose Melville in her well known rustic character when making her screen debut the picture producers profited by the experience of stage producers immediately after the hit which made the character of Sis Hopkins, known the world over. Plays were written and produced which showed Miss Melville in other parts, but always their life was a brief one and the public demanded that she return to the popular Sis Hopkins. Thus it is, that for ten years, since she first introduced the humorous girl of the farm to Broadway, Miss Melville has never been allowed to play any role other than Sis Hopkins.

DAVID GARRICK FILMED.

A telegram from Los Angeles, announces that there has just been completed an elaborate production of "David Garrick," the famous classic, which has been produced time and again on the speaking stage since 1864, when E. A. Sothern created the title role in England.

The production of "David Garrick" in films has been going on for the past several months, but has not been made public because of the fact that contemplation of its filmization was evident among other producers. Not even the members of the New York offices of the company were aware of the fact that the staging of this famous subject was under way at the studios.

FATHER SITS ON JURY AND CONDEMNS SON.

Motion picture patrons attending performances of "The Unpardonable Sin," starring Holbrook Blinn, will notice a tall, elderly gentleman of dignified military bearing acting as foreman of the jury in the trial scene.

The presence of this distinguished-looking soldier in the picture was due to the amusing error of Assistant Director Robert Graham. The jury foreman is in reality Thomas G. Greene, a retired business man of affluence, and the father of Walter D. Greene, who plays the role opposite Mr. Blinn in the picture.

The elder Mr. Greene had come to the studio to visit his son, and while waiting was pounced upon by the assistant director with the exclamation:

"You're just what I want to play the foreman. Go right up in the jury box. You'll get $2.50."

Mr. Greene, as a joke on his son, obeyed the injunction and went through the scene with the ease and dignity of an habitual "extra man."

It took some time for Mr. Greene junior to recover from the astonishment of seeing his father serving as foreman of the jury that was to condemn him to death.

MOUSE STIRS COMMOTION IN "MARY PAGE" SCENE.

Edna Mayo is a heroine, especially in the eyes of the women at the Essanay studios. While filming the court room scene for "The Strange Case of Mary Page," the fifteen episode series in which she plays the title role, a mouse came scurrying across the floor and stopped directly in front of the witness chair. Immediately the women in the scene were thrown into a panic and Miss Mayo was the only representative of the fairer sex left standing on the floor while the little creature ran too and fro in a state of great confusion. After the little disturber had been caught her heart went out to him in sympathy and she refused to allow his execution. She saw him liberated in the studio yard before she continued with the scene, which the little beast had so innocently innocently interrupted.

MARCHING ON.

I have read a hundred essays on the Causes of the Fight, and every country's in the wrong and all are in the right; the bones of countless butchered men are bleaching in the light, and Death goes marching on. The war was forced on yonder king, who couldn't dodge the scrap, and it was forced on t'other king, who is a peaceful chap, and meanwhile every foot of Europe's soggy map, King Death is marching on. It seems a shame, when all the kings were suffering for peace, that war should bring its wrinkled front and all its dogs release, that generals should wade around in blood and fur and grease, and Death go marching on. And still the soldiers fight and slay, their little wage to earn, and where the vine and figtree were the lurid beacons burn; the sleepless children watch and wait for dads who won't return, and Death is marching on. It must have been spontaneous, the great and bloody game; if any one's responsible, no man will take the blame; old Europe's littered with her dead, her blind and halt and lame, and Death goes marching on.

WALT MASON.

SPRING TREATMENT OF PLANTS THAT HAVE BEEN WINTERED IN THE CELLAR.

Plants that have been wintered in the cellar should be brought to the light this month and started into growth. Fuchsias should be cut back at least half. Thin out all the weak branches and shorten the larger ones. This will leave the old plants stubby, unattractive specimens, but in a short time new branches will start, and by the beginning of summer your plants will have renewed themselves and taken on such vigor that they will be far more satisfactory than young ones procured from the florist for summer flowering.

The fuchsia is really a summer flowering plant, though the impression seems to prevail that if given the right kind of treatment it will bloom in winter. Not a blossom can be coaxed from it after November, in nine cases out of ten. The place for it in winter is the cellar.

When started into new growth in spring it should be given a rich soil and a liberal supply of water. On no account should it be allowed to get dry at the roots. If this happens it will shed its foliage. Shower it all over two or three times a week, for it is a plant that is as fond of water on its branches as at its roots.

Chrysanthemums will throw up many shoots from their old roots as soon as brought to the light. These can be cut away with a bit of old root attached and put into small pots and grown for summer use.

Oleanders should be watered freely and well fertilized as soon as growth begins. If this is done they will soon show buds and early in summer they will be a mass of bloom.

Nearly all deciduous plants are benefited by cellar storage. By withholding water and allowing the soil to become dry and keeping them in a temperature too low to encourage growth and away from the stimulating effect of light, they will remain dormant, and this is just what they need in order to put them in proper condition for doing good work in summer.

There is no reason why they should occupy places in the window in winter to the exclusion of real winter bloomers, as they will refuse to bloom there in spite of all encouraging treatment that you may give them.

MARRIAGE AS A SPECULATION.

Reed college co-eds have sound ideas on the enticing art of selecting husbands, says the Portland, Oregonian. If they follow the rules and regulations which they have set down for guidance in this important matter, they should experience no great difficulty in sailing the matrimonial seas. Character is the first consideration in the responses given during a canvass at Reed. In the matter of income they are less exacting and show throughout a lack of mercenary spirit, which indicates an aim to be useful in the world rather than merely ornamental. No demands are heard for a man with $10,000 a year. The average of $1,200 a year is modest. Of course, they insist that such an income must be attended by prospects, and here again they display prudence and discrimination. Life in double harness on a $1,200 income would prove monotonous and wearing in course of time for the college woman.

The girl who marries a $1,200 man and helps him extract a competence from an unwilling world is certain to get the most out of life. As he moves upward in the world of affairs she may share the joys of achievement. In some cases she may feel that it is her work, for many a successful man owes his rise to the talents of his wife, even as many a man owes his decline to the shortcomings of the woman who fell to his lot. The woman who marries a poor but talented and ambitious man is certain to contribute largely to his ultimate success or failure.

Notes and Comment

Of Interest to Women Readers

VALUE OF LIME JUICE.

Lime juice is recommended as an antidote for uric acid and a cure for rheumatism. The lime is a small fruit, resembling the lemon, largely grown in the West Indies and known mostly to the Americans as an ingredient of the drink known as a "rickey."

Lime juice becomes in the blood a powerful alkali, according to the New York American. It is said to be the only fruit juice that bears this distinction, differing radically in this respect from the lemon and other citrus fruits. A tablespoonful in a glass of water morning and night is said to be enough to dissolve all of the secretions of uric acid in the joints or blood and drive them out of the system. Its effects are said often to become manifest within thirty minutes after taking.

Uric acid is supposed by doctors to be the great cause for rheumatism. It is produced by most of the foods and all alcoholic drinks. Even the milk and vegetable diets produce it, but in a lesser degree than meats.

One scientist who has tested the merits of lime juice urges that corporations and municipalities ought to be compelled by law to serve it to laborers suffering from rheumatic pains as a result of exposure to cold and dampness. The cost would more than pay for itself. Not only would the laborer perform more work, but his mind would be invigorated because of the relief to his system.

It must be understood, say those who advocate the use of the juice, that it will at first produce only a gradual cure for chronic sufferers. Those old lumps of solidified uric acid in the joints must first be dissolved and carried out of the system. Having got rid of these lumps, there will soon come a sudden end of the whole business. After that the attacks can be met with nearly instant relief, whenever they occur, by simply taking a little lime juice.

CARROTS IN MANY WAYS.

Cream of Carrot Soup.—Slice an onion and fry in a tablespoon of butter until brown. Add a pint of diced carrots, a bay leaf, and hot water to cover. Cook an hour or until tender, allowing the water to boil down toward the end, until very little remains. Drain the liquid off; mash the carrots fine; add two cups of hot milk and one cup of cream to the carrot water. Thicken with a tablespoon of flour, season with salt and pepper, and add to the carrots. Press through a sieve, boil up, add a teaspoon of chopped parsley, and serve with croutons.

Creamed Carrots. — Wash, scrape and cut into dice enough carrots to measure a quart. Add a finely minced onion, and cook in enough water to cover until tender. If there is any liquid left in the carrots, drain and add to it a cup of milk. Thicken with a tablespoon of flour and two tablespoons butter. Season with salt and white pepper, cook until thick, and pour over the carrots; add a teaspoon of chopped parsley and serve.

Carrot Salad.—To each cup diced, cold, boiled carrots, add one cup cold, boiled beets, cut in small pieces, half cup diced celery, a minced onion, and one chopped hard-boiled egg. Season with a little salt and pepper, and mix with French dressing. Set on ice until ready to use, and serve on a bed of crisp lettuce leaves.

Mashed Carrots.—Cook the desired number of carrots in salted water until tender. Drain, add a hot boiled potato, season with salt, pepper and a piece of butter and mash fine. Beat in a little cream to make it light and fluffy.—Farm and Home.

FOR THE HOUSEWIFE.

To polish brass and yet preserve its deep, rich yellow tone, use rottenstone and oil; acid polishes, while giving it greater brilliancy, whiten the brass.

Cane-seated chairs that have sagged can be tightened in the following manner: Wash them in hot water and soap and rinse them in clear water. Dry in the open air.

To scald milk put it in a doubleboiler or in a pan and stand the pan containing it in another full of boiling water. Place it over a fire and let it remain there until it begins to steam, when it is scalded.

Brown sugar that has become lumpy from being kept any length of time may be softened in the following manner: Fill the teakettle with boiling water and put the sugar in a pan, placing it over the teakettle to steam.

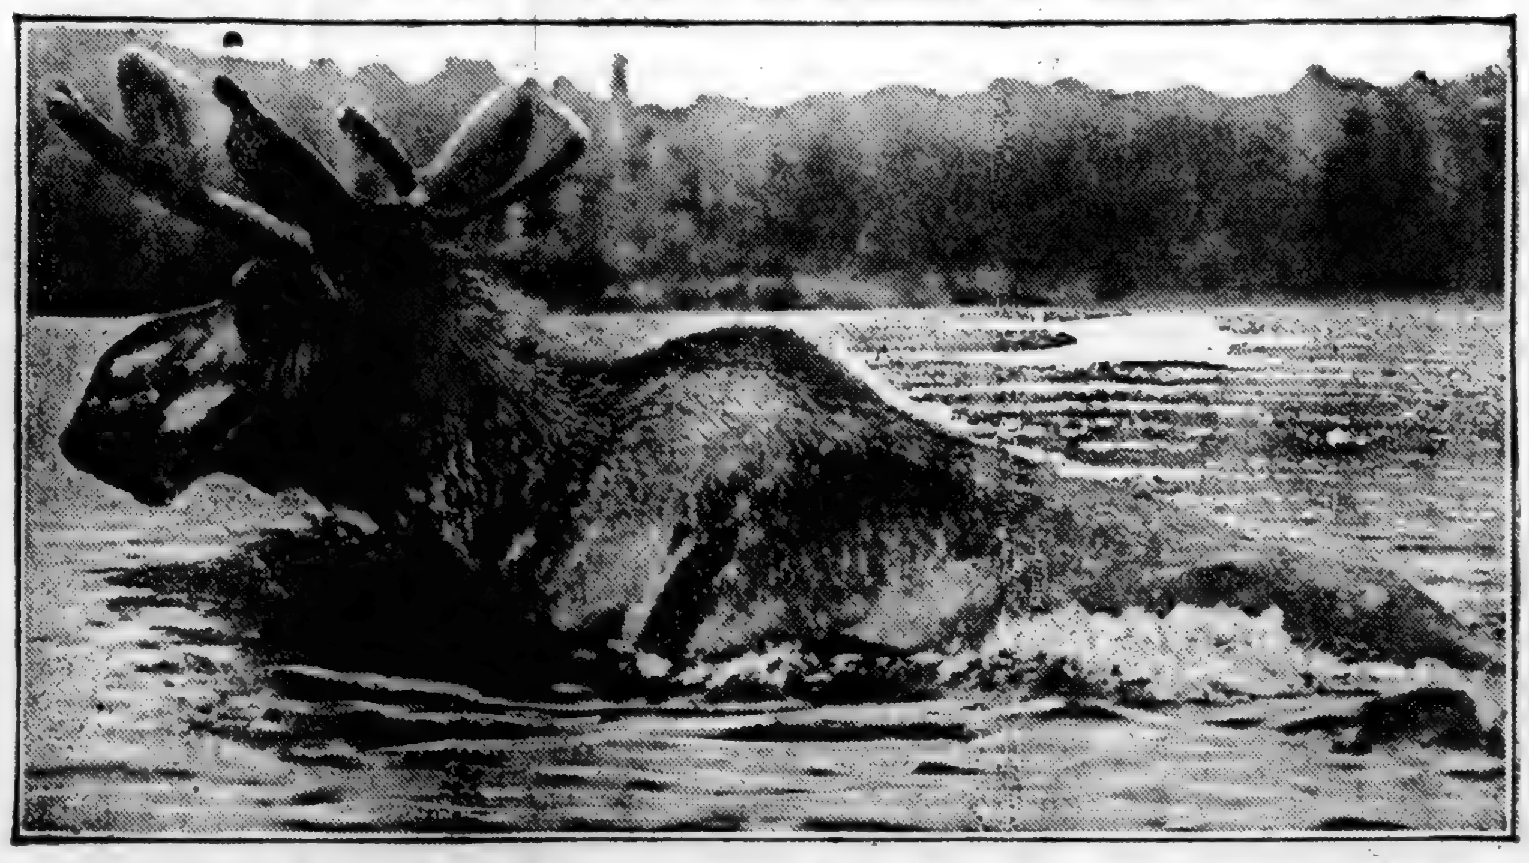
To fold skirts for traveling pin the waist band and fasten the middle of the back to the center of the front. Lay the skirt flat on a table, and with two pieces of soft paper as foundation, roll the skirt over and over toward the front, first from the right side, then from the left, thus forming two rolls that lie parallel to each other. If the garment has to be folded crosswise, place a piece of tissue paper or newspaper underneath the crease.

TO KEEP NICKEL CLEAN.

To keep nickel clean and polished wash with pure white soap and warm water, wipe dry, then polish briskly with newspaper. This will make it very bright and keep it from tarnishing.

There are nearly 2,500 women's clubs in the United States.

SNAPSHOT OF MOOSE CROSSING MAINE LAKE



States in which the moose has his habitat are interested in the popular movement to protect this giant member of the deer family. Moose crossing Maine lake is seen in picture.

Dictates of Fashion

New lingerie is colored.

In girls' suits the short coats lead.

Veils are worn with hats of all shapes.

Hats have both high and low crowns.

Capes are coming more and more into favor.

Blue lawn underwear is one of the latest fads.

The bandeau is worn in many of the new hats.

Waists in real pastel colorings are revived.

A UNIQUE SUIT.

A unique coat suit of white serge seen recently at one of the winter resorts had a collar, revers, wide cuffs and a wide belt of black kid. The revers and cuffs were edged with hunter's green suede, and the belt was buttoned with green suede buttons through large buttonholes piped with the green.

NEWEST BATH ROBES.

The newest bath robes are those made of striped waterfall material, which is much prettier and wears much better than plain goods. They are made after the usual model, having a cord of the same material with silk tassels at the ends to confine the robe at the waist. The neck and sleeves of these robes are finished with a narrow edging of mufflon, a new, soft, grayish brown imitation fur. This gives them a dainty touch.

QUAINT OUTLINE.

Round, full skirts gathered at the waist become more and more popular, and almost invariably these skirts are accompanied by tight bodices which are buttoned or laced up the front from waist to throat. A quaint outline, but exceedingly attractive.

MODISH SHOES.

Suede boots for dress wear come in the new shades of blue, green, brown, plum, fawn, gray and champagne, to match the material of frocks. Jenny, who is just now at the authoritative height of Parisian favor, insists that costumes must be matched by footwear, and these coquettish boots are the result. The suede is soft as velvet and even the high heels are covered with it. The boots are high cut, of course, because frocks are so short—and buttoned, of course, since the buttoned boot is accepted as the formal dressy style of footwear. A pair of these pretty boots cost $10. For the same price one may buy the latest in black or colored glace kid boots with white buttons and white stitching.

NEEDLEWORK NOTES.

Much time is spent in putting on placket fasteners. First sew the snaps on one side of the goods, chalk each snap, press it on the goods on the other side and it leaves the exact place for the fastener to be sewed. It saves time in pinning and measuring and the work can be accomplished in half the time.

Among the most colorful designs one can use on a centerpiece is the one where the strawberry has been used as a motif. A tempting centerpiece about twenty-two inches in diameter has a single strawberry placed in each deep scallop forming the edge of the piece. Each berry calls for little work, its shape being outlined in crimson thread. Golden yellow seedings in each berry are worked in the seed stitch. A fresh-colored green is used for the leaves. The scalloped edge can be buttonholed in green or white.

The blanket stitch is sometimes referred to as the buttonhole stitch, but it differs from the regular buttonhole stitch because it has a single purled edge. It may be used to embroider scallops and is sometimes substituted for overcasting. The stitch is worked from the left hand side to the right. Begin on the wrong side of the material with two small stitches. Point the needle toward the left and take the little stitches one-eighth of an inch above the edge of the material. Bring the needle through to the right side, with the needle toward you.

HEALTH AND BEAUTY.

For an annoying tickling in the throat an application of hot glycerine rubbed thoroughly into the pores and covered with warm flannel gives relief.

A strong advocate of deep breathing says that by its practice she has cured herself of nervous headache, neuralgia in the face, stiffness from overwork, indigestion, cold in the head and insomnia.

If beds received more attention there would be less of that "tired feeling" in the morning. The bed ought to be the most hygienic piece of furniture in the house. It should be well aired and never dressed immediately after the occupant leaves it.

Cats and rabbits not infrequently suffer from dipththeria and tuberculosis The animal may be ill for some time without attracting much attention to its condition, for the onset of this disease is often insidious. A writer on this subject has recently spoken of the danger of parasites from animals. Ringworm is said sometimes to be contracted from cats.

When the nails are manicured every day five minutes are usually sufficient, for in this way they are in good condition and easily kept so. The cuticle is gently pushed back with an orange-wood stick dipped in cream or cologne and shaped into an oval. The file rounds and bevels the edges and any loose skin is cut away with the shaped scissors. Polishing at night saves time in the morning. The quickest method of cleaning the nails is by using the nail brush. A little cold cream or oil pressed into the base of the nail under the flesh strengthens it and incidentally imparts a healthy appearance and luster.

After plasters of any description have been removed it is wise to lay a soft cloth smoothly over the surface to prevent any irritation, as the skin is tender and inflamed as a rule.

Why does fresh air, when there is enough of it, prevent colds? As long as it was thought that colds were caused by the grip or influenza bacillus this was a mystery. The answer has been found by a bacteriologist who has discovered the "cold" germ, a germ which will not grow or multiply where there is oxygen.

Salt is finer for the skin than any other known tonic, if properly used. The face should never be washed in salt water when it is not properly clean, for salt is in the nature of an astringent and will contract the pores. It is excellent for enlarged pores, and the solution will act as a veritable stimulant to the whole skin.

In every household there should be kept in the medicine chest a small camel's hair brush of good quality and tapering soft bristles for use in removing specks from the eye. It is unnecessary to add that such a brush must be clean and dipped in boric acid before touching the eye. The ordinary water color brush is just the thing, but be sure that it is free from paint, preferably new.

Brush the hair for five minutes every night and massage the scalp briefly with the tips of the fingers. Then let the hair hang down unplaited until ready to get into bed. In the morning, while preparing to dress, again let the hair fall loose. On balmy days stand at an open window so that the breeze may blow the hair about and the sunshine warm it. In cold weather stand in the sunshine for a short sun bath.

For pain in the chest accompanied by a bronchial cough a flannel cloth wrung out of water and generously sprinkled with spirits of turpentine makes an effective remedy. The colth is laid over the upper chest smoothly and then another dry one on top of that to keep in the warmth. So soon as one cloth cools another warm one should be hastily placed. Turpentine cloths applied to the stomach or below when this is irritated and painful are successfully used.

WHAT YOUR NAILS SHOW AND HOW TO CARE FOR THEM.

The finger nails, as well as the nails of the toes, are merely the skin made a little bit firmer and denser by nature. Since the nails are tougher and more rigid than the rest of the body's covering, changes due to character, habit, disease and injuries last longer in the nails than elsewhere.

Most of the changes and differences in your nails indicate something definite to all who are able to read the finger-nail lingo. Thus, rough, "moth-eaten" margins of the nails are signs of the thraldom of habit. Such a person is apt to lead a routine, humdrum life and fall into ruts very easily, for this condition is usually the result of nervousness and biting the nails.

Long, overpolished and super-manicured nails too often point to a nature too much concerted with superficial appearances and likely to waste time. Usually the capacity of such an individual is much reduced by divided interests.

Clean, well-kept and moderately short finger nails, with no evidence of a manicurist's polish, are indicative of an intelligent, alert and superiorly efficient person.

The slightest signs of dark lines under the nails, dirt around the edges or in the corners, spells a negligent, unobservant, lackadaisical character. Such an individual does not usually see the world clearly, however successful he may be in making and saving money.

Common Nail Ailments.

White lines in the nails, which popular legend attributes to restored health and convalescence, are really proofs of some ailment. Instead of the normal tissue juices being present, air has filtered into the layers of the nails, causing the pearly or white streaks.

Ringworms and other molds which work their way into the "matrix" of the nail—the mother part which pushes the completed nail out from beneath the skin—show themselves by rough, wavy and mashed-looking corrugations on the nails.

Hangnails are the loose and torn edges of the skin which bounds the edges of the nails and keeps the matrix protected. "Felons" and "bone felons" are merely infections from the germs which are always present in the skin, in the dirt at the margins of the nails and in the air itself. These microbes burrow under the hangnail into the open spots and there set up trouble.

Methods of Care.

Painful swellings, the appearance of pus in the ends of the fingers and near the nails, may all come from hangnails, biting the nails and allowing dirt to remain under the margin of the nails.

The nails are as important as the teeth, and they should, of course, be cleaned oftener. Exposure to dirt and contact with others makes soiled nails particularly dangerous to health. They should be vigorously washed with soap, water and a scrub brush 4 times a day. One teaspoonful of boric acid powder to a cup of hot water is an excellent finger nail disinfectant. The scissors used to cut the nails should always be boiled first and the hands thoroughly disinfected with this boric acid solution.

FOR DISCOLORED FLOORS.

Scatter dry, clean sand over the floor and sprinkle over this a solution made by dissolving one pound of potash or pearlash in a pint of water; scrub the boards lengthwise with a hard brush, using very hot water and plenty of soap; change the hot water frequently and wipe dry as you proceed. This potash, if used as directed, will take out all stains and is the very best means of whitening boards.

ECONOMY IN CURTAINS.

The best cheap material for the window curtains of a little summer cottage may be found in the common five cent cheese cloth. This has a texture which is more attractive than many handsomer materials, and it has the added charm of washing well, though extra length should be allowed in the hems and casings for shrinking.

To get dust out of crevices in window sashes, baseboards, etc., when cleaning house try using a paint brush of good size. A hidden store of dirt will reward your efforts, for a cloth cannot reach all the corners.

APRIL

L 908

0124

WINTER TOURIST FARES VIA

WABASH.

To many points in the South and Southwest:

Mobile, Ala., On sale daily until April 30th, good returning until June 1, 1916 $36.55

New Orleans, La., On sale daily until Apr., 30th, good returning until June 1, 1916. 29.95

Galveston, Tex., On sale daily until Apr., 30, good returning until May 31, 1916 49.85

Houston, Tex., On sale daily until April 30, good returning until May 31, 1916 49.85

San Antonio, Tex., On sale daily until Apr. 30, good returning until May 31, 1916 52.20

Dallas and Ft. Worth, Tex., On sale daily until April 30, good returning until May 31st., 1916 45.10

Round trip fares to points in California, some one way, returning via another, on sale daily, with a nine months limit. One way via Portland at small additional cost. For particulars as to routes and stop-over privileges write or call on

J. D. MILLIMAN, Agent, St. Joe, Ind.
W. H. SHOREY, D.P.A. Ft. Wayne, Ind.

F. P. HART

"The Expert"

House Mover

—AND—

Building Raiser

Concrete Work of all kinds finished in the best shape with the least expense.

Call or write

COLETOWN

Homer Jackson made a business trip to Ft. Wayne, Monday.

Miss Gertrude Shutt of Spencerville was the guest of Olive Jackson a part of last week.

Mrs. E. S. Ginther and daughters Myrtle and Marie, and son Irving attended church at Newville Sunday and called on Wm. Craig and family.

Wm. Sowers called on David Sowers Sunday.

J. D. Brown was a Ft. Wayne visitor, Wednesday.

Sherman Meek and family Sundayed at Lester Piermans'.

Cora Brown called on Lester Piermans', Monday afternoon.

Herbert Ginther, Wellington Miller and Will Brown spent Friday evening at W. E. Jacksons'.

Mrs. R. H. Conine and Mamie Conine spent Saturday and Sunday at Angola, with the former's daughter Gladys.

* * *

LOCAL ITEMS

Subscribe for this paper.

FENCE 23c. per rod and up. Inquire for prices. P. A. SHURTS.

The man who can get out of a trunk after being put in there with legs and arms tied, is qualified to dress in a Pullman berth.

S. S. Widney was at Auburn a few days last week, on business. On his return Friday he was accompanied home by Master Harry Smith, who remained until Monday.

Men, women and children rely upon Rexall Orderlies

The laxative tablet with the pleasant taste to relieve constipation and sluggish livers

We have the exclusive selling rights for this great laxative

The Rexall Store

H. L. DUNKLE

IN THE HOLY LAND

Easter the Accepted Time for Gathering of Pilgrims From All Countries.

EASTER has always been the most popular season for pilgrims and tourists to the Holy Land. Both the Roman and Greek Catholic churches have from remote ages encouraged and promoted the pilgrimages to the Holy Land. Scattered throughout the land vast hospices have been erected for the proper care of the religious pilgrims under the supervision of the various Catholic and Protestant faiths that are drawn to the promised land. For, as someone has said, "This, the least of all lands, is the one country toward which Christian and Jew, Romanist, Greek and Moslem turn with adoring devotion and longing desire."

About fifteen thousand have been in the habit of visiting the sacred scenes of Biblical history every year, entering the country through the ancient seaport of Jaffa. The European conflict has interfered with the plans of many a devoted follower of the Christian faith who proposed this season to carry out the dreams of a lifetime.

The writer recalls a band of more than 135 German Catholics whom he frequently met last summer in Jerusalem, under the guidance of Brother Sebastian, formerly stationed at the American Catholic university, Brookland, Washington, D. C. The pilgrims were taken prisoners as they sailed from Jaffa a few hours after they had left Jerusalem with songs of devotion and praise to Christ and his church upon their lips.

One of the principal sights of Easter in Jerusalem is to witness upon Holy Saturday the so-called miracle of Holy Fire. It has been denounced by Roman Catholics and devout Christians of many faiths as a gross imposture, yet year after year for hours the section of the Church of the Holy Sepulcher upon Holy Saturday is crowded with the motley multitude, mostly from Russia, who are waiting for the Holy Ghost to appear unto them in the sacred fire. The people believe that it descends from heaven that day or is brought by an angel to the Holy Sepulcher.

Copyright, Underwood & Underwood

Pilgrims of Jerusalem.

Early in the last century two oval holes were pierced in the walls of the Chapel of the Angels, which is a portion of the Holy Sepulcher, where Greek, Roman Catholic, Armenian and Coptic Catholics worship at the burial place, as they believe, of their Lord. After being shut up in the sanctuary for several hours, the Greek bishop passes the miraculous fire through the little openings.

Immediately the multitude that has waited for over twenty-four hours without food or drink becomes a howling mob and the fanatical Russians, Armenians, Copts and Abyssinians contend like maniacs to get their tapers lighted so that in a spirit of penance they may sear their bodies with the burning taper that has been lighted by "the holy fire."

The task of the Turkish guard stationed there in the great Christian temple erected in the cradle of their faith, symbolizing in its worship the unity in diversity of the church, is virtually powerless to keep order, much less to check the rioting and fighting of professed Christians. Frequently the enacting of the ceremony results in leaving upon the floor of the basilica the mangled dead forms of many who came there to worship.

Above all the strife and superstition of the various sects that worship in the Church of the Holy Sepulchre is the fact that they all stand for a common truth that is symbolized in the sacred spot which for fully fifteen centuries has been considered the most sacred place on the earth.

Spring Feeding

The price of milk is such that there can be little question of feeding for profits every pound of feed fed during Spring and Summer months, means that much more revenue for the Dairy man. We have the well known Arcady Dairy Feed containing a blend of palatable grains that will sure produce a big flow of milk. Guaranteed analysis of 18%. We aim to cater to the trade who is always looking for the best feeds obtainable. Such as Beef Scrap, Meat Crisps, Tankage, Oil Meal, Salmedico, and don't forget to start the young chicks off right, feed them out on our Steel Cut Cracked Corn. Costs less than any prepared chick feed and besides it contains no foul weed seed which you are sure to get if you feed Prepared Chick Feed. Bran and Middlings, the pure unadulterated kind, always on hand.

ST. JOE MILLS,
Home of Daily Bread Flour.

* * *

EASTER OF 1776

Feminine Finery Hard to Procure in That Year of Revolutionary War.

THERE was a famine of finery in immediate prospect for the women of the American colonies at Eastertide in the year 1776. They were destined thereafter, through a long and very dark period, to undergo many severe deprivations in this respect—not the least of them being lack of pins. Think, O ye fair ones, of trying to get along without pins! But it had to be done, for the colonies were dependent upon Europe for their supply of pins as well as for many other things, and this was cut off by the war. Even the most fashionable ladies of Boston and other centers of population were compelled to have resort to thorns for the fastening of their garments, and history tells us that the spines of certain cacti actually were utilized to a considerable extent.

Ours is supposed to be the age of luxury par excellence, in dress as in other matters, and yet the women of today are not more beautifully attired than were those of the well-to-do class in the colonies during the period just before the Revolution. They wore silks, satins and laces as exquisite as any that can be found in our modern shops—fetched, of course, by trading vessels from France—together with all sorts of other costly feminine gear, including ribbons, trimmings, stockings, gloves, shoes and dainty materials for the making of undergarments.

There were, however, a great many women in the various colonies who, long before the coming of the war, had made up their minds to do without pretty things, so far as was practicable. We read of pretty Patty Parsons, during the British occupancy of Philadelphia, who cut up the embroidered sky-blue satin waistcoat which her grandfather had worn at the English court, and made out of it a "jockey"—deemed by admirers most becoming. And of another girl, a friend of Patty's, who converted a trooper's scarlet coat into a jacket, using the leftover pieces to make a pair of warm gloves, which she bound with gray squirrel fur. The collar and cuffs of the jacket were likewise of squirrel fur, which excellently matched a gray homespun skirt.

In those times it was no very serious undertaking for a young woman to make a pair of gloves for herself. Indeed, though fine and expensive gloves were imported from France, ordinary ones for every-day wear were commonly manufactured at home.

Mrs. Alice M. Earle (to whose books of high historic value the writer acknowledges indebtedness) says that of all deprivations suffered by women during the Revolution none was so severe as that of gauze. At that period the fashions demanded this material for an astonishing variety of purposes. There were gauze caps, gauze bonnets, gauze aprons, gauze ribbons, gauze kerchiefs, flounced gauze petticoats, and even gowns of gauze. But most of all was gauze needed for the high head-dresses of that epoch, which could hardly be put together and held in place without it.

So late as the year 1782, in a London fashion journal, a tonsorial "artist" is found advertising "a new method of stuccoing the hair in the most fashionable taste, to last with very little repair during the whole session of parliament. Price only five guineas. N. B.—He takes but one hour to build the head and two for baking it."

The Eastertide costume of a lady in 1776, when she walked on the street, was likely to include a mask of white or colored silk. If she rode on horseback she would wear a "riding mask"; and the very latest fashion at that period was such a mask provided with a flat silver plate, to be held between the teeth for securing it in position. It should be understood, however, that these masks were worn not for a disguise, but to protect the complexion. The women of today still wear masks for the same purpose, but call them veils; and they are made of net or lace instead of silk.

Farmers' Farmers'

NOTICE!

Scoville's Thoroughbred Registered
Imported Percheron Stallion

LANCIER No. 99,094-103,650

will stand this season at his Big Stock Farm, one mile east and one mile south of Butler. This prize winning stallion is five years old, weighs 2,040 pounds right now, is jet black with a star in the forehead, and is the finest and highest priced horse ever brought to this part of the country. Stands at $15.00. Colt insured to stand and suck. Both local and long distance phones at the farm. Call us up. Visitors welcome daily. Call and see our Registered Percheron Mares and this last years Colts from this horse. You will find nothing better in the state.

SPENCERVILLE R. F. D. NO. 2

Mrs. Earl Stiman and son, spent over Sunday with her parents, L. Farver and wife.

Frank Wertman has purchased a new Ford.

Paul Teagarden, wife and daughter Helen, were Sunday guests of C. M. Wearley and family.

Miss Sarah Kyle took dinner Sunday at the D. M. Kelley home.

Miss Fern Walker, of Coburntown, was a last week guest of Mrs. Florence Kimes.

John Walker and son Henry, of Harlan, were Sunday visitors with Milo Beam and wife.

Milo Beam and wife were Fort Wayne shoppers, one day last week.

50 sheets of writing paper and 25 No. 1 rag envelopes for 10 cents at NEWS office

Mrs. Mattie Hart, Leila Hart, Mrs. Mary Cook and daughter Nora, Mrs. W. O. Miller and son Vernon, and Clarence and Lena Kelley were Hickville shoppers, last week.

Mrs. Bert Huey and daughter, Mrs Frank Shram, Emanuel Kyle and wife, Mrs. Jennie Kyle and son Clede, spent last week with Miss Sarah Kyle, settling the Isaac Kyle estate.

FreeColumn

All advertisements in this department are free to subscribers only. —EDITOR NEWS.

For Sale:—Good quality Early Rose potatoes at $1.00 per bushel. Come quick if you want some of them.
Frank Milliman, St. Joe, Ind., R. 1

FOR SALE—Durham cow, will be fresh in about 2 weeks. James Irvin

2 nice furnished bedroom for rent. Mrs. Alice Warner.

FOR SALE—Pekin duck eggs. Mrs. Robert Nicholls

FOR SALE—good Parlor Table. Will be sold cheap. Mrs. H. L. Dunkle

I will sell 5 lots of 50 feet front and 264 feet deep, off of the south part of my acre. If interested see Mrs. W. R. Weirs

For Sale—Good driving horse, and buggy and harness in good condition.
Lloyd Coburn

FOR SALE—Red Raspberry plants, 1c apiece. C. A. WOODCOX

POTATOES for sale—$1.00 per bushel. Early Ohio, Early Rose, Early Patrick, Good Times Potatoes. A few bushels of small size ones of the above varieties at half-price. Also some Timothy Hay for sale. W. L. HALLABAUGH, St. Joe

YOUR NAME

Is it on our subscription list?

We will guarantee you full value

FOR YOUR MONEY

100 Per Cent.

INCREASED EARNINGS.

The following is fac-simile of certificate of Bond issued to each Depositor in this Bank.

No. ______ Grabill, Ind., ______ 19___

Mr. ______

THIS IS TO CERTIFY that your DEPOSITS in this bank are INSURED under a bond of THE AMERICAN GUARANTY COMPANY of Columbus, Ohio.

THE GRABILL STATE BANK.

PRESERVE THIS. By Albert Egly, Cashier.

Postal Savings pay 2 per cent. Interest and the money is placed in banks who have to furnish a Bond to the government to guarantee that the funds are safe in that Bank.

We pay 4 per cent. Interest and give you the same guarantee. An increased earning of 100 per cent.

THIS is the only Bank in this community thus insuring its depositors.

Total Assets, over $175,000

The Grabill State Bank
Established 1906

Joseph Witmer, President
David Klopfenstine, v. pres.
Albert Egly, Cashier
Joseph A. Grabill, Director
Peter W. Amstutz, Director
Julius Gehrig, Director
John B. Haifley, Chairman Board Directors

Has Your Subscription Expired? Come in and renew it next time you are in town.

ST. JOE NEWS.

NO newspaper can succeed without advertising, therefore we solicit the patronage of our readers for those who by their advertising help to make this paper possible.

VOL. XXX ST. JOE, DeKALB COUNTY INDIANA, THURSDAY APRIL 27 1916 NO. 17

What

J. N. George

of St. Joe

has to say about cream separators this week.

YOU will find the De Laval is the easiest and most satisfactory to use and keep in good running order.

There is nothing about the operation, cleaning, adjustment or care of a modern De Laval which requires expert knowledge or special tools.

There are no parts which require frequent adjustment in order to maintain good running or to conform to varying conditions in the every day use of a cream separator.

Only tool required

There is nothing about this machine that cannot be taken apart, removed or replaced by any one who can use a wrench or screw driver. In fact, the only tool which is needed for the operation of a De Laval Cream Separator is the combination wrench and screw driver illustrated above, furnished free with the machine.

We will be glad to have you examine a De Laval and see for yourself the simplicity and convenience of its construction.

Sooner or later you will buy a DE LAVAL

JUNK!

Having now completed and arranged my new Junk Yard I am prepared to handle any quantity at HIGHEST price:

Mixed Iron, Rubber and Metals of all kind; Old Papers, Magazines, Books, Rags, Tallow, Beef Hides, Sheep Pelts, Furs.

Am now ready for your WOOL in any quantity.

Everything Guaranteed Satisfactory.

SOL BARNEY

Don't Forget

Movies

Three times each week, for the Summer Season. On Tuesday—Thursday and Saturday Evenings.

In Society

The following account of the wedding of Fay Reichelderfer, formerly a St. Joe boy, appeared in the Payne, Ohio, Reflector of last week.

Mr. W. Fay Reichelderfer, son of Mr. and Mrs. F. F. Reichelderfer, and Miss Bessie Prather, daughter of Mr. James Prather of Lancaster, Kentucky, were united in marriage at 6:00 P. M., on Monday, April 3, at the Church of Christ parsonage at Lexington, Ky., by the pastor, Rev. Fortune. After a short visit with Mrs. Reichelderfer's sister, Mrs. James Stapp they left for Louisville and from there to Indianapolis. The happy and smiling young couple arrived here unannounced (for they kept their arrival a dark secret) last Friday afternoon at 3:43.

Mr. Fay Reichelderfer is one of the best known and popular young business men of this locality, being the junior member of the well known bakery and restaurant firm of S. D. Reichelderfer & Son. Being a young man of sterling qualities he has made numerous friends and is held in the highest esteem by the people of Payne and vicinity. His charming bride is an accomplished young lady of the Blue Grass state and is very popular among the younger set of her home town. The many friends of the newlyweds predict a bright future for them.

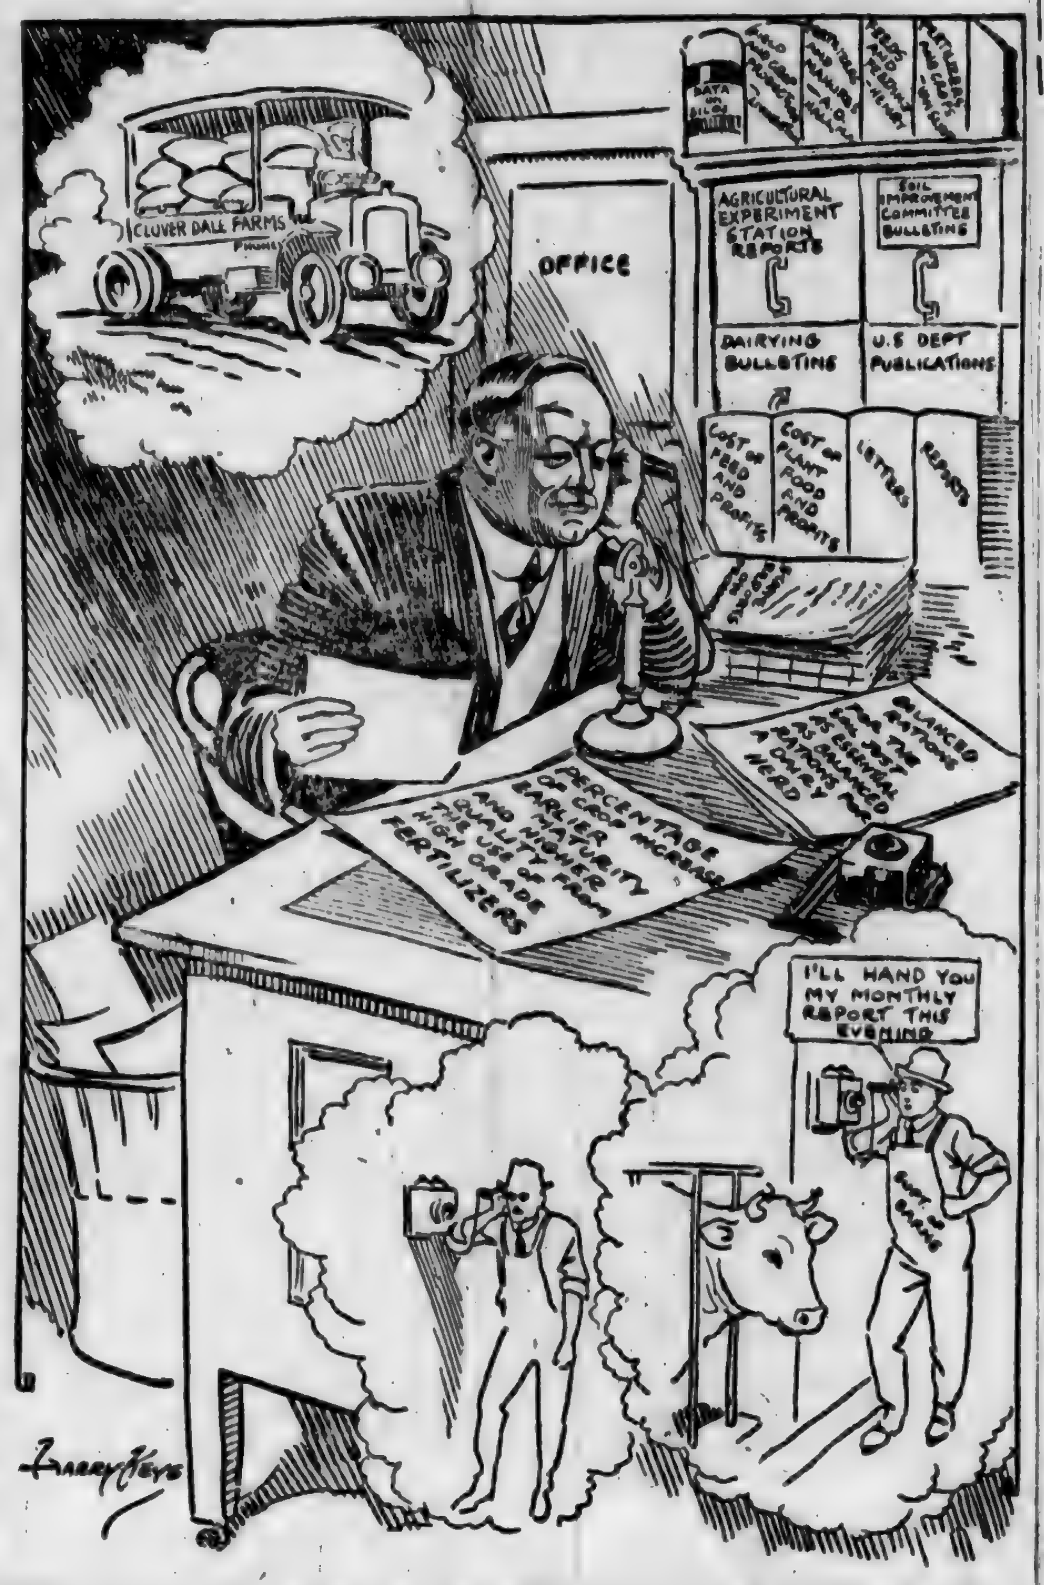
Sunday at the noon hour a spendid delicious dinner was given by Mr. and Mrs. F F. Reichelderfer in honor of their son and daughter-in-law. Besides the family, the following guests were present to enjoy the feast: Miss Bertha Boyer, Claude and William Reynolds, F. Thos. Knerr, Harry Adcock, Vernie Howard and Frank Adamski.

But of course the showering of congratulations was not all that was in store for the young couple. Sunday afternoon about two o'clock six automobiles, gaily decorated with "Dan Cupid Mottos" and crowded with friends stopped in front of the Bon-Ton bakery and restaurant and several of the occupants escorted Mr. and Mrs. Reichelderfer to one of the decorated cars and at a given sign the wedding party drove through town enroute to the county seat. Arriving at Paulding the bride and groom and their guests stopped at the Hoffman candy kitchen where the young benedict "set them up" to the crowd. Another trip through town and then the procession started on the return trip, arriving here amid the tooting of automobile horns.

Alumni Notice

The Alumni Society will hold a meeting at the home of Miss Flossie Sechler, Friday evening. All members are requested to be present. SECRETARY.

"THE FARMER OF THE FUTURE"



CLOVER DALE FARMS
DATA ON SILOS
OFFICE
AGRICULTURAL EXPERIMENT STATION REPORTS
SOIL IMPROVEMENT COMMITTEE BULLETINS
DAIRYING BULLETINS
U.S. DEPT PUBLICATIONS
COST OF FEED AND PROFITS
COST OF PLANT FOOD AND PROFITS LETTERS REPORTS
PERCENTAGE OF CROP INCREASE EARLIER MATURITY AND HIGHER QUALITY FROM THE USE OF HIGH GRADE FERTILIZERS BALANCED RATIONS ARE JUST AS ESSENTIAL AS BALANCED RATIONS FOR A DAIRY HERD I'LL HAND YOU MY MONTHLY REPORT THIS EVENING
Harry Keys

Personal Items

J. E. Jordan, the blacksmith, moved to Leo, Monday.

See Wallace for Building Material at St. Joe Saw Mill.

John Ronald, April 18, born to Roscoe Hart and wife, of South Bend.

It is better—Indian Gasoline at Patterson's Garage. No higher in price—but better.

Mrs. Ota George will entertain the W. C. T. U., next Friday afternoon. Topic "Medical Temperance".

H. G. Hursh and wife, of Garrett, were Easter guests of Marshall Andress and family. Miss Melba accompanied them home on Monday for a visit.

LOST:—Number plate from Automobile, No. 31158, Ind., '16. Finder will please report same to Forrest Kain, St. Joe, Ind.

The State Music Teachers Association meets at South Bend, Ind., Thursday and Friday of this week. Allie Goldsmith, of this place, will probably attend.

F. M. Thornton and wife were guests at a 6 o'clock dinner party, Saturday eve at the home of Dr. and Mrs. M. E. Klingler at Garrett. Plates were laid for 24 persons.

Hay's school closed last Friday with Gray Woodcox as the successful teacher. 125 people ate dinner there the last day, after which they were given a program by the scholars. The Saylor's school, Lloyd Coburn, teacher, closed Saturday with appropriate exercises. Each of the teachers presented their school with a souvenir school card.

Miss Adelphia S. Arnold, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. M. W. Arnold, of East Auburn, was married Thursday evening at the Christian parsonage to Earl W. Pepple at 6:30 o'clock. The ceremony was performed by the pastor, Rev. C. W. Mabin. Mr. Pepple is an employe of the Double-Fabric Tire company The newlyweds will commence housekeeping at once in the house the groom had ready for his bride on East Seventh street. The groom is 31 and the bride is 22. Their many friends extend congratulations.—Star.

Coal.

We will be able to supply our Coal trade as following on Genuine Lump Pocahontas Coal for June at $4.10 ton, July $4.30, Aug., Sept., Oct., and Nov. at $4.40. We have contracted our supply on this basis. Let us know your requirements and what month you will want to put in your coal. Also we can figure on Hocking, Egg and Hard Coal at a low cost from car thus saving the extra expense of handling.

ST. JOE MILLS.

Home of Daily Bread Flour.

Daily Jots

Easter was fittingly observed in the St. Joe churches.

Fred Bearss and Vernie Monroe of Auburn were home over Sunday. Rolland Bearss and wife drove to Auburn Sunday afternoon and took the boys back to their work.

Mrs. John Reinoehl was taken to the Lutheran hospital, last Saturday, and an operation was performed Tuesday, showing that cancer of the liver had developed and no hopes of her recovery is entertained. She had been ill for several months.

"WANTED—Men who desire to earn over $125 per month write us to-day for position as salesman; every opportunity for advancement CENTRAL PETROLEUM CO., CLEVELAND, OHIO."

Its not all women that can keep a secret, but Mary Scholes did pretty well. Last week she came home from Altona, where she had been teaching school, and brought her husband, Mr. Archie Erickson, a Garrett young man, with her. When she reached home it was up to her to break the news and she stated that on December 15, 1915 they were united in marriage. They will live in Garrett.

PUBLIC NOTICE.

All citizens are requested to meet winh Town Board on Monday eve of next week, and decide whether we use oil or gravel for the streets this year.

By Order of Town Board.

The Gossips Say-

Patronize the advertisers.

Just 4 weeks of High School.

Wilson Sanders will return this week from the Lutheran hospital.

Mrs. Joseph Caw and son, of Logansport, are the guests of Rolland Bearss and wife.

Father White, of Spencerville, was in town, Tuesday, on business. He is getting quite feeble.

Over $32 was realized from the Bazaar and Bake sale, last Saturday, by the M. P. ladies.

As the result of measles Mrs. Bertha Warner, 32 years of age, died last Monday morning, north of Newville. She died in less than a week having contracted this disease on Tuesday the week before. She leaves a son and a daughter besides her husband, the daughter is also sick with the measles The funeral will be held from the home today (Thursday) with burial at Newville. E. R. Kinsey, director.

WANTED—To buy your Hay. C. E. Frye, Phone 73-31, St. Joe.

P. M. Geer and wife, of Chicago Jct., spent Thursday and Friday with F. M. Thornton and wife.

New Rugs—Curtains—Marquisetts and Scrims for House-cleaning time.
SCHLOSS', Auburn.

Easter services at the Lutheran church were all well attended. The attendanc at Sunday School was 134. Holy Communion services were held at the morning worship, which were very impressive. 86 participated in the Holy Sacrement. In the evening the Sunday School rendered an Easter cantata, "Jubilate". A large audience listened to the rendition of the exercises. The total collections for all services was $31.32.

School in the grades closed here Friday. Miss Gladys Kain and Miss Flossie Sechler and their scholars enjoyed their picnic dinner in the school house instead of in the woods as they had planned on account of the rainy day. The grammar room scholars and teacher, Darrel Carpenter, also had a picnic dinner in their room and afterwards all went to the Hays school where baseball was played with that school, the St. Joe schools winning with a score of 8 to 11.

What we Sell.

Salt, Bran, Middling, Hog food, Perfection Nappanee flour, Timothy, Alfalfa, Clover and Alsike Seed.

We buy your grain and pay the highest market prices.

St. Joe Elevator
The Nathan Grain Co.
OWNERS
Fort Wayne, Indiana
SAMUEL KEESLER, Local Manager.

Clean Up-Paint Up!

is the slogan and you start to get busy, but Oh how the dealer tells you of the high price and you get scared out—Come in and talk it over with us as we have nearly 400 gallon of the Sherwin-Williams and Hoosier Lead, Zinc and oil Paint, which we will sell you at the OLD PRICE. See us soon.

Dunkle's Drug Store

The Store that Has The Goods.

TANLAC

Our customers will bear in mind that we now have a good supply of this wonderful medicine on hand. Don't put it off any longer—you can find relief in Tanlac. It's made from the roots, barks and herbs gathered from all the countries of the globe and blended so as to give the best results.

Miss GOLDEN MURRAY,
St. Joe, Indiana

Your Name

on a check makes an impression on those with whom you do business.

No matter how small your account, your checks give dignity to your business transactions.

Try the check way, by opening an account to day.

St. Joe Valley Bank--State Bank

4 per cent. paid on certificates if left 1 Year.

APRIL

L 908

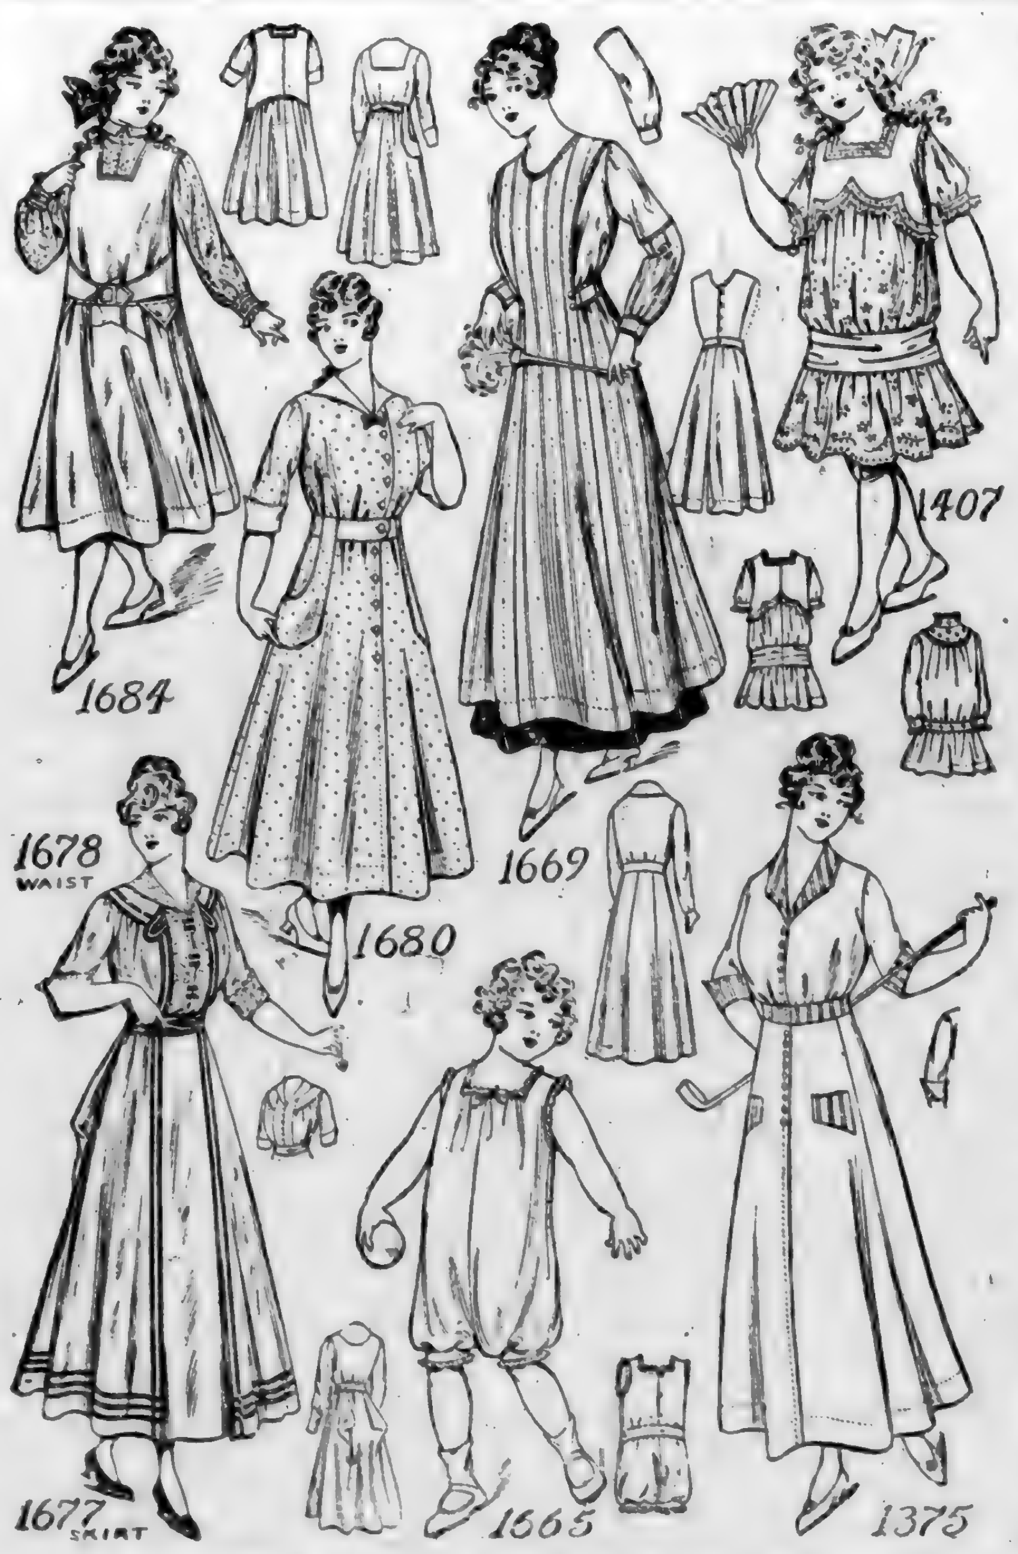
U126

Our Fashion Department

Prepared Especially for this Paper

Send All Orders Direct to this Paper



1684. Girl's Sleeveless Dress with Guimpe.

Cut in 5 sizes: 6, 8, 10, 12 and 14 years. It requires 1⅛ yards for the guimpe, and 4½ yards for the dress of 27-inch material for a 12-year size. Price, 10 cetns.

1680. Dress for Misses and Small Women. (With or without Pockets.)

Cut in 3 sizes: 16, 18 and 20 years. It requires 6¼ yards of 44-inch material for an 18-year size. The skirt measures a litle over 3 yards at the foot. Price, 10 cens.

1669. Ladies' Apron and Sleeve Protector.

Cut in 3 sizes: Small, Medium and Large. The Medium size requires 5⅝ yards of 36-inch material for the apron with ¾ yard for the protector. Price, 10 cents.

1407. Girls' Dress.

Cut in 4 sizes: 6, 8, 10 and 12 years. It requires 3½ yards of 36-inch material for a 10-year size, for the dress and ¾ yard for the bolero. Price, 10 cents.

1678-1677. Ladies' Costume.

Waist 1678, cut in 6 sizes: 34, 36, 38, 40, 42 and 44 inches bust measure. Skirt 1677, cut in 6 sizes: 22, 24, 26, 28, 30 and 32 inches waist measure. It requires 3⅜ yards of 36-inch material for a 36-inch side, to make the skirt and waist. The skirt measures about 3⅛ yards at the foot. This calls for TWO separate patterns, 10 cents FOR EACH pattern.

1665. Girls' Combination Waist and Drawers.

Cut in 5 sizes: 2, 4, 6, 8 and 10 years. It requires 2¼ yards of 36-inch material for a 6-year size. Price, 10 cents.

1375. Ladies' Dress.

Cut in 6 sizes: 34, 36, 38, 40, 42 and 44 inches bust measure. It requires 8 yards of 36-inch material for a 36-inch size, which measures about 3¾ yards at lower edge of the skirt. Price, 10 cents.

PATTERN ORDER.

Patterns
No.	Size

I enclose ....for Patterns

Name ....

Town ....

State ....

St. No., R. F. D. ....

Mail Your Order Direct to Publisher.

OATS AND BARLEY MIX WELL

Can Be Grown Together to Make Good Pasture or Feed.

Oats and barley mixed together will give a greater yield than either crop grown separately, say the crop experts.

A mixture of oats and barley is grown primarily for feeding purposes. The combination when ground makes a fairly well balanced ration, which can be fed to all classes of live stock. In addition to the feeding value, the mixture provides an early feed which can replace corn in the feeding ration for hogs.

This better yielding power is due to the difference in the root system of the two plants. Barley is a shallow feeder, its roots being largely confined to the first 6-10 inches of soil. Oats is a medium deep feeder, with roots penetrating the soil to a depth of 1-2½ feet. With a proper mixture of these two crops, the competition between plants is so controlled that each crop has its respective feeding area and thus utilizes the available moisture and plant food to the best advantage.

For a mixed crop of oats and barley it is essential that the varieties used mature at the same time. If too much variation occurs, one crop is either immature or overripe at harvest time and consequently the yield is cut down by chaffy grain or excessive shattering. Under Iowa conditions, Kherson, Iowa 103 or 105 oats and Oderbrucker or Mandschuri barley are best adapted for the mixture.

One part of barley to two parts of oats is about the proper mixture for the average Iowa conditions. Such grain mixtures should not be grown with the idea of separating the grain for either seed or market, since it is almost an impossibility.

Drag Roads This Spring.

"Drag it again," is the answer to the farmer's question, what is the best thing to do to a road after it has been dragged. Moreover it is just about one of the most progressive slogans a farmer can adopt, say the Iowa state highway commission men at Ames.

Spring time dragging, they say, is the most effective dragging that a road can be given. In the spring time a road is in a receptive stage for dragging and work done on it at this time means a road that will not only be ready for early spring work, but one that will be in better summer condition than the road on which dragging has been delayed until later.

Make Over New Spring Bonnet.

Maybe that last season's straw hat can be made to look like a this year's creation by a little manipulation. With a little careful pressing on a paper padded block of your own making, a milan or hemp frame can be made to look as good the second and third season as it did the first. Pad the block for the crown according to the shape desired. Place a wet cloth over the hat and press on the wet block until the straw is dry. The brim may be cleaned and straightened in the same way. If the hat needs re-coloring, use Jetum Colorite or E Z dyes, which can be cheaply bought a any drug store.

Many a man fails to hear the knock of opportunity because he is busy doing a little "knocking" on his own account.

When Dreams Came True

By Florence Hurd Blalock, La Fayette, Ind.

PRIZE STORY NO. 6

Below we print another story of our Story Contest. This is an ideal method for amateur authors to secure recognition. Stories of love, adventure, descriptive, etc., will be printed in this and 75 to 100 other papers, if acceptable to the contest editor. Manuscript must be legibly written on one side of the paper, and will be printed in an early edition if accepted. If return of manuscript is desired, in the event of refusal, first class postage must be enclosed. Send all manuscripts to the editor of this paper.—Ed.

Every wheel of the Overland Limited seemed to squeak a separate protest, as the train wound on its way across the prairie. It was a hot day in August and the monotonous scenery had palled on even the most enthusiastic traveler.

In Tourist Car No. 5, Mary Blake—Mrs. Ezra Henry Blake, as her very new printed calling cards would have informed you—sat listlessly looking out of the window. She was trying not to see Ezra Henry in the seat opposite, placidly asleep, his mouth open and a fly buzzing around the almost bald spot on the crown of his head. The car was comparatively quiet, for it was the most deadening hour of a hot day, 2 o'clock, on the second day out of Chicago, and every one was either reading or making up the loss of the first night's sleep.

It was all so different from what Mary had pictured it. Here she was on her wedding trip, that trip which had always been one of her sweetest dreams, and it had turned out to be as commonplace as the rest of her colorless existence. Tears rose to her eyes but she fought them fiercely back. But if only Ezra Henry would be a little more lover-like and not take her so much for granted!

No one, Ezra least of all, suspected the love and longing for romance that lay hidden beneath Mary's quiet personality. Mary's father had died when she was a small child, leaving Mary and her mother with a very tiny house and a very tiny income. It was a hard struggle, and Mary grew up a silent, sensitive girl, making no close friends. She wished passionately for a girl chum whom she could confide in as girls will, for her mother was too busy managing the garden and home, and making the little income do double its duty, to pay much attention to Mary. And Mary never made any attempt to confide her little girlish longings to her mother.

She used to watch with a wistful air when, in the summertime, through the long twilight evenings, the girls she knew slowly promenaded past with arms entwined, and giggles floating back told of secrets dear to girlish hearts. At first she had been included in the little neighborhood parties, but she was shy and sensitive and could not join in the fun like the others, although she longed to utterly, so at last it came to be understood that "Mary didn't care if she was left out," and her mother acquiesed with a practical, "Guess it won't hurt you if you don't go to them folderol doins'." But it did hurt to be left out, and Mary shut her eyes on the prairie flitting past and a tear slipped down her cheek at the memory of the longing for the gaity she had been too timid to seek.

She had never had a lover until Ezra appeared when she was twenty. He was three years older than she and lived in the same block, but had worked in a factory since he had left school at the age of fourteen. Mary passed his home sometimes and saw him accasionally, but they had merely nodded to each other. However, Ezra appeared one Sunday and hesitatingly asked permission to call, and it came to be an understood thing that he would come every Sunday evening. Mary's mother approved of him as he was "a good steady boy with no monkey-business about him. And you won't find many like him these days," she told Mary grimly.

Mary looked back on those Sunday evenings with a wan little smile. She had been so eager and starved for the gaity and love that belong rightfully to girlhood, and in Ezra she saw the night of her dreams. And when he told her soon that he was saving to go into a business of his own, and asked her if she would wait for him, Mary's dreams seemed to grow into a golden glory. Practical slow-going Ezra would not have known himself could he have seen the Ezra of Mary's fancies.

Seven years had passed before Ezra decided he could safely embark in his own business, and they could be married. Mary had dreamed all of her life of her wedding day, beautiful dreams of bridesmaids, white-silk dresses, rice and flowers, and herself the center of it all. But Ezra suggested going to the minister's with her mother as witness, and then going quietly to the train, and neither Ezra nor her mother knew that her silent acquiescence covered a slowly growing resentment toward those she loved and toward life itself for cheating her of her dreams. One of the neighbors, hearing the plans, bustled in one morning and handed Mary a package. Mary took it with beating heart and a sense of delightful surprise, but it proved to be only a pair of stockings, the neighbor volubly explaining that she knew Mary was too sensible to like "gimcracks" so she thought she would give her something she could use. Other girls had delightful parties and "showers" but, thought Mary bitterly, "you couldn't call a pair of stockings a shower!"

Her timid suggestion that she thought she would get a light-colored suit—she had long ago given up all dreams of white—were over-ruled by her mother, and her suit was a sensible brown that "wouldn't show the dust." Mary looked down at it now in helpless resentment, and then out at the flat uninteresting scene framed by the windows. Her marriage had taken place as Ezra and her mother had planned, and they were now bound for his brother's for a week's visit. The trip was proving as devoid of interest as all the rest of it had been. She had hoped for one wild moment that they would take a Pullman. Surely on their wedding trip they might afford a little extravagance, but apparently Ezra never considered the matter, for they were now ensconsed in Tourist Sleeper No. 5, and had one day and night more before they reached their destination.

As evening drew on, the heat grew less and the car came slowly to life. People began to visit from seat to seat. A child's laugh rang out above the hum of the wheels. Suddenly a ripple of interest ran through the car in the wake of a slim merry-looking girl who went from seat to seat confiding news that called forth interested glances in Mary's direction and ejaculations of surprise.

Mary observed none of this as she sat with head bent over a magazine while Ezra, fortified by his nap, pored over his railway folder. The interest grew into a subdued excitement which culminated when a man arose from a group at one end of the car and approaching Mary and Ezra asked permission to sit with them. He was an interesting talker, and when he asked them if they cared to go through the train with him, they arose willingly.

After they had disappeared, excitement reigned in the car. "Are you sure they are just married?" "They don't act like bride and groom," "Are you sure?" rose in a babel, and on the girl's assurance that she had overheard enough of Mary's talks with Ezra to make this certain, the excited crowd fell to work. Anything that would help to pass the time on the long overland trip was welcome, and a real bride and groom was too good to be true. Willing hands made the towels the grinning porter produced into white bows. A foray by the young fellows at the next tank stop produced some golden rod that was hailed with delight, and soon Section No. 1 was transformed into a bower of gold and white. The girl handy with her pencil drew hearts and Cupids galore, while the good-natured cooks in the diner contributed a plentiful supply of rice.

One old lady dived into a capacious suitcase and produced a new lace handkerchief, and her example was followed by others. A box of candy made its appearance, a tiny set of beauty pins came from the silent lady in black, a new book from the interested fat man, and the slim girl was kept busy tying the various packages in white tissue.

They all worked breathlessly with bursts of laughter and glances toward the door. At last all was ready, and a deputy was sent through all the cars with an invitation to "come in and see our bride." Even the imigrant car up ahead yielded a dozen Japs who smiled gravely and nodded politely. Then the man who had all this time kept Mary and Ezra talking in a car forward, was notified and he led the way back to their car. He stepped back to allow Mary to enter the car first, and before she had time to more than wonder why so many smiling people were looking at her, a shower of rice fell around her, and cries of "The Bride!" "The Bride!" fell on her ears. She turned her bewildered eyes on her section to see it changed into a bridal bower, and as the crowd surged around her, she gave one delighted comprehending gasp and turned to Ezra. He had taken in the situation meantime and as Mary turned to him he held out his arms, and when an irrepressible youth cried above the shouts, "Kiss the Bride!" Ezra resolutely tipped Mary's chin back and gave her a resounding kiss such as only the dream Ezra had ever done.

Mary's eyes shone with excitement as she turned to face the crowd, and they were escorted with cheers to their transformed section. Then such a chatter as arose while Mary undid each package with trembling fingers. This was what she had dreamed of her happy brain kept singing. She was a bride, a bride, and she was having all the delightful attentions due a bride. The men all crowded around Ezra congratulating him and slapping him on the back, and Mary looking up caught a new understanding look in the eyes Ezra turned on her. This happy excited Mary was almost a revelation to him, and she thrilled at the look he sent her.

The other cars sent deputations to congratulate them, and each new arrival was presented with great ceremony to the bride. It was a never-to-be-forgotten afternoon, one to be relived all of Mary's life. It was only a joyful episode in the monotony of the trip for the other travelers, but to Mary, starved for romance, it was as if she had come into her rightful kingdom at last. Night came and shut out the prairie, but to Mary, sitting quietly with her hand in Ezra's, "a glory shone around."

PRACTICAL HOUSEHOLD HINTS. ROLLING GOOD FOR WHEAT.

Housekeeping is a business. It is the practical items that save money, time and energy which add up toward the sum total of efficient housekeeping.

Slipping a flannel bag over the broom converts it into an excellent wall brush. Simpler even than this bag is a square of flannel tied in place over the broom with tape, for there are no corners to look after in washing and being of single thickness it dries more quickly than a bag.

In regard to the care of a hard wood polished floor they advise that it always be swept with a soft brush before applying any sort of polish or wax.

They sum up the care of dishcloths in a few words: "Just boil them in soda water often enough to keep them clean and free from grease. The woven dishcloths that sell from seven to ten cents each are the softest and give up their dirt more easily than the canvas or tightly twisted ones."

MAKE GERMINATION TESTS

Dinner Plate Method Insures Good Seed for Small Grain and Grasses.

Two ordinary dinner plates, a blotting paper and some wet sand furnish all the materials necessary for making a germination test of clover, alfalfa, timothy and other grass and legume crops. This dinner plate method is one of the best because of its simplicity.

Fill a dinner plate nearly level full with sand. Thoroly saturate the sand with water and place the blotting paper on top. Count out the seeds to be tested, a hundred is a good number, and place them on the paper without being covered in any way except by another inverted dinner plate. This will prevent evaporation and preserve a moist atmosphere around the seed.

Seeds of clover, alfalfa, timothy or redtop require from four to ten days to germinate, depending somewhat on the temperature. The ordinary living-room temperature is the best. Seeds of blue grass require about four weeks for germination. Larger seeds, such as peas, soy beans or vetch, are best tested by pushing the kernels into the sand, omitting the blotting paper.

Securing a successful stand of grasses or legumes is quite dependent on the quality of the seed. The seed is quite expensive, so that a failure to secure a stand means not only the loss of the seed, but often the use of the land for a season or part of a season, with a subsequent break in rotation.

POINTED PARAGRAPHS.

It is sometimes easier to borrow money than to pay it back.

No man ever attains such a high position but some one will call him down.

Millions strive for wealth, thousands for fame—and possibly a dozen to be good.

Yet none of the saloons ever went out of business on account of New Year's resolutions.

The cheeky individual may get there, but generally at the expense of some one's good opinion.

It sometimes happens that while a man is watching his enemies his friends get the best of him.

People who own cut glass shouldn't throw stones.

BRIDE FINDS $7,800 DAY AFTER WEDDING

$1,800 In Gold and $6,000 in Notes Discovered by Bride Under Floor

Point Pleasant, W. Va.—Rummaging in the attic of her home the day following her marriage, Mrs. John Board, formerly Mrs. Mary Jane Fisher, found $7,800, of which $1,800 was in gold money and $6,000 in notes.

The money was concealed beneath the floor of the attic and it was uncovered accidentally. Mrs. Board was married several times and had lived in the same house 30 years, but so far as known none of her husbands had any money.

The bills had been rolled together for so long that they became a solid mass. They were sent to Washington to be soaked and washed and untwisted.

ASKS ACCIDENT INSURANCE FOR LOSS OF MUSTACHE

Kentucky Physician Seeks to Collect $600 for Injured Face Adornment

Henderson, Ky.—As a result of an explosion of a coal stove Dr. W. S. Galloway, a prominent physician of this city is seeking to collect $600 for the loss of his mustache.

The doctor was carrying sick and accident insurance with a St. Paul, Minn., insurance company, and he thinks he is entitled to the damages by the terms of his contract.

He has written the home office, explaining that his mustache was nine inches from tip to tip and that he had been twenty years in growing same. Without his famous face decorations, the doctor declares his looks are ruined.

FALLS AND BREAKS GLASS EYE

Man Meets Odd Accident Dodging Switch Engine.

Houston, Tex.—In a freak accident which occurred along the right of way of the Frisco railroad just outside the city limits after midnight, a Kevelder, who gave his address as Algoa, Texas, suffered the loss of an eye.

The freak part about the accident was that the eye happened to be an artificial eye, and the only discomfort suffered by Kevelder was in the loss of his artificial eye and a few cuts and bruises about the face.

Kevelder says he was walking along the Frisco right of way when he saw the headlight of a switch engine which was coming toward him. In order to sidestep the engine he got off the track and fell thru a trestle work into a ditch. He landed in the ditch with his face downward and somehow or other the glass eye was splintered in the socket, cutting his face somewhat.

After lying in the ditch for some time he managed to make his way to a group of railroad men, who sent him into the hospital, where it was found that his condition was not serious.

Send in your
Subscription today

Story Contest

Opportunity for subscribers of this paper to try their literary talent and gain a reputation.

MANY magazine writers are secured from the rural communities. We want our subscribers to have every advantage to utilize their talent, and have joined with a number of other publishers in a great story contest.

Do you think you can write a story?

Suppose you try anyhow. For the best story received we will pay

$50.00

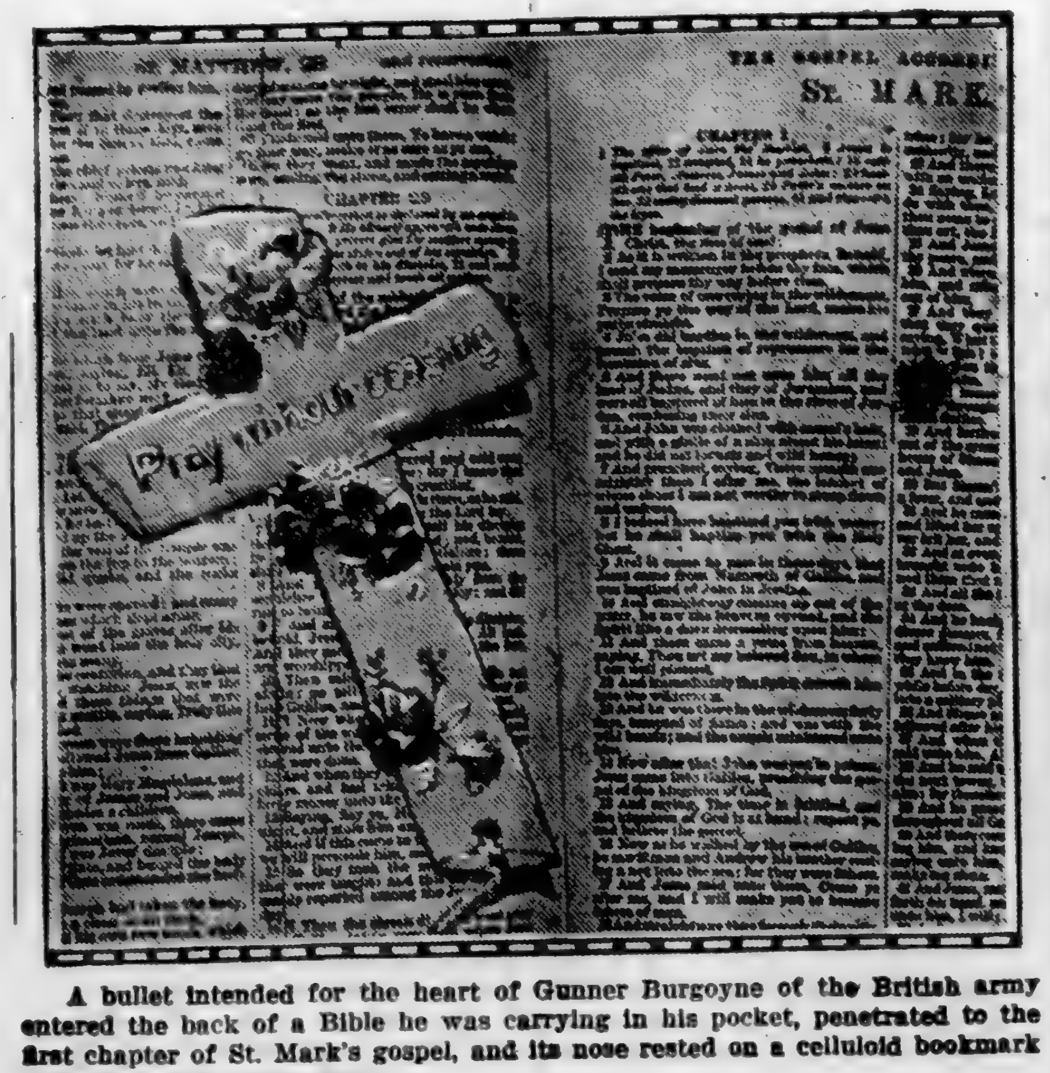
Stories may run from 2,000 to 15,000 words. Decision will be made by popular vote of the subscribers of this and several other papers. Stories acceptable for entry will be published in this paper and not less than fifty others. This is a chance to gain popularity at once. Send manuscript direct to editor of this paper.

APRIL

L 908

U 1 2 7

SAVED BY HIS BIBLE



A bullet intended for the heart of Gunner Burgoyne of the British army entered the back of a Bible he was carrying in his pocket, penetrated to the first chapter of St. Mark's gospel, and its nose rested on a celluloid bookmark in the form of a floral cross.

Flickerings from Filmland

Interesting to the Movie Fans.

NOTES OF THE PHOTO PLAYS.

A new star will be seen in Famous Players pictures soon. Peggy Hyland, an English favorite, will make her American screen debut under the Famous management early in May.

Ethel Clayton is busily engaged at the Equitable studio enacting the principal role in "The Woman of It," playing opposite Carlyle Blackwell. Miss Clayton came to the Equitable from the Lubin company following a successful stage and screen career.

The Thomas H. Ince pretentious spectacle which was intended for release under the title of "He Who Returned" will be introduced to the public as "Civilation." It opens first in Los Angeles about the last of this month, according to the present plans, then it goes to New York, after which it comes to Chicago.

Theodosia Harris' story, "The Heart of Tara," adapted to pictures by David Horsley, marks the first appearance of Margaret Gibson and William Clifford as co-stars.

Kitty Gordon's second screen play from the World studio, "The Greatest Test," will be issued about the middle of this month. Her introductory drama was "As In a Looking Glass."

FILM STAR DISCUSSES "ADMIRER" QUESTION.

Is it worth while for a photoplay star to pay serious attention to the hundreds of leters, mushy and flattering, that pour in daily? Is it worth while to go to the trouble and expense of answering the thousand and one questions that the fans hurl at their favorites? Is it worth while to send photographs to all who request them, regardless of the fact that no postage is forwarded?

This is a problem that has given photoplay stars much concern. It may be said in passing that few stars of prominence in the film firmament have gained that high rank without catering to the whims of their admirers.

Anita Stewart receives between two and three hundred letters a day from all parts of the world.

"Most of them so soft and mushy," she admitted, "would be suited to stuffing pillows with. They are softer than eiderdown. But each one was written by an individual who thought enough about me to put a stamp on the envelope and drop it into the postbox. Common courtesy demands that each letter gets its attention, even though I have to go to the expense of hiring a secretary to take care of them. I consider the expense well worth while."

In the opinion of those who have their finger on the pulse of motion picture public, Anita has the right idea. No letter is too insignificant or trifling to be ignored by the player. A letter in return, or a photograph, means a friend. One friend means several, and when the day comes that the exhibitor puts it up to his audience what films to book the actor or actress with the most friends will win.

During the past week Anita Stewart has received twenty proposals, three offers of presents of blooded dogs, forty-five letters from girls anxious to "break into the game," and willing to accept the most menial engagements; twelve one-pound boxes of candy from unknown admirers, and several hundred requests for autographed photographs.

Each one of the proposers received a polite refusal—strong enough to dampen his ardor, but sweet enough to "let him down easy," so that he will still retain a desire to see Anita on the screen. The dog offers received Anita's thanks for their thoughtfulness with a statement that, inasmuch as she was living in a hotel, a pet of that kind would be more or less of a bother. The applicants for positions were given kindly advice. Signed photographs were mailed to the hundreds. There is enough work here to keep a stenographer busy.

BLOW TO JAW DELAYS FILMING OF "THE DISCARD."

Ernest Maupain, the versalite character actor, is not particularly impressed by the brand of screen realism practiced by Harry Beaumont, leading man. Rather, he was impressed—on the chin—but not favorably.

It happened when "The Discard," was being filmed. Maupain, as the international swindler, is blackmailing Beaumont, the young husband. Beaumont must strike him in anger. The scene rehearsed well, Beaumont giving Maupain a blow on the jaw which was more expressive than injurious.

Then the camera started. Beaumont began a swing with his right arm, and at that instant his foot slipped on a rug and he "pulled a haymaker to the jaw," as the boxing experts say. It was a savage blow and Maupain forgot acting to protest in characteristic French. The scene had to be made over. But not until the rug was tacked to the floor, as per Maupain's instructions. Beyond the sting of the blow, Maupain was irritated, because it was the first time he ever was required to make over a scene.

PLANS SUMMER WARDROBE.

Fritzi Brunette has planned her summer wardrobe for street use. She has adopted the quaint styles our grandmothers used to wear. Fetching poke bonnets, ruffled skirts and bodices loom up on the horizon of her dreams. For the charming villainnesses she portrays on the screen, however, Fritzi will continue to invent new effects in clinging, seductive, snake-like draperies.

OUR NUTTY NOVELETTE

CAST AWAY.

Napoleon crossed the Alps one day,
And then he crossed his legs.
He said, "Bring beer for all my men,"
They brought four million kegs.

Napoleon Bonaparte stood on the shore of St. Helena, chewing moodily on a chiclet that he had picked from a nearby bush. He needed a shave but great plans were running through that massive head.

Some yards off a native of the island stood regarding him curiously yet fearfully. Since the little general's arrival the life of the natives had been a constant ferment. Not a day passed but what the man of destiny stirred up some insurrection or other sometimes some, sometimes other.

Yesterday he had organized a strike of the cooks and waiters at the Jujube hotel, the day before he had gathered the beach combers into a mass meeting and made them dissatisfied with the brand of combs supplied them by the local councils There was no telling what the morrow would bring forth, for rebellion was seething and boiling over continually in the great outcast's brain

But what is this? Napoleon is beckoning the nervous native to approach.

"I," said Napoleon bitterly, "am the guy that rang the bell in rebellion."

"Nay, sir," replied the native, as he prepared to run, "you are the guy that put the h— in Helena."

If a wise man is too tired to think his talk is apt to sound foolish.

Occasionally a married man goes around half dressed because it takes too much to dress his wife.

Hoping for the Best

"There is no sense in being pessimistic," said Wisun to Whinebom. "Why should you worry about dying? I used to know a man who was continually worrying for fear he would die before his children grew up, and he lived to see every one of them married to a loafer.

"There was another man who was always afraid he would land in a poor house. Night and day it troubled him, and he lost a lot of sleep over it. He never went to the poor house at all. He went to Sing Sing.

"Once I knew a fellow who was afraid that his sweetheart might jilt him and marry some other guy. Foolish fellow! He had nothing to fear She didn't jilt him.

"She married him at high noon, had all the bridesmaids and fuss that the law allows and she presented him with eleven bouncing boys and girls, many of whom are twins.

"Another man was going around looking miserable because he was afraid he would lose his hearing. But he didn't. He was able to hear everything his wife said to him when he came home late, forgetting the stuff she had told him to bring.

"There was a man who had his foot run over. He was crying around everywhere about never being able to walk again, and his wife and all his family were worried about it. But he got plenty of walking to do. He kept his foot to walk the floor with a dozen babies, and besides he went to live in the suburbs where he had to walk nine blocks to the nearest car. Besides that he belonged to the uniform rank of his lodge, and they went in for drill practice every night for two years to compete for a prize. He did plenty of walking before he died.

"Then there was a fellow who came very near committing suicide. He said he would never love another. Yet he has been kicked out of the house by half a dozen pas since that time, chewed by seven or eight dogs, and shot in the neck by a jealous rival.

"Don't be pessimistic, Whinebom! Hope for the best!"

Had Seen Him.

General Miles used to tell how he once put a question or two to a veteran negro soldier who was an inmate of a soldiers' home. The old fellow was sunning himself on the grass, when the general engaged him in conversation touching his campaigns and the officers he had fought under. "Did you ever see Grant" asked the visitor.

"Did I ever see Grant?" repeated the old fellow, with a superb smile. "Why, I was a lyin' on de ground after one battle, when I heahs de sound of hosses' hoofs, and den a voice calls out, 'Is dat you, Morgan?'

"I knowed in a second dat it was Gin'ral Grant. 'Yassah,' I says, very respectful.

"'Come heah,' says Gin'ral Grant.

"I gits up, reluctant-like, I was kinder tired out.

"'Why?' says I, still respectful.

"'Cause you're killin' too many men' says Gin'ral Grant."

A "Has Been."

Little Everett was a member of the Band of Mercy Society and was proud of the membership. He wore his badge a small star, as if it were a policeman's insignia, and was often heard reproving other boys and girls for cruel treatment of dogs and cats.

One morning, a woman of the neighborhood heard a commotion outside Everett's home, and, going to the window, was surprised to find Everett in the act of tormenting the cat.

"Why, Everett," she called, "what are you doing to that poor cat? I thought you belonged to the Band of Mercy Society."

"I did," replied the little boy, "but I lost my star."

His Name.

"Your name," asked the teacher, who was registering a new pupil.

"Arthur."

"And what's your first name?"

"Brown."

"Oh, haven't you got them wrong? I think Arthur must be your first name and Brown your family name. Isn't that right?"

But the small pupil was not persuaded. A day or two later he announced:

"Teacher, mother says Brown is my first name. She says I got that name when I was born and she didn't name me Arthur till three months later!"

Puzzled

A new regulation in a certain coal mine required that each man mark with chalk the number on every car of coal mined.

One man named Rudolph, having filled the eleventh car, marked it with a No. 1 and, after pondering a while let it go at that.

Another miner happening to notice what he thought was a mistake, called Rudolph's attention to the fact that he had marked the car No. 1 instead of 11.

"Yes, I know," said Rudolph; "but I can't tink which side de odder wan go on."

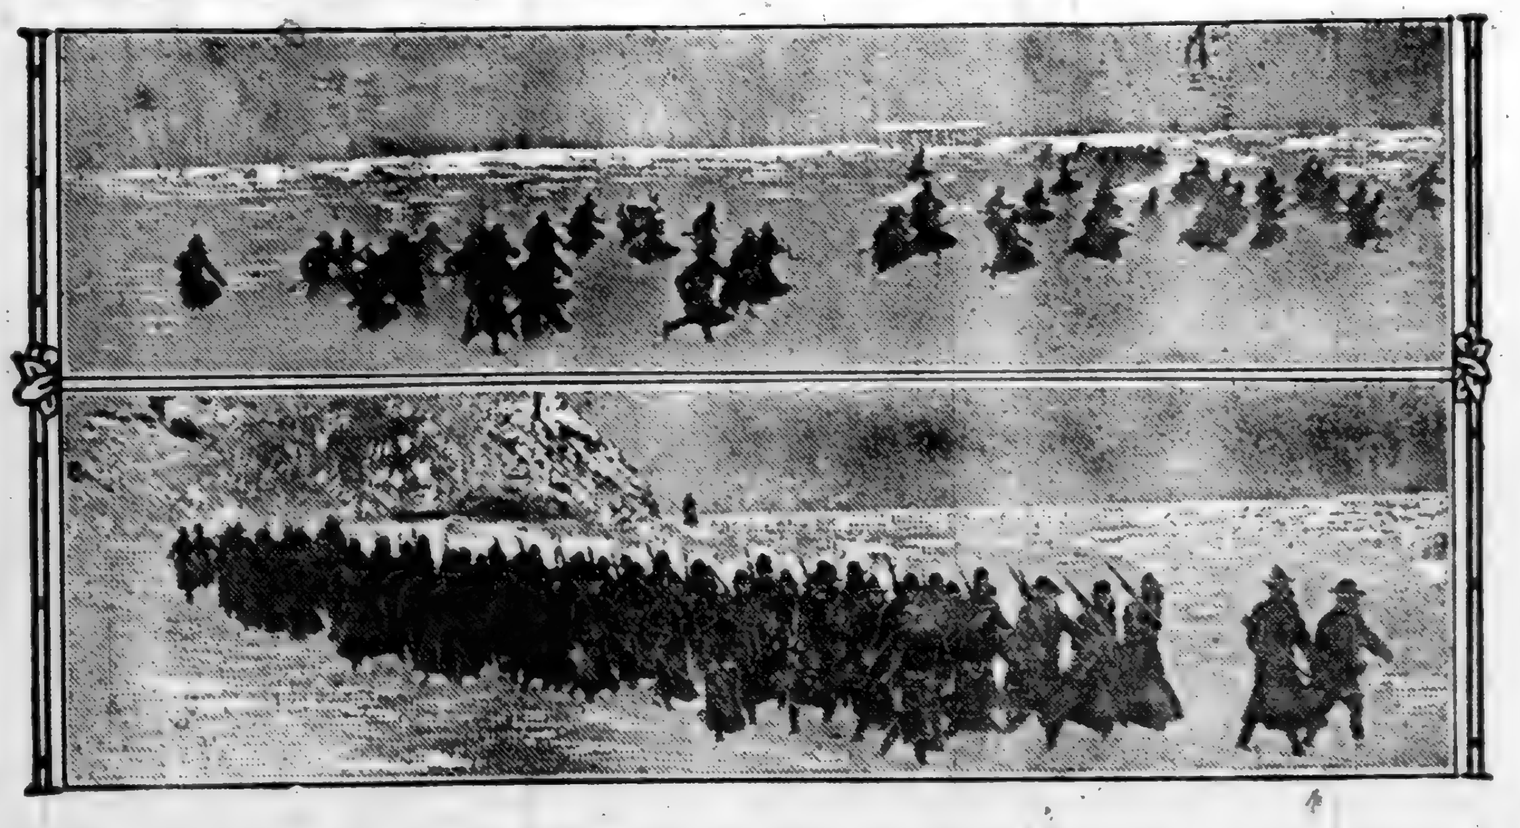
Wanted a Sample

"Your honor," said the jury foreman, "this lady is suing this gent for $10,000 for a stolen kiss."

"Correct," responded the judge. "You are to decide if it was worth it."

"That's the point, your honor. Could the jury have a sample?"

MILITIA GETS TASTE OF "WAR" IN WINTER



Members of the New York national guard were taken to the snowy plains of Peekskill, N. Y., and instructed in the art of winter warfare.

Dictates of Fashion

Paris is using a great many contrasting pipings.

Patent side laced boots are more popular than ever.

The coat of knee length is smartest for sport wear.

Many new evening dresses have short puff sleeves.

Sleeves of chiffon are found in the newest gowns.

Most utility coats are long enough almost to cover the dress.

Entire dresses are being made of silk jersey for outing wear.

There is no doubt about the vagaries of millinery. Some hats are extremely simple, being trimmed only on the brim, while equally severe hats are trimmed only on the top of the crown.

It is easy to enlarge a child's dress all over by setting a panel in the front, from top to bottom, and setting a band of the same material around the bottom of the skirt, underneath. A wide white collar, so deep that it reaches the tops of the sleeve, completes the frock.

MOTORING.

When first a fellow gets a car he navigates it slowly. "Base fiends," he says, "those speeders are—their course is most unholy." There'll be no reckless speed for him; such stuff annoys him greatly; he will not scorch or scoot or skim, but jog along sedately. "Oh, safety is the proper stuff," he says when feeling chatty; "twelve miles an hour is fast enough for any man not batty. The accidents of which we read are caused by silly duffers who have to hit abnormal speed and many a victim suffers." But when he's had his car nine weeks he sends it forth a-humming, and every country village shrieks when it beholds him coming: "To crawl along," he says, "is worse than walking is, dodgast me! I don't propose that every hearse shall go a-whizzing past me!" And so he scorches in his glee, and then some balmly morning he winds his car around a tree and furnishes a warning. WALT MASON.

NEEDLEWORK NOTES.

Fascinating work bags, made of Austrian handkerchiefs such as the peasants wear for headdresses, are being shown. The handkerchief is of a large size in cream white and has a border of purple plums and green leaves. The bags are half-moon in shape, sixteen inches deep and are shirred on oblong wooden frames, which form the handles.

Embroidery hoops play quite an important part in mending nowadays. If a blouse has worn, place a patch underneath and place the part to be mended in a pair of small embroidery hoops. Then neatly darn the blouse to the patch. The hoop will hold the work taut and it will present a much neater appearance when finished than if the work were stretched over the fingers.

"Handsome is as handsome does," so for the homely, though much used, whiskbroom, a fitting resting place should surely be found. A lovely case for one is made of cretonne with scalloped edges, initialed and finished in style. The stiff back is merely of pasteboard whose cretonne covering is fastened with small gold headed tacks. The whole is topped with a dainty ribbon hanger which prepares it in all elegance for its convenient place in milady's boudoir.

Many a man is his own Jonah.

Beware of a man who is forever harping on his honesty.

A woman with a fiery temper isn't necessarily warmhearted.

But it's as well to forget most of the promises made to you.

WHERE SPRING TONIC SHOULD BE BOUGHT

In the spring the old wives' fancy dully turns to thoughts of tonic and sarsaparilla and "spring medicine" generally, Prudence Bradish writes in the Home-maker.

"Just stop on your way home my dear, and bring me a package of pepsin tablets, and—oh, yes, I do want some sulphur and rhubarb. You ought to have a tonic yourself, John, you do look sort of run down this spring. Bring home a bottle of——" and so forth, and so on; you know the thing by heart.

Buying Health at Drug Store.

It is so easy to fall back on the drug store, as if health were a thing you could buy in packages with lurid testimonials printed on the outside. Yes, it is true that pepsin will "digest" proteids and carbonhydrates—in a test tube. But, my dear, your stomach is not a test tube; neither is your husband's nor your child's, and you can't but appetite or good digestion in a package or a bottle at the drug store. Iron and sulphur have their uses, no doubt, but at best their good offices are temporary. Besides that, there is a better way to get these valuable components into the human system, and lots cheaper.

I have reminded you before that chemistry is a very important part of the competent housewife's equipment. These things that you are asking your husband to bring home with him—this time let him pass the drug store by, and go over to the other corner, to the market, and get them there in another guise. Try smuggling the drugs into your family through the family diet. If you don't believe this a better way, ask the doctor.

No Use for Spring Medicine.

To begin with, the need of a spring tonic, a spring house cleaning of the human system, is largely due to the fact that all winter we have been overeating, rich and heavy foods, without proper exercise; living in over-heated, poorly ventilated houses, and with the breathing pores of the skin shut away from the air with heavy underclothing. And the chances are that together with over-eating in quantity, we have been eating the wrong things because the housekeeper who has catered for us has not been giving us the right sort of diet. She has not known, or has not thought about, the properties of our foodstuffs.

Different seasons and conditions of living demand different proportions of water, fats, sugars and proteids. Eat the right food and the right combinations of food, to provide what your system demands, and you will not need spring tonics, or much of any other sort of medicine.

Take Fruit as Laxative.

We fear all sorts of germs—grippse, pneumonia, typhoid, and wicked old general debility—and still we seldom stop to think that three times a day we may be putting poison into our systems by wrong eating. No sane man would treat his automobile engine as he treats his own "insides." In the first place, we probably eat too much or too great a variety—or maybe not variety enough.

We wonder why we are so fat, or so listless, or so uncomfortable. It can almost always be traced to bad eating, together with faulty, lazy habits about exercise and general personal hygiene.

Instead of waisting your money and injuring your family's health by habitual use of laxative drugs, or widely advertised and wholly injurious cathartics, why don't you try a laxative fruit for your breakfast every day? "Oh yes, I do that," said a friend of mine. "I have tried oranges and prunes, and it never does any good."

Well, why doesn't it? I watched her breakfasts for a week and saw one reason. Instead of eating plenty of the fruit and a piece of graham, rye, whole wheat, or cereal toast (and by "plenty of fruit" I mean more than one orange or a dish of prunes—not both, but either), she ate half an orange or a small dish of prunes, and then ate cereal and milk and white bread and coffee. That's the answer, believe me.

Simple Food the Best.

Milk or cream is not good with acid fruits at the same meal, and coffee with cream certainly did not help. Generally speaking, one ought to eat nothing but fruit and a coarse bread toast. This particular woman had none but white bread on her table all the week, for all meals. Now, white bread is refined too much. Really, it is harmful for persons of sluggish digestion. They need coarse wheat, graham, and cereal breads. Personally, I would go so far as to say these are better for everybody.

Figs or dates, with a coarse cereal and cream, would be all right when we leave out the acid fruit, if we would like a change for breakfast. I never saw on this woman's table a fresh salad, with olive oil and lemon juice. Lemon juice is a corrective to uric acid, and olive oil is laxative as well as nourishing. Too much meat tends to make uric acid and aggravates such troubles as rheumatism. Use salads of all kinds of green vegetables, and see how you will improve. Hav plenty of spinach, which contains the iron you need. Dandelion and asparagus are both valuable and help flush the kidneys. Watercress and fresh rhubarb ("pie-plant") are especially good, but few people use them freely; they prefer to buy the constituent sulphur and rhubarb at the drug store, and pay fifty or a hundred times more for it! Yes, indeed, watercress contains sulphur. Onions, sorrel and tender milkweed tops are good for your liver, which you say is "so torpid in the spring" because you have been stuffing yourself all winter with meats, sweet-cakes, puddings and other starchy stuff.

Pepsin from the Grocer.

Pineapple is a tonic for throat and stomach, and contains in natural form the pepsin you told John to bring home from the pharmacy. Strawberries and other fruits contain citric acid and mineral salts, so good for biliousness.

Now, don't you see that if you think about what you eat, choosing wisely, you need not be overfat, or lazy, or sick? You will find it cheaper in the end to study your markets rather than the patent medicine advertisements. and you can get some of the exercise you need trotting around, instead of sitting at the telephone in your lovely kimono, making up your menu out of your head as you go along.

This little article isn't intended to tell you all you ought to know, but to remind you of the harm that a physically and mentally lazy woman can do to a perfectly good family without going to jail.

CONCERNING WOMEN.

Missouri has thirty woman dentists.

Chester, England, has woman lamplighters.

A love and marriage class is conducted at Goucher College for the senior girl students.

Ninety-four women in Pennsylvania are employed in repairing automobiles in garages.

Miss Louise Potter has been appointed chief clerk to Mayor Filbert of Reading, Pa.

The Grand Duchess Olga is the most popular of the members of the imperial Russian family.

Of the 1,300 public and society libraries in the United States 1,075 are supervised by women.

FROM THE CONSULAR REPORTS.

Silver disks or blank coins manufactured in the United States will be received at the national mint of Peru from individuals holding government permits, and will be coined into pieces valued at 1 sol each (48.6 cents), up to the amount of 500,000 sols.

Japan's match industry has suffered greatly because of the difficulty in importing materials. Another important problem in the island empire is the shortage of steel.

On March 15 there were in the ice outside of Archangel, Russia, no fewer than 100 ships. The port was frozen up last winter much earlier than usual.

Rolling Good for Wheat.

If the soil in your winter wheat field was heaved badly, the use of the corrugated roller may be found beneficial advise the farm crops men in the Iowa agricultural experiment station.

The roller firms the earth about the plants that have been partly heaved out by the frost and if the soil is not yet well rolled—and it should not be wet then—a mulch is formed which prevents the rapid escape of moisture.

Ordinarily it is not considered advisable to follow the roller with a harrow when corrugated roller is used.

APRIL

L 908

0128

"Better Off On the Farm"

An Interview with Secretary of Agriculture David F Houston by Edward B. Clark

It should and doubtless does go without saying that David Franklin Houston, secretary of agriculture, is interested deeply in the solution of the problem of how to keep the young men of the country on the farm. Mr. Houston, like many others who have given careful study to the situation, declares that the cry should not be "Back to the farm," but "Stay on the farm." The belief of all the government students of agricultural conditions in the United States is that if the farming industry be made increasingly profitable and that if conditions of farm life be bettered the "Back to the farm" movement will take care of itself. In other words, the magnet will be on the farm and it will draw to itself the dwellers in the cities who are ambitious to better their condition.

Secretary Houston was asked by your correspondent to give a message to those who are engaged in a comprehensive plan to show the boys of their communities that it is advisable to stay on the farm instead of leaving it to go to the hurly-burly and uncertainty of city life. Mr. Houston spoke feelingly on the subject. He combined a statement of what is being done by the federal and state governments to give the farming life holding qualities, with a message on the growing opportunities for young men to make a signal success of agricultural occupations.

"It is not so much a problem of bringing young men back to the farm as it is one of so improving agricultural conditions and rural life as to make it clear to the young men that they will be better off in the long run by staying where they are than by going elsewhere.

"The great problem confronting the nation is how to make agriculture profitable and the rural life comfortable, attractive and healthful.

"If we successfully attack that problem we shall be relieved of the necessity of talking so much about staying on the farm or of going back to the farm. All the efforts of land-grant colleges and of this department are directed to this end. The agencies are becoming consolidated in the extent and efficiency of machinery, and financial support has been forthcoming from the states and the nation, which combined are spending at present $60,000,000 a year through the land-grant colleges and the state and federal departments of agriculture for the improvement of agricultural and rural life.

"The aim is to increase production through plant and animal breeding, better cultural methods, eradication or control of plant and animal diseases which are costing hundreds of millions a year; to study newer problems in agriculture; to improve distribution, especially marketing, and to develop community co-operation and teamwork with a view to the better standardization and handling of products and a fuller knowledge of markets and market conditions and the transportation of products—in short, a better organization of rural life.

"In the interest of the young people we are organizing a large number of agricultural clubs, canning clubs, poultry clubs, corn clubs, hog clubs, and so on. The work is being promoted by the demonstration force, now a co-operative machinery under the joint support of land-grant colleges and the federal department.

"In many counties throughout the country there are county agents whose duty it is to work with the farmers on the farms for the improvement of agricultural conditions as they affect production and distribution. Under the Smith-Lever act the states and the nation together will be expending in seven years $9,000,000 yearly for this extension of agricultural education.

"It seems reasonably clear with the natural opportunities we have and with the improvements made by the farmers supplementing these agencies, that the opportunities for young men to make a success in farming will be increased gradually, and that now outside of the actual business of farming there is a loud call for leaders of all these enterprises in rural districts.

"I see no reason why an aspiring country boy should not direct his attention to the opportunities presented in this great field of effort rather than to those of the other industrial offerings presented by city life."

Secretary Houston spoke strongly of three factors of the problem of how to keep young men on the farm. They are good rural schools, first-class country roads and a more attractive social life. Schools and a brightening of the social life are wholly state and community problems. In the matter of the improvement of roads the federal government has a voice and power.

The secretary has a heartfelt interest in the solution of the rural-school problem. He believes, as others believe with him, that the boy and girl in the country should have the same opportunities for education that are given to the boy and girl of the city. The lack of proper educational facilities in country districts, he believes, has sent many ambitious parents away from the farms to the cities in order to give their children the advantages which the schools of the large centers afford.

HATS

and

CAPs

of the latest styles for the summer season, in felts and straws. We invite you to our store to look at our fine display. The prices are reasonable.

Remember
Go to Erick's

Wm. G. ERICK,
SPENCERVILLE

P. A. Walker
Trustee
Spencer Township

OFFICE DAY—
Tuesday of each week at the residence ¾ mile east of the Dills River Bridge.
Phone—St. Joe, 21-6
Spencerville, - Indiana

Read the Free Column.

Pay Less Taxes

By filing a mortgage exemption each year, and now is the time to file. See S. S. Widney.

The St. Joe News

Fred B. Leighty, Editor
Mrs. Iora Leighty, Associate

One Year, - - $1.00
Six Months, - - - .50
Three Months, - - .25

Entered at the postoffice at St. Joe, Indiana, as second class matter.

INDIANA ASSOCIATED WEEKLIES

SPENCERVILLE
R. F. D. No. 1.

Mrs. Cummings, of Peru, spent over Sunday with her sister, Mrs. Frank Horn and family.

Earl McNabb, of Auburn, spent Saturday and Sunday with his parents, John McNabb and family.

George and Mary Horn spent Sunday afternoon with D. K. Horn and family.

At Horn's school house, Saturday, all the patrons came with well filled baskets and enjoyed a good dinner. There were about 60 people present. Galord Kurts, of Harlan, was the teacher.

St. Joe Locals

Get Indian Gasoline at Patterson's Garage.

The corner stone of the new hay barn was laid Tuesday and Hi Dunkle made the speech. The work is coming along fine. The garage is ready for the roof, and will soon be enclosed.

TEMPERANCE NOTES

(Conducted by the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union.)

A NATIONAL CALAMITY.

"I have believed in the regulation, not the prohibition of the liquor traffic," says Dr. Lyman Abbott, "but the action of liquor dealers has made regulation impossible."

The secretary of the Ohio Temperance Union (a liquor organization) wrote to Doctor Abbott asking for a letter which could be used in the state prohibition campaign. Doubtless he is sorry he did it. The reply came as an open letter in the Outlook and is a severe arraignment of the saloon as a lawbreaker. Its law-defying propensities have, in the judgment of Doctor Abbott, been its undoing. We quote:

"The American people are characteristically conservative and slow in coming to a conclusion. But they are coming to the conclusion, though slowly, that the American saloon is not only a local nuisance but a national calamity and are resolving to abolish it.

"The question is not, Is beer a useful article of food?

"It is not, Is moderate drinking wrong?

"It is not, Does the Bible prohibit or permit moderate drinking?

"These questions the people would prefer to leave each individual free to determine for himself.

"But they are not willing to leave each individual to determine for himself whether the laws enacted by the community shall be obeyed. That question the community will decide, and it will suffer any inconvenience, any deprivation, which may be necessary to secure such obedience. This is the meaning of the present prohibitory movement.

"But if the people are compelled to choose between an unregulated and lawless liquor traffic and the prohibition of the liquor traffic, I do not doubt that they will choose prohibition. If we cannot reform the saloons, we shall abolish them. And if we can find no other way to abolish them, we shall abolish the distillery, the brewery, the winery and the importation of liquor from abroad."

ALCOHOL AND TUBERCULOSIS.

The following resolution was passed by the International Congress on Tuberculosis, held in Paris, at which some 2,000 medical scientists were present: "That in view of the close connection between alcoholism and tuberculosis, this congress strongly emphasizes the importance of combining the fight against tuberculosis with the struggle against alcoholism."

At the International Alcohol Congress at Bremen, Professor Segran, a distinguished Frenchman, said that the use of alcohol predisposes the system to tuberculosis and also prevents cures. The real individual and social treatment for tuberculosis consists in the strictest total abstinence from alcoholic liquors.

OBJECTS TO LIQUOR DEALER.

My objection to the liquor dealer is the same as my objection to the bedbug. For all I know, the bedbug may be entirely above reproach, so far as his social relations are concerned. He may be regular in his religious duties, gentle in his home and prompt in paying his bills. He may be frugal and industrious and blameless in every civic duty and domestic obligation. He may be kind to his wife and children, obliging to his neighbors, generous to the outcast and worthy of the vote of his congressional district. But my objection to him is the way he gets his living.—T. Alexander Cairns.

NO "MEDICINAL" WHISKY.

Alcohol puts to sleep the sentinels that guard your body from disease. Policy holders are warned against advertisements extolling the virtues of whisky in disease. The callous cruelty of such advertisements lies in the fact that they appeal to the very people who are most injured by the use of alcohol—sufferers from rheumatism, chronic kidney disease, nervous subjects, etc. There is no such thing as "medicinal" whisky.—From Bulletin No. 5, issued by the Postal Life Insurance Company, New York

DENTIST
O. R. PRICE
ST. JOE, IND.
Office: first door south of Patterson's Dept. Store.
Bell Phone No. 44.

YOUR NAME
Is it on our subscription list?
We will guarantee you full value
FOR YOUR MONEY

BULLETIN!

For a few weeks yet you can buy your fencing at the old prices:

◆ ◆ ◆

Lion Fence Prices:

10-47	All No. 9 wire, 12 inch stay	50c
10-47	All No. 9 wire, 14 inch stay	48c
10-46	No. 11 Filler, 12 inch stay	39c
10-46	No. 11 Filler, 6 inch stay	50c
10-46	No. 12 Filler, 12 inch stay	35c
10-46	No. 12 Filler, 6 inch stay	42c
9-39	No. 12 Filler, 12 inch stay	30c

◆ ◆ ◆

New Page Fence Prices:

10-47	All No. 9 wire, 12 inch stay	46c

Brace Wire and three styles of Barb carried in stock.

We can also supply your needs in Chick Feed, Meat Scrap, Cut Bone, Oyster Shells.

STEWARD LUMBER & GRAIN Co.
SPENCERVILLE, IND.
Highest Prices Paid for Grain and Seeds.

Sunday School Report.

The following is a true and correct report of the various Sunday Schools in this neighborhood for last Sunday.

Lutheran	134	$ 5.70
M. P.	125	15.26
Christian	65	7.00
Fairview	28	.73
Coburntown	78	6.80
Concord	137	4.17
M. E. Spencer	105	8.97
Lutheran	91	3.32
Newville, C.	72	2 61

Local Briefs

Subscriptions taken for new or renewals of any magazine published, at The News office.

For Sale or Rent, a small house and half-acre of good garden ground. S. S. WIDNEY.

Transfer paper at NEWS office 2 sheets for 5c. Get some now for that pattern you wish to transfer.

A Friend in Need.

When Glando Gargle is used for a cold in the head it is surprising to see how quickly the clogged nostrils are opened. Adenoids are caused by a neglected cold. If the mucus which forms is allowed to remain in the nostrils, a diseased condition will result, which causes chronic catarrh and adenoids. Glando Gargle was prepared to meet these special needs. Equally effective for sore mouth or sore throat. Price 50 cents. For sale by All Druggists.

NEWVILLE

Grant Ames is giving his house a new coat of paint.

Aunt Lucinda Hart is quite poorly, the result of the lagrippe.

Mrs. John Deardorff, of Hicksville, was the Wednesday guest of her sister, Mrs. Crum.

John Miller was called to Akron, Ind., Tuesday to attend the funeral of his sister, Mrs. Wm. Bemenderfer. Mr. Miller returned home Friday.

Frank Griest, wife and little nephew, Gerald Griest, who lives with them, at Hicksville, were Sunday guests of David Griest and wife.

Mesdames Clara Brunson and Ollie Smith were taken to the Hope hospital, at Ft. Wayne, Wednesday, where Mrs. Brunson will receive medical treatment for a growth on the breast. Mrs. Smith had her right eye taken out, the operation being performed Thursday. Reports from her says she stood the operation well and that she is getting along fine.

Don't put off any longer. Subscribe now.

Jacob Presler and wife, of Hicksville, were guests of Ross Nelson and wife, north of town, Wednesday.

Mrs. John Miller and Master Howard Smith were guests of Mrs. Elmer McDonald and family, at Butler, Tuesday.

Mrs. Lizzie Joslin has moved from Auburn to the home of her father, Wm. Seeley, to keep house for him and her brother John.

Mrs. Ida Traxler spent a part of last week at Garrett, the guest of Mrs. Lottie Traxler.

Rev. J. L. Keesey left Wednesday of this week for Claypool, Ind. to attend the funeral of his mother-in-law, Mrs. Catherine Snow. Deceased was the mother of Mr. Keesey's first wife.

William Oberlin, who makes his home with his son, George, about two miles southeast of Newville, was found on his bedroom floor Monday morning in an unconscious state. He was suffering from hemorrhage of the brain. Mr. Oberlin is one of the oldest residents of DeKalb county, being past 88 years of age. He formerly lived between Hamilton and Butler. The last reports were that he was still unconscious. Owing to his advanced age little hope is held for his recovery.

A Cure for the Blues.

Have you ever met with the man or woman who is a victim of the blues? They feel that fate is against them. They worry and stew about imaginary ills until life becomes a burden.

Many a man has made a business failure and given up in dispair all because he had the blues.

We should not consider such conditions lightly, for there is a deep secret underlying every case of the blues.

The person whose physical condition is normal, is optemistic: adversities only make them more cautious and more determined to succeed.

If the liver is not acting properly the system becomes full of poisonous accumulations, the kidneys and the stomach and intestinal glands become suggish and a general debilitateed and nervous condition exists.

The blood becomes impure, the circulation sluggish and the brain clouded.

GLANDO is the best remedy for the blues. It is a general gland tonic that starts up the glandular action, drives off the accumulated poisons and builds up the system. A 50 cent package contains three seperate treatments, each treatment having a specific part to perform in effecting a cure.

For sale by All Druggists.

Glass of Hot Water Before Breakfast a Splendid Habit

Open sluices of the system each morning and wash away the poisonous, stagnant matter.

Those of us who are accustomed to feel dull and heavy when we arise; splitting headache, stuffy from a cold, foul tongue, nasty breath, acid stomach, lame back, can, instead, both look and feel as fresh as a daisy always by washing the poisons and toxins from the body with phosphated hot water each morning.

We should drink, before breakfast, a glass of real hot water with a teaspoonful of limestone phosphate in it to flush from the stomach, liver, kidneys and ten yards of bowels the previous day's indigestible waste, sour bile and poisonous toxins; thus cleansing, sweetening and purifying the entire alimentary tract before putting more food into the stomach.

The action of limestone phosphate and hot water on an empty stomach is wonderfully invigorating. It cleans out all the sour fermentations, gases, waste and acidity and gives one a splendid appetite for breakfast and it is said to be but a little while until the roses begin to appear in the cheeks. A quarter pound of limestone phosphate will cost very little at the drug store, but is sufficient to make anyone who is bothered with biliousness, constipation, stomach trouble or rheumatism a real enthusiast on the subject of internal sanitation. Try it and you are assured that you will look better and feel better in every way shortly.

GRANDMA USED SAGE TEA TO DARKEN HAIR

She mixed Sulphur with it to Restore Color, Gloss, Youthfulness.

Common garden sage brewed into a heavy tea with sulphur added, will turn gray, streaked and faded hair beautifully dark and luxuriant. Just a few applications will prove a revelation if your hair is fading, streaked or gray. Mixing the Sage Tea and Sulphur recipe at home, though, is troublesome. An easier way is to get a 50-cent bottle of Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound at any drug store all ready for use. This is the old time recipe improved by the addition of other ingredients.

While wispy, gray, faded hair is not sinful, we all desire to retain our youthful appearance and attractiveness. By darkening your hair with Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound, no one can tell, because it does it so naturally, so evenly. You just dampen a sponge or soft brush with it and draw this through your hair, taking one small strand at a time; by morning all gray hairs have disappeared, and, after another application or two, your hair becomes beautifully dark, glossy, soft and luxuriant.

This preparation is a delightful toilet requisite and is not intended for the cure, mitigation or prevention of disease.

SALTS IF KIDNEYS OR BLADDER BOTHER

Harmless to flush Kidneys and neutralize irritating acids—Splendid for system.

Kidney and Bladder weakness result from uric acid, says a noted authority. The kidneys filter this acid from the blood and pass it on to the bladder, where it often remains to irritate and inflame, causing a burning, scalding sensation, or setting up an irritation at the neck of the bladder, obliging you to seek relief two or three times during the night. The sufferer is in constant dread, the water passes sometimes with a scalding sensation and is very profuse; again, there is difficulty in avoiding it.

Bladder weakness, most folks call it, because they can't control urination. While it is extremely annoying and sometimes very painful, this is really one of the most simple ailments to overcome. Get about four ounces of Jad Salts from your pharmacist and take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast, continue this for two or three days. This will neutralize the acids in the urine so it no longer is a source of irritation to the bladder and urinary organs which then act normally again.

Jad Salts is inexpensive, harmless, and is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and is used by thousands of folks who are subject to urinary disorders caused by uric acid irritation. Jad Salts is splendid for kidneys and causes no bad effects whatever.

Here you have a pleasant, effervescent lithia-water drink, which quickly relieves bladder trouble.

Buy your next writing tablet and package of envelopes at this office.

Are You in Need of Cement?
WABASH PORTLAND CEMENT
Is Best For Sidewalks, Foundations, Floors, Walls, Concrete Blocks, Bridges, Etc.
Look for the Turkey on Every Bag You Buy
WABASH PORTLAND CEMENT CO.
General Offices, Detroit, Mich. Works, Stroh, Indiana
Mrs. L. W. STEWARD, Spencerville, Indiana.

APRIL

L 908

0129

WE WELCOME

LARGE&SMALL DEPOSITS

Your Business Is never too large for us to handle successfully, or too small for us to appreciate. The small depositors receive the same courteous attention as the large depositors.

EVERY CUSTOMER A BOOSTER

That's why we want your account. We want you to tell your friends and neighbors. They need a good BANK also, and all will be benefited.

Farmers & Merchants State Bank

Capital Stock $25,000.00

Spencerville, - - - Indiana

SPENCERVILLE

Otis Geoltzenleuchtner and wife, and Mrs. Anna Boger, of Auburn, spent Easter with Gust Heffner and wife.

The Misses Jessie Steward, and Ada and Florence Markle were Easter guests of their grandparents, Samuel Markle and Jerry Markle and wives.

The Ladies Guild of the M. E. Church will be entertained at the home of Mrs. Louie Beam, Thursday afternoon, she will be assisted by the Mesdames Baltzer Koontz and Nancy Rummel.

Rev. J. C. Valentine will preach on next Sunday at Meese Chapel at 10:30 a. m.; at Grove Bethel at 3:00 p. m.; and at this place at 7:30 p. m.

Miss Mary Henderson, while witnessing the ball game, Friday, had the misfortune to be hit with the ball on her ear, which knocked her down. She has been suffering intense pain but is a little better at this writing.

$1.00 Ladies Dresses at Beams & Co., store. They are the latest patterns and you can't afford to be wanting a dress at this price. They are selling fast.

The Forget-me-not Club was entertained at the home of Mrs. Geo. Henderson, Saturday afternoon, in a social meeting. A dainty luncheon was served to the members and one guest, Mrs. Rebecca Kirst.

The Percheron Horse

LORAINE

No. 32,798

Enrollment No. 2,950

FEES $10

W. H. Moore, Owner-Keeper

The Belgian Horse

CLARENCE

Enrollment No. 4194

FEES $10

A. B. DWYER, Owner.
W. H. MOORE, Keeper.

Care will be taken to avoid accidents but will not be responsible should any occur. These horses will make the season at

Archie Beam Barn,
22 Barn Phone, 950-3
Spencerville.

Slide in the $1.00. Do it now.

J. C. Vallieu and wife entertained on Easter, Ross and Mamie Bair.

The little son of Lee Chapman and wife is quite sick with lung fever.

Sherman Barr, of Pueblo, Colo., visited his sister, Mrs. Cora Steward and family, Saturday and Sunday.

Jason Keyes and wife, of Fort Wayne, spent Easter with the latter's son, William Allen and family.

Miss Bertha Wasson, of Fort Wayne, is visiting her aunt, Mrs. Bert Wasson, west of town, a few days.

Mrs. Pauline Murray and daughter Golden, spent Easter the guests of Mrs. Maude Brown and family, of Ft. Wayne.

Ernest Velhezen and wife, of Huntington; Clyde Hemrick and wife, and L. O. Hemrick and wife, of Ft. Wayne, were Easter guests of Frank Butler and wife, south of town.

New spring oxfords for Ladies, Misses and Children—Just in at Beams & Co., store, in patent leathe- and gun metal.

George Kimes and wife returned home Saturday from Pleasant Lake where they attended the funeral of Mrs. Kimes's neice, Mrs. Konkle.

Greatly reduced prices on Shoes and Oxfords. You can't afford to be without, at the prices we are quoting. BEAMS & CO.

The High School gave a short program in the early part of the evening on Friday night in the Grammar Room which was followed by a pie social and a gen'al good time was enjoyed until a late hour. A neat sum of $30 was realized. Many young people from St. Joe and Coburntown were present.

The C C Club were entertained on Saturday afternoon at the home of Mrs. Myrtle Beams. The club had the honor of having with them their bride-to-be, Miss Jennie Steward, who will become the bride of Roscoe Walters, of Laport, to which the Ladies presented a handsome set of silver teaspoons. The house was beautifully decorated with yellow and white ducks and chickens in honor of Easter. Contests were enjoyed and a prize was won by Miss Arminta Steward. The hostess served a two-course luncheon to 25 members and 5 guests, who were as follows:-Mrs. Ort Wearley, Mrs. Ernest Steward, Miss Ida Reed, of near Auburn; Mrs. Rebecca Beams and Miss Helen Lake.

George Jenkins and wife, Mrs. Mary Jane Silberg and sons, Walter and Frank, and daughter Vera, George Beams and family, and Golden Benninghoff, of this place, and Mrs. Mattie Bowman and daughter Helen, of St. Joe, motored to LaOtto on Easter and visited Perry Miller and wife, of that place.

Send in your news items.

A $5 Vacuum and Sweeper for $3.95 at Beams & Co., store.

Rev. J. C. Valentine and son Elvin, called on Rev. A. H. Backus at Butler, Thursday.

Wall Miller, Jack Beams and Bert Fischer are owners of new Ford cars bought last week of John Lantz, of Leo.

Joel Betz and wife, and George Betz and family were Sunday dinner guests of Samuel Betz and family, of Springfield Center.

Mrs. A. K. Vander and daughters, Eleanor and Jean, of Detroit, Mich., are guests for the week of the Rev. and Mrs. A. K. Mumma and family.

TOP DRESSING PAYS IN GREATER YIELDS

Professor Bell Points Out Results Obtained Through Efforts to Increase Quantity Per Acre With Wheat.

PROFIT IN SPRING TREATMENT

Tiny Wheat Plants Require Liberal Supply of Readily Available Plant food for Vigorous Growth—Assists in Withstanding Insects and Plant Diseases.

(By Prof. Henry G. Bell, Agronomist Soil Improvement Committee of the National Fertilizer Association.)

Wheat is a high-priced crop and every bushel counts. After your wheat is planted you can't increase your acreage. And anyhow it's more profitable to increase your per acre yield 15 to 50 per cent than to make a proportionate increase in your acreage. Adding six to ten bushels per acre to your yields this season will make the crop a more profitable one. Wheat is a crop on which the expenditure of a little more money than usual will pay big.

Every season hundreds of wheat fields are planted on poor seed beds. Extreme late planting, poor seed and the ravages of insects are responsible for many light yields. Thousands of acres do not receive a sufficient amount of plant food to produce even an average yield. Many fields come through the winter weak and thin. Others will look strong and vigorous. No matter how good the prospect, you want a better one; you want more bushels per acre than you ever raised on your farm. Immediate action on your part, as outlined in this article, will help make more bushels per acre and put more money in your pocket.

Roll the wheat as soon as it will bear a team this spring. Follow this rolling immediately with a light harrowing. If you have a harrow with adjustable teeth, throw the teeth back at an angle of 45 degrees and harrow the field, going back and forth, parallel with the wheat rows. This harrowing will not injure the wheat roots, but will break up the crust and make a surface mulch. This surface mulch will prevent much evaporation and save thousands of barrels of water.

Plantfood Makes Crops.

The tiny wheat plant must have special nourishment. It must have a liberal supply of readily available plantfood of the right kind to maintain it in vigorous growth. This vigorous growth, which is the direct result of the addition of available plantfood, frequently enables the crop to withstand the ravages of both insects and plant diseases which so often cut down wheat yields. Big crops demand enormous quantities of plantfood. The biggest help you can give your wheat crop is to apply a top dressing of 100 to 300 pounds per acre of fertilizer, analyzing 2 to 4 per cent ammonia, 8 to 12 per cent available phosphoric acid, and 2 to 3 per cent potash.

Choosing Silver

Artistic designs, correct style, brilliant finish, combined with honest value, make

1847 ROGERS BROS.

silverware the choice of discriminating purchasers. This name to-day stands for the heaviest grade of plate and exquisite beauty of patterns, assuring long years of service and satisfaction. Its remarkable durability has won it the popular title

"Silver Plate that Wears."

Sold by leading dealers everywhere. Send for catalogue "CL," showing all patterns.

International Silver Co., Successor to Meriden Britannia Co., Meriden, Conn.

Wall Paper

this year is a bad proposition for most dealers when it comes to the question of color, but here you will find a sample line that can't be beaten anywhere.

With the Spring Housecleaning Necessities we suggest the use of Smoky City Wall Paper Cleaner and our Household Paints would help out the looks of that wood work wonderfully. Come and see our line.

* * *

SPRAYING!

Scalecide—That's the spraying material to use. 1 gallon of spray to 15 gallons of water. Full instruction given. We handle in gallon size only. There is nothing better for your fruit trees and besides it is so easy to fix—try it now is the time.

Golden Murray,

SPENCERVILLE, IND.

Mrs. Berdein Beams entertained a number of her friends, last week, at a bridal shower in honor of Miss Jennie Steward, who is to be a bride (April 26). The decorations were beautiful in a white and yellow Easter effect. The fore part of the evening was given to the game of progressive hearts and guessing contests. The winners of prizes were Mesdames Hazel Steward, Maude Beams and Myrtle Beams. The ladies in turn presented their prizes to the bride elect. The hostess served a dainty two-course lunch, after which a beautifully decorated and mysteriously covered basket was brought forth. Each guest, excepting the bride-to-be, selected a ribbon and drew from the basket a small bag of rice with which she was showered. Her ribbon was fastened to the basket which was filled with beautiful presents, the gifts of her friends. Those present were the Misses Jennie and Arminta Steward, and Golden Murray, and the Mesdames Elsie Fischer, Audrey Wade, Hazel Steward, Princess Rectenwal, Maude Beams, Myrtle Beams, Rose Beams and Fanny Beams.

A large crowd attended the last day of school exercises, Friday afternoon. The Intermediate Room taught by Miss Vera Silberg, and the Primary Room taught by Miss Jennie Steward, co-operated and had a fine program in the Intermediate room, which was as follows:—Mother Goose Songs, Primary Room; Recitation, Ada Bowser; Recitation, David Mumma; Dialogue, "Dot Entertains", Garnett Beams and Charles Furnish; Recitation, Gale Bowser; Motion Song, by thirteen little girls, "Mud Pies"; Recitation, Kenneth Vallieu; Recitation, with ten dolls, Cloe Fell; Recitation, Nellie Scott; Solo, Doris Beams; Recitation, Vivian Quisenberry; Recitation, Doris Rhoudes; Recitation, Beatrice Wasson; Recitation, Bertha Wasson; Song, "School Bells" by the Primary room, which was followed by a play in four acts, entitled "Elma, the Fairy Child" by the Intermediate room.

The Ladies Aid of the Lutheran Church and friends were entertained on last Wednesday afternoon at the home of Mrs. A. K. Mumma. The order of the meeting was changed and the following program was carried out:—The meeting was opened by a Piano Duet by the Misses Leone Widderfield and Jean Mumma; Song by the Ladies; Scripture Reading by the President, Mrs. Lizzie Wearley, followed by prayer by Rev. A. K. Mumma; after which a piano solo was rendered by Little Miss Eleanor Vauder, of Detroit, followed by a piano duet by Leone Widderfield and Jean Mumma; this was followed by a play entitled, "How the Story Grew", by eight ladies, who were Mrs. A. K. Mumma as Mrs. Green, Mrs. Claude Heffner—Mrs. Snow, Mrs. Lizzie Wearley—Mrs. Brown, Mrs. Rose Beams—Mrs. Taylor, Mrs. Georgia Jenkins—Mrs. Doolittle, Mrs. Myrtle Beams—Mrs. White, Mrs. Thornburg—Mrs. Bean; and this was followed by music on the piano. A dainty luncheon was served by the hostess after which a social hour was enjoyed.

A Home Guard.

Every family should be provided with a good, safe and reliable cough remedy. Coughs, croup and colds often come on very suddenly and it is of the greatest importance that they be treated promptly. You can best guard your home by getting three ounces of Pynine to which you add thirteen ounces of syrup and you will have a cough remedy which is second to none. It is highly recommended for hacking coughs as well as bronchial and lung affections.

You can feel it open up the air passages and cells of the lungs. Makes you breathe easy. Children love to take it. Directions accompany each bottle. Price 50 cents. For sale by All Druggists.

Mrs Frank Hull and two daughters, of Auburn Junction, were guests of Hillary Shuff and wife, and Frank Millimans', over Sunday.

Frank W. Silberg
Veterinarian

OFFICE and HOSPITAL
—ON—
Main Street
SPENCERVILLE, - IND.
Phones—Office No. 7
(18) Residence No. 101

Dr. H. R. Farnham
MEDICINE AND GENERAL SURGERY
ST. JOE, INDIANA

Office Hours—Week Day
10:00 to 11:00 a. m.
1:00 to 3:00 p. m.
6:30 to 8:00 p. m.
Sunday—By appointment.
Telephone
Office, ...No. 2

Office at Residence. Second house west of Widney Opera House.

H. C. Hathaway

TRUSTEE
Concord Township

Office Day Thursday's of Each week in Town Hall, St. Joe.

S. S. Widney
Justice of the Peace
Insurance and Real Estate
Phone No. 10
ST. JOE, - - - IND

How's This?

We offer One Hundred Dollars Reward for any case of Catarrh that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure.

F. J. CHENEY & CO., Toledo, O.

We, the undersigned, have known F. J. Cheney for the last 15 years, and believe him perfectly honorable in all business transactions and financially able to carry out any obligations made by his firm.

NATIONAL BANK OF COMMERCE, Toledo, O.

Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. Testimonials sent free. Price 75 cents per bottle. Sold by all Druggists.

Take Hall's Family Pills for constipation.

HOW "TIZ" HELPS SORE, TIRED FEET

Good-bye sore feet, burning feet, swollen feet, sweaty feet, smelling feet, tired feet.

Good-bye corns, callouses, bunions and raw spots. No more shoe tightness, no more limping with pain or drawing up your face in agony. "TIZ" is magical, acts right off. "TIZ" draws out all the poisonous exudations which puff up the feet. Use "TIZ" and forget your foot misery. Ah! how comfortable your feet feel. Get a 25 cent box of "TIZ" now at any druggist or department store. Don't suffer. Have good feet, glad feet, feet that never swell, never hurt, never get tired. A year's foot comfort guaranteed or money refunded.

Some Time

You will be in need of printing of some kind. Whether it be letterheads, statements wedding invitations or public sale bills, remember we can turn out the work at the lowest cost consistent with good work.

Lehman's

CLOTHING HOUSE

ESTABLISHED 1887

MENS AND BOYS OUTFITTERS

808-810 CALHOUN STREET

BEN LEHMAN PROP.

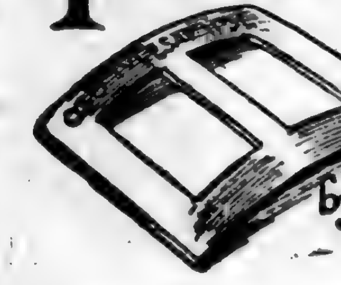
Fort Wayne, Ind.

APRIL

L 908

0130

THE BLUE BUCKLE



by William Hamilton Osborne

CHAPTER I.—Criag Rutherford, a New York athlete and club man, is returning to New York on the Gothic. He becomes deeply interested in a Mrs. Talcott, a beautiful girl with an elderly husband. He also meets Helderman, an eccentric financier, whom he instinctively dislikes. News is received that a $50,000 necklace has been smuggled aboard ship, and that secret service men are trying to locate it. Suspicion points to the Talcotts.

CHAPTER II. — Rutherford also meets Irene Arany, a woman of mystery, who, by a ruse, and for some hidden reason, makes his acquaintance. Mrs. Talcott is attacked in a passageway of the ship by a man who tries to snatch the blue buckle she wears. Craig rescues her, wondering why anyone should want to steal so cheap an ornament. Later he scares away two men who are trying to break into her stateroom.

CHAPTER III. — Rutherford, on Helderman's invitation, meets the financier in the royal suite, where he sees a woman, supposedly Mrs. Talcott.

CHAPTER IV.—On reaching New York Mrs. Talcott seeks Rutherford's protection, and he accompanies her to her home in West Tenth St.

CHAPTER V.—Several mysterious happenings, including the finding of the diamond necklace and the blue buckle in his pocket lead Rutherford to believe that Mrs. Talcott is an adventuress. He learns that her name is really Ballantyne, and that "Talcott" is her father. She gives Rutherford the blue buckle to keep safely for her.

"Gone, as you saw," she answered.

"I mean Mr. Talcott and the others?"

"Since they have frightened the thieves away, what does it matter?" she asked.

"No, it doesn't matter!' he replied bitterly. "I am to be used as a pawn it seems—but never trusted!"

"Here," she said simply, rising and giving him the jewels; "and this."

She had drawn forth the blue buckle and laid it in his open hand beside the necklace. 'Will you take care of it for me?" she said wistfully. "It may mean more to me than my own life. You see how I trust you!"

"I shall care for it and guard it—with my life, if necessary!" he said, pressing the bit of blue steel to his lips.

"And, Mr. Rutherford—I—I think I ought to tell you one more thing. My name is not Talcott, really."

"You are not Mrs. Talcott?" he cried.

"No, my name is Ballantyne."

"And Mr. Talcott?"

"His name is Ballantyne, too—but he is—just my father!"

CHAPTER VI.

Mademoiselle Arany Calls

Three hours later Rutherford was seated comfortably in one of the big leather arm-chairs at the Barristers' Club on Forty-fourth street. He was chatting with an old time friend and schoolmate, a man with round, clean-shaven face, ruddy cheeks and shrewd, bright eyes, who seemed immensely interested in his conversation.

Monty Brookfield was an Assistant District-Attorney, just now in the exact storm centre of one of those police investigations which seem to stir up New York periodicaly. But, busy or not, he always presented an appearance of unruffled calm. and always had time to serve a friend—especially when that friend was Craig Rutherford. Craig had just told him the story of the diamonds. Brookfield in turn had telephoned to the United States Secret Service.

In less than half an hour after a quiet business-like man presented himself.

"Hello, Crowder," said Brookfield genially. "You are just the man I need to settle a bit. My friend here thinks he knows what a secret service man looks like—and I have assured him that he doesn't. Mr. Rutherford, I want you to shake hands with Mr. Crowder, one of the real ones!"

Rutherford arose and extended his hand. The officer was about to grasp it, when at the moment his eye caught sight of the necklace left exposed upon the table. His jaw half dropped and he entirely forgot the greeting palm.

"Whose property is that?" demanded Crowder.

Craig repeated his story.

"No such mesage was sent," denied Crowder as Craig mentioned the "wireless" that Helderman had read.

"It was read to me by another man," Craig replied.

"Who was the man with you?"

"Helderman, of Wall street."

Crowder's lips shut tight, but he made no observation.

"There were two secret service men on board—at least, I thought they were," continued Craig; "and they made life miserable for all the rest of the passengers by overhauling things"—

"Mr. Rutherford, the whole thing is absurd. There were no secret service men on board that ship—and if there had been, those are not their methods. I kow, because the very first intelligence of it came direct to headquarters only last night!"

Rutherford whistled.

Crowder smiled in a superior sort of a way. "Would it change your views if I told you something rather startling, Mr. Rutherford. What would you say if I told you that Helderman was not a passenger on board the Gothic?"

"But he was," said Craig.

"He was not," returned Crowder, positively. "He was not on board the Gothic. He was here present in New York."

"What," cried Rutherford. "Here in New York—for the past week. What makes you think so?"

"Because," said Crowder, "I have seen him every night—every night, mind you—for the past ten days, and so have half a dozen other men."

"Who are they?" queried Craig.

"Night watchmen," said Crowder, "patrolling the Drive. Every night we have seen Helderman—the real Helderman—through the windows of his house. I know the real Helderman when I see him. You can't fool me about that. And for ten days at least —for I've been reckoning him up for at least that time—he has been home every night."

"Reckoning him up," repeated Craig.

"Shadowing him," said Crowder, "if it will suit you better."

"What for?" asked Craig.

Crowder shrugged his shoulders. "To tell you the whole truth, Mr. Rutherford," he said, "I don't know why. I'm acting under orders. There is a big mystery connected with this man Helderman, and I'm told to keep him more or less in sight. That's how I know that he's been here in New York. That's how I know he was not on the Gothic."

Craig returned home. He had not been in his apartment hotel rooms an hour when a message from the office desk told him that a lady had just called. Puzzled, he ordered that she be sent up to his apartment. A moment later she appeared.

Without a word he closed the door and flashed on the light. The girl who stood before him was not Miss Ballantyne, but Mlle. Arany, whose dress he had untangled from the desk chair, on board the Gothic.

Rutherford bowed.

"Monsieur, I have reason to believe that you have in your possession"—

"A diamond necklace?"

"No, Monsieur, I know of no necklace."

She paused, with the first trace of embarrassment she had shown during the interview. As he said nothing, she continued slowly:

"I have reason to believe that you have in your possession—a blue buckle."

"Can you not give me some description of it, so that I may know what you have in mind?" he replied cautiously.

An envelope from which he had lately extracted a letter lay upon the table near her. She seized it and began, with a gold pencil, to sketch an outline rapidly upon the white reverse side. Rutherford followed her with absorbed attention. The buckle—their buckle—began to appear under the deft strokes of the artist, and finally stood complete, with one important omission, before his eyes.

"There—is that it?" she asked, watching him.

He knit his brows, but gave no sign of recognition.

She placed a slender, gloved finger along the upper and lower edge of the sketch.

"Was there anything—a pattern, or letters, along here?" she persisted.

The woman must be a wizard to divine so much! How she could know in the first place, that he had the buckle at all amazed him.

"If there is—I shall see," he replied slowly.

Mlle. Arany took her pencil again and carefully sketched in the letters:

O X B I V I E S A F I P S E

"That's a queer jargon," he commented, as though it were quite new to him.

Following a plan he had conceived, he arose and went into a smaller room adjoining his sitting room—a sort of den, in which stood a small desk and a safe just beside it. He could see, without appearing to turn, that she had stepped silently in line with the door and was gazing curiously into this room. The light shone through the door, revealing the safe plainly.

Craig opened its heavy door, and seemed to examine something within it uncertainly. He picked up a small object and returned to the front room with it in his closed hand.

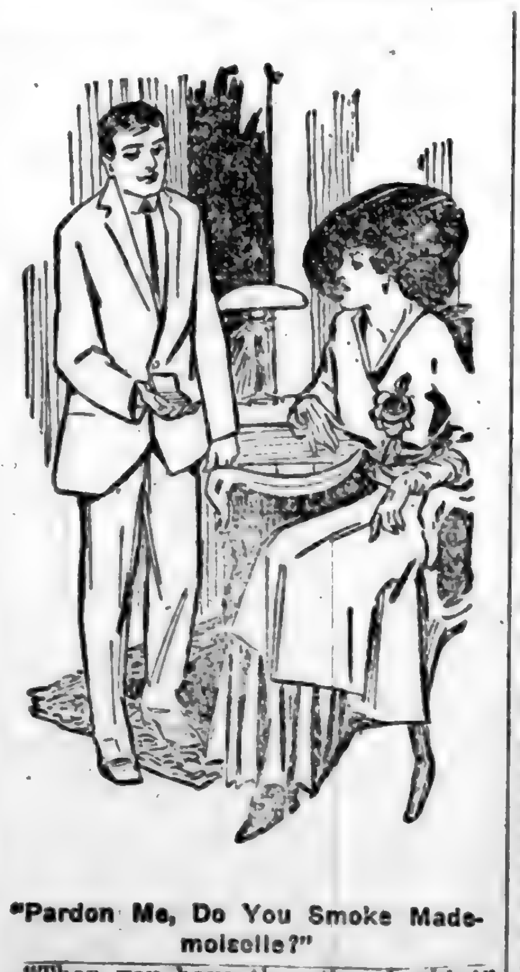
Mademoiselle Arany had retreated to her former place, and now looked up with an appearance of languid interest; but the quick dilation of her nostrils showed him how keenly she was interested in his next move.

"Pardon me—do you smoke, Mademoiselle?" he asked, opening his hand.

Ie contained a package of cigarettes.

The woman sprang up. "You are trifling with me!" she exclaimed indignantly.

"Not at all," he answered with an appearance of candor. "But I did not find just exactly the buckle you seek."



"Pardon Me, Do You Smoke Mademoiselle?"

"Then you have the other buckle!" she exclaimed.

It was again his turn to be surprised, but he masked it under a show of indifference.

"There are two buckles?" he asked.

"I believe so," she answered, biting her lip. "If I might see yours and compare"—

"What is the inscription on the other one?"

She saw that she was beaten; and as she swept out of the room, eyes flashing scorn and vexation, she snapped out—

"If I knew that, I shouldn't have called!"

Craig stood, pondering, after she had gone. Something in her tones stirred memories within him. Where had he heard just that tone of voice before and when?

Suddenly it came to him—a woman's voice, wafted down the wind—at mid night, on the Gothic—"Nowhere are they safe.......nowhere, do you understand? ——"

Who were "they"—why were "they" not "safe?"

Craig sighed and gave it up. It was just a mystery along with other mysteries.

CHAPTER VII.

Rutherford was amused at the angry exit of his visitor. She was too warmly beautiful in her rage to be regarded with sternness.

"She wants that buckle," he reflected; "now I wonder why! And the fact that there are two of them makes it rather interesting. Two women—two buckles. The women of the same general type, to outward appearance—the buckles evidently identical, save for a bit of jargon scrawled upon them!"

The telephone rang. The men at the wire at this end was Helderman. He asked if Mr. Rutherford could dine with him that evening. Craig accepted. Dressing, he hurried out and hailed a taxi.

"Corner of Riverside Drive and West —— street!" he cried to the chauffeur as he climbed into the cab.

There, on one of the most commandink knolls of the stately drive, stood a great cube of white marble, simple and stately, in a wide expanse of lawn that spoke with simple eloquence of the wealth which could annex so much valuable real estate.

"There's Helderman! That's him, sure!" exclaimed the chauffeur, as he held the door open for his passenger to alight.

There, indeed, was Helderman, plainly visible from the curb. Rutherford smiled as he saw him move across a room, with his peculiar, jerky stride. His smile changed to wonder as he watched.

Helderman stood still. He was as distinctly visible to the two watchers on the sidewalk as if he were standing in the lawn, in broad daylight, instead of in an artificially lighted room. The effect was startling. The next moment, Craig realized that almost the whole front side of the room in which the banker moved about must be a huge, plate-glass window!

Rutherford moved toward the gate. A slight sound behind him caused him to stop and turn suddenly. A man about fifteen paces back of him also stopped and hailed Craig by name.

It was Crowder, the secret service man.

"Crowder, who is that man in there?"

"That's Helderman," said Crowder. "Now you see the difference, don't you?"

"As how?" queried Craig.

"The difference," went on Crowder, "between the real Helderman in there and the fake Helderman that you saw on the Gothic."

Craig laughed. "That's the man, Crowder, that I saw upon the Gothic. Every move he makes, every twitch of his shoulders, every tilt of his chin —every little nervous trick he has. All those belong to the man upon the Gothic."

"Helderman was right there in that room for the last ten nights," said Crowder.

They had moved forward until they stood before the gate of Helderman's place.

"Goodnight, Crowder," said Rutherford.

"You're going in?"

"Yes, Mr. Helderman asked me to call this evening."

"That accounts for it!" the officer exclaimed.

"For what?"

"Dogs are not loose tonight. Good-evening, Mr. Rutherford."

Crowder glanced ahead into the shadows, and moved off quickly as if he saw some one. Rutherford pushed the button under the lion's head. Almost at once the gate swung open.

The doorbell had hardly sounded faintly to his touch when a man in livery opened the door.

"Mr. Rutherford," announced Craig.

"Mr. Helderman expects you, sir. Will you please be seated."

As he spoke, a deep growl punctuated the man's formal request—so did the rattling of chains.

"You needn't be uneasy, sir," said the butler. "They are securely fastened."

Craig peered in the shadowy spaces of the great hall, but saw nothing. He rose and moved forward a few steps, and stopped short. The hoarse, rumbling protest which greeted him was too positive to be disregarded. He saw something moving, and gradually by the dim light filtering down from a dozen beautiful but unilluminating lamps of Japanese bronze, he made out the sprawling figures of two huge beasts, lying with stretched necks upon a dais covered with tiger skins. They were tugging at their chains; and he approached them with some feeling of security.

Massive Great Danes they were. An animal lover, he knew the gentle nature of such dogs when not on guard. He neared them, believing they were stretching their necks for a caress.

He had extended a hand to touch one, when both animals leaped up viciously, and the nearest all but seized his hand. With great, gaunt, slavering jaws wide open, they tugged and writhed in unmistakably vicious rage. Craig sprang back just in time, and at a safe distance heard the rattle of the heavy chains with considerable satisfaction. Up and down leaped the beasts, howling, and seemed to focus in their evil eyes all the light that fell from the lamps of bronze.

Helderman at the drawing room door met his guest.

"Ah, this is kind!" the financier exclaimed. "I am more than glad to see you! Come in. I shall take you to my sanctum, where I admit few. I cannot have my thoughts disturbed, my mental-housekeeping put out of order, by the presence or the memory of the presence of those who are—well, not to the manner born. Have you ever noticed that the entire atmosphere of a room, its tone, you might say, can be spoiled for a day, for a week, for all time, by the admission of some foreign element? Rooms are as sensitive as persons!"

Craig glanced around this room which he had already seen from the outside and was silent.

"Simple, isn't it?" the banker observed, noticing his lack of response.

"Very," Rutherford acquiesced.

"I would build a glass house, if I could," said Helderman.

"It would limit your stone-throwing privileges," observed Rutherford.

"Not at all. It would be like fighting in the open, where I would have just as good chance to aim as the other fellow. I fancy in a give-and-take fight I can hold my own!"

"Sit here," he said abruptly, "and don't move. I want to show you the power of mind over matter!"

Without waiting for his guest to reply, Helderman rose and walked into the hall. The clank of chains was heard and the sullen growls of dogs.

Then Helderman backed rapidly into the room, shouting in a warning tone:

"Do not move as you value your life!"

Into the bare white chamber, their gaunt, powerful bodies hurled forward like catapults, leaped the Great Danes. Straight at Craig they charged, as though he were quarry thrown to their mercy. Craig sat still and scarcely breathed. Was Helderman going to let them spring upon him? It was unbelievable.

Craig sat as if fascinated. It was only for a moment, but the mental agony was unspeakable. Another leap and the huge beasts would be upon him, would pin him to the floor.

Helderman lifted his bare hand as though he brandished a whip. He spoke one word.

Craig had witnessed animals, even wild ones, made fearful by the power of a single will; but never before had he beheld such an exhibition of abject terror as now struck these two dogs. Down they sank, shivering and whining to the floor. They crawled upon their bellies up to their master, and licked his feet. Then, under a gesture that seemed to hurt them like a lash, they crawled through the open door.

Helderman immediately closed it and turned to Rutherford.

"I hope you didn't mind my dogs."

Oh, not at all!" replied Craig. "I am used to surprises. Seeing you again has brought freshly to mind that little episode with the wireless, in which you and I figured," he added, to change the subject.

"Yes, yes! I recall it now. It was about a message the little operator would not sell for good money. I read it though!"

"Are you—sure?"

"Perfectly!" the banker responded, looking at him quickly. "It was about a smuggled necklace."

"Then it may surprise you to know that I left the ship with that necklace in my outside pocket."

"By Jove! This is great! You the smuggler! You, with your clean, upstanding look of innocence! Clever boy."

"You misunderstand me. I gave it up to the government."

"What!"

"Why not? It's perfectly safe with them, isn't it?"

"Yes—but how about your friend, the smuggler?" rejoined Helderman facetiously.

"I haven't the remotest notion who that person is."

"Not even a suspicion, I suppose," said Helderman sourly. "Well, I'm older and less beauty-blinded than you and I can guess."

"We must meet again, Mr. Rutherford," said Helderman with sauve courtesy, as Craig rose to go at the evening's end. "In business, perhaps —I am not without influence in that world, even if the ladies find me less interesting than others we might mention—in business I may be of service to you. Command me, please."

"Thank you; we probably shall meet—in the business world," replied Rutherford.

As he reached the door he glanced toward the useless little balcony on the wall over the fireplace.

"Does that unique place serve as a kennel for your dogs?" he asked.

Helderman laughed.

"This is my one mistake in this house. I proposed to have a desk up there out of the way, but I was abroad at the time, and the architects hung the thing there without arranging a way to reach it. I have left it because of its quaint railing. It's a treasure of carving from an old church in Italy. The railing is now an excuse for the balcony!"

Craig entered the dimly-lighted hall —then stopped short.

Against the gorgeous curtain on the landing, under the soft glow of the Oriental lamp, a slender figure in a white evening gown stood out as though framed. A light scarf shrouded the hair, and a dark cloak had slipped half off and was trailing down from one shoulder. The features were indistinct, but Craig's eyes were caught and held by the crystal fringes on the hem, that shimmered and glistened in the light. He had seen the moonlight gleaming upon them, on a certain memorable night at sea.

He whirled about quickly, in time to see that Helderman was also regarding the statuesque figure with a frown.

"An elderly cousin presides over my household," replied Helderman. "She evidently has a caller this evening."

Craig walked mechanically along the Drive, his brain in a whirl. "Deceived again! Deceived again!" a dozen spiteful imps seemed to be saying to him.

Here was the girl, whom to know was to trust, calling as a favored guest at the home of an utterly unscrupulous man. The thought galled him.

Suddenly he stopped and faced about. He might wait and see when the girl came away—whether she was coming or not.

His abrupt stop seemed to act like a barrier to two men who had been walking quietly behind him. One of them involuntarily edged into the shadow of the fence; the other moved on with a show of unconcern. They were following him.

Just then a cab came along. Craig hailed it and leaped in.

CHAPTER VIII.

The New Valet

Craig's valet had recently married and left him. He engaged a new one, Mike Gooley by name, whose jolly honesty impressed him. Craig was eager to get to work; to learn for himself the workings of the bank he owned. He broached this subject to Ferguson, the bank's cashier. Returning one day from the bank he encountered Mike at the apartment door.

the man.

"Very well, sor. There was two men here today. They wanted me to do them a bit of a favor, sor. They wanted a peep at the insides of your safe, sor."

"What?"

"Yis, sor; and they offered me a fiver for the look."

"Did they get it?"

"Not for a fiver, sor. They see me indignation, and tney made it fifty."

"Did they get it for that?"

"It still wasn't enough, sor," Gooley replied; and between master and man flashed a look of understanding.

"Tell me about it, Mike," said Craig sitting down.

The man did so, describing his visitors with a wealth of humorous and telling detail which left no doubt in Craig's mind of the identity of the men.

"All right, Mike. The next time they come around—for they will be around!—you just make them come down handsomely."

In the evening Craig returned from a dinner with two or three friends to find Gooley standing guard on the outside of the door, with his finger on his lips.

"Do they come, Mike?" he asked.

"No, sor. But there is a gentleman and a lady in there, sor. I said you was expected back soon, and they said they would wait."

"We'll have more light," he observed quickly, and stepped over to the switch which controlled the side lights.

The illumniation brought his two callers into sharp relief. They were the Ballantynes.

"Mr. Rutherford, I wish to apologize, first of all, for this informal visit," said Ballantyne, with the quiet self-possession of a man of the world.

"What can I do for you, Mr. Ballantyne?" he asked, purposely using the man's right name.

It appeared to pass unnoted by the man addressed.

"Mr. Rutherford," he began hesitatingly, "it may seem strange to you that I should ask a favor from a comparative stranger—"

"I call smuggling about the crookedest business in which a man can engage!" asserted Rutherford. "And I want to say, once for all, that I am tired of being used in any such way!"

"Why, you don't think we were smuggling that old steel buckle, do you?" cried Miss Ballantyne.

"Your father knows what I'm talking about," answered Craig, continuing to glare. "I mean the diamond necklace."

"Diamond necklace?" repeated Ballantyne, with every appearance of surprise. "I know nothing of a diamond necklace."

"For all these years—as long as I have lived," interposed the daughter, "my father has not been able to defend himself. But now that the man who wronged him is dead, we hope that he can again take his rightful place in the world."

"Who was this other man?" prompted Craig, as the girl hesitated.

"It was his own brother. They had been in business together—and my father had—done something to displease my uncle. In revenge, my uncle—the man who is dead—robbed him of his money and—worse still—his reputation. He made it appear that my father had absconded."

"What had your father done to anger his brother?" agaings prompted Craig, not unkindly, but determined to get at the facts.

"He had won the love of a woman his brother also loved," seh replied in a low voice. 'While they were traveling abroad, my uncle Gregory falsified the accounts in their business and wove such a chain of circumstantial evidence that my father could not return for fear of arrest. He had to assume another name—that of Talcott. Oh, he didn't intend to live that way always"—she hurried on, noting Craig's look of incredulity—"he has been working and hoping some day to clear his name. But he could not, while his brother lived."

"You mean that Gregory Ballantyne swindled your father out of everything?"

"Everything—but the blue buckle."

"What can you mean?" he exclaimed. "The buckle has no value."

"It is worth a million dollars, we believe," she answered quietly. "Better still, it is worth my father's good name—if we can find its mate."

"There were two buckles then?" asked Craig, too incredulous to trust himself with further comment.

"Mr. Rutherford, sentiment is responsible for a good many things in this world. Yes, there are two. The pair of old steel buckles has been an heirloom in our family; they originally acquired a sort of fictitious value because of sentiment. They were on the slippers of the first American Ballantyne grandma, when Capt. Ballantyne of the Virginia colony met and courted her. They have been passed down from generation to generation, until my own grandmother wore them as her most cherished possesion. They would have been worn by my mother —had she lived."

Miss Ballantyne paused a moment, and her father gently stroked her hand.

"When my father and his brother quarrelled my grandfather was still living, but my father's disgrace shortened his days. My grandfother was a very rich man, who had a horror of family quarrels, and he could not bear that any one should injure the family name. Why, years ago our family were close friends and neighbors with Washington's!" She drew herself up proudly. "And so my grandfather left his fortune in trust—my father being unable to obtain his portion until he had cleared his name. The only clew to the place where he had deposited this fortune lay in the pair of steel buckles, one of which he willed to my father and the other to my uncle Gregory. So you see that the buckles have a value quite apart from mere sentiment!"

"You got your buckle, then?" asked Rutherford, addressing Mr. Ballantyne.

"Yes. It was in trust in a bank in Paris, while my brother's was in a New York bank. I claimed it a month after I had been driven from home by Gregory. I went for it with the highest hope that it might be accompanied by something more tangible—something that would aid me in establishing my innocence. But there was nothing except the buckle."

"How could that possibly aid you?"

"There is an inscription—we think it indicates the whereabouts of the money—but each buckle contains only half of it. One is useles without the other," Miss Ballantyne explained.

"Sentiment again," smiled Mr. Ballantyne. "My father probably supposed that my brother and I would make up our differences, if for no other reason than to secure the fortune. His intention was thwarted. It was a part of Gregory's revenge that he should get his own buckle and keep it, so that I might never know the other half of the inscription. Even if he had been poor, the thought of my exile, of the disgrace and poverty he had heaped upon me, would probably have been food and warmth to him.

"It is only since Greogory's death, a few months ago, that the way has been opened," continued Ballantyne.

"The other buckles—" Craig began.

"We have come to America to find it!" exclaimed the girl.

"Some one else seems to be looking for it, also," said Craig casually.

Father and daughter sprang up in consternation.

"Who?"

"A Mademoiselle Arany, who crossed over with us on the Gothic, came to see me about it."

(Continued next week.)

Silent neighbors make a desirable neighborhood.

It's the easiest thing in the world for a timid girl to fool a man into believing that she will let him have his own way after they face the parson.

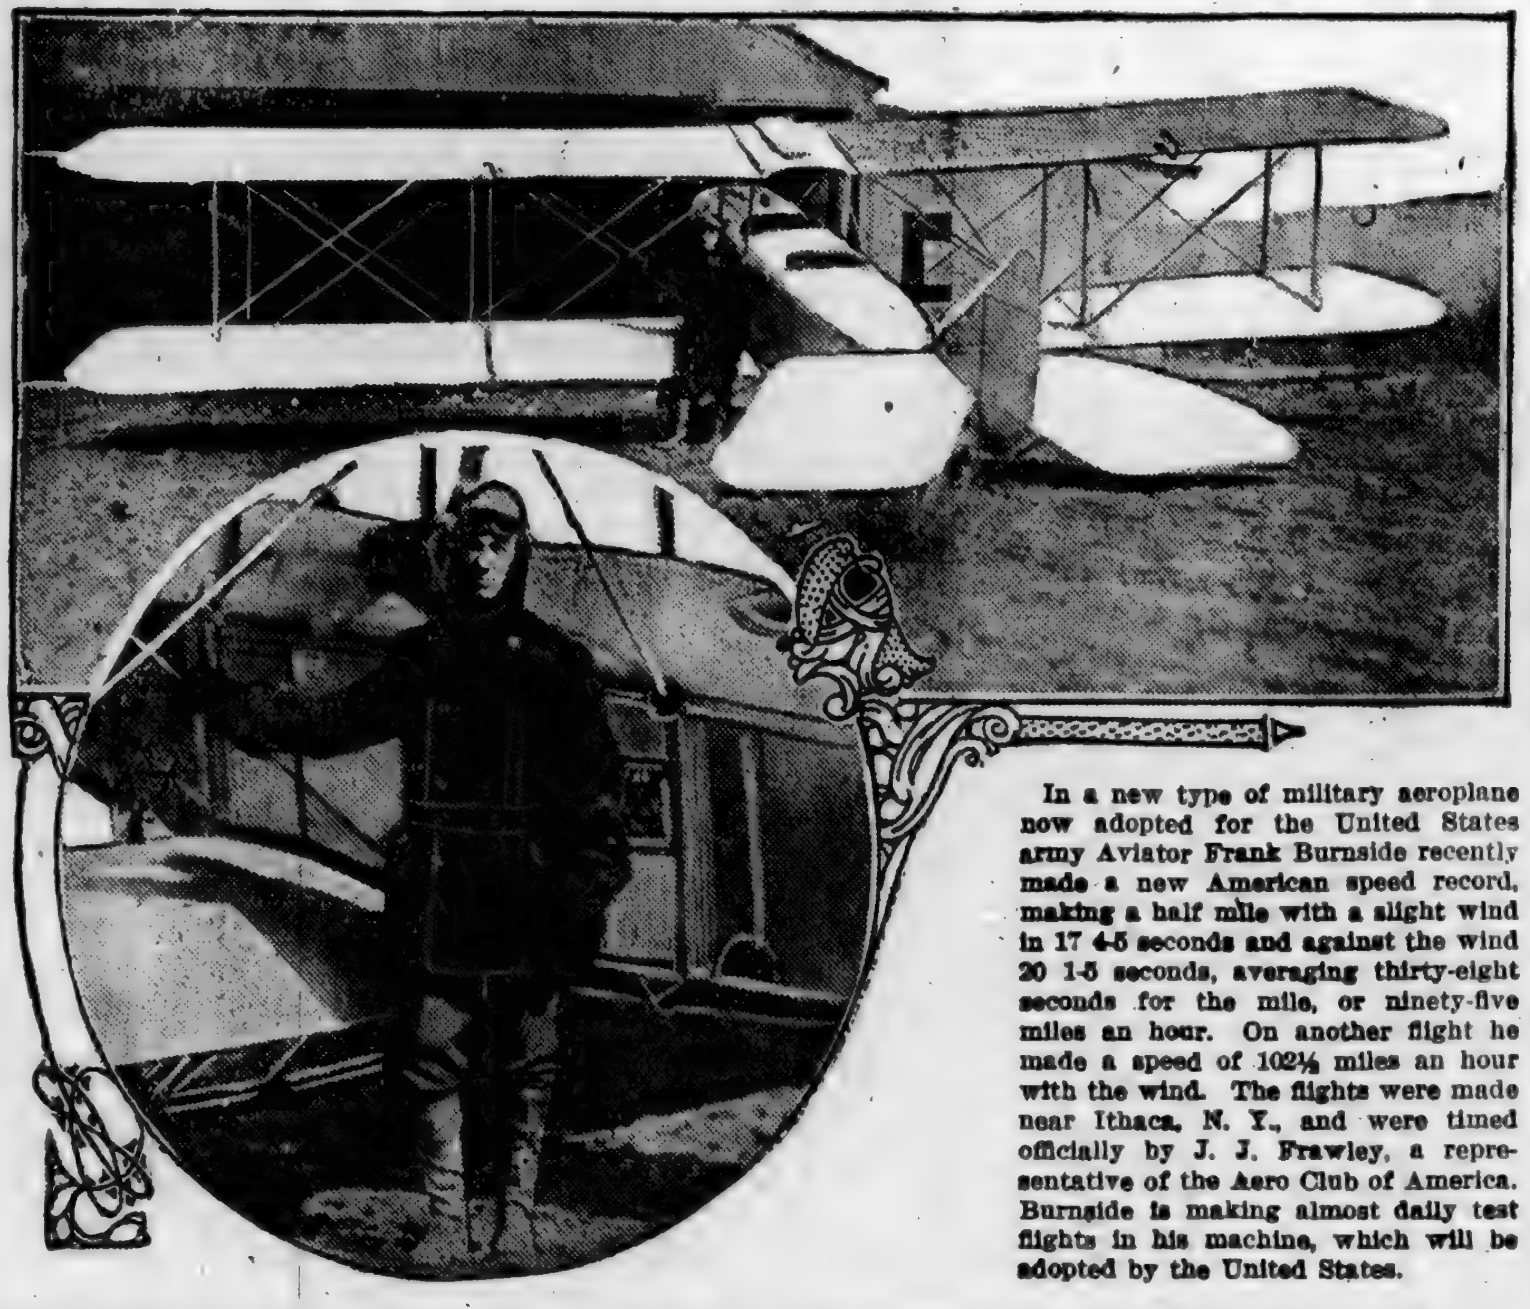
The Publisher's Co-Operative Co.
440 So. Dearborn St. CHICAGO 17-16

APRIL

L 908

0131

NEW MILITARY AERO BREAKS SPEED RECORD



In a new type of military aeroplane now adopted for the United States army Aviator Frank Burnside recently made a new American speed record, making a half mile with a slight wind in 17 4-5 seconds and against the wind 20 1-5 seconds, averaging thirty-eight seconds for the mile, or ninety-five miles an hour. On another flight he made a speed of 102⅛ miles an hour with the wind. The flights were made near Ithaca, N. Y., and were timed officially by J. J. Frawley, a representative of the Aero Club of America. Burnside is making almost daily test flights in his machine, which will be adopted by the United States.

GREEKS FIND RARE GEMS

WORKMEN DIGGING AT SCHOOL OF TIRYNS ADD TO ARCHEOLOGICAL TREASURES

FIVE HUNDRED GOLD BEADS

Ring of Gold as Large as a Small Egg With Goddess Sitting on Throne Engraved thereon

Athens—Some of the most important archeological discoveries of the past generation have been made around the ancient City of Tiryns, which according to one legend, was the birthplace of Hercules. The walls of the city are ascribed to the Cyclops and earlier excavations there have unearthed some remarkable examples of Cyclopean architecture.

A number of workmen digging at the Greek Agricultural School, some 50 yards beyond the walls of the ancient city, recently came upon some copper fragments, evidently of very early date. The work was promptly stopped and a guard placed over the spot until Prof. Arvanitopoulos could be called from Athens to direct the excavation.

On the arrival of the eminent Greek archeologist, the work was conducted with the utmost care. The first discovery was a perfectly preserved cauldron, near which was a copper tripod, in excellent state of conservation, bearing base reliefs of animals and birds—a rare piece. In rapid order followed a huge supper plaque, three copper handles, three great swords, two copper brooches and some fragments of Mycenian pottery.

The copper cauldron was full of earth and Prof. Arvanitopoulos sifted it out carefully. Here he made his great find—some golden beads, evidently belonging to a valuable collar, some little gold plaques studded with jewels, some wires of gold and a large ring engraved to depict a round boat upon which are several passengers about to land; four men and women on shore are shown coming out of a doorway to meet the travelers.

Prof. Arvanitopoulos pronounced the ring most interesting and valuable from an archeological point of view, as well as intrinsically. There was also a gold wheel some five inches in diameter, with heads of amber as spokes. Prof. Arvanitopoulos believes that this was used as a hair ornament, worn on the temples.

In addition to the 500 gold beads and gold wires upon which they may have been strung, together with a number of little gold plaques which may also have belonged to the collar, four more gold rings were found, but simpler than the engraved one; several pieces of conical money, also gold; a considerable assortment of beads of amber as well as of some softer matter and a tube bearing hieroglyphs.

The chief treasure however, was another ring of gold, as large as a small egg, the engraving on the plaques of which presents a goddess seated on a throne, to whom four lions are bearing offerings; behind the goddess is a tree on the branches of which a bird is perched, and behind the tree the horison is indicated, with both sun and moon shown in the vicinity of an Homeric architrave.

The copper cauldron with its precious contents, was found near the ruins of some huts dating from 1300 B. C., and it is thought that the articles buried in the cauldron are of that period. Continuing his investigations in the same neighborhood, Prof. Arvanitopoulos deposited his ruined temple of the Sixth or Fifth Century B. C., as well as a tomb in the shape of a vault in which he is now engaged in making even more valuable discoveries than that of the copper cauldron and its treasure. In the presence of the King and Queen of Greece and the Princess Helen, Prof. Arvanitopoulos deposited his golden treasures in the museum at Athens.

HAS RESERVOIR OF CIDER

Farmer Keeps It From Fermenting in Paraffin Cistern.

Princeton, Ind.—Albert F. Dougan has a 185 barrel cistern brimming full of good apple cider on his farm four miles southwest of Princeton. Handicapped by lack of barrels and the immensity of his apple crop, Mr. Dougan had a huge cistern constructed.

It was well lined with concrete and a heavy coating of paraffin was placed over the concrete, while a regular cistern pump, new and clean, fitted closely over the top. Then he started making cider with his big mill, a pipe carrying the cider from the press directly into the cistern, where the paraffin coating keeps the apple juice fresh and prevents fermentation.

BURNED BY RED HOT RIVET

Man Seared From Neck to Hip by the Bounding Metal.

Altoona, Pa.—A red hot rivet thrown from a furnace to Charles N. McCarl in the P. R. R. shops here, struck the edge of the bucket in which he was catching the rivets, bounded and dropped down the back of his neck, searing a scarred patch from head to hip. The rivet burned its way out thru his trousers.

COURT CUTS HIS BEER MONEY

Tells Wife to Allow Him 10 Cents a Day Instead of 50 Cents.

New York—Ten cents a day for beer is enough for any working man, Recorder William J. Cain of Bayonne, N. J., decided when Frank Zenkewscy of 285 Avenue B was arraigned on complaint of his wife, Josephine, that he did not properly support her. He testified he gave her $42 every two weeks.

"Yes, but out of this he makes me give him 50 cents a day for beer so you can see how much I have left," the wife protested.

"Allow him but 10 cents a day for his beer in the future. That is enough for him or any other working man to spend for beer," the Recorder ruled.

Cockerel Steals Diamond

New London, Conn.—Lloyd Hallenbeck of Greendale, N. Y. had a diamond stolen from his scarf pin while acting as judge at a poultry show here the thief being a cockerel in a pen of Rhode Island Reds on exhibition. Hallenbeck values the stone at $100.

The cockerel attracted by the sparkle of the gem as Hallenbeck stood close to the pen removed the stone from its setting with a well directed jab of its beak and swallowed it.

As the owner of the diamond does not know which of the exhibits has his jewel it may be necessary to kill a number of them to find the right one, a proceeding which, it is said, promises complications with the owner of the poultry.

Robin Carries Love Note

Penn Yan, N. Y.—Harry Putman, a bank clerk found a robin sitting on the roof of one of his poultry houses. As the bird made no particular effort to fly, Putnam stealthily sneaked up and caught it. He found tied to one of its legs a bit of paper. On it was written: "Miss Beatrice Hinman, 1132 Pennsylvania Avenue, Washington, D. C." A very thin film was folded with the bit of paper.

When held to the light it reveals the portrait of a very pretty girl. Under the address was written an invitation to address the writer, "if the finder is under 30, single and good looking."

CLUB WOMEN IN N. Y. SMOKE

PERMITTED IN EVERY ROOM, BUT ONE, FORMER ORDER BEING REVERSED

CHANGES IN THREE SHORT YEARS

In Blue Haze of Cigarette Smoke Members Discuss Great Reforms of the Day

New York—Times are changing, and step by step woman is climbing to a plane of equality with man. True she didn't get the vote yet, but the vote is not all. There are other things in life. For instance there are cigarettes.

The day was, and not so long ago, when women's clubs frowned on the habit of smoking—frowned publicly, at least. Doesn't everyone remember how the entire city, yea nation, was shocked when it was announced that the Colony Club had installed a smoking room in its building on Madison avenue? And when it was rumored that the new building of the Women's University Club, erected a short two years ago, was to have a den for members who enjoy the fragrant weed what a shudder there was! No one who doesn't belong to the club, in fact has ever succeeded in locating that mysterious smoking room.

When the Gamut Club took its new quarters on West Forty-sixth street, the actresses who form the organization bound reporters by a stern oath not to reveal the fact that smoking is permitted there. Miss Anne Morgan's Vacation Fund restaurant was nearly ruined at the start by a plan to permit smoking and the plan was promptly quashed. That was three short years ago.

Now at the Woman's City Club just organized and installed on the eighteenth floor of the Hotel Vanderbilt there isn't one smoking room, but every room is a smoking room, and a few members with tender throats who have made an humble appeal for a room, where women may not smoke, are afraid that they are going to be refused.

Miss Majorie Driscoll, who was asked to come and manage the Women's City Club because she is an expert on clubs and municipal politics, having been doing secretarial work at the Men's City Club for more years than one would think from her blond and youthful face, said that she had no patience with one who harbored any prejudice against women smoking.

"No one has expressed such a prejudice here," she remarked in her office on the nineteenth floor. "I should hope not! A few women who say the smoke tickles their throats have fussed a little and I did have a fleeting thought of setting aside the little room that opens from my office and naming it non-smoking room."

She indicated a pretty little room, furnished with deep couches and chairs, with a pensive chintz stork perching on the back of each.

"I was rather inclined to do it because it's a nuisance to have women coming up here to smoke—they take my matches and ash tray. I do believe they've got it now. Oh, no here it is." She rescued the smoking outfit from behind a filing cabinet and proceeded:

"You know, I've been so used to real politics, real life in the men's City Club, that this seems like playhouse to me. But the Women's City Club will grow, will develop, and one good thing about it is that the house committee has made absolutely no rules. I hesitate to take the conservative step of installing a non-smoking room."

On the eighteenth floor in the crimson and mahogany dining room, in the mauve restroom, the round table, in fact, in every apartment quite little parties of women were gathered, and from most of them rose the blue haze of cigarette smoke. The ways that are popularly supposed to accompany cigarette smoking in women were not there.

In the quietest of voices the smokers were discussing prison reform, pure milk, better schools, clean streets and the various objects to help which the Women's City Club was formed. Several men were there, for Mrs. Marcus M. Marks and the rest of the 900 members frequently bring their husbands and brothers in to luncheon and dinner. And the men didn't seem to be the least bit shocked.

SEEKS TO PROLONG DURATION OF LIFE

U. S. Health Bureau Strives to Increase Longevity of Citizens

Washington—The United States public health service and the various health agencies of this country are working to prolong the average duration of life. In this they are obeying the desire for existence, which is the strongest instinct of mankind.

Only a small proportion of the human race rounds out its tour of duty on this earth. Some people are born with good bodies which they treat well. Barring accidents they live a long time.

Some people are born with poor bodies which they treat well. Barring accidents they can live to a ripe old age.

Some people are born with good bodies which they treat badly, and some people are born with poor bodies which they treat badly. They don't last long.

It is recorded that in Yorkshire in 1501 Henry Jenkins was born. He died in 1670, cut off at the age of 169. He remembered well the battle of Flodden Field. This occurred in 1513, when he was 12.

The register of chancery and other courts show the administration of oaths to him 140 years prior to his death. He gave deposition as witness when he was 157. In his young manhood, when he was a little over 100, he was a remarkable swimmer.

The term "old age" too frequently is another name for the falling due of the debts of youth. Overeating, overdrinking, overplaying, overworking, these are drafts on the bank of nature which sooner or later must be met.

Sometimes the day of reckoning can be put off a little bit, but Dame Nature will not be wheedled out of her claim.

The remarkable thing about Henry Jenkins is the fact that he has left behind him no rules of living which would enable one to duplicate his feat.

As a matter of fact, there is no royal road to old age, and it is not to be attained by a particular dietary or regimen of life.

Perhaps the best rule may be expressed in one word, "Moderation." Moderation in food, moderation in drink, moderation in the joys and worries of life, moderation in work, moderation in recreation, equanimity of the mind, the soul and the body. These make the long tenure of life.

CAT GOES 600 MILES IN WHEEL

Goes to Sleep on Inside Rim and Spins Around Nine Hours.

Hartington, Neb.—A kitten crawled inside the rim of a big flywheel at the Great Northern Mills and fell asleep. The mill pet was unnoticed and the giant machinery was set in motion. The wheel whirred about with the kitten inside for nine hours, held to its perilous position by the running of the wheels.

The kitten was still alive when the machinery was stopped for the night. It was estimated it had traveled 600 miles.

MEN ARE TO LIVE 3,000 YEARS

So We are Told by Optimistic Yale Scientist.

Washington, D. C.—Professor Irving Fisher of Yale told the Pan American Scientific Congress that experiments in prolonging cell life indicated that sooner or later Methuselah and his long lived companions may be made to look like young pikers beside the young men of two or three thousand years who will be developed in the future

HE'S KIND TO DUMB ANIMALS

But Loving Old Horse Is Even More Affectionate than His Master.

Holmes, Ohio—Lafayette Linn of this township is kind to dumb animals and they return his love. He went into the stall to feed his horse and the loving horse rubbed up against him like a cat, squeezing him against the side of the stall and dislocating two of his ribs, report friends of Linn.

Two men trying to entertain one woman constitute a fair example of a silent majority.

Investigations made by the department of agriculture indicate that the average cost of raising a heifer on a dairy farm in the northern and eastern sections is about $61 at the end of her second year; this includes an allowance of $7.31 for labor. The heifer is given a credit of $8 for the manure she produces. Thus it appears that the dairy farmer in the sections mentioned can not afford to raise a heifer that is not worth more than $60 when two years old.

WOULD CUT COST WOMAN'S DRESS

STANDARDIZED GARMENT PLANNED BY HOME ECONOMICS DEPARTMENT, MO. UNIVERSITY

HEALTH CONDITIONS GREAT FACTOR

Variations in Proposed Attire Shown Only in Fabric and Color

Columbia, Mo.—That the elimination of competition, the reduction of expense and the promotion of hygienic conditions in women's clothing depends upon the adoption of a standardized dress for women, is the idea followed by the department of home economics of the University of Missouri at Columbia, in devising a standardized garment. The new dress is intended for all women on all occasions variations coming only in fabric and color.

The present style of women's dress on a competitive basis, produces an enormous annual waste, both by frequent changes and added material, says Miss Ethel Ronzone, who designed the standardized dress. Women spend much time not only in selecting garments, but in making over those that are no longer appropriate on account of changes in popular style. Dress is woman's stock in trade, used to show pecuniary standing and sex attraction under present conditions, Miss Ronzone says.

Hygienic conditions are considered as well as economy in the dress designed by the instructor at M. U. In design it is a two piece garment, with the skirt suspended by an undervest to prevent compression at the waist. The skirt is of four pieces, about 2 1-2 to 3 yards around the bottom and reaching within 4 1-2 to 6 inches of the floor.

The waist is a modified form of the Russian blouse, hanging straight with a very loose belt or with the fullness gathered in a belt and the lower part cut in the form of a peplum. It is simple and easy to make, and one can be cut by any woman with a fair knowledge of sewing, Miss Ronzone says.

The standardized dress is not radically unlike the prevailing styles in appearance. Almost every girl in the sewing and clothing classes has made one or more of the standardized dresses and many of the girls and all of the instructors wear them. It is certain that the women of the home economics department cannot be readily recognized by their clothes.

HAS A CURIOUS DOLLAR BILL

Owner Desirous of Learning Something of its Origin.

New Augusta, Ind.—D. E. Howard of this place is the possessor of a very peculiar dollar bill. The date of the bill he is unable to make out, but it has George Washington's and Martha's picture on one side, on the other the Constitution of the United States; also names of twenty-three noted men, each name having a wreath around it. These names are: Longfellow, Sherman, Lincoln, Irving, Cooper, Fulton Calhoun, Clay, Jackson, Adams, Jefferson, Franklin, Hamilton, Perry, Marshall, Webster, Morse, Hawthorne, Bancroft, Grant, Farragut, Emerson.

Owner would be glad to hear from any one who can supply any information concerning this curious bill, which has been in his possession ten years.

Don't forget that a few beets, turnips or cabbage mixed with the regular rations of the dairy herd on wintry days will do much toward taking the place of the juicy grazing the animals relished so much in the summer when they filled the milk pail to overflowing.

CAT PUTS OUT CITY LIGHTS

Escaping from Dog Feline Short Circuits Electric Wires

Winchester, Ky.—The town of Mt. Sterling was in total darkness for several hours, and a house cat was the cause.

Light for Winchester and Mt. Sterling is furnished by a central power plant at Lexington. When the lights suddenly went out at Mt. Sterling a trouble crew left here, and after several hours of dilligent search discovered the dead feline burned to the pole and entangled in the wires, making a cross circuit.

It is supposed the cat was seeking safety at the top of the pole from a dog that had "treed" it.

SHE MADE SOAP; NOT SOUP

And There's a Difference, as Members of the Family Will Testify.

Richmond, Ind.—Merriweather Harrowtooth and his family south of here are gradually recovering from the effects of a new dish Mrs. Harrowtooth made. She read "farmers' soup" from the cookbook, but it turned out after all the folk had eaten it, that what she made was "farmers' soap."

CLOCK WINDS ITSELF

Accurate Timekeeper Governed by Weights Runs Continuously.

Designed so that it does not require winding, a novel clock which is said to keep very cacurate time has recently been invented by a Californian. Its mechanism is controlled by an ingenious system of weights and the propulsion power gained by allowing the instrument to roll slowly down an 8 inch incline. This short journey is completed in thirty days, when, instead of being wound the clock is returned to the top of the incline. The cylindrical case of the instrument revolves while the dial remains in its normal position with the figure twelve at the top. The hands are moved and the rolling of the clock controlled by the arrangement of weights in the interior of the case.—Popular Mechanics.

Wires: "Go to the Poorhouse."

St. Johns, Mich.—"Am loose. Where shall I go." Frederick Travis wired his father when "fired" from college. The father telegraphed back, "Go to the poorhouse." Frederick did.

It is said that G. Washington was so opposed to lying in any form that he refused to establish a weather bureau during his administration.

Don't feed out all the clover to the cows. Save a nice lot for the sheep. They will get as much good out of it as any animal on the farm.

When a sheep gets unruly, the best thing to do is to make a trip to the meat man's, and take as your passenger that trying sheep.

If any sheep or lamb is heard coughing, put it by itself and give special care and treatment. Find the cause and remove it.

It pays to fuss a little with the cows, and they relish a little change in diet with some dainties added, as well as we do.

If you would get good returns from poultry, keep them in a good warm house in winter and feed them well.

Because sheep have warm coats, it does not follow that they can be exposed to wet and storms.

With a good stool to hold up the pail you can rest at milking time, after a hard day's work.

Pigs are not protected from cold by warm coats of hair, and suffer greatly if exposed.

Turn the colts in the yard every day for exercise.

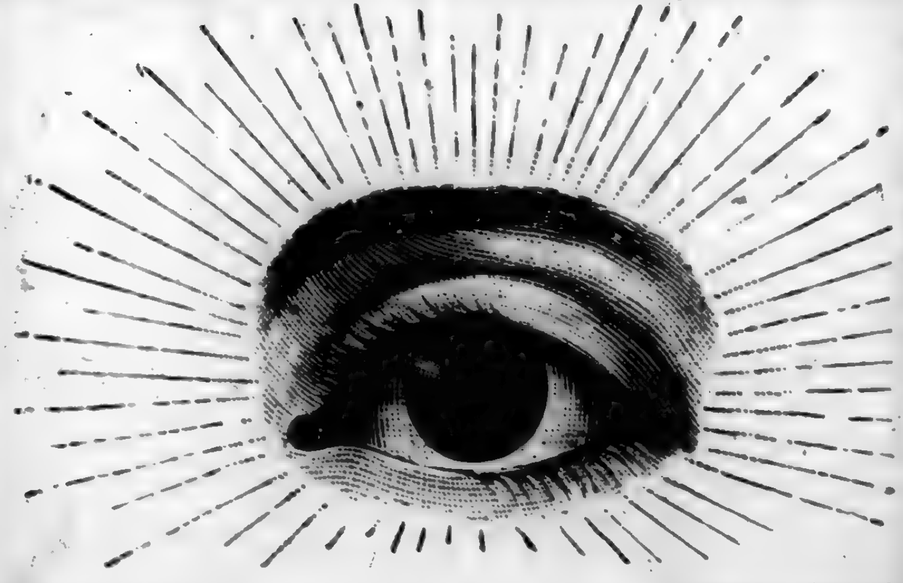
THE Country Home Weekly Newspaper is eagerly sought, and in passing from hand to hand of the entire family, is reasonably sure to give returns to the advertiser.

This paper fills the bill—
The bills fill the till:
Get that?

APRIL

L 908

0132



Eyes tested ______ Glasses Fitted

At Dr. Farhnam's Office,
THURSDAY, MAY 4
EARL FRISBIE, Opt. BUTLER, INDIANA

F. P. HART
"The Expert"
House Mover
—AND—
Building Raiser

Concrete Work of all kinds finished in the best shape with the least expense.

Call or write

THE GREATEST HEALTH INSURANCE IN THE WORLD

T. P. Taylor, Prominent Louisville Druggist, Makes Interesting Statement

T. P. TAYLOR

"The greatest health insurance in the world is the simplest," he said. "I never could quite understand why people are so negligent in the use of the simplest of all preventives of illness. It's all a matter of keeping the bowels open. The man who carries a little box of Rexall Orderlies has got a good health policy in his pocket. I believe they are the best laxative ever prepared, and their pleasant taste appeals to men, women and children alike."

We have the exclusive selling rights for this great laxative.

H. L. DUNKLE
THE REXALL STORE

For EXPERT
Auto Repairing
and Painting
GO TO
CAMPBELL & SON
AUBURN, IND.

Satisfaction guaranteed.

Our Painter and Mechanic are high class workman.

Special attention will be given to your Electrical equipment and Magneto work

We also charge storage batteries.

Get Our Prices.

Patronize
the merchants who advertise in this paper. They will treat you right.

COLETOWN

Carl Ott from Minnesota and W E. Martin called on Fred Martins' Saturday afternoon

Lester Piermans' spent Sunday at Emmit Ginthers'.

Twenty-six of the high school pupils of Hicksville, were entertained at the home of R. H. Conine, Friday evening

Elmer Inlow and family Sundayed at Jay Harts'.

Arthur Hemrick took dinner Sunday with Wm. Sowers and family.

J. S Kain and family, and Louis Robertson, wife and little daughter Lenore, were Sunday guests of W. E. Jackson and family. Mrs. Wm. Craig and daughter Mamie, and Irving Ginther were callers in the evening.

Fred Martin and family took dinner Sunday with W. E. Martins'.

Mrs. E. S. Ginther, son Irving, and daughter Marie, called on W. E. Jacksons', Tuesday evening.

SPENCERVILLE R. F. D. NO. 2

Born to Earl Stiman and wife, a bouncing girl, last Tuesday evening.

Miss Grace Cook took dinner with Mary Comeskey, last Sunday.

The scholars over East presented their school drivers, Hort Squiers and Mr. Asku, each with neckties and handkerchiefs.

Miss Elsie Oberholtzer, of Butler, visited a few days with her cousin, Miss Ethel Soule.

Ort Wearley and wife, of Akron, Ohio, visited last week with his parents, G. W. Wearley and wife.

Mildred and Victor King were Easter guests of Delphia and Harold Beam.

Geo. Squier and wife, of Garrett, are visiting with Elmer Smith and wife.

Chas Wann and wife, of South Woods; and Joe Shumaker, of Jackson, Mich., were Sunday guests of Chas. Gibbons and wife.

Mrs. Schuller, of Baltimore, O.; Mrs. Geo. Cunningham, and Paul Teagarden and wife, of Ft. Wayne, were Easter guests of C. M. Wearley and wife.

Mrs. Eva Mills, of Fremont, Ind., spent over Sunday with her parents, W. O. Miller and wife.

Roy, Cleo and Ada Bowser spent Sunday with John Koch and family.

Miss Ethel Johnson and gentleman friend, of Union Chaple, were Sunday guests of Chas. Haifley and wife.

Mrs. Rebecca Kirst spent Thursday evening with Mrs. George Howey. Mrs. Florence Kimes was a caller Saturday evening.

Ira Smith and wife, Geo. Bauman and wife, Lois and Ira Smith, and Dewayne Squiers, were Easter guests of Wm. Smith and wife.

LOCAL ITEMS.

Subscribe for this paper.

FENCE 23c. per rod and up. Inquire for prices. P. A. SHURTS.

Geo. Kuisely, who has been running the section at Defiance the past month, now has extra gang at Rosedale.

Temperance

(Conducted by the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union.)

NO USE FOR IT IN FIVE YEARS.

A leading banker of Wisconsin vouches for the following incident:

Within the past year the managers of a brewery in one of the smaller cities of the state decided to build a new malt house at a cost of $25,000. They commissioned their president to go to Milwaukee and effect a loan. He naturally went to one of the big brewery-controlled banks of that city. The vice-president to whom he applied for the loan, was formerly in the brewing business and had made a handsome fortune in that business during the palmy days before the drys had begun to knock the big profits out of it. He very wisely got out of the business when the getting was good, not as now, when brewing stocks are all shot to pieces.

To the utter surprise and chagrin of the out-of-town brewer he was promptly refused the loan. He exclaimed: "What's the matter? With all this fine property we got, ain't we good for $25,000?"

Quick came the answer from the ex-brewer-banker: "But what do you want to use the $25,000 for?"

"To build a malt house, so we can enlarge our business," said the brewer.

"But, you fool, don't you know that in five years you will have no use whatever for a malt house?" replied the banker.

CAMPAIGN PLANS.

As part of the campaign program for the year the National W. C. T. U. has adopted the following: Increased activity of the Young People's branch in all lines of campaign work; the Loyal Temperance legion (children's branch) to have part in public meetings, demonstrations and parades; campaign institutes to be held in the interests of national constitutional prohibition at state capitals, also county institutes at county seats, for the education and inspiration of temperance workers and the general public; special campaign material furnished the newspapers by the W. C. T. U. bureau of publicity; parades, street meetings, medal contests, rallies and other public demonstrations to be held frequently, securing the co-operation of Sunday schools; circulation of the Sunday school petition for national constitutional prohibition to be urged; the relation of woman's ballot to the destruction of the liquor traffic emphasized; the use of posters and poster parades recommended, July 4 and October 12 designated as National Poster days; W. C. T. U. speakers to present in public addresses the status of and reasons for national constitutional prohibition and secure the indorsement of the joint resolution for it.

PLACARDS IN DRY PARADE.

"A beef joint beats a booze joint."

"The path of misery leads from the saloon door."

"You can't buy dry goods with money spent for wet goods."

"The cause of drunkenness is license; the cure is total abstinence."

"One home in four must furnish a boy for the saloon. What about your boy?"

"Chicago knows enough to come in out of the wet."

"We'll make the water wagon our jitney bus."

"A dry Chicago means a clean Chicago."

"Who gets your next pay envelope?"

"The saloon is the poor man's club that kicks him out after he has paid his dues."

"Nineteen dry states. Come on in Illinois! The water's fine."

"The last to be hired, the first to be fired—the boozer."

"Nothing to drink Sunday; clear head Monday."

"When you down booze, that is personal liberty; when booze downs you, that is slavery."

ADVICE TO UNCLE SAM.

There is a certain queer old book which was printed in England more than a hundred years ago called. "The Pleasant Art of Money-Catching." It contains this good advice: "First see that your comings-in be more than your layings-out." Suppose a man were taking ten thousand dollars a year over the counter of his store. That might seem big to him. But if he had to pay ten thousand and one dollars for stock and rent and help and fire, he would not be prospering, but failing. Uncle Sam does get a great deal of money from the liquor traffic. But he and we spend a very great deal more in caring for its victims. So this is bad business, and when enough people have found it out the liquor traffic will go. They are finding it out very fast. Everybody who has studied arithmetic can figure out the reason for national prohibition. It is a matter of dollars and cents.—Christine Tinling.

FARMERS FOR PROHIBITION.

The Farmers' National congress, assembled in Omaha for its thirty-fifth annual meeting, proclaimed the prohibition principles of the farmers of the country in the following message to the Nebraska dry convention then in session at Lincoln:

"The Farmers' National congress has for many years been on record as opposed to the legalizing of the liquor traffic. Our sympathies and efforts are with the convention for a dry Nebraska and a dry nation."

THE CITY OFFERS FEW ADVANTAGES

Chicago Banker Gives Some Sound Advice to Young Men and Women.

SHOWS RURAL OPPORTUNITY

Farmer Has Greater Possibility of Comfort in Old Age, With More Wholesome Pleasure and Real Cultivation.

(By FREDERICK H. RAWSON, President Union Trust Co., Chicago.)

UNLESS the young man is specially trained by education and practice for some particular kind of work to be found in the city, or has capital to be invested in some legitimate enterprise, he will be better off in the country or small town.

Cities are all overcrowded. Jobs in all ordinary lines of industry are scarce because there are generally more job-hunters than jobs. With so much competition for work, labor is cheap and wages are low.

It costs much more to live in the city than in the country. If a man receives low wages he must find shelter in low-class lodgings—crowded, dirty, garretlike places in poor neighborhoods where fresh air is at a premium and the constant noise maddening. He cannot buy good, nourishing food but must get along on what he can afford to buy. Consequently his health suffers. He cannot afford to buy clothing of good quality, so he must wear shoddy. He can save nothing out of small earnings, so sickness or any other emergency need for funds finds him in serious circumstances. And to live as he must live is a constant invitation to sickness.

City Pleasure False.

There seems to be an impression in the country that life in the city is one continual round of entertainment and pleasure. All such so-called pleasure is expensive and all of it becomes quickly tiresome. There is the saloon, the low-class moving picture show and the dive, as forms of entertainment not found in a majority of small towns. But in the city men who cannot afford better things have a tendency to drift to these places and get acquainted with people and habits that wreck character. City entertainment is false, artificial.

I have been up in the Dakotas quite a bit. I have found that farmers and small town people usually are better read than the average city person—better informed about worth-while things than I am. They get good newspapers and good magazines in the rural communities. They can hear the world's finest music on the phonograph. They get as much dramatic entertainment as the majority of city people get, for in every village and town there is at least one moving picture show. They are always within a few hours of the city's rush and bang, for the express train and electric interurban limited penetrate every corner of the nation.

The Unwary Girl.

And the young woman who wants to leave the old home town or the farm for the city? It is much harder for her to get along than for the young man. Wages for women in the industries are very low and jobs are scarce. Decent living conditions are beyond her reach unless she gets good pay. Pitfalls for the unwary or unfortunate young woman are everywhere.

Even if the girl must work as a domestic back in the home town she gets as much pay likely as she can get without special training in the city. Living conditions are healthful, physically and morally, in the rural community. Recently I watched a large crowd of girl workers enter a factory. Nearly every one wore those high French heeled shoes. I venture not one had a bank savings account. Suppose one of those girls gets sick, or the factory shuts down. What can [illegible] do?

The whole nation will be vastly better off when our young men and young women of the small towns—I include cities of ten thousand population in this description—decide to make the most of opportunity at home.

50 sheets of writing paper and 25 No. 1 rag envelopes for 10 cents at NEWS office.

YOU READ the Other Fellow's Ad

You are reading this one. That should convince you that advertising in these columns is a profitable proposition; that it will bring business to your store. The fact that the other fellow advertises is probably the reason he is getting more business than is falling to you. Would it not be well to give the other fellow a chance

To Read Your Ad in These Columns?

Farmers' Farmers'
NOTICE!
Scoville's Thoroughbred Registered
Imported Percheron Stallion

LANCIER No. 99,094-103,650

will stand this season at his Big Stock Farm, one mile east and one mile south of Butler. This prize winning stallion is five years old, weighs 2,040 pounds right now, is jet black with a star in the forehead, and is the finest and highest priced horse ever brought to this part of the country. Stands at $15.00. Colt insured to stand and suck. Both local and long distance phones at the farm. Call us up. Visitors welcome daily. Call and see our Registered Percheron Mares and this last years colts from this horse. You will find nothing better in the state.

Church Notes

M. P. Church Announcements.
J. C. Coons, Pastor.

St. Joe:—Sunday School, 9:00 a. m.; Preaching Services, 10:30 a especially. Christian Endeavor, 6:30 p. m.; Prayer Meeting, Thursday evening, 7:30 p. m.

Concord:—Sunday School, 9:00 a. m.

Fairview:—Sunday School, 9:00 a. m.; Preaching Services, 7:30 p. m.

Lutheran Church Announcements.
A. K. Mumma, Pastor.

St. Joe:—Sunday School, 9:00 a. m.; Preaching services 7:30 p. m.; Christian Endeavor, 6:30 p. m. Prayer Meeting, Thursday evening.

Christian Church Announcements.
St. Joe:—Bible School at 9 a. m.;

Miss Inez Hart was a dinner guests at the home of Mr. and Mrs. F. M. Thornton, Thursday evening.

Our Classified Ad Department

FreeColumn

All advertisements in this department are free to subscribers only. —EDITOR NEWS.]

For Sale:—Good quality Early Rose potatoes at $1.00 per bushel. Come quick if you want some of them.
Frank Millman, St. Joe, Ind., R. 1.

FOR SALE:—Durham cow, will be fresh in about 2 weeks. James Irvin.

2 nice furnished bedroom for rent. Mrs. Alice Warner.

FOR SALE:—Pekin duck eggs. Mrs. Robert Nicholls.

FOR SALE:—good Parlor Table. Will be sold cheap. Mrs. H. L. Dunkle.

I will sell 50-60 or 80 feet front and 264 feet deep, off of the south part of my acre. If interested see Mrs. W. R. Weirs.

For Sale:—Good driving horse, and buggy and harness in good condition.
Lloyd Coburn

FOR SALE:—Red Raspberry plants, 1c. apiece. C. A. WOODCOX.

POTATOES for sale:—$1.00 per bushel. Early Ohio, Early Rose, Early Patalka, Good Times Potatoes. A few bushels of small size ones of the above varieties at half-price. Also some Timothy Hay for sale. W. L. HALLABAUGH, St. Joe.

FOR SALE:—"True Early Rose" and "Irish Cobler" potatoes $1.00. Choice, pure and true to name seed. Only a few bushels left. DALE WIDNEY.

FOR SALE:—Good Folding Sewing Table. Cheap. Mrs. C. B. Leighty.

100 Per Cent.
INCREASED EARNINGS.

The following is fac-simile of certificate of Bond issued to each Depositor in this Bank.

No. ______ Grabill, Ind., ______ 19___

Mr. ______

THIS IS TO CERTIFY that your DEPOSITS in this bank are INSURED under a bond of THE AMERICAN GUARANTY COMPANY of Columbus, Ohio.

THE GRABILL STATE BANK.

PRESERVE THIS. By Albert Egly, Cashier.

Postal Savings pay 2 per cent. Interest and the money is placed in banks who have to furnish a Bond to the government to guarantee that the funds are safe in that Bank.

We pay 4 per cent. Interest and give you the same guarantee. An increased earning of 100 per cent.

THIS is the only Bank in this community thus insuring its depositors.

Total Assets, over $175,000

The Grabill State Bank
Established 1906

Joseph Witmer, President
David Klopfenstine, v. pres.
Albert Egly, Cashier
Joseph A. Grabill, Director
Peter W. Amstutz, Director
Julius Gehrig, Director
John B. Haifley, Chairman Board Directors

L 908

MAY

MAY

L 908

0134

Has Your Subscription Expired? Come in and renew it next time you are in town.

ST. JOE NEWS.

VOL. XXX

ST. JOE, DeKALB COUNTY INDIANA, THURSDAY MAY 4 1916

NO newspaper can succeed without advertising, therefore we solicit the patronage of our readers for those who by their advertising help to make this paper possible.

LOCAL ITEMS.

Subscribe for this paper.

Some red-horse are being caught in the river.

James Hamilton is quite poorly at this time.

O. H. Widney, of Auburn, was in town, Monday.

Trim that lawn now before it gets the start of you.

Chas. Koch is at Bryan, Ohio, today attending a horse sale.

See Wallace for Building Material at St. Joe Saw Mill.

Curt Watt and wife were guests F. W. Rhodes and family, Sunday.

Sarah Walter is quite poorly. The Lagrippe seems to be her complaint.

John Leighty, of Kansas City, was home a few days attending to business.

Are you trying to be a "dry" voter in a "net" party? Better come in out of the rain.

Mrs. Matie Gee was an over Sunday guest of Mrs. Marvel Grimes, of Kendallville.

It is better—Indian Gasoline at Patterson's Garage. No higher in price—but better.

Joe Winebrenner and family were entertained in the H. F. Garton home at Sunday dinner.

50 sheets of writing paper and 25 No. 1 rag envelopes for 10 cents at NEWS office.

Place orders for bran and middlings. Car load coming.
St. Joe Elevator.

Once in a great while a man is driven to drink, but as a rule they trot right up to it of their own accord.

The Misses Madonna Kinsey and Edith Berry were at Hicksville, last week, the guest of relatives.

Louis Miller and family moved from near Concord, last week, into the property of Mrs. Isaac Meese north of town.

Frank Wise and wife, and O. J. Wise and family, of Auburn, were Sunday afternoon callers at the C. B. Leighty home.

Mrs. H. F. Garton and daughter Zora, were guests of her parents at Harlan, last week. Mrs. Garton returned but Miss Zora remained for a visit.

Mrs. A. H. Cole, of Hillsdale, Mich., returned home Saturday after a week's visit with her parents, Geo. Wade and wife, east of Spencerville.

Place orders for Bran and Middlings. Car load coming.
St. Joe|Elevator.

Samuel Kees now occupies his residence on Spencerville St., and Frank Shaffer moved from the Reese property into the house vacated by Mr. Kees.

C. H. Sailer, wife and daughter, Mrs. Chas. Koch and son Stanley, G. M. Barney, S. S. Wolff, and Ye Editor and wife were at Wayne on business, last Thursday.

Leon Sechler and wife moved last week into their little house north of town. They expect to build in a short time. A portion of their goods were stored.

Dump your ashes and rubbish at the new hay barn as soon as you can for filling. Easy place for unloading. Barn just west of Coal and Lumber Sheds at St. Joe.

Teachers examation was held last Saturday in the Co. Superintendent's room. Not only is this season of the year a testing time for the school scholars, but for those who teach as well.

Rev. S O. Redacre of Bryan, Ohio, former pastor of the Christian church at this place, has been chosen to deliver the baccalaureate address on the evening of May 14, in the Christian church here.

Mrs. Ethel Frank, of South Reading, Michigan, was the guest of J. C. Hull and relatives, a couple of days last week. She stopped off here enroute home from attending a Missionary Convention at Union Church near Hicksville.

There will be a meeting of the St. Joe Memorial Society at the News Office, Friday night, May 5, to elect officers and transact such other business as may come before it.
J. P. BUCKINGHAM,
President.

F. R. Ginnivan, owner of the Ginnivan Dramatic Company, claims to have the strongest company this season that he has ever had. All new people. The show opened the season in Ashley last Monday night. Same old prices.

Our old friend, Kit Carson, former printer on THE NEWS staff for about 3 years, is in town. He is working on this paper during the absence of the editor this week. Kit is looking fine and is glad to get "home" again and greet his friends.

The household effects of Mrs. Belle Ridgway arrived here and was moved into the hotel property, which she will operate. She moved from Walkerton. Her son George, of Chicago Junction, was here last week arranging for the property.

Rolland Bearss moved Saturday into the James Hamilton home and is now conveniently located. Dixon Edgerton and wife, of Indianapolis; Miss Mary Hardy, of Defiance; and John Hamilton and wife, of Butler, were over Sunday visitors in their home.

The Club season closed last Wednesday evening for the summer season. At the meeting of the Literary Club at the home of Mrs. D. F. Benninghoff, the following officers were elected:—President, Mrs. Cora Price; Vice-Pres., Mrs. Rolland Bearss; Secretary, Mrs. Chloe Hart; Treasurer, Mrs. Belle Barney, and Critic, Mrs. F. M. Thornton.

DEATH OF A VETERAN

George DeLong, of Newville, Found Dead at His Home Last Friday Afternoon.

George DeLong, living 1¼ miles east of Newville and an old and respected citizen of DeKalb county, was found dead at his home last Friday evening.

Mrs. DeLong, accompanied by her daughter, Mrs. Carrie Fitch, and the latter's little girl, motored to Newville, leaving home about 4 o'clock. When Mrs. DeLong returned, she was surprised not to see her husband about, as she had left him there when she went away. He was apparently in good health, and had returned from St. Joe but a few hours before. She started a search for him. He was found in the cellar way, sitting on a step and leaning against the wall. He was dead, death having been due to apoplexy. Mrs. Fitch ran to the road for help; and Mrs. L. W. Yeiser, Alfred Smith and William Miller, who chanced to be passing, stopped and carried the remains into the house.

Mr. DeLong was 72 years of age. He had been married twice—first, to Elizabeth Smith and then to Josephine Thomas. Besides the widow, he is survived by two sons—O. Z. DeLong, of Georgia, and W. C. DeLong, of Chicago—and a foster daughter, Mrs. Fitch.

Mr. DeLong was a member of the U. B. church, and was prominent in Masonic and G. A. R. circles. He served in the union army in the civil war, a member of Company A, 88th regiment. He was a son of Col. Solomon DeLong, after whom the G. A. R. post at Auburn was named.

The funeral was from the Newville U. B. church at 2 p. m. Monday, conducted by Rev. G. T. Keesey, his pastor, assisted by Rev. Phillips and a Waterloo minister. Interment was at Newville.

DUTCHMEN SEE A GHOST

Amusing Story Written by W. H. Hannen, of Spokane, Wash.—Occurred Near Spencerville.

W. H. Hannen, of Spokane, Wash., sends an interesting letter, in which he narrates a ghost story. The events occurred in this vicinity, and he was reminded of them by reading Mrs. John Miller's story in a recent issue of this paper.

EDITOR NEWS.—

Reading Mrs. Miller's story reminds us of an event that happened nearer home. After being in Colorado, Utah and Wyoming five years, we returned home in 1880 and were united to Miss Mattie C. Shutt. A few months later, Steve Silberg was united to Lusina Shutt, Mrs. Hannen's youngest sister. Steve and Lusina moved to the old J. C. Shutt homestead. Father and Mother Shutt lived about 40 rods north of the old home, where they spent their last days on earth.

After Steve had been married about one year, his wife was taken very sick. Her parents had her taken to their home, so they could assist her husband take care of her. Mrs. Hannen also went home to help her parents. Lusina lingered a few days and then passed away.

The old homestead is the farm now known as the Christ. Hursh place, about 2 miles east of Spencerville, on the Harlan road. That vicinity is thickly settled with Germans and Pennsylvania Dutch (all fine neighbors). After Lusina had passed away, some of our Pennsylvania friends claimed they had seen her walking around the yard at the old home.

A few months later, Mrs. H, and I came home to visit our people. Along toward dusk one evening, the family was all sitting under a large apple tree in front of the summer kitchen visiting, when a wagon load of our Pennsylvania neighbors passed. One told of hearing our neighbors tell of seeing Mrs. Silberg walking in the dooryard since she had passed away. In about an hour, we heard them coming back.

Geary Shutt and Josie Barr were advised, as a means of amusement, to go to the vacant house and appear wrapped in a sheet as the neighbors passed by. Away they went with a couple women after them, the latter going several rods past the house and waited beside the road to see and hear what followed. When the wagon came to a small bridge near the house, the horses slacked. Then Josie Barr let a large plank fall on the floor. The house being vacant and havine a basement, it made a report like a cannon.

One of the party cried, "Listen! Do you hear that?" Before they recovered from their surprise, Geary came walkidg down the steps with a sheet around him.

Then everything was excitement in the wagon. All cried out, "Oh, look there!" and the horses were urged forward at their utmost speed. The women hid beside the road said that when the wagon passed them, the occupants all were talking in their Pennsylvania tongue.

One of these people had rented the old Shutt homestead, but he cancelled the contract at once; and when those people went to Spencerville after that, they did not pass that way; and, no doubt, those still living believe they saw a real ghost.

Mr. and Mrs. E. M. Shutt, of Fort Wayne, and my wife and I are living witnesses to the foregoing events.

W. H. HANNEN.
Spokane, Wash., March 21.

Patronize the advertisers.

FENCE 23c. per rod and up. Inquire for prices. P. A. SHURTS.

The W. C. T. U. Ladies will hold a market of good things to eat in the Buckingham Meat Market on Saturday, May 6, to begin at 10 o'clock.

W. Reichelderfer, Miss Westman and Mrs. Lulu Foote, daughter Princess, and son Willie, of Harlan, were Sunday visitors in the Frank Sechler home.

The Missionary Society of the Lutheran Church will meet with Mrs. Jennie Sechler on Saturday, May 6th., at 2:00 o'clock p. m. All members are expected to be present.

A. D. Brunson, Dr. V. C. Brunson, Sidney Brunson, Mrs. C. C Bassett and Tom Brunson went to Ft. Wayne, Tuesday to attend the funeral of the eldest brother, Thompson L. Brunson, of the former three, who died at Somerset, Kentucky, Saturday. The body was brought to Ft Wayne, Monday morning. He was a veteran of the Civil War and a member of the Masonic and K. of P. Lodges.

Prof. Coleman, who has charge of the placing of county agents, informs Dr. Lida Leasure that five counties that have had agents who have resigned and these places must be filled first and in the waiting there are only three counties ahead of DeKalb. He says it is certain that an agent can be procured for DeKalb county in time to assist in the fall work on the farms and get things organized for winter meetings.

Friday afternoon, Mrs. Ota George was hostess to the W. C. T. U. The topic was "Medical Temperance". The opening song was "Christ for the World". The scripture lesson was read from the 13th. Chapter of Romans, and prayer was offered by Miss Pearl Shurts. Mrs. Retta Hathaway read the minutes of the last meeting. At roll call eleven members responded with current events. A medical quiz was conducted by Mrs. Grace Dilley. The questions handed to each lady were regarding the use of liquor in the treatment of various diseases and accidents, and each was to answer with a remedy in which liquor was not used. Each lady was ready with a remedy as her turn came. Several interesting leaflets were also read. Song "Some Glad Day". A business session follow. Mrs. Emma Bishop dismissed the meeting. The hostess served ice cream and cake.

Obituary

Miss Minnie, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Day Wyatt, was born Oct. 15, 1893, and died at the home of her parents, near Newville, Sunday morning, April 30, aged 22 years, 6 months and 15 days. Death resulted from measles.

Miss Wyatt, after completing High school, entered a business college at Ft. Wayne. Here she broke down and was compelled to return home, and she was never in good health since. This occurred about a year ago.

Deceased is survived by her parents and two brothers—Glenn and Robert—and other relatives.

Funeral services conducted by Rev. Phillips, were held at the Christian church, Newville, at 2 p. m., Tuesday. Deceased was a member of the church, having been baptized under the ministry of Rev. Fred Thomas. Interment was at Newville. E. R. Kinsey, funeral director.

Don't Forget
Movies
Three times each week, for the Summer Season. On Tuesday—Thursday and Saturday Evenings.

Your Name
on a check makes an impression on those with whom you do business.
No matter how small your account, your checks give dignity to your business transactions.
Try the check way, by opening an account to day.
St. Joe Valley Bank--State Bank
4 per cent. paid on certificates if left 1 Year.

Carload
...OF...
Washburn-Crosby
Gold Medal
Flour
Will be on B & O. tracks at St. Joe, in about two weeks. For prices and full particulars, call at the store. The flour must be taken from the car. The manufacturers of Gold Medal Flour have as a motto these words: "Eventually. Why not now?" In other words, you are sure to use the flour some time. Why not begin now? Take advantage of this opportunity.
Ed. Leighty
St. Joe, Ind.

Bran & Middlings
A full carload will arrive within the next week or ten days. Be sure and place your order as early as possible. Have you tried a barrel of our salt?
St. Joe Elevator
The Nathan Grain Co.
OWNERS
Fort Wayne, Indiana
SAMUEL KEESLER, Local Manager.

Clean Up-Paint Up!
is the slogan and you start to get busy, but Oh how the dealer tells you of the high price and you get scared out—Come in and talk it over with us as we have nearly 400 gallon of the Sherwin-Williams and Hoosier Lead, Zinc and oil Paint, which we will sell you at the OLD PRICE. See us soon.
Dunkle's Drug Store
The Store that Has The Goods.

MAY

L 908

0135

THE BLUE BUCKLE

by William Hamilton Osborne

CHAPTER I.—Criag Rutherford, a New York athlete and club man, is returning to New York on the Gothic. He becomes deeply interested in a Mrs. Talcott, a beautiful girl with an elderly husband. He also meets Helderman, an eccentric financier, whom he instinctively dislikes. News is received that a $50,000 necklace has been smuggled aboard ship, and that secret service men are trying to locate it. Suspicion points to the Talcotts.

CHAPTER II. — Rutherford also meets Irene Arany, a woman of mystery, who, by a ruse, and for some hidden reason, makes his acquaintance. Mrs. Talcott is attacked in a pasageway of the ship by a man who tries to snatch the blue buckle she wears. Craig rescues her, wondering why anyone should want to steal so cheap an ornament. Later he scares away two men who are trying to break into her stateroom.

CHAPTER III. — Rutherford, on Helderman's invitation, meets the financier in the royal suite, where he sees a woman, supposedly Mrs. Talcott.

CHAPTER IV.—On reaching New York Mrs. Talcott seeks Rutherford's protection, and he accompanies her to her home in West Tenth St.

CHAPTER V.—Several mysterious happenings, including the finding of the diamond necklace and the blue buckle in his pocket lead Rutherford to believe that Mrs. Talcott is an adventuress. He learns that her name is really Ballantyne, and that "Talcott" is her father. She gives Rutherford the blue buckle to keep safely for her.

CHAPTER VI.—Rutherford delivers the diamonds to government officials. Crowder, a secret service man, tells him that Helderman was really in New York at the time Rutherford was supposedly talking with him on the Gothic. Miss Arany calls on Rutherford and demands the blue buckle.

CHAPTER VII.—Rutherford accepts Helderman's invitation to dine with him at his Riverside Drive home.

CHAPTER VIII.—Pseudo secret service men rifle Rutherford's safe, seeking vainly for the buckle. He receives a visit from the Ballantynes, who state that the blue buckle, and its duplicate which they are trying to find, is the key to a large fortune, and the whereabouts of important papers.

Ballantyne and the girl turned slowly and regarded each other with frightened, questioning eyes.

"Could she by any chance have—the other one?" Miss Ballantyne asked in a tense voice.

"I scarcely think so. She seemed to be in doubt as to the one I had and wanted to see it—but had to depart unsatisfied. How do you suppose she could have known about the other one?"

"I do not know," said Ballantyne, knitting his brows. "Gregory must have regretted his deed—and wished to make amends to—the woman he had loved. Word came that if my wife or her daughter would place a certain advertisement in the Canadian papers she would receive some news to her advantage. It is evidently news of the other buckle. This Miss Arany might be Gregory's agent."

"I do not think so," said Craig decidedly. "Have you any reason to suppose that others know about these buckles?"

"We did not think so, at first," answered the girl; "but shortly after father received the buckle, he was set upon in the streets of Paris. We did not understand why, at the time, but they must have been after the buckle."

"Did they search him?" asked Craig.

"Yes, but they failed to find it before my cries had attracted others to our assistance. It was after that that I began to keep it in my possession. Sophie"—

"Your maid? She was with you?"

"Yes, my good Sophie was with me, and she has been a treasure ever since. But I still did not realize the peril attaching to the blue buckle, until after that atack on shipboard"—

"Mr. Ballantyne," said Craig, "I have listened to a strange and an interesting story, tonight. I have no reason to doubt it, and if true, you must have been a much abused man. But still I cannot bring myself to justify you for securing money to carry out your plan by smuggling"—

"What is all this talk about smuggling?"

"It was—in his pocket," Miss Mallantyne said, half reluctantly.

"What was?"

"Why, the diamond necklace everybody has been making such a fuss about!"

"Mr. Ba[illegible] "some one—some smuggler—used me as an unconscious agent. You can guess how much I had to do with it, when I tell you that I turned the necklace over to the Custom House authorities, and received their receipt for it. I tell you frankly that I believed you to be the smuggler. I thought that you were using the lady I thought was your wife to further your designs. And I was not alone in this suspicion. It was generally believed by every one on shipboard."

"Every one thought that?" exclaimed Ballantyne. "Why, we heard nothing about it!"

"Naturally, because you were most suspected. But a message came to the effect that a bearded man and a young woman had bought a diamond necklace at Kirschwasser's in Berlin. You two answered the description. Personally, I had nothing to disprove the suspicion—much that favored it."

"What?" demanded Miss Ballantyne quickly.

"Why, your aloofness from the rest of the company; your seeming desire ot escape observation; even that attack by the man whom I took to be the Secret Service officer. You were constantly shadowed by him and another man. Besides"—Craig avoided her troubled, freightened eyes and blundered on—"besides, Helderman had first spread the report about the smugglers—and—afterward I saw you in Helderman's room!"

"I had gone there! I—to his rooms? Is that what you are saying?" cried the girl.

"Why—I saw you there! Just as I saw you up at his home on Riverside Drive! You remember that dress—the one with the trailing fringe?"

"Oh, how could you, how could you?" she stormed. "Father, he believes it! He believes it is true! He thinks I"—

Her voice broke and she buried her face on her father's shoulder. The white-haired man pushed her gently aside. He turned upon Craig like a lion fighting for its young.

"You scoundrel!" he cried. "You must answer to me for this!"

He struck out blindly. But the weakness of his recent illness and his present rage were too much for him. Down upon the floor he dropped in a crumpled heap.

CHAPTER IX.

A "Setting-Up" Exercise

All the next morning Rutherford was out of sorts with the world. He felt himself in the wrong, and yet every time he mentally rehearsed the events of the night before he did not see how he could have done differently.

Events at the close of that stormy interview had been commonplace enough. Mr. Ballantyne had merely succumbed to one of the fainting spells to which he had been subject since his illness and had quickly recovered sufficiently to go home.

Craig went to the bank again, in the middle of the day, in order to distract his mind, and also to get another view of banking business.

When he returned to his apartment about 4, he met a very excited individual, by name Michael Gooley.

"Whist, yer honor?" said that worthy, detaining him at the door by a touch on the arm. "Whist!"

"I'm whisting," Craig responded. "What's the excitement, Mike?"

"Whist, yer honor! It's them! I got their money—and I got them, too!"

"Where?" asked Craig in a breath, the spirit of the adventure seizing him.

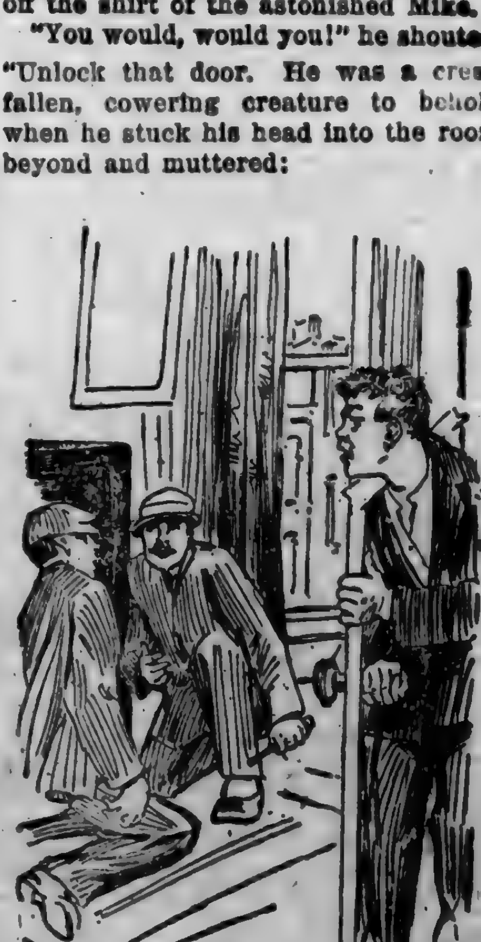
His man was no less eager.

'In the room with your private safe, like ye told me to, sor!"

Rutherford went to a cabinet whence he armed himself with a hammerless revolver. Then he knocked over a couple of heavy chairs violently, and with a swift tug tore the collar clear off the shirt of the astonished Mike.

"You would, would you!" he shouted.

"Unlock that door. He was a crestfallen, cowering creature to behold when he stuck his head into the room beyond and muttered:



"We're Caught, 'Fellers'"

"We're caught, fellers! It's the boss and he's got the drop on us!"

The boss promptly strode into the inner room, his weapon very much in evidence.

"Hands up!" he commanded crisply.

Two men who had been kneeling by the safe leaped to their feet with hands raised obediently. They looked into the barrel of a business-like revolver, and past that into the steady eyes of the man who held it.

"You rascal!" shouted Craig at his squirming gentlemen's gentleman. "Get their guns, or I'll shoot you!"

Gooley meekly obeyed.

"Gooley, lock that door!" he commanded.

Mike again obeyed, tremblingly.

Rutherford put his revolver back into his pocket. With his eyes still fastened upon the men, he stepped backward and took down from the wall a long, slim and exceedingly pointed rapier. This he swished through the air a few times with the ease of an accomplished fencer.

Still testing the blade he turned his attention to the stocky man; it was the same fellow who had tried to wrest the buckle away from its wearer on shipboard.

"What is your name?" he asked.

"John Meyer," the man answered sullenly.

"Now, gentlemen, off with your coats!" Craig instructed.

The men looked scared, but they made no move to obey.

"Very well then, I shall not insist. But I am afraid you will find your coats cumbersome before we are through. Have either of you gentlemen ever heard of what is called the 'setting-up' exercise?

"It's great for the liver, and good for the heart," Craig continued. "But before we begin I'd like to know the name of the man who employs you to bother defenseless women, and enter cabins and apartments in their owners' absence?"

Like a flash Craig was at them. His rapier swished dangerously close to their ears. The point of it touched one of them upon the knee.

"Down on your haunches!" he commanded.

They minded with surprising swiftness.

"Now up!" he ordered. "I tell you, it's the finest exercise ever invented. Now down! Now up, now down, now up, now down again"—

At the end of five minutes Mr. Meyer rolled panting back against the safe.

"Now tell me, Mr. Meyer, are you still after that necklace?"

"Nope, that never was our game, said the man.

"Then what?" asked Craig in some surprise.

"A blue buckle," was the reply.

"Why did you want that?"

"Dunno." The man shook his head. "Orders is orders!"

"One thing more, then. I must know the name of the person who sent you after it."

"It was Miss Arany wants it—but I don't know what for. All I know is, she's free with money."

"Now get out, both of you!"

Feeling much more himself than he had felt all that day, Rutherford sallied forth about dusk for a brisk stroll.

Across Madison square he walked, striking Fifth avenue at the Flatiron Building, and following that brilliantly lighted thoroughfare down toward the spot where the white curve of Washington Arch marked the end of the old fashionable section.

Tonight, however, before he reached the Arch, he turned at right angles down a side street. Through old West Tenth street he proceeded, impelled by something to which he gave no name, but acknowledged, nevertheless.

Presently he reached the house that he had entered with the supposed Mrs. Talcott. It was dark.

Suddenly the door of the house opened, and a girl wrapped in a gray ulster, and with a little close hat drawn down over her hair, came down the steps. He had seen the cloak too often not to recognize it. The blue buckle had dangled from it, after the attack on booard the Gothic.

The girl walked quickly to the street lamp he had just passed. There was a mail-box there, and she was evidently mailing a letter. He followed her quietly until she had stopped at the box.

"May I mail it for you, Miss Ballantyne?" he asked, lifting his hat.

The girl gave a little cry of surprise.

"Why, Mr. Rutherford, how you startled me!" Then with a touch of hauteur: "Thank you, I'm quite able to manage it."

"I know a quaint little Italian restaurant, not far from here—one of the few landmarks left. Won't you do me the honor to dine with me?"

"You are going there?" she asked hesitatingly.

Rutherford nodded a lie.

"I—Ibelieve I should like to see that little restaurant," she admitted, looking up at him. "It is a little lonely at home tonight! Father is not there, you know. And Sophie is out, too."

Only a few people happened to be at the restaurant this evening. They had their corner quite to themselves, and the impassioned love-songs of the fat Italian baritone at the piano, were softened to them by the distance.

"I am going to lay a disagreeable ghost, once for all," the girl announced suddenly. 'What led you to believe that I—that you saw me with Mr. Helderman?"

"I saw you—or thought I saw you, as plainly almost as I see you now—as plainly as I saw you that moonlight night I first talked to you, out on the steamer deck, and as I saw you when you came back out and passed us, while Mr. Helderman and I were promenading."

"I? Where do you mean?"

"There is some deep-dyed mystery still unsolved," asserted Craig, with an attempt at lightness.

"Is the Miss Arany, who called on you about the buckle, pretty?"

"Why, yes," Rutherford affirmed, with studied calmness.

"You—you admired her?"

"In some ways—yes."

"But she's not the type of beauty you admire—most in a girl?" Miss Ballantyne continued.

"Why, once or twice—when I liked her most—she reminded me of—you!"

"Ah!" The girl drew in her breath, with the sharp little exclamation.

Manlike, Craig took it that she was pleased with his compliment; and she did not enlighten him. Dinner over, they left the restaurant.

After they had gone a little way, a short, stout man, who had sat patiently on a flight of steps opposite the cafe all the time they were within, rose from his cramped position behind the stone newel-post that had screened him from sight and walked leisurely after them. He was careful, however, to keep on the opposite side of the street.

Rutherford mounted the steps of her home, with Miss Ballantyne.

"Will you do one thing more for me?" asked the girl as they reached the steps of her house. "You will understand that there is nobody—that is, nobody else with intelligence, in this country, outside of my father, whom I can trust? This strange legacy is for me. This will not only ignores my father—it prohibits him from sharing in it; it prohibits me even from living underneath his roof. By the terms of this will the relation of father and daughter must be actually severed. We have severed them technically. We are living up to the letter of the will. Outwardly we are estranged. We live apart."

Craig started. But the girl held him with her glance.

"I want you to help me. I have got to get that other buckle. I've got to do things. I've got to put a personal in a Canadian paper. I've got to meet the person who replies. Father is out of the question. Sophie is a servant. I would feel easier if I had some one with me"—

"And it might as well be I," he hummed softly the old "Floradora" tune.

"I think I would better go in now," she said hurriedly. "Could you be good enough to attend to the advertisement for me?"

"I certainly could—if you will allow me to accompany you, when you meet the person advertised for."

"Oh, that duty has already been wished upon you!"

"Indeed? I had it confused with my rewards."

She was inside the inner door before he realized her intention.

"Just like a girl!" Rutherford grumbled to himself.

He heard a tiny laugh, and the door shut tightly. She had held it open a crack.

"Good night!" he called; and he fancied he heard a faint "goodnight!" from the opposite side of the panel.

Rutherford walked down the old stone steps, feeling as though he were treading on air.

Suddenly the world flew sidewise into space. A million lights danced before his eyes, as Rutherford sank with a slight moan down on the pavement. Over his unconscious body a man bent searching carefully but rapidly. He seized a parcel and thrust it into his own pocket and then glanced stealthily around.

Down the street bowled a taxicab, which drew up to the curb in response to his excited gesticulations.

"Hi there, stop! Here's a man hurt. Drive us to the Sandringham! Be quick about it!"

The chauffeur leaped to his seat and threw in the clutches the moment he saw the speaker enter the cab with its unconscious occupant. A few minutes run brought them in front of the Sandringham, and the driver jumped down again to help.

He jerked open the door. The wounded man was the only passenger.

CHAPTER X.

"Oxb Ivi Esaf Ipse"

The blow which felled Rutherford was delivered by the hand of an adept. It was neither too hard, nor yet too light. He awoke the next morning little the worse for it, except a dizzy, aching head.

As Rutherford's head began to clear he reasoned painfully over the events of the day before. Who could be his assailant, and what was he after. His first answer was that it was one or both of the men whom he had caught in his room, after the blue buckle. That seemed the most obvious clue. They had not found the buckle in his safe, hence had reasoned that he must have it on his person.

In his mail was a letter from Miss Ballantyne.

"Wilhelmina Ballantyne!" An old-fashioned and somewhat cumbersome name, he thought, although it stood before him in a gracefully strong handwriting which did it credit.

Miss Ballantyne wrote to say that she was inclosing copy for the advertisement which he would please insert for her, in the accompanying list of newspapers. They were all Canadian papers, as she had said. She begged him also as a favor, to keep a memorandum of any and all items of expense.

"Quite businesslike," said Craig, approvingly. "I shall send them off today, if this old head will let up."

More than a week passed by, and during that time, which seemed unconsciously long to Rutherford, he neither heard from his client nor her advertisement. He was on the point of going around to see her anyway, just to "report progress," when at last a letter arrived from Montreal, bearing the address of a legal firm.

Rutherford seized the telephone and called Miss Ballantyne up.

"I have just received a letter from Canada," he told her, "which has been delayed a day or two in transmission. It informs m than I am to bring my client— that's you—to the Ritz-Carlton on Wednesday the third—that's today. We are to sit down at the third table from the second window, on the left side of the room, as you enter. The time is 4:30. Can you be there?"

"Certainly," came back the girl's voice. And she repeated the time and the place to make sure.

"By the bye," observed Craig, before hanging up the reeciver, "has any one at your end of the line by any chance overhead our conversation?"

"Why no," replied the girl, quickly. "There's no one here, except Sophie."

He was waiting in the hotel lobby when her cab drove up. He saw other men and more than one woman second his decision by turning for another glance at the slight, erect young person in her close, velvet street gown and the big velour hat flaunting a single white plume which swept around the crown and ducked queerly but attractively under the brim. They seated themselves at the designated table and waited. Presently a man crossed to where they sat.

"Ah! so you are here!" he said; "that is good!"

It was J. Baron Helderman.

Rutherford was so astounded by the advent of this man that he did not move.

"Perhaps you expected some one elss, Mr. Rutherford! and you, my dear Mrs. Talcott," said the banker suavely.

"It is Mr. Helderman, I believe," she said in surprise. "Why, you cannot be"—

"The person who was to meet you here at 4:30?" he finished. "Why not? You see me here at the appointed time, do you not?"

"Why, yes, but"—

"Of course, you would wish to satisfy yourself," continued Helderman quickly. "That is right. It is up to me to satisfy you—to identify myself with the transaction. To set your mind at rest let me suggest that you are here in the interest of a certain blue buckle. Am I not right?"

"Yes," assented the girl eagerly. "Have you the identifying papers or the other buckle, Mr. Helderman?"

"Not with me," said the financier guardedly. "The matter is in fact in the hands of a legal firm at present, but it is necessary for me, perhaps, to be personally satisfied. It is I who must know as well as you. I wish to assure myself personally as to the proof. If you care to let me examine your own buckle for a moment"—

Miss Ballantyne glanced over at Rutherford and Helderman followed her glance confidently. But Rutherford shook his head. He had reasons of his own for not trusting this man.

"We will have to make a further appointment with you, Mr. Helderman," he said, outwardly courteous. "This is such a public place that we did not come prepared with all the proofs."

The two men regarded each other steadily, each seeking to read the other. And then there came an interruption.

"Mr. Helderman—Mr. Helderman"—

A page slipped about calling the name. The financier rose, while women on every side who had heard of Helderman craned their necks to get a glimpse of this strange Wall street character. He excused himself regretfully, promised himself the pleasure of another interview with "Mrs. Talcott," calmly ignored Rutherford in the invitation and sauntered out of the room with his eccentric stride.

"Why did you refuse to let him see it?" she asked quickly.

"Because I didn't have it with me," he replied.

"Why not?"

"You see I realized it might be lifted," he answered, "and I deposited it in a safer place downtown."

Wishing to change the subject, he asked: "By the way, did you ever try to read the inscription on the buckle?"

"Yes, but as it is only one-half and all mixed up, I can't make any sense out of it," she answered.

"Do you remember the exact letters?"

"I could not forget them if I tried," she answered, and she wrote on the edge of the menu card:

"OXB IVI ESAF IPSE"

They bent their heads over it, close to each other.

"I suppose it's either very simple or very difficult," she said, ponderingly.

"Let's try the simple theory first," he suggested. "That first word looks like BOX, turned around."

"So it does!" she exclaimed. "And esaf—why that would be SAFE, wouldn't it?"

"Right-oh!" he agreed. "I think we are getting along famously."

"Ivi," she puzzled, "ivi—I wonder what that could mean?"

"That doesn't sound like an English word, but more like a numeral," he replied.

"Of course!" she exclaimed triumphantly. "It means VII, or the number 7. How stupid I was not to guess this before. Ipse—ipse—do you know of any word like this?"

"Why, it's Latin," he said. "Ipse—in itself, by itself. 'Safe box number 7 by itself. Box safe number 7 in itself.' That must be what it means. But it doesn't tell where."

A man had approached them quietly, and was now peering eagerly into the face of the girl, who had faced him with a start. The man wore glasses with disfiguringly thick lenses. He was plainly near-sighted.

"This is Miss Ballantyne?" he asked; "and you, sir, are Mr. Rutherford?"

Craig assured him of their identity.

"I am sorry that we could not have had our conference at 4:30," said the stranger, "but I received your message in the lobby."

"Message?" repeated Craig, in surprise.

"Yes—to the effect that you would be detained until 5.

"But you, sir—who are you?" Craig exclaimed.

"I am Jerome Leclerc, agent for the firm in charge of the Ballantyne estate," said the man composedly.

CHAPTER XI.

Truth or Falsehood

"Have you something to prove that you are Jerome Leclerc?" Craig asked with his usual directnes of speech.

"These."

The stranger laid five newspaper clippings on the table. They were the notices that Rutherford had inserted in the Canadian papers. By their side he placed the original of Craig's typewritten description of the girl. And other papers of identification.

"I might mention that I am fully empowered to carry out the provisions of the late Geoffrey Ballantyne's will in the matter of—the blue buckle," he said briskly.

"You say you were told that we could not see you at once?" Craig asked.

"Yes, that you were engaged with some one, but would be at leisure in a few minutes. The boy came and told me only just now that you could see me."

'It was a clever scheme!" exclaimed Craig.

"Do you believe that—he arranged it—to find out about the buckle?" gasped the girl.

"Precisely."

"But how did he know that we were to be here?" she questioned as much to herself as to him. "No one could possibly have known about it, except your man and my maid."

"Gooley is trustworthy," said Craig, shortly.

"And you know how I trust Sophie," she said.

"It's more than I do"—Rutherford thought, but did not say.

"If it is convenient we will get to business," announced the agent in his crispest tones. "You have come prepared with your proofs, Miss Ballantyne?"

"Yes, sir, they are all here: the marriage certificate of my father and mother, some family portraits, the certificate of my birth, my baptismal record; I have even brought some merit-records from my early school days, so that you might be quite sure."

The lawyer ran through the documents with a quick and practiced eye.

"Very good, I think," he said, approvingly. "I must make a few notes to compare with records in our office. And, Miss Ballantyne, it is necessary—I am acting exactly according to the instructions set down in the will of a deceased client, you understand—it is necessary for you to furnish affidavit that you live—alone."

Miss Ballantyne seemed entirely undisturbed by this strange condition, but Rutherford heard it with dismay.

"So I have understood, Mr. Leclerc," she replied. 'You may not know the reason for such a provision; but my uncle, Geoffrey Ballantyne, did my father an irreparable wrong in life, and now seeks this means to prevent him from regaining his property and, what is dearer, his reputation."

"You can furnish me with the required proofs?" he said.

"Certainly," she replied, with an assurance to which Craig listened with growing perplexity.

"Are they with these papers?" the lawyer asked, indicating the leather bag.

"They are," she answered, turning deftly to the desired document.

"I see," nodded the lawyer. "Affidavits to the effect that you live lone—that is, that you do not live with your father, or he with you."

"Yes. I do not suppose such affidavit excludes my maid."

Rutherfood stared at Miss Ballantyne. Surely she must know that she was uttering a deliberate falsehood—yet her face was the very mirror of innocence.

"You will find also," she said slowly, "an affidavit from me covering specifically all persons who have entered my home. You will find the affidavits of the manager and the clerk of the Hotel Monolith. They will prove to you that my father registered there exactly twenty-five minutes after he was through with the customs officers at the dock where the Gothic landed, and that he has lived there ever since, spending each night and most of every day at that hotel."

(Continued next week.)

DISC OAT LAND BEFORE SOWING.

Is as Important an Item as Early Seeding of Crop.

Although it is most important to sow oats early, yet no matter how they are sown the seed bed should be well prepared by discing.

If oats are to be drilled it is best to disc twice and then harrow before sowing. On hard ground three discings may be needed. Discing cuts up the stalks and mixes them with the soil. They will decay more quickly and the drill will work better. Going over the ground once and lapping the disc half leaves the surface level.

If oats are to be broadcasted they can be better covered if the ground is disced at least once before sowing. It is also advised to disc once after sowing followed by the harrow. A heavy growth of stalks or hard ground may require two discings.

Send in your Subscription today

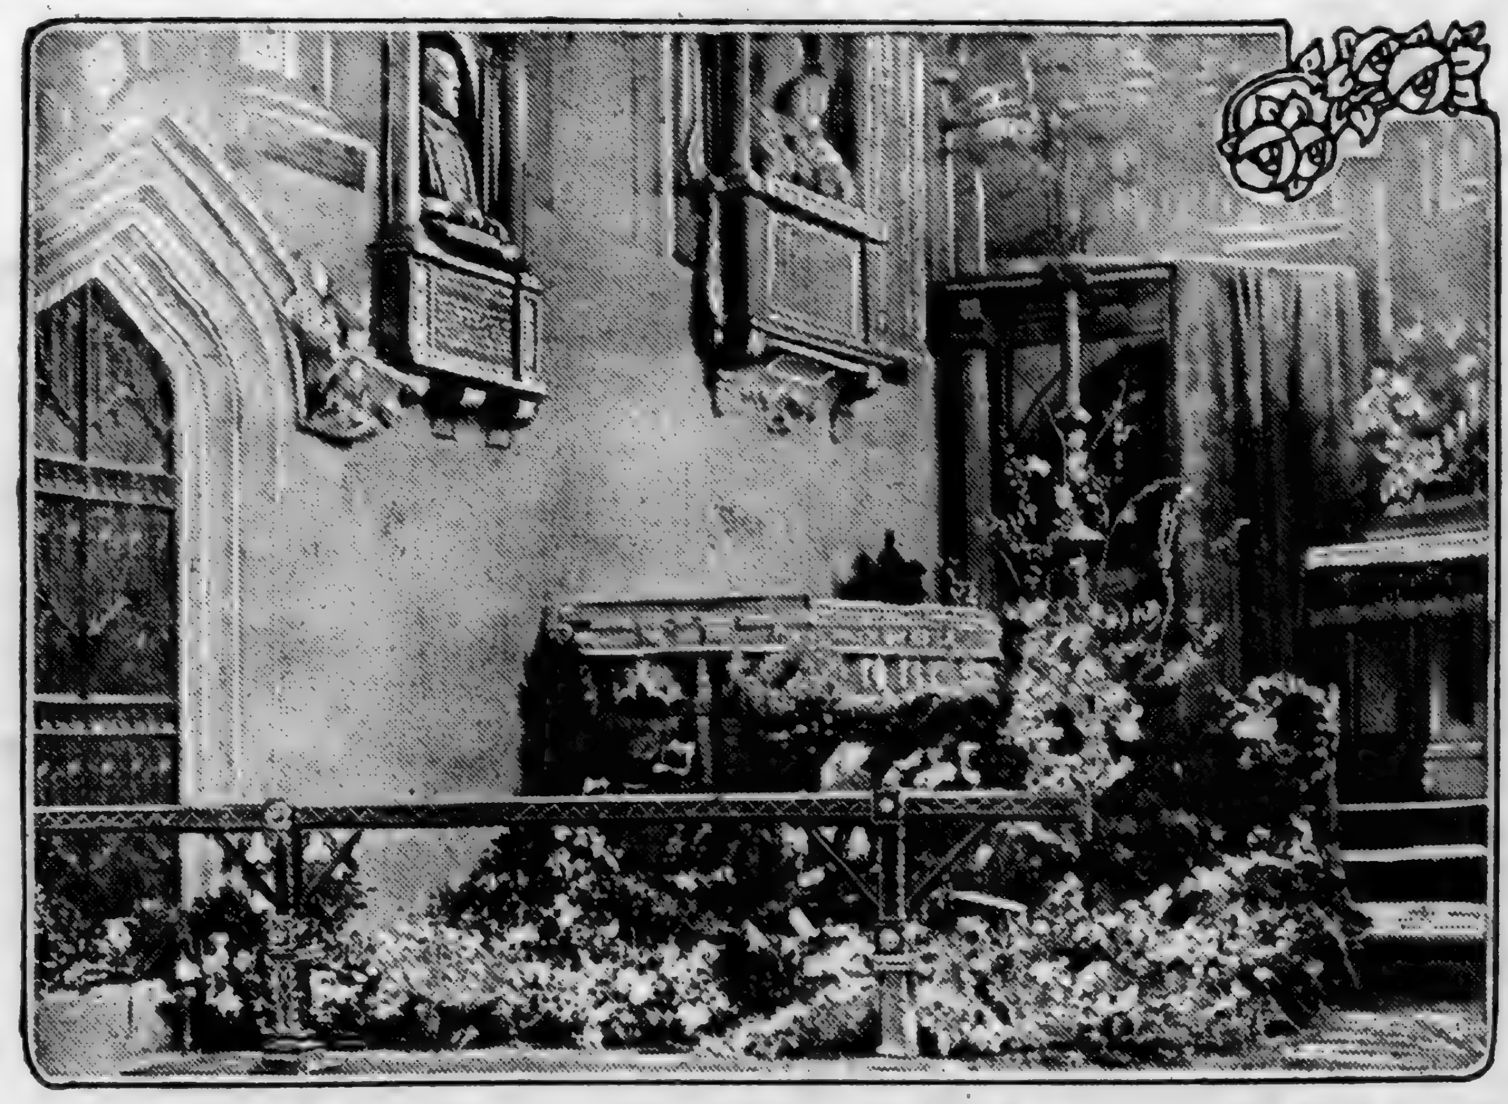
The Publisher's Co-Operative Co.
440 So. Dearborn St CHICAGO 18-16

MAY

L 908

0136

WHOLE NATION TO HELP HONOR SHAKESPEARE



To commemorate the three hundredth anniversary of Shakespeare's death nearly every large city in the country will hold plays, masques, festivals, pageants, tableaux and other forms of observance. In smaller towns also Shakespeare programs have been arranged. He died April 23, 1616, at Stratford-on-Avon. Here is shown his memorial in Westminster abbey.

DREAM OF RISING SUN GOOD OMEN

TO SEE HENS AND CHICKENS IN SLEEP, HOWEVER, MEANS DANGER

CORAL AROND NECK FOR SAFETY

How Some of the Ancient Superstitions Came Into Being

New York—If there are 13 persons invited for that dinner party—have a care and watch your step. Superstitious persons say that surely if there are 13 at table one will die before the year is out.

That superstition, like most others goes hundreds of years back. It is founded on the fact that there were 12 plates at the last supper. Strangely enough, too, there is a strong chance that one out of the 13 will die within the year. Someone has figured out a law of probabilities that shows that of 13 persons of different ages, one is likely to die within a year from a certain date. But if there were 14 or 15 at the table the death chance would be increased. It would seem then, that adding another person or two to break the hoodoo and to get away from the fatal 13 would in reality be making the chances of someone dying all the greater.

The howling of a dog is certain to portend death. Certainly. There is no means of knowing how many persons hear a dog when he is howling, and it is altogether probable that some one of the neighbors will die. They usually do. Yet on the other hand, many persons have heard many a dog howl and lived to ripe old age in spite of it. And maybe the dog howled because he was cold or hungry, or both. Go ahead and be superstitious if you want to.

Suppose you spilt the salt at the table. What then? Nothing much, except that someone, as usual, is scheduled for an early death. Salt in ancient times was held to be a symbol of purity and friendship. To spill the salt is to break the image. Despite this well founded superstition it is surprising the number of persons who have survived tumbled over salt cellars.

And there are dreams. What can be said of the person who "interprets" dreams? What do they get? There are many, many persons who believe in dreams and the most general rule seems to be to take dreams contrary.

To dream of an anchor is good; it gives hope of good fortune. If a sick person dreams of white clothing, he may look for a protracted illness or death. It is not good to dream of raiment of many colors. Black clothes in a dream means a speedy recovery. To dream of fine clothes is a good sign, but tattered garments mean bad luck.

Good rich fruit is a fine dream and means luck, but if the fruit is bitter look out for enemies. Gooseberries indicate to a husband or wife the coming of children. A spinster who dreams of grapes will soon be happily married.

Dreams of hens and chickens mean danger. On the other hand, to dream of geese is a favorable omen. A swan is the best dream bird of all—it means everything pleasant. A barking dog is bad—very bad.

When one dreams of being naked and cold he is threatened with poverty; either that or he is out from under the covers. It is a good sign to dream of giving or receiving kisses, meaning friendship, good health and earthly prosperity. No one could wish for a better dream than to see the rising sun, a clear moon or bright stars, for they all denote riches, joy and good news. But beware of a waning moon, a clouded sun or a pole star. A rainbow means early news of a pleasant nature and probably a journey. A young man who dreams of snow, is due very shortly for wedding bells. Dreams of thunder and lightning means all sorts of good luck.

And so on. For every possible dream you will always find someone who knows the answer. Superstition seems grounded into our composite natures. But if the subject should take hold of you and if some omen should worry you there is a simple way to shed your distress and turn all bad luch into good luck.

The system is recommended by the best of authorities and has never been known to fail. To turn everything to your advantage and enjoy the fullness of the earth there is just one thing to do. It is quite simple, but it will offset any evil influence that has been working against you.

This bit of knowledge comes down from the ancient. Here it is:

Wear a piece of coral around your neck and you can't go wrong.

OLDEST TRAMP OF SOUTH PIKE HITTER SINCE '65

Swore off Work When Lee Surrendered—Hasn't "Done a Tap' in 51 Years

Reidsville, N. C.—Dick Ragland is the oldest tramp known in these parts. He is 75 years old and has been tramping since 1865. Dick served thru the Civil War. When Lee surrendered at Appomattox Court House, "Old Dick Ragland" stacked his musket along with his fellow soldiers. As he laid down his arms he was thinking of the days and years spent as a soldier. Then and there he swore that he would never "hit another lick" of work as long as he lived. He said he had served faithfully thru the war and that the country had to keep him up. So far Dick has kept his word. He has never been known to do any work since that memorable day (unless we call tramping work).

Dick Ragland is known from Washington, D. C. to Florida. He is especially well known in the vicinities of Richmond and Danville, Va., and thruout Virginia and North Carolina. One could safely say that there is not a place a railroad runs thru, small station or city east of the Appalachian Mountains, in these two states, where Dick Ragland is not known. In this immediate vicinity in the cities and towns he is known by at least 50 per cent of the people from 10 years old up.

Dick has wealthy relatives in South Boston and the southern portion of Virginia. Several times these relatives have fixed him up and tried to start him anew, but all in vain, for Dick would straightway go and sell or pawn his "glad rags" and again hit the old trail. Dick may be seen any time walking the railroad tracks between Charlotte and Richmond, or trudging around the streets of some of the towns familiar to him with his belongings tied to the end of a stick swung over his shoulder. There is not very much territory south of the Mason and Dixon line that he has not explored.

And now comes a report from Durham that the old wanderer was recently given a chance by local officers to either appear before the recorder on a charge of vagrancy or undergo a bath administered under the direction of the city's officials.

Dick's choice furnished considerable surprise. He said that while he had not taken a bath in years, he had rather do that than appear in court. Officers then took him in hand, and with plenty of soft soap and stiff brushes scrubbed him to the law's taste. The Civic League thereupon furnished some clean clothes and the old fellow was shipped off to South Boston.

It is said that G. Washington was so opposed to lying in any form that he refused to establish a weather bureau during his administration.

SUGGESTS U. S. AID TO CUPID

TOPEKA MAN WOULD HAVE LONELY MEN AND WOMEN REGISTER WITH POSTMASTERS

TO SEEK LAW ENACTMENT

Wants List Available at Any Time in Every Post Office.

Topeka, Kan.—L. S. Harvey, Assistant United States District Attorney, would have the United States Government assist in finding husbands and wives for those who have none. Harvey's plan is prompted largely by sympathy and he does not believe so much in a government regulation of marriages as he does in its being the agency through which lonely hearts are found companionship.

"There are thousands of persons in the United States today," said Harvey, "who are fit persons to be married and who would make good husbands and wives. At this moment I know of an unmarried man and an unmarried woman who want to be married. They are good citizens, in comfortable circumstances, and to my personal knowledge I know that they would make good companions for someone. In their early youth they were prevented by environment from association with persons of their age, and now they are alone in the world and longing for love and companionship."

Harvey's plan—and he will suggest to Senator Thompson to introduce such a bill—is for an additional bureau to be added to the department of labor to be known as the "Domestic Relations" bureau. Harvey points out that in as much as the department of labor already includes children's bureau, a bureau of domestic relations that would furnish information concerning men and women who desire to be married, would be quite as practical.

"The government maintains a free employment bureau," Harvey said, "and furnishes information to employers and employes as to where work may be had. Then why not such information concerning persons eligible to marry. The bureaus could provide blanks wherein the applicant could give all information about themselves including a doctor's certificate concerning their health. Of course there should be a penalty for making false statements in the information furnished.

"By this method a lonely man who desired a wife with blue eyes, light hair, good health and $1,000 could ask his postmaster for a list, which would be given by number, and select the numbers of the women with whom he desired to correspond. The letter would go to Washington or some other distributing point, where the name belonging to the key number on the list would be placed on it, and the letter then forwarded to the person for whom it was intended. By such a method absolute privacy could be maintained, and yet an opportunity afforded to lonely persons to find companions."

The two persons Harvey mentioned who want to be married live in Kansas. Harvey says that he does not know how to find a suitable husband and wife for them, and hopes that Congress will pass a bill providing for a domestic relations bureau, so that two acquaintances will be found suitable companions

---

Just as she had completed the painting of her 1,000th cat, Mrs. E. M. Gardner of Pitman, N. J., was stricken with blindness.

CLASSES FAT MEN WITH DINOSAURUS

CHIEF DIFFERENCE, SAYS PHILADELPHIAN OF NEW YORKERS, IS IN NUMBER OF LEGS

NO NEED FOR SITUATION

Physical Director Declares Obese Citizen Soon Must Go.

Philadelphia, Pa.—That there is little difference between a New York fat man and a dinosaurus, except that the first named buster has fewer legs and better seasoned food, is the contention of Dr. Louis R. Welzmiller, physical director of the West Side Young Men's Christian Association, who is just now specializing on the reduction of weskit crowding. Dr. Welzmiler addressed 50 unfortunates who would explode if they ate a holiday dinner, and what he confided to those good men and round is of interest to the obese generally, or to the generally obese.

According to information the physician has obtained by observation and mail, in New York City there are men who each day are eating themselves into the eternal happy hashery. For months and months they have been foundering themselves with every edible item grown, built or baked, and now that horse meat has been added to the menus the planked pacer will be an item in the building of Zeppelin waistbands.

"The fat man must go," said Dr. Welzmiller, without mentioning any place specifically. "Like the pinhead dinosaurus, he has lost his sense of proportion with his shape and eats when he should be thinking. When the dinosaurus inhabited parts of the land he just browsed around gathering the food which teemed in the brakes and fens, and it is so with the fat man of Broadway. He waddles from one lobster place to another, finding it harder to think and less graceful to walk after every stop.

"The time is not far off when a fat man will be called upon to explain what's the big idea. There is no need for it, and those who are burdened may get out of the dinosaurus class very readily if they drop the menu and pick up their lagging will."

RAT SURE A MESMERIST

Two Feet About as Close as Any Crafty Feline Can Get to Him—Proved by Tests.

Hertford, N. C.—Rats as well as men can master the strange science known as mesmerism. The only difference is the rat uses it for much more profitable purposes. With it he conquers his most dreaded foe.

There is a rat in the home of Mrs. M. Hurdle of Belvidere, N. C., that keeps all the cats napping. Mrs. Hurdle had seen the rat run by the cat's nose so many times without attracting the cat's attention that she caught the rat in a trap and put the cat and rat in a cage together to see if her cat really meant to be lazy.

Just as the cat started out for the rat, the cunning old rodent stood upon his hind feet in one corner of the cage and began to do funny tricks with his paws and mouth. When the cat was within about two feet of the rat she stopped and mewed and then fell fast asleep.

Another cat was dropped into the cage and she did likewise. This queer rat conquered every cat that was dropped in the trap, and he soon had half a dozen of them lying about in the cage, all seemingly enjoying a most peaceful sleep.

While Mrs. H. was experimenting the rat made his escape from the cage. He has been looked for several times, but has not been found.

HEAP BIG INDIAN IN HER BED

Startling Experience of Woman Who Sleeps on Porch

Pendleton, Ore.—Mrs. D. S. Liddle, of this city, who for some time has been sleeping on the porch, was awakened about midnight by something tugging at her nightdress. Thinking that her son in law would return home at any minute, she resolved to make no move until she could form some plan of escape.

The son in law who was already in the house, was attracted by a strange noise, and rushed out to the porch to ascertain the cause. He found a big Indian, one Tom Johnson, lying across the foot of the bed in a drunken stupor. The prowler received a fine of $25 or twelve days in the city jail for his improper conduct.

VIOLIN OVER 200 YEARS OLD

Bears Date of 1716, But Maker Is Unknown.

Thornton, Ky.—Edward Hall, a farmer of Mayking, near here, has in his possession a violin made in the year 1716, making it 200 years old. The maker's name is not known, but it seems perfect in every way. It has been kept in the family from the time of its manufacture up to the present time, and tho the owner has been offered good sums of money by show men and historical societies for the violin, he refuses to part with it, saying he desires to keep it in the family.

TO KEEP RECORD OF INDIAN SONGS

It is the intention of the Smithsonian institution of Washington to make phonograph records of the war and love songs of the different American Indian tribes. Photo shows Mountain Chief of the Blackfeet Indians ready to give to posterity the war song of his tribe.

SHAVING SOAP BRINGS REUNION

Brothers Meet for first Time in 13 Years While Seeking Toilet Article

St. Paul, Minn.—Charles McKee, of Ray, N. D., was sent to room 322 when he registered at the Hotel Sherman. Desiring to shave, he unpacked his grip. But his shaving stick was missing.

"Have you got any shaving soap?" he asked a man who was issuing from room 324.

"Sure," was the answer. They entered room 324 and turned on the light to look for the shaving soap. McKee looked at the other man critically.

"What's your name?" he asked.

"R. E. McKee, of Shakopee, Minn." was the answer.

"I'm your brother, Charley," the North Dakotan said.

The two had not seen each other for 13 years. They were reared in St. Paul and separated after their parents died. Charles went to North Dakota, where he owns a half section of land. R. E. McKee went to Shakopee, where he owns a section.

In the past 13 years they had not corresponded. Unknown to each other each had amassed a fortune.

MAN FINDS INSCRIBED EGG

"Strange, but True," Says Reporter of Incident

Winters, Tex.—J. B. Armstrong, proprietor of the Club cafe here, has some fine pet chickens. When he went out the other day to gather some eggs he found one which had some lettering on it. Examining the shell closer he saw these words plainly inscribed in plain red letters: "Be good to your pets." He now has the egg on exhibition in his restaurant. This is strange but true.

SURELY HE'S A HARD SLEEPER

Falls Two Stories, Walks Mile at 20 Below Zero and Doesn't Waken.

New Leipzig, N. D.—To jump from a second story window and sustain a gash on the right side of the abdomen then walk a mile to a neighbor's farm during 20 below zero weather, clad in a nightshirt only, all while sleeping sound, was the record established by John Kuck, a farmer here.

A physician was called and found Kuck's feet and legs were frozen, and it required several stitches to close the wound in his abdomen. He was taken to a hospital for treatment.

Dog Unearths Treasure

Yreka, Cal.—After Hawkinsville had searched for three years for the hidden wealth of Thomas Greenwood, a miner of that town, a dog uncovered it.

WATERPROOF YOUR CONCRETE.

Can Be Done by Applying Cunningham's Mixture or, if Necessary, Liquid Glass.

"There's just one thing that will really waterproof concrete," says J. E. Kirkman, concrete expert, "and that is the application of Cunningham's mixture, which is not extensively used in Iowa and about which builders are peculiarly ignorant."

The mixture is made by heating thin coal tar, the cheaper the better, to boiling; to a bucketful at a time pour 1-8 part of kerosene, but be sure not to stand close in the pouring process. Then stir in 1-8 part of neat cement. Apply mixture with a brush to the concrete slab to be waterproofed. It will penetrate to a depth of 1 to 3 inches and absolutely waterproof it.

Commercial waterproofing compounds are not recommended because they consist mostly of alum, soap, powdered, clay and lime, all of which take the rightful place of the cement, thus weakening the concrete. They also dissolve out and leave the concrete weaker than ever.

Adding more cement, of course, makes the concrete more waterproof and if an external waterproofing mixture is not applied it is the best method of waterproofing. There is a limit to the amount that can be added.

In case it is desired to waterproof the inside of a water tank from which the home water supply is to be drawn and the tar might add an undesirable taste, the best method of waterproofing is to apply liquid glass. It is not as effective as Cunningham's mixture, but will do for an inside application if the latter is applied to the outside.

BLIND INDIAN IN U. S. EMPLOY

Proves His Efficiency as Policeman and Interpreter

Muskogee, Okla.—Willam M. Lowrey, a blind Cherokee Indian, is at his desk every day in the mailing division of the Union Indian Agency here, while on the payroll as an Indian policeman he is used as an interpreter and is a good one. When not thus employed he works in the mailing division.

For a number of years Lowrey conducted a crossroads store east of Muskogee and made a good living. He has a son 11 years old and wanted to get him in the Muskogee schools. He applied for a position as interpreter at the Indian Agency and thus connected with the payroll of Uncle Sam. He has his son read the newspapers to him.

THE Country Home Weekly Newspaper is eagerly sought, and in passing from hand to hand of the entire family, is reasonably sure to give returns to the advertiser.

This paper fills the bill—
The bills fill the till:
Get that?

MAY

L 908

0137

Quick Service

And Satisfied Policy Holders
Our Best Advertisement

Take one of Our Joint Policies
and have Complete Protection.

GEO. W. COE, Mgr.
Lincoln Life, Auburn

HATS
and
CAPs

of the latest styles for the summer season, in felts and straws. We invite you to our store to look at our fine display. The prices are reasonable.

Remember
Go to Erick's

Wm. G. ERICK,
SPENCERVILLE

P. A. Walker
Trustee
Spencer Township

Office Day—
Tuesday of each week at the residence ¾ mile east of the Dills River Bridge.
Phone—St. Joe, 21-6
Spencerville, - Indiana

DENTIST
C. R. PRICE
ST. JOE, IND.
Office: first door south of Patterson's Dept. Store.
Bell Phone No. 44.

A Deporable Condition.

There is no agency that has been so responsible for broken-down constitutions and prolonged illnesses as has been the grip. This disease impairs the functions of the glands of the body. The liver and kidneys cannot remove the impurities, poisonous matter accumulates and the entire system is out of order. If the glands are not restored to their normal condition, the body will be an easy prey for serious maladies. A disordered liver sometimes causes a cough which can easily be mistaken for lung trouble. An inactive liver is often responsible for stomach and bowel trouble. GLANDO was prepared to act especially upon the glands of the body; it removes accumulated poisons, and renews glandular activity. If you have no strength or exhaust easily, give GLANDO a test and see what it will do for you. Don't drag around and feel so miserable. You can get a week's treatment of GLANDO for 50 cents. For sale by All Druggists.

A Friend in Need.

When Glando Gargle is used for a cold in the head it is surprising to see how quickly the clogged nostrils are opened. Adenoids are caused by a neglected cold. If the mucus which forms is allowed to remain in the nostrils, a diseased condition will result, which causes chronic catarrh and adenoids. Glando Gargle was prepared to meet these special needs. Equally effective for sore mouth or sore throat. Price 50 cents. For sale by All Druggists.

Pay Less Taxes

By filing a mortgage exemption each year, and now is the time to file. See S. S. Widney.

The St. Joe News

Fred B. Leighty, Editor
Mrs. Iora Leighty, Associate

One Year,	$1.00
Six Months,	.50
Three Months,	.25

Entered at the postoffice at St. Joe, Indiana, as second class matter.

INDIANA ASSOCIATED WEEKLIES
THE CONCERN OF ALL

Local Briefs

Read the Free Column

Get Indian Gasoline at Patterson's Garage.

J. R. Culbertson is a new reader of The News.

Subscriptions taken for new or renewals of any magazine published, at The News office.

For Sale or Rent, a small house and half-acre of good garden ground. S. S. WIDNEY.

Transfer paper at NEWS office 2 sheets for 5c. Get some now for that pattern you wish to transfer Friends here have received word of the death of F. P. Coder, which occurred at the hospital in Jackson, Mich., last Thursday, as the result of an accident some weeks ago in which a trunk fell upon him, breaking his his hip bone. Other complications set in and he was unable to rally from the shock. Mr. Coder spent his young manhood in this vicinity and taught school in the county. He has been in the employ of the Lake Shore railroad for the last 30 years.

Coal.

We will be able to supply our Coal trade as following on Genuine Lump Pocahontas Coal for June at $4.10 ton, July $4.30, Aug., Sept., Oct., and Nov. at $4.40. We have contracted our supply on this basis. Let us know your requirements and what month you will want to put in your coal. Also we can figure on Hocking, Egg and Hard Coal at a low cost from car thus saving the extra expense of handling. ST. JOE MILLS.

Home of Daily Bread Flour.

Sunday School Report.

The following is a true and correct report of the various Sunday Schools in this neighborhood for last Sunday.

M. P.	114	$ 3.96
Lutheran	113	3.87
Christian	62	1.84
Fairview	23	.61
Coburntown	115	3.94
Concord	117	3.34
M. E. Spencer	107	4.95
Lutheran	111	3.02
U. B.	87	2.00

Buy your next writing tablet and package of envelopes at this

MEMORIAL DAY

Gather the garlands rare today,
Snow-white roses and roses red;
Gather the fairest flowers of May,
Heap them upon the heaps of clay,
Gladden the graves of the noble dead.

This day the friends of the soldiers keep,
And they will keep it through all the years,
To the silent city where soldiers sleep
Will come with flowers, to watch and weep
And water the garlands with their tears.
—Cy. Warman.

THOUGHTS ON MEMORIAL DAY

DECORATION day, day of flags and flowers, and green, grass covered graves. Decoration day, the time of sobs and tears, of prayers, and memories, and smiles. Decoration day!

It comes only once a year, this brave holiday, on the boundary line between May and June, spring and summer time. Schools give a holiday and banks close. Business is shut up, and the tired workingman hangs a flag out over his porch, and rests. Old soldiers, tottering on canes, soldiers bent and white-headed, waiting for the last "taps" to be sounded, get out their suits of blue and gray, covered with tarnished gold lace and brass buttons, and hobble to the cemetery to lay a wreath on some comrade's last resting place.

It is a beautiful thing to think of a nation celebrating a day—setting it apart from all others—for the purpose of honoring the nation's heroes.

I was sitting in a trolley car when a lady entered—a woman no longer very young, with a pale, sorrowful face. She wore expensive black, and her two carefully gloved hands held a huge dewy mass of roses. Like an oasis in a desert they filled the dusty city air with sweetness and color. In a little while a small newsboy dragged himself up the step and presented a grimy transfer to the conductor.

"I found it," he confided loudly to a man seated near the door. Then he tramped down the aisle, and climbed up on the seat next to the lady.

"Them flow'rs are swell," he told her in a soft, wondering tone of voice. "I never saw any like 'em before." Reverently he touched the nearest blossom with moist, grimy fingers.

The lady moved down on the seat, putting several feet of space between herself and the small intruder.

"Don't touch them!" she ordered crossly.

Several blocks farther on she got out, her arms full of her fragrant burden. With halting foosteps and tear-filled eyes, she turned in at a great marble-columned cemetery gate. She was taking her roses to lay on the grave of some loved dead one. I was sorry for the woman; but I could not help thinking of the little newsboy. He was very much alive, and a single flower would have meant paradise to him.

I know a girl who had a very dear friend—a friend who meant more to her than I could possibly put into words. One day, the friend died and left her plunged in grief. A year after, the dead girl's birthday came around, and the day before the anniversary I happened to meet my friend on the street. We went to tea together. I did not speak to the absent one, but suddenly, as we sat quietly gazing out of the window, the girl began to talk.

"Margaret," she said, "something has been bothering me. I want to ask you if I'm doing right."

"Perhaps I won't help any. I'm not so good at advice—but go on."

"You see, it's this way," she told me. "Tomorrow is Alice's birthday—the first birthday when we haven't been together for ten years. I had earned five dollars—it seemed more personal that way—and I was going to buy flowers for her grave. I was just on my way to the florist to order them when I met a woman I know—a woman who used to wash for us. Margaret, you should have seen her. Her eyes were large and black and her cheeks were perfectly hollow. I asked her what was the matter, and she said she was hungry. Hungry? She was starving! And so were the three children that belonged to her! Well, I told her that I would find some work for her today, and then I gave her all the money I had. It was only after she had left me that I remembered Alice's flowers—I can't get them now. Do you think that she'll mind—very much?"

"Mind?" I groped blindly for words. "Mind? Of course not! She would be glad and thankful if she only knew."

Do you think so too, friends of mine?

One day this week I felt rather blue and unhappy. It was a dark, gloomy day, with a biting wind coming around the bleak corners and a heavy rain that fell drenchingly to the ground—a steady downpour of big splashing drops. Somehow the world inside my office seemed very lonely and gray. I had a headache, my work had been going badly and I was rather discouraged. When the mail came in—a big package of letters to be opened—I was not much cheered. But my special guardian angel was on duty that day. When I cut the first envelope, I found a plain little letter, written in pencil

BULLETIN!

For a few weeks yet you can buy your fencing at the old prices:

◆ ◆ ◆

Lion Fence Prices:

10-47	All No. 9 wire, 12 inch stay	50c
10-47	All No. 9 wire, 14 inch stay	48c
10-46	No. 11 Filler, 12 inch stay	39c
10-46	No. 11 Filler, 6 inch stay	50c
10-46	No. 12 Filler, 12 inch stay	35c
10-46	No. 12 Filler, 6 inch stay	42c
9-39	No. 12 Filler, 12 inch stay	30c

◆ ◆ ◆

New Page Fence Prices:

10-47	All No. 9 wire, 12 inch stay	46c

Brace Wire and three styles of Barb carried in stock.

We can also supply your needs in Chick Feed, Meat Scrap, Cut Bone, Oyster Shells.

STEWARD LUMBER & GRAIN Co
SPENCERVILLE, IND.
Highest Prices Paid for Grain and Seeds.

Coburn's Corners

Mark and Garth Shull were Ft. Wayne shoppers, Wednesday of last week.

Ethel Pflaumer was a week end guest of her Grandma Pflaumer, of Springfield Center.

Mrs. T. H. Shull and daughter Doris, called on Mrs. C. C. Shull Thursday afternoon.

O. L. Dermott and family and J. M. Dermott and wife were Sunday guests of Forest Dermott and family, of Scio.

Mrs. Myrtle Cole, of Hillsdale, Mich., and Mrs. Jessie Benjamin, of Grabill, were week end guests of relatives in this vicinity.

Will Boston and wife, of Berlington, Mich., and Geo. Snyder and wife, of Springfield, visited at P. A. Walkers', Monday afternoon.

Van and Selia Hadsell, of Hicksville, Lloyd Coburn and Miss Ruth Hurni ate Sunday dinner at T. H. Shulls'. Fay Wilmot and Audrey Coburn were afternoon callers.

The Flower Class of the Sunday School had a May party, Monday, at the home of their teacher, Mrs. Emma Hart. The day was spent in hunting flowers and games. The Class crowned their teacher "Queen of May", and the enjoyable time the young folks had can scarcely be estimated.

COLETOWN

Wm. Sowers was an Auburn visitor Thursday.

Alva Reams took dinner Sunday with Wellington Miller.

Grace Sowers spent Friday at Adrian Harts' in Hicksville.

Anna Hursey, of Concord, took dinner Friday at Jay Harts'.

Jim Evans and family called on Elton Browns', Sunday afternoon.

Homer Jackson took Sunday dinner with Fred Limpert and family.

Elmer Palmer and wife called on A. E. Miller and wife, Sunday afternoon.

Guy Platter and wife, of Newville, spent Monday evening at W. E. Jacksons'.

E. D. Nelson and family called on Lester Pierman and E. S. Ginther and families, Sunday afternoon.

Mildred Pierman was the guest of her grandparents, Frank Pierman and wife, of Hicksville, last week.

Walter Wann and wife, of near Antwerp, and John Palmer and family spent Sunday afternoon at M. W. Conines'.

Henry Jackson, wife and daughter Virginia, and Harry Copeland, wife and son Eugene, of New Haven, spent Sunday afternoon at W. E. Jacksons'.

SALOON AND LABOR PROBLEM.

We make no claim that a closed saloon will settle the labor problem; we do not believe it will. We do affirm that there never will be found a solution for the labor problem that ignores the saloon and allows it to continue, whether run by the individual or by the brewer for profit or run by the government without profit. Labor cannot carry 200,000 rum shops on its back and prosper under any system.

The kingdom of labor will not have come when the door of the saloon is shut; there will still be industrial wrongs to right and other economic problems to solve; but the largest single immediate contribution toward that consummation, the swiftest relief that can be applied, is the abolition of the liquor traffic in the United States. It is the one thing that as the barrier to all other reform must be removed.

To every son of toil who is ground beneath the millstones of low wages and high cost of living, we have but one message. "In the name of God and home and native land, rise up and vote for prohibition."—Clinton Howard.

PREVENTS INSECT INJURY

Purdue Entomologist Gives Remedial Measures That Are Successful.

Rotation of crops, keeping the land free of weeds and trash of all kinds, late fall plowing of infected lands, and properly nourishing the corn plants are about the only practical preventatives or remedial measures that can be applied to the insects that attack corn in different ways, according to James Troop, chief in entomology at the Purdue experiment station, in a bulletin on "How to Grow More and Better Corn."

"The effectiveness of certain fertilizers as repellants has not been definitely determined as to extent, but the application of manures and fertilizers which produce vigorous growth will at least help the plants to withstand the injury," writes Professor Troop, in commenting upon the difference between fields that had been treated and fields that were not given additional plant food. Illustrations show corn that was fertilized had been able to make a good development in spite of the insects, while unfertilized corn had seriously suffered."

Read

Your

Home Paper

Get the Habit of Drinking Hot Water Before Breakfast

Says we can't look or feel right with the system full of poisons.

Millions of folks bathe internally now instead of loading their system with drugs. "What's an inside bath?" you say. Well, it is guaranteed to perform miracles if you could believe these hot water enthusiasts.

There are vast numbers of men and women who, immediately upon arising in the morning, drink a glass of real hot water with a teaspoonful of limestone phosphate in it. This is a very excellent health measure. It is intended to flush the stomach, liver, kidneys and the thirty feet of intestines of the previous day's waste, sour bile and indigestible material left over in the body which if not eliminated every day, become food for the millions of bacteria which infest the bowels, the quick result is poisons and toxins which are then absorbed into the blood causing headache, bilious attacks, foul breath, bad taste, colds, stomach trouble, kidney misery, sleeplessness, impure blood and all sorts of ailments.

People who feel good one day and badly the next, but who simply can not get feeling right are urged to obtain a quarter pound of limestone phosphate at the drug store. This will cost very little but is sufficient to make anyone a real crank on the subject of internal sanitation.

Just as soap and hot water act on the skin, cleansing, sweetening and freshening, so limestone phosphate and hot water act on the stomach, liver, kidneys and bowels. It is vastly more important to bathe on the inside than on the outside, because the skin pores do not absorb impurities into the blood, while the bowel pores do.

COMB SAGE TEA IN HAIR TO DARKEN IT

It's Grandmother's Recipe to keep her Locks Dark, Glossy, Beautiful.

The old-time mixture of Sage Tea and Sulphur for darkening gray, streaked and faded hair is grandmother's recipe, and folks are again using it to keep their hair a good even color, which is quite sensible as we are living in an age when a youthful appearance is of the greatest advantage.

Nowadays, though, we don't have the troublesome task of gathering the sage and the mussy mixing at home. All drug stores sell the ready-to-use product, improved by the addition of other ingredients, called "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound" for about 50 cents a bottle. It is very popular because nobody can discover it has been applied. Simply moisten your comb or a soft brush with it and draw this through your hair, taking one small strand at a time; by morning the gray hair disappears, but what delights the ladies with Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound, is that, besides beautifully darkening the hair after a few applications, it also produces that soft lustre and appearance of abundance which is so attractive. This ready-to-use preparation is a delightful toilet requisite for those who desire a more youthful appearance. It is not intended for the cure, mitigation or prevention of disease.

HEAVY MEAT EATERS HAVE SLOW KIDNEYS

Eat less meat if you feel Backachy or have bladder trouble—Take glass of Salts.

No man or woman who eats meat regularly can make a mistake by flushing the kidneys occasionally, says a well-known authority. Meat forms uric acid which excites the kidneys, they become overworked from the strain, get sluggish and fail to filter the waste and poisons from the blood, then we get sick. Nearly all rheumatism, headaches, liver trouble, nervousness, dizziness, sleeplessness and urinary disorders come from sluggish kidneys.

The moment you feel a dull ache in the kidneys or your back hurts or if the urine is cloudy, offensive, full of sediment, irregular of passage or attended by a sensation of scalding, stop eating meat and get about four ounces of Jad Salts from any pharmacy; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast and in a few days your kidneys will act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to flush and stimulate the kidneys, also to neutralize the acids in urine so it no longer causes irritation, thus ending bladder weakness.

Jad Salts is inexpensive and cannot injure; makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink which everyone should take now and then to keep the kidneys clean and active and the blood pure, thereby avoiding serious kidney complications.

Are You in Need of Cement?
WABASH
PORTLAND CEMENT
Is Best For Sidewalks, Foundations, Floors, Walls, Concrete Blocks, Bridges, Etc.
Look for the Turkey on Every Bag You Buy
WABASH PORTLAND CEMENT CO.
General Offices, Detroit, Mich. Works, Stroh, Indiana
Mrs. L. W. STEWARD, Spencerville, Indiana.

MAY

L 908

0138

WEWELCOME
LARGE&SMALL
DEPOSITS

Your Business Is never too large for us to handle successfully, or too small for us to appreciate. The small depositors receive the same courteous attention as the large depositors.

EVERY CUSTOMER A BOOSTER

That's why we want your account. We want you to tell your friends and neighbors. They need a good BANK also, and all will be benefited.

Farmers & Merchants State Bank
Capital Stock $25,000.00
Spencerville, - - - Indiana

SPENCERVILLE

Send in your news items.

Slide in the $1.00. Do it now.

Miss Grace Cook is working as relief operator at the telephone office.

John McBride, of Ft. Wayne, was a Sunday guest of the Anna Baker home.

Master Harold Vallieu was a Sunday dinner guest of George Gloyd and family.

Miss Eva Watt, of west of town, spent Sunday with the Misses Lucile and Alein Rhodes.

Lester VanZile and family, of Hurshtown, were Friday guests at the John Hobaugh home.

George Frederick, wife and daughter, Goldie, visited Clyde Frederick and family, Sunday.

Clarence Steward, of Monticello, Ind., visited his mother, Mrs. Nettie Steward and family, Sunday.

Mr. Marvin and wife, and Mrs. Mary Byers, of Robinson Chaple, visited Mary Comeskey, Sunday.

A $5 Vacuum and Sweeper for $3.95 at Beams & Co., store.

The C C Club will postpone their social meeting until Friday, May 12. Miss Golden Murray will be hostess.

Mrs. Vern Wilmott spent several days last week visiting her friend, Mrs. H. D. Campbell, of Fort Wayne.

The Percheron Horse
LORAINE
No. 39,798

Enrollment No. 2,950
FEES $10
W. H. Moore, Owner-Keeper

The Belgian Horse
CLARENCE
Enrollment No. 4194
FEES $10
A. B. DWYER, Owner.
W. H. MOORE, Keeper.

Care will be taken to avoid accidents but will not be responsible should any occur. These horses will make the season at
Archie Beam Barn,
22 Barn Phone, 950-3
Spencerville.

Perry Lang and family, of Auburn, visited Mrs. Long' sister, Mrs. Charles Scott, and family, Sunday afternoon.

The Ladies Guild of the M. E. church were entertained at the home of Louie Beam, last Thursday afternoon.

Samuel Steward and wife spent Sunday the guests of their daughter, Mrs. Lillian Strong and family, of near Rehobeth.

Rev. J. C. Valentine will preach Sunday morning at the M. E. Church. Mothers' Day will be observed on that day.

Mr. Dick and family, of near Horn's corners, spent Sunday with Mrs. Dick's sister, Mrs. Robert Beams, and family.

Merritt Webb made the fish catch of the season Saturday morning, when he caught thirty suckers. He had them photographed.

Fred High, and the Misses Golden Murray and Ruth Gratz were Sunday afternoon guests of the Misses Gertrude and Ethel Shutt.

Edward Dix and family, Beman Hardesty, James Spitler and Wm. Vallieu, of Harlan, were Sunday guests of J. C. Vallieu and family.

New spring oxfords for Ladies, Misses and Children—Just in at Beams & Co., store, in patent leather and gun metal.

The missionary society has postponed its regular meeting until Thursday, May 11, at which time Mrs. Mary Renn will entertain them.

J. M. Beams and George M. Shutt motored to Fort Wayne on Sunday and visited the latter's sister, Mrs. W. W. Carey, and husband.

Miss Cleo and Master Gale Bowser, who have been visiting their grandfather, Theodore Bowser, of Huntertown, returned home Saturday.

Roscoe Walter and wife took a short wedding trip to Chicago, returning home Friday evening; and, Sunday evening, left for their future home at LaPorte, Ind.

Greatly reduced prices on Shoes and Oxfords. You can't afford to be without, at the prices we are quoting. BEAMS & Co.

The Lutheran church of Auburn has called Rev. S. E. Slater, D. D., to be their pastor. The installation services will be conducted by Rev. A. K. Mumma, of this place, Sunday morning, May 7.

Henry Goldsmith and wife, of Hurshtown, and Dr. and Mrs. Goeth, of Hicksville, were Sunday guests of J. S. Hallabaugh and family; and Joseph Witmer and family, of Grabill, were Sunday afternoon guests.

George Lampman and wife, of Holgate, Ohio, came Sunday and visited Rose Beams and Mrs. Rebecca Wise, returning home Monday morning accompanied by Mrs. Beams who will make them an extended visit.

St. Joe and Spencerville high school baseball teams played at the school grounds, this place, Friday afternoon The Spencerville pitcher, Paul Wasson, did fine work, fanning eighteen visitors. The score was 39 to 10 in favor of the local nine.

Willis Boston, of Burlington Mich., spent Saturday here, the guests of the former's sister, Mrs Joel Betz, and husband; and Saturday night at the home of another sister, Mrs. Frank House, and family; and, on Sunday, the three couples visited another brother, Charles Boston, and family, near Grabill.

Walter-Steward Wedding

On Thursday evening, April 27, 1916, at 6 o'clock, the commodious home of Mrs. Cora Steward, of Spencerville, was the scene of a very pretty wedding when Mr. Roscoe G. Walter and Miss Jennie L. J. Steward were united in marriage by Rev. J. C. Valentine, of the Methodist Episcopal church, assisted by Rev. A. R. Mumma, of the Lutheran church.

Promptly at 6 o'clock, Miss Zona Horn, from the piano, sounded the strains of Lohengrin's wedding march and the bridal party proceeded down the stairs to the west parlor and took their places under a pink and white canopy. The impressive ring service was used little Ercil Steward, son of William P. Steward and nephew of the bride, carrying the ring. William P. Steward gave the bride away. Miss Hazel Steward, cousin of the bride, was a very charming bridesmaid in pink. Henry Walter, brother of the groom, acted as best man.

The bride, who is a pretty girl with dark hair, looked most beautiful in a flesh colored gown of crepe de chine, georgette crepe and silver lace, and carried a large bouquet of pink and white roses.

After congratulations, an elegant three-course supper was served in the dining room to sixty guests. At the bride's table, with its huge white bridal cake and radiating pink ribbons, were seated, besides the bridal party, Mr. and Mrs. Henry Walter and Martin Davis, parents and grandfather of the groom, Rev. and Mrs. J. C. Valentine and Rev. and Mrs. A. R. Mumma. When the bride threw her bouquet, Miss Hazel Steward was the fortunate young lady.

The gifts were many and well selected.

The groom, who was for several years a successful teacher in the Harlan schools, is now manager of the Standard Oil interests of La-Porte, Ind., where he has a bungalow waiting for his bride.

The bride for six years taught the primary grades of Spencerville, with marked success.

At a late hour, the guests, each with a precious package of the bride's cake from her own hand, departed, showering rice and good wishes on the happy couple.

The most distinguished guests, perhaps, were Mrs. Magdalene Henderson, of Robinson Chapel, great-aunt of the bride, who is in her 88th year, and Grandfather Davis, aged 83. The remaining guests were as follows: Messrs. and Mesdames W. F. Steward and two children, Sam Steward, Ernest Steward, Henry Walter, Henry Beams and Robert Beams; Mrs. Walter Steward, Hazel Steward, Martin Walter, Henry Walter, Miss Fern Walter, Martin Davis, Robert Davis, Mrs. Ada Berry, Miss Ethel Berry, George Berry, Mrs. John Beams, Glenn James, Harvey Kimes, Miss Minnie Thompson, Henry Wells, Miss Golden Murray, Miss Ethel Metcalf, Miss Leanna Wearley, Miss Ida Reed, Mrs. Cora Green and Miss Zona Horn.

Out-of-town guests were as follows: Mrs. David Walter and Mr. and Mrs. Horace Cramer, of Fort Wayne; Messrs. and Mesdames J. B. Haifley and Simon Bernard, of St. Joe; Messrs. and Mesdames Carl Sloffer and Milo Sloffer and James Furnish, Mrs. John Sloffer [illegible]

Temperance

(Conducted by the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union.)

A WORLD-WIDE WAR.

"A world without a liquor nation by 1930"—this, said Daniel A. Poling, in an address delivered at the Panama-Pacific exposition, this is the goal of the National Temperance council. The membership of this organization, of which he is president, is made up of leaders from 97 national religious and reform societies and its activities are to be international in scope. The first great word of its declaration of principles is unite, the second educate, and the third exterminate. "The temperance fanatics today," affirmed Mr. Poling, "are not preachers and women, but railroad presidents, owners of steel mills, scientists, popular novelists and war lords. Medical authorities are laying charges against the door of John Barleycorn, that the most rabid temperance orator of five years ago never dreamed of making.

"Chief Actuary Hunter of the New York Life Insurance company has claimed prosperity in human life for Russia as the result of the prohibition of vodka that takes away the breath of a third party Prohibitionist.

"Sam Blythe is writing temperance articles for the Saturday Evening Post that discount the Union Signal.

"William Jennings Bryan, delivering a temperance address in Cooper Union, New York, has used language that vies with the choicest epithets John B. Gough ever employed.

"The Carnegie Steel works is stricter in its total abstinence requirements for its employees than is the average church for its members.

"And just now Emperor William and Czar Nicholas have, in the trenches of Flanders and on the plains of Poland, Galicia and Russia, the greatest temperance societies in the history of the race.

"There is a white ribbon around the world."

$1.00 Ladies Dresses at Beams & Co., store. They are the latest patterns and you can't afford to be wanting a dress at this price. They are selling fast.

WANTED—To buy your Hay. C. E. Frye, Phone 73-31, St. Joe.

Frank W. Silberg
Veterinarian
OFFICE and HOSPITAL
—ON—
Main Street
SPENCERVILLE. - IND.
Phones—Office No. 7
(18) Residence No. 101

Dr. H. R. Farnham
MEDICINE AND GENERAL SURGERY
ST. JOE, INDIANA
Office Hours—Week Day
10:00 to 11:00 a. m.
1:00 to 3:00 p. m.
6:30 to 8:00 p. m.
Sunday—By appointment.
Telephone
Office,..............No. 2
Office at Residence. Second house west of Widney Opera House.

H. C. Hathaway
TRUSTEE
Concord Township
Office Day Thursday's of Each week in Town Hall, St. Joe.

When purchasing silverware, remember that in silver plate no name stands for higher quality or greater durability than the renowned trade mark

1847 ROGERS BROS.

Ask your dealer to show you the various exquisite patterns in which the "Silver Plate that Wears" can be had. The wide latitude for choice in knives, forks, spoons and fancy serving pieces assures satisfaction to every taste.

Sold by leading dealers everywhere. Send for catalogue "CL," showing all designs.

INTERNATIONAL SILVER CO
Successor to Meriden Britannia Co.
MERIDEN, CONN.

F. P. HART
"The Expert"
House Mover
—AND—
Building Raiser
Concrete Work of all kinds finished in the best shape with the least expense.
Call or write

Special Sale
Gold Medal Flour

from the car. We have picked up a great bargain. A full carload of the famous Washburn-Crosby Co's Gold Medal Flour, something everybody knows and wants. On account of superior quality, Gold Medal Flour invariably costs from 30c. to 50c. per barrel more than all other brands; but we are going to give our customers the benefit of this splendid purchase and offer them a real bargain.

SteWard Lumber & Grain Co.

Let Us Print
Your Sale Bills

The Grip Skeleton!

The grip skeleton may be retained in the body in various forms. If the grip affected you in the form of tonsilitis, bronchitis or pneumonia and left you with a cough, you should act quickly before the cough weakens the lungs and bronchial tubes. After the lungs have been affected for some time by continuous coughing the process of decay begins, then you are beyond medical aid. Statistics tell us that one person dies every three minutes from tuberculosis. A chronic cough requires continuous treatment until it subsides. Get three ounces of PYNINE and make your own cough medicine. You can make one pint of excellent cough syrup. Full directions with each bottle. For sale by all by All Druggists.

S. S. Widney
Justice of the Peace
Insurance and Real Estate
Phone No. 10
ST. JOE - - - IND

How's This?

We offer One Hundred Dollars Reward for any case of Catarrh that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure.

F. J. CHENEY & CO., Toledo, O.

We, the undersigned, have known F. J. Cheney for the last 15 years, and believe him perfectly honorable in all business transactions and financially able to carry out any obligations made by his firm.

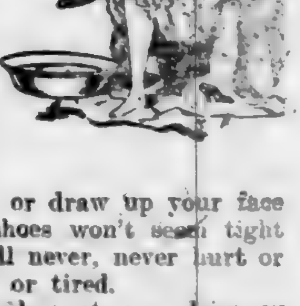
NATIONAL BANK OF COMMERCE, Toledo, O.

Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. Testimonials sent free. Price 75 cents per bottle. Sold by all Druggists.

Take Hall's Family Pills for constipation.

"TIZ" FOR TIRED SORE, ACHING FEET

Ah! what relief. No more tired feet; no more burning feet, swollen, bad smelling, sweaty feet. No more pain in corns callouses or bunions. No matter what ails your feet or what under the sun you've tried without getting relief, just use "TIZ."



"TIZ" draws out all the poisonous exudations which puff up the feet; "TIZ" is magical; "TIZ" is grand; "TIZ" will cure your foot troubles so you'll never limp or draw up your face in pain. Your shoes won't seem tight and your feet will never, never hurt or get sore, swollen or tired.

Get a 25 cent box at any drug or department store, and get relief

Some Time

You will be in need of printing of some kind. Whether it be letterheads, statements wedding invitations or public sale bills, remember we can turn out the work at the lowest cost consistent with good work.

Lehman's
CLOTHING HOUSE
ESTABLISHED 1887
MENS AND BOY'S OUTFITTERS
808-810 CALHOUN STREET
BEN LEHMAN PROP
Fort Wayne, Ind.

MAY

L 908

0 1 3 9

THE WILL-O'-THE WISP

By LURA TURNER

PRIZE STORY NO. 7.

Below we print another story of our Story Contest. This is an ideal method for amateur authors to secure recognition. Stories of love, adventure, descriptive, etc., will be printed in this and 75 to 100 other papers, if acceptable to the contest editor. Manuscript must be legibly written on one side of the paper, and will be printed in an early edition if accepted. If return of manuscript is desired, in the event of refusal, first class postage must be enclosed. Send all manuscripts to the editor of this paper.—Ed.

Nosa put up a skinny claw to take the long-stemmed tobacco pipe from his puckered, bagging mouth. Two shrewd, beady eyes with many radiating wrinkles pierced the fragrant haze curling away from his face. For several moments the old Indian looked thoughtfully at a bright-eyed young girl in the lodge doorway; he fumbled with a shaking hand to wrap his dingy brown blanket more warmly about his bent shoulders; then with the grave authority of the male head of a wigwam, he decreed,

''In the Moon of Falling Leaves, my daughter, Chief Kennebeek will lead you to his lodge. Two hundred scalps hang from the ridge-pole of his wigwam. He has stolen five hundred ponies from the Sioux. He is brief and wise of word about the council fire. A great brave has chosen you. Our Clan of Bear is honored to lay its youngest and fairest flower in the bosom of the old chief.''

Old Nosa puffed at his pipe with an air of finality. Nawisha looked down silently upon the bright blue plover she was beading upon the toe of a dainty buckskin mocassin. But when the cone-shaped wigwams cast long shadows to the East the girl put on her white, fringed doeskin dress and her new, beaded mocassins, and stole from the lodge of her father to keep her tryst with Kwasind.

The old Indian trail to Lake Winnebago curved among the tamaracks. Through soughing, wind-stroked needles shone the waters of a pleasant cove, which runs in forty yards against the northern side of a huge headland, known as Lovers' Cliff. Here Indian fishers once beached their canoes and dumped their hauls of mottled lake trout in quivering, leaping heaps along the shore. When the sun hung an arm's length from the tossing white caps Kwasind often came here to mend his nets upon the yellow sand.

The girl was out of breath after her swift ten minutes run among the cedars and she sat down panting upon a stone near the cove. Kwasind was not in sight. His canoe, fastened by a leather thong to a scraggy-looking bush, tossed lightly as an egg-shell in the splashing water. The boat was provisioned with tobacco, bags of maize and pemmican, and blankets. Evidently the canoeists were going some distance.

Thinking of her lover she whispered: ''Will he, my sweetheart, my Nenemoosha, see the red, green, and yellow feathers in my hair?''

Nawisha had a secret, which she decided to confide to a discreet looking bunch of cedars near her. As she told it her oval cheeks grew red as the streak of vermillion paint between her two black braids of hair.

''When the maple leaves paint themselves red, brown, and yellow, Kwasind will steal me from the hands of my cruel father. He beats me because I cannot love the old chief.''

She mimicked toothless Kennebeek, shaking his fist because his bride was stolen, and laughed until she had to double up and hold her aching sides.

Did the bush shake its branches gently? If it did the girl was watching Lovers' Cliff too intently to notice it. Across the cove lay the time-old rendezvous of youth and maid, a huge, craggy headland. Shaped like the head of some monstrous bird of prey, the rock seemed to gaze forever and intently into the sunset. Tufts of brush formed the crested forehead, from which a horizontal point of rock hung high and far over the deep, cool waters of the lake. The projecting beak of land curved down slightly, like the strong bill of an eagle.

Long ago, according to Shin-ge-bis, the oral historian of the village, before priests came to tell the Indians it is wrong for man to kill his brother, the lake people cast from this rock two young and happy lovers. This was the peace offering to Unk-ta-hee, the water god.

Now they substituted meal or wampum for the living sacrifice. But with this new offering the spirits were not contented. Whenever a storm sweeps the lake they dance about the cliff bellowing for their ancient rights. They mount the black clouds and crash through the bending, cracking tree tops to hunt their pair of lovers. Down come the crashing limbs they hurl to crush the lodges. Hissing balls of fire blast the tree trunks. Some of the water sprites fall bodily through the smoke flues of the wigwams, quenching the fires, until the frightened people moan out in black terror.

''It is evil Unk-ta-hee and his band. Oh, that we had given him his beautiful youth and his virgin maid. Oh, that we had never listened the the words of the black-robed palefaces.''

And the lovers hide and pray to Manitou: ''Great Father, may the evil spirits never find us!''

Shin-ge-bis had warned each on-coming generation of the evil plans the water god had against the Lake people. Many and cunning were the tricks Unk-ta-hee had played to lure away and outwit the simple people in the villages along the water!

As Nawisha thought of the stories she had heard from withered, experienced lips about the camp fires of sticks and dry cones, she grew chilly with nervousness. Why did Kwasind not come? Why did he not call her?

At last the fiery segment of the sun slipped away.

''Kill-deer! Kill-deer! Kill-deer'' came the call of the plover. Plaintive and penetrating the sound arose on the cliff and passed out over the lake; but in the glimmering air above there fluttered no bird on wing. Lithe and triumphant the girl swept the trial to the summit of the rock across the cove.

''Kwasind! Kwaisind!'' called Nawisha, peering eagerly into the bushes.

At the crest of the rock a slender Indian arose from the copse. The bright red quills in his raven hair and the scarlet of his blanket were silhouetted brilliantly against the evergreens. The youth drew the maid into the folds of his blanket and beneath its protection they whispered their confidences.

The eyes of the fisherman, dark as water-washed rock, yet full of the fire of wooing, bent down into Nawisha's. They lured the girl with their mysterious power. In them were mirrowed the mystery of the lake, its shifting moods of rage and of passion, all the brillance of its merry weather.

''I waited long, Kwasind.''

''I was sleeping in the sun, Nenemoosha.''

''Your canoe is on the shore.''

''Yes, I am going across the lake early in the morning with Chief Kennebeek.''

Nawisha's heart fluttered like a bird caught in a cruel snare. What evil might not happen if he went away with the old chief over the water?

''Kwasind, a black shadow is creeping between us!''

The young brave laughed aloud his scorn of her fears. Nawisha laid a cautioning finger upon his lips.

''Sh! Perhaps it is Unk-ta-hee who is planning to harm us!''

The eyes of the young Indian gleamed like the waves in the sun.

''How you fear the water god! Don't let old Shin-ge-bis put so many fears into your head. Why, Nawisha, I don't believe death could keep me from you.''

They ceased talking for a moment and turned to watch the West which smouldered like a distant burning prairie.

''Nenemoosha,'' whispered the Indian, with his arms about her, ''far out beyond the sunset lie the fragrant meadows of the Land of Souls. There our Dead hunt the deer and moose on meadows that are green and fragrant forever. If I go first over that bright, mysterious trail to a lonely wigwam in the Land of Spirits, I will return to you.''

''You will find me unhappy! Have you not heard? My father is going to send me to be the wife of Chief Kennebeek on the Fourth Sun of the Moon of Falling Leaves. How I fear him! He tortures his faithful dog for pleasure. His horses shrink and snort whenever he comes near.''

The fisherman held her at arm's length. Fixing his eyes upon her gravely he made this promise:

''The little lake flower will never wilt in the bosom of the old chief. At dusk on the Third Sun of the Moon of Falling Leaves, listen, Nenemoosha, for the call of Kill-deer. Be brave and now goodnight.''

''Goodnight, Kwasind.'' The girl drew herself into composure, then sprang away home to the village.

* * * * * * * * *

When the trees put on their bright fall shrouds a strange rumor about Kwasind leaped from mouth to mouth in the village. Two years before the fisherman had come among them, a stranger. It was said that he had now deserted his adopted tribe as suddenly as he had come, in order to marry a beautiful Sioux. A runner had seen the pair traveling northward with the hated enemies of the Winnebagoes.

Kwasind had not yet returned and this story made Nawisha uneasy. She became weak with nervous worry. The night previous to the Third Sun of the Fall Moon she shivered and burned. Her semi-sleep was full of a strange dream. In the morning the girl got up from her bed of pine boughs to visit the oldest and the wisest woman in the village.

Shin-ge-bis dwelt apart from the circle of village tepees. Her lodge lay a brisk five minutes' run from Lovers' Cliff. Her husband had been a Medicine Man, gifted at casting out blue imps, at foretelling fate, and at casting spells. When he died he tied up his weird powers in an otter skin bag and bequeathed them in toto to his widow. Manitou spoke from the otter skins directing her how to gather and to cure herbs to cure the Winnebagoes. In it, too, were magic arrows which could bring back the wandering heart of a faithless lover. From the bag came other strange powers which made old Shin-ge-bis a perfect Joseph at interpreting dreams.

Withered as an old potato, she sat before her lodge grinding corn in a small mortar with a pestle. Wrinkles one-quarter of an inch deep ploughed her bronze skin. Between straggling strands of yellowish gray hair peered two sunken eyes, alertly watching from their deep, bowl-like sockets.

''I have brought you a venison stew, grandmother,'' and the girl held out a steaming bowl. ''Here, eat it while it is hot and I will grind your corn for you.''

''May you have one hundred daughters to ease your burdens when you are old,'' mumbled the thankful woman, seizing the bowl.

As she pounded the maize Nawisha told the ancient woman her strange vision of the previous night.

''I seemed to stand beside the lake alone, grandmother. It was a bright day of the Moon of Leaves. On the shore I could hear the patter of falling leaves and needles; the squirrels ran chattering with cedar cones their mouths. Suddenly a dark shadow fell across the sun! A great, round, dark, billowy cloud was approaching me swiftly. It settled before me, divided, and from its midst came a wonderful brave. He was beautiful, grandmother, oh! wondrously handsome! His flying draperies of white mist curled after him. A fan-like jet of spray swayed in his hair. I looked him fully in the eye in wonder, yet unafraid. He laughed and kissed me on each cheek, saying:

''You must keep your tryst with Kwasind before this morning's sun shall rise again.''

He glided to the shore and sank down into the water of the lake.''

The bowl dropped from the hands of terrified Shin-ge-bis and rattled off over the stones. She got up with a jerk, clutched several handfuls of fresh grass into her skirt and lighted the pile which she made with a coal from the lodge. Under her breath she chanted her terror.

''Evil spirits are about; We must purge the air with the smoke of sweet grass. The girl has spoken with an evil water ghost, what will befall her?''

Shin-ge-bis looked at the maid anxiously. Unk-ta-hee's kisses had become great flaming spots. From a parfleche the ancient doctor took feverfew of which she made a strong brew to give the girl. It stayed the fever and Nawisha slept until the sun beamed into the wigwam between the dark boles of the tamaracks.

''Grandmother have you seen aught of Kwasind?'' was the maid's first question.

''No. Chief Kennebeek has returned alone.''

The reply wrenched from her a groan of grief and shame. Had Kwasind deserted her, and for a Sioux? With excitement the fever mounted to wild delirium. She shrieked and pointed to where Winnebago's waters boil in shining piles upon the yellow sand.

''A voice is calling me, grandmother. It is surely Kwasind returning!''

''No, Nenemoosha, it is the waves upon the shore.'' But the old woman was mentally frantic.

''Woe to us! Whom the spirits kiss they mean to woo! It is the mischief-making Unk-ta-hee calling her! Her lover must return if the girl comes back to reason!''

Shin-ge-bis hobbled out to the ridge pole of her lodge, where hung the sacred otter skin filled with magic arrows.

''Ugh! Ugh! This will bring back to faith the brave who has harmed my little one.''

Hopping off in a circular, stiff-legged dance she swung the bag above her head, chanting the Winnebago love-spell,

''Let it fly, the arrow,
Let it fly, the arrow,
Pierce with a spell the man,
Let it fly, the arrow!''

When the exhausted woman sank to rest in her doorway the sun had slipped away. The bats bgean their gyres about the tamaracks, the crickets chirred rhythmically under the restless, tossing branches of the pines. A dust-devil raced past in the growing dusk causing Shin-ge-bis to comment,

''The Dead are returning from the Land of Souls.''

An airy presence tiptoed over the leaves, whispering, rustling and sighing. It croned down the smoke flues, tapped at the entrance flap, then like a spirit that returns, expecting glad welcome but finding itself forgotten, the sound ran off to die in heartbroken sobs in the hollow shadows of the forest.

Again it came softly to the wigwam flap, tapping gently,

''Shin-ge-bis, a guest is standing on the threshold,'' said Nawisha whose ears and eyes were growing keen to hear the sounds and to see the visions of the World of Shadows. But Shin-ge-bis had fallen asleep.

A blanketted form, faint as white smoke, swayed beside the girl's bed. An ice-cold breath cooled her brow. A gentle voice said coaxingly,

''Come little one! Let us run to the cliff together. I have something I want to tell you.''

The wraith glided across the lodge seizing a firebrand from the fire in passing, it stood beckoning her from the door of the wigwam.

''Nawisha! Nawisha!'' called the phantom.

''Yes, Kwasind, I am coming.''

Among the cone-bearing cedars fluttered the spirit waving his lighted torch to guide her. Swiftly after the Will-o'-the-Wisp ran Nawisha with outstretched arms, begging the Voice not to leave her. Over piles of leaves, over fallen logs it danced on toward Lover's Cliff. The waves upon the shore began their hungry calling. As they rounded the cove the bosom of the lake swelled in the moonlight like the breast of a passionate wooer. Long, liquid fingers reached for the flying mocassins of the girl.

The wraith paused at the crest of the headland. His figure and features grew distinct and luminous as silver fire against the cedar copse. The great eyes of Kwasind looked longingly into Nawisha's own, pleading mutely for understanding.

''How cruel the living are to the dead!'' he whispered. ''You wail and call out our names, but when we return you fear and shun us. Three times have I tried to tell my sad story to the braves before the council fire. I beat their heads with my frail, substanceless hands and shouted my innocence into their ears; but they brushed me away as if I were an insect buzzing about their heads. I never deserted the Winnebagoes. I have always been true to you Nawisha. Kennebeek has hired a crooked tongue to tell his story. When you left me on the cliff that last night of ours together, the old chief was hiding behind this very rock. He came upon me suddenly with uplifted dagger,

''So you will steal my young bride from my arms, will you?'

''I stepped back quickly to draw my knife and to gain a sure footing; but the rock near the edge of the cliff gave way and in struggling to get my balance an evil spirit grasped my ankle and drew me down. Farewell I must now travel the dark pathway of spirits alone.''

His firebrand went out leaving a smoky trail and with one glide to the edge of the cliff the phantom faded.

''Do not leave me, Kwasind,'' pleaded the sobbing girl falling upon her knees at the edge of the cliff. She looked down broodingly into the water below her. The lake threw up its snowy arms like an eager bridegroom. Its lulling music seemed like the tones of her lover. Kwasind's face and great eyes danced in every wave, luring her and drawing her down with their strange fascinating. Misty white figures arose from the deep wrapping their arms about her with enticing coaxing,

''Come to us, Nawisha, we will cool your fever!''

The bushes behind her parted and out crawled Kennebeek, wizened, venemous, ugly as when he tortured his faithful dog. The girl rose with a start at the sound.

''Kill-deer. Kill-deer. Kill-deer.'' came the trysting call above her head.

''I will follow you to the Land of Souls my Nenemoosha.'' Yes, Kwasind I am coming.''

She poised for a moment with outstretched arms then leaped far out to her deep, cool bridal bed.

The waves gleamed as if a million sprites waving lighted nuptial torches were celebrating the bridal of Kwasind and Nawisha. The water clapped its hands along the shore singing,

''We have won her! We have won her!''

Old Shin-ge-bis painted the legend in red, green, and yellow pictures upon an old buffalo skin. The ancient sibyl wrote it was the evil Unk-ta-hee, who came, a stranger, among them, to lure away this daughter of the Winnebagoes with his tales part truth, part fiction; but we believe it was a humble fisherman whom she followed to his wigwam on the pleasant prairies of the Land of Souls.

''BUY OAT SEED AT HOME.''

Better Adapted, Yields More, Costs Less, Less Danger of Weeds.

''Buy it at home,'' has been the slogan of the recent seed corn campaign.

''It applies with just as much force in buying seed oats,'' say the farm crops men. ''Why send to northern states for plump, heavy seed oats when clean, well-matured seed of varieties grown in your own locality will yield fully as much and perhaps more?''

Secure your seed oats right in your own locality and clean with a fanning mill before planting, is the advice given. This seed is to be preferred over heavy northern seed because it is better adapted to local climatic and soil conditions, by experiment has been proven to yield as much or more, is less expensive and there is less danger of introducing noxious weeds.

Northern grown seed is heavy, not because the varieties grown there are of better breeding, but because climatic conditions are more favorable to the production of heavy oats.

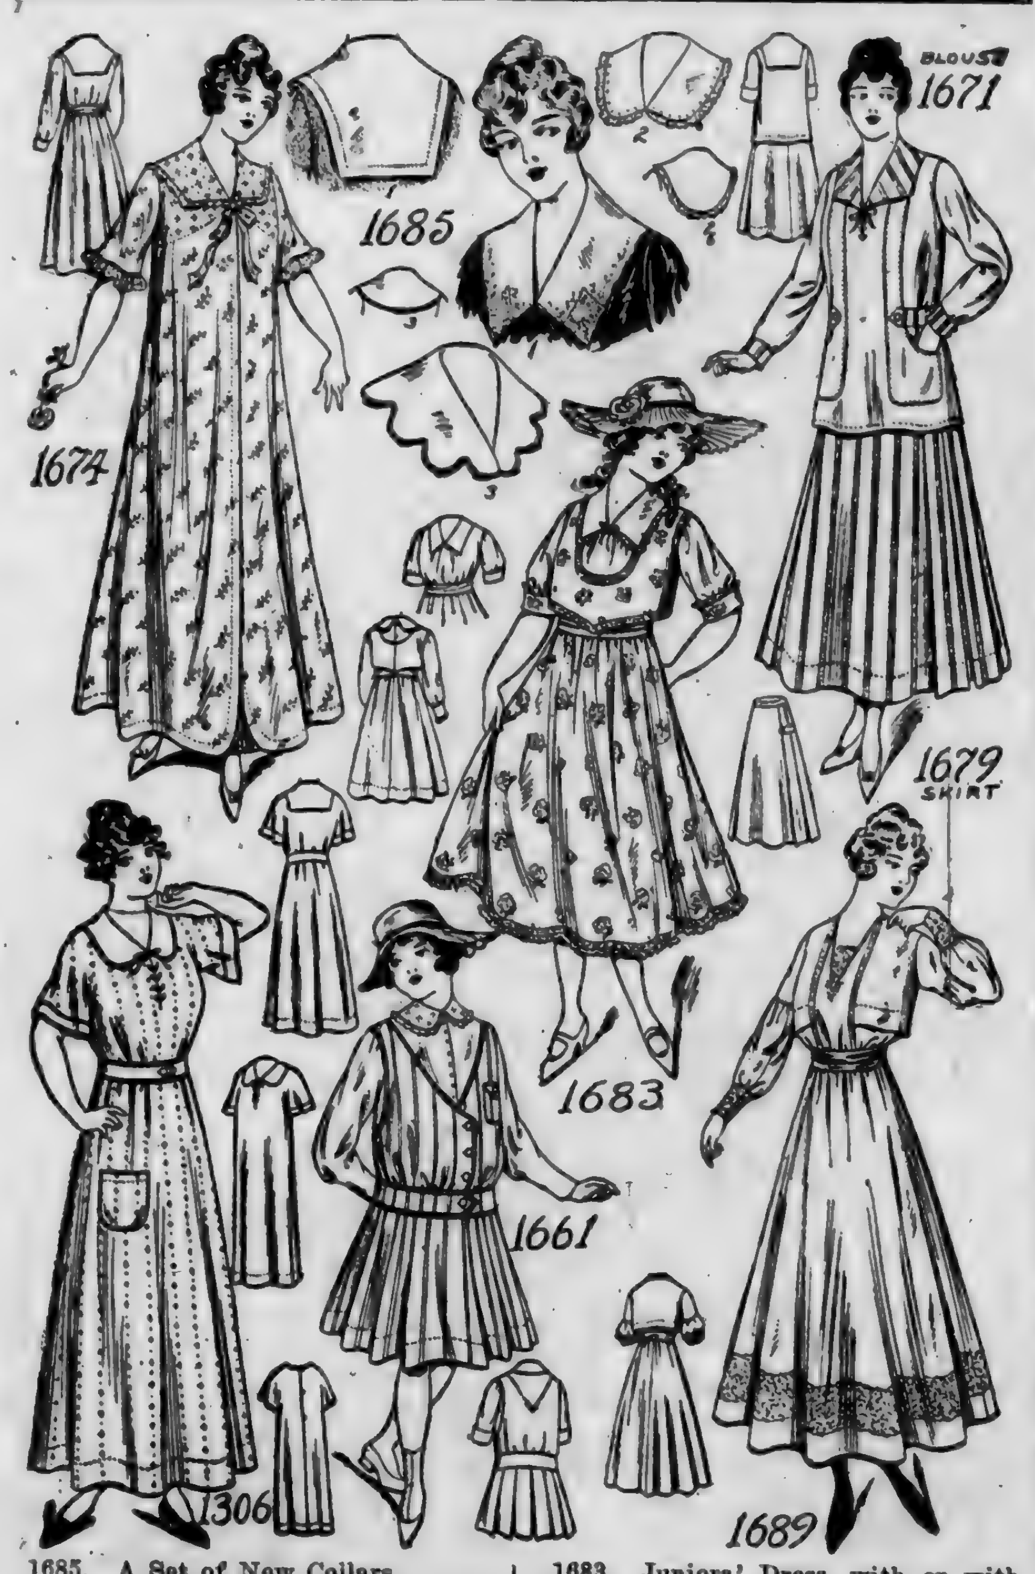
PATENT LEATHER.

Patent leather shoes can be kept like new if they are rubbed over occasionally with milk and polished with a soft dry cloth.

Our Fashion Department

Prepared Especially for this Paper

Send All Orders Direct to this Paper



1685. A Set of New Collars.

The Pattern, including all styles, is cut in 3 sizes: Small, Medium and Large. It requires for either style ¾ yard of 22-inch or wider material for a Medium size. Price, 10 cents.

1671-1679. Ladies' Middy Suit.

Blouse 1671, cut in 6 sizes: 34, 36, 38, 40, 42 and 44 inches bust measure. Skirt 1679, cut in 6 sizes: 22, 24, 26, 28, 30 and 32 inches waist measure. It will require 3 yards of 44-inch material for the Waist, and 4⅛ yards for the Skirt for a Medium size. The skirt measures 4 yards at the foot, with plaits drawn out. This calls for TWO separate patterns, 10 cents FOR EACH pattern.

1306. Ladies' Middy Apron to be slipped over the head, or closed at the back.

Cut in 3 sizes: Small, Medium and Large. It requires 5 yards of 36-inch material for a Medium size. Price, 10 cents.

1683. Juniors' Dress, with or without Bolero.

Cut in 3 sizes: 12, 14 and 16 years. It requires 5½ yards of 44-inch material for a 14-year size. Without bolero, ⅞ yard less. Price, 10 cents.

1674. Ladies' House Gown or Negligee.

Cut in 3 sizes: Small, Medium and Large. It requires 5¾ yards of 44-inch material for a Medium size. Price, 10 cents.

1661. Girls' Over Blouse Dress with Guimpe.

Cut in 4 sizes: 6, 8, 10 and 12 years. It requires 3½ yards of 36-inch material for the dress and 2 yards of 27-inch material for the guimpe, for an 8-year size. Price, 10 cents.

1689. Ladies' Dress.

Cut in 6 sizes: 34, 36, 38, 40, 42 and 44 inches bust measure. It requires 6 yards of 44-inch material for a 36-inch size. The skirt measures about 3⅓ yards at the foot. Price, 10 cents.

PATTERN ORDER.

Patterns
No.	Size

I enclose ....for Patterns

Name ....

Town ....

State ....

St. No., R. F. D., ...

Mail Your Order Direct to Publisher.

Story Contest

Opportunity for subscribers of this paper to try their literary talent and gain a reputation.

MANY magazine writers are secured from the rural communities. We want our subscribers to have every advantage to utilize their talent, and have joined with a number of other publishers in a great story contest.

Do you think you can write a story?

Suppose you try anyhow. For the best story received we will pay

$50.00

Stories may run from 2,000 to 15,000 words. Decision will be made by popular vote of the subscribers of this and several other papers. Stories acceptable for entry will be published in this paper and not less than fifty others. This is a chance to gain popularity at once. Send manuscript direct to editor of this paper.

MAY

L 908

0140

LEADS FIERCE ATTACK AGAINST FRENCH

Prince Rupert of Bavaria, who commanded recent severe attacks against the French line in the Artois region, and his son Albert.

Flickerings from Filmland

Interesting to the Movie Fans.

CHAPLIN'S "CARMEN."

Mr. Chaplin, after his long awayness, has come back. It was one Nov. 15, 1915, that he first made his last appearance in "A Night In the Show." Since then he is the same, yet not the same. For his burlesque on "Carmen" was made when he was a mere $1,800 a weeker, or some sum like that, and now it is released when he is a $12,000 a weeker, thanks to his recent successful arranging with the Mutual company.

But the price of a man really matters very little compared with what he can do with you. What Mr. Chaplin does with you is make you laugh, and it is to be hoped he will not lose his cunning for long.

Laughter ranks high as one of the staves of life for the world.

"Carmen," expected long ago, has a lot to do to satisfy those on the qui vive for it. I think it exceedingly good. It is too long, and some things are overdone, as Chaplin's fight scene, for instance, but it is pretty plumb full of chuckles.

Besides being good slapstick, which it is, it has the extra virtue of being good burlesque. Herein lie some of its richest subtleties of humor, following as it does, ridiculously, so closely on the tracks of the artistic Lasky version of the tragedy.

In a way this limits its general appeal, for many a bit, clever in its derivation, will fly over the heads of the folk who did not see the inspiration, and they will label "tame" what really is instinct with funny significance. The moral of that is, that fully to enjoy the burlesque, seers will have to look up the original.

The pirates, the burro, the broken wall, the same kind of inn scenes, the same progression of situations follow as ruled in the Farrar version.

Edna Purviance makes a stunning Carmen, though she might have been even more effective had she assumed some raven looks for the occasion. Every one is as funny as the limits of his rôle permit, but funniest of all, of course, is Chaplin, respectably but super-generously garbed. His nifty soldier's uniform hangs on him in rippling wrinkles, and his tall soldier boots are creased like plow furrows.

The smallness of Chaplin is itself a burlesque on the goodly proportions of upstanding Wally Reid, and for that matter it is something to make Don Jose—"Darn Hosiery" for these purposes—the shining light of a "Carmen."

Typical Chaplin bits light up the film; his readiness to do the obvious thing finds many mirth provoking displays. He does not bubble originally continually though, and in some spots he makes himself the center of things too prolongedly. His pugilistic methods soon pall. He dies rather too much, too.

But in spite of these things he proves himself the champion humorist, and once he does a bit, his remorse after he has killed his man, that makes his viewers come perilously near forgeting this is burlesque they are witnessing. The world's greatest comedian is a very funny little man. One wonders sometimes just what is his emotional analysis. It is a safe wager that it isn't all slapstick.

REEL NOTES.

Florence LaBadie has sent to Arthur Wadeham of Canton, O., a gift of a cameo scarfpin. The Thanhouser star sends one to every hundredth man who proposes marriage to her and Wadehamf is the fourth. They say that the gift of a pin breaks friendship. And Leon J. Rubenstein holds up his right hand on the truth of this.

Dorothy Bernard, when she is not working in one or another of the William Fox studios, cultivates roses. She says the finest fertilizer she has yet found is to save coffee grounds, dry them out and mix with an equal quantity of soot. Spread around the plants and it will be found to be as good an insecticide as a fertilizer.

Clara Kimball Young, the World Film player, has been granted a six weeks' leave of absence, and will on July 15 sail for northern African parts. Miss Young will be seen next in "The Feast of Life," on the World program. She has been given this consideration by the directors of World Film in appreciation of her hard work during the last year and a half. She will complete several pictures, however before she goes on her vacation.

William Farnum, the fighting film star of the William Fox organization, has a faithful old darky in his employ at his Sag Harbor (Long Island) home. The Farnums went visiting the other night and told the old negro to lock up the house and put the key under a big stone near the front steps.

When they got back about midnight they could not find the key. Mr. Farnum left his wife sitting on the doorstep while he walked half a mile to the old darky's house.

"Where'd you put that key?" Mr. Farnum asked when he had succeeded in awakening his old servant.

"'Deed, boss, I dun found a better place for it," was the answer. "I hid that key under the mat down at the boathouse."

An old stagecoach used in "David Garrick," a forthcoming Pallas-Paramount film starring Dustin Farnum, was saved from destruction due to the quick-wittedness of a prop boy, when a Los Angeles car killed one of the horses. It was a miracle that the driver and the relic of days gone by escaped.

Little Joyce Fair, Essanay's 12-year-old leading lady, is perfectly wild—as she says herself—about Japanese stationery, and she has searched the shops of Chicago for the desired tints and designs. A little girl saw her in pictures and wrote her on this stationery. Now Joyce will not be content until she gets the same kind.

Frank Goldsmith, who played the part of Russell Barridan in the William Fox photodrama "Blazing Love," had a deal of real discomfort incidental to making the arctic scenes in the picture. Goldsmith wore his own mustache, and the frigidity soon formed a solid cake of ice over his lips.

"Look hopeful," yelled the director.

And Goldsmith couldn't change the expression of his face to save his life.

"My smiling apparatus is frozen still," he managed to whisper between his chattering teeth.

SOW OATS AND PEAS FOR HAY.

Make Excellent Combination, Producing Larger Yields, Enriching the Soil.

A mixture of oats and Canadian field peas makes one of the best hay crops which can be seeded and harvested in the same season.

The mixture will produce larger yields than either crop seeded alone. Peas, being a legume, make the hay richer for feeding purposes than oats alone and improve the soil. Also, the oats support the pea vines so that harvesting is much easier.

The mixture should be sown two to three inches deep at a rate of 2 bu. oats and I bu. peas per acre. Use of the grain drill is the best way to seed the crop, but if a drill is not available the seed may be broadcasted and covered with a disc of harrow. Sow at oat seeding time or as early in spring as land can be prepared.

Cut the hay when the oats are in the milk-ripe or early dough stage, and the pea pods well formed but not ripe. A palatable and nutritious hay yielding 1½ to 3 tons, per acre will result.

Notes and Comment

Of Interest to Women Readers

FOR THE HOUSEWIFE

Do not throw away your egg shells: they are useful when cleaning decanters. Crush the egg shells into small bits and shake them well in the decanters when they are three parts filled with water.

Take common beeswax and shave it very thin with a knife dipped in hot water. Cover the wax with turpentine and let it stand twentyfour hours. Do not heat it on the stove, as it will dissolve and make it like a soft paste. Clean your linoleum with warm water and a little soap until it is perfectly clean, then take a woolen cloth.

A curious and effective substitute for fur invented by an American designer is a cloth made of angora yarn crocheted into a fabric such as is often used for babies caps. In soft gray this makes very effective banding, and the model for which it was first designed, a smoky gray Russian costume of heavy, soft silk, with high collar, cuffs, wide coat band, and several narrow skirt bands is exceedingly good looking and original.

Modeling a Man.

It takes a woman to make a man famous—or infamous.

Cato Major said: "We who rule men are ruled by women."

Woman is the sculptress and arbiter of the race. In her hands lie the destinies of men and of peoples.

Mankind is as clay in woman's hands, as melting wax in the sunshine of her smiles.

Let her mold her figure on lines of eternal truth and beauty—not on lines of self.

The clay can speak no more than its modeler sees. Woman must herself glimpse of the great self before she can shape a man of great selfhood.

Women who have not found themselves turn men thru a common mold and then get desperately tired of their own machine made products.

Great men are molded by great women only. If women are great, man cannot be small.

Sins of omission are as great as those of commission. For centuries millions of women ceased to mold, but sat complacently by and watched men shape their grotesque figures—usually applauding.

Man's world and the figures he had shaped are crumbling into dust. They were not molded on lines of permanent truth and beauty. They lacked creative centers.

A finished love pat from a woman has overturned many a man's creation—knocked it clean off its pedestal.

If women would mold men of great self they must be women of the great self. That self must exist in them—a living pattern from which to work.

The strange thing about modeling men is that women need not manipulate or fashion her clay at all—simply be herself, and even the crudest, most irregular figures of themselves will take on lines of beauty and truth.

Good Housekeeping

Good housekeeping does not always mean home making but home making always means good housekeeping in the best sense of the word. Eternal vigilance must always be the price of good housekeeping, but a continual round of drudgery need not prevail if the work is planned systematically, and [illegible] med intelligently. Good houskeeping means health, happiness, and comfort to the entire household, while poor housekeeping means discomfort, discord and unhappiness. It is not going too far to say that the kitchen is the keynote of the household, and upon the kitchen range must be offered up incense to the little god of domestic felicity.

Even if the housewife is not obliged to do the work with her own hands it is essential that she should know exactly how it should be done; then if she is fortunate enough to have competent help she will appreciate the service rendered, and a desired consummation is reached when there is mutual confidence and respect between mistress and the maid. But if the mistress is as incompetent as the maid, how can she ever hope to train to skillful service that embodiment of ignorance and inefficiency which often finds a place in our kitchens?

The woman who hopes to be able to attain efficiency in housekeeping must comprehend the laws of sanitation and appreciate the importance of cleanliness. She must understand the nutritive value of different kinds of food, and be able to furnish her family with well selected and healthful viands.

Such Pretty Night Robes

The newest night robes are wonderfully dainty, quite as quaint as they are dainty, with the influence of the becoming empire still in the lead.

The sleeves are either coquettish little puffs crossed and recrossed with the lace insertions and embroidery, or cut on the order of the old time angel sleeve.

These slumber robes are made particularly lacey by the insertions of lace which mark the seams.

Several varieties of lace are combined on the same garment, principally Irish, Cluny and the real Valenciennes.

Others are distinguished by the most delicate of hand work with discreet touches of lace.

THE YELLOW LEAF.

My step is feeble now and slow, that was once so bold; my hair, once dark, is like the snow, and my feet are cold; my legs are thin, my waist is fat, I have an ache in every slat, I cannot run or skin the cat, I am waxing old. I look around with gloomy eyes at the growing lads; I like to sit and moralize with the ancient dads and tell how boys of other days were better than the modern jays, of higher aaims and nobler ways, shunning foolish fads. "With such a bunch of skates on deck," sadly I lament, "this poor old world go to wreck, I will stake a cent"; the graybeards all agree I'm right and say the country's in a plight, with all these giddy youths in sight on amusements bent. There is, alas, no surer sign that I'm out of date than are these mournful words of mine which I here relate; for when a man talks bunk at last, compares the present with the past and finds degeneration vast, he should pull his freight.

WALT MASON.

Dictates of Fashion

Mouse color is a soft and becoming shade.

Button trimming is in evidence on suits and frocks.

Entire dresses are made of silk jersey for outing wear.

Many of the new silk suits have carefully fitted backs.

Most utility coats are long enough to almost cover the dress.

RIBBONS COME INTO THEIR OWN.

Madame la Mode is hesitating whether to bestow her greatest favor on the small hat or on that of wide lines. Indeed, the vacillation of this fickle dame is perplexing to her devotees. Earlier in the season all the hats from Paris, or a goodly majority thereof, placed the tall, small hat in the front ranks of the new millinery models. Such hats are still extremely modish, but most recent models on the old sailor lines or in picturesque Gainsborough contour have come to dispute place with them.

This would indeed be disconcerting news to those who have pinned their faith on the tall, brimless hats were it not that the Spring dress and suit models call for different types of millinery. This means that small hats will prevail for the early season, to be folowed by the other sort when suits shall give way to dresses and the latter finally merged in lingeries frocks for wear at Summer resorts.

The tailored suits undoubtedly call for a hat of tailored type, and this is best expressed in the small chapeau. The latter inclines to the directoire shapes worn by men of that period and adapted by the modern designers for women's wear. Then there are the semi-tailored hats in poke suggestion that are a survival or a modification of 1830 headwear.

Indeed, some of these hark beyond that period and are termed Louis XVI., as they are popularly supposed to be molded on the lines of the hat worn by the ladies of the court of Varsailles, particularly such ladies who affected the pannier dress and milkmaid apparel instituted by Marie Antoinette when she played at being a dairymaid. Such hats are usually characterized by a floating streamer, bunches of quaint half-faded flowers and the occasional use of metallic laces.

* * *

Ribbons have come into their own this Spring. They are used in great quantities for the crowns of hats, for streamers and for facings. One must also state that interest is being taken in ostrich trimming, particularly in ornaments and wee feathers that look more like fancy buttons or loops of fronds than the regulation tip or plume. The French milliners, as well as the American designers, have been trying for the last four or five seasons to make ostrich popular, in place of the prescribed aigrette and paradise plume. It looks as if some success might attend their combined efforts this Spring.

Starched lace is one of the weird novelties. It really is not starched, but simply put through a process that gives it a laundered look. Frequently it is combined with tulle to develop a dressy turban or a large hat. Chantilly lace is also in extensive use. One of the newest conceits is a crin hat designed by Evelyn Varon, which is accompanied by a Spanish veil and a ribbon necklet.

Talbot has sent over a helmet hat, severe but stunning in its outline and softened by the addition of the tea veil; from Maison Lewis is a shape known as the allies' hat. It is quite small and has envelope flaps which are turned back against the hat and meet in a point at the top of the crown. About the latter there are posed small birds in black and gray coloring.

CHANGE BABY'S CLOTHES.

Baby's clothes should be changed throughout once each day at the time of the bath. In dressing him he should lie upon the lap and the clothes be drawn on over the feet and not over the head.

Until after he is four months' old no change need be made in clothing for sleeping except to change the slip for a warmer night garment.

MONKEY IS BRITISH SAILORS' MASCOT

The greatest mistake mothers make in the dressing of their babies and older children is that of overdressing. In the hot weather baby should be kept cool and comfortable. Babies who are too warmly dressed have indigestion.

On hot, sultry days the little flannel skirt and socks may come off; even the wool shirt may be changed to a thin cotton one worn over the silk and wool band. Whenever a baby perspires he is dressed too warmly. Let this rule decide you in trying to make baby comfortable in the hot months.

The average mother has such fears over her children catching cold that she makes the mistake of dressing them in thick, heavy underwear. Remember the temperature of our apartments is between 70 and 80 degrees.

The child is overheated in the house and when he goes outdoors with his moist skin not accustomed to temperature reaction, which is one of the skin's chief protecting functions he is chilled and quickly "takes cold."

Let the children wear lightweight underwear and put on warm garments when they go outdoors.

Blankets are an important and necessary part of baby's wardrobe. When he is young one blanket goes about with him while we have him.

FABRICS FOR SPRING.

Fabrics for Spring may be summed up by saying that serge, taffeta and Georgette crepe form practically the basic materials for suit or dress models. There are, to be sure, many variants of these, and on them have been reared several novel weaves to be used as trimmings or to offer a marked contrast with them.

During the last two or three seasons we have become familiar with the use of gabardine for the tailleur and the street dress. It is really a heavy wale serge and bears close relationship to the old-time whipcord. This Spring we have practically the same weave introduced under the name of Poiret twill. One finds in it all the new tones, including beige and gray, as well as in the popular navy, some of the browns and the high colors.

It can hardly be said that taffeta has been revived, since it has never been really out of fashion during the last half decade or so. Paris includes taffeta quite as a matter of course each season, whether it be Spring or Autumn; and America has willingly followed her example. Taffeta and serge are favored fabric combinations, and other than that taffeta is employed very extensively for the modeling of dresses all the way from the morning frock to the informal afternoon affair or the elaborate confection for the evening.

TARTAN SILKS.

As always at the beginning of the Spring season, an effort is being made to find favor for tartan silks. Such designers at Jenny, Lanvin and Cheruit include dresses and combination costumes each season, one of whose component parts is composed of plaided taffeta. In this country the idea seems to prevail that the Highlander patterns are better adapted to the fashioning of clothes for children, and the vogue has not attained any worthwhile proportions with the grownups.

If one cares neither for checks nor plaids, she has the alternative of stripes. The new taffetas and satins with narrow vari-colored stripes on grounds of mulberry, green, periwinkle blue, dove gray, chartreuse and rose are irresistibly attractive. They strike a certain old-fashioned note, which American women appear ready to cultivate.

Indeed, one has only to study the daguerreotype of one's grandmother to know just what sort of silks will be the rage during the Spring and early Summer. As a matter of fact, these silks have been reproduced in wallpaper and upholstery fabrics between times.

FOR THE WORKBAG.

A small emery bag, silk covered, to resemble a flower, to which appropriate leaves and stem may be added, will be found an exquisite, though extremely useful, rosebud for the workbox.

TARNISHED SILVER.

Tarnished silver is easily cleaned with powdered whiting mixed to a pase, with ammonia and water. Rub the paste on with one leather and have another leather to polish it off again.

NEEDLEWORK NOTES.

The doilies which are used on the summer porch can be most attractively weighted by beads so that they will not be carried away or misplaced by a breeze. If the doily is square a cluster of porcelain beads fastened in each corner of the cover will be sufficient. If the doilies are embroidered, colors matching the embroidery should be used. One orange and two beads on a blue and white doily would be most attractive.

It is a great convenience to have the petticoat on an elastic band so that the length and placing of the fullness can be adjusted at will. It also does away with the embarrassment of having the skirt "come down," as there are no buttons to give way at the worst possible time. The slit in the back of the skirt may be sewed up and the skirt slipped over the head, which does away with the opening showing under a thin dress.

HEALTH AND BEAUTY.

If you change from high shoes to low shoes or slippers for evening wear before going out, bathe the ankles and limbs well with alcohol. When you return take a quick hot bath and a good rubbing with a Turkish towel. Go to bed at once or you will be apt to catch cold.

To remove wrinkles under the eyes make a soft pad of two or three layers of old linen soaked in white of egg and alcohol (equal parts), lay it under the eyes and let it remain on over night. Repeat every night until you obtain the desired effect. Bathe the eyes in the morning with cold water.

To cultivate good health should be the object of every woman who cares about her appearance. There are four rules which govern good health—fresh air, plenty of sleep, simple foods and daily bathing. The last is by no means the least. The daily bath has as much to do with preserving one's health, and incidentally one's beauty, as any of the other three rules. Whether this bath shall be a cold or a warm one must be for the individual to decide, but the body should be washed all over once every day.

CONCERNING WOMEN.

The woman's section of the Navy league in Hawaii has over 300 members.

More than 10,000 women are employed in the shirt waist, corset and white goods factories in and around Newark, N. J.

Kansas women vote and hold offices the same as men, and some are mayors, doctors, lawyers, architects, civil engineers, etc.

Mme. Melba, the opera singer, intends to establish a permanent home in California, where she will teach girls with voices who are unable to cultivate them on account of having no means to do so.

Of the nine candidates who recently passed the examinations for medical degrees at the University of London seven were women.

Miss Alice S. Coleman makes $300,000 worth of artificial flies a year. She has been in business as a professional fly-maker for more than ten years.

RESEED PASTURES AND MEADOW.

Stand Can Thus Be Thickened This Spring.

Pastures and meadows which are failing can be made more productive by reseeding early this spring. Thin stands not only decrease the yields of pasture or hay, but also give noxious weeds a better chance to get started.

The best method of improving such fields, says the farm crops department at Ames, is to scatter a mixture of timothy and clovers early this spring, using one-third to one-half the amount of seed per acre recommended for new seedings. A disc drill is good for this purpose, permitting the seed to fall into the gashes made by the discs. If a drill is not available the ground should be disced, the seed broadcasted and then harrowed. Manure applied at this time will increase the growth.

MAY

L 908

U 141

Commissioners Allewances For March 1916

Garrett Clipper, election	$ 7.35
S. E. Shutt, election	38.61
Wm. H. Beuchat, election	64.50
Frank Pyle, election	20.74
Charles Knapp, election	40.00
J. M. Norford, election	59.75
W. D. Stump, election	40.00
M. Boland, election	48.90
C. G. Huntington, election	56.35
Neff Culler, election	58.50
Frank Wise, election	59.35
E. L. Oster, election	57.90
John R. Sutton, election	59.75
W. C. Miller, election	55.60
Percy Walker, election	59.30
Henry St. Clair, election	54.90
Philip Schopff, election	61.50
J. P. Long, election	52.35
H. W. Grabill, election	62.90
L. B. Gatten, election	57.35
J. W. Motorff, election	55.30
S. S. Shutt, election	50.70
Fred Schulthess, election	60.35
B. B. McEnderfer, election	50.70
Francis M. Merica, election	53.35
M. J. Shoudell, election	54.92
David E. Ocker, election	58.35
A. W. Bair, election	56.70
Edson Beard, election	4.00
F. A. Jenkins, election	58.50
John Hebel, election	41.80
W. F. DeVeny, election	62.10
E. R. Zumbrunner, election	50.90
Courier Co., election	281.35
Orin Bair, election	61.10
H. C. Hathway, election	3.50
F. M. Hines, election	57.35
Wm. McMorgan, election	59.35
Henry L. Houser, election	54.05
Frank Shook, election	58.35
C. C. Cook, election	60.85
James Farner, election	52.95
Gilbert Greenwood, election	53.60
Auburn Printing Co., election	7.32
James Husselman, election	7.50
J. S. McLeod, election	58.35
Central Union Tel Co., tel. & toll	19.66
Home Tel. Co., tell. & toll.	42.90
John Hebel, clerk salary	600.00
Courier Co., clerk supplies	15.78
S. P. Nelson, salary auditor	787.50
Courier Co., supplies auditor	116.62
Sam G. Stone, salary treasurer	600.00
Milliard Stone, supplies treasurer	21.35
H. O. Williams, salary recorder	375.00
H. O. Williams, recorder fees	128.75
Courier Co., supplies recorded	25.56
John P. Hoff, salary sheriff	575.00
John P. Hoff, sheriff per diem	26.00
John P. Hoff, sheriff fees	98.88
John P. Hoff, sheriff fees	60.33
Courier Co., supplies sheriff	9.10
Henry Deetz, salary assessor	237.50
Miles Baxter, sup. county supt.	3.00
Courier Co., sup. county assessor	1.10
Eugene Treesh, coroners inquest	39.20
Dr. L. N. Geisinger, sal sec. bd. health	95.00
Sam G. Stone & Son, sal. ex. bd health	5.00
Dr. L. N. Geisinger, sal ex. bd. health	10.50
F. L. Rodebaugh, sal. ex. bd. health	17.20
Mahlon Baker, truant of. sal.	10.00
Mathias Miller, janitor	75.00
Henry Ludwig, janitor	60.00
Hiram Enzor, janitor	60.00
Wm. Peters, janitor	62.00
Mathias Miller, sup. ct. house	3.00
Commercial Coal Co., sup ct. hse.	55.97
Auburn Water Lt. Co., sup. ct. hs	39.38
Mrs. Hiram Enzor, sup. ct. hs.	4.25
John Edwards, sup. ct. hs.	21.32
New York Central Ry. Co., sup. ct. hs.	85.28
Wotrell Mfg. Co., sup. jail.
Fank Hoff, sup. jail	5.50
United States Chemical Co., sup. jail	8.08
George Moss, sup. jail	1.00
J. Stebing, sup. jail	1.50
Ophia Bolinger, lab. co. farm	17.33
W. C. Workman, lab. co. farm	25.00
T. E. Quince, lab. co. farm	25.00
Fay Brown, lab. co. farm	21.66
Mary Brown, lab. co. farm	21.66
Culbertson Hwd. Ho., sup co. farm	7.35
Frank Hoff, sup co. farm	3.39
F. C. Bollinger, sup. co. farm	31.50
W. C. Kettering, sup. co. farm	40.00
New York Central R.R. Co., sup co. farm	57.28
Edmund A. Cole Co., sup. co. fm	35.80
Wm. H. Loy, sup. co. farm	8.75
North-Western Mfg. Co., sup. co. farm	15.05
Wm. H. Loy, pauper burial	30.30
White Manual Labo Inst. ex. state institution	254.80
Children Aid So. ex. state inst.	109.20
Charles Rainier, soldier burial	50.00
Oscar Zimmerman Adm., soldier burial	50.00
Garrett Clipper, adv. & ptg	4.35
Fred B. Leighty, adv. & ptg.	5.85
Auburn Ptg. Co., adv. & ptg.	50.52
Chausmeier & Archer, ex. high.	30.00
A. L. Link, ex. high.	6.00
Neff Culler, road viewer	2.00
A. L. Gengnale, road viewer	2.00
C. A. Rugman, ex. highway	42.37
E. J. Lowe, farm. inst.	23.06
W. A. Austin, rec. com.	100.00
H. O. Williams, rec. records	50.00
Effie Madden, mak. assessor bks	180.00
George D. Weaver, incidental	15.00
C. L. Wagoner, bridges	16.00
Stanley Palmer, bridges	14.00
C. E. Manes, ex. por children	11.20
Bobbs Merrill Co., ex. ct. room	2.00
A. J. Schloss, ex poor children	11.30
H. L. Lawrence, ex. poor children	65.70
A. A. Kester, Butler poor	10.50
Donald Shook, Spencer poor	2.50
W. G. Erick, Spencer poor	4.72
J. M. Beams, Spencer poor	6.48
L. R. Zimmerman, Spencer poor	2.60
J. H. Kanauer, Richland poor	11.30
S. H. Barton, Richland poor	4.75
Perry Foote, Richland poor	5.00
Oster Bros., Richland poor	9.78
Butler Milling Co., Wilmington pr.	2.25
Wm. F. Shumaker, Wilmington pr	7.75
O. E. Clay, Wilmington poor	6.00
A. A. Kramer, Wilmington poor.	39.00
Wm. Kinsley & Son, Wilmington poor	3.05
S. O. Devitt, Wilmington poor	8.55
Noragon & Sons, Wilmingtonpoor	15.75
Allen Phelps, Wilmington poor	30.00
Oberlin Groc. Co., Wilmington pr	6.23
Robinett & Wise, Wilmington pr	4.82
C. C. Cook, Wilmington poor	18.76
Dr. L. H. Harrison, Wilmington poor	50.25
Singler & McDermott, Keyser pr	3.16
G. W. Spencer, Keyser poor	84.70
Singler & McDermott, Keyser pr	179.48
M. E. Klinger, Keyser poor	63.75
J. E. Baker, Keyser poor	8.18
Moyer Bros., Keyser poor	12.95
Sacred Heart Hosp., Keyser poor	20.00
A. F. Smith, Keyser poor	15.82
Dr. J. P. Strouse, Keyser poor	39.75
H. A. Gingery, Keyser poor	5.14
Dr. Frank A. King, Keyser poor	18.00
J. W. Schweitzer, Fairfield poor	2.87
Mrs. Ona Hess, Franklin poor	6.02
E. E. Swaidner, Franklin poor	27.34
Lewell Hagerty, Franklin poor	22.56
E. E. Swaidner, Franklin poor	22.86
J. H. Buss, Jackson poor	15.00
J. R. Clark, Jackson poor	50.97
Bert Beidler, Jackson poor	13.95
H. L. Lawrence, Union poor	2.50
Sacred Heart Hosp., Union poor	6.00
John H. Buss, Union poor	23.48
Frank Bassett, Union p oor	17.54
Schabb Bro. & Co., Union poor	6.00
Yesbers Coal Co., Union poor	15.75
Wyatt Coal Co., Union poor	4.50
A. J. Harris, Union poor	1.50
E. T. Cochran, Union poor	33.00
Bert Reasoner, Union poor	24.07
Ray Dilgard, Union poor	25.00
W. G. Chaney & Son, Union poor	2.50
L. L. Daniel, Union poor	103.29
Wm. H. Loy, Union poor
Frank Hoff, Union poor	42.91
Wm. Kruse, Union poor	15.00
Frank Pyle, Union poor	28.25
Dr. L. Geisinger, Union poor	143.25
F. M. Hines, Union poo	30.00
W. A. Beaty, Union poor	12.76
G. W. Morr, Union poor	32.65
Hebel Bros., Union poor	10.32
J. C. Hursh, Union poor	15.41
Ind. Ltg. Fuel Co., Union poor	5.50
G. A. Brugh, Union poor	4.60
A. J. Schloss, Union poor	2.45
Auburn Produce Co., Union poor	54.67
Dr. W. W. Swarts, Union poor	106.00
Dr. E. K. Schurtz, Grant poor	3.00
New York Central, Grant poor	1.26
Harry Beidler, Grant poor	15.67
E. A. Bowan, Grant poor	10.11
Grueter Bros., Grant poor	2.00
James A. Husselman, Grant poor	18.00
Herman Hartman, Smithfield poor	8.00
St. Joseph Hosp., Smithfield poor	15.30
E. K. Schurtz, Smithfield poor	12.00
E. A. Brown, Smithfield poor	8.70
W. F. Baughman, Smithfield poor	7.15
Grueter Bros., Smithfield poor	4.05
L. V. Grimm, Smithfield poor	4.95
Ellis & Kirklin, Smithfield poor	8.00
Nathan Grain Co., Concord poor	5.02
Ed Leighty, Concord poor	2.50
L. H. Harrison, Troy poor	27.50

S. P. NELSON,
Auditor.

For EXPERT
Auto Repairing
and Painting
GO TO
CAMPBELL & SON
AUBURN, IND.

Satisfaction guaranteed.

Our Painter and Mechanic are high class workman.

Special attention will be given to your Electrical equipment and Magneto work

We also charge storage batteries.

Get Our Prices.

Sound
Pure Bred
Percheron
Stallion
Right Sort
Enrollment No. 2873

Years past, this horse has been standing at Auburn; but we are now located at St. Joe in the barn just north of the B. & O. tracks near the mill. Will stand for the season at home, 2 miles north of St. Joe on Monday and Tuesday of each week; and on Wednesday, Thursday, Friday and Saturday of each week in the barn at St. Joe

TERMS:
$15 to Insure Living Colt

E. W. BEABER
Owner

Up-to-the-Minute.

There is satisfaction in any deal when the person with whom you are dealing comes right up-to-the-minute. That is the record the Lincoln Life Insurance Co., of Wayne, is trying to establish, so their policy holders will have the confidence of fair treatment and prompt attention, when the hour of sadness comes to their household. A record that is hard to beat is in the case of the death of Mrs. Harry Sloat, of Hudson, Ind. Mr. and Mrs. Sloat had a joint policy for $1,000 written December 14, 1915. On January 5, she took sick with the measles, recovering so as to be about, she then suffered a relapse turning into pneumonia and then gan-green of the lungs developed, taking her life on April 14, 1916, at 5:00 a. m. Mrs. Sloat was but 23 years old leaving three children for the husband to care for. To show what prompt service was rendered in this case by 4:30 p. m., the check was ready and in Mr. Sloat's hands.

Getting within the next 10 days 2 cars of 5inch genuine West Virginia Lump Coal. Please order now.
St Joe Elevators.

Patronize
the merchants who advertise in this paper. They will treat you right.

To Oil Or Not to Oil

To oil or not to oil? That is the question.

The question of oiling the streets of St. Joe will be settled by the voters at a special election held next Tuesday, May 9. This election will be of an informal nature, its purpose being to enable the town board to take action in the matter in accornance with the will of the people. The polls will open at 8 a. and close ot 6 p m. Will Curie, Dr. C. R. Price, Jacob Sechler, Thomas Ricketts and F. R. Bowman will constitute the election board, to serve without pay.

The foregoing action was determined at a meeting of the town board, held Monday evening Citizens were invited to attend and discuss the question, H L. Dunkle and Merritt Barney being the principal speakers, both favoring oiling.

Getting within the next 10 days 2 cars of 5inch genuine West Virginia Lump Coal. Please order now.
St. Joe Elevators.

REAL ESTATE NEWS

CONCORD.

J. M. Hamilton to Mary E Hardy, part of S. W. ¼ of section 15, $1.

S. S. Widney to Harlow Ulm, 10 acres in section 15, $500.

Oak Husselman to Ella Thomas N. W. of the N. W. of section 12, $1

SPENCER.

Minnie Oberholtzer to Milt Spitler, one-fifth of the E. ½ of the S. E. ¼ of section 33, $1,000.

Addison Herrick to Nancy Kennedy, 20 acres in section 29, $2,000.

H. W. Beams to Charles E. Markle, part of the N. W. ¼ of section 33, $200.

NEWVILLE

The Warner children are recovering from the measles.

Trustee Tustison was taking the numeration around Newville, last Thursday.

Lew Palmer and family were Sunday guests of Mr. Hass and wife, south of town.

Elmer Wyatt and wife were guests of their daughter, Mrs. George Simanton and family, last Friday.

Dewey Miller with his sister, Mrs Nellie McDonald, of Butler, were guests of Ira Mendenhall, near Artic, Sunday.

Mrs. Ollie Smith came home last Wednesday from the Lutheran hospital, where she underwent an operation. She is feeling fine.

SPENCERVILLE R. F. D. NO. 2

Mrs. V. Miller and daughter spent Sunday at LaOtto.

C. M. Wearley and family were Auburn shoppers, Saturday.

Miss Grace Cook was a Friday night guest of Miss Ethel Soule.

W. O. Miller and wife were Sunday guests of Walter Perkins and wife.

The Ladies Aid of the Brick Church will meet Wednesday with Mrs. Mabel Repp.

James Dorsey, wife and children, of Hicksville, spent Sunday with Chas. Haifley and wife.

Lewis Markle and wife, and Chas. Cook and wife were Sunday guests of Clinton Webb and wife.

The school closed at Wise's, Friday. All the patrons brought well filled baskets and 68 partook o the bounteous dinner, an intetesting program was rendered in the afternoon. Essie Merrill, teacher.

Seven room house, on West Main St., for sale or rent. Other well located residence properties and vacant lots for sale on easy terms. S. S. WIDNEY.

TEMPERANCE NOTES

(Conducted by the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union.)

WHY DRINKERS ARE FAT.

The labor leaders are beginning to teach through the pages of their journals the nature and effects of alcohol upon the physical organism. The following is from the United Mine Workers' Journal:

"Not all hard drinkers are fat, but the tendency of alcoholics to obesity is too marked to escape notice. A well-known doctor says it is because the alcohol usurps the function of the fat, which accumulates. This is how he explains it:

"It is noticeable that those addicted to the use of alcoholic beverages often reveal a tendency to corpulence which is proportionate to their use of the drug. The fatness is not a sign of health. It is not even an indication that alcohol is harmless. It is merely the result of the complete oxidization of the substance of alcohol by the human body. The body will oxidize a two-ounce quantity of alcohol in 24 hours, and will do it so completely that no trace of alcohol can be found in any excretory substance. This simply means that the unnatural heat produced in the body by the presence of the stimulant answers, for the time being at least, for what would otherwise be produced by the expenditure of fats and carbohydrates. These latter are the fuel stored up by the body and normally burned up in the production of necessary bodily heat—though not a natural heat—and this expenditure is avoided. The fat is therefore stored up in the body unused, and corpulence is the necessary result. This, of course, is not a normal condition nor a proper process. It becomes more unnatural with increasing use of alcohol."

STOP ALL DRINKING.

A handbook recently issued by the German government for the use of field surgeons sounds a note of warning against John Barleycorn. The article is by Prof. Max Gruber of the Royal Hygienic institute of Munich. We quote:

"This is no time for the use of alcohol. Not only is the guzzling of all alcoholic drinks to be stopped, but the use of even small amounts is, as a rule, an evil.

"It is scientifically established that even small amounts of alcohol weaken and paralyze our powers of observation, memory and judgment, the command of our intellect, our wills and our reason, our impulses, our brains, our body; cut down the gains from exercise, the endurance of hardships, the ability to resist external injuries.

"One's strength and mental power may be enough to withstand the moderate use, but efficiency cannot be improved by it. And those of us who are small and deficient in mental and physical power act recklessly when we dissipate the little that we have, especially when we are under obligations to accomplish the most that we can."

AMERICA'S GREATEST FOES.

"Had saloons never been discovered, and were it then in my power to portray the effects of such a discovery, all men, without exception, would declare it impossible to conceive of any more diabolical plan for the degradation and destruction of the human race. Our greatest foes are the manufacturers and distributers of alcohol. The stories of injuries done by drink are so written in the sad life history of many of our greatest men; are so evident throughout our land in squalor, poverty, misery and crime, and replete in prisons, workhouses and asylums, as well as in domestic infelicity, that it is inconceivable that any intelligent, rational man can deny the necessity for strong, united action to rid the land of both manufacturer and distributor."—Dr. A. Kelley of Johns Hopkins Hospital, Baltimore.

BEER WORSE THAN WHISKY.

This is what the Home Life Insurance company of New York has to say about beer:

"Of all intoxicating drinks, it is the most animalizing. It dulls the intellectual and moral and feeds the sensual and beastly nature. Beyond all other drinks, it qualifies for deliberate and unprovoked crime. In this respect it is much worse than distilled liquors. A whisky drinker will commit murder only under the direct excitement of liquor, a beer drinker is capable of doing it in cold blood. Long observation has assured us that a large proportion of murders deliberately planned and executed, without passion or malice, with no other motive than the acquisition of property or money, often of trifling value, are perpetrated by beer drinkers."

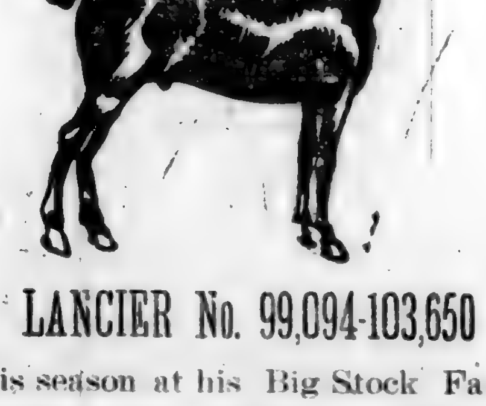
TO THE VOTER.

Which of your boys do you intend
Shall stand in the footprints of ruined men?
Will you help them to enter a life of woe
Because of your votes? Oh, no! Oh, no!
If you vote for saloons, I verily fear
You'll have to support them; so now look here
Which of your boys are you going to give
To ruin and death, that saloons may live?

DRINKERS BARRED.

We do not employ habitual drinkers, and never have, because they are not good workmen.—President White Automobile Company.

Farmers' Farmers'
NOTICE!
Scoville's Thoroughbred Registered
Imported Percheron Stallion



LANCIER No. 99,094-103,650

will stand this season at his Big Stock Farm, one mile east and one mile south of Butler. This prize winning stallion is five years old, weighs 2,040 pounds right now, is jet black with a star in the forehead, and is the finest and highest priced horse ever brought to this part of the country. Stands at $15.00. Colt insured to stand and suck. Both local and long distance phones at the farm. Call us up. Visitors welcome daily. Call and see our Registered Percheron Mares and this last years colts from this horse. You will find nothing better in the state.

Church Notes.

M. P. Church Announcements.
J. C. Coons, Pastor.

Concord:—Sunday School, 9:00 a. m.; Preaching Services, 10:30 a. m.

Fairview:—Sunday School, 9 a. m.

St. Joe:—Sunday School, 9:00 a. Christian Endeavor, 6:30 p. m., Preaching, 7:30 p. m.; Prayer Meeting, Thursday, 7:30 p. m.

Lutheran Church Announcements.
A. K. Mumma, Pastor.

St. Joe:—Sunday School, 9:00 a. m.; Christian Endeavor, 6:30 p. m. Prayer Meeting, Thursday evening.

Mothers' Day will be observed next Sunday morning, May 7th. A cordial invitation is extended to all mothers and their friends to be present. Special music will be rendered and Mrs. A. K Mumma will deliver the sermon for the occasion. Come and enjoy Mothers' Day.

Christian Church Announcements.

St. Joe:—Bible School at 9 a. m.; Morning Worship (Unified Service) 9:45 a. m.; Choir practice, 3:00 p. m.

Our Classified Ad Department

FreeColumn

All advertisements in this department are free to subscribers only.
—EDITOR NEWS.]

FOR SALE:-Red Raspberry plants, 1c. apiece. C. A. WOODCOX.

POTATOES for sale:--$1.00 per bushel. Early Ohio, Early Rose, Early Pataika, Good Times Potatoes. A few bushels of small size ones of the above varieties at half-price. Also some Timothy Hay for sale. W. L. HALLABAUGH, St. Joe.

FOR SALE:-"True Early Rose" and "Irish Cobler" potatoes $1.00. Choice, pure and true to name seed. Only a few bushels left. DALE WIDNEY.

FOR SALE:-Good Folding Sewing Table. Cheap. Mrs. C. B. Leighty.

FOR SALE: Sweet Potato, Celery, Pepper, Cabbage, and Tomato plants for sale. Mrs. G. W. Woodcox.

House for Rent. Carl Johnson, St. Joe, R. F. D. No. 1.

LOST:-Between the Spencerville Race-Bridge and the Ben Soule home, a dark blue horse blanket with green and light brown stripes at the sides. Finder please return to Ben Soule, Rt. 2, or call by phone No. 45-20 Spencerville.

New Rugs—Curtains—Marquisetts and Scrims for House-cleaning time.
SCHLOSS', Auburn.

100 Per Cent.
INCREASED EARNINGS.

The following is fac-simile of certificate of Bond issued to each Depositor in this Bank.

No. ____________	Grabill, Ind., ____________ 19___
Mr. ____________

THIS IS TO CERTIFY that your DEPOSITS in this bank are INSURED under a bond of THE AMERICAN GUARANTY COMPANY of Columbus, Ohio.

THE GRABILL STATE BANK.

PRESERVE THIS. By Albert Egly, Cashier.

Postal Savings pay 2 per cent. Interest and the money is placed in banks who have to furnish a Bond to the government to guarantee that the funds are safe in that Bank.

We pay 4 per cent. Interest and give you the same guarantee. An increased earning of 100 per cent.

THIS is the only Bank in this community thus insuring its depositors.

Total Assets, over $175,000

The Grabill State Bank
Established 1906

Joseph Witmer, President
David Klopfenstine, v. pres.
Albert Egly, Cashier
Joseph A. Grabill, Director
Peter W. Amstutz, Director
Julius Gehrig, Director
John B. Haifley, Chairman Board Directors

MAY

L 908

0 1 4 2

Has Your Subscription Expired? Come in and renew it next time you are in town.

ST. JOE NEWS.

NO newspaper can succeed without advertising, therefore we solicit the patronage of our readers for those who by their advertising help to make this paper possible.

VOL. XXX ST. JOE, DeKALB COUNTY INDIANA, THURSDAY MAY 11 1916 NO. 19

Don't be signing your name always to an

I. O. U.

Sign a "Pay to the order of" with a neat bank balance behind it and be independent.

A bank account is better than owing the other fellow. Sign checks instead of notes is what we mean. See?

St. Joe Valley Bank--State Bank

4 per cent. paid on certificates if left 1 Year.

The Gossip Say-

Subscribe for this paper.

FENCE 23c. per rod and up Inquire for prices. P. A. SHURTS.

Tim Egler and family Sundayed at Woodburn, the guests of her parents.

Place orders for Bran and Middlings, Car load coming. St. Joe Elevator.

W. E. Peterson and wife were called to Cedarville, Saturday, on account of the serious illness of one of her relatives.

The M. P. Aid Society will meet with Mrs. Mary Kinsey, Friday afternoon of this week. All members should be present.

See Wallace for Building Material at St. Joe Saw Mill.

It is better—Indian Gasoline at Patterson's Garage. No higher in price—but better.

Mrs. Sarah McCrory came Monday to spend the summer with her sister, Margaret Swineford.

J. L. Rhodenbaugh, wife and daughter spent the greater part of last week, at Anderson the guests of her relatives.

Frank Walker, of Compton, Ill., was here last week a couple of days the guest of relatives. He was at Hicksville to see his brother, who had a light stroke of paralysis some time ago, but is about well again.

The ladies of the Woman's Home & Foreign Missionary Society of the Lutheran Church will hold a Market, Saturday, May 13th., at the church. Sale to open at ten o'clock a. m. Baked goods and many other good things to eat will be for sale.

Building Blown Down.

A wind storm struck St. Joe, last Saturday evening, accompanied by a heavy shower of rain. The appearance of the clouds at this time were, that wind was in evidence. When the storm had subsided the new building of C. A. Patterson was in ruins. The carpenters and masons had just quit work for the day when the storm came and the scaffoling on the interior of the walls had been removed leaving the walls standing alone. The wind blew the front of the building down to the ground, causing $100 damage to Mr. Patterson Work is being rushed to rebuild this part of the building so the carpenters can finish the job.

Result of Enumeration.

The following is the result of the school enumeration as made in the nearby townships:

Concord—Males 143, females 137 total 280, gain 26, number atttending school 242.

Spencer—Males 114, females 98, total 212, loss 1, number attending school 190.

Newville—Males 72, females 73, total 145, gain 3, no note as to school attendance.

In the county a gain of 200 was made this year and the townships showing the largest gains are Concord, Butler and Troy.

See CURIE for your Check Row Corn Planter—Make the work easier and then you can do more.

Special Sale

Real Bargain

We have unloaded what flour we had left in the car in our warehouse, and will continue the special sale of the famous

GOLD MEDAL FLOUR

AT

$6.80 Per Barrel

To and including May 15

Anyone wishing some is advised to come at once and take advantage of our SPECIAL PRICES

Steward Lumber & Grain Co.

Spencerville, Indiana

FULLY PROTECTED

PHOTO BY FRANK TOURNIER

Church Notes

M. P. Church Announcements.
J. C. Coons, Pastor.

St. Joe:—Quarterly Conference on Saturday afternoon at 2 o'clock; Sunday School, 9:00 a. m., with a Mother's Day program and Communion service; Christian Endeavor, 6:30 p. m.; Prayer Meeting on Thursday evening at 7:30.

Fairview:—Sunday School, 9:00 a. m.; Preaching Services, 7:30 p. m.; Subject "Our Mothers". An appropriate sermon for Mother's Day.

Concord:—Sunday School, 9:00 a. m.

Lutheran Church Announcements.
A. K. Mumma, Pastor.

St. Joe:—Sunday School, 9:00 a. m.; Christian Endeavor, 6:30 p. m. Preaching services 10:30 a. m.; Prayer Meeting, Thursday evening.

Christian Church Announcements.

St. Joe:—Bible School at 9 a. m. with short program suitable for Mother's Day; Preaching 10:15 a. m., S. O. Redacre, subject "Mother"; Christian Endeavor, 6:00 p. m. with Libbie Milliman, leader. Baccalaureate sermon at 7:30 p. m.; subject, "Crossing the Dead Line".

LOCAL ITEMS.

Order Saturday Evening Post, 5c.

FOR SALE:-8 ewes and 10 spring lambs. MRS. ELLA THOMAS, Phone 89-2.

Kit Carson left Monday for Wolcottville, where he will remain with relatives. He enjoyed his week's stay in St. Joe and his old friends were pleased to see him.

Grover Curie and family moved last week from the Simanton property in the west end of town, into the Reese property vacated by Frank Shaffer and family.

The Old Color-Bearer

Through the city's crowded highways,
Marches on the color-bearer:
White his hair falls to his shoulders,
White as Colorado's mountains.
Proud he bears aloft the standard,
Proud he bore it in the Sixties;
Kenesaw and Lookout Mountain,
High above the clouds it floated.
Heed, ye young men, heed the lesson,
Keep untarnished all its glory;
Glory kindling first at Concord,
Spreading West to far Malolos.
Heed ye! Heed ye well the lesson!
Grow not up untrained for battle;
Sell ye not your precious birthright
For a sordid mess of pottage.
Chant our epic, fellow-patriots,
Firmly weld the new-come aliens;
Tell of Prescott, Hale and Reynolds,
Custer, Benchley and young Cheney.
Thus will all the wars and rumors
Fade away as fades the twilight,
True to all our fathers died for,
Firm we'll march adown the ages.
—G. W. Taylor in Uncle Sam's Magazine.

Daily Jots

Glen Freeburn and wife moved Monday into the Harry Kees property on West Main St.

Don't go around in darkness when you can get one of the Pearson Flash Lights, all sizes and prices, at CURIE's store.

Dump your ashes and rubbish at the new hay barn as soon as you can for filling. Easy place for unloading. Barn just west of Coal and Lumber Sheds at St. Joe.

Daily Bread Flour is made from choice Indiana Wheat unbleached, and is for sale at all grocers at 80c. 1-8 bbl., or $6.00 bbl. Get it either at your grocery or at the ST. JOE MILLS.

Reuben Koch and wife, of Churubusco, are here this week, the guest of relatives. W. E. Moudy is here also supervising the erection of some monuments in Riverside cemetery.

Getting within the next 10 days 2 cars of 5inch genuine West Virginia Lump Coal. Please order now.
St. Joe Elevators.

The result of the special election held in St. Joe, Tuesday, was 49 for oil and 30 against, so it is a settled fact that we will not be compelled to choke dust for the summer. In all 81 votes were cast, two of which were thrown out, on account of the marking. The question was a difficult one and needed special precaution in marking the ballot, "Yes" or "No". Some people never will learn to vote. The per cent. of votes cast were more than anticipated.

For Ice.

Just phone your order to Chas. Koch and he will arrange to deliver ice in St. Joe once a week Pure artificial ice will be had for your summer use.

Car Load

...OF...

Washburn-Crosby

Gold Medal

Flour

Will be on tracks at St. Joe, in a few days and you will find no better time than now to buy your flour. You can buy 1 sack or as much more as you care to and must be taken from the car.

This will be your last opportunity to buy at the price we are quoting on this car.

Persons that have received cards from me concerning this flour will call at the store and make inquiry. A large list of orders have been received. Why not yours.

Ed. Leighty

St. Joe, Ind.

YOUR NAME

Is it on our subscription list?

We will guarantee you full value

FOR YOUR MONEY

Patronize the advertisers.

Place orders for bran and middlings. Car load coming.
St Joe Elevator.

Bran & Middlings

A full carload will arrive within the next week or ten days. Be sure and place your order as early as possible. Have you tried a barrel of our salt?

St. Joe Elevator

The Nathan Grain Co.

OWNERS

Fort Wayne, Indiana

SAMUEL KEESLER, Local Manager.

A cruel Woman

is one that will feed innocent little chicks damp or musty feed, when you can buy Admiral Chick Feed that is Kiln Dried which kills that germ that starts to grow and then dies and of course gets musty. The little chicks in their scramble gets that and the result is death. Admiral contains proper proportions of Grit, Charcoal and Nutritious grain to give results, that is why we are now selling out our second ton.

Dunkle's Drug Store

The Place where YOU Get What YOU Pay For.

MAY

L 908

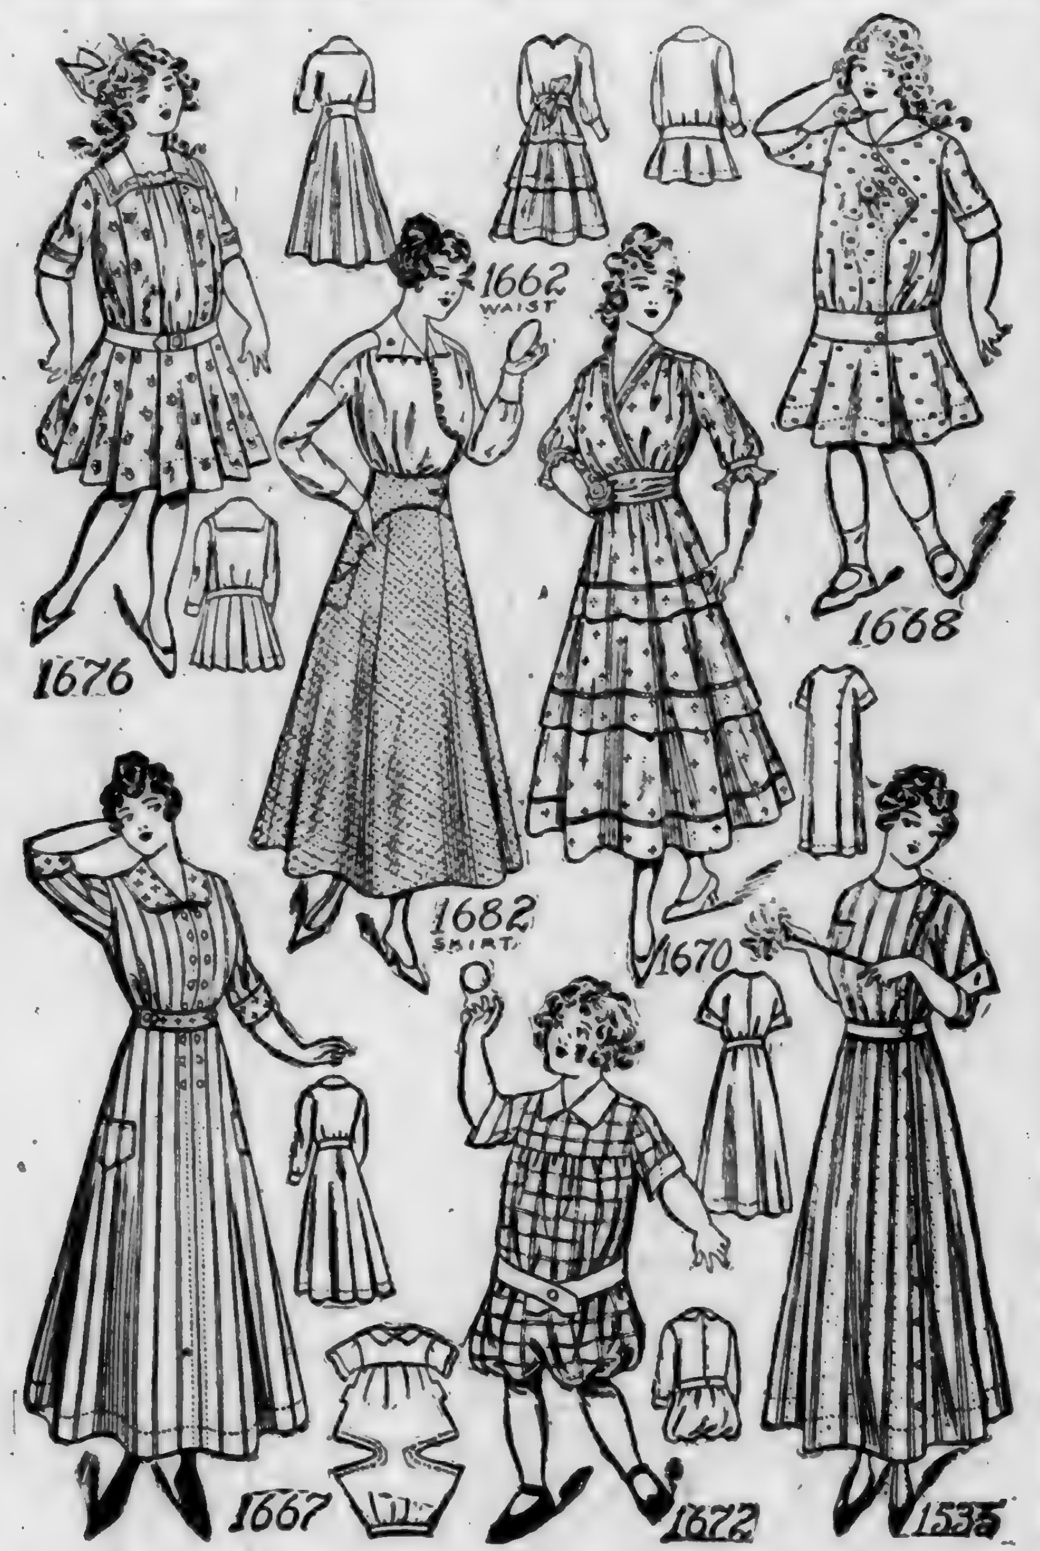
0143

Our Fashion Department

Prepared Especially for this Paper

Send All Orders Direct to this Paper



1676—Girls' Dress.

Cut in 4 sizes: 6, 8, 10 and 12 years. It requires 3 yards of 44-inch material for a 6-year size. Price, 10 cents.

1662-1682—Ladies' Costume.

Waist 1662, cut in 6 sizes: 34, 36, 38, 40, 42 and 44 inches bust measure. It requires 3 yards of 36-inch material for a 36-inch size. Skirt 1682, cut in 6 sizes: 22, 24, 26, 28, 30 and 32 inches waist measure. It requires 4¾ yards of 44-inch material for a 24-inch size, which measures 3⅓ yards at the foot. This calls for TWO separate patterns, 10 cents FOR EACH pattern.

1670—Costume for Misses and Small Women.

Cut in 3 sizes: 16, 18 and 20 years. It requires 5½ yards of 36-inch material for an 18-year size. The skirt measures about 3 yards at the lower edge. Price, 10 cents.

1668—Girls' Dress.

Cut in 4 sizes: 4, 6, 8 and 10 years. It requirqes 3⅛ yards of 44-inch material for an 8-year size. Price, 10 cents.

1667—Ladies' House Dress.

Cut in 6 sizes: 34, 36, 38, 40, 42 and 44 inches bust measure. It requires 6⅛ yards of 44-inch material for a 36-inch size. The skirt measures about 3⅔ yards at the lower edge. Price, 10 cents.

1672—Child's Rompers.

Cut in 4 sizes: 2, 4, 6 and 8 years. Size 6 years requires 2⅞ yards of 36-inch material. Price, 10 cents.

1335—Ladies' Over-All Apron.

Cut in 3 sizes: Small, Medium and Large. It requires 6¼ yards of 44-inch material for a Medium size. Price, 10 cents.

PATTERN ORDER.

Patterns
No.	Size

I enclose ....for Patterns

Name ....

Town ....

State ....

St. No., R. F. D. ....

Mail Your Order Direct to Publisher.

FARMERS ASK SILO QUESTIONS.

Experiments Show Clay Block Silo Satisfactory If Well Built and Is Warmer Than Wooden Silo.

What kind of a silo shall I build?

Will silage freeze more quickly in a hollow tile silo than a wooden one?

Does the exposed iron on a cement stave silo make it an undesirable type to build?

What, in brief, are the requisites of a good silo?

Does silage affect the wearing qualities of concrete?

These are questions that farmers are asking in their letters to the agricultural engineers who have briey compiled answers:

Cost, availability of material and durability are points to be considered in choosing a silo. The first two items, of course, will differ in different localities. Results with the clay block silo on many farms have proven very satisfactory. When built of good material and by good workmen we have heard of no complaint about this type.

Experiments have shown the hollow tile to be warmer than the wooden silo.

The exposed iron on a cement stave silo does corrode in a number of years. The bands may be replaced, however, for from $35 to $40.

The qualifications of a good silo are:

It should be air tight.

It should be smooth.

It should be built of durable material.

It should be built to withstand the bursting pressure of the silage.

Silage does not have any very detrimental effect upon well made concrete. Sand used in the concrete should contain no particles soft enough to be scratched with the thumb nail.

Just try drying your wool blankets on curtain stretchers if you wish them to retain usual length and width.

TO BREAK UP BROODY HEN.

Don't Duck Her in Water, Throw Her Off Nest or Starve Her.

Don't duck a sitting hen into the water trough to break up her broodiness, warn the poultrymen. Nor should she be thrown off the nest time after time or shut up in a coop without food or water because she wants to sit. These methods may break up her broodiness, but may also destroy her egg laying ability for some time.

Put her in a slatted bottom coop hung between two trees. Supply her with fresh water and plenty to eat and her broodiness will soon be broken up. A V-shaped trough can be placed in front of the coop so that a moistened food can be fed occasionally. Plenty of grit, green and animal food will help to get her to laying again soon.

NEED OF EXERCISE.

Exercise in some form is absolutely necessary for health. We are so constructed by nature that the digestive tract and alimentary tract demands bodily activity in order to perform its proper functions. Without it troubles begin to appear. Constipation becomes a chronic disease, the circulation becomes poor, the liver and kidneys do not work properly, and a thousand and one little troubles begin to make themselves felt. You may begin to grow corpulent because the body is unable to eliminate the surplus sugar and starch products. Or you may grow too thin because the assimilative organs are unable to work properly from lack of proper exercise.

Cut rounds of wax paper and put under the centerpieces on the polished table. This will prevent the linen adhering to the polished surface, as often happens from hot dishes.

THE PHANTOM WAGON

By MARY MILLER, Hampshire, Ill.

PRIZE STORY NO. 8.

Below we print another story of our Story Contest. This is an ideal method for amateur authors to secure recognition. Stories of love, adventure, descriptive, etc., will be printed in this and 75 to 100 other papers, if acceptable to the contest editor. Manuscript must be legibly written on one side of the paper, and will be printed in an early edition if accepted. If return of manuscript is desired, in the event of refusal, first class postage must be enclosed. Send all manuscripts to the editor of this paper.—Ed.

Dan and I had sat in my study talking until the coals had nearly burned out in the grate. He had been five years in the west since I had seen him. Outside a November rain beat against the windows and a mournful wind rattled the casements and howled about the corners of the house. As I leaned forward to add a few coals to the fire, I noiced my mantel clock said nearly midnight.

"Well, it's about the hour when ghosts do walk," I laughingly quoted. "Do you believe in them, at all?" Dan asked quickly, continuing, "I'd like to know what you'd think of an experience I had that first summer in Dakota. "I never could explain it, nor believe it, nor forget it," he added solemnly looking steadily into the coals. "Out with it, Ancient Mariner," I laughed seeing I must hear it. "It affects me beyond reason, I'd like to know how you'd explain it," Dan's face was very grave. "Maybe you could 'use' it, some day you have my permission," he tried to laugh.

Here is the story he told, but I wish I could give you Dan's words and tones and face as he told it in the light of the red coals, the sound of the wind and rain against the windows all that broke the silence of the sleeping household.

"You know I was in pretty bad shape," he began, "when I went up to Mary's, they gave me a year or so, I believe, of course Mary put me thru the regulation program, milk and eggs, sleeping out of doors, and so on. Not a "drink," old boy, nor a pipe, so you can't account for this thing that way. I slept on a cot in the front yard. Jim and Mary rigged up a mosquito net tent for me. I used to lie there, looking up at the stars, the sky is pretty vast up there, it's all sky, down to the level of the plains, and it makes a fellow feel small, I guess star-gazing always loosens up your worry about your affairs here. I got the calm and quiet of that sky, my nerves were never steadier, you can't account for it that way, either. Well one night, after I'd had my nine o'clock glass of milk, and located Vega, Antares and a few others, I dropped off into a fine sleep, but some noise among the animals, I suppose, awakened me. I looked up at my ancient friends in the sky and noticed the Dipper was near his midnight notch. I had slept so much, thanks to my conscientious sister, I was more than "caught up" on sleep and consequently wide awake. There was a piece of the old moon in the east, so it was lighter than when I had gone to bed. Well, as I lay there, I heard" his voice dropped to an odd, strained tone, "I heard the sound of wheels, heavy wheels tho' the rumble was distant. A passing team isn't of so frequent occurrence up there that one doesn't look at it. As the rumble grew louder and nearer I raised my self on my elbow and peered down the road. I could see nothing, tho, and lay back again. But the sound came nearer and clearer, I could hear the rattle of the wagon and the slow thud of the horses' hoofs on the sod road. I looked again, but could see nothing. Presently it seemed to be exactly in front of our "shack" I looked out thru the mosquito net walls of my tent; the road was not three rods distant, the sound of the wagon was there, directly in front of me; I could see the road plainly, the grain field across the road was white in the moonlight, but old fellow, there wasn't a wagon on that road! The sound of the wheels grew less, as I looked, and presently died away, to the south; I didn't know what to think; I had heard that wagon as plainly as I ever heard your voice, yet there had been no wagon on the road. I concluded it must have been in the fields east of the house, and tried to go to sleep, but I couldn't sleep somehow, I kept listening for those wheels by George, old fellow, I can't explain the queer feeling I had about it.

Mary asked me, at breakfast, if I'd slept well, and that was something she was wise enough not to ask, as a rule, so I told them I would have slept all right if there hadn't been a wagon out late in the fields somewhere I joked about the hustler that "goes forth to reap" making it hard for the "sluggard" to sleep" I caught a look of understanding between Jim and Mary, and fancied they were thinking me a fussy invalid, so I added in self-defence: "It's queer how the direction of sound deceives one at night; I was sure that wagon was in the road until I saw it wasn't." Jim suddenly seemed in an awful hurry to finish his coffee, and Mary had to attend to the baby's bread and milk.

"That afternoon I was lying under a tree, reading, when a man came down the road at the wildest speed I'd seen in that neighborhood of wild riding. He pulled up so suddenly I thought he'd upset—"Tell Jim to come to Pearson's quick," he said. "All on fire! no one there but old man and Nell," and he was off, faster than he'd come. I rode out to the field where Jim was, leading his best horse for him. By that time we could see the smoke rising from the cluster of buildings on the southern horizon. I followed Jim as fast as I could, on the slower animal, wondering if this fire could become as terrible as the old time prairie fires, or the forest fires of every fall. Before long, I passed men plowing a wide furrow on the south side of a mile square field of wheat. At the ranch, others were doing what they could to stop the fire, wetting roofs pailfuls at a time, handed along a line of half a dozen men and women, from pump to barn. A few others were getting things out of the house.

I saw a white-haired old man standing stock still in the midst of the confusion. Suddenly he clenched his right hand and threw his arm up into the air, shaking his first at the sky, I knew it was old man Pearson, cursing God for this misfortune. The young man who had ridden for Jim was at the pump working as fast as he had ridden. At the head of the line was a tall, slim girl who swung the pails of water on to the woman beyond, as if they were tennis balls. But it was hopeless, there were too few and there was a strong west wind burning shingles from the shack—were blowing onto the barn. I saw it would have to go; in just the second it took to get to the pump and take the pail from the girl I guessed she was "Nell." I shall never forget the look in her eyes.

"The flames were coming out on the barn roof in scores of places; but they didn't give up. I saw it was Jim on the roof, and hoped he'd come down before it was too late. Presently the young man ran to the barn to begin getting out the stock. He led out the horses, you know the difficulty, he was a cool chap, he went back into the barn when I wouldn't have gone except for his reasons she could not bear to have the animals burned to death.

After it was all over all gone, but the stock and a barn on the west side of the house, Jim asked old Pearson and his daughter to come to our house until the neighbors could help them rebuild their shack. The "neighbors," up there you know, are the handful of people within three or four miles. They said they'd stay there, and the next day I rode down pretty well loaded with things Mary sent to the girl. I found the young man there, beginning a new house. Old Pearson looked like a cyclone still especially, I noticed, when he looked in the direction of the young fellow I noticed, too, the young fellow eyed me rather sternly, when I talked to Miss Nell." Dan smiled reminiscently. "Miss Pearson was a new and interesting type, to me. I very soon understood the young man's point of view. he old man, clearly, was "dead sot agin it," as they'd say, up there.

One Sunday afternoon, two or three weeks later, young Anderson and Miss Nell rode over to call on Mary I was on the east side of the house and did not join them at once. I heard them talking of the completion of the new shack, the fire, and so on, then the girl spoke in a voice so different that I forgot my book, 'They said they heard the wagon that night before the fire," she said. The wagon, the night before the fire that was when I had heard the wagon I could not see. "Don't you remember they said they heard it the night before Mother died?" she went on with awed tone and a tremble, in her voice. "I can't help thinking," she began when Anderson's cheerful voice interrupted, "I can't help thinking about something else Nell has told me," I heard Mary saying, and congratulating them. "But if I should hear the wagon, the night before, I never could, never" her voice ended in a sort of sob. "The wagon," was it a ghostly omen in their family? I hesitated to question Mary, as I'd been an eavesdropper to learn what I had heard. Evidently she did not consider the subject sufficiently normal and cheerful to discuss with her convalescent brother. Of course I got occasional rumors chiefly of the likelihood of a runaway wedding, with possibly a tragic result, as old Pearson violently objected to the match why, I could not see as Anderson was a splendid young fellow in every way, with a good-sized ranch adjoining Pearsons.

Well, one night in September, about two months after that first night I heard it, I heard a wagon coming down the road again, just as plainly as I hear my own voice this minute, John. I heard the rumble coming nearer and nearer, till it seemed opposite my cot. I looked out in the road. In that clear starlight it would have been impossible not to see the outlines of a heavy wagon three or four rods away, but I saw nothing. The sound passed, died away. John, I never felt so queer in my life! I thought of what the girl had said: "They heard the wagon the night before the fire." "They heard it before Mother died." I said that over and over to myself, but it was not the sort of repetition that induces sleep. I presume I looked a rather discouraging patient the next morning. Mary looked at me and went to arranging the coffee cups without a word except her customary "Top o' th'" morning to you, brother." I thought she and Jim seemed rather nervous, underneath their persistent discussion of the harvesting. It was one of those warm, blue, hazy mornings that make you wish it was always September. About noon thunder clouds came up, and I remember noticing a big black cloud in the south, hanging over the Pearson ranch.

That night, just as we had finished supper, there was a big rap at the door, and a young man came in. I remembered having seen him with Anderson. "Can I see you outside a minute, Jim?" he demanded. Mary looked up; "You can tell us here, Bob, if its bad news Dan and I will have to hear it later, anyway. "I hate to tell you, Mrs. Jim," he stammered, "but old man Pearson's hanged himself in his barn this afternoon. Nell just found him; she's nearly crazy, but Anderson's there now and Mrs. Blakesly. He left a letter pinned on his coat, it tells everything, I guess some things nobody here ever knew, I reckon no one but Nell's read it yet, tho. She keeps saying "I heard the wagon." Say, did you folks ever hear it? Or don't you take any stock in that story?" "What story?" I demanded at once. "I heard a wagon the night before the fire and I heard it again last night."

"You did!" Bob gasped, "Well, by God, it's too much for me, the poor old man hanging there with that letter and then that wagon!" And Bob bolted for the door, nearly forgetting to ask Mary to go to Nell, his errand. "Now, Mary, tell me all you know of this story," I demanded. "I'm not a sick child! You wouldn't breathe a word when I heard the wagon!" I protested. "I thought it was too morbid to tell you, Dan," she said, "but you may as well hear it, now." So she and Jim told me what they knew. Pearson and his brother had come to the Dakotas in the '70's, had taken up a big lot of land, and were doing well. The younger brother, Dick, was a bit wild, drank too much, sometimes drove home at midnight, "full," his horses getting "straight" home, if he could not. One night, it seems, he'd been drinking a bit more than usual and winning in some games, too. He was "way up in the air," of course, and talked too freely about the girl his brother intended to marry—boasting he'd run off with her himself; she was ready to go with him any day, etc. The elder Pearson didn't frequent the saloon, but of course the talk was reported to him, by a friend who left the saloon before Dick left, as we learned later from the letter. Young Pearson left the town that night shortly before midnight; a man known only as "Black Pete" rode out with him. A little after midnight, the wagon pulled into Pearson's yard, arousing one of Pearson's men, but he paid no heed, as Dick was usually sober enough to unharness his team. In the morning, they saw the horses and wagon standing by the haystack. The horses had been content there, with plenty of hay. In the wagon box, they found Dick, dead—a bullet hole in his coat just above his heart and "Black Pete's" pistol beside him. "Black Pete" was never seen again. Young Pearson's pockets were empty, it was known he had made quite a little that night, in addition to a sum he'd just received for part of his wheat.

There was a great deal of excitement, of course, but those were rough times up there, drink and the devil, hand in hand, there was a man shot pretty regularly. All the evidence pointed to "Black Pete", of course his disappearance was ample proof of his guilt, if he hadn't forgotten his pistol. He was sought energetically, but he was experienced in defeating search. In a few years the affair was forgotten. But the elder Pearson lost the girl, anyway; she married Anderson's father. Pearson married shortly afterward, some ten years passed, then they lost their first baby, a son. Then the story started, somebody had heard a wagon the night before the baby died, a wagon going south, towards the Pearson's ranch from "town," but no tracks showed in the morning. There was some one who had heard it every year, on the anniversary of Dick's death always the wagon, going home. The story persisted thru all the years. When their second child, their daughter Nell, was about sixteen, Mrs. Pearson died. You remember what I heard Nell say, she had heard the wagon the night before her mother died. I had heard it, the fire had occurred, we had heard it again and old Pearson had hanged himself.

After the funeral, the story of his letter became known, it was a full confession. Pearson had been to see the girl, was returning home, met the "friend" from the saloon, heard of his brother's boast, went home, and to bed, but his wrath and jealousy sent him forth again. No one heard him ride away toward town, to meet his brother, his rival. They met, not far from what is now Jim's ranch. Pearson's anger got beyond his control, he forgot his brother had been drinking, he became drunk with rage and shot him. Then, of course, he threatened "Black Pete's" life if he didn't leave the country for good, gave him the money in his brother's pockets and what he had in his own, told him he'd be shot on sight if he returned, then made him "march," at the point of his own pistol. Then he rode home and the wagon and horses went on slowly with Dick's body." Dan paused. I waited in silence! "How could he have lived so long as he did, with that deed on his mind?" Dan demanded. "We know how people will justify their awful deeds to themselves, and time helps," I suggested. "Yes that's true, but the wagon, John, the sound of the wagon those nights, Dick's wagon, coming home, as it came home that night with his dead body?" Anderson and Nell wrote me once, a few years after their marriage; they said that the wagon had not been heard since old man Pearson's death. "Dan rose and stood leaning against the mantel, a tall, gaunt figure, looking down at me with a tense face. "What do you think of it, John?" he asked eagerly. "Do you think we'll understand it some day?" "Some day in the next century, perhaps," I began. "Or in the next life," Dan's voice amended in a hoarse murmur.

Story Contest

Opportunity for subscribers of this paper to try their literary talent and gain a reputation.

MANY magazine writers are secured from the rural communities. We want our subscribers to have every advantage to utilize their talent, and have joined with a number of other publishers in a great story contest.

Do you think you can write a story?

Suppose you try anyhow. For the best story received we will pay

$50.00

Stories may run from 2,000 to 15,000 words. Decision will be made by popular vote of the subscribers of this and several other papers. Stories acceptable for entry will be published in this paper and not less than fifty others. This is a chance to gain popularity at once. Send manuscript direct to editor of this paper.

MAY

L 908

Flickerings from Filmland

Interesting to the Movie Fans.

COMEDIAN OF REPUTE PRODUCING BIG DRAMA.

"Cutey" Working on a New Photo-Play Featuring Earle Williams.

One of the most important pictures under course of construction is "The Scarlet Runner," taken from the popular novel of that name, by C. N. and A. M. Williamson, which is now being filmed under the direction of Wally Van. This feature is practically the debut of Mr. Van into the realm of drama and romantic pictures, for his work hitherto has been solely in the line of comedy. In this release Wally is destined to lose the sobriquet of "Cutey," which has made him a favorite for many years.

"The Scarlet Runner" will be released in twelve episodes, each one complete in itself and each one telling one of the thrilling adventures of the gentleman chauffeur made famous by the Williamsons. Earle Williams, a favorite in the world of photoplayy, will be seen in the principle role, while the feminine lead is to be changed with each episode. Practically all of the prominent Vitagraph actresses will be seen, with the exception of such leading players as Anita Stewart, Lilian Walker, Edith Storey and others.

Wally is having adventures of his own in filming "The Scarlet Runner,' which was picturized by Geo. Plympton. The "Runner" is an automobile, built specially for use in this production, and as the exteriors must have scenes and architecture typical of England, where the plot is laid, extensive traveling has to be done in the big limousine.

Contrasting with this feature are two of Wally's latest efforts, "Levy's Seven Daughters," and "Putting Pep in Slowtown," and it will be interesting to see the results of this director's versatile talents.

MISS CLAYTON EXCITED OVER SNOW COUNTRY.

To all her California friends Marguerite Clayton, has sent photographs of herself in the garb of the people of the north. Miss Clayton, a native of California, had never seen snow before coming to the Chicago studio this year, and on top of that she went up to the Canadian border to take the feminine lead in "Beyond the Law." The snow was ten and twenty feet deep. She was so elated with the experience that she sent photographs to her friends basking in the sun of southern California.

MRS. DE HAVEN MILKS A COW.

But Would Rather Drive an Auto Than Operate an Animated Refrigerator, She Declares.

All her life dainty Flora Parker De Haven, who plays the leading role in "The Wrong Door," and in Director Otis Turner's Universal production, "Get the Boy," has lived in the cities when she has not been treading the boards, and consequently rural districts and the animals of the country are practically strangers to her.

When Director Turner told the little lady she would have to milk a cow in one of the scenes she exclaimed: "Me milk a cow? Oh, goodness, you'll surely have to rehearse me. I hardly know what a cow looks like."

And, indeed, more than one rehearsal was necessary, for Madame Bovine seemed to know that Flora Parker De Haven was a stranger to the art of milking and persistently refused to submit to the operation.

Director Turner, after many patient efforts, finally succeeded in getting the attention of the cow, whereupon the little star proceeded nervously to play the part of the milkmaid.

After it was over, this dainty Universalite said:

"I'd rather drive an auto any time than operate an animated refrigerator like that. Such cold reserve I have never encountered in all my life."

NEW MUTUAL FEATURE WEIRD GHOST STORY.

Creepy Plot In Drama of Dual Personality.

Perhaps you do not believe in ghosts. Neither did young William H. Stuyesant, the hero of "The Dead Alive." Young Stuyesant's wife had died, leaving behind her a sister, her exact image of which her husband knew nothing. Old "Doc" Ardini, a professional crook, learned that Stuyesant did not know of the girl's existence. He also wanted to get some money away from the young fellow, so he claimed to be a spiritualist, and promised to bring the brooding young man's wife to life again in a seance. Then he tried to frighten the sister into following his demands.

All would have been well if Mary, the sister, had not rebelled and disclosed her identity to her dead sister's husband.

As it was, the affair ended in death for the gambler and great joy for the young millionaire and the girl. Her likeness to his wife awoke love in Stuyesant's heart for Mary, and he took her as his bride.

No Rule for Happy Marriage.

"When a man and woman marry," says a philosopher, "they should live by themselves if they have nothing more than a frying pan and a blanket and must begin keeping house in a fence corner."

"When a man 21 years old, who has not had an opportunity to become able to support a family falls in love with a girl," says another philosopher on the same page of a daily newspaper, "his circumstances should not deter him from making the best of investments, an early marriage. The parents of the girl should not be averse to the match because of his inability immediately to support the girl. They should make room for him in their home and if need be support him until he can support himself and their daughter."

The obvious obstacle in the way of encouraging early marriage by supporting the high contracting parties is that it is practical in exceptional cases only, remarks the Louisville Courier-Journal. Its general adoption would not be possible. But if it were, the ideal of independence set up by the Spartan advocate of freedom, and peace at any price, rarely would be realized. And in the history of matrimonial experience it is written large in tears, and sometimes in blood, that two domestic ventures in a single household or supported by one purse, the senior enterprise laying claim to authority over the other because of the subsidy granted, do not often flourish. Usually they fight.

Fortunately nobody's general rules for the conduct of the matrimonial enterprise are given the trial of general application. If that were not so the domestic relations court would have more to do than they are doing, and the jails, the hospitals and the undertaking establishments would be crowded to capacity.

Colonizing Western Lands.

Our government has already spent $100,000,000 on irrigation and reclamation projects, some of which have been rather notorious failures. One of the reasons is that, having provided water for the land, the government considered that its function was finished.

With the large class of persons we hope to establish on this land, to the profit of the United States, capital is frequently insufficient to level the land and raise crops. When crops have been raised it has been found frequently that there was no means of selling the crops profitably. There is no rural credit system of any sort and colonists find themselves dependent upon private capital, which exacts what it can get.

There is in congress a bill (introduced by Mr. Crosser as H. R. 11329) for the establishment of a national colonization board under the departments or agriculture, labor and the interior, the duties of which as proposed shall be to take stock of land which may be developed into prosperous agricultural communities, and of creating such colonies with government money. It proposes that the government shall not only level and clear the land but build roads, ditches, and irrigation plants, establish public utilities, and organize co-operative institutions. The government shall then colonize these projects, demanding from the settlers an "improvement charge" equal to 4 per cent of the assessed value of the land plus an amount which will at the end of fifty years reimburse the government for the expenditure.

There are various other provisions of the bill designed to protect the project from exploitation by unscrupulous interests, but it goes rather too far in that direction, vesting in the United States the fee of the land for all time. Except for this provision it is practically a scheme to sell improved public land to settlers on time.

We do not know that the country is ready to undertake so radical an experiment as this bill proposes. It is worthy of the most careful consideration in congress at any rate. Similar plans have worked in British colonies, resulting in prosperous communities of independent landlords. Our former policies with respect to the irrigable land in the west have not accomplished this result.

SEASON OF SATIN.

Satins are in for a good season. They will contribute to the development of dressy costumes as well as to street frocks and coats. It is anticipated that satins in the dark colors—in so far as they may be obtained—will be in demand. Otherwise there will be satin fancies in light colors to please the woman who likes her demi-tailleur of some fabric other than cloth.

FARM & GARDEN

PLANTS FROM CHINA

Plant Introduction Expedition Yields Promising Specimens—New Hardy Yellow Rose Discovered

The third expedition into China to discover new plants suitable for introduction into the United States has been completed by F. N. Meyer, plant explorer of the U. S. Department of Agriculture. As a result of this expedition through the center of China, and two previous explorations of similar duration covering extremely cold Manchurian regions and the Arid regions of Chinese Turkestan, there have been sent to America for planting and testing for commercial adaptability, seeds, roots, or cuttings of some 3,000 food and forage plants, flowers, ornamental shrubs and vines, shade and timber trees. The previous expeditions brought to America specimens of many cold- restrictant and dry-land grains, sorghums, soy beans, alfalfas, and forage plants, and also certain semitropical plants such as the bamboo, which are now under experimentation to determine their usefulness for the extreme south.

Of the many specimens forwarded to this country during the last expedition, the specialists regard as most significant the jujube, a fruit new to this country, which may be suitable for use in the southwest; a wild peach restrictant to alkali, cold, and drought the root system of which offers great possibilities as a grafting host; certain Chinese persimmons larger than any hitherto known in this country; a number of aquatic food roots and vegetables which offer promising possibilities for the utilization of swamp land; some thirty varieties of vegetable and timber bamboos; and a number of Chinese vegetables, bush and climber roses, shrubs and trees.

Of scientific rather than commercial interest is the discovery on this expedition, near Hangchau, of a hickory tree, the first found in China. The existence of this tree, together with the facts that the sassafras and tulip trees are common in both countries and the Chinese tea box tree is closely related to the sweet gum of the south, confirms the fact that the flora of the southeastern United States and that of sections of China are closely related. Another discovery of botanical interest was the finding in a remote and hitherto unvisited valley in Tibet of a hazel tree 100 feet high, a surprising departure from the hazel bush. Elsewhere English walnuts were discovered in a wild state; and the discovery of the wild peach is regarded as significant because it seems to establish that the peach may have been a native of China rather than of Persia, to which its origin has been ascribed. The discoveries of native and hardy oranges and other citrus fruits, a number of which have been brought to this country for breeding work, give added evidence that China was the home of the orange, which was introduced into other countries probably by early Portuguese travelers. Similarly many plants commonly ascribed to other countries, such as the wistaria, chrysanthemum, lilac, azalea, and certain peonies and rambler roses, have been developed by the Chinese, although, because they reach Caucasian use through other nearby nations, their Chinese origin often has been overlooked.

To lovers of flowers the new Chinese rose known as the Rosa xanthina should be of special interest, particularly in view of the fact that there is at present a great demand for yellow roses. This bush has small, light yellow flowers, but its great quality is its hardiness which will enable it to flourish in the North even as far as Canada. The chief promise of this rose, however, lies in the fact that it will in all prabability lead to the production of new hardy types of yellow roses adapted to cultivation in America. It may produce varieties which will not drop their leave like our Persian yellow roses do and yield varieties with larger and more showy flowers. In addition, the explorer found a number of new rambler roses, particularly certain yellow ramblers which if locally successful, will meet a demand for a climbing rose with a flower differing in shade from the crimson and pink flowers of the well known rambler varieties.

RACKS FOR EGGS

Eggs, if kept in a cool place with a free circulation of air passing about them, will keep better than if otherwise stored. Small racks for holding a dozen eggs are of convenient size for the refrigerator. They are made of enamel, the openings being of a size to hold an egg upright. Similar racks are made of wood and still others have a wooden base with a wire holder for each egg.

Milk pails should be of such construction as to enable them to be easily cleaned and kept bright. This is best accomplished by having the inner surface of the pail smooth and free from seams or crevices, which serve as a place for dirt to accumulate and make its removal difficult. The pails should have the seams smoothly soldered and should be heavily tinned to prevent rusting. They should have a narrow or covered top to exclude as much falling dirt as possible.

IT'S EASIER NOW.

When I was young I had to go and till the cornfield with a hoe. Ah, it was weary work, indeed; I paralyzed the noxious weed and scraped the dirt around the corn and yearned to hear the dinner horn. I'd toil all day to beat the band, till blisters came on hoof and hand, and then the husbandman would say as he dug up my meagre pay, "Was that the best that you could do? You must have loafed the whole day through!" And now I see the farmers ride on cultivators tall and wide, that hill the corn and slay the weeds, as they are drawn by prancing steeds. A hundred freckled lads with hoes might work all day along the rows and not achieve as much, I ween, as would one green and red machine. The farmers of those modern days know naught of old time toilsome ways, they do their labors sitting down and ride in choo-choo cars to town; they find the boodle growing rank and have to stack it in the bank.

—WALT MASON.

Dictates of Fashion

GAY THREE-PIECE DRESSES IN LIEU OF SUITS.

Now that the penitential season is practically over, the feminine mind turns naturally to the subject of clothes. Usually suits receive the first consideration, and there is wide choice in Easter offerings.

Among the comparatively new ideas one finds the three-piece dress. In other seasons we recognized this triple alliance of skirt, blouse and coat under the title of three-piece suit. Now, however, the blouse has been superseded by the one-piece dress and the ensmble takes its name from the latter.

One of the most attractive of such models is found in a Cheruit frock made of dark blue serge and having a yoke and long sleeves of taffeta, elaborately embroidered with chain-stitching in gay colors. The beauty about this particular garment is that when warm weather arrives the silk guimpe may be replaced by one of lingerie fabric.

Bulloz has also contributed a very effective model which shows a serge dress trimmed with taffeta roses in natural tones. Over this dress is worn a three-quarter length coat of voile, which half conceals and half reveals the exquisite rose trimming of the gown. One can hardly speak of such creations as suits or costumes, and yet they will be worn in the street just as if they were.

Ever so many of the houses that import costumes for pre-Easter exposition are now offering the originals at prices that are, in many instances, as reasonable as they could be procured in Paris. The idea seems to be that it is better to move the originals quickly before they have lost the novelty and charm of their French inception, rather than to carry them over more or less indefinitely only to find them eventually copied broadcast over the world and thereby much depreciated in value. After all, this is good sense and good business.

It becomes more and more apparent as the days go by that the popularity of the navy blue, demonstrated last Spring and Summer, is to be duplicated during the approaching weeks. One finds this evidenced in the suits of serge, the demi-costumes of grosgrain silks and the practical separate coats of gabardine and brilliantine.

Many of the suits continue the combination of the serge and taffeta and this despite the fact that this association of wool and silk fabric was somewhat commonized a year ago. Nevertheless, one may pay more than one hundred dollars for a ready-to-wear suit of serge and taffeta.

While all the skirts are short and full, all coats are by no means of one character. There is the suit with the eton or bolero jacket, the one with the hip-length coat and the one that is almost three-quarter long. It is essential that the suit coat should have a very considerable flare, but the best designers have arranged that the fullness shall be massed on the sides and that the back and front shall be left relatively plain.

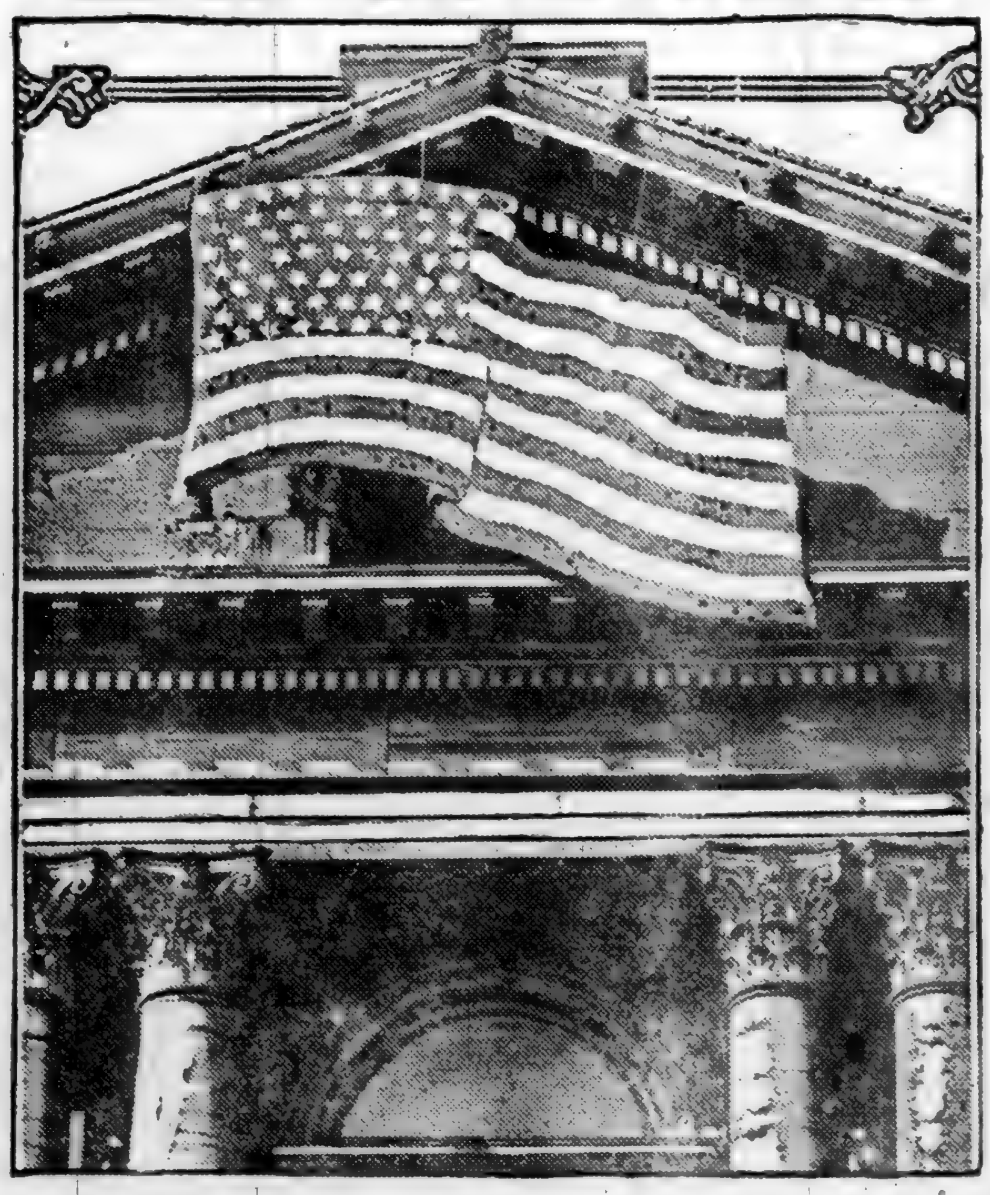
It is something of a relief to note the predominance of the coat with the flat collar, the rever front and the glimpse of the white blouse thus afforded.

Some of the coats are double-breasted and other have a single line of buttons. Generally speaking, each coat is supplied with its full quota of pockets. These are introduced in a variety of ways, which serve a decorative as well as a practical purpose.

Now that petticoats have been revived, it is a happy thought to have them match the coat lining or, if the latter is dark, to match the petticoat with the brightest tone in millinery. It is undeniably a season of color, and although one restrains the natural impulse to attune one's sartorial tastes to nature's chromatics, it is quite justifiable to infuse color in the accessories of the street garb.

Burning the fingers can be avoided by equipping the metal knobs on pot and kettle covers with good sized corks wired on with bits of picture wire.

ELECTRIC FLAGS FOR PATRIOTISM



Another instance of the patriotic wave sweeping over the country is the huge electric flag being placed on factories and public buildings. This shows one on the Toledo courthouse.

LA MODE VACILLATES ON THE SHAWL QUESTION.

Of decided interest is the rumor that lace shawls are to be used as an essential dress accessory. These shawls, in many instances, will be draped on the dresses after the manner of broad fichus. But aside from this report says that shawls, as a separate and distinct affair, will shortly be ushered in for correct accomplishment of the modernized Goya or Velasquez dress.

Then the mantilla is the next step, of black or ivory tinted lace; and this means that the red rose, the high-back comb, the flirtatious fan, the lace mitt, et cetera, will all have a revival of more or less distinction. The beautifully embroidered Chinese shawl which one associates with the Carmen of Calve has, as a matter of fact, very little place in Spanish costume.

Calve was a great artist, but she erred in her sartorial trappings and always dressed the cigaret girl quite too sumptuously for her humble position. One should not confound the dress worn by the heroine of Bizet's opera with that of the aristocratic Spanish woman. The two are quite incompatible, and the stage version of one should not be taken as an authentice guide to that of the other.

Between the Spanish influence and that of the Russian the prospects indicate gay chromatics. Unfortunately, we shall very likely have to go through a color probation before the bad and indifferent are eliminated from the worth-while and satisfactory. Most of us are quite willing to express the joy of living through the medium of colored clothes. Nevertheless, one should have regard for the eternal fitness of things and not attempt to vivify the canvasses of old or near-old masters for the clothes models of moderns, whose times and manners of life can at the best make them but a far-away reflection of the originals.

In some quarters there is an effort apparent to advance Shantung silks, taffetas and ribbed weaves in Bayedere stripes. It is likely such will be taken more for sports apparel than for the average dress.

KEEPING A TRIM FIGURE.

Women generally try to avoid growing stout, flabby or uncouth, and unfortunately they have not all learned that corsets are only a delusion and a snare for that purpose. There is little use in preaching anti-corset propaganda, however. This talk is for men. The women are welcome to listen if they are curious—they will anyway.

In nearly every man's life there comes a time when he begins to put on flesh. At first the poor fellow feels rather proud of it. To his own eyes it looks like dignity, it feels to him rather "chesty," and the tailor conspires with him in encouraging the idea. But in due time he finds that it is nothing but grease, oil, fat filling in between the muscles. He realizes with a pang of remorse that it is merely the stoutness of advancing years, that he is no longer a wiry youth, but only a flabby, short winded, high paunched, middle-aged man and almost bald at that.

What he needs is a better balanced metabolism. His intake of food or fuel is more than his system is capable of burning up. The excess, in time, will poison him. If he has the courage and sense to realize his position and to take reasonable precautions before the auto-intoxication of middle age begins to harden his arteries, he may still preserve a fair imitation of youth, both in looks and in feelings.

Let him learn that a hearty appetite is to be curbed and restrained, that it is a fine thing to skip a meal often, and still better to have a milk diet day occasionally. And let him exercise. Walking is ideal. Tennis, golf, a certain amount of gymnasium work may be indulged in. If it is really impractical for him to utilize any of these aids to health, then he can at least spend five or ten minutes every night at physical culture in his room.

The setting up drill is a first rate all around exercise to take. Then a few bending stunts, foreward, sideward, backward. Then a body lifting effort or two, lying prone and pushing up the rigid body on the arms, letting it down again, and so on, for from three to twenty times at a session. This must be done regularly and always stopped short of fatigue, in order to escape the muscular soreness which is so likely to follow unaccustomed exercise. But, if even five minutes a day can be devoted to physical culture, in a month the man will feel the benefit of it upon his health. The exercise should be taken in the nude—the skin likes a good air bath. And they should be carried out with a vim and spirit, such as the gymnasium trainer demands from his classes.

HEALTH AND DIET.

The languor that is experienced during the balmy days of spring is frequently due to a derangement of the liver.

Winter fare is heavy and indigestible and naturally the organs of digestion and liver are overtaxed. The functions fail to perform their work, hence the stupid feeling, the maddening headaches, dizziness, sallowness, offensive breath and the perpetual grouchiness which characterizes all its victims.

Pimples, liver spots and spots before the eyes are other symptoms.

A careful balanced diet, sufficient exercise, especially in the open, corrective work, deep breathing and baths are wholesome correctives that build up the health instead of clogging it, which the practice of pill dosing is inclined to do.

Persons inclined toward biliousness or chronic sufferers should look well toward their diet, since here the trouble frequently begins. Certain foods act most beneficially upon the function of the liver, keeping it in a healthy state of activity. Again others have a contrary effect and serve to clog the system.

Fruits especially contain laxative properties which the system craves. Among these are included apples, pears, strawberries, figs, dates, also rhubarb and squash. Fruit should be eaten at the beginning, not at the end of the meal, also between times when the appetite craves it. Greens are always desirable.

Cereals with cream should always be avoided. So also eggs when they are not digestible. People accustomed to spend much time in the open air, especially in working, as a rule can eat a greater number of eggs than those spending their time indoors.

Poultry, especially chicken is advised and such meat as lamb, besides a little beef occasionally.

All fatty, greasy foods, pastry and sweets are positively blacklisted, besides malt and spirituous liquors, tea, coffee.

Thorough mastication is most important.

When light refreshment is desired, lemonade and orangeade are suggested.

CONCERNING WOMEN.

Ida M. Tarbell claims that the education of a woman should be based on the assumption that she will marry.

Miss Olive M. Riddleberger, an employe of the United States census bureau, is an expert statistician.

More than 20,000 women are now employed in the British munition plants.

Two-thirds of the female workers in the Pennsylvania silk industry are under 20 years of age.

Burmese women have much more freedom in marriage than the women of other oriental countries.

MAY

L 908

U 1 4 5

Quick Service

And Satisfied Policy Holders
Our Best Advertisement

Take one of Our Joint Policies
and have Complete Protection.

GEO. W. COE, Mgr.
Lincoln Life, Auburn

The St. Joe News

Fred B. Leighty, Editor
Mrs. Jora Jeighty, Associate

One Year, - - -	$1.00
Six Months, - - - -	.50
Three Months, - - -	.25

Entered at the postoffice at St. Joe, Indiana, as second class matter.

INDIANA ASSOCIATED WEEKLIES

Local Briefs

G. C. Lucas met with quite an accident while baling hay, last Tuesday, by getting his arm broke at the wrist.

Salmedico Arcady Dairy Feed, Oil Meal, Beef Scrap, Tankage, Beef Meal besides our own unadulterated Bran and Middlings.
ST. JOE MILLS.

HATS
and
CAPs

of the latest styles for the summer season, in felts and straws. We invite you to our store to look at our fine display. The prices are reasonable.

Remember
Go to Erick's

Wm. G. ERICK,
SPENCERVILLE

WOOL!

Dispose of your crop of Wool now and get a good price—and save all that handling and chance for loosing money. We are prepared to handle wool this spring and you will be guaranteed the highest market price.

Call or Phone to

JACK BEAMS,
Spencerville.

Use Daily Bread Flour the Indiana made.

Homer Woodcox, of Woodburn, is the guest of John Gill and wife, this week.

Subscriptions taken for new or renewals of any magazine published, at The News office.

The proceeds received from the market held in the Buckingham building by the W. C. T. U. ladies amounted to $11.00.

Reuben Brunson, of South Bend, was a Thursday guest in the C. C. Bassett home, the remainder of the week was spent with relatives in the neighborhood.

Land Rollers of all kinds at CURIE's Store.

Chas. Ashley, wife and two children, of Wayne, were guests of Dr. Brunson, at Newville, Sunday, and Monday on their return home, were guests of C. C. Bassett and family.

We can save you money on Pecahontas Coal, $4.10 for June, $4.30 July, and any month after that at $4.40 ton from car, let me know when. Also Hocking or West Virginia at an unusually low price. ST. JOE MILLS.

Next Sunday is Mother's Day the world over and the Methodist and Christian churches in St. Joe will observe the day with very impressive services beginning at 9:00 o'clock. Try and be in this service and thus give expression to your good will toward Mother.

Mother's Day was observed on last Sunday by the Lutheran Sunday School. Special music and singing of old familiar hymns helped to fill in the Sunday School hour. 125 carnations were given out at the church services which followed. Mrs. Mumma, wife of the pastor, gave an excellent sermon paying a fitting tribute to mothers and in the practical part of her sermon, urged the holding up of Christ in the home. Our homes are the training places for spiritual a. well as national life. A large audience listened very attentively to the splendid sermon.

Sunday School Report.

The following is a true and correct report of the various Sunday Schools in this neighborhood for last Sunday.

Lutheran	121	$ 4 35
M. P	94	2.99
Christian	62	1.91
Fairview	30	1.18
Concord	99	3.69
M. E. Spencer	103	6.59
Lutheran	93	2.34
Newville, C	85	3.03

P. A. Walker
Trustee
Spencer Township

OFFICE DAY—
Tuesday of each week at the residence ¾ mile east of the Dills River Bridge.
Phone—St. Joe, 21-6
Spencerville, - Indiana

BANK STATEMENT.

F. E. Rhodes, President; L. B. Fisher, Vice-president; C. G. Rectenwall, Cashier. Report of the condition of the Farmers & Merchants State Bank, a State, private bank at Spencerville, in the State of Indiana, at the close of its business on May 1st. 1916

RESOURCES
Loans and Discounts	$64,554 92
Overdrafts	228 72
Banking House	3,598 86
Furniture and fixtures	1,611 33
Due from Banks and Trust companies	8,136 16
Cash on Hand	4,061 51
Current Expenses	590 21
Taxes Paid	196 23
Interest Paid	229 99
Total Resources	83,207 93
LIABILITIES
Capital Stock, paid in	$25,000 00
Surplus	300 00
Undivided Profits	86 17
Exchange, discounts and interest	1,380 80
Demand deposits	22,626 88
Demand certificates	33,814 08
Total Liabilities	83,207 93

State of Indiana,
County of DeKalb, ss:

I, C. G. Rectenwall, cashier, of the Farmer & Merchant State Bank, do solemnly swear that the above statement is true.

C. G. RECTENWALL, Cash.

Subscribed and sworn to before me, this 9th. day of May 1916.
[L. S.] L. O. WADE, J. P.

Personal Items

CURIE's is the place to get your Pearson Flash Light.

Fred Bearss broke one of his fingers last week while at work, for the Auburn Automobile Co.

Coming this month, 4 cars of genuine Pocahontas Lump Coal. Place your order now.
St Joe Elevator.

Two weeks of High School will end the school term for this year. The Baccalaureate sermon will be Sunday evening, by Elder Redacre, at the Christian Church.

Get Indian Gasoline at Patterson's Garage.

The Evening Star, of Auburn, comes to us in a different form, instead of a folio it now issues 6 to 8 pages of the 6 column size. The plant has been enlarged by the addition of a $5,000.00 Goss Comet press. Business must be good and we are pleased to see the improvement.

Coming this month, 4 cars of genuine Pocahontas Lump Coal. Place your order now.
St. Joe Elevator.

Eleven room house on West Main St., for sale or rent. Other well located residence properties and vacant lots for sale on easy terms. S. S. WIDNEY.

Patronize Our Advertisers
They are all boosters and deserve your business.

Oldest In America
Strongest In the World
Mutual life
INSURANCE COMPANY
of New York
J. C. HULL, Agent
Phone No. 46

S. S. Widney
Justice of the Peace
Insurance and Real Estate
Phone No. 10
ST. JOE, - - - IND

DENTIST
C. R. PRICE
ST. JOE, IND.
Office: first door south of Patterson's Dept. Store.
[illegible]

Do You Want to Save
MONEY?
Then buy your building material at the Spencerville Lumber Yard.

◆◆◆◆◆◆◆

We have just received a new supply of Lime, Cement and Plaster, which is strictly fresh and guaranteed the highest grade on the market.

◆◆◆◆◆◆◆

Brands We Handle.
Universal and Wabash Cement, Wayne Fibre Prepared Wood Pulp Plaster, Crystal Rock Hydrated Lime.

STEWARD LUMBER & GRAIN Co.
SPENCERVILLE, IND.
Highest Prices Paid for Grain and Seeds.

BANK STATEMENT.

Emillus Case, President; W. C. Patterson, Vice-president; S. W. Tustison, Cashier; F. R. Bowman, Ass't. Cashier. Report of the condition of the St Joe Valley Bank, a State bank, at St. Joe, in the State of Indiana, at the close of its business on May 1st., 1916.

RESOURCES
Loans and Discounts	$79,081 59
Overdrafts	31 28
Other Bonds and Securities	6,474 00
Furniture and Fixtures	967 50
Due from Banks and Trust Companies	14,311 45
Cash on Hand	3,382 54
Current Expenses	1,687 84
Taxes Paid	5:2 94
Interest Paid	1,033 90
Total Resources	107,483 04
LIABILITIES
Capital Stock—paid in	$25,000 00
Surplus	1,000 00
Undivided Profits	173 76
Exchange, Discounts and Interest	5,502 36
Demand Deposits	21,619 78
Demand Certificates	54,187 14
Total Liabilities	107,483 04

State of Indiana,
County of DeKalb, ss:

I, S. W. Tustison, cashier, of the St. Joe Valley Bank, State Bank, do solemnly swear that the above statement is true.

S. W. TUSTISON, Cash.

Subscribed and sworn to before me, this 8th. day of May 1916.
[L. S.] S. S. WIDNEY, J. P.

Jurors Selected.

GRAND JURY.

Christian Funk—Smithfield.
John Mutzfelt—Wilmington.
Jackson Long—Keyser.
James F. Johnson—Franklin.
Levi Barnhart—Union.
M. L. Hoffman—Butler.

PETIT JURY.

George Schuster—Smithfield.
Frank Hoffelder—Smithfield.
Clarence Dunn—Grant.
Jefferson Clark—Keyser.
Frank Nelson—Fairfield.
D. M. Gerig—Butler.
William H. Gump—Keyser.
Charles Stoop—Butler.
Samuel McClure—Keyser.
Albert Thrush—Butler.
Herbert Fee—Grant.
Ed Brumbeck—Richland.

A Friend in Need.

When Glando Gargle is used for a cold in the head it is surprising to see how quickly the clogged nostrils are opened. Adenoids are caused by a neglected cold. If the mucus which forms is allowed to remain in the nostrils, a diseased condition will result, which causes chronic catarrh and adenoids. Glando Gargle was prepared to meet these special needs. Equally effective for sore mouth or sore throat. Price 50 cents. For sale by All Druggists.

A Deporable Condition.

There is no agency that has been so responsible for broken-down constitutions and prolonged illnesses as has been the grip. This disease impairs the functions of the glands of the body. The liver and kidneys cannot remove the impurities, poisonous matter accumulates and the entire system is out of order. If the glands are not restored to their normal condition, the body will be an easy prey for serious maladies. A disordered liver sometimes causes a cough which can easily be mistaken for lung trouble. An inactive liver is often responsible for stomach and bowel trouble GLANDO was prepared to act especially upon the glands of the body; it removes accumulated poisons, and renews glandular activity. If you have no strength or exhaust easily, give GLANDO a test and see what it will do for you. Don't drag around and feel so miserable. You can get a week's treatment of GLANDO for 50 cents. For sale by All Druggists.

SPENCERVILLE R. F. D. NO. 2

Mrs Wm. Wearley, of Woodburn; John Stafford and family were Sunday guests of D. M. Kelley and family.

Roscoe Johnson, of Auburn, and Joseph Haifley and wife, of St. Joe, were Sunday guests of Chas. Haifley and wife.

Frank Wertman and wife, Ed Billman and wife, Mrs. Ernest Morrow, Mrs. Mary Cook and daughter Grace, were Hicksville shoppers, last week.

Rev. Valentine and wife were Sunday afternoon guests of Will Smith and wife.

Mrs. Morrow was a Wednesday guest of Mrs. Wm. Smith.

W. O. Miller and family, Lorenzo Swaidner and wife were Sunday guests of John King and wife, of Scipio.

The attendance at the Brick Sunday School 59, collection $1.57.

Mrs. Della Smith and Arthur Clinesmith were Sunday guests of Calvin Saylor and wife.

Vinton Miller and family, and Mrs. Wm. Rhoades were Sunday guests of Wm. Miller and wife.

Manuel Kyle, of Hicksville, spent one day last week with Miss Sarah Kyle.

George Baker and family, of Scipio; Mervin Widney, wife and daughter Doris, of near St. Joe; Will Bishop and wife, and James McKinley and wife were Sunday guests of Harvey Kimes and Minnie Thompson.

Miss Nellie Kelley left Monday morning to visit with her aunt, Mrs. Wm. Wearley, of Woodburn.

DRINK HOT WATER IF YOU DESIRE A ROSY COMPLEXION

Says we can't help but look better and feel better after an inside bath.

To look one's best and feel one's best is to enjoy an inside bath each morning to flush from the system the previous day's waste, sour fermentations and poisonous toxins before it is absorbed into the blood. Just as coal, when it burns, leaves behind a certain amount of incombustible material in the form of ashes, so the food and drink taken each day leave in the alimentary organs a certain amount of indigestible material, which if not eliminated, form toxins and poisons which are then sucked into the blood through the very ducts which are intended to suck in only nourishment to sustain the body.

If you want to see the glow of healthy bloom in your cheeks, to see your skin get clearer and clearer, you are told to drink every morning upon arising, a glass of hot water with a teaspoonful of limestone phosphate in it, which is a harmless means of washings the waste material and toxins from the stomach, liver, kidneys and bowels, thus cleansing, sweetening and purifying the entire alimentary tract, before putting more food into the stomach.

Men and women with sallow skins, liver spots, pimples or pallid complexion, also those who wake up with a coated tongue, bad taste, nasty breath, others who are bothered with headaches, bilious spells, acid stomach or constipation should begin this phosphated hot water drinking and are assured of very pronounced results in one or two weeks.

A quarter pound of limestone phosphate costs very little at the drug store but is sufficient to demonstrate that just as soap and hot water cleanses, purifies and freshens the skin on the outside, so hot water and limestone phosphate act on the inside organs. We must always consider that internal sanitation is vastly more important than outside cleanliness, because the skin pores do not absorb impurities into the blood, while the bowel pores do.

GLASS OF SALTS IF YOUR KIDNEYS HURT

Eat less meat if you feel Backachy or have Bladder trouble—Salts fine for Kidneys.

Meat forms uric acid which excites and overworks the kidneys in their efforts to filter it from the system. Regular eaters of meat must flush the kidneys occasionally. You must relieve them like you relieve your bowels; removing all the acids, waste and poison; else you feel a dull misery in the kidney region, sharp pains in the back or sick headache, dizziness, your stomach sours, tongue is coated and when the weather is bad you have rheumatic twinges. The urine is cloudy, full of sediment; the channels often get irritated, obliging you to get up two or three times during the night.

To neutralize these irritating acids and flush off the body's urinous waste get about four ounces of Jad Salts from any pharmacy; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys will then act fine and bladder disorders disappear. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to clean and stimulate sluggish kidneys and stop bladder irritation. Jad Salts is inexpensive; harmless and makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink which millions of men and women take now and then, thus avoiding serious kidney and bladder diseases.

"TIZ" FOR ACHING, SORE, TIRED FEET

Good-bye sore feet, burning feet, swollen feet, sweaty feet, smelling feet, tired feet.

Good-bye corns, callouses, bunions and raw spots. No more shoe tightness, no more limping with pain or drawing up your face in agony. "TIZ" is magical, acts right off. "TIZ" draws out all the poisonous exudations which puff up the feet. Use "TIZ" and forget your foot misery. Ah! how comfortable your feet feel. Get a 25 cent box of "TIZ" now at any druggist or department store. Don't suffer. Have good feet, glad feet, feet that never swell, never hurt, never get tired. A year's foot comfort guaranteed or money refunded.

Transfer paper at NEWS office, 2 sheets for 5c. Get some now for that pattern you wish to transfer.

Are You in Need of Cement?
WABASH
PORTLAND CEMENT
Is Best For Sidewalks, Foundations, Floors, Walls, Concrete Blocks, Bridges, Etc.
Look for the Turkey on Every Bag You Buy
WABASH PORTLAND CEMENT CO.
General Offices, Detroit, Mich. Works, Stroh, Indiana
Mrs. L. W. STEWARD, Spencerville, Indiana.

MAY

L 908

0146

WE WELCOME

LARGE&SMALL

DEPOSITS

Your Business Is never too large for us to handle successfully, or too small for us to appreciate. The small depositors receive the same courteous attention as the large depositors.

EVERY CUSTOMER A BOOSTER

That's why we want your account. We want you to tell your friends and neighbors. They need a good BANK also, and all will be benefited.

Farmers & Merchants State Bank

Capital Stock $25,000.00

Spencerville, - - - Indiana

SPENCERVILLE

Mrs. Arthur Heyman and daughter, of Ft. Wayne, visited her parents, John Beninghoff and wife, several days the first of the week.

Greatly reduced prices on Shoes and Oxfords. You can't afford to be without, at the prices we are quoting. BEAMS & Co.

The Misses Lavern, Lucile and Alein Rhodes attended the Commencement Exercises at Butler, last Friday. Miss Pauline Hart, formerly of this place, was a graduate.

Miss Mary Comesky attended the wedding of her neice, Miss Clara Comesky, daughter of Chas. Comesky and wife, of Garrett, and Mr. Ambrose Leis, of Garrett, last Wednesday.

C. A. Rhoades and wife left yesterday for Defiance, to visit their daughter and family. Mr. Rhoades will go on to Akron, Ohio, to visit his son Frank.

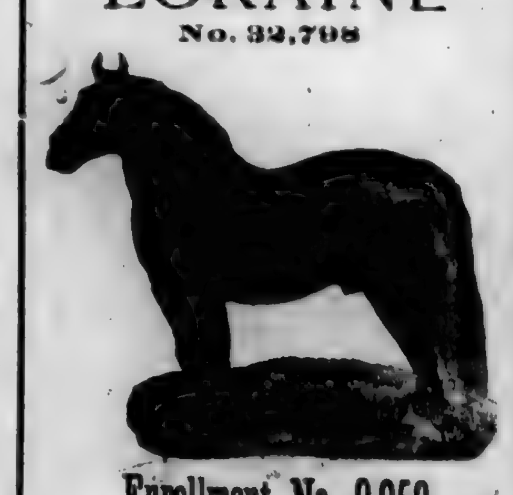
New spring oxfords for Ladies, Misses and Children—Just in at Beams & Co., store, in patent leather and gun metal.

Mother's Day will be observed on May 21 at the M. E. church. All those wishing carnations please report to the committee on flowers: Miss Golden Murray, and Mesdames Minta Rhodes and Ethel Bowser; also those wishing to come to church but unable to get there, report to John Koch and Alvin Valentine.

The Percheron Horse

LORAINE

No. 32,798



Enrollment No. 2,950

FEES $10

W. H. Moore, Owner-Keeper

The Belgian Horse

CLARENCE

Enrollment No. 4194

FEES $10

A. B. DWYER, Owner.

W. H. MOORE, Keeper.

Care will be taken to avoid accidents but will not be responsible should any occur. These horses will make the season at

Archie Beam Barn,

22 Barn Phone, 950-3

Spencerville.

Read the Free Column.

A $5 Vacuum and Sweeper for $3.95 at Beams & Co., store.

Many from this place attended the High School Commencement at Leo, Thursday evening.

Mrs. Mary Renn and daughter Flora, drove to Harlan, Monday, where they attended the funeral of Mrs. Martha Haifley.

Getting within the next 10 days 2 cars of 8inch genuine West Virginia Lump Coal. Please order now.

St. Joe Elevators.

The F. G. M. & N. Club met with Mrs. Claudia Heffner, Friday afternoon. Games and contests were enjoyed, those winning prizes were Miss Mamie Bair and Mrs. Maude Henderson. A dainty luncheon was served to the members and one guest, Miss Mamie Bair.

Henry Dove, of this place, received the sad news of the death of his brother, Harris Dove, of Butler, whose death occurred at that place on Saturday. The remains were shipped to this place over the Wabash, Monday morning. Funeral was held at 10:30 a. m., at the M. E. church. Rev. J. C. Valentine, officiating. Interment in the Spencerville cemetery.

UNITY OF NATION PROVED

Great Southerner Long Ago Pointed Out How Complete Has Been Its Restoration.

From an address delivered by Henry Watterson at the National cemetery, Nashville, Tenn., Decoration day, 1877.

We are assembled, my countrymen, to commemorate the patriotism and valor of the brave men who died to save the Union. The season brings its tribute to the scene; pays its homage to the dead; inspires the living. There are images of tranquillity all about us; in the calm sunshine upon the ridges; in the tender shadows that creep along the streams; in the waving grass and grain that mark God's love and bounty; in the flowers that bloom over the many graves. There is peace everywhere in this land today.

Peace on the open seas,
In all our sheltered bays and ample streams,
Peace where'er our starry banner gleams,
And peace in every breeze.

The war is over. It is for us to bury its passions with its dead; to bury them beneath a monument raised by the American people to American manhood and the American system, in order that "the nation shall, under God, have a new birth of freedom and that government of the people, by the people, and for the people shall not perish from the earth."

The Union is, indeed, restored when the hands that pulled down that flag come willingly and lovingly to put it up again. I come with a full heart and a steady hand to salute the flag that floats above me—my flag and your flag—the flag of the free heart's hope and home—the star spangled banner of our fathers—the flag that, uplifted triumphantly over a few brave men, has never been obscured, destined by the God of the universe to waft on its ample folds the eternal song of freedom to all mankind, emblem of the power on earth which is destined to exceed that on which it was said that the sun never went down.

Send in your news items.

Slide in the $1.00. Do it now.

For Sale or Rent, a small house and half-acre of good garden ground. S. S. WIDNEY.

Ralph Baker will work for Mr. Evans, of east of town, this summer.

Rev. A. K. Mumma left Monday morning for Silver Lake, Ind., to attend the conference of the Lutheran church of the Northern Indiana Synod.

Jacob Baltz and wife, Howard Pervines and Levi Mumma attended the Installation services of the Rev. S. C. Slater at Auburn, Sunday.

Russell Brown, wife and son Winifred, of Hammond, Ind.; Jess Provines and wife, of Auburn, spent Saturday and Sunday with Stephen Brown and family.

Baltzer Koontz is some better at this writing.

Mr. Lochner and family, of near Huntertown, spent Sunday the guests of their daughter, Mrs. Edith Akey and family.

Frank Rhoads, wife and daughter Doris, spent Sunday the guests of Florence Buchanan and wife, of St. Joe.

Theodore Garstka, of LaOtto, was in this vicinity, Saturday, buying stock.

Otis Goeltzenleuchtner and wife, and Mrs. Anna Boger, of Auburn, spent the week end the guests of Gust Heffner and wife.

Orange Washler and family, of Hopewell, were Sunday guests of Chas. Scott and family.

R. U. Bowser made a business trip to Auburn, Monday.

The C C Club will be entertained Friday afternoon at the home of Miss Golden Murray.

The Baccalaureate sermon will be delivered by the Rev. A. K. Mumma at the Lutheran church, Sunday evening. There will be no services at the M. E. Church on that evening.

William Pervines and daughter Mary, Mrs. Hester Kirk, J. S. Hollabaugh and wife, Mrs. D. K. Horn and son Geary, and Mrs. J. C. Vallieu and son Harold, spent Friday at Ft. Wayne.

Emmett Betz, wife and babe, and Frank Boger, of Springfield Center, spent Friday the guests of Joel Betz and wife, and on Thursday, Walter Perkins, wife and babe of near Harlan, and Edward Billman and wife were guests of Joel Betz and wife.

COLETOWN

Henry Kling and Mrs. E. S. Ginther went to Mansfield, last week, to attend the funeral of their uncle, Adam Smith. They returned Saturday.

Chick Feed containing Corn, Wheat, Kaffir, Millet and Grit, $2.00 hu. Why pay more. ST. JOE MILLS.

Jay Hart and wife are the proud parents of a baby girl born May 2.

Gladys Conine, of Angola, spent Saturday night and Sunday with her parents, R. H. Conine and wife.

E. S. Ginther and family Sundayed at Lester Piermans'.

Will Brown took supper with W. E. Jacksons', Friday evening.

Mrs. Wm. Craig and daughter Mamie, of Newville, and Irving Ginther spent Sunday afternoon at W. E. Jacksons'.

Wm. Sowers and wife called on Francis Borden and wife, Sunday afternoon.

Elmer Palmer called on Henry Kling and family, Sunday afternoon.

We Are

Always Ready

to serve you with good printing. No matter what the nature of the job may be we are ready to do it at a price that will be

Satisfactory

A MAYOR'S TESTIMONY.

Mayor James R. Hanna of Des Moines, Ia., gives his personal testimony to the advantages of prohibition as follows:

"The saloons were closed on the 15th of February. All the desirable locations were picked up by other businesses within the next few weeks following. A few out-of-the-way locations are still vacant.

"I cannot see that there is any appreciable effect because of throwing men out of employment and certainly no increase in demands for charity. In fact, it is exactly the other way. The men who lost employment have gone into other lines. Some of them have followed up their former calling in other cities, but the men who were spending in the saloons the money which their families needed are now buying groceries and shoes instead. The consequence is a very much better tone in every way. In the first place their families are not now in want and in the second place, they are paying their bills for the ordinary necessities. This is making collections noticeably better in other lines, so our merchants report.

"Our experience proves that a decisive policy can handle the bootlegging very effectually. There will be some illicit sales, to be sure, but they can be reduced to a very small minimum."

NO FRIENDS OF J. BARLEYCORN.

The saloonkeepers of Washington, D. C., were sorely disappointed, it is said, because few of the veterans attending the Grand Army encampment spent their money for drinks. Of the 20,000 marching only one or two were seen "under the influence." One of the old soldiers explained it thus: "The fellows who could drink it or let it alone are not here—nearly all of them are in their graves." It is worthy of note that every one of the 128 members of the post at Hagerstown, Md., is a total abstainer and a prohibitionist. One of the features of the parade which evoked much cheering from the crowds of onlookers was the "West Virginia Water Wagon," which headed the delegation from that state.

$1.00 Ladies Dresses at Beams & Co., store. They are the latest patterns and you can't afford to be wanting a dress at this price. They are selling fast.

WANTED–To buy your Hay. C. E. Frye, Phone 73-31, St. Joe.

Frank W. Silberg

Veterinarian

OFFICE and HOSPITAL

—ON—

Main Street

SPENCERVILLE. - IND.

Phones—Office No. 7
(18) —Residence No. 101

Dr. H. R. Farnham

MEDICINE AND
GENERAL SURGERY
ST. JOE, INDIANA

Office Hours—Week Day
10:00 to 11:00 a. m.
1:00 to 3:00 p. m.
6:30 to 8:00 p. m.
Sunday—By appointment.
Telephone
Office, ...No. 2

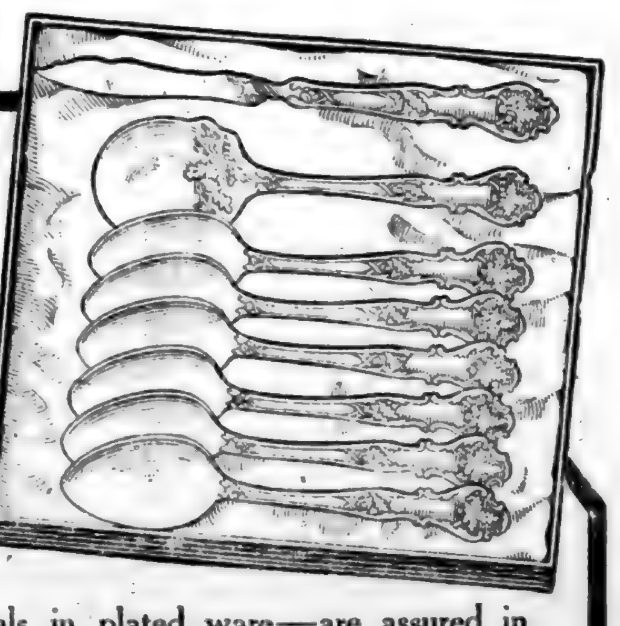
Office at Residence, Second house west of Widney Opera House.

H. C. Hathaway

TRUSTEE
Concord Township

Office Day Thursday's of Each week in Town Hall, St. Joe.

Silver of Quality and Beauty



Unquestioned durability and exquisite design—the highest ideals in plated ware—are assured in spoons, forks, and fancy serving pieces bearing the renowned trade mark

1847 ROGERS BROS.

There are various makes of silver-plated tableware which are claimed to be "just as good," but, like all imitations, they lack the beauty and wearing quality identified with the original and genuine 1847 ROGERS BROS. ware, popularly known as "Silver Plate that Wears."

Sold by leading dealers everywhere. Send for catalogue "CL," showing all designs.

International Silver Co., Successor to MERIDEN BRITANNIA CO., Meriden, Conn.

F. P. HART

"The Expert"

House Mover

—AND—

Building Raiser

Concrete Work of all kinds finished in the best shape with the least expense.

Call or write

Special Sale

Gold Medal Flour

from the car. We have picked up a great bargain. A full carload of the famous Washburn-Crosby Co's Gold Medal Flour, something everybody knows and wants. On account of superior quality, Gold Medal Flour invariably costs from 30c. to 50c. per barrel more than all other brands; but we are going to give our customers the benefit of this splendid purchase and offer them a real bargain.

SteWard Lumber & Grain Co.

Let Us Print Your Sale Bills

The Grip Skeleton!

The grip skeleton may be retained in the body in various forms. If the grip affected you in the form of tonsilitis, bronchitis or pneumonia and left you with a cough, you should act quickly before the cough weakens the lungs and bronchial tubes. After the lungs have been affected for some time by continuous coughing the process of decay begins, then you are beyond medical aid. Statistics tell us that one person dies every three minutes from tuberculosis. A chronic cough requires continuous treatment until it subsides. Get three ounces of PYNINE and make your own cough medicine. You can make one pint of excellent cough syrup. Full directions with each bottle. For sale by all by All Druggists.

How's This?

We offer One Hundred Dollars Reward for any case of Catarrh that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure.

F. J. CHENEY & CO., Toledo, O.

We, the undersigned, have known F. J. Cheney for the last 15 years, and believe him perfectly honorable in all business transactions and financially able to carry out any obligations made by his firm.

NATIONAL BANK OF COMMERCE,
Toledo, O.

Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. Testimonials sent free. Price 75 cents per bottle. Sold by all Druggists.

Take Hall's Family Pills for constipation.

SAGE TEA DARKENS HAIR TO ANY SHADE

Don't stay Gray! Here's an Old-time Recipe that Anybody can Apply.

The use of Sage and Sulphur for restoring faded, gray hair to its natural color dates back to grandmother's time. She used it to keep her hair beautifully dark, glossy and attractive. Whenever her hair took on that dull, faded or streaked appearance, this simple mixture was applied with wonderful effect.

But brewing at home is mussy and out-of-date. Nowadays, by asking at any drug store for a 50 cent bottle of "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound," you will get this famous old preparation, improved by the addition of other ingredients, which can be depended upon to restore natural color and beauty to the hair.

A well-known downtown druggist says it darkens the hair so naturally and evenly that nobody can tell it has been applied. You simply dampen a sponge or soft brush with it and draw this through your hair, taking one strand at a time. By morning the gray hair disappears, and after another application or two, it becomes beautifully dark and glossy.

Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound is a delightful toilet requisite for those who desire a more youthful appearance. It is not intended for the cure, mitigation or prevention of disease.

JOT IT DOWN

That we do the very best line of Commercial Printing and at reasonable prices. Give us your next order and let us prove our assertion.

Bear in mind, we want your business, and we propose making ourselves deserving. Are you with us?

THANK YOU

Lehman's

CLOTHING HOUSE

ESTABLISHED 1887

MENS AND BOYS OUTFITTERS

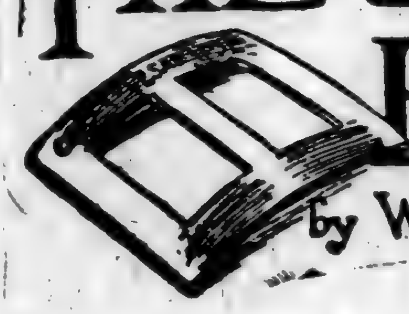
808-810 CALHOUN STREET

BEN LEHMAN PROP

Fort Wayne, Ind.

MAY
L 908
0147

THE BLUE BUCKLE



by William Hamilton Osborne

CHAPTER I.—Criag Rutherford, a New York athlete and club man, is returning to New York on the Gothic. He becomes deeply interested in a Mrs. Talcott, a beautiful girl with an elderly husband. He also meets Helderman, an eccentric financier, whom he instinctively dislikes. News is received that a $50,000 necklace has been smuggled aboard ship, and that secret service men are trying to locate it. Suspicion points to the Talcotts.

CHAPTER II. — Rutherford also meets Irene Arany, a woman of mystery, who, by a ruse, and for some hidden reason, makes his acquaintance. Mrs. Talcott is attacked in a passageway of the ship by a man who tries to snatch the blue buckle she wears. Craig rescues her, wondering why anyone should want to steal so cheap an ornament. Later he scares away two men who are trying to break into her stateroom.

CHAPTER III. — Rutherford, on Helderman's invitation, meets the financier in the royal suite, where he sees a woman, supposedly Mrs. Talcott.

CHAPTER IV.—On reaching New York Mrs. Talcott seeks Rutherford's protection, and he accompanies her to her home in West Tenth St.

CHAPTER V.—Several mysterious happenings, including the finding of the diamond necklace and the blue buckle in his pocket lead Rutherford to believe that Mrs. Talcott is an adventuress. He learns that her name is really Ballantyne, and that "Talcott" is her father. She gives Rutherford the blue buckle to keep safely for her.

CHAPTER VI.—Rutherford delivers the diamonds to government officials. Crowder, a secret service man, tells him that Helderman was really in New York at the time Rutherford was supposedly talking with him on the Gothic. Miss Arany calls on Rutherford and demands the blue buckle.

CHAPTER VII.—Rutherford accepts Helderman's invitation to dine with him at his Riverside Drive home.

CHAPTER VIII.—Pseudo secret service men rifle Rutherford's safe, seeking vainly for the buckle. He receives a visit from the Ballantynes, who state that the blue buckle, and its duplicate which they are trying to find, is the key to a large fortune, and the whereabouts of important papers.

CHAPTER IX.—Acting on Rutherford's advice, his servant permits the fake secret service men to rifle the safe. Rutherford captures them, and compels them to confess that they are in the employ of Miss Arany. He dines with Miss Ballantyne, and is attacked by thugs, and has his pockets rifled.

CHAPTER X.—With Miss Ballantyne, Rutherford meets Le Clerc, the representative of the estate, whose heir she is. She shows Le Clerc the blue buckle and her credentials.

CHAPTER XI. — Miss Ballantyne learns of the search of her house during her absence.

"I must examine and verify these," observed the lawyer. "It will take the better part of a week."

"And then?—" the girl questioned eagerly, leaning forward, her eyes sparkling with excitement.

"On Friday of this week—if I can manage it by that time," said Leclerc, looking through his thick glasses, as though he had only now discovered a humanness and charm in this new client. "Meet me at 3 o'clock in the afternoon"—

"Here?" she finished, too impatient to await the slow speech of the man at law.

"No—at the offices of my correspondents, Cowen, Covington & Brown, No. 32 Nassau street."

"You have asked me several questions, Mr. Leclerc," said she. "Now, may I ask you one?"

"Certainly—though I may not be at liberty to answer it."

"You have the other blue buckle?"

"Not with me."

"Tell me the inscription on it, please!"

"Is there an inscription on it?" he parried.

After he had departed Craig waited a moment for her to speak—perhaps to offer some explanation—but she only passed her hand across her eyes, as if in weariness.

"I think—you are not pleased with me—that you have been thinking unkind things about me!" And there was the sheen of tears in her eyes.

"Child, child!" he whispered; "how can you expect me to understand—when you do not tell me all!"

"You've been so good to me—to us, Mr. Rutherford! It hurts me to feel that you—you think ill of me—and, I cannot prevent it—yet!"

"Then I shall suspend judgment until you can."

"You have judged me already!" she said.

"Miss —, what other name have you besides Wilhelmina?" he asked, laying his hand upon the little gloved one, by his side.

"Father calls me Billie," she answered.

"Billie, Billie, Billie!" he whispered; and with every utterance of the saucy little name he drew nearer to her.

On their return to the West Tenth street house they saw Sophie going up the steps; evidently returning from an afternoon out. They entered just as the telephone bell rang.

Miss Ballantyne took the receiver, and at the first words she turned pale.

"Wait a moment," she said to the other person; "Mr. Rutherford is here. Tell him, please!"

"Who is it?" said Craig.

"Father," she answered.

"Hello, Mr. Rutherford!" the voice called. "I disliked to alarm my daughter unnecessarily, but I have reason to believe that some persons, one of them a man, visited the rooms there, this afternoon."

"Where—here?"

"Yes."

"Do you know who they were?"

"I heard a man's voice and a woman's voice. I didn't recognize the latter, but the man was Helderman."

"Weren't you here?"

"They were talking about—the blue buckle," the answer came, evading his question apparently.

"About what time?"

"Between a quarter after five and half-past."

"Your daughter was not here then. She was with me at the Ritz-Carlton. We saw Helderman there. Are you sure?"

There was no reply. Evidently the connection was cut off, or Ballantyne had no more to say. Rutherford hung up the receiver and turned to the girl. She had followed the details from his half of the conversation.

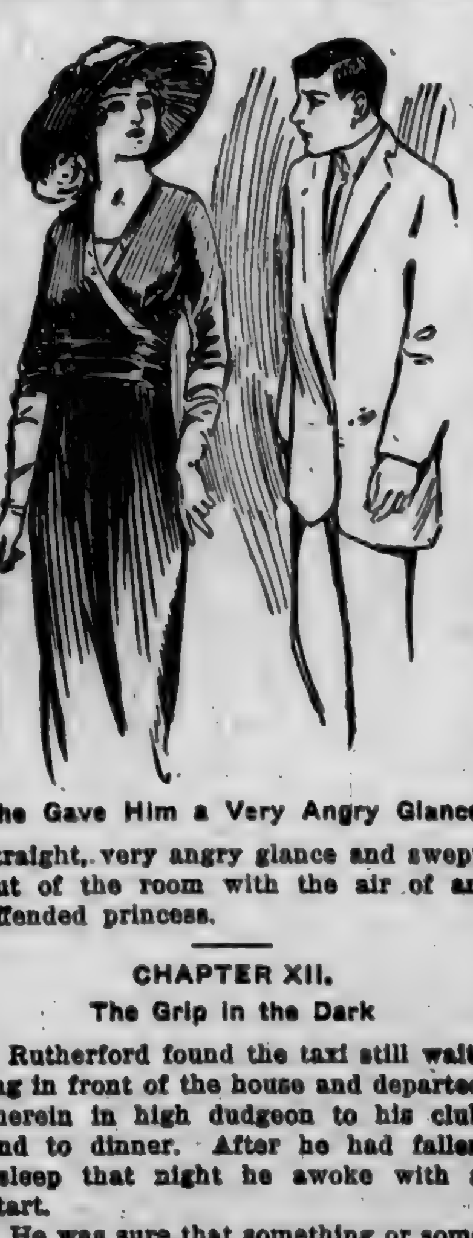
"If Mr. Helderman was here," she whispered, "he must have come directly here after leaving us."

"And he must have known that your maid would be out, too," observed Craig. "Look here, Miss Billie Ballantyne, your father must have been here, here, this afternoon, in this house, under the very self-same roof with you!"

"Oh, no! He—he"—

"Don't lie to me!" stormed Craig.

Miss Ballantyne gave him one long, straight, very angry glance and swept out of the room with the air of an offended princess.



She Gave Him a Very Angry Glance

CHAPTER XII.

The Grip in the Dark

Rutherford found the taxi still waiting in front of the house and departed therein in high dudgeon to his club and to dinner. After he had fallen asleep that night he awoke with a start.

He was sure that something or some one was moving about in his room.

And then a tiny searchlight swept across his face inquiringly. Craig flung himself clear of the covers and with a flying stride was upon the burglar, throttling him.

Surprised and stunned the man went down. Craig's hand went instantly to the burglar's right. He tore the pistol from the clenched fist, and flung it across the room.

In the tenseness of the moment, two things came forcibly to Craig's notice. One was that while he himself was breathing fast and hard from his exertion, the breath of his captive was as even and regular as if he were asleep. The other was that neither of them had made a sound in the quiet encounter.

In the silence he heard the chimes from the clock in the stately tower complete their quatrain, indicating the close of an hour; and after a moment the bell boomed out the hour of two.

Realizing that his antagonist was playing with him, allowing him to use up all his energy, Rutherford gathered himself together for a mighty effort. The push button on the opposite side of the room would summon Mike. He must reach it, if he had to drag this inert weight all the way across with him. He turned in that direction.

Whether the man suspected his intention, or decided th[illegible] now ripe for an effort in his own behalf, Rutherford could not guess. He only knew of the swift change of attitude, as a grip like the snapping shut of a steel spring closed down upon his arm. He knew that hold. He had never felt it but once. He had never in all his experience in the world of sport met such another. In his amazement he uttered a single word:

"Helderman!"

Suddenly, the man wrenched himself clear of Rutherford, and darted toward the door, as if he had but one object in view, to make his escape. Rutherford darted after him. The next instant, the retreating figure reversed its motion and met the oncoming man with terrific momentum. Rutherford was hurled to the floor by the impact. He felt himself seized in the grasp of two long, lean, powerful arms, which seemed to him more like those of a gorilla than a human being.

Slowly but surely he was bent back across the knee of this cunning opponent. He struggled vainly, feeling ribs and muscles which had not yet fully recovered from his hunting accident twist and strain. He thought he must burst asunder. A groan was forced from his tense lips, and the merciless agony was ended by unconsciousness.

CHAPTER XIII.

An Offer of Marriage

Next morning Miss Ballantyne received a note from Helderman asking leave to call that evening and saying that he should do so unless he heard from her to the contrary.

Her first impulse was to telephone. But her pride held her back. He had accused her of lying, the night before, and she must wait for him to apologize! So she held a short conversation with her father, and he saw no objection to the interview; on the contrary, pointed out that it might be very advantageous to her. It was not every day that influential bankers concerned themselves with the personal concerns of posible clients. Early in the evening at the appointed hour a smart limousine rolled up to the old-fashioned house on West Tenth street.

Helderman felt elated to be received so graciously by the self-possessed young hostess, although he may have felt surprise at being ushered into the somewhat bare study. The sole ornament to relieve its business-like aspect was the splendid horned head mounted upon the table.

"I wish to speak to you of your blue buckle. I would warn you to guard it carefully—to trust it to no one! You may not know it, but others seek it and its meaning, as well as yourself! I may tell you, as I informed you yesterday, that I am indirectly interested in this affair, but only in so far as it concerns the relinquishment of the estate to the right party. I knew Goeffrey Ballantyne in life"—

"You knew my uncle!"

"Yes— and I have reason to believe that he regretted the injustice he had done and wished to make reparation. But he has involved his will in so many curious safeguards that his purpose may be defeated by impostors!"

"Will you please explain yourself?"

"If the buckle is not in your personal possession that is bad. It is in danger."

"Why?"

"If you are to prove your claim—this week—it would be well to go alone and avoid confidantes.

"You may think it singular that I have taken all this trouble to warn you of things, many of which you may already know. But what do you know is the inexhaustible resourcefulness of—your enemy. That enemy is constantly active—constantly at work, in channels you know not, and aiding her is a large supply of funds, against which you would be helpless. I am telling you this frankly, through a selfish motive, for there is only one way in which you can controvert such agencies."

"And how is that?" asked the girl, breathlessly.

"You must marry me!"

The words were uttered almost in the tone of quiet command. Miss Ballantyne sprang to her feet, her hands clasped against her breast.

"You seem to regard this as merely another business matter, sir!"

"I crave you pardon for speaking of the—practical side, first," he said, in low earnest tones, bending toward her. "We men of affairs are too apt to forget that 'tis love that makes the world go round. Will you give me credit for sincerity when I saw that ever since I first saw you, on the Gothic, I have hoped and longed for the moment when I could pour out my heart to you! My desire to serve you is but a part of this expression. I love you, as I never loved gold, or power—as I never believed it possible to love any woman!"

"Stop, Mr. Helderman! Do you think it is quite honorable to make a business engagement the pretext for any such avowal as this?"

"Can you not believe me?" he pleaded.

Looking at his fervent, adoring eyes, the girl felt with the swift instinct of womanhood that he was telling the truth about his passion, however she might doubt his other pretensions. And granted this premise, he was a man quite desperate enough to go to any extremes—even to the betraying of the other woman, is she were his accomplice—to the furthering of his desires. She resolved once more to be cautious, to temporize.

"You—you would not expect me to give you a definite answer tonight, Mr. Helderman—unless it were a negative one"—

"At any other time I should not be so urgent," he replied, almost fiercely. "But a great many things hang upon your decision."

"Do you mean to—threaten me, Mr. Helderman?"

"By no means, child—but you need protection right now—this week!"

"Why, I am not so alone, so helpless as you would infer!" she blazed up. "There is my father—and—and"—

"The precious Mr. Rutherford!" he sneered. 'Your father does not dare appear in this matter. He is suspected of a serious crime"—

"What do you mean, sir?"

"Why I mean—if you must know—a serious smuggling plot. And Mr. Craig Rutherford is also being trailed by government detectives"—

"False! As false in the one case as in the other!" she stormed.

"Ah! You are quite a champion of his, I see! But the young man—does he—ah, return your trust?"

It was a chance thrust, but a home thrust. The girl could only reply by tapping a little bell. Sophie appeared at the door.

"Mr. Helderman cannot be detained longer this evening, Sophie. Let him have his hat and coat."

CHAPTER XIV.

When Rutherford again opened his eyes to a dull, insistent sense of suffering, it was broad daylight. Some one was still kneading his tortured frame persistently.

"Helderman, you devil, stop!" he commanded, hoarsely.

"No, Pritchard—the surgeon,'" retorted the other man. "Now, listen to me! If you don't stop tossing about until I find out what's the matter with you it will be all up with you about ever walking again."

Rutherford, sick with pain, subsided.

"You're pretty well done up," the surgeon observed as much to himself as to his patient, after a series of investigations which seemed to the victim like an inquisition.

"It's in the old place," muttered Craig—then he added savagely, "but I will get well—I will walk!"

"Good for you! I like your spunk!" said the doctor.

Craig breathed heavily, then he inhaled again and turned his eyes toward the practitioner.

"You using chloroform on me?"

"No—some one beat me to it and has spilt all the bottle on your man here."

"Gooley?" exclaimed the sufferer anxiously. "Hello Mike."

For answer Mike lifted up a sick looking countenance, then struggled to his feet, saluted and collapsed back into his chair.

"Some one 'phoned for me to come at once."

"Who?"

It was a woman's voice.

"But no woman could have known—that I was hurt!" puzzled Craig. "Look here, doctor, when did you get the message?"

"At a quarter of three—but I didn't go back to bed, as she insisted that I come at once."

"Yes, but I didn't get it clearly. I have the impression that it was Valentine?"

"Val?"—

Craig's jaw dropped, leaving the name unfinished. He groaned, suffering in mind and body. Now he knew why he had been attacked. Helderman had come to search his rooms and his person, for the necklace or the buckle—or both—and, worst of all, with the connivance of a woman who, he had felt more than once, was deceiving him! And moreover, she was so closely advised of all Helderman's movements, that she was actually able to summon a doctor for his victim, inside the hour! The fact that she took the trouble to summon aid was mighty poor comfort.

The physician must have seen his anguish of body and soul, for he mixed a sleeping draught and gave it to Craig. Under its influence he sank into a troubled but restful slumber.

It was mid-afternoon when he awoke. Mike was sitting by his bed, and now grinned broadly.

"Hello, Mike, yourself again?"

"Sure, sor, and hoping you are enjoying the same blessing!"

"Oh, I'll be better after I've had something hot to drink. Anything else happened?"

"Not just like the last, thanks be—but two men called this morning who were anxious to see you and when they found out how banged up you were said they'd come back later, sor."

"The secret service men again, Mike. I wish I weren't so popular!"

It was, in truth, the secret service men who called, the next morning, but not the imitation ones whom Craig had in mind. Gooley ushered them in about 10 o'clock, and lined them up in the bedroom, where his master could see them without turning his head. Although Craig was much better than he had believed he could be so soon after the terrible twist to his spine, he was still not inclined to exertion. But he was pleased with his visitors.

"Hello, Crowder!" he greeted one of the two men. "I'm jolly glad you have come."

"I'm glad to be here, sir, but sorry you are laid up," the detective responded. "This is Mr. Sims. He knows you, although you don't know him."

Craig nodded and looked more closely at the other man. He acknowledged that he did not remember to have seen him before.

"He's one of us," commented Craig.

"What do you want to know?" Craig asked.

"Mr. Rutherford, you once told me, in the presence of Mr. Brookfield, at the Barristers' Club that Mr. Helderman was the man who read you a wireless message right off the reel."

Rutherford nodded. He noticed the other man hitch his chair nearer the bed. Crowder evidently was keen upon the scent.

"The banker told you that this message was for the secret-service man on board?" Crowder continued.

"That's what he said."

"Well, Sims here was a special detail on board the Gothic, though I didn't know it at the time."

Sims shook his head.

"I never got the message or any message like it—and if there was one there ought to have been more about this necklace—and never heard about such a message until I got to headquarters."

"You sure of that?" Rutherford demanded.

"Positive," was the reply.

Rutherford looked at Crowder. "What do you make of it?" he asked.

"Why it's easy," affirmed Crowder. "Helderman invented that message out of the whole cloth; that's what I told you at the time. And Sims is right. So long as Sims didn't answer, Berlin would have sent another message to be sure. Helderman invented it."

"What for?" exclaimed Craig.

"Wasn't suspicion directed pretty pointedly at a couple of passengers on that ship?"

"But why should such a report have been circulated at all—and who could have been interested in it?" he questioned.

"It was all a part of a shrewd scheme by your friend Helderman. He was afraid the secret service men might have just such a message, and he started it on his own account—to divert suspicion—from himself!"

"Then Helderman's a smuggler?" queried Craig.

"I believe you," was the only reply the secret service man vouchsafed. Then he turned and asked, unexpectedly, "Who did you up, Mr. Rutherford?"

"Helderman."

"What time was this?"

"At 2 o'clock in the morning," answered Craig.

"Then it wasn't Helderman!"

"But it was! There's just one man I've ever known that had such a grip," Craig persisted, vexed at the detective's doubts.

"At 2 o'clock night before last," said Simms, "I saw Helderman pacing back and forth before his window up on Riverside Drive. He did not leave the house.

"And he was there last night, too," added Crowder.

Rutherford gave over trying to shake the men's conviction that Helderman could not have been his assailant; and they rose to go, expressing the hope that he would soon be about again.

"Oh, by the bye, Mr. Rutherford," said Crowder, stopping, hat in hand, "you remember my mentioning a Mr. nnd Mrs. Talcott as the ones on whom"—

"Yes, yes, I remember!" Craig interrupted, with a clutch in his throat.

"Well, I've got a hunch that they are just blinds, just being used to divert suspicion from the real smugglers,"

"What makes you thing so, Crowder?" Craig managed to ask.

"Sims here saw a young lady enter the house up there a little after two. We've often seen her going in and out. She seems to be a relative, or an accomplice, or something. She is Mrs. Talcott"—

"Why, you don't know Mrs. Talcott, Crowder!" Craig protested, trying vainly to keep his voice steady.

"Don't I though! Sims has known her ever since she came across on the Gothic."

Sims nodded.

"Slender woman," he said. "Graceful, and carries herself well. Has a long gray cloak, and another of blue. Fond of wearing buckles. I've often seen her. She came up to the house in a cab a few minutes after you heard the clock strike two downtown, and Helderman met her at the door. I saw them."

The telephone bell rang just after the detectives left.

It was Miss Ballantyne's voice greeting Craig a trifle uncertainly.

"Could you—could you find it convenient to call this afternoon? I don't want to put you to too much trouble, but I wanted to arrange to get a certain piece of property before I called at the lawyer's"—

"I'm very sorry," he replied, "but I am still unable to navigate very well. Even I cannot recuperate from treatment such as I have received at short notice."

"I—I—thought that if you could call I would tell you in—how sorry I am. I didn't mean to be rude, the other evening, after all you have done for me and my father—but your words hurt! I know circumstances seem against me! and I should not blame you that you cannot keep your faith, in spite of them. Oh, if you only knew how gladly I would tell you all!"

"It was very good of you to send the surgeon!" he said.

"Send the surgeon ! Do you need surgeon?" There was no mistaking the almost breathless anxiety of her tones.

"Why, you certainly must have known that I was pretty badly done up, or you would not have telephoned to Dr. Pritchard!" he insisted, vexed at her posing.

"Dr. Richard? I know no Dr. Richard. Tell me, what is the matter—please."

"I said Dr. Pritchard. Didn't you telephone him, about three o'clock night before last, to come and look after me?"

"I did not, Mr. Rutherford. How could I know that you needed a physician? If you would only tell me what is the matter! You talk so strangely!"

"I am laid up for several days," he answered. "Some one entered my room, night before last. In the tussle I got the worst of it"—

"Oh, I'm so sorry! So sorry!" came back the distressed voice. "And I feel again as if I have been to blame! Was it a burglar?"

"Yes."

"Did he get anything?"

"No, Miss Ballantyne, you needn't worry on that account. The blue buckle is safe."

He was tempted to hang up the receiver, but waited to fire one parting shot.

"By the bye, Miss Ballantyne, what did Mr. Helderman tell you?"

"Last night?" she added, wonderingly.

"No, the night before—when I was hurt."

"I did not see him the night before. I saw him last night, and it was partly about this that I wanted to see you."

"There seems to be some confusion about dates—but you did see him?" persisted Craig.

"Why, yes—but how queerly you talk!"

"Good by," he said, putting the receiver back in place.

CHAPTER XV.

A Velour Hat

Friday morning, Sophie chanced upon Miss Ballantyne's handbag on a desk of the West Tenth street house. She looked it through with professional thoroughness. She found nothing of especial interest except a small folded bit of paper on which was written:

"Cowen, Covington and Brown—32 Nassau—Friday at three."

Today was Friday. The maid quickly restored the paper to its receptacle, and hastened upstairs to her mistress.

"Mademoiselle, will you tell me what costume I shall prepare for you today?"

"Oh, anything."

"Why not again the velvet gown and the velour hat, Mademoiselle? The combination is ever suitable for the Avenue, or for the stuffy old business office. Why do persons have to talk so much business, anyway?"

"Then you can lay out the velvet gown. Besides," she added to herself, "Mr. Leclerc will know me easier by that."

"Yes, Mademoiselle," returned the maid, smiling.

"Hello!" called a man's crisp, business-like tones. "This is Mr. Cowen talking. I wish to speak with Miss Ballantyne, please."

"This is Miss Ballantyne—but I do not recognize the name."

"Cowen, of Cowen, Covington & Brown."

"Oh, yes!" replied Billie, her heart beating more rapidly than ever. "Did Mr. Leclerc tell you"—

"Everything is satisfactory, Miss Ballantyne."

"Oh, I'm so glad—so very glad!"

"Mr. Leclerc is not here just now. He is detained on another matter. He asked me to call you up and postpone the meeting slightly. It was to be at 3, I understand?"

"Yes, at 3, this afternoon."

"I believe he agreed to deliver to you a certain—sentimental article—in which you are interested?"

"Yes—have you it ready?" she asked breathlessly.

"Certainly. I am merely rehearsing these details in order that there may be no misunderstanding. Now, Miss Ballantyne, if you will be good enough to postpone your visit until 4, Mr. Leclerc will be able to see you."

"Until 4? Certainly," Billie agreed; and the business-like person at the other end of the line thanked her, and rang off.

Four o'clock came at last; and punctual to the stroke she presented herself at the spacious suite of offices where Mr. Leclerc was to await her. The office boy smiled at her, and without waiting for her to give her name or errand started toward the inner office.

"I'll tell Mr. Cowen," he said. "He was just going, but don't think he has left the office yet."

Miss Ballantyne wondered how the boy could know who she was so quickly; and if it were customary in large offices like this to tell an office-boy so accurately of expected clients. In a moment he was back, asking her to follow.

"Mr. Cowen is glad he waited a moment longer, he says."

There were two men seated in the room into which she was ushered. One she recognized as Mr. Leclerc, peering at her from behind his heavy glasses. The other was evidently Mr. Cowen, as he sat behind a desk piled high with papers. Mr. Leclerc arose. She approached him with hand extended.

"You are here on time, Mr. Leclerc," she said pleasantly.

"You are back, Mis Ballantyne?" he remarked, not noticing her hand at first, then taking it as if her greeting rather surprised him.

"Back?" she repeated. "Why, I haven't been away."

"Is there something further we can do for you, Miss Ballantyne?" Cowen inquired, courteously.

"Further?" she questioned, smilingly. "This is Mr. Cowen, I believe?"

"Certainly," he replied, looking keenly at her. "I thought we agreed that everything was properly adjusted."

"So I understood you to say," she answered, her mind reverting to the telephone conversation, "and I have come for—the blue buckle."

"The blue buckle?" Leclerc repeated, while Cowen appeared to listen to this strange conversation without comprehending it.

"I came for it, as you suggested," the girl said.

"And you got it, as I promised," Leclerc replied.

"I—got it!" Billie exclaimed, in astonishment.

(Continued next week.)

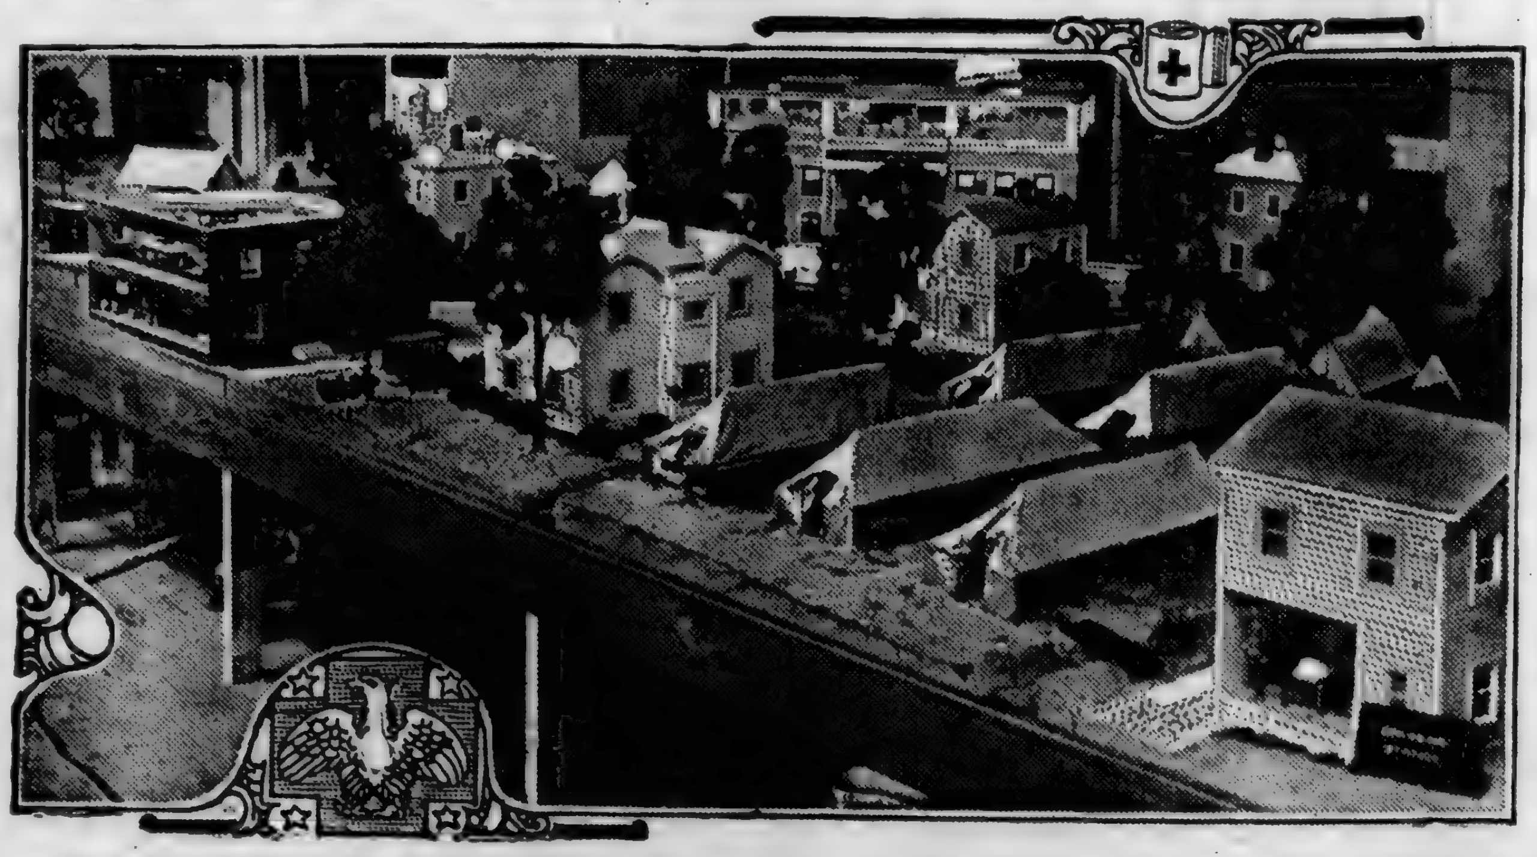
The Publisher's Co-Operative Co.
440 So. Dearborn St CHICAGO 19-16

MAY

L 908

0148

RED CROSS CAMPAIGNS FOR NEW MEMBERS



Red Cross exhibit in Washington showing a field hospital near the trenches. This is one of the methods the American Red Cross society is using to increase its membership.

BOYS SENTENCED TO CLEAN TOWN

WILL ACT AS WHITE WINGS UNTIL COURT IS ASSURED OF THEIR REFORMATION

JUDGE PUTS BLAME ON PARENTS

Holds Them Responsible for Infraction Of the School Law and Discipline

Hackensack, N. J.—Under the watchful eyes of a village marshal and of many unofficial eyes, six boy incendiaries, whose ages range from 13 to 15 years were cleaning the streets of Palisades Park, having been sentenced by County Judge Seufert to act as white wings in their home borough until the court is assured of their repentance and reformation.

The boys, who for several months past have acted a little worse than traditional bad boys, a short time ago, participated in setting fire to a vacant building in Morsemere. That led to their arrest for arson. It was learned that an older boy, Joseph McCulluogh, who admitted having started the blaze and who had been in the reformatory at Jamesburg, had been the ringleader and guide. Judge Seufert held McCullough for a return to a reform institution, but announced his intention of trying an experiment with the boys of more tender age.

The judge in disposing of the case in court said that a large proportion of the blame should be fixed on the parents for not having watched closely enough over the activities of their children. Continuing, Judge Seufert said:

"One of the facts difficult to deal with in the case of juvenile offenders is that the children involved will play the part of heroes among their companions. In order to eliminate this heroic element it is intended to put them to work every Saturday morning for some time on the streets of Palisades Park, at cleaning crossings, picking papers and rubbish on the roads and cleaning up around the public school building. They will be compelled to devote the whole of every Saturday morning to their tasks and will probably be in charge of some officer.

"The boys have also been prohibited from talking about or conferring with the rest of the school children concerning their experience in connection with the fire or jail, and have been impressed with the fact that a violation of any of the provisions of the probation will meet with further punishment. In addition they will be placed under the jurisdiction of Recorder Viewig, of Palisades Park, to whom they will report weekly. He will receive monthly reports from the school and the parents as to the behavior of the children.

"In regard to the position of the parents in matters of this sort, the trouble the court finds in dealing with these children's cases is that truancy is the starting point and that parents pay little or no attention to the reports that come each month from school and show on their face how many days the child was absent and how many times tardy. In some instances the parents pay little attention to whether reports are brought home or whether the child brings books home to study. The parents of each of these boys were summoned to court and personally brought before me and told in detail what their obligations are as parents and were directed to pay close attention to their children in the future.

"This case is a good illustration of the dire results of the lack of home surveillance and discipline. This is not an isolated case of truancy, but the deliberate planning and combination resulting in a gang of young miscreants not only becoming truants, but committing serious infractions of the law.

"It would be well to publish the fact that in this class of cases the court is apt to hold the parents just as responsible for the infraction of the school law and discipline as the children who commit the violation and to deal with the parents accordingly.

"It is my intention to watch with much care the working out of this penalty because of the fact that the solution of the boy question is probably the greatest problem with which the County Judge has to deal."

Judge Seufert has long manifested a kindly interest in boys and young men and is always loth to subject them to prison influences if he can punish them for their wrongdoing without sentencing them to a prison term. He always is a strict disciplinarian.

HOLE IN MAN'S HEART IS PLUGGED; LIFE RESTORED

Heroic Operation that Saved Would-Be Suicide From Death Is Fully Explained.

Kirksville, Mo.—Earl H. Fisk of Helena, Mont., who shot himself thru the heart here still lives and is in a fair way toward recovery. His life was saved by an operation performed by Dr. George A. Still, who says he took hold of Fisk's heart, thru which the bullet had passed and by twisting the tissue of it with his thumb and forefinger plugged the hole and stopped the flow of blood. Dr. Still says the heart had ceased to beat and the man was apparently dead.

Fisk shot himself in his room shortly before 1 p. m. He was carried into the operating room at 1:20 o'clock. Examination showed a bullet wound directly above the heart. The following account of what was done was dictated by Dr. Still.

"The shirt and undershirt were cut away from the chest and the skin immediately sterilized with pure carbolic acid washed off with alcohol. The patient gasped a few times after being laid on the table, but apparently was dead. No pulse could be felt either in the wrist or neck.

"I made the remark that there wasn't much use operating on a corpse and then added that he wouldn't be any deader if we had a good look at the wound inside. I immediately opened the chest between the fourth and fifth ribs for about four inches, the bullet hole being in the middle of the wound, which was in the intercostal space below the rib near the nipple, a little inside. The wound exposed a hole in the pericardium, which was distended with blood. I split the pericardium and let out a lot of blood clot This exposed the hole in the heart.

"The instant I took hold of the heart it began to beat. With my index finger I twisted the tissue of the heart wall so as to plug the hole in the heart, then removed the remaining clots in the heart sack or pericardium.

"From then on the pulse picked up, but all the time I was sewing up the wounds and while the nurses were administering a gallon of normal salt solution, he did not regain consciousness. The normal salt solution was to replace the lost blood and counteract shock.

"He did not regain consciousness until some time after he had been in bed, and it was two or three days before he was totally rational.

"The pulse steadily improved until after about three days it was normal. He ran a little fever during the first week. His temperature was practically normal for the next two weeks, and later on he left the hospital, apparently all right.

"The bullet which had gone thru the body and lodged in the tissues under the skin between the tenth and eleventh ribs on the right side, was removed. It was perfectly shaped. The end of it showed the imprint of his shirt where it struck before entering the body. The sides showed the marks of the revolver riflings. It had missed the ribs going in and showed no bone marks. It must have traversed a lip of the lung, the heart and liver.

"It went thru the heart near the center. It must have barely missed the largest vein in the body, the vena cava, and a little farther to the right would have caught the thin part of the heart and the pulmonary vessels; a little farther to the left the aorta the main aretery of the body. The bullet was an old style one of lead."

Fisk tried to get out of bed one night when the attendant was not looking. He struggled to injure the wound.

Two weeks ago he had sufficiently recovered to leave Kirksville with his mother for their home at Helena. They stopped at Minneapolis for a visit with relatives and while there Fisk was taken with the grip, but according to information from there the illness was not traceable to his wound and he has practically recovered.

No motive has been disclosed by Fisk for his desire to die. His father killed himself in September, shortly after Fisk entered the school as a student. His grandfather also took his own life.

OILED PENNIES HER ALIMONY

Former "Hubby's First Payment Is 3,500 in a Tin Can

Sedalia, Mo.—When Mrs. George Arbuckle received her first month's alimony she was forced to pay 45 cents for express charges on the money. And when she opened the package she found an oil can filled with pennies. There were 3,500 of the round red disks, and they were well lubricated by the oil which the can also contained. She spent the best part of a week washing off her alimony and then carted it off to the bank. Then she learned that she need not have accepted the can of pennies, as cents are not legal tender for amounts over 25 cents. And now Mrs. Arbuckle is on guard for the next months remittance. If another can of coppers heaves in sight she will stand on her rights with the dignity and refuse to accept it.

St. Louis Women Study Law

St. Louis, Mo.—Studying corporation law is the latest fad of the St. Louis women. This came to light when fifty members of the Wednesday club, one of the most exclusive women's organizations in the city, applied to Secretary of State Roach for copies of the corporation laws of the state of Missouri.

RECOVERS LONG LOST WATCH

Eighteen Years in Mill Race and Still Running.

Penn Yan. N. Y.—One day eighteen years ago Henry W. Townsend, county superintendent of the poor, lost a watch from his pocket. He worked at two tasks that day—assisting in cleaning out a mill race and unloading straw. He searched the straw without finding the time piece. The mill race was soon full of water so that further search could not be made.

A few days ago the race was cleaned out and a watch was found. Townsend examined it and found in it his old timepiece. It was in excellent condition after its long rest under the water.

One of the official's friends asked him if the watch was still running and Mr. Townsend gravely replied that it surely was. It was a stem winder, he said, and very likely the action of the swiftly running water had kept it wound up all these years.

TEN MORE "PORKY PATRIOTS"

Farmer Gets Surprise at Dawn's Early Light.

Connellsville, Pa.—It was by the dawn's early light that W. E. Meier, farmer, proudly hailed his prize Cheshire hog when she became mother of ten piggies, four red, there white and three blue.

CUTS MEALS TO REDUCE

But Continues to Gain on One Meal Daily—Now Eats All They'll Bring on

Stamford, Texas—Texas lays claim to having the largest man in the United States in the person of Sam Harris of Tommersville. He is 42 years old, and weighs 535 pounds, is six feet two inches in height, and six feet one inch around the abdomen, 69 1-2 inches around the calf of the leg, 47 inches around the thigh, 82 inches around the hips. He requires armholes in his vest of 25 1-2 inches and wears 10 1-2 shoes.

He has most of his clothes made at home, but has to order suits at times and usually has a hard time making the tailors believe the measurements are correct.

He has recently tried the dieting remedy for reducing flesh, limiting his meals to two each day. He gained seven pounds in three months. He then began eating one meal per day and still gained flesh. He says he has returned to his old habit of eating all he can put inside of his belt.

PRESERVE THE GOOD OLD RATTAN

SEVERAL TEACHERS AND "OLD FASHIONED" CITIZENS OUTLINE BELIEF IN ROD

SAY PEDAGOGUES NEED POWER

Present Tendency Is to Spare the Rod and Spoil the Child.

Boston, Mass.—Preserve the good old rattan, the old fashioned spankings and the "clubbin's" in the schools was the rallying cry of several teachers and old fashioned citizens who appeared before the committee on education to protest the bill which would do away with corporal punishment except by permission of the parents or guardian of the child.

"There is too much of this mollycoddling going on," declared indignant citizen John I. Fitzgerald, who represents the cosmopolitan district of Ward 8. "Time was when the cat-o'-nine tails and the switch were part of the household furniture. Now we have the spectacle of a daughter haling her father into court because he had dared to chastise her. Beatings never hurt any man; they do him good."

He believed firmly in the principle of "spare the rod and spoil the child." and gave lusty cheers for the good old plan of applying a rattan to the proper vulnerable spot in the hide of a recalcitrant pupil.

But Fitzgerald's rooting for the stick treatment was as naught compared to the delegation of principals of schools in Lynn. It seemed as if all the corporal punishers of the Shoe City were on deck to defend their constitutional rights.

Edgar Copeland who is said to be one of the most popular principals in this city, was one of the principal speakers in defense of the system. He declared that a teacher must have the power behind him to get action out of obstinate pupils or to reprove youthful pranks that violate the rules of good order in the school room.

James W. Applebee of Lynn, another principal, confessed to having a clear record this year and a good amateur standing in the corporal punishment league. But he was strong for the rattan method of educating the youthful mind to sprout.

"There is a time when a boy needs it right on the spot,' he said, but the reference was not to locality but to time. "If you cannot punish the boy he takes the attitude 'What are you going to do about it?'

"There are some schools where a boy gets sick and has decent burial before the red tape is cut and punishment allowed and the boy gets what he is spoiling for."

The hearing was decidedly reminiscent of the youthful days of the committee and the audience, and they took keen interest in it. Every potential beater of the children, as the principals were looked upon, was greeted with careful scrutiny as if he might have concealed a stick up his sleeve which he was about to assault them with.

William T. Mignault was the petitioner for the legislation. It was his contention that the child should be protected from the sudden passion of the teacher.

"At present," he said, "the same person is the accuser and the judge of the child." He told of a case in Dorchester where a girl of 11 was so punished that her ear was torn to an extent requiring six stitches to sew it up. He believed that his bill, while not abolishing corporal punishment, would tend to prevent unjust punishment. Senator Chapman and Representative Wall were recorded for the bill.

"ELECTRIC HOBO" IS CALIFORNIA PRODUCT

Cooks as He Goes and Steals "Fuel From Third Rail With Own Appliance.

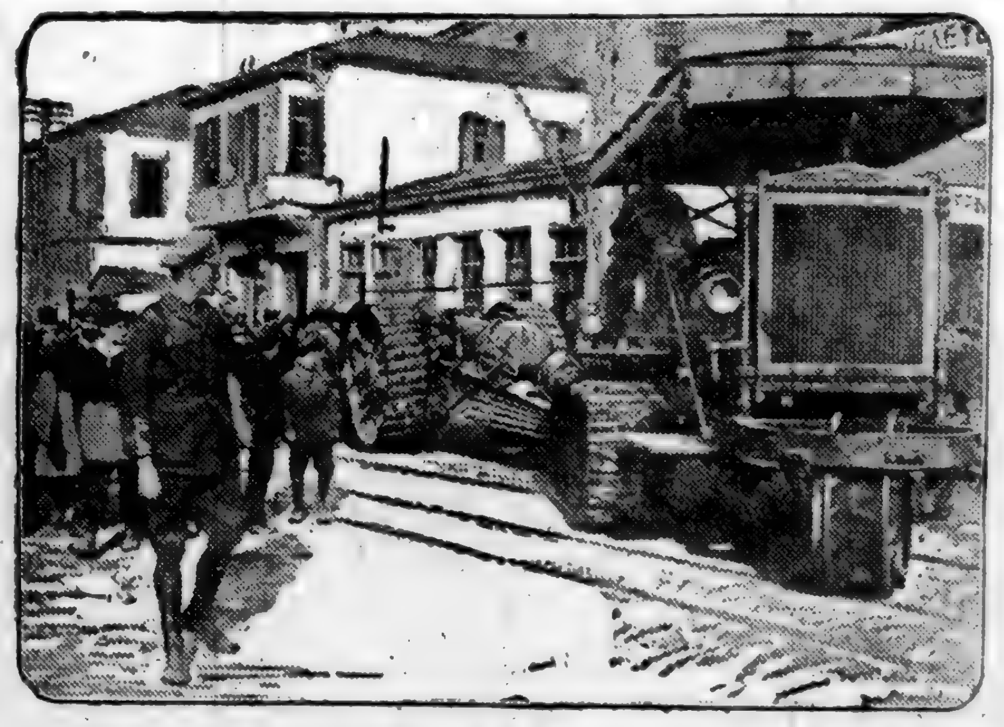
Marysville, Cal.—Wanderers have been known to adopt various means of obtaining a livelihood and are known by various types, but a new variety has just been discovered in this vicinity.

He is known as the "electric hobo." He is never without a hot meal when he can beg the ingredients with which to cook, and he doesn't have to carry a match with him or worry about kindling a fire.

The Northern Electric Company's third rail is his stove, or at least the source of his fire, for he carries with him a patent stove. It consists of a folding iron plate, interlaced with copper wires. When he gets hungry he unfolds it and makes a connection on the third rail, places the food on the stove and, when ready, eats to his heart's content. Jackrabbits, vegetables, coffee and flapjacks can be cooked on the electric grill.

C. B. Harter, a Sutter county rancher, says he saw the "electric hobo" at work cooking his breakfast the other morning. Among other things he heated a can of water on the stove, took a rusty razor from one pocket, a cake of soap from another and a piece of mirror out of his coat lining and shaved.

BRITISH TRACTOR IN GREECE



Activity among the allied troops at Saloniki, Greek port held by them. British caterpillar tractor handling heavy guns.

MODERNIZED LOGGING CAMP

HAS BATH, ELECTRIC LIGHTS, AND LIBRARY TO INCREASE EFFICIENCY

GET THE BEST TYPES OF MEN

Cleanliness and Attractiveness the Strong Features of this Model Camp in Washington

Seattle, Wash.—"Clarence Hobnall, the huge fisted, hairy chested hook tender, emerged rosy from his morning ablutions in the tiled bathroom and made his toilet with usual care. Over the selection of a cravat that would match the dull bronze of his artful silk hosiery he spent a full quarter of an hour. Then, with a final polishing caress to his manicured nails he strode smiling from the bunkhouse, eager to begin his days work."

Sounds foolish doesn't it? It is, but not so foolish as many an old time logger would consider the things that are going on the the Cherry Valley logging camp.

Logging de luxe is the program at Cherry Valley, but what the old timor might overlook in his scornful comment upon a model logging camp would be the efficiency of the plan. The Cherry Valley Logging Company which operates near Everett, has reformed the old time camp until an old timer would not recognize it, but not solely for the spiritual uplift of the logger; rather because this is good business.

The time honored logging camp, bunkhouse and cookhouse was the original bachelor's hall. It represented the worst man can do in the way of housekeeping.

The big men who go into the woods to get out the timber accepted that as a matter of course. It never occurred to them to consider whether a logging camp could be improved upon. Logging camps had always been as they were and always would be, in the estimation of any who ever gave the matter a thought. They were not intended to be permanent homes, nor palaces of pleasure for pampered darling, who were too proud to bathe in the creek and eat off a plank table of uncertain cleanliness.

A bunk in a logging camp was, and is, with few exceptions, a plank box of coffin size, floored with fir boughs at some forgotten period. The food served on the plank tables was, and usually is, rich and above all plentiful but that is all one could conscientiously say of it.

Wash day in the old time logging camp comes on Sunday, and the time-honored method of laundering clothes is to hang them on a snag in the river and let the current do its worst.

Then the Cherry Valley Logging Company came into the field and brought about an innovation. It built a model logging camp.

Each man in this camp has a bed of his own, an iron bed, with springs and a mattress. The bunkhouse itself is a substantial, modern well ventilated, pleasant structure, with rooms for recreation. It has a laundry of its own and rows of sanitary laundry tubs where employes do their washing.

There are real bathrooms in this bunkhouse, and hot and cold running water for bathing. There are reading rooms, a library, and there are electric lights.

Similarly surprising things have been happening to the cookhouse. It is now a place where a dyspeptic would care to dine. Cleanliness and attractiveness are two of the strong features of the whole camp.

"The result of this innovation," said R. A. McDonald, manager of the company, who is a frequent Seattle visitor, "is increased efficiency. We get the best types of men and we keep them interested in the job. That means a bigger cut. We weren't indulging a whim for visionary philanthropy when we upset the traditions of logging camps. We were looking for dollars and cents results, and we got them."

But, shades of the great North woods, what will the old time logger say to it?

HIS FARM IS TRAMPS' HEAVEN

Good Natured Planter Houses 595 in One Year.

Reading, Pa.—Henry Heft, a good natured farmer of near Adamstown, gave lodging to 595 tramps during the past year. Every hobo calling at his country place is given a comfortable place to sleep and meals. In return the guests always do chores about the farm. In all his experience, Heft has never had any trouble with those whom he sheltered.

His records show the January guests numbered 94, February 32; March 83; April 83; May 64; June 71; July 37; August 70; September 32; October 18; November 38; and December 33.

BLUFFS TRAMP; THEN FAINTS

Intruder Flees From Husband Who Was Not at Home

Elwood, Ind.—Mrs. George Wilton is under the care of a physician as a result of the fight she experienced on the visit of a tramp to her home. The tramp pushed his way into the house, but was bluffed out when Mrs. Wilton called her husband, who was not at home. She fainted afterward.

Chop Down Edward's Tree.

Philadelphia, Pa.—The big elm tree in Independence Square, said to have been planted by King Edward VII. of England when he visited this country as the Prince of Wales in 1861, has been cut down. The tree had been dead for some time.

Send in your
Subscription today

THE Country Home Weekly Newspaper is eagerly sought, and in passing from hand to hand of the entire family, is reasonably sure to give returns to the advertiser.

This paper fills the bill—
The bills fill the till:
Get that?

MAY

L 908

U149

They Answered Call of The Grim Reaper

Another of the patriarchal citizens of DeKalb County has dropped by the way. George F. De Long born January 9th., 1844, suddenly departed this life April 28, 1916, having lived 72 years, 3 months and 19 days.

This aged man was the second son of Solomon and Marie DeLong, who was of the early pioneers of the northern portion of the state, and in his youth he was familiar with the varied and thrilling experiences of the wilderness life and when the stirring events of the Civil War drew on he was among the first to offer himself for the defense and preservation of the Union. For more than 3 years he shared in the vicissitudes of camp, march and battle until victory and peace came.

Of his soldierly life and character it is enough to know that he was held in high esteem by all of his comrades, sharing with them in the valorous deeds of his regiment (the 88th. Indiana Vols.) and of the illustrious 14th. Army Corps with which his regiment was identified. The history of his life so brave and true as a soldier, is even richer and more inspiring as a Christian citizen. He was reared not only to the highest principals of patriotism but to all of these sterling qualities of a strong and thoughtful life. He was a man of positive convictions and stood four square on all the helpful reformatory movements of his time, maintaining the dignity and character of the name he bore.

In his advanced years he was president of the board of trustees of the church of which he was a member, and in this relation assisted in the building of the new church, which he saw finished and but recently fully paid for, and it is beautifully fitting that his body wrapped in his country's flag should rest during this memorial service within these consecrated walls. A good strong man is gone; Another finished ripened life, Makes its last mortal appeal in behalf of our immortal life.

Mr. DeLong leaves a wife, 2 sons, a daughter, 2 grand daughters and 1 brother, who deeply mourn their loss, but who are comforted in the faith that triumphs over death and the grave. The funeral was held Monday, May 1, the Rev. J. T. Keesey, pastor of the United Brethren church, conducted the services. The G. A. R. Post, of Butler, ministered at the grave, a large delegation of Mason Brothers were also present. Interment in the Newville cemetery. Mr. Hosac, of Hicksville, funeral director.

George F. Benninghoff, son of William and Anna Benninghoff, was born July 24, 1857, three miles east of Spencerville, Ind., and departed this life May 6, 1916, aged 58 years, 9 months and 12 days. He was of a family of four children—3 sons and 1 daughter. One brother and one sister preceding him in death.

He was united in marriage to Miss Lillie Shutt, oldest daughter of George and Mary A. Shutt, August 14, 1877. This union was blessed with 7 children, three of whom—Bertha, Ruth and an infant—have joined the angel throng. The greater part of his life was spent on the farm, his boyhood home being east of Spencerville, and upon reaching manhood he moved to Newville Tp., in 1879, where he has since resided. He was always energetic and active, always sociable and friendly, kind to old and young alike, helpful in sickness and distress, a kind husband, an indulgent father, a good neighbor and a true friend.

He leaves to cherish his memory, the widow, four children—W. F. Benninghoff, of Newville, Ind.; Mrs. O. H. Dittmar, of Milwaukee, Wis; Mrs. Burl Enzor, of Newville, Ind., and Howard Benninghoff, of Ft. Wayne, Ind, three grand-children, and one brother, John Benninghoff, of Spencerville, Ind. The funeral services were held from the U. B. church, conducted by Rev. J. T. Keesey, Monday afternoon at 2 o'clock. E R Kinsey, funeral director.

Auburn Evening Star

After being a sufferer for three years from a stroke of paralysis, Mrs Martha E. Haifley passed away at the home of her daughter, Mrs. M. E. Hursh, on South Main street, early Saturday morning. Mas. Haifley has been an invalid for the past three years, following a paralytic stroke which affected one side of her body. Her husband died eight years ago, and for the last four years she has made her home with her children. She came to Mrs. Hursh's home a short time ago to spend the summer, having been staying last with another daughter, Mrs. H. W. Timbrook of South Main street. Excepting the illness caused from the paralysis Mrs. Haifley had good health.

The deceased has been a resident of Allen county nearly all her life and lived near Harlan a greater share of that time. She lived to be over seventy-two years of age Besides the daughters mentioned, there is another daughter, Mrs Lorne Means, who lives near Harlan, and two sons, Perry, of Auburn, and Joseph, of St. Joe. Six sisters survive also. Two live at Kalamazoo, Michigan, one in Chicago, one at Spencerville and one at Harlan. There are several grandchildren also.

The deceased came to Allen county with her parents when a child about ten years old, from her birthplace, Columbiana county, Ohio. Growing to womanhood there she married George Haifley and they lived on the farm many years. Sometime before his death they moved to Harlan and after his death she lived there until about four years ago. The funeral was held Monday, leaving the house at 10 o'clock and driving to Harlan where the services were held at 1 o'clock from the Lutheran church by her pastor, Rev. W. S. Oberholtzer. Burial was at Harlan.

Mrs. Melissa McDonald was found dead in her home in Butler. last Wednesday morning about 8 o'clock. Mrs. Elmer McDonald called at the door of her mother-in-law to inquire how she was feeling, and getting no answer she peeked in the window but could not see but a small portion of the bed from that position, but seeing the mother's shoes supposed that she was still sleeping, as the old lady had made the remark the evening before, that she was tired having worked in the garden all day and that she intended going to bed early and sleeping late in the morning which she generally did. An hour later the younger Mrs. McDonald became alarmed, getting no response from her call at the door, she began trying the door keys belonging to the neighbors but as the old lady had left her key in the lock they could not insert the key from the outside, then the screen was cut from the woodhouse window, a man went in and opened the door; the group that had assembled there stepped in to find the lady of the house in quiet and peaceful slumber, taking the sleep of her last long night; judging from appearances she had passed away without a struggle.

Mrs. McDonald was for many years a resident near Newville. Mr. McDonald died about 13 years ago when the family lived near Albion, and mostly since that time she has made her home in Garrett, until last fall when she purchased a home in Butler, just across the street rom the home of her son Elmer. Deceased was about 75 years of age, and leaves to mourn 3 sons, 5 daughters and a number of grandchildren. At this writing the funeral arrangements are not made, but the burial will take place near Albion where her husband, Uriah McDonald, is laid to rest.

New Rugs—Curtains—Marquisetts and Scrims for House-cleaning time.

SCHLOSS', Auburn.

For

EXPERT

Auto Repairing
and Painting

GO TO

CAMPBELL & SON

AUBURN, IND.

Satisfaction guaranteed.

Our Painter and Mechanic are high class workman.

Special attention will be given to your Electrical equipment and Magneto work

We also charge storage batteries.

Get Our Prices.

Sound

Pure Bred

Percheron

Stallion

Right Sort

Enrollment No. 2873

Years past, this horse has been standing at Auburn; but we are now located at St. Joe in the barn just north of the B. & O. tracks near the mill. Will stand for the season at home, 2 miles north of St. Joe on Monday and Tuesday of each week; and on Wednesday, Thursday, Friday and Saturday of each week in the barn at St. Joe

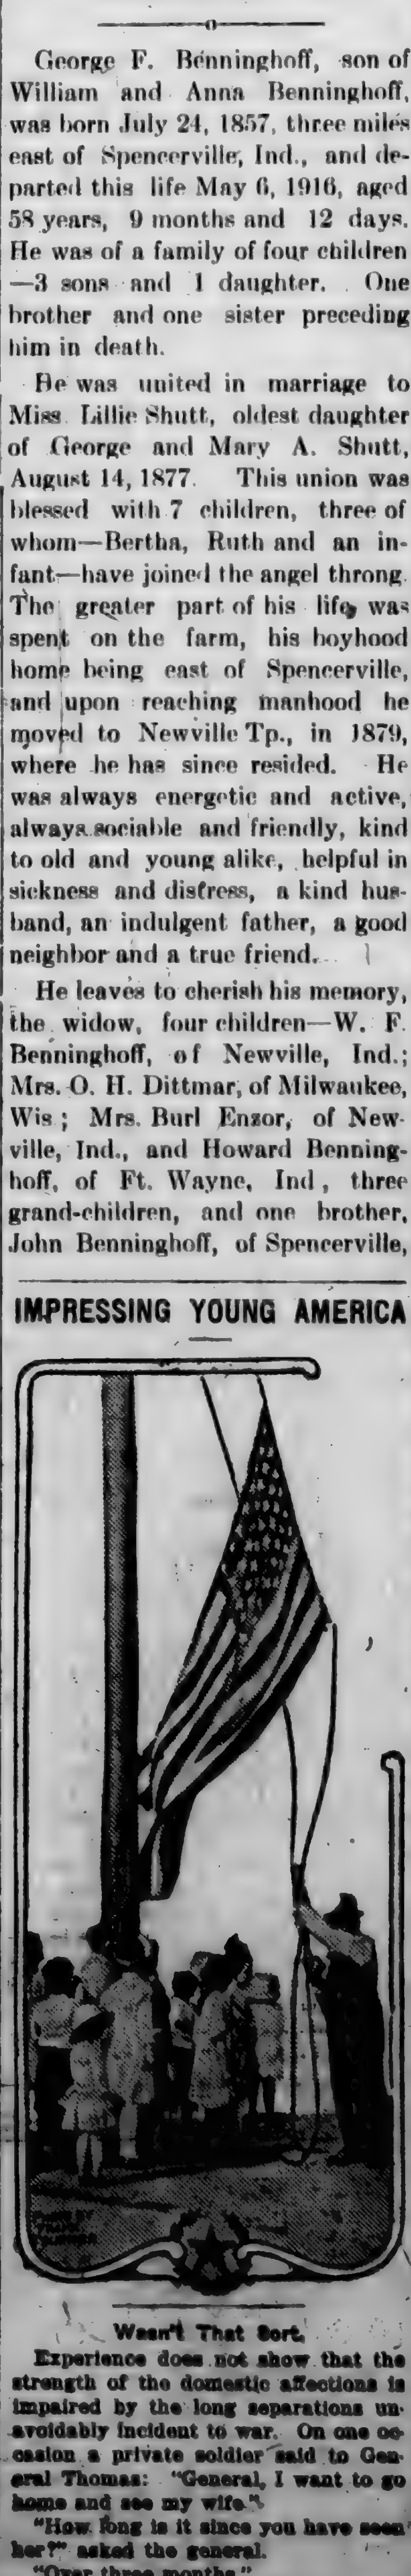
TERMS:

$15 to Insure Living Colt

E. W. BEABER

Owner

IMPRESSING YOUNG AMERICA



Wasn't That Sort.

Experience does not show that the strength of the domestic affections is impaired by the long separations unavoidably incident to war. On one occasion a private soldier said to General Thomas: "General, I want to go home and see my wife."

"How long is it since you have seen her?" asked the general.

"Over three months."

"Three months," replied Thomas. "Why, I haven't seen my wife for three years."

"That may be so," admitted the soldier, "but, you see, general, my wife and me ain't that sort."

LITTLE LEFT OF OLD APPOMATTOX

SOLDIERS of 1865 who revisit the town of Appomattox find that the half-century which has done so much for their country has done nothing for the hamlet made famous by the great event of Lee's surrender.

Indeed, the place has gone backward in fifty years. Its houses have fallen into decay or have disappeared, and its fields have grown up to pine.

The village of Appomattox Courthouse was never a considerable settlement. Like many another county seat in the South, it had its origin in a courthouse, a jail, a tavern, a house or two and a blacksmith shop—a center to which the inhabitants of a rural district could come at intervals to transact legal business.

A visitor to Appomattox Courthouse today—or "old Appomattox," as it is now called in that neighborhood—must be disappointed, unless he has the faculty of visualizing the momentous events that took place there, and near there, in April, 1865.

The court building had then stood there half a century. About 1890 it was burned. Today the square in which the old courthouse stood is covered with the debris of the fire, but out of the wreckage trees have grown up as companions to those that shaded the old courthouse before the fire.

The village that clustered around the courthouse has nearly disappeared. Four old frame structures have survived fire, storm and neglect, but these are sagging and out of joint and seem soon to pass away. One or two of these houses are tenantless. The tavern, once the Appomattox hotel, is the home of a farmer and the overseer of about 1,500 acres of adjacent land now owned by Col. George A. Armes, a retired officer of the United States army, who lives in Washington. Another house is occupied by a small farmer who has not dwelt long in that part of the state.

The Surrender house, the McLean house, in which General Grant and his staff met Lee and his military secretary, is not there. It was a broad-fronted brick house with a covered porch across the front, with the entrance in the middle and a hallway through the center.

The house was torn down in 1892. It was proposed to reconstruct it at the World's Fair in Chicago, but after the demolition of the house the plan was carried no further, presumably for lack of funds. The piles of brick and lumber that had been the house are rotting in the garden. There has been some talk of a patriotic society building the house on its old site.

An interesting personal story goes with the history of the Surrender house. It was the home of William McLean, who had moved to Appomattox from the vicinity of Bull Run, to avoid the scenes of war that destroyed the peace and safety of his family in 1861.

McLean was a farmer, then living in a frame house near Manassas on the road leading to Blackburns Ford, on Bull Run. July 18 the first fighting between the troops of Gen. Irwin McDowell and Gen. G. T. Beauregard took place at that ford, and General Beauregard took up his headquarters in the McLean house. A shell from a Union battery struck the house.

After the battle of Bull Run, July 21, 1861, McLean and his family moved to upper Fauquier county. He next moved to Lunenburg county. War followed him. Then, declaring that he would take his family so far from the fighting grounds that war would not further trouble them, he rented a house in the hamlet of Appomattox. Fate made this house the Surrender house.

The McLean house near Manassas long ago was a ruin, but another house near it, which Beauregard also used as headquarters, is often erroneously pointed out as the McLean house.

McLean's son—J. Wilmer McLean—is a business man in Manassas—a hamlet that since the war has grown into a thriving town.

The table in the McLean house at Appomattox on which the articles of surrender were written is in the National museum at Washington. The flag of truce under which the negotiations between Grant and Lee were conducted is also there, having been loaned to that institution by the widow of George A. Custer.

Colonel Whittaker of Grant's staff, who carried the flag, lives in Washington and is expected to take part in the celebration at Appomattox.

Maj. George C. Rounds of Manassas, a Civil war veteran, resident since the war at Manassas, who promoted the Blue and Gray reunion on the field of Bull Run, has promoted the coming fraternal celebration at Appomattox. Major Rounds has been urging upon the war department and congress for years the desirability of converting the battlefields of Bull Run into a national park. He also takes a keen interest in the future of Appomattox Courthouse.

On the surrender ground is now a dense pine growth, in which is the only important monument at Appomattox. It was erected by North Carolina, April 9, 1905.

Though the Appomattox Courthouse village of the Civil war period has practically disappeared, there is a new and thriving town called Appomattox, which is now the county seat of Appomattox county. It is three miles from old Appomattox and is on the Norfolk & Western railroad.

During the Civil war there was a siding on this railroad called Appomattox station. It was here that Custer with his cavalry division got in front of Lee. The place has grown to be the town which today is called Appomattox.

When the old court building was destroyed by fire, the courthouse was rebuilt at Appomattox station.

Farmers' Farmers'

NOTICE!

Scoville's Thoroughbred Registered
Imported Percheron Stallion

LANCIER No. 99,094-103,650

will stand this season at his Big Stock Farm, one mile east and one mile south of Butler. This prize winning stallion is five years old, weighs 2,040 pounds right now, is jet black with a star in the forehead, and is the finest and highest priced horse ever brought to this part of the country. Stands at $15.00. Colt insured to stand and suck. Both local and long distance phones at the farm. Call us up. Visitors welcome daily. Call and see our Registered Percheron Mares and this last years colts from this horse. You will find nothing better in the state.

Patronize

the merchants who advertise in this paper. They will treat you right.

R U Superstitious

Do You Believe In Signs

?

If you do you are a judicious advertiser and a good business man. Judicious advertising Always Pays and especially when you advertise in a paper that is read by everybody in its territory.

This newspaper reaches the eye of everybody who might be a possible buyer in this section.

Our Classified Ad Department

FreeColumn

All advertisements in this department are free to subscribers only. —EDITOR NEWS.]

POTATOES for sale:--$1 00 per bushel. Early Ohio, Early Rose varieties. Only a few left. W. L. HALLABAUGH, St. Joe.

For Sale:--2 yearling draft colts, bay in color. Bay horse weighing 1,300 pounds, Sound, and gentle for ladies to drive Spencerville. B. W. DWYER.

FOR SALE:-5 year old mare, will work in all harness. Inpuire of G. C. Lucas.

FOR SALE:-Red Raspberry plants, 1c. apiece. C. A. WOODCOX.

For Sale:-- 50 bu. Sir Walter Raleigh potatoes. John Doll.

FOR SALE:-"True Early Rose" and "Irish Cobler" potatoes $1.00. Choice, pure and true to name seed. Only a few bushels left. DALE WIDNEY.

FOR SALE: Sweet Potato, Celery, Pepper, Cabbage, and Tomato plants for sale. Mrs. G. W. Woodcox.

House for Rent. Carl Johnson, St. Joe, R. F. D. No. 1.

LOST:-Between the Spencerville Race-Bridge and the Ben Soule home, a dark blue horse blanket with green and light brown stripes at the sides. Finder please return to Ben Soule, Rt. 2, or call by phone No. 45-20 Spencerville.

50 sheets of writing paper and 25 No. 1 rag envelopes for 10 cents at NEWS office.

100 Per Cent.

INCREASED EARNINGS.

The following is fac-simile of certificate of Bond issued to each Depositor in this Bank.

No. ______________ Grabill, Ind., ______________ 19____

Mr. ______________________________

THIS IS TO CERTIFY that your DEPOSITS in this bank are INSURED under a bond of THE AMERICAN GUARANTY COMPANY of Columbus, Ohio.

THE GRABILL STATE BANK.

PRESERVE THIS. By Albert Egly, Cashier.

Postal Savings pay 2 per cent. Interest and the money is placed in banks who have to furnish a Bond to the government to guarantee that the funds are safe in that Bank.

We pay 4 per cent. Interest and give you the same guarantee. An increased earning of 100 per cent.

THIS is the only Bank in this community thus insuring its depositors.

Total Assets, over $175,000

The Grabill State Bank

Established 1906

Joseph Witmer, President
David Klopfenstine, v. pres.
Albert Egly, Cashier
Joseph A. Grabill, Director
Peter W. Amstutz, Director
Julius Gehrig, Director
John B. Haifley, Chairman Board Directors

MAY

L 908

0150

Has Your Subscription Expired? Come in and renew it next time you are in town.

ST. JOE NEWS.

NO newspaper can succeed without advertising, therefore we solicit the patronage of our readers for those who by their advertising help to make this paper possible.

VOL. XXX ST. JOE, DeKALB COUNTY INDIANA, THURSDAY MAY 18 1916 NO. 20

Group of Young Patriots

TO OUR

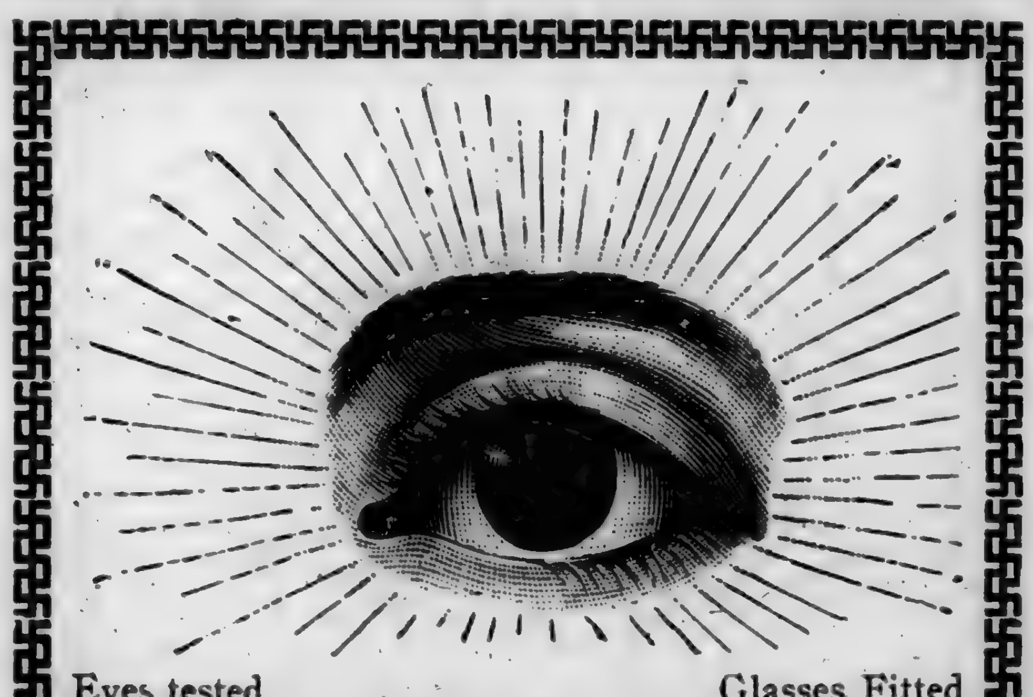
Farmer friends

❋ ❋

We submit comparison figures as follows:—In exchanging your wheat for Daily Bread Flour we allow you 35 lb. flour and 12 lb. feed for 1 bu. wheat. Present market value $1.13 bu. which would ordinarly buy you 32 lb. flour. By exchanging your wheat you not only get one of the best Indiana made flours but have a saving of 3 lb. flour and 12 lb. feed or a total value of 28c. on each bushel exchanged; therefore is it worth your while to sell your wheat and buy your flour. Besides when you send your wheat to your Home Mill you are patronizing home industry. Our flour is also sold at all stores for 80c. 1-8 bbl. or $6.00 full barrel. We also specialize on our own make, Cracked Corn either for Chicks or Chickens made from clean sound Corn thus avoiding disease among your flock from feeding weed seed mixtures.

Yours to Serve,

ST. JOE MILLS



Eyes tested __________ Glasses Fitted

At Dr. Farhnam's Office, THURSDAY, JUNE 15

EARL FRISBIE, Opt. BUTLER, INDIANA

Sunday School Report.

The following is a true and correct report of the various Sunday Schools in this neighborhood for last Sunday.

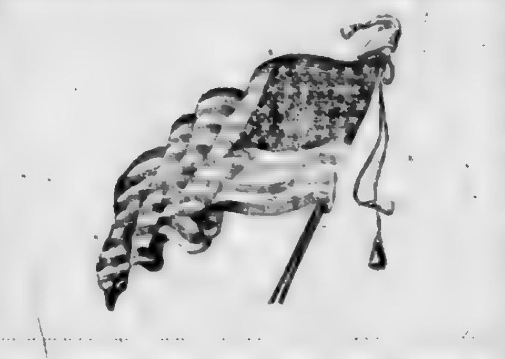
M. P.	96	$ 3.38
Lutheran	61	2.38
Christian	54	1.58
Concord	23	.68
Newville, C.	31	1.67
Coburntown	44	.97
M. E. Spencer	26	1.37
Lutheran	42

LOCAL ITEMS.

Mrs. J. D. Leighty was at Wayne, Monday and Tuesday.

Genuine Lump Pocahontas Coal $4 00 ton for June, $4.20 for July. ST. JOE MILLS.

Decoration Services.



Tuesday, May 30th., will be observed in St. Joe again, in a very appropriate manner. The officers met a few days ago and made the necessary arrangements for this day's meeting. The I. O. O. F. and K. of P. Lodges of our little city were represented and the following officers were elected for next year.

President—J. P. Buckingham

Secretary—Fred B. Leighty

Treasurer—Ray Reasoner

The committees for this year are as follows:

Music:—Mesdames S. W. Tustison, C. C. Bassett and Lora Leighty.

Children:—Mesdames H. C. Hathaway, Wm. Curie and Wm. Koch.

Flowers:—Mesdames Benj. Hamilton, J. D. Leighty, Emma Woodcox, Mary Buchanan, George Wade and Mary Meek.

Flags:—Benj. Hamilton and C. A. Patterson.

Finances:—Ray Reasoner, Elza Kinsey, Ed Leighty and H. L. Dunkle.

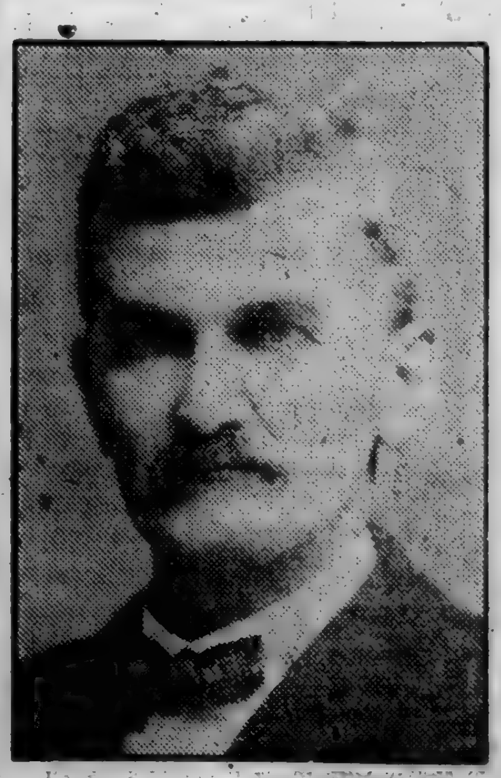
Final arrangements were made Monday evening for this service by employing Harry H. Hilgeman, of Ft. Wayne, to deliver the address. The members of the finance committee as named above have been changed to Frank Terman and Rolland Bearss, with Ray Reasoner as the chairman.

DECORATION DAY

Flags and the band and marching—
Of faithful veteran feet,
Fathers, young men and children
With voices shrill and sweet;
And Lincoln's spirit marching in every shining line,
And Lincoln's peace and freedom lit with the smile divine!
Flags and the band and marching—
Banners that proudly wave,
May green upon the meadows
And on the soldier's grave;
The boys in blue are ashes 'neath the lilacs on their sod,
But their souls are free forever with Lincoln and with God!
Flags and the band and marching—
And the drum-beat's steady throb,
Pipe on above, O robin,
To drown a sudden sob!
The laurel wreath for heroes dead! And a cheer for all the brave
Who march with Lincoln's soul today to liberate and save!
—Martha Gilbert Dickinson Bianchi

Wm. Curie in Hospital

As we have said before, the Ft. Wayne hospitals would surely have to close if it were not for the patients they receive from this territory. Wm. Curie, of our little city, was taken Tuesday to the St. Joseph for examination and as a result, a rectal absess was found and they expected to operate Wednesday. Mr. Curie has been ailing for several weeks and he seemed to recover sufficient to be about the store. Last week he was compelled to take his bed again.



In Society

The Junior—Senior Banquet was given Saturday evening, May thirteenth, at the School House. The Seniors and guests were ushered into the recitation room which was beautifully decorated with the class colors, old rose and steel gray, and their class flowers, lilies of the valley, also ferns and many other flowers. A short program was given:—Song, Class; Paper, "Last Days of School" Herbert Curie; Solo, Miss Stewart; Reading, "Digested Newspaper", Alta Hull; Piano Duet, Lela Wallace and DeVeta Bayman; Solo, Pauline Andrews; Farewell Address, Harvey Hull; Song, Class. They were then ushered to the Banquet hall which was decorated to harmonize with the other room. A dainty three course luncheon was then served. Toasts were given between courses by DeVeta Bayman, Helen Bowman, Miss Shordon and Mr. Maxwell. The guests were Miss Stewart, of Avilla; Miss Shordon, Mr. Maxwell and Mr. and Mrs. H. C. Hathaway.

The Christian Church was the place where the baccalaureate sermon was preached last Sunday evening. In spite of the bad weather, a fine audience had assembled to greet the class of 1916 and Rev. Redacre, who came from Bryan, Ohio, to act in this capacity. The subject being "Crossing the Dead Line" was well chosen for an occasion of this kind and some excellent thoughts were given the young graduates. The music was furnished by the choir.

For Ice.

Just phone your order to Chas. Koch and he will arrange to deliver ice in St. Joe once a week. Pure artificial ice will be had for your summer use.

Daily Jots

Order Saturday Evening Post, 5c.

Joseph Koch is at Albian, the guest of Dr. John Morr and family.

$13 75 was realized from the bake sale last Saturday by the Lutheran W. H. and F. M. Society.

Sale of Bake goods next Saturday, by the ladies of the M. P. Church, in the east window at the News office. Get your things for Sunday here at 9:30 a. m.

Walter Bleeks is home from the U. S. Navy the guest of his parents and relatives for a short time. He is looking fine.

Don't go around in darkness when you can get one of the Pearson Flash Lights, all sizes and prices, at Curie's store.

W. E. Peterson and wife are expecting company from Connelsville Pa., next Monday, that of Mrs. Addie May Slaybaugh and husband who will remain a few days.

Last Monday the Minsterial Association of Auburn met and talked over the different phases of their work, and among the things decided on definitely was that of conducting no more Sunday funerals. When a minister is called away from his church on Sunday to conduct a funeral, it is an unjustice to his congregation and puts his work back at that time, so they have decided to ask that no calls be made for Sunday funerals.

Daily Bread Flour is made from choice Indiana Wheat unbleached, and is for sale at all grocers at 80c. 1-8 bbl., or $6.00 bbl. Get it either at your grocery or at the ST. JOE MILLS.

THE REVEILLE

Hark! I hear the tramp of thousands,
And of armed men the hum;
Lo! a nation's hosts have gathered
Round the quick alarming drum—
Saying, "Come,
Freemen, come!
Ere your heritage be wasted," said the quick alarming drum.

"Let me of my heart take counsel:
War is not of life the sum;
Who shall stay and reap the harvest
When the autumn days shall come?"
But the drum
Echoed, "Come!
Death shall reap the braver harvest," said the solemn-sounding drum.

"But when won the coming battle,
What of profit springs therefrom?
What if conquest, subjugation,
Even greater ills become?"
But the drum
Answered, "Come!
You must do the sum to prove it," said the Yankee-answering drum.

"What if, 'mid the cannons' thunder,
Whistling shot and bursting bomb,
When my brothers fall around me,
Should my heart grow cold and numb?"
But the drum
Answered, "Come!
Better there in death united, than in life a recreant—Come!"

Thus they answered—hoping, fearing,
Some in faith, and doubting some,
Till a trumpet-voice proclaiming,
Said, "My chosen people, come!"
Then the drum,
Lo! was dumb,
For the great heart of the nation, throbbing, answered, "Lord, we come!"
—BRET HARTE.

Don't be signing your name always to an

I. O. U.

Sign a "Pay to the order of" with a neat bank balance behind it and be independent.
A bank account is better than owing the other fellow. Sign checks instead of notes is what we mean. See?

St. Joe Valley Bank--State Bank

4 per cent. paid on certificates if left 1 Year.

Bran & Middlings

A full carload will arrive within the next week or ten days. Be sure and place your order as early as possible. Have you tried a barrel of our salt?

St. Joe Elevator

The Nathan Grain Co.
OWNERS
Fort Wayne, Indiana

SAMUEL KEESLER, Local Manager.

A cruel Woman

is one that will feed innocent little chicks damp or musty feed, when you can buy Admiral Chick Feed that is Kiln Dried which kills that germ that starts to grow and then dies and of course gets musty. The little chicks in their scramble gets that and the result is death. Admiral contains proper proportions of Grit, Charcoal and Nutritious grain to give results, that is why we are now selling out our second ton.

Dunkle's Drug Store

The Place where YOU Get What YOU Pay For.

MAY

L 908

0151

Flickerings from Filmland

Interesting to the Movie Fans.

LATEST NEWS FROM MOVIE LAND.

The new Clara Kimball Young film formation will make a specialty of adapting pictures from novels. Among the authors represented will be R. W. Chambers, David Graham Phillips, Rex Beach, Gouverneur Morris, Hall Caine, Maurice Maeterlinck and Edgar Allan Poe.

Fannie Ward is working with Lasky in a new play called "The Gutter Magdalene." I hate that word "gutter."

When D. W. Griffith's play, "The Birth of a Nation," was shown at the Drury Lane theater, London, not long ago at a special matinee for the benefit of the women war workers' fund, royalty attended. Queen Mary with Queen Alexandra and Princesses Victoria and Mary and the Princes Henry and George were there.

Marc MacDermott has left his old love, the Edison Company, and gone to the Vitagraph.

Helen Holmes is mourning the death of her father, who for a number of years was traffic manager of the Chicago & Eastern Illinois Railroad.

Joseph Kaufman, the handsome husband of Miss Ethel Clayton, has gone to Famous Players. He will both act and direct. His first work for Famous will be in the adaptation of E. Phillip Oppenheim's story, "The Great Gamble," in which Pauline Frederick is to be starred.

The Paramount Pictures corporation has made arrangements with a musical house to show the interested public just how music is made.

Wallace Reid will playthe principal masculine role in Geraldine Farrar's next photoplay, "Maria Rosa."

Louise Lester the other day renewed her wardrobe insurance policy of $10,000.

King Baggot and company are in Savannah doing a number of scenes for a five-reel production, "Half a Rogue," based on the novel by Harold McGrath.

WISE SELECTION OF WALL COVERINGS.

Mrs. Christine Frederick.

The time is upon us when we are all talking to the wall paper man, the decorator or the painter, for there is hardly a house or an apartment which does not need to have at least one room "done over."

The day will come, since it has already begun to dawn, when instruction in color values and house decoration will be a part of the course of study in every school. Then and then only will all of us be able to choose tasteful furnishings, restful walls and harmonious color schemes. Even if only a few artists be "born" all of us can be taught the principles of art and how to express it in the home.

Let us begin with a study of walls and wall coverings, because they indeed are the true framework of the room. They form the background for all pictures, ornaments, curtains and hangings. Therefore, they must be chosen first if we are to have rooms that are restful and which also express best their relation to the windows and lighting.

We can be thankful that the days have almost gone when decorators offer us papers with climbing onions and interlocked rheubarb plants. Gone, indeed, are most of the medallion wall papers with their hugh twelve-inch repeating unit. We have today a selection from a wide class of more neutral papers in shades such as putty, buff, sand, gray, etc., in which the variety is given not by the color but by the texture, tiny stripe, dot or fleck in the grain of the paper itself.

While these neutral papers are not suitable or necessary in every room, it should be borne in mind that:

1. Light colors make rooms appear larger.

2. Rooms opening into each other should not be papered with tones in violent contrast, but that similar or harmonious tones are best.

3. Long narrow hallways and rooms with northern and eastern exposure are preferably treated with warm, light tones.

4. Light backgrounds with undecided pattern make the best surface on which to show off pictures, hangings and other furnishing. Low ceilings will appear still lower if the wall space is broken by a frieze, plate rail, moulding or other horizontal line which divides the space, so that it is best, particularly in our small rented homes or flats, to avoid papers or coverings with a break in the pattern near the ceiling or half way down.

Horizontal stripes also make ceilings appear higher, and are thus particularly suited to the small, low ceiled room. Papers with high gloss finishes, while attractive in bedrooms, are out of place and undignified for living or dining room or library. Everybody knows, but does not always follow the point, that warm, bright colors and tones are needed in "cool" rooms with north or eastern exposure, while those receiving southern and western sun can have their walls treated with the less heating colors and shades, particularly grays, blues and neutral tints.

Many fabric coverings for walls are on the market. In permanent homes they are most desirable because they do not mar, tear or show usage. The small rented bedroom should be tinted or painted for hygienic reasons, but in all rooms, whether fabric or paper covered, choice should be guided by means of light and art.

[Mrs. Frederick is one of the best known kitchen architects and domestic science experts in the country and at her experiment station at Greenlawn, L. I., has put into practice her theories of simplifying housework and has tested various household implements, recommending those she found the most satisfactory.]

DATE SALAD.

One-half pound of dates cut fine, one banana sliced, two oranges cut in small pieces, the juice of half a lemon. Mix lightly and serve on lettuce leaves with a mayonnaise dressing.

THE TOOLS THAT BLOOM IN THE SPRING.

By Mrs. Christine Frederick.

Flowers and hats are not the only articles that have a spring season. If we visit the house furnishing stores or departments at this time of the year we will see counters blooming with spring tools and equipment of every variety, especially arranged for spring house cleaning needs.

Must we use the same old brooms, dustpans and buckets No; not if we want to be up to date and use modern labor savers. As a new vacuum cleaner is born every minute, we should easily be able to choose one for our particular needs; whether hand or electric, or the evolved carpet sweeper type with suction attachment. The modern scrub pail has been departmentalized and now appears with an upper tray divided into several sections to hold brush, soap, cloth, cleanser, etc., so that it is no longer necessary to let the soap waste in the pail between the acts, or wish that you were octopus handed in order to carry around the many accessories to scrubbing.

The mop family has grown like the nouveau riche; they are intruding their personalities into the best house cleaning society. Dry mops, wet mops, oil mops, wall mops, floor mops, ceiling mops—mops little, big and between, will save reaching and stretching and help us to get at those ungetable places in the corners, the moldings, over the doors, ad libitum. Second cousins to them are the duster family, descendants of cast off underwear, but today developed into dignified dustless cloths of every size, shape and combination. The dustless idea is the new hygienic note in house cleaning, and we have dustless dusters attached to handles, like the fathr dusters of old. They are also woven into brush forms, or are mounted on handles of varying length to make cleaning of pictures and ornaments easier.

"Stoop not" should be the commandment of the housekeeper. We have long handled dustpans, so made that they snap shut automatically when you pick them up from the floor. There are scrubbing brushes on handles, whisk brooms similarly mounted, and, indeed, scarcely a tool which formorly was made for direct holding in the hand which cannot now be found more conveniently placed on a handle or stick.

Brushes, too, must not be overlooked on the counter. For of all the spring tools perhaps they are most essential to good work. Thin radiator brushes for cleaning the never seen places; apoplectic brushes for cleaning padded furniture and upholstery; dainty pointed brushes for getting behind the buttons and tufts; silver brushes, squatty brushes for cleaning nickel, brushes of all kinds are as useful as brooms.

The household tool set, the housemaid's knee cushion, outfits of twine, labels and tacks, hooks, wire and brads, all these, too, are needed in spring cleaning. Then perhaps you need a stepladder and will answer the appeal of the convertible one which is both a stool and a short ladder, and so firm that it is perfectly safe. A mitten duster, ready made broom bag and teamsters' gloves are other helps.

Have you seen the new spring tools blooming in the shops?

BENEFITS OF SLEEP.

Sleep is not a matter of convenience but a necessity. It should be made a comfort and the sleeping room should be the most pleasing place to its occupant of all places in the house. Far more time is spent in the sleeping room than in any other place during the course of twenty-four hours. Almost every healthy adult requires eight hours' sleep, if the system is kept up to its highest standards of health and many require several hours more.

The bedroom should be a place of rest, quiet, comfort, cheer, quiet in coloring and tone, soothing in its fitness to the character of the occupant. It should be conducive to repose, to happy thoughts as companions to the land of sleep.

POULTRY

BIG PROFITS FROM CAPONS

Greater Price May Be Received and Birds Weigh More.

J. B. Maxwell of Mount Carmel, Ill., figures that he has lost about $20 on a dozen Barred Rock cockerels because he did not caponize them. He writes as follows: "Some time ago Mrs. Maxwell sent me to market with a dozen fine large Barred Rock cockerels which averaged 5 1-2 pounds, for which I received 11 cents per pound The poultryman asked me why I did not caponize them. He says: I would engage to give you 18 cents per pound for them and possibly 23 cents per pound if they were capons.'

"I saw in a poultry page an account of a show at Fredericktown, Mo., where a capon on exhibit weighed 10 1-2 pounds. I would like to know how to caponize, the proper time and the risk one runs.

"I could see my 12 cockerels weighing 10 3-4 pounds and bringing 23 cents per pound, producing a lot of profit."

Mr. Maxwell received $7.15 for his dozen cockerels, but if they had been caponized at the proper age and developed under ordinary conditions they should have weighed at least 10 pounds each, which at 23 cents per pound, would have brought $27.60 or a clear profit of more than $20.

There is practically no risk attendant to caponizing, and if an occasional bird dies on the operating table, he bleeds to death at once, and is just as good for frying as if he had been killed for the purpose.

The time to caponize is when the birds weigh about two pounds, or as soon as sex can be distinguished by the comb development. Capons do not eat any more feed than cockerels of the same age, but put their food into soft meat instead of developing muscles.

MITES DISEASE CARRIERS

Investigation Determines Dangerous Methods of Spreading Ills.

Mites have been credited with causing more loss in the poultry house, through their blood sucking ravages on the flock than any other vermin, but a new charge has recently been placed against them.

Investigators have developed that mites are carriers of disease germs from one fowl to another, and are responsible for the great spread of certain diseases in some of the flocks.

As mites live on blood and get their rations by sucking the blood from fowls while at roost, returning to dark crevices in the walls and roosts to spend the day, it is quite possible that they visit several fowls in the course of a week, and carry germs from one sick bird to healthy ones during their travels. The disease germs remaining on their mouths can easily be introduced into the blood of well birds while the mites are busy filling up with blood, and thus the disease gets well scattered before the owner realizes that it is in his flock.

If there was previously any good reason for allowing mites to have free range in the poultry houses, this new charge against them should result in a systematic and continued fight against them.

SOUR MILK RATION BEST

Purdue Recommends Feed to Produce Egg Production.

The Purdue Agricultural Experiment Station has completed a two year experiment on cost of producing eggs under varying rations, and found that sour milk fed hens showed the largest profit.

Four similar pens of s. c. white Leghorns were used for the test, and each pen received the same grain ration, composed of 10 pounds of corn, 10 lbs. wheat, five lbs. oats, five pounds bran and five pounds shorts.

For pen No. 1, 3.5 pounds of meat scrap was added to the above ration. Pen No. 2 received 3.6 pounds of fish scrap in addition to the grain, and pen No. 3 receiver 50 pounds of skim milk with the grain ration, the milk being charged at 30 cents per 100 pounds. Pen No. 4 had only the grain ration.

The birds in pen 4 cost the least to feed, $0.722 each, but they produced less eggs, so that the cost of their eggs was 30 cents per dozen, and there was a loss per bird of $0.097. Cheap feeding does not pay.

The cost for feeding each bird in pen 3 was $1.10, but they averaged 135.4 eggs each, so that the cost per dozen was only $0.097, and the profit per bird was $1.629.

The birds fed meat scrap with their grain made a net profit of $1.557, while those fed fish scrap showed a profit of $1.562.

The additional of animal protein increased laying efficiency about 100 eggs each on either of the three forms

Skim milk will be the cheapest addition on most farms, and, as noted above, showed the largest profit on the feeding experiment.

Some horses can trot faster than others. Men try to breed and develop the fast kind. Some cows can produce more than others, but many of us forget to act as the horsemen do.

Poultry is small flocks is profitable if well cared for.

HIS ADVERTISING PAID.

I asked eight dollars and a half for one fine black Polled Angus calf, which price was not too high; I hoofed it west, I hoofed it east, endeavoring to sell the beast, but no one wished to buy. Day after day I toiled along and bored men with the same old song, "I have a calf for sale; I ask eight bones and fifty cents for this unequaled critter, gents—who will dig up the kale" Then said a friend, "Oh, rest your feet, and quit your wearing out the street and howling by the year; spend 50 cents and advertise your sawed off cow of pocket size and buyers will appear." I followed up that sane advice and put my jaded feet on ice; and when the ad appeared ten customers came to my gate; one bought the calf and paid the freight, the others bucked and reared. And thus, by printing little ads, the wise man gathers in the scads and rests his aching corns; a little ad will make more noise than fifty-seven busy boys, all tooting on their horns.

WALT MASON.

Dictates of Fashion

Pikella is a new fabric for summer gowns.

Many new waists are one mass of the tiniest tucks.

Much lacing of bodices is to be found on the quaint old-fashioned frocks.

A buttonhole rose of changeable taffeta makes a smart ornament on a leghorn hat.

Embroidered batiste is combined with mocha-brown taffeta and dyed to match it in shade.

A heavy linen parasol is being shown for summer. It is bright red with a striped border of bright colors

CORSET OF PINK CREPE DE CHENE.

Straight from Paris has some a corset made of pink crepe de chene—which adds yet another fabric to the corset list. The model is a bit shorter in the hip line than its immediate predecessors and the bust is just a little higher than the corset of last season.

A new feature is the use of ribbon woven in basket effect, which alternates with horizontal bars of silk elastic above the waist line. The object is to insure plenty of breathing space, but the novel use of ribbon and elastic in the way just named serves to give unique decoration to the corset.

* * *

Without exception, serges and taffeta have been sponsored by the French dressmakers for all manner of daytime dresses, as well as of suits. One-piece effects are very popular, preserving the normal waist line with its accentuated curve. Models from Jeanne Lanvin bear out that artist's prediloction for semi-loose lines, with an inclination to long-waisted effects. They are charmingly youthful as always and will appeal to many women, who, in point of years, are no longer in the youthful class, but whose figures are still slim.

For those who like trains on evening gowns the arrangement of the former is a simple matter, since it merely means adjusting a long piece of the fabric beneath the girdle and letting it trail independently down the back and on the floor. The artistic effect is best when the panel is of a contrasting material, such as metallic brocade or some tissue cloth.

* * *

A glove silk camisole, which is made of the best material, I am assured, and trimmed with a broad band of imitation "val" lace, run with wash ribbon, and having ribbon shoulder straps, may be purchased for the remarkable price of 95 cents. If one prefers, on may have for this attractive price, the same model in an excellent wash satin, or in crepe de chine. These may be had in either flesh or white, and are of unusual value.

WOMEN'S DRESS A HODGE PODGE, ASSERTS EXPERT.

Reduced to loop English, the reason American women are poorly and ungracefully dressed is because they are "pikers."

Mrs. Genevieve P. Reid did not use this language when she spoke before the Chicago School of Domestic Arts and Science yesterday, her subject being "Color and Texture as Applied to Women's Dress."

But she did say that women borrow ideas in such profusion and so indiscriminately that the result is a hodge podge of colors and modes.

"The average woman in this country has poor taste," said Mrs. Reid. "She sees a hat on a friend, a pretty dress in a show window, and a pair of chic shoes in a street car. She straightway provides herself with each of these things, and the ensemble is frightful."

Mrs. Reid gave the following tabl

Auburn haired women should wea

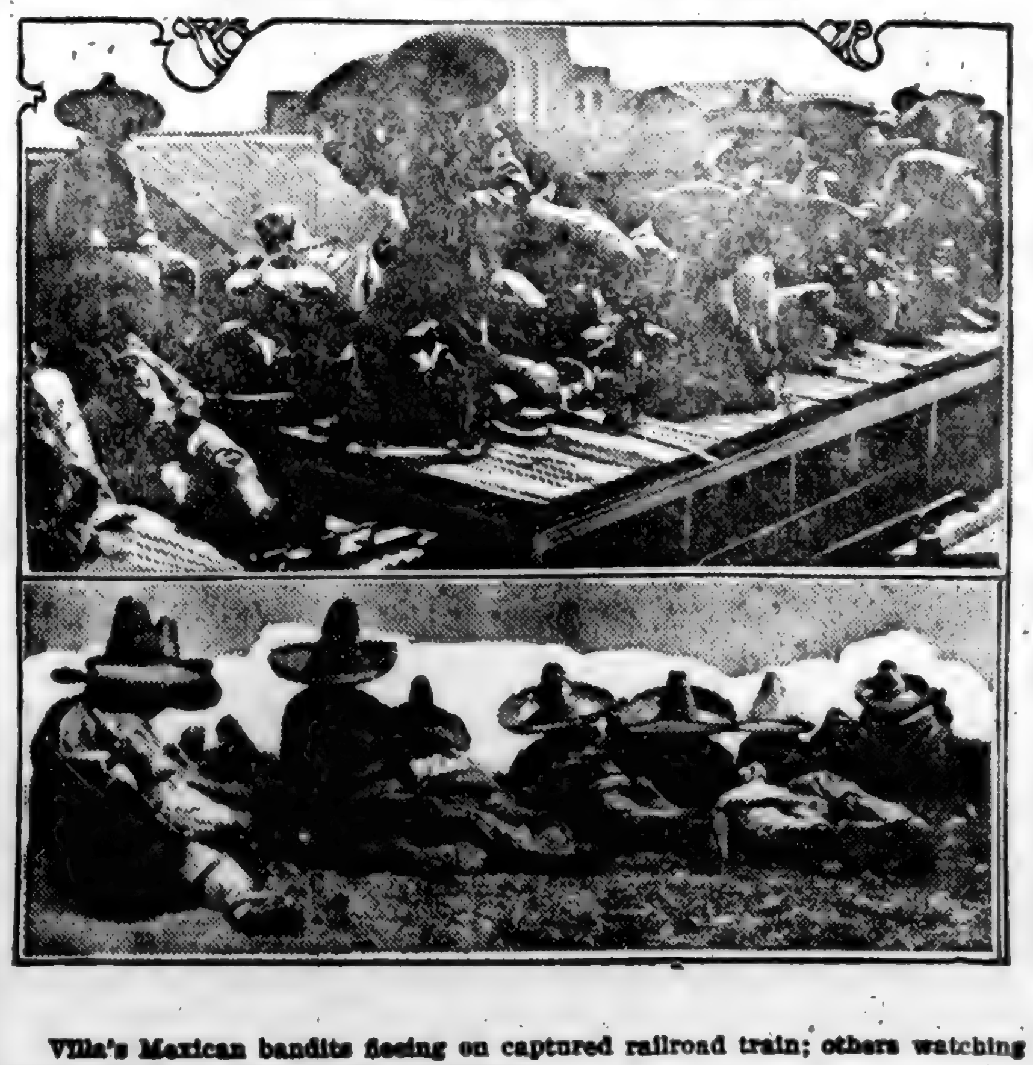
[illegible] of yellow.

Good looking blondes can wear anything, but preferably pinks or tans.

Brunettes can wear almost anything and look well with a bit of facing under the hat.

"American women are puritanical," said Mrs. Reid. "They take European ideas and tone them down to their own ideas. This is always is injurious to the original mode. Our women also should travel now and then to observe how other women are dressing themselves. Travel has good results in color and fashions and brings about a more uniform distribution."

VILLA'S BANDITS ELUSIVE



Villa's Mexican bandits fleeing on captured railroad train; others watching movement of an enemy from mountains.

SHOWING OFF BAD FOR BABY.

This indictment of "showing off the baby" does not refer to the time when the new arrival, clad in yards of muslin and lace, lies in the new mother's arms. Then its very "newness" disarms all criticism, and, as all babies are much alike, nobody expects much from it.

The real showing off comes along later, when the child begins to acquire those little individualities that are so dear to the heart of the fond, proud, young parents. "He is so wonderfully intelligent, and takes notice of everything and everybody," is the burden of their song.

Poor baby is excited and talked to, and made to show off, and all sorts of things are dangled in front of him to show how he "notices" at an earlier age than other babies.

Now, no parents want their baby to be backward or stolid, but it is one thing to encourage natural bodily and mental growth and quite another to force it. It is far better to be satisfied with a healthy, normal baby than to pride yourself on one which will most likely grow up bad tempered or neurotic, or bowlegged or round shouldered, don't you think?

REST FOR WOMEN.

The industrial board of the state department of labor has refused the request of hotels and institutions in Pennsylvania employing more than ten women to exempt them from the law which provides for a complete day of rest each week for these employes.

The industrial board included this tart statement in its refusal:

"Most of them (institutions) are supposed to be doing a service to humanity; many are maintained by state aid and private charitable funds. And in the disposition of these funds they are supposed to seek the greatest good of all including their employes.

"Being intrusted with funds for beneficent and religious work, they should so co-operate these funds as to benefit all connected with their operation; and because of the high idealism in the founding of such institutions they should be the foremost to establish ideal labor relations.

"State institutions, especially, should lead in observing state laws."

Illinois has been foremost among the states in giving due consideration to employes of its state charitable institutions.

Women have proved to be excellent machinists in England, where there are now hundreds of them employed in the munition factories.

VARIED ACTIVITIES OF WOMEN.

Eight hundred high school girls in Baltimore have taken a pledge never again to wear feathers in their hats.

Mrs. John H. Ash of Oliver, Ga., has a collection of stuffed birds, which it is claimed is not equaled in the United States.

Miss Nora Norton has the distinction of being the only woman frame maker in the country who has taught herself the business and converts her own mouldings into frames.

Women are in a majority in nine occupations—musicians or teachers of music, school teachers, boarding house keepers, housekeepers, laundresses, nurses, servants, stenographers and typists.

Over 250 California women, all of them members of the women's section of the Navy league, will go into camp on June 1, at Presido, Cal., where they will be under strict military rule to learn the ways of war.

Alexandra Kollontay, the Russian authority on feminism, is of the opinion that motherhood is not only a private privilege but a social duty, which the state should insure, and the time will come she thinks when it will be regarded so in all civilized countries.

SOME TASTY SALAD RECIPES.

Stuffed Lettuce Salad.

Take one small head of lettuce for each person, wash it and remove the heart carefully, so as not to break the head. Chop one bunch of celery very fine, one cucumber, one small onion. Mix well with French dressing and stuff the heads of lettuce with this mixture.

Tomato and Grape Fruit Salad.

Cut three grape fruits in two; remove the pulp and take out the tough inner skin; peel the tomatoes and chop them fine; mix it with the grape fruit, put in the hollow halves of the grape fruit and put a spoonful of mayonnaise dressing on top of each and garnish with parsley or cress.

CONCERNING WOMEN.

Nearly half of tne employes in the census bureau at Washington are women.

More than 25,000 girls have become members of canning clubs in the south.

Princess Christian's favorite pastime is hat trimming.

A score of women are now employed to take the place of policemen by Scotland Yard.

Lady Ida Wilson, sister of the late Duke of Fife, has five grandsons in the British army and navy.

In the neighborhood of Reading, England, there are three army horse depots staffed entirely by women.

Oregon has passed a law prohibiting discrimination in salaries between male and female school teachers.

TO USE MOUNTAIN GUNS ON VILLA

American troops getting into action with a rapid fire gun.

MAY

L 908

0152

"The Sign Beyond"

By J. Glenn Miller. - Auburn, Indiana

PRIZSY STORY No. 9

Below we print another story of our Story Contest. This is an ideal method for amateur authors to secure recognition. Stories of love, adventure, descriptive, etc., will be printed in this and 75 to 100 other papers, if acceptable to the contest editor. Manuscript must be legibly written on one side of the paper, and will be printed in an early edition if accepted. If return of manuscript is desired, in the event of refusal, first class postage must be enclosed. Send all manuscripts to the editor of this paper.—Ed.

THE SIGN BEYOND.

It was late lunch time. In fact, most of the tables of the Noon Day lunch club had been cleared, when the law partners, Abner Richards and Carl Penn, entered and took seats in the extreme rear of the club room.

The facial expression of the junior partner indicated plainly that the luncheon was being greatly enjoyed as he leisurely partook of the food before him. His companion seemed disturbed as he stowed away the food, seemingly without mastication. Within ten minutes from the time he sat down he again pushed back from the table.

"An honest lawyer!" he was saying. "Who ever heard of one! If you are so very conscientious as you profess, it's a wonder to me that you continue in the practice. Furthermore, if you are determined to block every bit of business I bring into the office, I demand an accounting. At the rate we've been going, it won't be six months 'till our names will fade from black type in the directory. So the sooner we are dissolved the better for us both, and you will then be free to take up any line of business your delicate conscience will permit."

With this speech off his mind he arose and reached for his hat and gloves.

Carl well knew they were not hasty words spoken in an unguarded moment but were the culmination of at least a week's deliberation, and although he was looking for some decided action on the former's part, his words had fallen as a crushing blow.

"Well," returned Carl, slowly rising from the table as if to follow the other, "I hardly think this a proper place to discuss that subject, but if you are going back to the office I will return with you and we can talk the matter over in private."

"I'm not going to the office. If you have any reply you can make it now or wait there until I return. I have an engagement for one-thirty. If anybody calls for me tell him I will be back at four."

With this Abner made a mad rush toward the door in an effort to catch a street car which was then passing.

Carl watched him until he had boarded the car and passed out of sight. He then turned to the table where his half finished luncheon was spread. Here his eyes rested fully a minute without seeing the things before them. His appetite and his courage were gone, and his entire future hung in the balance.

In this frame of mind, Carl doggedly wended his way among the empty tables to the door. Once in the street his steps mechanically took him in the direction of his office.

The firm of Richards and Penn had been in existence less than a year when the senior partner had thus peremptorily set forth his views concerning their future relations. They were both young men, only recently graduated from college and had known each other from youth. They had been schoolmates at school and chums and room-mates in college. In fact, they were still room-mates and, while of no kin, their whole lives had been as closely associated as brothers.

Abner was two years older than Carl, which may have been somewhat responsible for his opinion always being the ruling factor in their plans, but the chief reason was their natural tendencies. Abner was of a decidedly independent nature, avaricious and often unscrupulous in the means of accomplishing his purpose. Carl was just the opposite, being dependent, mild and conscientious. Thus the two widely different natures had "dovetailed" together from youth with scarcely a harsh word between them. Of course, differences had arisen at times, but they were always settled good naturedly, Carl usually giving in to the domineering disposition of his friend. Even at this time they were both struggling for the hand of Colonel Hosington's pretty daughter, but Carl knew that had nothing to do with the breach in their friendly relations, for while he knew he had the advantage of the girl's preference, he also knew that Abner had the material advantage of her father's encouragement.

At last reaching the office he went directly to his private room, closed the door behind him and sank heavily into his chair. Over and over he related to himself the conversation that had led up to Abner's outburst at the lunch club, but each time he was unable to credit him with such action of his own inception.

About a week before this episode at the lunch club the president of the Bank Medical Company had written their firm for an interview at their earliest convenience, to which Abner telephoned a reply, making an appointment to see him at their office the same afternoon at three-thirty. At the appointed time Abner and Carl were both in the office waiting in grave suspense to meet the widely known Professor Bank, but it was after four when he at last arrived and as he entered thee office two pairs of eyes were eagerly making a survey of his personal appearance, which to Carl was very displeasing.

The Professor would have weighed in the neighborhood of three hundred pounds, with many signs that he was then far below his average. The flesh of his cheeks hung loosely, drawing the lower lashes of his eyes well down over his cheek bones and displaying a fringe of red at the edges. His double chin swung like a pendulum at each move of his head, and his mouth resembled a new moon points downward. In all he presented a very savage but masterly appearance. But Abner's first impression was that he had certainly missed his calling when he chose the profession of medicine in preference to the law, for in his estimation those features and the law business were very closely associated. He even anticipated the day when age might supply him with a similar appearance. However, when he noticed the large diamonds that were shining from his tie, shirt bosom and ring, he concluded that his present business must be more or less profitable.

After a few words of introduction, the Professor began to reveal the purpose of his visit. From a remunerative standpoint it was a new piece of business for a new law firm. "Nor would the company's legal business be confined to this little difficulty," explained the Professor as he counted out five hundred dollars in gold, the sum he proposed to pay them as their first retainer. At the sight of the money Abner was all aghast. Glancing at Carl he saw him looking out of the window as if the sight of money was a bore.

"You see," continued the Professor, "I will have all the assets of our company transferred to you, making you a holding company. Then we will file a voluntary petition in bankruptcy and clear up the liabilities. That will close the mouths of the few unscrupulous investors who purchased stock while the company was in its infancy.

"But," observed Carl, "your assets would still be subject to the claims of creditors even in our hands as a holding company."

"I don't mean a holding company in its general sense," explained the Professor, somewhat irritated over being interrupted. "Perhaps your duties would be more in the nature of 'Silent Trustees.' You as lawyers undoubtedly understand what I mean."

"Oh, yes, Professor, we understand that perfectly," said Abner, at the same time he gave Carl a look that was intended to freeze his lips until after the deal was closed. His look, however, did not have the desired effect, which it had carried so many times before, for Carl was determined to have a clear understanding of the transaction.

"It is your intention, then, to defraud those first investors?" he inquired.

"Not in the least, Mr. Penn. We were all loosers at first because of a series of unsuccessful experiments and because I was president of the company then and am president yet, they are still looking for the twenty-five per cent annual dividends we advertised, simply to get the business started. Unhampered by the present responsibilities of the business, I can go abroad for a short time, until the few mouths cease to chatter, and then return and again take up the duties of active business. Meanwhile, the present business will be operating from an unknown source and perfectly free from liabilities."

"But——," Carl was about to press for a further explanation when he was interrupted by his partner.

"Inasmuch as it was with me that you arranged for this meeting, Professor, perhaps it will not be improper for you and me to retire to my room so we will not be interrupted by, —— by callers desiring to see Mr. Penn."

The Professor returned the coins to the bag from which he had taken them and as Abner closed the door behind them he sarcastically said: 'You will excuse us, Carl, won't you?"

Once Abner and the Professor were alone their business was soon negotiated. But Carl, stinging under the pain of his partner's insult had refrained from making any inquiry regarding their negotiations, nor had Abner referred to them until this day at the lunch club when the subject came up rather incidently.

"Don't you think the business of that company is a little shady?" inquired Carl after the subject had been introduced, and with the hope of ascertaining just what arrangements Abner had made with the Professor.

"What if it is shady?" returned Abner, partly admitting that it was. "The shadier their business is, the less it should trouble our consciences to take their money."

"But if we could persuade the Professor to pay off all the liabilities of the company in full and continue the business in his own name how much better it would be for everybody concerned. In the first place it would probably save some happy homes that might otherwise be wrecked under the strain of their financial loss. In the second place, it would place their company upon a solid and honorable basis whereby they could carry on an honest business in the future. And, lastly, our firm would not be joopardized in case our relations with them were found out."

"We are not running any charitable institution," interjected Abner.

"I understand that," Carl continued, "but our principles must be founded upon honesty if we are to succeed."

Undoubtedly his last statement is what brought out Abner's views regarding their future relations.

Several times Carl's door was opened by persons calling to inquire when Abner would return and each received the same short reply, "Four o'clock." How long Carl sat there wholey insensible to his surroundings he never knew, but it was late in the afternoon when his attention was at last attracted by the stenographer's announcement that a lady wished to see him. As the lady entered his room, Carl beckoned her to a chair by his desk and recognized her as one whom he had met at one of the secret or fraternal societies of which he was a member.

Carl was prominent in all such organizations and popular with the ladies. Not alone by accident, nor by his personal qualities, however, but chiefly by his own persistent effort to be so. He always ingeniously contrived some plan or other to get a prominent place on all committees, he never missed a chance to make a speech at their social functions, and he always occupied a conspicuous place at the speaker's table while in attendance at their banquets. All these Carl recognized as a legitimate means of broadening his acquaintance and thus adding greatly to his clientage.

"This is Miss ————."

"Mrs. Burrows," interrupted the lady.

"Oh, yes, Mrs. Burrows. You were assigned a place on the banquet committee with me at our last lodge meeting, were you not?"

"I believe so," she replied, "but my business here today is of a decidedly different nature. While I enjoy banquets very much, I am more particularly interested in three meals a day, a feature of home life I have not indulged in for some time."

Carl was visably taken back at her statement. Although he could remember of seeing her only a few times before, he recalled that she had always appeared in the most cheerful manner.

"Is your husband living?" he inquired.

"Yes, and we have four children, the oldest of whom is less than six."

Again Carl showed signs of surprise, for he would not have guessed her to be more than twenty-four or twenty-five years of age.

"And are the children also suffering for food?" he went on to inquire. Hearing no answer to his last question, he glanced up and saw large tears coursing down her cheeks. She assured him that they were by a nod of the head.

"Brute!" exclaimed Carl half under his breath.

"No, he is not a brute, if it is my husband you refer to, Mr. Penn." she hastened to correct, choking back the sobs that were filling her throat. "He is one of the dearest men in the world.

"Oh! he is sick?" suggested Carl, putting aside his first supposition that she had come to apply for a divorce, and then settling back in his chair to await her composure. Meanwhile he was making a careful survey of his new client in an effort to fathom the purpose of her call.

"In the first place," she resumed, "I married against my father's wishes. He had no particular objections to Mr. Burrows, however, but founded his principal objection upon my tender age. I was not yet eighteen, but I had cultivated a love for Mr. Burrows, nigh unto madness. During the days that preceded our marriage my only thought was for him, and my nights were filled with dreams of him until I could no longer endure the thought that someone else might enter into his life who would deprive me of my place.

"My social position was undoubtedly superior to any of the eligibles within his circle of acquaintances, but our friendship from the first had been envied by many of the girls in the neighborhood who were more charming and pretty than I. The facts are, Mr. Burrows was in demand. He had come into a comfortable fortune at the death of his father, he was kind and loving and always displayed one of the mildest dispositions that one could wish for, and these qualities in contrast to my father's rough nature, was in my estimation a great consideration in his behalf. Father had even said that James would make me a good husband if we waited until we were older, but that his inexperience in business would lead us to ruin if we married at that time. I did not then understand, nor did he take the pains to explain further.

"While father was usually kind, his word was law. And whatever he said he expected us children to accept without questioning.

"I, being the oldest of the four children, had begun to understand that there were frailities in all things human, father not excepted, and I could not see but that I knew Mr. Burrows and his abilities better than he. Of course, I knew Mr. Burrows had never had any actual business experience, but having graduated from one of the best universities only a year before, I was harboring no doubt of his ability to succeed.

"That Fourth of July we were secretly married at Casper, the county seat of Boon County, while in attendance at a celebration there. We kept the marriage a secret until that fall when we intended to commence life in earnest. Meantime we each lived in our respective homes as before.

"At last the day arrived that involved upon me the duty of breaking the news to my parents. Of course, I knew my mother would be terribly shocked, but my great dread was the wrath of my father, and to avoid facing him, I left the news with my mother to disclose after I had taken my departure for my new home.

"Poor mother! Had I known what I do now I would have savd her that task.

"From that time until one week ago I had not seen the face of either of them. That was eight years ago this fall.

"Yes, they knew our address," she continued in reply to Carl's question, "and I know mother would have communicated with me had she been free to have done so, but she was always as much subject to father's monarchial rule as we children were. And my pride, mingled with fear, has restrained me from taking steps toward a reconciliation.

"For the first five years our lives were one continuous round of sunshine. Mr. Burrows' investments were made on a safe basis and brought us a comfortable income; that is, sufficient for us to maintain our former places in society, although we were not adding any to our capital. Later, however, he became dissatisfied at remaining stationary and began placing his money at greater risk with the hope of reaping larger returns. But with constant losses we soon saw our capital diminishing. And a year ago, in a last vain hope of breaking even, he invested the last remnant in the Bank Medical Company on the president's representations that, while the preferred stock would pay ten per cent sure, the common stock would undoubtedly reach twenty-five the first year and rapidly increase after they were fairly started."

"The Bank Medical Company?" repeated Carl.

"Yes. That was a new company being organized to place on the world's market a sure cure for tuberculosis.

"I was opposed to the investment from the first, but Mr. Burrows, having lost his father, two brothers and a sister from the dread disease, he was more than interested. To strengthen his faith in the reliability of the company, the neighborhood was becoming considerably interested about it and nearly everybody around, from washwomen to capitalists, were investing their surplus in that company. Its stock was attracting notice even in the open market, and after a few interviews with President Bank, all I could say against it was of no avail.

"After our purchase, however, the only communications we had from the company was frequent notices of special assessments. These, we often met by pawning our jewelry or other personal effects.

"Poor James! How discouraged he became watching every mail for some encouraging news of his investment. The stock soon dropped from the market and his certificates were as worthless paper so far as any commercial value was concerned. Day after day he sat at home, only occasionally glancing through the financial columns of the newspapers and never went to the stock exchange where most of his time had formerly been spent.

'Conditions continued to go from bad to worse. We had sold and pawned every article available and were suffering for the necessities of life. The children were crying from cold and hunger and we were in the last stages of desperation when last week I received a note from my father asking me to call at his office. In the deepest humiliation, I complied with his request. He did not really upbraid me nor was his demeanor such as would induce familiarity, but in a very few sarcastic words he advised that if I had seen enough of 'high finance' and was ready to dissolve the bond that bound me to my destroyer, I might, with my children, return to my parental home. To this I promptly informed him that it was not for finance that I was married but for a love more dear to me than my own life. 'Very well,' he replied, 'if you wish to continue your experiments of an existence on love, you are free to do so; perhaps when the scheme is perfected you can realize a neat sum for the recipe.'

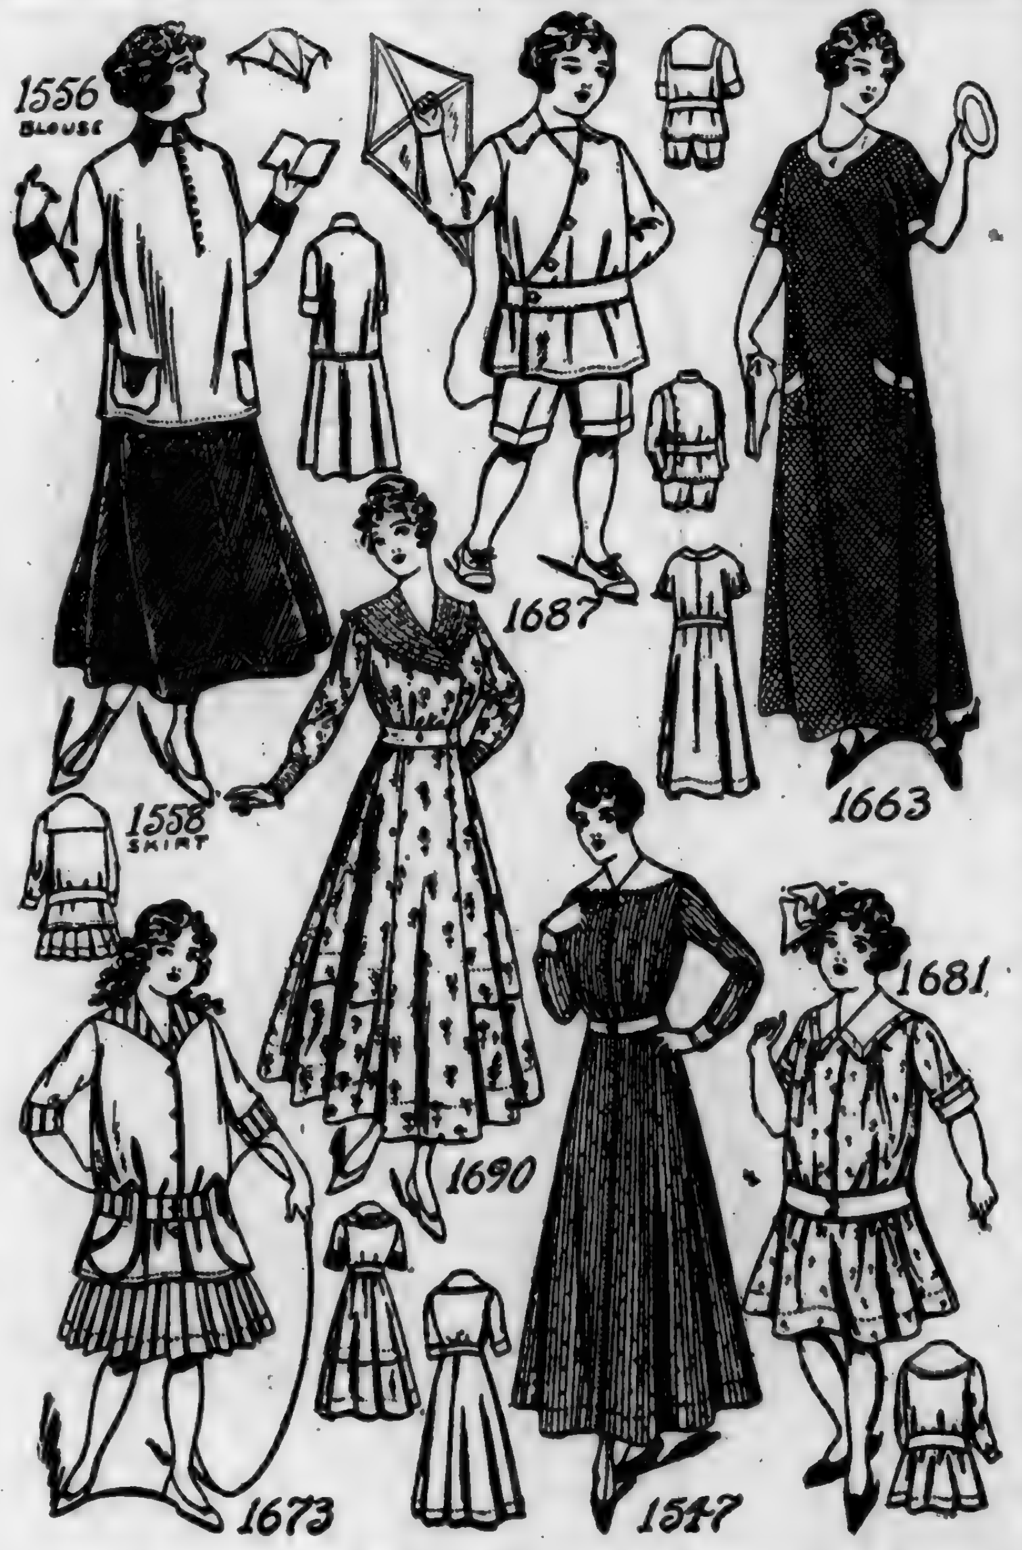
(Continued Next Week)

Miss Alice H. Moran of Venange, Pa., has been admitted to practice before the Pennsylvania Supreme court.

Our Fashion Department

Prepared Especially for this Paper

Send All Orders Direct to this Paper



1556-1558—Middy Suit for Misses and Small Women.

Blouse 1556 cut in 4 Sizes: 14, 16, 18 and 20 years. Skirt 1558 is cut in the same sizes. It requires 3⅛ yards of 36-inch material without the cuff. The cuff requires 1¼ yard for a 16-year size. The blouse requires 2⅝ yards of 44-inch material. This calls for TWO separate patterns, 10 cents FOR EACH pattern.

1687—Boys' Blouse Suit, with Straight Side or Diagonal Closing.

Cut in 4 sizes: 3, 4, 5 and 6 years. It requires 2¾ yards of 44-inch material for a 4-year size. Price, 10 cents.

1663—Ladies' One Piece Apron.

Cut in 3 sizes: Small, Medium and Large. It requires 4⅛ yards of 36-inch material for a Medium size. Price, 10 cents.

1673—Girls' Middy Dress with Skirt attached to an Under Waist.

Cut in 5 sizes: 4, 6, 8, 10 and 12 years. It requires 4⅛ yards of 40-inch material for an 8-year size. Price, 10 cents.

1690—Ladies' Dress.

Cut in 6 sizes: 34, 36, 38, 40, 42 and 44 inches bust measure. It requires 8 ½ yards of 44-inch material for a 36-inch size. The skirt measures 3 2/3 yards at its lower edge. Price, 10 cents.

1547—Ladies' House Dress.

Cut in 6 Sizes: 34, 36, 38, 40, 42 and 44 inches bust measure. It requires 5⅝ yards of 44-inch material for a 36-inch size. The skirt measures about 3⅛ yards at the lower edge. Price, 10 cents.

1681—Girls' Dress.

Cut in 4 sizes: 4, 6, 8 and 10 years. It requires 3 yards of 36-inch material for a 6-year size. Price, 10 cents.

PATTERN ORDER.

Patterns
No.	Size

I enclose ....for Patterns

Name ....

Town ....

State ....

St. No., R. F. D. ....

Mail Your Order Direct to Publisher.

Story Contest

Opportunity for subscribers of this paper to try their literary talent and gain a reputation.

MANY magazine writers are secured from the rural communities. We want our subscribers to have every advantage to utilize their talent, and have joined with a number of other publishers in a great story contest.

Do you think you can write a story?

Suppose you try anyhow. For the best story received we will pay

$50.00

Stories may run from 2,000 to 15,000 words. Decision will be made by popular vote of the subscribers of this and several other papers. Stories acceptable for entry will be published in this paper and not less than fifty others. This is a chance to gain popularity at once. Send manuscript direct to editor of this paper.

MAY

L 908

0153

Quick Service

And Satisfied Policy Holders
Our Best Advertisement

Take one of Our Joint Policies
and have Complete Protection.

GEO. W. COE, Mgr.
Lincoln Life, Auburn

HATS
and
CAPs

of the latest styles for the summer season, in felts and straws. We invite you to our store to look at our fine display. The prices are reasonable.

Remember
Go to Erick's

Wm. G. ERICK,
SPENCERVILLE

WOOL!

Dispose of your crop of Wool now and get a good price—and save all that handling and chance for loosing money. We are prepared to handle wool this spring and you will be guaranteed the highest market price.

Call or Phone to
JACK BEAMS,
Spencerville.

S. S. Widney
Justice of the Peace
Insurance and Real Estate
Phone No. 16
ST. JOE, . . . IND

Don't put off any longer. Subscribe now.

The St. Joe News

Fred B. Leighty, Editor
Mrs. Iora Leighty, Associate

One Year, - - $1.00
Six Months, - - - .50
Three Months, - - .25

Entered at the postoffice at St. Joe, Indiana, as second class matter.

INDIANA ASSOCIATED WEEKLIES

Local Briefs

Land Rollers of all kinds at CURIE's Store.

Miss Pauline Barney was at Hicksville over Sunday.

Reduced prices on all Ladies' and Misses' Suits. SCHLOSS' Auburn.

Mr. and Mrs George Milliman and Mr. and Mrs. D. P. Cole were at Ft. Wayne Thursday.

Get Indian Gasoline at Patterson's Garage.

Chas Woodcox and family, of Woodburn, were over Sunday guests of St. Joe relatives.

Coming this month, 4 cars of genuine Pocahontas Lump Coal. Place your order now.
St. Joe Elevator.

Mrs. Ruth Bohne, of Ft Wayne, was a Wednesday supper guest of Mrs C. C. Bassett. The remainder of the week she spent with A. D. Brunson and family.

Eleven room house on West Main St., for sale or rent. Other well located residence properties and vacant lots for sale on easy terms. S. S. WIDNEY.

Mr. H. N. Rummell, of Oklahoma City, Okla., was the guest of honor in the home of Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Lucas, last Sunday. Others present were Mrs N. C. Rummell, Mr. and Mrs. Harvey Beam, of Spencerville; Mr. P. A. Shurts and daughter Pearl.

We can save you money on Pocahontas Coal, $4.10 for June, $4.30 July, and any month after that at $4.40 ton from car, let me know when. Also Hocking or West Virginia at an unusually low price. ST. JOE MILLS.

In spite of the heavy rain last Sunday, the M. P. Mothers' Day program was well attended, 96 being present. A beautiful rose was given each one present The ladies of the Sunday School had complete charge of the services and the program was excellent.

P. A. Walker
Trustee
Spencer Township

OFFICE DAY—
Tuesday of each week at the residence ½ mile east of the Dills River Bridge.
Phone—St. Joe, 21-6
Spencerville, - Indiana

Read the Free Column.

Use Daily Bread Flour the Indiana made.

Reduced prices on all Ladies' and Misses' Suits. SCHLOSS' Auburn.

Subscriptions taken for new or renewals of any magazine published, at The News office.

Mrs. S. D. Gee was the guest of her son, Howard Gee, and family, at Hicksville Friday afternoon.

For Sale or Rent, a small house and half-acre of good garden ground. S. S. WIDNEY.

Mrs. J. H. Reinoehl, who has been at the Luthern hospital for a few weeks, died Tuesday evening at midnight. She will be taken to Fairfield township direct from Ft. Wayne to the home of her parents. This news reached us just before going to press and consequintly we do not know when the funeral will be held.

WHEN THE GREAT ARMY OF THE WEST PASSED IN REVIEW

SPEAKING of his troops, who passed in grand review at Washington at the close of the great war, General Sherman says:

"It was, in my judgment, the most magnificent army in existence—65,000 men, in splendid physique, who had just completed a march of nearly 2,000 miles in a hostile country, in good drill, and who realized that they were being closely scrutinized by thousands of their fellow countrymen and by foreigners. Division after division passed, each commander of an army corps or division coming on the stand during the passage of his command to be presented to the president, cabinet and spectators. The steadiness and firmness of tread, the careful dress on the guides, the uniform intervals between the companies, all eyes directly to the front, and the tattered and bullet-riven flags, festooned with flowers, all attracted notice. Many good people up to that time had looked upon our Western army as a sort of a mob; but the world then saw and recognized as a fact that it was an army in the proper sense, well organized, well commanded and disciplined, and it was no wonder that it had swept through the South like a tornado. For six hours and a half that strong tread of the army of the West resounded along Pennsylvania avenue. Not a soul of that vast crowd of spectators left his place, and when the rear of the column had passed by thousands of spectators still lingered to express their sense of confidence in the strength of a government which could claim such an army."

General Sherman.

The statistics of the Civil war are highly interesting in view of what is going on in Europe today. It has been carefully figured out that there were 2,898,304 enlistments in the Union armies during the war and approximately 1,400,000 in the Confederate armies. Reduced to the three-year period there were the equivalent of 1,556,678 enlistments in the Union armies and 1,082,119 in the Confederate armies. The Union casualties were 67,058 killed in battle, 43,012 died of wounds, 224,586 died from disease, 24,872 died from accidents and other causes; total deaths, 359,528; total wounded and recovered, 275,175. The Confederates had 94,000 killed or dead from wounds in battle and 164,000 lost by disease or other causes.

DENTIST
O. R. PRICE,
ST. JOE, IND.
Office first door south of Patterson's Dept. Store.
Bell Phone No. 44.

Do You Want to Save
MONEY?

Then buy your building material at the Spencerville Lumber Yard.

◆◆◆◆◆◆◆◆

We have just received a new supply of Lime, Cement and Plaster, which is strictly fresh and guaranteed the highest grade on the market.

◆◆◆◆◆◆◆◆

Brands We Handle.

Universal and Wabash Cement, Wayne Fibre Prepared Wood Pulp Plaster, Crystal Rock Hydrated Lime.

STEWARD LUMBER & GRAIN Co
SPENCERVILLE, IND.
Highest Prices Paid for Grain and Seeds.

Personal Items

Miss Berneice Baker and baby, of Concord, were St. Joe guests Tuesday.

Reduced prices on all Ladies and Misses Suits. SCHLOSS' Auburn.

"Skeeters" are here now and they are just as familiar as they "usetobe".

Rev. J. Waldo Reid, of Canton, Ohio, will preach at Coburntown, next Sunday morning.

Webster Stout and wife, of Hamilton, were Sunday and Monday guests of A. Copp and wife.

Walter Bowen and Mr. Metzger, of Wayne, called on Leon Sechler and wife and St. Joe relatives.

A new one use 1 quart turpentine, 5lb. Sulphur on a bushel Seed Corn. See results. Ask DUNKLE.

Spencer Township Sunday School Convention will be held at the Coburntown Church, next Sunday afternoon and evening.

Lee O. Tustison, of Columbus, Ind., was home a few days last week, the guest of his family and relatives. He returned to his work Monday noon.

Lee Swinney Thomson, Jr., May 8th., 1916 born to Mr. and Mrs Lee Swinney Thomson, Sr. Mrs. Thomson will be remembered as Miss Opal Flinn.

Hazel Clady, Fae Smith of Hicksville, Vern Volkert, Mr. and Mrs. Gillette, and Fae Manning, of Holgate, were Sunday afternoon guests of Miss Inez Hart.

The C C Club was entertained Friday afternoon at the home of Miss Golden Murray. A dainty luncheon was served. Miss Mae Barton and Mrs. Audrey Wade and daughters were guests.

A Notice to Farmers!

There will be a free demonstration of the Bull Tractor plowing on the Ketcham farm 1 mile west of Auburn, Tuesday and Wednesday, May 23 and 24. Come and see it work. Everything free.
Wimer Brown & Co.

A Friend in Need.

When Glando Gargle is used for a cold in the head it is surprising to see how quickly the clogged nostrils are opened. Adenoids are caused by a neglected cold. If the mucus which forms is allowed to remain in the nostrils, a diseased condition will result, which causes chronic catarrh and adenoids. Glando Gargle was prepared to meet these special needs. Equally effective for sore mouth or sore throat. Price 50 cents. For sale by All Druggists.

COLETOWN

Ethel Murphy was home from Mt. Vernon, a few days last week. She expects to leave for Nashville, Tennessee.

Mrs. W. E. Jackson and daughter Olive, spent a part of last week in New Haven, the guests of Henry Jackson and family.

Elton Brown's children are having a tussle with the measles and whooping cough.

Mrs. Wm. Sowers and daughter Grace, took dinner Tuesday with A. E. Hart and family, of Hicksville.

Salmedico Arcady Dairy Feed, Oil Meal, Beef Scrap Tankage, Beef Meal besides our own unadulterated Bran and Middlings.
ST. JOE MILLS.

Wm. Sowers had a horse die as he was returning home from Hicksville, Saturday night.

Henry Chapman and wife, of Woodburn, called on W E Jacksons', Wednesday.

Beatrice Murphy, of Anderson, Ind., is spending a few days with her parents, H. H. Murphy and family.

W. E. Martin and son Walter, called on Fred Martins', Sunday evening.

Arthur Hemrick, and Beatrice and Joy Murphy spent Sunday evening with Alvin Walker and wife.

SPENCERVILLE R. F. D. NO. 2

D. M. Kelley and daughters, Lena and Nellie, and Miss Grace Cook motored to Wayne, Saturday.

Milo Beam has purchased a touring car of Mr. Goldsmith, of Leo.

Mrs Ida Gibbons, who has been quite sick, is some better at this writing.

Garnett Beams spent from Friday until Sunday with Greely Wearley and family.

Earl Stiman and family spent Sunday with Chas. Gibbons and wife.

Miss Grace Cook took dinner Sunday with Frank Markle and family.

Marie Miller, of near Auburn, was a Thursday night guest at the D. M. Kelley home.

Mrs. Chas. Cook, who has been very low, is some better at present.

Clear, Peachy Skin Awaits Anyone Who Drinks Hot Water

Says an inside bath, before breakfast helps us look and feel clean, sweet, fresh.

Sparkling and vivacious—merry, bright, alert—a good, clear skin and a natural, rosy, healthy complexion are assured only by pure blood. If only every man and woman could be induced to adopt the morning inside bath, what a gratifying change would take place. Instead of the thousands of sickly, anaemic-looking men, women and girls, with pasty or muddy complexions; instead of the multitudes of "nerve wrecks," "rundowns," "brain fags" and pessimists we should see a virile optimistic throng of rosy-cheeked people everywhere.

An inside bath is had by drinking each morning, before breakfast, a glass of real hot water with a teaspoonful of limestone phosphate in it to wash from the stomach, liver, kidneys and ten yards of bowels the previous day's indigestible waste, sour fermentations and poisons, thus cleansing, sweetening and freshening the entire alimentary canal before putting more food into the stomach.

Those subject to sick headache, biliousness, nasty breath, rheumatism, colds; and particulary those who have a pallid, sallow complexion and who are constipated very often, are urged to obtain a quarter pound of limestone phosphate at the drug store which will cost but a trifle, but is sufficient to demonstrate the quick and remarkable change in both health and appearance, awaiting those who practice internal sanitation. We must remember that inside cleanliness is more important than outside, because the skin does not absorb impurities to contaminate the blood while the pores in the thirty feet of bowels do.

DRINK MORE WATER IF KIDNEYS BOTHER

Eat less meat and take Salts for Backache or Bladder trouble—Neutralizes acids.

Uric acid in meat excites the kidneys, they become overworked; get sluggish, ache, and feel like lumps of lead. The urine becomes cloudy; the bladder is irritated, and you may be obliged to seek relief two or three times during the night. When the kidneys clog you must help them flush off the body's urinous waste or you'll be a real sick person shortly. At first you feel a dull misery in the kidney region, you suffer from backache, sick headache, dizziness, stomach gets sour, tongue coated and you feel rheumatic twinges when the weather is bad.

Eat less meat, drink lots of water; also get from any pharmacist four ounces of Jad Salts; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys will then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to clean clogged kidneys and stimulate them to normal activity, also to neutralize the acids in urine, so it no longer is a source of irritation, thus ending bladder weakness.

Jad Salts is inexpensive, cannot injure; makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink which everyone should take now and then to keep the kidneys clean and active. Druggists here say they sell lots of Jad Salts to folks who believe in overcoming kidney trouble while it is only trouble.

"TIZ" GLADDENS SORE, TIRED FEET

"TIZ" makes sore, burning, tired feet fairly dance with delight. Away go the aches and pains, the corns, callouses, blisters and bunions.

"TIZ" draws out the acids and poisons that puff up your feet. No matter how hard you work, how long you dance, how far you walk, or how long you remain on your feet, "TIZ" brings restful foot comfort. "TIZ" is wonderful for tired, aching, swollen, smarting feet. Your feet just tingle for joy; shoes never hurt or seem tight.

Get a 25 cent box of "TIZ" now from any druggist or department store. End foot torture forever—wear smaller shoes, keep your feet fresh, sweet and happy.

Subscribe for this paper.

Transfer paper at NEWS office, 2 sheets for 5c. Get some now for that pattern you wish to transfer.

Are You in Need of Cement?
WABASH
PORTLAND CEMENT
Is Best For Sidewalks, Foundations, Floors, Walls, Concrete Blocks, Bridges, Etc.
Look for the Turkey on Every Bag You Buy
WABASH PORTLAND CEMENT CO.
General Offices, Detroit, Mich. Works, Stroh, Indiana
Mrs. L. W. STEWARD, Spencerville, Indiana.

MAY
L 908
0154

WE WELCOME
LARGE&SMALL
DEPOSITS

Your Business Is never too large for us to handle successfully, or too small for us to appreciate. The small depositors receive the same courteous attention as the large depositors.

EVERY CUSTOMER A BOOSTER

That's why we want your account. We want you to tell your friends and neighbors. They need a good BANK also, and all will be benefited.

Farmers & Merchants State Bank
Capital Stock $25,000.00
Spencerville, - - - Indiana

Spencerville

High School Commencement

Friday Evening, May 19, 1916 at eight o'clock

PROGRAM

March	Orchestra
Invocation	Rev. Valentine
Music	Orchestra
Address	Dr. Frank E. Jaynes
Music	Orchestra
Presentation of Diplomas	Miss Bertha Thornburg
Music	Orchestra
Benediction	Rev. Valentine

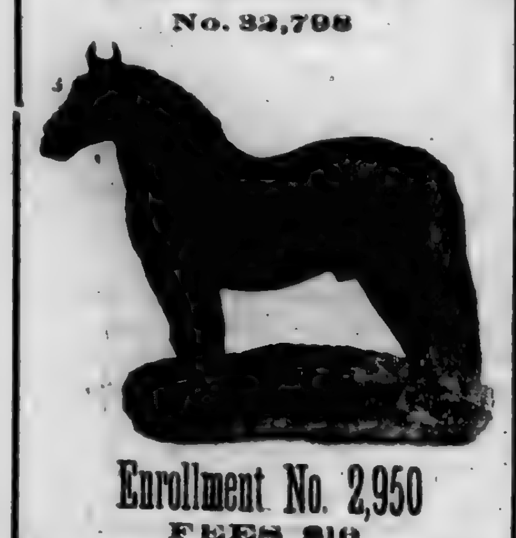
CLASS FLOWER—PINK ROSE
CLASS COLORS—PINK AND NILE GREEN
CLASS MOTTO—NOT THE END BUT THE BEGINNING

CLASS ROLL

DONALD L. SHOOK
LEVI B. MUMMA
S. TENNYSON WEARLEY
FAY A. WILMOT
DEWEY BEABER
MARIE HULL
MARIE MILLER
PAUL WASSON
HAROLD BEAM

Chick Feed containing Corn, Wheat, Kaffir, Millet and Grit, $2.00 hu. Why pay more.
ST. JOE MILLS.

The Percheron Horse
LORAINE
No. 32,798



Enrollment No. 2,950
FEES $10
W. H. Moore, Owner-Keeper

The Belgian Horse
CLARENCE
Enrollment No. 4194
FEES $10
A. B. DWYER, Owner.
W. H. MOORE, Keeper.

Care will be taken to avoid accidents but will not be responsible should any occur. These horses will make the season at
Archie Beam Barn,
22 Barn Phone, 950-3
Spencerville.

SPENCERVILLE

A $5 Vacuum and Sweeper for $3.95 at Beams & Co., store.

Master William Vallieu is confined to the house with a very sore knee.

C. A. Rhoades and wife are visiting their daughter, Mrs. Newman and family, of Defiance.

William Scott and wife, of Anderson, visited Mrs. Thornburg and family, several days last week.

New spring oxfords for Ladies, Misses and Children—Just in at Beams & Co., store, in patent leather and gun metal.

William Beninghoff and Miss Sheffer, of Ft. Wayne, were Saturday and Sunday guests of the former's parents, John Beninghoff and wife.

Lucile Francis Osborne is the name of the little daughter that came last Thursday to gladden the home of Mr. and Mrs. Fred Osborne, of Roanoke. Mrs. Osborne was Miss Gladys Gloyd formerly of this place.

Ernest Fredrick, while assisting his father remove some roofing, had the misfortune to have a piece of steel fly into his eye which became embedded into the eye. He was taken to the office of Dr. Shook, who found it necessary to put him under the influence of ether to remove it.

Send in your news items.

Slide in the $1.00. Do it now.

William Allen spent Monday at Ft. Wayne.

CURIE'S is the place to get your Pearson Flash Light.

Mrs. Rebecca Kirst returned home Thursday after spending a few days visiting her sisters at Ft. Wayne and Decatur.

Mrs. Emila Gloyd and son Geary, spent several days at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Fred Osborne and family, of Roanoke.

Mrs. Thompson and children, who has been visiting her grandmother, Mrs. Wise of Pearl St., left Saturday for her future home at Denver, Col.

Mrs. Mary Hyndman, of Huntertown, while visiting her brother, George Gloyd, last week, took suddenly ill. Dr. Shook was called and found her to be suffering from gravel.

$1.00 Ladies Dresses at Beams & Co., store. They are the latest patterns and you can't afford to be wanting a dress at this price. They are selling fast.

Hullie Rummell, of Oklahoma City, Okla, arrived Friday evening to visit his mother, Mrs. Nancy Rummell, a few days. Mr. Rummell came here after visiting his brother, Rev. Wm. Rummell, of Weeping Water, Nebr., who is in very poor health.

A reunion of the Furnish brothers and sisters of those in this vicinity was held on Thursday afternoon at the home of Abe Furnish, who has been very ill but slowly improving. John Furnish, a brother, residing in Florence, Ore., and Mrs. Maggie Hallabaugh, of Nebraska City, Neb., a sister, was unable to be present. Those present of the brothers and sisters were James Furnish, Mrs. Martha Grush and Mrs. Ida Metcalf; others present were Isiah Grush and Mrs. Lena Hilkie, of Auburn, and Ralph Furnish and children.

Greatly reduced prices on Shoes and Oxfords. You can't afford to be without, at the prices we are quoting. BEAMS & CO.

A Mothers' Day service will be held at the M. E. Church, next Sunday at 10:30 a. m. The sermon will be preceeded by one half hour of special music and recitations. Everybody is invited. All mothers have a special invitation and will be the guests of honor at the service. Anyone wishing to buy flowers through the committee should place the order with Golden Murray, Minta Rhodes or Ethel Bowser as soon as possible. Anyone wishing to be conveyed to the church should notify Mary Comesky.

Coming this month, 4 cars of genuine Pocahontas Lump Coal. Place your order now. St Joe Elevator.

Mrs. Jerry Markle received the news of the death of her brother, Wm. Wise, an old and respected citizen of Auburn, who died at his home on West 15th. St., Wednesday afternoon. He had been in poor health for sometime. He leaves besides the widow, two daughters, Mrs. Alice Phillips and Mrs. Nettie Bailey, both of Auburn; three grandchildren, one sister, Mrs. Jerry Markle, of this place; one brother, Frank Wise of Otsego, Mich., fifteen neices and nephews besides a host of friends. He was preceeded in death by one daughter. Funeral services were held at Auburn, Friday afternoon, at 2 o'clock. Interment in the Woodlawn cemetery. Those attending from here were Jerry Markle and wife, and Frank Markle and family.

We Are Always Ready
to serve you with good printing. No matter what the nature of the job may be we are ready to do it at a price that will be Satisfactory

Frank W. Silberg
Veterinarian
OFFICE and HOSPITAL
—ON—
Main Street
SPENCERVILLE. - IND.
Phones—Office No. 7
(18) Residence No. 101

Dr. H. R. Farnham
MEDICINE AND GENERAL SURGERY
ST. JOE, INDIANA
Office Hours—Week Day
10:00 to 11:00 a. m.
1:00 to 3:00 p. m.
6:30 to 8:00 p. m.
Sunday—By appointment.
Telephone
Office, ... No. 2
Office at Residence, Second house west of Widney Opera House.

H. C. Hathaway
TRUSTEE
Concord Township
Office Day Thursday's of Each week in Town Hall, St. Joe.

WANTED—To buy your Hay. C. E. Frye, Phone 73-31, St. Joe.

The young people of the M. E. Church gathered at the church last Friday evening and organized an Epworth League. The following officers were elected:—President, M. H. Howey; 1st., Vice-president, Elvin Valentine; 2nd. Vice-president, Ethel Metcalf; 3rd. Vice-president, Gladys Watson; 4th. Vice-president, Olive Beerbower; Secretary, Joe Beerbower; Treasurer, Ethel Palmer; Pianoist, Olive Beerbower; Chorister, Lena Kelley.

On Sunday morning a merry crowd of relatives gathered at the home of Mrs. Lucy Fairfield to help her celebrate her 77 birthday anniversary. The guests came with well filled baskets and at the noon hour a bounteous dinner was served to the following guests:—John Fairfield, wife and son Doral, of Ft. Wayne; Samuel High and wife, and Mrs. Sarah Philips, of Rehobeth; Henry Beams, wife and grand-daughter, Miss Helen Lake, Mrs. John Beams, Robert Beams, wife and son Glenn, Frank Rhodes and wife, Frank Beams and family, George Beams and family, and Wm. Fairfield, wife and daughter Helena.

The Baccalaureate sermon was preached last Sunday evening at the Lutheran church by Rev. A. K. Mumma assisted by Rev. J. C. Valentine of the M. E. Church. The Commencement exercises will be held on Friday evening at the Lutheran church, and the Banquet given by the Alumni Society at the School House, Saturday evening. Levi Mumma carried off the first honors of the class with Dewey Beaber a close second. The following are the graduates this year: The Misses Marie Miller and Marie Hull, and the Messrs. Paul Wasson, Samuel Wearley, Faye Wilmot, Levi Mumma, Dewey Beaber, Don Shook and Harold Beam.

[illegible]URNED MAY OUTNUMBER THE MOURNERS

"WE ARE coming, Father Abraham." Yes they are coming, the veterans of the Union army, responding to the call from the Great Beyond; coming faster now than ever before.

When Memorial day was new in the United States there were dozens and scores, yes, even hundreds of the veterans for each soldier grave to be decorated. Today, half a century after the peace, the graves are legion, and those who would decorate them but a handful.

How fast the "boys in blue" are passing! In this year 1916 they are going at a rate never before reached since the war closed. The death roll of February averaged 116 a day; 115 a day was the average for March, and in April it grew to 118.

Official records show that 2,272,408 men fought under the Stars and Stripes in the Civil war, and that 349,944 lost their lives before Lee surrendered. How many of these remain alive today?

The records of the census office, while perhaps not absolutely accurate, may be taken as approximately authentic. It is believed that since the act of May 11, 1912, granting a service pension to every man who served at least 90 days in the armed forces of the United States during the Civil war, no old soldier remains off the pension roll.

If, however, there are any not pensioned, they certainly are few in number. The pension office rolls show that May 1, 1915, there were 401,796 veterans of the Civil war pensioned. It is safe to say that no more than this number are now alive.

Rapidly, too, is the veteran of the Union army passing out of public life. In 1914 three veterans of the blue were sole representatives of the Union army in the house—Sherwood of Ohio, Kirkpatrick of Iowa and Goulden of New York. The last named died May 3, 1915, and Kirkpatrick has retired, leaving General Sherwood, so far as known, the sole Union veteran in congress.

On September 27 those survivors of the Union army who were physically able to be present marched in grand review on Pennsylvania avenue, in Washington, reproducing the grand parade of half a century agone. It showed the thinning ranks, as did the grand encampment of the Grand Army of the Republic, then in progress in the capital city. This was the last large encampment the order will hold.

Truly, "We are coming, Father Abraham."

The Grip Skeleton!

The grip skeleton may be retained in the body in various forms. If the grip affected you in the form of tonsilitis, bronchitis or pneumonia and left you with a cough, you should act quickly before the cough weakens the lungs and bronchial tubes. After the lungs have been affected for some time by continuous coughing the process of decay begins, then you are beyond medical aid. Statistics tell us that one person dies every three minutes from tuberculosis. A chronic cough requires continuous treatment until it subsides. Get three ounces of PYNINE and make your own cough medicine. You can make one pint of excellent cough syrup. Full directions with each bottle. For sale by all by All Druggists.

Choosing Silver
Artistic designs, correct style, brilliant finish, combined with honest value, make
1847 ROGERS BROS.
silverware the choice of discriminating purchasers. This name to-day stands for the heaviest grade of plate and exquisite beauty of patterns, assuring long years of service and satisfaction. Its remarkable durability has won it the popular title
"Silver Plate that Wears."
Sold by leading dealers everywhere. Send for catalogue "CL," showing all patterns.
International Silver Co., successor to Meriden Britannia Co., Meriden, Conn.

How's This?

We offer One Hundred Dollars Reward for any case of Catarrh that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure.
F. J. CHENEY & CO., Toledo, O.
We, the undersigned, have known F. J. Cheney for the last 15 years, and believe him perfectly honorable in all business transactions and financially able to carry out any obligations made by his firm.
NATIONAL BANK OF COMMERCE, Toledo, O.
Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. Testimonials sent free. Price 75 cents per bottle. Sold by all Druggists.
Take Hall's Family Pills for constipation.

IF HAIR IS TURNING GRAY, USE SAGE TEA

Here's Grandmother's Recipe to Darken and Beautify Faded Hair.

That beautiful, even shade of dark, glossy hair can only be had by brewing a mixture of Sage Tea and Sulphur. Your hair is your charm. It makes or mars the face. When it fades, turns gray or streaked, just an application or two of Sage and Sulphur enhances its appearance a hundredfold.

Don't bother to prepare the mixture; you can get this famous old recipe improved by the addition of other ingredients for 50 cents a large bottle, all ready for use. It is called Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound. This can always be depended upon to bring back the natural color and lustre of your hair.

Everybody uses "Wyeth's" Sage and Sulphur Compound now because it darkens so naturally and evenly that nobody can tell it has been applied. You simply dampen a sponge or soft brush with it and draw this through the hair, taking one small strand at a time; by morning the gray hair has disappeared, and after another application it becomes beautifully dark and appears glossy and lustrous. This ready-to-use preparation is a delightful toilet requisite for those who desire dark hair and a youthful appearance. It is not intended for the cure, mitigation or prevention of disease.

F. P. HART
"The Expert"
House Mover
—AND—
Building Raiser
Concrete Work of all kinds finished in the best shape with the least expense.
Call or write

Oldest in America
Strongest in the World
Mutual life
INSURANCE COMPANY of New York
J. C. HULL, Agent
Phone No. 46

Lehman's
CLOTHING HOUSE
ESTABLISHED 1887
MENS AND BOYS OUTFITTERS
808-810 CALHOUN STREET
BEN LEHMAN PROP
Fort Wayne, Ind.

THE BLUE BUCKLE

by William Hamilton Osborne

CHAPTER I.—Craig Rutherford, a New York athlete and club man, is returning to New York on the Gothic. He becomes deeply interested in a Mrs. Talcott, a beautiful girl with an elderly husband. He also meets Helderman, an eccentric financier, whom he instinctively dislikes. News is received that a $50,000 necklace has been smuggled aboard ship, and that secret service men are trying to locate it. Suspicion points to the Talcotts.

CHAPTER II. — Rutherford also meets Irene Arany, a woman of mystery, who, by a ruse, and for some hidden reason, makes his acquaintance. Mrs. Talcott is attacked in a passageway of the ship by a man who tries to snatch the blue buckle she wears. Craig rescues her, wondering why anyone should want to steal so cheap an ornament. Later he scares away two men who are trying to break into her stateroom.

CHAPTER III. — Rutherford, on Helderman's invitation, meets the financier in the royal suite, where he sees a woman, supposedly Mrs. Talcott.

CHAPTER IV.—On reaching New York Mrs. Talcott seeks Rutherford's protection, and he accompanies her to her home in West Tenth St.

CHAPTER V.—Several mysterious happenings, including the finding of the diamond necklace and the blue buckle in his pocket lead Rutherford to believe that Mrs. Talcott is an adventuress. He learns that her name is really Ballantyne, and that "Talcott" is her father. She gives Rutherford the blue buckle to keep safely for her.

CHAPTER VI.—Rutherford delivers the diamonds to government officials. Crowder, a secret service man, tells him that Helderman was really in New York at the time Rutherford was supposedly talking with him on the Gothic. Miss Arany calls on Rutherford and demands the blue buckle.

CHAPTER VII.—Rutherford accepts Helderman's invitation to dine with him at his Riverside Drive home.

CHAPTER VIII.—Pseudo secret service men rifle Rutherford's safe, seeking vainly for the buckle. He receives a visit from the Ballantynes, who state that the blue buckle, and its duplicate which they are trying to find, is the key to a large fortune, and the whereabouts of important papers.

CHAPTER IX.—Acting on Rutherford's advice, his servant permits the fake secret service men to rifle the safe. Rutherford captures them, and compels them to confess that they are in the employ of Miss Arany. He dines with Miss Ballantyne, and is attacked by thugs, and has his pockets rifled.

CHAPTER X.—With Miss Ballantyne, Rutherford meets Le Clere, the representative of the estate, whose heir she is. She shows Le Clere the blue buckle and her credentials.

CHAPTER XI. — Miss Ballantyne learns of the search of her house during her absence.

CHAPTER XII.—Rutherford is mysteriously attacked in his room.

CHAPTER XIII.—Helderman calls on Miss Ballantyne and proposes marriage.

CHAPTER XIV.—Real secret service men call on Rutherford. Helderman's movements puzzle them.

CHAPTER XV.—The lawyers for the estate deliver the second blue buckle to the wrong Miss Ballantyne.

"The buckle," Cowen interjected. "We gave it to you half an hour ago."

"Why, Mr. Cowen, I have only just come," she protested.

"You have only just come back, of course. But you were here half an hour ago."

"Indeed, I was not. I obeyed your telephoned instructions to come at 4 instead," she answered, with gentle insistence.

Mr. Cowen stood silent a moment; then he said: "Miss Ballantyne, I did not telephone you."

"You mean that you have delivered the buckle to somebody!" she cried, starting forward.

"We delivered it to you—don't you remember? Why, here is your own receipt for it!"

He paused, started, then hurried forward and looked at her intently.

"Why, you are not the woman to whom we gave the buckle!" he cried, aghast. "You are not Miss Ballantyne!"

Leclerc, excited, worried by this new complication, came close to the girl and peered impersonally into her face through his thick glasses.

"Good heavens, Mr. Cowen," he exclaimed, "this is the real Miss Ballantyne—the one I met up at the hotel!"

"And the other woman has the buckle!" Cowen almost groaned.

"I'll never know what was on it—the inscription, I mean," said Billie, in a pathetic little voice.

"It isn't quite as bad as that!" Leclerc exclaimed with some relief.

He picked up a piece of paper and rapidly printed in capital letters the following strange words:

DOT ULAPSINNE KBAN IMMIA

"There, Miss Ballantyne, are the symbols on the second blue buckle," he said. "And take heart again! One buckle is valueless without the other at the place where they are to be presented. You still have the other?"

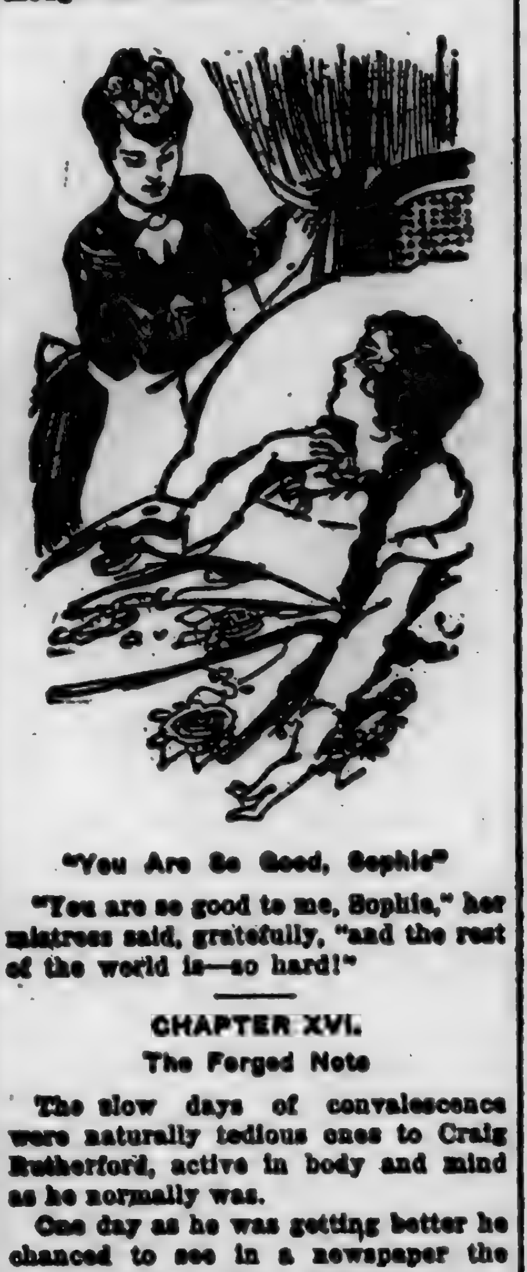
Billie nodded and took the proffered paper eagerly, clasping it in her gloved hand as though it were the most precious object in the world.

"My letters and affidavits—all the proofs of my identity"—she asked, fixing imploring eyes upon Leclerc.

He was obliged to tell the truth.

"I turned them over to the other woman, believing my part in this strange transaction ended, and knowing they would be needed in claiming the fortune."

Sophie gave a little cry as she opened the door at home. So drawn and haggard was the girl's face, in contrast to the buoyant look of hope with which she had started on her mission downtown, that the French woman was frightened. Without a word she hurried her mistress upstairs, and undressed her and put her to bed, as though she were a tired child.



"You Are So Good, Sophie"

"You are so good to me, Sophie," her mistress said, gratefully, "and the rest of the world is—so hard!"

CHAPTER XVI.

The Forged Note

The slow days of convalescence were naturally tedious ones to Craig Rutherford, active in body and mind as he normally was.

One day as he was getting better he chanced to see in a newspaper the announcement that Helderman was about to start on a rest trip to Florida. The same day Miss Arany called on him.

"You will excuse my not rising," Rutherford said courteously. "You see I am rather incapacitated."

"Oh, I am so sorry!" she exclaimed, with such a pretty show of real concern that he felt pleased by her sympathy in spite of a vague distrust her presence always inspired in him.

"And I believe that I owe the fact I am not worse off to your good offices."

As he fired this chance shot he watched her expressive face intently; but she only replied, as if in pleased surprise:

"To me! How have I unintentionally been of some real use to you?"

"You telephoned the doctor in the nick of time, which was about 3 a. m.," he answered.

"I, Mr. Rutherford?" She raised her large and really beautiful eyes to his, meeting his gaze with the frankness of a child. "I? Oh, if I only could be of service to you, I should be glad! But you will not see this, you formal American! And this time you give me credit for kindness I do not deserve. Who told you that I telephoned in your behalf?"

"No one," he answered, frankly. "I was informed at first that it was another person"—

"Miss Ballantyne?" she interrupted, quickly. "That might well apply to me, for I am indeed Miss Ballantyne. But the one of whom you speak is the pretended Miss Ballantyne—or, rather, Miss Ballantyne, the pretender."

"Just what do you mean, Miss Arany?" asked Rutherford, coolly. "Of course you are not Miss Ballantyne."

"Of course I am Miss Ballantyne," she retorted, defiantly. "I am Miss Ballantyne, the daughter of the woman with whom Geoffrey Ballantyne was in love. I am the rightful heir to his fortune; and this Miss Ballantyne, alias Talcott, who is trying to rob me, has not the least claim. She is an impostor!"

"Look!" she said, holding out to him a mass of papers. "Surely you will trust your own eyes! These will establish my claim and forever quiet the false pretentions of the girl who poses as Miss Ballantyne—even duplicates my costumes!"

Rutherford was startled and puzzled by the conflicting chain of evidence.

"Have you ever received any written communications from Wilhelmina Ballantyne?" she asked.

"Why do you wish to know?"

"Because if you have you must recognize her handwriting. Here is a note from her to you, which explains itself. It is the cause of my visit."

She produced a large, square envelope which Craig recognized at a glance was precisely like one he had in his desk, from Billie, relating to the Canadian advertisements. And the writing in appearance was the same. He took the letter and opened it with the best show of unconcern that he could muster. Yes, there was the same monogrammed device in embossed characters, and below he read the following communication:

"My Dear Mr. Rutherford: I know you will consider this a strange request, but when I see you—if I ever do again—I will try to explain more fully. The lawyers who investigated my claims say that there is an error—some dreadful mistake somewhere—and that I am not entitled to the Ballantyne estate. So I am writing you to ask you please to turn over the blue buckle in your possession to the lady you have known as Miss Arany. She will show you the papers and you will know that she is the right one. I am terribly sorry to have given you all this trouble, and will be always grateful for your kindness. Believe me, Sincerely,

"WILHELMINA BALLANTYNE."

"So you have come for—the blue buckle, Miss Arany?"

"Yes, as the note indicates," she replied.

"If you will call tomorrow I will"—

"But I can't wait until tomorrow," she said. "You don't know how important it is that I get possession of it today! Now, you won't be horrid and stubborn, will you?"

"Why?" asked Craig, smiling at her sudden coquetry and willing to lead her on.

"A woman's reason—because. I can't tell you all about it today. But if you will help me now—by just not being stubborn—there is nothing I wouldn't do—almost."

"Why the 'almost?'" he parried quizzically.

She laid her warm hand eagerly, almost fiercely, upon his somewhat pale one. Her soft breath fanned his cheek.

Rutherford suddenly awoke to the fact that she was making love to him—and he wondered, manlike, how much the blue buckle had to do with it.

He seized her hand in his own. "Do you mean it?" he whispered.

"Can you not see?" she answered, with meaning glance.

"Then, will you let me see you tomorrow?" he asked softly.

"Not tomorrow, Craig, as I shall have to go away to obtain my property. I shall have to go South—then I will hurry back—to you!"

She must go South! Craig's mind leaped instantly to the contradictory news item of the morning's paper. Helderman was going South.

Craig gently released her hand and reached for the telephone receiver.

"What are you going to do?" she asked, again placing her hand on his wrist.

"Why, telephone downtown," he replied casually. "You see, I don't keep the buckle here in my rooms. Too many people have evinced an interes. in it! I have it stowed away safe in a vault downtown, and I thought I could telephone"—

"Why give yourself that trouble? Just let me have an order on the trust company, or send your key down by your man, with me to accompany him."

"No, Miss Arany, that is impossible. Assuming that you are the rightful owner of the blue buckle, there is another claimant. These rival claims constitute me merely a stakeholder. Until they are decided I can deliver the blue buckle to neither claimant."

"You have been playing with me—when I offered you—my heart!" she stormed.

"No, Miss Arany, it is you that have been playing with me. You do not love me half as much as—the blue buckle!"

"You force me then, Mr. Rutherford, to demand what is mine. I demand the blue buckle."

"I cannot accede to your demand, at any rate today."

"I must tell you that you refuse at your peril!" she exclaimed; and Craig knew that for once she spoke the truth.

"Nevertheless, I am compelled to refuse," he replied, with studied politeness.

She reached quickly for the note he had laid beside him on the table; thrust it swiftly into the bag with the other papers, and with a celerity that was surprising she darted out of the room without a word of farewell.

"Gooley!" he called sharply.

Mike heard the note of excitement in his master's voice, and came into the room on a run.

"Here, get into your coat!" shouted Craig. "Run after that lady! Don't let her escape you! See if she goes to this address!"

He scribbled off the number of the Helderman house on the Drive, while Mike wriggled into his coat and grabbed his hat, delighted with the prospect of a chase. The next moment the Irishman had seized the piece of paper and was going down the stairs three at a time, not waiting for the elevator

CHAPTER XVII.

A Plan of Campaign

Gooley had scarcely departed, leaving his master alone in the apartment, when the telephone bell rang. Rutherford leaned back in his chair and surveyed the instrument just out of reach.

Some one knocked. Miss Ballantyne entered.

"Oh, Mr. Rutherford! The worst has happened! My papers and the second blue buckle are stolen!"

"Yes, I know about it—I have even seen your papers again."

"Seen them again? Where? Oh, tell me, please!"

"Miss Arany showed them to me here this afternoon."

"Miss Arany!" she breathed. "I knew it was she!"

"Your expression convinces me," he said, "of a fact that I had already settled pretty well in my own mind."

"And what is that?" she asked, in a constrained voice.

"That you did not write me a letter today."

"Why, no! If I had written you a letter, why call? You still have the buckle?"

"Yes—it is locked up in a bank downtown; but if you wish me to relinquish it, why"—

She interrupted, to tell him of Helderman's call. As she was speaking, her father came in.

"Mr. Rutherford, will you accept my profound thanks for all you have done for us?" he said; "and believe how sincerely distressed I am over your mishap?"

Rutherford received his proffered courtesy in the spirit in which it was intended—a desire to forget past misunderstandings.

"Anyway, Miss Ballantyne," said Craig presently, "they cannot claim the property, as I still have the first buckle. Now, if we only knew the rest of that inscription"—

"Oh!" she exclaimed, and her face brightened. "I have even the inscription from the second buckle."

She drew out the precious bit of paper Leclerc had handed her and brought it over to Craig. He spread it out upon the table with excited fingers and the three bent their heads together over it and scanned it intently. Craig rapidly wrote down the strange words of the first buckle, that he knew by heart, and laid that portion down by the second and still more baffling inscription:

OXB IVI ESAF IPSE—DOT ULAPSINNE KBAN IMMIA

"That ipse was the sticker on the first buckle. It's not a Latin word at all; it's plain English. It's part of a word, and dot is the rest; dot-ipse—ipse-doc — dipse — DEPOSIT! That's our word!"

"Oh, it is! It is! How perfectly splendid!" exclaimed the girl, her eyes shining.

"Now we have—BOX 7 SAFE DEPOSIT."

While they were talking, Mr. Ballantyne had been quietly studying the remainder of the inscription.

"Here's one word that won't give you any difficulty," he said, pointing out the Oriental-looking kban.

"Oh, I see—bank!" exclaimed the girl.

"So it is," agreed Craid. "Now we have Box 7, in some bank somewhere. But where could it be? Ulapsinne—Ulapsinne."—

"I have been puzzling over that," said Ballantyne, "and believe it is 'peninsula.'"

It was. They added it to the other words and had—

BOX 7 SAFE DEPOSIT PENINSULA BANK

"Helderman's going to Florida. Florida is a peninsula!" cried Craig.

Billie did not make a sound; she looked from one man to the other, waiting for them to add the final word—too much excited, herself, even to try.

Mr. Ballantyne quietly drew over the paper to him and added the final word—MIAMI from "Immia."

"There it is, my child!" he said with pathetic dignity. "Your gold and diamonds—perhaps your old daddy's good name—are locked up in Safe Deposit Box 7 in the Peninsula Bank, Miami, Fla!"

"And Helderman is on his way to Florida now—and it's all my fault!" she whispered.

There came a little tap at the door.

Mike came briskly into the room but halted when he caught sight of the visitors.

"Gooley was sent by me to find out where Miss Arany went after she left here," explained Craig to his smiling visitors. "What did you discover, Mike?"

"I followed her, sor, she in one cab and I in the next—and she went straight as an arrow to the very place. It's on the corner of Riverside Drive and —th street, sor."

"Yes, the big white marble house."

"No, sor, that just across the street, the side street. The place where this lady went was to the swell apartment that faces the south side of the marble mansion."

"You lost her there!"

"Yes, sor. It's one of them bran spang new kinds of places, sor. Each apartment has its own elevator, and the tenants operates them themselves. I seen her take out her key to unlock the front door and I gets up near without her seeing me. When she steps in I reach out and catch hold of the door; it's the kind that's expected to swing shut and lock itself. I holds it, quiet like, and after I thought she might have gone on up I sticks my head in the elevator to see how she goes—and it wasn't no elevator at all!"

"Explain yourself, Mike," said Craig.

"Why, it's just as I'm telling you, sor. It wasn't nothing but a little room the size of an elevator. Just a closet, you might say. She wasn't there—and there was nothing but white walls and never a chip to hide under."

"There must have been some sliding panel"—

"Not a bit of it, sor. I stepped in and felt every inch of wall and floor with my two hands, I did. She went into the closet—and evaporated, sor!"

"All right, Mike. I may want you again presently. Are those some evening papers?"

"Yes, sor, all the latest extras." And Mike deposited a large bundle of them upon the table and left the room. Craig picked up one at random and feverishly turned its pages. On the fourth he read the headlines:

"HELDERMAN POSTPONES HIS TRIP."

"It is a ruse," declared Craig.

"You think he is going at once then?" asked Ballantyne.

"Undoubtedly. He is simply shamming."

"What is our best move?"

"In due time we'll go South. That is our best move. But our first move is something else. It is a move for you to make, Miss Ballantyne."

"What move is that?" she asked, expectantly.

"Dismiss your servant Sophie."

"Dismiss Sophie?"

"Precisely."

"But why? She is all I have."

"She is a bit too much for you, Miss Ballantyne," said Craig. "Somebody at some time gave away your secret of your Paris dressmaker and your Paris gowns. Somebody knows too much about your movements. That somebody is Sophie. Out she goes. We can't take any chances now. As for your comfort, Miss Ballantyne, I'm going to send you an old maid cousin of mine—a good old soul—who will be a second mother to you, and we'll get a colored maid of all work, black as the ace of spades, who never saw Helderman and never saw Mlle. Arany—but no more French maids, if you please."

CHAPTER XVIII.

The Inaccessible Box Seven

The President of the Peninsula bank in Miami was receiving two distinguished looking visitors in his private office. They were a tall man of ungainly walk but impressive demeanor and a young lady of singularly pleasing face and figure. The banker was all courtesy and attention as soon as he had read his visitors' cards and placed chairs and a table at their disposal. The tall man, without wasting words, seated himself and opened a black bag from which he began to draw documents with businesslike precision. A blue buckle, a photograph and the sketch of another blue buckle were exposed to view, side by side with a pile of papers, which lay conveniently within reach of his long, powerful white hands.

"We are here, sir," he said to the president, with the quiet, positive authority of a big financier who addressed a little one, already impressed with his importance, "in the matter of Box Seven in your safe deposit vaults."

The president smiled reminiscently. "I understand," he said. "You refer to the Ballantyne estate—the freak will of an odd character."

"Allow me," said the other man, "to present credentials."

The president examined them—carefully, with the leisure of an old-fashioned man. The credentials consisted of letters of introduction, identification photographs and signatures, and many other testimonials, proving beyond peradventure that Helderman, the Napoleon of the Street, was present in the flesh.

"The buyer of banks," mused the president, with a complimentary smile.

"Right," said Helderman, as though seeking other worlds to conquer. "I have just turned my attention to it * * * to the buying of New York banks. It is difficult to get them cheap. They know now that I am in the market and—pouf—the price soars up sky high!"

The president nodded. "When I read about you in the New York press," he said, "it was my opinion, Mr. Helderman—if you don't mind the advice of an old man—that you were making a mistake. Why not buy country banks—you can get them cheap enough"—

Helderman cast a secret but exultant glance toward the young woman at his side, and then leaned over carelessly.

"Some time," he drawled, "we shall discuss it, you and I, Mr. President. For the present"—

The President again fumbled with his papers. "Your credentials are entirely satisfactory to me," he said. "There is no doubt that you are Mr. Helderman."

"You may not understand why I am so particular in this case," said his visitor, "but it is said—it is whispered in the Street—though I know nothing actually of it—that there are two Heldermans."

"Brothers?"

"No—I have no brother. But another man who makes up to resemble me—who mimics me."

"You surprise me," said the President, again scrutinizing the papers—an unconscious act, which caused Helderman to smile.

"Now," said Helderman, "let's get back to the Ballantyne estate. This is Miss Ballantyne—the Miss Ballantyne. At the outset I may say that it is true that her identity in New York is disguised under the name of Miss Arany. But she is Miss Ballantyne, and I am here to vouch for it. She is my ward."

"She has come here," said the President, "to obtain access to Box Seven."

"Exactly. Here are her credentials — birth — relationship — identity — everything."

The President examined them. He consulted a memorandum. "Now," he exclaimed, "to comply with this crazy man's desires—I beg pardon of the dead—have you the two blue buckles? They complete the chain of evidence."

"There," said Helderman, candidly, "is where you've got us, Mr. President. We have one buckle. We have the inscription on the other buckle—but the other buckle is missing—not by accident, but by design"—

"Your design?" queried the President.

"I am afraid," returned Helderman, "it is by design of my old friend, the duplicate Helderman. But Miss Ballantyne is the claimant—the rightful claimant—and we make the claim."

The President, worried, shrugged his shoulders. "I'm sorry, Mr. Helderman," he returned. "But I can turn over the contents of Box 7 to you only on presentation of both buckles. These were the terms of the trust."

"Of course," mused Helderman, "we could establish our claim."

"Through the courts, exactly," said the President, "and I advise that course. The box belongs to the rightful claimant. If through fraud she is prevented from enjoying her property we believe the courts would relieve her."

"Now," said Helderman, "we'll bring suit—at once—here in your courts. Con you recommend a lawyer?"

The President smiled. "Since you're going to sue the bank, I can hardly send you to the bank's lawyer, but there are other good ones here in town."

He jotted down the names of two and handed them to Helderman.

Helderman saw both the lawyers casually and picked the latter of the two. To this lawyer he said nothing about the blue buckle or the Ballantyne estate.

"How much do you think," he queried confidentially, "I can get the Peninsula Bank for?"—

The lawyer stared at him. "You—want — to — buy — the — bank?" he gasped.

"I do," said Helderman.

"You can buy it, figuratively, for a song—a dollar down and a dollar a week—that kind of thing, you know."

"You're my man," said Helderman. "Come with me."

The two went to the bank. They were closeted for hours with the President and cashier. For hours Helderman—posing as a very astute financier—examined ledger after ledger, fingered securities, added up columns, scrutinized certificates of stock. At last he sank back, satisfied.

"If we can agree on terms, I'm with you," he said.

They agreed on terms. Helderman saw to that. He left the bank half an hour later, walking on air.

For Helderman had bought the bank

On that same afternoon—almost at that very hour—Crowder, of the secret service, burst into Craig's apartment.

"My man in Florida says Helderman is there," he smiled. He shook his head. "I'll begin to love Helderman after a while. * * * He was here in New York last night—now he's in Florida. Impossible, eh? Oh, no—not to Helderman. He travels fast. He's down in Florida and he's up here in New York. Now you see him, now you don't."

"I believe," said Craig slowly, "that he is in Florida."

Crowder nodded. "I don't know where Helderman is at the present moment," he went on, "I haven't seen him all day. But I'll tell you what I'll do. I'll wager you a new hat"—

"One like this," said Craig, picking up a fifteen dollar specimen of his own buying.

"One like that," said Crowder, with assurance. "I'll wager you a hat like that, that we see Helderman in New York tonight."

"I'll go you," returned Craig.

A few hours later he solemnly delivered to Crowder a written order for a fifteen dollar hat. There was a reason. For he and the secret service man had visited the Drive, and through the big window of the big house they had seen the man they looked for, busy in his big white room.

"It's Helderman," admitted Craig. "He's in New York for sure and not in Florida."

(Continued Next Week)

Radium's Great Power.

At a recent meeting of the Practitioners' Society Dr. Robert Abbe showed, in order to illustrate the penetrative power of radium, a photographic plate upon which a revolver had been photographed by a single grain of radium. The cartridge with which the revolver was loaded and the internal mechanism of the revolver were clearly seen in the photograph, demonstrating that the rays had penetrated the steel.

Care of the Eyes.

One of the melancholy effects of working by artificial light is that it fades the eyes. Instances have been known, it is said, of deep blue eyes becoming light gray from prolonged work at night with no protection from the glare of the gas. Fortunately it is not impossible to restore by proper care and medical treatment some at least of the brightness of the eyes when it has been lost.

Diagnosis of Headache.

"There are more than fifty kinds of headache," said a physician, "and sufferers from the more common forms may cure themselves accordingly. The more frequent forms are a dull pain across the forehead, due to dyspepsia; a pain in the back of the head, due to the liver; a bursting pain in both temples, due to malnutrition; an ache on the top of the head, as though a weight pressed on the skull, due to overwork; an ache between the brows, just above the base of the nose, due to eye strain."

Gossips might be appropriately termed misfortune tellers.

The Publishers Co-Operative Co.
501 S. Dearborn St., Chicago
20-16

MAY

L 908

0156

AMERICAN CAVALRY HAS ROUGH GOING IN MEXICO

The punitive army in Mexico must travel through a wild, mountainous country in its chase after Villa. Here is seen United States cavalry crossing a stream.

NO MONEY IN CIRCULATION.

Inhabitants of Tristan da Cunha Have No Jails or Schools as Well.

Folk who hold that money is the root of all evil may find support for that belief in the Isle of Tristan da Cunha. For, though seventy-seven white folk inhabit this flyspeck of an island in the South Atlantic, there is no money in circulation among them, and, significantly enough, there also is no wrongdoing of any description. Wrote a recent visitor to the island: "Money would be useless, for there is nothing to buy." And he continued: "Living in honesty, sobriety, and harmony, free apparently from all crime, vice, dissension, or double dealing, the inhabitants of Tristan da Cunha seem unconsciously to have carried out the purpose entertained by the original settler in 1811, Jonathan Lambert, by keeping themselves 'beyond the reach of chicanery and ordinary misfortune.' They have no written laws. All being law-abiding, they need none, each doing what seemeth right in his own eyes. They have no jail. Crime among them being unknown, such an institution would be a superfluity. They have no form of government and pay no taxes. They enjoy perfect independence and freedom which never degenerates into license. The community is absolutely moral."—Los Angeles Times.

Americans Should Spank

The crown prince to the throne of Belgrade, a lad of seventeen, fell in love with an actress. The king sent for his son, laid him across his knee, and spanked him, curing him of his folly. If royalty can spank, why should it not become a fashion? The son of an American citizen who disgraces his parents should be spanked, and while the American citizen has his knee in position, let a few pats be given to the daughter who loves the wrong man; who goes to the depot to flirt with strangers, and who loafs the streets instead of helping mother at home.—Atchison Globe.

Spats Worn by Highland Soldiers.

Where did spats come from? Highland soldiers wore them first.

Because of the bravery of Highlanders at Lucknow and elsewhere in India during the Indian mutiny the people of England looked about for some way to show their admiration. Scrutiny of the Highland dress disclosed that spats were the most suitable for adoption, so they were adopted and have been commonly worn ever since.—Edinburgh Scotchman.

Early History of Coffee.

The use of coffee beans was first known to the Abyssinians, but the employment of coffee as a beverage was first recorded in the fifteenth century.

Two varities of "gahoua" were known. One was a preparation from the shells of the seeds, which was known as "qicharyat," and one from the seeds proper, which was known as "bounyat."—Bullentine of Pharmeceutical Science.

Shoes for a Giant.

A Calumet, Mich., shoemaker has just finished a pair of shoes for Louis Mollenen, known as "the Quincy Hill Giant." Mollenen is nineteen years old, stands seven feet eight inches in height, and tips the scales at 300 pounds. The shoes are sixteen and one-quarter inches in length, six inches in width and weigh five pounds each. Mollenen will use them while at work in the Quincy mines where he is employed.

Did Not Understand "Mongrels."

Sir Henry Howarth, the well-known archaeologist and historian, was dining out and found himself sitting next to a young lady, who immediately attacked him by saying: "Oh, Sir Henry, I am so glad to have met you, for I want your advice about a dog of mine." "My dear young lady," quoth Sir Henry, "I know nothing about dogs." "Oh, yes, you do I have been told that you have written a book on 'Mongrels' and mine isn't a really well-bred dog." Sir Henry smiled, for he is a great Asiatic authority and had written on "Mongols," not mongrels.

Rent 1 Cent a Month.

Anthony Suda of St. Louis lives in a house, for which he pays a rental of one cent a month. This rental is charged by his employers, and Suda's task is that of acting as watchman at the factory, almost adjoining his home. His employers state that they charge Suda one cent a month rent for the house in order that he would be entitled to 30 days' notice before eviction in the event of the property passing into other hands.

As Green as He Looked.

During the last session of the Circuit court in a small town in southern Wisconsin a well-known Badger lawyer came to grief by being just a little too sharp. According to his habit, he was browbeating one of the witnesses. "Now, Mr. Jones," said he, "you can answer that question a little more clearly. You are not as green as you look." "Yes," drawled the witness, in reply, "I am a butcher by profession and not a lawyer."

Meaning of Dog Watch.

Dog watch is a corruption of dodge-watch, and is the name given to two short watches of two hours each on shipboard—one from 4 to 6 p. m. and the other from 6 to 8 p. m. The dog-watches were introduced to prevent the same men from always keeping watch at the same hours of the day; hence on these occasions the sailors are said to dodge the routine, or to be doing dodge-watch.

Her Dearest Wish.

Says the woman: "Oh, that mine enemy would let me trim a hat for her."

Paddy Bird.

One of the best known of feathered creatures in India is the paddy bird. A traveller says of him: "The paddy bird is not afflicted with shyness. He is far too lazy to be disturbed by the approach of human beings. So confiding is he that the natives of India call him the blind heron. I once saw one of these birds standing motionless at the water's edge within ten feet of a grunting, perspiring washerwoman, who was dashing some clothes to pieces against a stone in a dirty duckpond. That is the way washing is done in India. Neither individual took the least notice of the other."

PIECEWORK IN GERMANY.

Shocking Poverty Revealed in Displays at a Recent Exhibit.

Consul Hurst, of Plauen, places in the same category with the incredibly small compensation received for making lace by hand the exhibits at a house industry exposition recently opened in Berlin. Of it he writes that everything one naturally connects with a great fair is strikingly absent. The products of tenement and sweat shop, small piecework evolved by the needy, are laid bare to the public. Each exhibit is ticketed, setting forth the pay for piece, time employed in making and the profit per hour. If the object itself does not particularly attract the attention of the visitor, the description tag certainly appeals to him. A few examples may be given: A boy's suit of clothes, three pieces, made for about 17 cents; artistic wooden crucifixes, carved at less than 2 cents an hour; 144 toy menagerie animals for 11 cents ;putting up 1,000 needles for less than one cent for the lot; mounting hooks, and eyes on 360 cards, with 24 pairs of each, altogether 17,280 pieces, for 28 cents, and an extreme case is that of a bit of lace from Plauen worked at the rate of about one-quarter of a cent an hour. Progress and poverty are nowhere more abruptly contrasted than in this pitiful display. Expressions of amazement and sympathy, manifested by the highest classes of society, are echoed throughout the German press.—Washington Star.

Honesty in Apples.

The Canadian government is trying to prevent shortsighted Canadian exporters from making the mistake of misrepresenting the fruit they send to English markets. It is reported that some wholesale dealers in apples have falsely marked inferior shipments of fruit to England, and that the practice of "facing up" barrels and cases of apples with fine fruit, putting inferior apples in the center of the barrels and then branding them as first quality, has been frequent. To check this the Canadian authorities have imposed heavy fines in each case in which conviction was procured. The American exporters have lost markets by the same shortsighted methods, and it will be well if they profit by these energetic methods taken by the Canadian authorities. A market once lost by misrepresentation is more difficult to regain than to establish a new market.

CLUCKS LIKE A TURKEY; IS ATTACKED BY BADGER

Hunter and "Varmint" Then Flee in Opposite Directions—Gypsy Joe Tells the Story.

Gainesville, Mo.—Mistaken for a wild turkey and attacked by a badger Joe Williams a gypsy camper, was badly torn and bruised a few days ago across the line in Arkansas near here. Williams was attempting to call up a wild turkey and kill it to replenish his larder, when the accident occurred. With his family the man was enroute to Yellville, Ark. Several deep cuts were inflicted in his neck and back by the claws of the badger.

The Williams family in a covered wagon, arrived at a deep ford on Possum Walk creek a few nights ago. They thought best to wait until morning before continuing, so they camped at the water's edge. Just before sundown Williams saw a large flock of wild turkeys light on a "bald" nearby, so he decided to go turkey hunting early the next morning.

"After seein' them turkeys I decided I'd hav' one," he said. "I made me a caller out of a piece o' huneysuckle. Early in the mornin' I slipped up on the top of the bald where they went to roost and sot down with my back against a big blackjack. Then I started callin' them.

"I hadn't got out mor'n a cackle or two when a bird answered me. I shoved out my shotgun a'tween my knees, ready to shoot him in the head. I called agin. Then sumthin' hits me in the back and I feels sumthin' enter my neck and back kinda knife like. What it was bowls me over. I looks and there's a big badger, scared as me, runnin' away. Me and him sure was looking for the same game this mornin' for fair. I was so scared and he was so scared that I didn't get a shot at him."

"Did you get a turkey," the correspondent asked.

"Turkey? Nix! I picks up my gun and beats it for that wagon, just as fast as I can. The ol' woman fixes me up with some chewed tobacco and I'm restin' up as you see. With that hurtin' and painin' in my shoulder, I never wants to go turkey huntin' agin."

FIDDLER FOR 4,659 PARTIES

The 53 years Record of a Wisconsin Dance Musician.

Amherst, Wis.—John Een at Amherst has filed a claim to a world's record for providing music for dances for he has computed his record of the past 53 years as being 4,659 dances a record he defies any musician in America to equal.

His career dates back to January 16, 1862, when he came with his violin to Amherst, then a village in the heart of the pine woods. In those days he was the only musician who could be obtained for miles around, and he was in constant demand.

His banner year was 1880, when his record was 450 dances, or an average of more than one a day for the entire year. Since then the country has settled, and he has had more competition.

In the old days he would not only play, but would call off the square dances, and many is the time when he would make up a missing set on the floor by taking his fiddle to the dancing floor, and dance, call and play at the same time. He still is playing for the country dances, and says, he will continue to play as long as he can finger the strings.

"Alpine" Plants in America.

The Alpine plant worth growing in America are chiefly hardy perennial herbs that make tufts or rosettes or carpet the ground with a continuous sheet of flowers, says the Garden Magazine. Examples are the famous gentians, pinks and primroses of Switzerland. These plants are not confined to the European Alps, but come from all high mountains and, therefore, in horticultural literature, the word "alpine" has become so generalized that it is no longer capitalized.

Unfortunately some of the choicest alpines can be grown only in a special rockery, where they can have cool air, plenty of light, but without shade, with constant moisture but perfect drainage. Yet there are plenty that can be grown in the ordinary border which are able to withstand the alternate freezing and thawing of American winters.

MUSEUM GETS RARE TROPHY

PRESENTED WITH THE SMOKE DRIED HEAD OF A BRAZILIAN INDIAN

PRESERVED BY PARENTINTINS

Unlike Shrunken Examples From Upper Amazon, This One is Natural Size

Washington, D. C.—Dr. C. Hart Merriam of Washington has just presented the United States National Museum with the smoke-dried head of a Brazilian Indian, obtained on the headwaters of the Tapajos River in 1777 or 1878.

This object is one of the few specimens in this country of these rare human trophies collected and prepared by the Parentintin tribe of the Tapajos River in Para, Brazil.

It is the head of another tribesman, killed and preserved by the Parentintins; the dried skin is yellow and stretched tightly over the skull; the black hair hangs loose in bobbed style: the eyes are covered by wax cones ornamented by two small rodents' teeth to imitate the pupils of the eyes, and the ears still are decorated with the cord insertions and turfs of red and yellow parrot feathers worn by the Indian in life, it was suspended by a cord which still emerges from the mouth, but now it is arranged on a stand.

Unlike the better known Jibaros of the Upper Amazon, who preserve the heads of their enemies by removing the skull bones, and shrinking and drying the skin until the head is much reduced in size, the Parentintins leave the head its normal form. They first remove the brain, then smoke the head by use of an aromatic wood until it is thoroughly dried, and hang it up to decorate their houses.

Dr. Merriam says that about 40 years ago while he was in New York City, Ernest T. Morris, a young South American explorer came to him with this head and several others which he desired to dispose of as soon as possible, being in need of funds. In relating his experiences, Morris stated that while he was traveling near the headwaters of the Tapajos River he was captured by the Indians and kept prisoner several years.

In attempting to make their captive into an Indian like themselves, they tattooed his cheeks and lower jaw with native pigments, which he found he could not remove. For a long time he was in fear for his life, as they threatened to kill him for his head, so to speak, which they would have hung from the lodge poles as a trophy. But for some reason he was spared, although he mentioned one instance when an Indian with whom he was talking was shot by an arrow and killed—his head going into the collection.

After two or three years of imprisonment his captors became a little lax in their watch, and one night in 1877-78, Morris managed to escape in a small boat. He took eight of the trophy heads with him, knowing that they would be valuable objects to museums of this country. By traveling only in the night and hiding in the day, he succeeded in descending the Tapajos River and reaching the Amazon, and finally the city of Para, where he secured passage to New York.

Arriving there he found himself stranded financially, with nothing but his ghastly heads as assets, and at the same time much embarrassed by the very noticeable tattooing with which his Indian captors had decorated his face. Unfortunately he could not raise a beard, and he would not appear in public as he was. Finding that Dr. Merriam was in the city, and knowing him to be a scientist, he decided to approach him in an endeavor to raise some money on the heads.

Dr. Merriam says they found no difficulty in doing so; the American Museum of Natural History taking two and himself one—he does not remember where the others went, but recalls that all of them were sold at $75 each, netting the explorer about $600.

With the receipt of the money Morris' spirits rose again, but having no place where he could seek seclusion from the public eye, he embarked on another trip to South America and as far as Dr. Merriam knows has never been heard from since.

PICKPOCKET FOILED BY PINS

Thief Gets Surprise When He Dips for Man's Roll

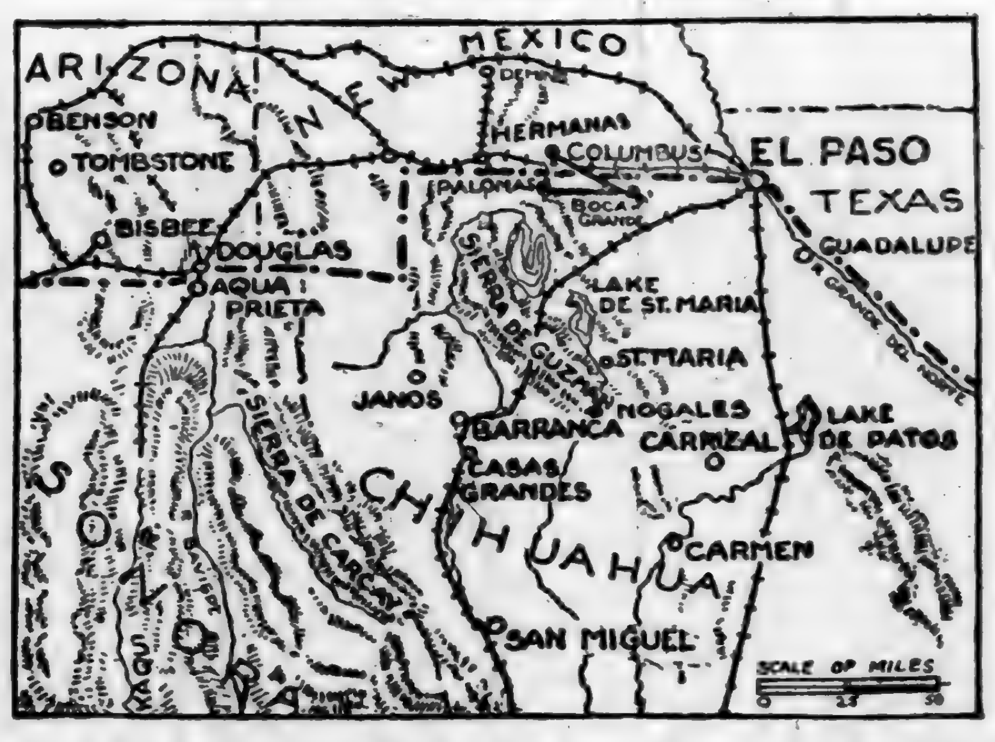
Cleveland, Ohio—"Put some pins in your 'roll' as a precaution against pickpockets," said Sidney Reed, well known Clevelander.

Reed was on an East Fifty-fifth st. car when a man tried to pick his pocket. The "dip's" fingers were pricked by pins Reed had stuck through some bills. The man jumped, attracting Reed's attention but fled from the car.

Traffic Patrolman Coan and Detectives Mooney and Page arrested a suspect. In Municipal Court the prisoner pleaded not guilty. His case was continued.

To an engaged couple wedded life appears to be all sunshine—but to a husband and wife it looks suspiciously like moonshine at times.

SCENE OF VILLA'S FLIGHT



Map of district on which Villa has his strongest hold and where United States troops are hoping to catch the bandit "dead or alive."

DUMB WAITER AT 19 OWNS FOUR RESTAURANTS

Speechless Lad on Capital of Pluck and Work Makes Good in Few Years.

Kalkaska, Mich.—Some joker has said that "the best thing a waiter does is wait," and the phrase has been kicked around from table to counter and counter to table, conveniently standing for whatever interpretation one's humor has given it.

There is a waiter in Michigan who is too busy to care what the phrase means. He has waited efficiently and therefore his wait for success in life has been shortened. Being dumb, he hasn't much to say about it, but here is his story.

Walter Stanley Grohe has resided in Kalkaska since his birth, 19 years ago. He began his life with a handicap. He was born dumb. That doesn't seem to bother him, tho, for he smiles it seems, always.

Six years ago Stanley's parents died within three weeks of each other and left their son, 13 years old, a legacy of thrift and tenacity. During the two years following Stanley continued his school work earning his board and room by waiting on people at meal time in a restaurant.

Then when he was fifteen years old he stopped going to school and devoted his time and energy to the feeding of the hungry public.

After two years he was able to purchase the restaurant in which he worked. Now he owns four restaurants and hopes to become proprietor of a still longer chain of "eat shops."

U. S. REDEEMS BURNED $1 BILL

So Now Little Hazel Long of Denver is in Cheerful Mood.

Denver, Colo.—Five year old Hazel Long had saved her nickels until she had enough of them for a crisp $1 bill, which she concealed among some old newspapers. Her grandmother, with whom Hazel lives, picked up these papers one day three weeks ago and used them to kindle a fire in the kitchen stove. The girl saw it.

She burned her fingers in her effort to save the bill. The grandmother told the story to Rowland K. Goddard, government secret service agent.

He has just received a brand new bill from Washington with a letter saying that the redemption division of the treasury would make a special ruling in the case of this little girl.

LIGHTNING STRUCK RING

But Missed Wearer and He's Wondering.

Winchester, Va.—Hope Beam's finger ring is in the jeweler's shop because the ruby setting was loosened by lightning. Also he is alive and well after one of the most exciting experiences of his life, having faced death in an instant's time when a bolt of lightning struck in the concrete midway between the Leaderick and Empire buildings.

Beam was shocked severely, the electricity following the wiring into the office where he was working. Several women in the office of a physician next where the lightning struck were also shocked.

PHOTOGRAPHS GHOST AS WIFE HOLDS IT

He Takes Picture as She Compels Figure Apparition of Man to Remain

London, England—The claim to having photographed a ghost is made by Rev. Chas. Tweedale, vicar of Weston Yorkshire, in an affidavit made the other day before the commissioner of oaths which is supported by Mrs. Tweedale and their son.

Mr. Tweedale, who a few years ago attracted attention by reports of psychical phenomena at the Weston vicarage, said that his wife, their son and himself were at luncheon, when suddenly his wife cried out that she saw the apparition of a man with a full head of hair and beard standing at the other side of the table, to the left of their son.

Mrs. Tweedale directed attention to the figure, but neither the father nor his son could distinguish it. Telling his wife to keep it there, altho on reflection he admits he does not know how Mrs. Tweedale could compel the figure to remain, he got his camera which was loaded with quarter plate slides.

The vicar then placed the camera on a window sill and focused it up the room, the distance between the camera and the position where his wife said she still saw the figure being about three and one half yards. The light not being favorable for an interior picture, he gave an exposure of twenty-five seconds. Mrs. Tweedale described the figure as that of a little man and said the top of his head appeared to be about on a level with her son's shoulder.

Mrs. Tweedale and the boy sat at the table while the plate was being exposed. The resultant negative appears to have corroborated Mrs. Tweedale's vision. Mr. Tweedale explained that he personally developed the plate shortly afterward and it had not left his possession in the meantime.

The negative is a quarter plate size and it reproduces the corner of the room. In the foreground is the dining table, the white cloth of which reflects the light into the corner. Siting at the table is Mr. Tweedale's son, and opposite him there is a shadowy but distinct impression of the head and shoulders of a little old man, with abundant hair and flowing beard.

The figure, which appears to be in a semi-incumbent position, almost hides that part of the furniture and a piano which lies behind it, and this, in Mr. Tweedale's opinion, conclusively proves that the apparition had definite objectivity, altho invisible to the normal vision of himself and his son.

In response to the suggestion that the camera may have played a trick upon him, the vicar said he had carefully examined conditions as they were at the time. The camera is in perfect order. No person of similar appearance ever had been photographed by him and none of the family recognized the figure disclosed on the negative.

Send in your
Subscriptiontoday

THE Country Home Weekly Newspaper is eagerly sought, and in passing from hand to hand of the entire family, is reasonably sure to give returns to the advertiser.

This paper fills the bill—
The bills fill the till:
Get that?

MAY

L 908

0157

What

J. N. George

of St. Joe

has to say about cream separators this week.

REMEMBER that a cream separator has to be used 730 times every year. If it runs hard, or isn't easy to wash, or doesn't skim clean, it is a constant annoyance and bother.

No machine or implement on the farm receives such constant use and there is no other machine on the farm where quality of work means so much and first cost means so little.

A little loss of cream with a cream separator, multiplied 730 times, soon runs into money. It's too big a handicap for any cow owner to try to work under.

Creamerymen all over the world long ago came to the conclusion that the De Laval was the only machine they could afford to use. That's why 98 per cent of the cream separators used in creameries the world over are De Lavals.

You will find the biggest and best dairymen almost invariably using De Lavals.

Experience has taught them that it is the most economical.

You can't afford to take any chances with your cream separator, and we know that if you will come to us and let us put in a De Laval for you, 730 times a year you will say to yourself "I made a good move when I bought that De Laval."

Sooner or later you will buy a DE LAVAL

For

EXPERT

Auto Repairing
and Painting
GO TO

CAMPBELL & SON

AUBURN, IND.

Satisfaction guaranteed.

Our Painter and Mechanic are high class workman.

Special attention will be given to your Electrical equipment and Magneto work

We also charge storage batteries.

Get Our Prices.

Sound

Pure Bred Percheron Stallion

Right Sort

Enrollment No. 2873

Years past, this horse has been standing at Auburn; but we are now located at St. Joe in the barn just north of the B. & O. tracks near the mill. Will stand for the season at home, 2 miles north of St. Joe on Monday and Tuesday of each week; and on Wednesday, Thursday, Friday and Saturday of each week in the barn at St. Joe

TERMS:

$15 to Insure Living Colt

E. W. BEABER
Owner

Let Us Print Your Sale Bills

Health First Clean-up Creed.

Many "Clean-up" campaigns are scheduled in Indiana for the month of May. A good Creed for the workers is as follows:—

I BELIEVE in the doctrine of "Health First," in the doctrine that health is fundamental to the attainment of the highest personal and social freedom. Hence I believe in health laws and in all agencies that work for the promotion of public health. I believe that every individual should look upon the conservation of his own health and of his neighbor's health as a sacred moral duty; that every community should look upon the preservation of public health as one of the main functions of its corporate lije.

I BELIEVE in a clean city, a clean community. I believe in clean streets, clean alleys and clean premises. I believe in clean stores, clean markets and clean offices.

I BELIEVE in pure air, day and night. I believe in deep breathing in the open air. I believe in sleeping seven or eight hours every night with windows wide open, winter and summer.

I BELIEVE in clean food, clean milk, clean water. I believe in eating slowly and moderately. I believe that milk and water are the only beverages that are useful in the preservation of health.

I BELIEVE in bathing frequently and in always washing my hands before meals. I believe in clean clothing, clean bodies, clean surroundings, cleanly personal habits.

I BELIEVE in daily bodily exercise and in daily mental recreation.

I BELIEVE in the home as the place where the principles of "Health First" can most effectively be taught. I believe in a clean home, in cleanly fathers and mothers, in cleanly children. I believe in clean thoughts, in wholesome home enjoyments, and in everything that tends to make the home a unifying force for health and happiness.

I BELIEVE in the doctrine of "Health First" because I believe it will tend to promote the uplift and betterment of the race.

A Deporable Condition.

There is no agency that has been so responsible for broken-down constitutions and prolonged illnesses as has been the grip. This disease impairs the functions of the glands of the body. The liver and kidneys cannot remove the impurities, poisonous matter accumulates and the entire system is out of order. If the glands are not restored to their normal condition, the body will be an easy prey for serious maladies. A disordered liver sometimes causes a cough which can easily be mistaken for lung trouble. An inactive liver is often responsible for stomach and bowel trouble GLANDO was prepared to act especially upon the glands of the body: it removes accumulated poisons, and renews glandular activity. If you have no strength or exhaust easily, give GLANDO a test and see what it will do for you. Don't drag around and feel so miserable. You can get a week's treatment of GLANDO for 50 cents. For sale by All Druggists.

HEARD AROUND THE CORNER

Harry Milliman and wife, of Edon, Ohio, were Saturday guests of John Simanton and wife.

SCHLOSS' of Auburn are showing a big line of Rugs, Curtains and Materials by the yards at reasonable prices.

Earl Frisbie, optician of Butler, who makes his regular monthly trips here, states that due to the increase in his business he has purchased a grinding outfit and can give his trade better service, by doing his own grinding.

See CURIE for your Check Row Corn Planter—Make the work easier and then you can do more.

Mrs. Henry Milliman is improving slowly although she is entirely helpless. She has been confined to her bed for the past 6 months.

MEMORIAL DAYS OF PAST YEARS

"SACRILEGE, we would have called it in my girlhood, to have failed to give very able assistance in celebrating Memorial day,' said a woman of middle age. "There was, first of all, the delight of gathering the flowers. How eagerly we watched the bushes, hoping that the loveliest blooms would open in time, or delay their coming till the great day. Peonies we could count on. Snowballs helped, despite their droopiness, and spirea was always to be had. We gasped in admiration over Miss Amy's contributions of exquisite garlands of the pliable bridal wreath, with touches of scarlet columbine, or the faint pink of wild honeysuckle clustered here and there, but we could never evolve anything half so lovely. They were at once our joy and our despair."

Boys were useful when it came to wild-flower gathering, even if picking garden posies was not their forte. They knew where early laurel and wild azalea were to be found and they could be trusted to bring home columbine, wild geranium and buttercups. For there never was a Memorial day with too many flowers. There was the town hall to decorate, where the veterans assembled for a brief session before the march to the cemetery. The G. A. R. ladies saw to that, and beautiful it was to childish eyes when, brave with bunting and odorous with flowers, you saw it the night before, under the shelter of mother's unfolding gingham apron.

There is only one proper sort of bouquet for village Memorial day, and sorry would one woman be should she ever see it superseded by anything modern. An up-to-date florist would be horrified at its make-up and bewail its lack of grace; an artist might take it as a horrible example of crudity of color scheme. But to many, the stiff, tightly-tied bunch of posies, conical, or bullet-shaped, or flattened into a parti-colored disk, means mingled pathos and pleasure. To the making of these nosegays went all the patience and the primitive taste of the grown daughters of the household. There must be a rosebud for the center, grown in the house—for garden roses were still sleeping, and florists were a needless luxury in the town of girlhood days—and brought to punctual perfection by much watering and sunning. Then in exact order of precedence, circle upon circle, came spice pinks, white or pale mauve, mock orange, candytuft, pansies, purple and yellow, with an encircling fringe of lilies of the valley. And around all, emphasizing the color scheme, was the green and rose geranium leaves or the striped slenderness of ribbon grass.

It was redolent of spicy sweetness and of loving care, even if it were not artistic, this Decoration day bouquet, and no debutante ever bore her orchids more proudly than did youthful volunteer soldier boy or tottering veteran the posy of daughter or sweetheart.

There was one corner just by the First church where every extra bunch of flowers found its way. There, in charge of the minister's wife, they were ranged in bowls, in case any soldier be forgotten. Should there be any such, away raced Tom or Johnny, Will or Frank, or tomboy Nell, if the boys had all followed the drum corps, to supply the lack, glad to be of use on this day of days, and pleased with the grateful "Thank you" of the recipient. "One Memorial day, a tragic day that I shall never forget," said the lady of the letter, "grandmother promised that I should help make Uncle Henry's bouquet, an honor that seldom fell to an eight-year-old. Together Aunt Emily and I constructed the masterpiece, a triumph in bouquet building, for the climbing rose bloomed early that year, and our scheme was simple yellow and white. But Memorial day morning brought some childish ailment, and when Uncle Henry, resplendent in his uniform as a captain of volunteers, and carrying a silk flag just presented to the company, rode up to the door for his flowers, he found a weeping small girl clutching the bouquet and pushing away the sticky balsam remedy that was grandmother's panacea for all aches.

"In an instant he was off his horse and down on his knees, spoon in hand, coaxing me to obedience. In a frantic attempt to be good I jarred his elbow, and the contents of the tablespoon splashed down over his spotless uniform and the shimmering red, white and blue of the banner. In the general confusion that followed, the white and yellow pyramid got badly damaged, and all that I recall of the remainder of that holiday is the quiet haven of a big four-poster in a raftered room, and a comforting grandmother, who read me to sleep out of her illustrated Bible.

Parades were personal affairs in those days. Every other man in the procession was a friend, or at least an acquaintance. You knew even the distinguished gentlemen in the carriages. In the first rode the squire and the First church minister, escorting the orator of the day, Hon. Mr. Brown, congressman of the district. Judge Smith and the school superintendent, with the editor of the Daily News, came next, and so on down the line of lesser notabilities. Cheers were loudest when the crippled, age-worn veterans rode by, in the village bandwagon, followed by Grand Army men who were still able-bodied. A goodly array they presented in that decade. More than half have gone since.

Every man who could hobble held his place in the line till the cemetery was reached. There was a thrill in every blue coat, in each bit of tarnished metal, a story in the empty sleeve, a tale of adventure in halting step and twisted back. Bull Run and Chancellorsville, Gettysburg and Antietam, were near at hand when the thin blue columns passed us by. At the end of the company, the last man of all in the procession, one girl knew, there came inevitably German Charlie, general utility man in the newspaper office, so bent and crippled by wounds and rheumatic pains that his treacherous legs could not be relied on to keep time to the martial strains of the band. But he plodded along, eyes shining under his service hat brim, a posy in his button-hole, a loyal veteran of the Union army he had enlisted in when a boyish immigrant, proud to the core of his uniform and his right to wear it.

German Charlie has gone, and so have most of the men who marched with him; and so, alas, has some of the spirit they kept alive.

Church Notes

M. P. Church Announcements.
J. C. Coons, Pastor.

Concord:—Sunday School, 9:00 a. m.; Preaching Services, 10:30 a. m.

Fairview:—Sunday School, 9 a. m.

St. Joe:—Sunday School, 9:00 a. Christian Endeavor, 6:30 p. m., Preaching, 7:30 p. m.; Prayer Meeting, Thursday, 7:30 p. m.

Lutheran Church Announcements.
A. K. Mumma, Pastor.

St. Joe:—Sunday School, 9:00 a. m.; Christian Endeavor, 6:30 p. m. Preaching services 10:30 a m.; Prayer Meeting, Thursday evening.

Christian Church Announcements.

St. Joe:—Bible School at 9 a. m.; Morning Worship, 10:15 a. m.; Christian Church, 6:30 p. m.; Leader, Ralph Brown; Preaching services, 7:30 p. m., by J. Waldo Reid, of Canton, Ohio.

NEWVILLE

Ira E. Mendenhall, wife and baby, of Artic, are at this writing the guests of John Miller and family.

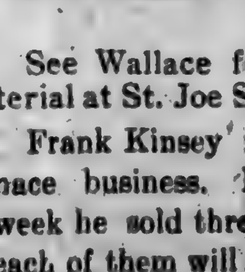
Mrs. George Benninghoff was taken to the Lutheran Hospital at Ft. Wayne for treatment last week, having taken a relapse of her recent illness.

Mrs. Ollie Smith returned to Ft. Wayne, last week, for a few days and came home with a new eye in the place of the dead eye which had recently been removed.

Mount Pleasant will hold their Township Sunday School Convention, next Sunday, May 21; and Newville will hold their convention May 28, both a ternoon and evening at the U. B. Church.

The Newville Decoration Services will be held at the U. B. Church, Tuesday, May 30, at 9:30 a. m., Rev. J. T. Keesey will deliver the address. The ranks of our soldiers are thinning very very fast and we ask the co-operation of everyone in the community. The committee would appreciate it very much if everyone who can would participate in the march to the cemetery.

The Gossips Say—



See Wallace for Building Material at St. Joe Saw Mill.

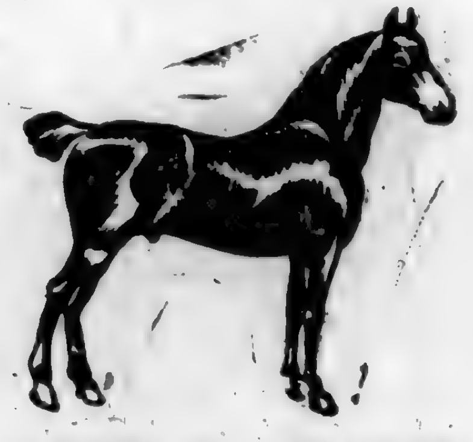
Frank Kinsey reports good furnace business. During the past week he sold three large jobs and each of them will be equipped with the Famous Jewel.

Ralph Patterson and wife, of Springfield, Ohio, are here the guests of W. C. Patterson and wife.

Farmers' Farmers'

NOTICE!

Scoville's Thoroughbred Registered Imported Percheron Stallion



LANCIER No. 99,094-103,650

will stand this season at his Big Stock Farm, one mile east and one mile south of Butler. This prize winning stallion is five years old, weighs 2,040 pounds right now, is jet black with a star in the forehead, and is the finest and highest priced horse ever brought to this part of the country. Stands at $15.00. Colt insured to stand and suck. Both local and long distance phones at the farm. Call us up. Visitors welcome daily. Call and see our Registered Percheron Mares and this last years colts from this horse. You will find nothing better in the state.

Work is progressing nicely on the Patterson garage and the Wallace residence.

It is better—Indian Gasoline at Patterson's Garage. No higher in price—but better.

Ira Bone and family, of Concord, were Sunday guests of Fred Jenkins and wife.

THE PROOF.

A gentleman was riding on the street car the other day, when he saw on the advertising spaces, printed in large, clear letters, these words: "Pure Rye Whisky—Tones Up the Body, Brightens the Intellect, Invigorates the Soul." After reading it his eyes dropped involuntarily to the seat beneath the advertisement, and there was a drunken man. His eyes were bleared, his face bloated, with red lines of dissipation in it, and his body slouched down in a sort of collapsed way common to men under the influence of liquor. The drunken man was an illustration of the advertisement, and proved the falsehood of it. "Wine is a mocker."

MONTANA WAKING UP.

Richland county, Montana, gave a vote of two to one against the liquor traffic in the first county option election in the state. The liquor men put up a hard fight with five orators working overtime to hold the territory. Montana, one of the blackest states on the prohibition map, is waking up, and the days of the liquor traffic in the state are numbered.

DIMS BATTING EYE.

"I do not drink; it dims my batting eye." said Ty Cobb

PRINTING Of All Kinds
not the cheap kind but the good kind done here.

Our Classified Ad Department

FreeColumn

All advertisements in this department are free to subscribers only. —EDITOR NEWS.]

POTATOES for Sale:-$1.00 per bushel. Early Patalka and Good Times varieties. Only a few bushels left.
WM. HALLABAUGH

WANTED:-2 Shoats weight 40 or 60 lbs. Poland China perferred.
W. L. HALLABAUGH

For Sale:--2 yearling draft colts, bay in color. Bay horse weighing 1,300 pounds, Sound, and gentle for ladies to drive. Spencerville. B. W. DWYER.

For Sale:-- 50 bu. Sir Walter Raleigh potatoes. John Doll.

FOR SALE: Sweet Potato, Celery, Pepper, Cabbage, and Tomato plants for sale. Mrs. G. W. Woodcox.

100 Per Cent.

INCREASED EARNINGS.

The following is fac-simile of certificate of Bond issued to each Depositor in this Bank.

No. ________ Grabill, Ind., ________ 19___

Mr. ________________

THIS IS TO CERTIFY that your DEPOSITS in this bank are INSURED under a bond of THE AMERICAN GUARANTY COMPANY of Columbus, Ohio.

THE GRABILL STATE BANK.

PRESERVE THIS. By Albert Egly, Cashier.

Postal Savings pay 2 per cent. Interest and the money is placed in banks who have to furnish a Bond to the government to guarantee that the funds are safe in that Bank.

We pay 4 per cent. Interest and give you the same guarantee. An increased earning of 100 per cent.

THIS is the only Bank in this community thus insuring its depositors.

Total Assets, over $175,000

The Grabill State Bank

Established 1906

Joseph Witmer, President
David Klopfenstine, v. pres.
Albert Egly, Cashier
Joseph A. Grabill, Director
Peter W. Amstutz, Director
Julius Gehrig, Director
John B. Haifley, Chairman Board Directors

MAY

L 908

0158

Has Your Subscription Expired? Come in and renew it next time you are in town.

ST. JOE NEWS.

NO newspaper can succeed without advertising, therefore we solicit the patronage of our readers for those who by their advertising help to make this paper possible.

VOL. XXX ST. JOE, DeKALB COUNTY INDIANA, THURSDAY MAY 25 1916 NO. 21

An American Story

By an American Author

The Best Seller of the Season

The TURMOIL

By BOOTH TARKINGTON
is to be OUR NEXT SERIAL and is coming soon.

The Best Story of the Year

For American Readers

Of American Life

TO OUR

Farmer friends

❋ ❋

We submit comparison figures as follows:—In exchanging your wheat for Daily Bread Flour we allow you 35 lb. flour and 12 lb. feed for 1 bu. wheat. Present market value $1.13 bu. which would ordinarly buy you 32 lb. flour. By exchanging your wheat you not only get one of the best Indiana made flours but have a saving of 3 lb. flour and 12 lb. feed or a total value of 28c. on each bushel exchanged; therefore is it worth your while to sell your wheat and buy your flour. Besides when you send your wheat to your Home Mill you are patronizing home industry. Our flour is also sold at all stores for 80c. 1-8 bbl. or $6.00 full barrel. We also specialize on our own make, Cracked Corn either for Chicks or Chickens made from clean sound Corn thus avoiding disease among your flock from feeding weed seed mixtures.

Yours to Serve,

ST. JOE MILLS

Eyes tested ________ Glasses Fitted

At Dr. Farhnam's Office, THURSDAY, JUNE 15

EARL FRISBIE, Opt. BUTLER, INDIANA

Sunday School Report.

The following is a true and correct report of the various Sunday Schools in this neighborhood for last Sunday.

Lutheran	115	$ 3.81
M. P	108	3.95
Christian	55	1.98
Newville, C.	85	2.30
Coburntown	108	2.45
Fairview	40	.63
U. B.	88	3 79
M. E. Spencer	117	6.07
Lutheran	101	2.66

Fae Manning was a Saturday and Sunday guest of Ines Hart.

Genuine Lump Pocahontas Coal $4 00 ton for June, $4.20 for July. St. JOE MILLS.

In Society

Saturday evening of last week, ended the busy cares of the graduates—when the Nineteenth Annual Banquet of the St. Joe High School Alumni was held at the High School Building. About one hundred ten people were present. The guests were seated in the Recitation Room which was decorated with pennants and flowers. The following program was rendered:

Shirts, Overalls and Underwear that is right at BARNEY'S.

Saloons have no use for elevators, their victims go down.

Grandma Scholes returned Saturday morning from a visit at Auburn.

Flossie Sechler left Wednesday noon for a short visit with friends at Hicksville.

James Fisher and family moved last week to Bryan, Ohio, where they will be located nearer their farm.

Attend the Memorial Services at the M. P. Church, next Sunday morning at 9:00 o'clock. You are welcome.

PROGRAM

Alumni Ode,	HAZEL HERRICK, '09, Accompanist
Welcome,	LENA MEEK, '09, President
Response,	HARRY KINSEY, '16
Piano Solo,	FLOSSIE WIDNEY, '08
Vocal Duet,	LORA LEIGHTY, '02, MERRITT SECHLER, '03
Reading.	GLADYS KAIN, '10

The guests were then conducted to the Assembly Hall where the tables were spread. They presented a pleasing appearance with their white cloths, and tasteful decorations. The Freshman, Sophmore and Junior girls acted as waitresses, and proved to be very capable. The following banquet was served:

PUBLIC NOTICE.

August 1 finishes my career in Spencerville as practicing physician, having sold out my business to Dr. J. C. Emme of Harlan. All book accounts and notes due me, should be settled by Aug. 1st., '16.

DR. B. O. SHOOK.

BANQUET

Toast Master, ... DALE WIDNEY, '05

First Course.—Fruit Punch, Wafers

Toast, "The Alumni as a Channel," . . GREY WOODCOX, '14

Toast, "Eight Swimmers Plunge," . . . CLARK SCHOLES, '15

Second Course.—Sandwiches, Chicken Loaf, Potato Salad, Pickles, Olives

Toast, "Strong Strokes, a Good Start," . . . PAUL E. CURIE, '11

Toast, "Rocks and Tides," . . . . . ROY MAXWELL, '09

Toast, "Winners," . . . . CALVIN KAIN, '08

Third Course.—Ice Cream, Cake, Coffee

Price per plate, 25c

Dale Widney proved himself master of the occasion, acting as toastmaster. He compared the class of 1916 as to the aquatic sport of swimming and each toast following were along this line proving to be very interesting and yet very applicable, as you will notice by the program. The class was given a royal welcome into the Alumni Association and they will mean much to the organisation in the future. The plates sold for 25c. and was prepared by the members of the Association.

Daily Jots

Order Saturday Evening Post, 5c.

Don't go around in darkness when you can get one of the Pearson Flash Lights, all sizes and prices, at CURIE's store.

The W. C. T. U. Meeting will be held at the home of Mrs. Hulda Reasoner, Friday afternoon. Subject "Sunday School and Missionary Work".

Misses Iva Budd and Elsie Shoemaker, of Hicksville, Ohio, were guests of Flossie Sechler from Thursday noon until Friday morning.

WANTED, ALL THE MEN to know YOU CAN DO BETTER at Barney's on everything you need and wear.

Rollie Moffet returned from Indianapolis Saturday bringing with him Joseph Prosser, who recently underwent an operation at the Methodist hospital for cataract of the eye. Mr. Prosser feels that he will be able to see now, although sight will probably come back slowly. Even now he is able to see and count his fingers. Mr. Moffet took him to the home of his sister, Mrs J R. Culbertson, at Orangeville, Sunday where he will make his future home.—Star.

See CURIE for your Check Row Corn Planter—Make the work easier and then you can do more.

AMERICANISM AT ITS BEST

Grand Army's Return to Peace at the Close of the Civil War Was a Notable Event.

The adaptability and the restraint of the American character were never shown better than in the events that followed the end of the Civil war. A trained army did not make America pugnacious. The citizen soldiers worked as well as they had fought. And one foreign power that turned aspiring eyes toward western domain gave up the dream because of them: a confession made years later by a man who realized the strength of this country's position in having a large body of men skilled in the arts of war and strong in loyalty. The country, at the time, realized deep sentiment of the occasion which found apt expression in an article in Harper's Weekly.

"It is fitting," said the writer, "that when the work had all been done our soldiers, who had borne the burden, should, as they return bringing peace back with them receive in return some token of the popular appreciation of their services. It was no ordinary pageant that turned all the people's eyes toward Washington. . . . It was no mere idle curiosity, but a deep, glorious, solemn sentiment. This sentiment was one of pride mingled with infinite pathos—pride in the youthful strength of a republic tried and found steadfast—pathos from the remembrance of countless heroes who have received their crowns not from mortal hands nor on mortal brows, who died, many of them, while the strife seemed yet uncertain.

"May the time never come when these armed men shall be called again to enter the field against any foe, whether domestic or foreign! The God of Battles has granted the nation victory. Let us all pray that he for many generations grant that we may live in peace and quietness!"

Bret Harte was inspired by the grand review to write a great poem, "A Second Review of the Grand Army." He refers to a spectral figure that reviewed a phantom army of the men who had fallen in the great conflict. The "well-known form that in state and field had led our patriot sires" referred to the spirit of Washington. A statue of Washington was in front of the capitol at the time, but has since been removed.

There were more than 2,500 battles and skirmishes during the Civil war.

NEWVILLE

Patronize the advertisers.

For Groceries. YOU CAN DO BETTER at Barney's. Try us and see.

The Sunday School Class of Willing Workers will postpone the class meeting, this month, on account of the appointment being on Decoration Day. The next meeting will be with Mrs. Rozetta Gillingham on the last Tuesday afternoon in June.

Mr. and Mrs. David Poper very pleasantly entertained to dinner, Sunday:-Mr. and Mrs. Henry Lindsey, of Milford; John Gillingham and wife, of Newvill ; T. B. Rodamer and wife, of Scio; Karl Rodamer, of Ft. Wayne; Enos Byers and sister, of near Wayne; James Malone and wife, and Marvin Poper, wife and little daughter, Thelma, of near St. Joe; Frank Stone and wife, of near Hicksville, O; Dell Coburn, wife and little daughter Georgia Mae, of Coburntown. The occassion was in honor of four birthday anniverseries, Mrs. Stone, Mr. Gillingham, Mr. Coburn and Mr. Poper. These social occassions have been kept up for several years. The next meeting will be at the home of John Gillingham and wife, the date being the 23rd. of May.

WANTED-To buy your Hay. C. E. Frye, Phone 73-31, St. Joe.

Hugh Traxler and wife entertained to Sunday dinner:-Eveline Engle and Terry Traxlers'.

50 sheets of writing paper and 25 No. 1 rag envelopes for 10 cents at NEWS office.

D. D. Lumas while working on a barn near Auburn fell 16 ft., and was injured in the feet so that he has to walk with crutches, Blanche Wyatt came Thursday to care for her mother a few days. Mrs. Wyatt is on a fair way to recovery.

Melissa Skinner, of Muskegeon, Mich., is the guest of her sisters, Mrs. John Gillingham and family, and Mrs. Mary Ayers and family.

W. M. Benninghoff and family went to Ft. Wayne, Saturday, to visit his mother who is in the Lutheran hospital. They found Mrs. Benninghoff a little better.

Enzor Sutton, of Butler, was the Tuesday guest of Levon and Earl McDonald at the home of their grandparents, John Miller and wife, where they are spending the week.

Mr. Patterson and Mr. Bishop, of St. Joe, visited the Newville Sunday Schools, Sunday morning, in the interest of the coming convention which will be held next Sunday in the U. B. Church at this place.

EVERY TREASURER

of a Lodge, Sunday School, Church Society or any one who handles funds of any organization should open a checking account and handle the funds through the Bank. Your trouble will be lessened and your money in safe keeping. Begin now. It don't cost anything.

St. Joe Valley Bank--State Bank

4 per cent. paid on certificates if left 1 Year.

ALL KIND OF COAL.

We have running now several cars of genuine Pocahontas lump, several cars of the finest kind of free buring West Virginia Lump and several cars of Genuine Scranton Chesnut Coal. It is very advisable to place orders now for coal off the cars.

Mr. Feeder

try a sack of our BRAN & MIDDLINGS. Don't forget that we handle Barrel Salt also Rock Salt. When in town stop in and pay us a visit.

You are always welcome at,

St. Joe Elevator

The Nathan Grain Co.
OWNERS
Fort Wayne, Indiana

SAMUEL KEESLER, Local Manager.

A Store in Itself

is the expression of those who enter our Ware room and see hundreds of gallons of that good Barn Paint made with Oil instead of Mineral Acids, House paint containing only Lead Zinc and Oil. Varnishes for woodwork, for floors, for buggies, etc. Genuine Polarine Auto Oil at 35c gallon, no substitute at any price. Tons of Oyster Shells, Chick Feed, and Oil Meal. We have the goods and are here to serve you so you will come again.

Dunkle's Drug Store

MAY

L 908

0159

Quick Service

And Satisfied Policy Holders
Our Best Advertisement

Take one of Our Joint Policies
and have Complete Protection.

GEO. W. COE, Mgr.
Lincoln Life, Auburn

HATS
and CAFs

of the latest styles for the summer season, in felts and straws. We invite you to our store to look at our fine display. The prices are reasonable.

Remember
Go to Erick's

Wm. G. ERICK,
SPENCERVILLE

WOOL!

Dispose of your crop of Wool now and get a good price—and save all that handling and chance for loosing money. We are prepared to handle wool this spring and you will be guaranteed the highest market price.

Call or Phone to

JACK BEAMS,
Spencerville.

S. S. Widney
Justice of the Peace
Insurance and Real Estate
Phone No. 16
ST. JOE - - IND

Don't put off any longer. Subscribe now.

The St. Joe News

Fred B. Leighty, Editor
Mrs Zora Leighty, Associate

One Year, - - $1.00
Six Months, - - - .50
Three Months, - - .25

Entered at the postoffice at St. Joe, Indiana, as second class matter.

INDIANA ASSOCIATED WEEKLIES
THE CONCERN OF ALL

Local Briefs

J. R. Shilling was at Auburn, Saturday, on business.

We have adopted as our slogan. YOU CAN DO BETTER, at Barney's. We have the goods and can prove it.

Drs Farnham and Sheffer attended the banquet of the DeKalb County doctors at the Hotel Butler, last Friday evening.

For Sale or Rent, a small house and half-acre of good garden ground. S. S. WIDNEY.

Merritt Hull left Sunday morning on a business trip to Rockford Ill. Before returning home he will visit relatives at Compton.

Reduced prices on all Ladies' and Misses' Suits. SCHLOSS' Auburn.

Since "Go to church Sunday" and other special days have proven successful, why not start a "Take a bath Saturday?"

Mr. Parrott, of Angola, a school chum of Darrell Carpenter, spent several days last week here with his friend, the two boys returning to school on Monday.

Mrs. Wm Leighty left Wednesday noon for Sherwood where she will spend the summer with her daughter. She is enjoying fine health now and is able to be about and do considerable work.

H. M. Widney, wife and daughter, F. A. Jenkins and wife, Chas Koch and wife, John George and wife, J. C. Hull and F. B. Leighty, wife and son, John Bennett, attended the Smith Township Sunday School Convention at Churubusco, last Sunday. Mr. Widney and Mrs. Leighty appeared on the program in the afternoon.

We can save you money on Pocahontas Coal, $4.10 for June, $4.30 July, and any month after that at $4.40 ton from car, let me know when. Also Hocking or West Virginia at an unusually low price. ST. JOE MILLS.

P. A. Walker
Trustee
Spencer Township

OFFICE DAY—
Tuesday of each week at the residence ½ mile east of the Dills River Bridge.

Phone—St. Joe, 21-6
Spencerville, - Indiana

Read the Free Column.

Use Daily Bread Flour the Indiana made.

Pauline Moffett, of Auburn, was the guest of Agnes Sechler, a couple days last week, returning home on Thursday evening.

Vernie Monroe, who has been employed with the Auburn Automobile Co., is now in Ft. Wayne working at the Electric works.

Reduced prices on all Ladies' and Misses' Suits. SCHLOSS' Auburn.

Rolland Bearss and wife, Ed Leighty, Harry Randall, C. R. Price and wife, and Paul Curie were at Wayne, last Thursday.

FOR SALE:-Buick roadster in good condition. A bargain if taken at once. GEO. GELHOUSEN, GARRETT, IND.

Mrs. Ida Miller and two sons, Glen and Ray, of east of Butler, were the guests in the Frank Sechler home Thursday evening and attended the Commencement exercises.

Subscriptions taken for new or renewals of any magazine published, at The News office.

M. E. Leighty spent a couple days last week looking after a pair of Draft horses and on his return home stopped off at Kendallville.

Mrs. Ethel Cheek and son, Wm. Wendell, left Wednesday for Goshen where she will spend a few weeks with her husband, who has employment there.

Land Rollers of all kinds at CURIE's Store.

Glen Bowen and family, Mr. Gellers and wife, and Walter Bowen, of Wayne, drove to the home of Leon Sechler and wife, Sunday.

Bert Bowman, of Chicago, was at home over Sunday, with his family. He arrived Saturday in order to attend the Alumni Banquet.

Get Indian Gasoline at Patterson's Garage.

During the past week sons have been born in the home of George Wilmot and wife, and Merritt Maxwell and wife. The latter one weighing 11 pounds. Mr. and Mrs Maxwell are staying with D. L Nelsons'.

M. T. Bishop left St. Joe, Wednesday, for the West, due to the severe attack of the Asthma during the past few months. He will go to Denver and Colorado Springs and just where he will locate for the summer will depend upon the action of the climate on his disease.

Eleven room house on West Main St., for sale or rent. Other well located residence properties and vacant lots for sale on easy terms. S. S. WIDNEY.

George H. Abel, living near the Woodlawn cemetery, went to Chase, Mich., Friday noon where he was married Saturday night to Mrs. Vida Abel, a sister-in-law Both have been married before. Mr. Abel's wife having died about a year ago. The bride of Friday is the widow of Mr. Abel's brother They were expected to return to this city Monday afternoon and go to the Abel home where they will reside.—Star.

The county board of charities and correction with the two new members recently appointed by Judge D. M. Link, had a meeting Friday. They have not had a full board meeting or some time and Friday they met and reorganized and elected Moses Willis as president to take the place of Rev. A B. Garman, resigned. Mrs. Frank Hogue was re-elected secretary The board visited the county infirmary, the county jail and the city lock-up, and found matters in good shape. This is the first trip of the new board. Dr. W. F Shoemaker of Butler, and Dr B. S. Sheffer of St. Joe, the newly appointed members, were present Mrs. H. D. Boozer of Waterloo, was absent.

DENTIST
C. R. PRICE
ST. JOE, IND.
Office: first door south of Patterson's Dept. Store.
Bell Phone No. 44.

Do You Want to Save
MONEY?

Then buy your building material at the Spencerville Lumber Yard.

◆◆◆◆◆◆◆

We have just received a new supply of Lime, Cement and Plaster, which is strictly fresh and guaranteed the highest grade on the market.

◆◆◆◆◆◆◆

Brands We Handle.

Universal and Wabash Cement, Wayne Fibre Prepared Wood Pulp Plaster, Crystal Rock Hydrated Lime.

STEWARD LUMBER & GRAIN Co
SPENCERVILLE, IND.
Highest Prices Paid for Grain and Seeds.

Personal Items

Reduced prices on all Ladies and Misses Suits. SCHLOSS' Auburn.

Mrs. M. E Leighty is at Kendallville looking after her new grandson, baby Bruce Thompson. Mrs. Wm. Leighty and Margaret Leighty are doing the housework during Mrs. Leighty's absence.

Big Beef Stew Supper next Friday evening, May 26, in the Widney residence, just east of opera house. Given by Friendly Bible Class of M P. Sunday School. Price 20 cents Come and get your supper and help the Class. Ice Cream and Cake extra.

General Butler's Way.

Probably more stories were told about Butler than of any other man in the war—unless, perhaps, it was Grant. To illustrate his habit of doing things promptly and effectively, an incident is mentioned where a newspaper correspondent called to ask him for something that had to be written. Possibly it was a pass. At all events, there was no place to write, because the only table in the room was piled high with books and a great variety of other articles. Butler, without saying a word, simply tilted the table, cleared it by the simple process of spilling everything on the floor, and sat down to write while a nimble negro servant picked up and removed the debris.

In sending a pilot, who said he knew all about the location of torpedoes of the James river, to Admiral Lee, he dictated a letter in the man's presence, saying: "If he faithfully and truly performs his duty, return him to me at Bermuda Landing. If not, hang him to the yardarm." Then, turning to the pilot, he added: "Now, my good man, go; you have your life in your own hands."

A Friend in Need.

When Glando Gargle is used for a cold in the head it is surprising to see how quickly the clogged nostrils are opened. Adenoids are caused by a neglected cold. If the mucus which forms is allowed to remain in the nostrils, a diseased condition will result, which causes chronic catarrh and adenoids. Glando Gargle was prepared to meet these special needs. Equally effective for sore mouth or sore throat. Price 50 cents. For sale by All Druggists.

DEATH BUT ADDS A LUSTER TO A BRAVE MAN'S FAME

THE drums still thunder and the fifes sound clear;
The tattered flags wave splendidly on high.
You say: "The ranks grow thinner year by year."
And miss a graybeard with a gleaming eye.
You watch them march, and bless each hallowed head,
And wish that one were there whom you might name;
Why, comrade, don't give way. Though he be dead—
Death adds a luster to a brave man's fame.

A time there was when you and he were young;
'Twas long ago, my friend, we must allow.
You think of hand-clasps, of the songs he sung,
And so you miss the voice all-silent now.
Perhaps you both were suitors for a hand
Of one who loved, and vanished like a flame
There, comrade, don't give way. Just understand—
Death adds a luster to a brave man's fame.

You miss the man who proved so true and brave,
While fighting that a nation might be free;
But think of this: There never was a grave
Could hold the spirit. In God's freedom, he,
This friend of yours, awaits you as of yore,
Afar from earthly care, beyond all blame.
Comrade, your friend shall love you all the more—
Death adds a luster to a brave man's fame.

In years to come, in story and in song,
Eyes shall grow moist above our soldiers' deeds;
Oh, noble he to whom his country's wrong
Becomes his own, although his own heart bleeds!
Oh, noble he who in those darker days
Conceived but cowardice the only shame;
Who fearless, trod the fateful, bloody ways—
Death adds a luster to a brave man's fame.

Your friend was brave, was noble; e'en as these Whose shuffling limbs once leaped to danger's throne;
Who laughed at hellish war's discordances,
And fought to honor's credit and their own.
Come, comrade, cheer them! Cheer them man and man;
Weep if you will, we honor you the same
But think not he is lost, your veteran—
Death adds a luster to a brave man's fame!

—Howard V. Sutherland.

Look and Feel Clean, Sweet and Fresh Every Day

Drink a glass of real hot water before breakfast to wash out poisons.

Life is not merely to live, but to live well, eat well, digest well, work well, sleep well, look well. What a glorious condition to attain, and yet how very easy it is if one will only adopt the morning inside bath.

Folks who are accustomed to feel dull and heavy when they arise, splitting headache, stuffy from a cold, foul tongue, nasty breath, acid stomach, can, instead, feel as fresh as a daisy by opening the sluices of the system each morning and flushing out the whole of the internal poisonous stagnant matter.

Everyone, whether ailing, sick or well, should, each morning, before breakfast, drink a glass of real hot water with a teaspoonful of limestone phosphate in it to wash from the stomach, liver, kidneys and bowels the previous day's indigestible waste, sour bile and poisonous toxins; thus cleansing, sweetening and purifying the entire alimentary canal before putting more food into the stomach. The action of hot water and limestone phosphate on an empty stomach is wonderfully invigorating. It cleans out all the sour fermentations, gases, waste and acidity and gives one a splendid appetite for breakfast. While you are enjoying your breakfast the water and phosphate is quietly extracting a large volume of water from the blood and getting ready for a thorough flushing of all the inside organs.

The millions of people who are bothered with constipation, bilious spells, stomach trouble, rheumatism; others who have sallow skins, blood disorders and sickly complexions are urged to get a quarter pound of limestone phosphate from the drug store which will cost very little, but is sufficient to make anyone a pronounced crank on the subject of internal sanitation.

QUIT MEAT IF YOUR KIDNEYS ACT BADLY

Take tablespoonful of Salts if Back hurts or Bladder bothers—Drink lots of water.

We are a nation of meat eaters and our blood is filled with uric acid, says a well-known authority, who warns us to be constantly on guard against kidney trouble.

The kidneys do their utmost to free the blood of this irritating acid, but become weak from the overwork; they get sluggish; the eliminative tissues clog and thus the waste is retained in the blood to poison the entire system.

When your kidneys ache and feel like lumps of lead, and you have stinging pains in the back or the urine is cloudy, full of sediment, or the bladder is irritable, obliging you to seek relief during the night; when you have severe headaches, nervous and dizzy spells, sleeplessness, acid stomach or rheumatism in bad weather, get from your pharmacist about four ounces of Jad Salts; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast each morning and in a few days your kidneys will act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to flush and stimulate clogged kidneys, to neutralize the acids in urine so it is no longer a source of irritation, thus ending urinary and bladder disorders.

Jad Salts is inexpensive and cannot injure; makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink, and nobody can make a mistake by taking a little occasionally to keep the kidneys clean and active.

HOW "TIZ" HELPS SORE, TIRED FEET

Good-bye sore feet, burning feet, swollen feet, sweaty feet, smelling feet, tired feet.

Good-bye corns, callouses, bunions and raw spots. No more shoe tightness, no more limping with pain or drawing up your face in agony. "TIZ" is magical, acts right off. "TIZ" draws out all the poisonous exudations which puff up the feet. Use "TIZ" and forget your foot misery. Ah! how comfortable your feet feel. Get a 25 cent box of "TIZ" now at any druggist or department store. Don't suffer. Have good feet, glad feet, feet that never swell, never hurt, never get tired. A year's foot comfort guaranteed or money refunded.

Subscribe for this paper.

Are You in Need of Cement?
WABASH
PORTLAND CEMENT
Is Best For Sidewalks, Foundations, Floors, Walls, Concrete Blocks, Bridges, Etc.
Look for the Turkey on Every Bag You Buy
WABASH PORTLAND CEMENT CO.
General Offices, Detroit, Mich. Works, Stroh, Indiana
Mrs. L. W. STEWARD, Spencerville, Indiana.

MAY

L 908

0160

WE WELCOME
LARGE&SMALL
DEPOSITS

Your Business Is never too large for us to handle successfully, or too small for us to appreciate. The small depositors receive the same courteous attention as the large depositors.

EVERY CUSTOMER A BOOSTER

That's why we want your account. We want you to tell your friends and neighbors. They need a good BANK also, and all will be benefited.

Farmers & Merchants State Bank
Capital Stock $25,000.00
Spencerville, • • • Indiana

SPENCERVILLE

A $5 Vacuum and Sweeper for $3.95 at Beams & Co., store.

Mrs. Rose Beams erected a beautiful monument in the cemetery, last week.

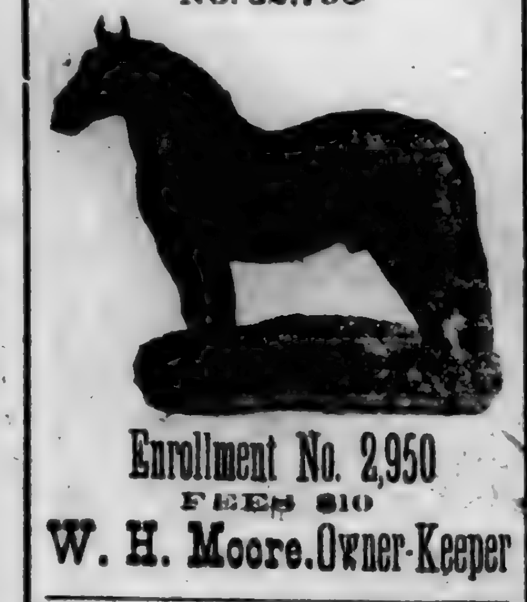
J. C. Vallieu and family attended a birthday dinner in honor of Mrs. Vallieu's brother and sister, at Auburn, Sunday.

Mrs. Gust Cupp suffered a stroke of paralysis on Wednesday afternoon while working in the yard. The stroke was a light one and it is thought she will recover in a short time. Her entire left side is affected.

Mrs. Rilla Goldsmith and babe, Mrs. Mary Lochner and daughter Bonnie, of Leo; Mrs. Lida Gerig and Mrs. Emma Conner and family, of Hopewell, met at the home of their parents, Joseph Goldsmith and wife, one day last week and assisted them to clean their home. Mr. Goldsmith is improving slowly.

Among those that called at the home of Abe Furnish and wife, last week, were: Roy VanAuken and wife, and Mr. Barnhart and wife, of Auburn; Rev. and Mrs. Lindstroum, of Pleasant Lake; Mrs. Glen Henderson and son, of Woodburn; Fred Thomas and wife, of near Grabill; Mrs. Mattie Hart and Mrs. Jesse Klopfenstein, of east of town.

The Percheron Horse
LORAINE
No. 32,798



Enrollment No. 2,950
FEES $10
W. H. Moore. Owner-Keeper

The Belgian Horse
CLARENCE
Enrollment No. 4194.
FEES $10
A. B. DWYER, Owner.
W. H. MOORE, Keeper.

Care will be taken to avoid accidents but will not be responsible should any occur. These horses will make the season at
Archie Beam Barn,
22 Barn Phone, 950-3
Spencerville.

J. M. Beams and G. M. Shutt motored to Ft. Wayne, Sunday.

Fletcher Carey, of Ft. Wayne, spent Saturday and Sunday with relatives here.

Mrs Mary Repp, of New Haven, came Sunday to spend a few days with her brother, Louis Berry.

Elvin Valentine expects to leave for Winona Lake, Monday, to attend school at that place.

Mrs. Mary Hyndman, of Huntertown, who spent the past week at the home of her brother, Geo. Gloyd and family, returned home Sunday.

Jacob Baltz and wife, and Wil Sommer and wife, of Coburntown, attended the funeral of Mrs. Alex Baltz, of Cedar Chaple, Sunday afternoon.

Rolla Moffett, wife and daughters, Pauline and Jessie, and Mrs. Granville Erick, of Auurn, were Sunday evening guests of Jacob Baltz and wife.

Saul Goldsmith and wife, and Thomas Farner spent Sunday and Monday at Butler, visiting the latter's brother, Thomas Vanzile, who is very ill.

Chas. Chapman, wife and son Richard, of Garrett, are visiting David Butler and wife. Mr. Butler suffered a severe fall the results of heart failure, last week.

Mother's Day was observed at the M. E. Church with a special sermon by the pastor, Rev. J. C. Valentine. Special music and recitations by the Junior League.

Hullie Rummell of Oklahoma, and Mrs. Lizzie Fredrick of Ashley, who have been visiting their mother, Mrs. Nancy Rummell, and other relatives at this place, left Saturday for their home.

Jacob Baltz received the news of the death of his sister-in-law, Mrs. Alex Baltz, who died Thursday at her home at Chicago, Ill. The remains was shipped to New Era Funeral services were held at Cedar Chaple, Sunday afternoon. Interment in the Cedar Chaple cemetery.

D. D. Metcalf and wife celebrated their 42nd. wedding anniversary last Sunday at their home south of town, by inviting their children and grand-children to come to their home and take dinner with them. The dinner was served in the same style and manner as it was on the wedding day.

Harry Hilgemann and wife of Ft. Wayne brought home one day last week the latter's aunt, Mrs. D. K. Horn, who had an operation performed for the removal of her toe at the Lutheran Hospital at Fort Wayne several weeks ago. Mrs. Horn spent several weeks at the hospital last winter taking treatments for the same toe.

New spring oxfords for Ladies, Misses and Children—Just in at Beams & Co., store, in patent leather and gun metal.

Send in your news items.

Slide in the $1.00 Do it now.

Raymond Bowser is the owner of a new Ford touring car.

Curie's is the place to get your Pearson Flash Light.

Clyde Fredrick and family took dinner with John Fisher and family, south of town, Sunday.

Clarence Conner, wife and baby, of Hopewell, spent Sunday with R. U. Bowser and family.

Greatly reduced prices on Shoes and Oxfords. You can't afford to be without, at the prices we are quoting. Beams & Co.

Miss Bertha Thornburg, mother and sister took supper at Rev. Mummas', Monday evening.

Miss Vina Haverstock, of Butler came last Thursday to visit Mr. Farner and family, a few weeks.

$1.00 Ladies Dresses at Beams & Co., store. They are the latest patterns and you can't afford to be wanting a dress at this price. They are selling fast.

The C C Club will be entertained at the home of Mrs. Maude Beams, Friday afternoon.

Lester Vanzile and family, of Hurshtown, were Monday guests of John Hobaugh and family.

Transfer paper at NEWS office, 2 sheets for 5c. Get some now for that pattern you wish to transfer Martin Keesler suffered a stroke of apoplexy, Friday night, from which he rallied and is some better at this writing.

Wm. Henderson, wife and son Richard, of Auburn, spent Sunday with Jack Henderson and wife, and Anna Baker and family.

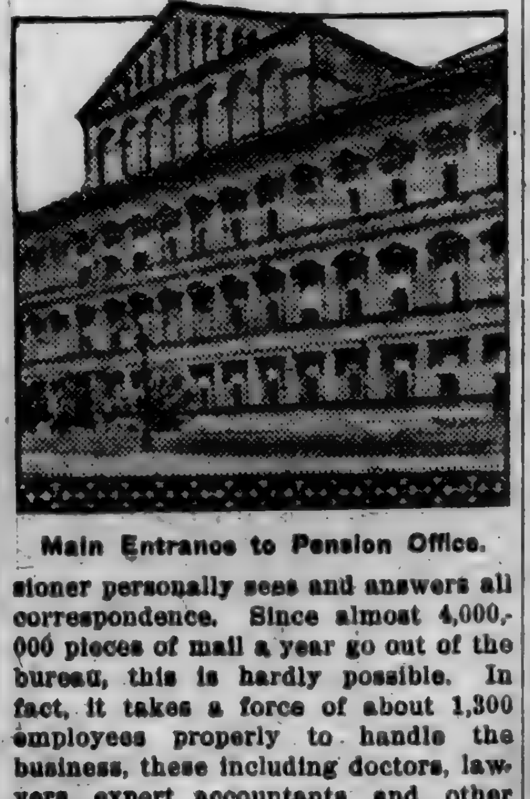
Isadore Badica and family, and Mrs. Chas Badica, of near Fort Wayne, spent Sunday afternoon at the home of George Gloyd and family.

Miss Millie Bowzor of Kendallville, who has been visiting her cousin, Mrs. Baltz Koontz, for the past month left Friday for Auburn to visit relatives.

HOW THE PENSION BUSINESS OF THE COUNTRY IS DONE

A GREAT, angular red brick building, set in a green park, is the home of the pension building at Washington. It was built at a time when American architecture was in a formative period. A feature of the exterior of the building is a broad frieze, showing repeated groups of infantry, cavalry, artillery and seamen in bas-relief. Inside a great, beautiful court, somewhat marred by being made to contain battalions of file cases, is another attractive feature. In times past, when there were such things as inaugural balls in Washington, these balls were held within the court.

It seems to be the fixed belief of the average citizen having business with the pension office that the commissioner personally sees and answers all correspondence. Since almost 4,000,000 pieces of mail a year go out of the bureau, this is hardly possible. In fact, it takes a force of about 1,300 employees properly to handle the business, these including doctors, lawyers, expert accountants and other specialists.



Main Entrance to Pension Office.

Every pension check now issues from this central office, and is received when due, instead of many days thereafter, as formerly when pension agencies were distributed over the country. This and other economies which have been introduced, has greatly reduced the clerical help required, and the force of the office is gradually being cut down.

Still, to handle some 785,000 individual pension accounts and to provide for regular payments thereon is no small task, even though the total now is being decreased from year to year by death. The appropriation for the ensuing fiscal year is $164,000,000, and Commissioner Saltzgaber is of the opinion that it will be $4,000,000 less during the following year.

Frank W. Silberg
Veterinarian
OFFICE and HOSPITAL
—ON—
Main Street
SPENCERVILLE. - IND.
Phones—Office No. 7
(18) . Residence No. 101

Dr. H. R. Farnham
MEDICINE AND GENERAL SURGERY
ST. JOE, INDIANA
Office Hours—Week Day
10:00 to 11:00 a. m.
1:00 to 3:00 p. m.
6:30 to 8:00 p. m.
Sunday—By appointment.
Telephone
Office, ... No. 2

Office at Residence, Second house west of Widney Opera House.

H. C. Hathaway
TRUSTEE
Concord Township
Office Day Thursday's of Each week in Town Hall, St. Joe.

Alumni Banquet.

The Sixth Annual Banquet of the Spencerville High School was held in the basement of the Spencerville School House on Saturday evening, May 20, at which there was assembled about sixty guests. The guests were assembled in one of the class rooms and at the appointed hour were marched to the Banquet Room, the president leading then the Senior Class after which followed the members of the Alumni and other guests.

Rev. A. K. Mumma officiated as toastmaster, and after the Welcome by R. G. Beams and Response by Miss Marie Miller of the Seniors, the first course of Boullion, Crackers, Olives and Pickles, was served. After the first course, Miss Thornburg, the superintendent, toasted the Seniors in a very fitting manner declaring, as is the usual thing to do, that this was one of the brightest and most intelligent classes that had ever graduated from the S. H. S. Her toast was responded to by Levi Mumma who toasted the "Faculty" to perfection, saying that it would have been impossible for so great achievements to have been obtained without the guidauce of so great a faculty as was employed in the High School during the past year.

The next course of Mashed Potatoes, Gravy, Chicken Loaf, Biscuit and Butter, and Pea Salad was then served, after which Mr. Kain gave a toast to the "Alumni" and Miss Charlotte Miller a toast to the High School. The last course consisted of Brick Ice Cream, Cake and Bonbons. The guests departed at a late hour after enjoying to the utmost the pleasure the banquet afforded.

Due to the fact that the editor has been on the lift, no mention has been made of the commencement exercises.

With the Naval Veterans.

Nowhere in the entire country is Memorial day solemnized with greater profundity of feeling than at the United States Naval home at Philadelphia where the gray-haired veterans of Uncle Sam's sea fighters, many of whom have seen service in the seven seas, are passing their declining years in well-earned comfort. Their Memorial day memories are Farragut and Porter, Foote and Winslow, Cushing and Truxton, Dewey and Schley, of the battles of the Mississippi river, the historic running of the batteries in Mobile bay, the epoch-marking fight of the Kearsage and Alabama, and in more recent days, of the famous battle of Manila bay that made us an Asiatic power, and the battle of Santiago which ended Spanish rule in the western hemisphere. For the naval home houses veterans of all these battles so decisive in the shaping of American destiny—battles which make glorious chapters in the history of the United States navy. And the home has likewise sheltered naval veterans of the war of 1812.

All Are Heroes.

"Heroes are they who respond to the nation's need."

Our nation has never asked for men in vain. With Spartan bravery mothers give their sons, wives their husbands and maidens their sweethearts when the country calls. Many of them will never return. Others will come back to lay their diseased and broken frames beside the hearths of their youth. Some as by divine protection seem to have enchanted lives and return as strong as when they left. They all are heroes if they have felt the thrill of sacrifice and never hesitated in the face of duty.

Great Occasion Recalled.

The men who paraded through the streets of the country's cities and towns on Memorial day do not ask to be thought heroes. They are elderly citizens who in their day answered the call just as their sons and their sons' sons would answer it if it came today. The country gave the command, they obeyed.

What makes the parade of these men a great occasion is the greatness of the occasion which it commemorates. Every one of the veterans is a unit in the mass which made up fifty years ago the utmost strength of the greatest republic on earth, exerted to save itself from destruction and to wipe out from it the curse of human slavery.

It is impossible to exaggerate the importance of the work which the Union achieved for humanity or the beauty of the self-sacrifice which the soldiers of 1861 made for the ideal of liberty. It could not be easy for the spectators in Pennsylvania avenue to keep the tears from their eyes as the blue-clad ranks passed by.

All Honor Sacred Dead.

The entire nation lifts its hat on Memorial day to the revered dead; the entire nation lifts its heart to the Almighty who made and has kept the American people a nation. The entire country looks upon the wonderful outcome of the sad strife and marvels at the deeper purposes of Providence in the ordering of the life of the nation. Flowers will decorate all graves, flags will lift their miniature folds above them, prayers will sanctify these places of rest and rejoicing will place its crown upon the memories of the dead.

MEAN SUGGESTION.

"I can't think of any way of killing time."

"Why, I often hear you playing on the piano."

The Grip Skeleton!

The grip skeleton may be retained in the body in various forms. If the grip affected you in the form of tonsilitis, bronchitis or pneumonia and left you with a cough, you should act quickly before the cough weakens the lungs and bronchial tubes. After the lungs have been affected for some time by continuous coughing the process of decay begins, then you are beyond medical aid. Statistics tell us that one person dies every three minutes from tuberculosis. A chronic cough requires continuous treatment until it subsides. Get three ounces of PYNINE and make your own cough medicine. You can make one pint of excellent cough syrup. Full directions with each bottle. For sale by all by All Druggists.

Try the Little Wizzard Washing
Compound
and thus save labor. Washes clothes without rubbing, will not injure the most delicate fabrics, and contains nothing that will harm the hands. This compound is being used by the Ladies of St. Joe and is found very helpful. You can get it at Leighty's Grocery
Regular Price, 15c

Notice.

The book accounts of James. Fisher have been left with S S. Widney for collection Please call and settle promptly.

How's This?

We offer One Hundred Dollars Reward for any case of Catarrh that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure.

F. J. CHENEY & CO., Toledo, O.

We, the undersigned, have known F. J. Cheney for the last 15 years, and believe him perfectly honorable in all business transactions and financially able to carry out any obligations made by his firm.

NATIONAL BANK OF COMMERCE, Toledo, O.

Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. Testimonials sent free. Price 75 cents per bottle. Sold by all Druggists.

Take Hall's Family Pills for constipation.

GRAY HAIR BECOMES DARK AND BEAUTIFUL

Try Grandmother's Old Favorite Recipe of Sage Tea and Sulphur.

Almost everyone knows that Sage Tea and Sulphur, properly compounded, brings back the natural color and lustre to the hair when faded, streaked or gray. Years ago the only way to get this mixture was to make it at home, which is mussy and troublesome.

Nowadays we simply ask at any drug store for "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound." You will get a large bottle of this old time recipe improved by the addition of other ingredients for about 50 cents. Everybody uses this preparation now, because no one can possibly tell that you darkened your hair, as it does it so naturally and evenly. You dampen a sponge or soft brush with it and draw this through your hair, taking one small strand at a time; by morning the gray hair disappears, and after another application or two, your hair becomes beautifully dark, thick and glossy and you look years younger. Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound is a delightful toilet requisite. It is not intended for the cure, mitigation or prevention of disease.

F. P. HART
"The Expert"
House Mover
—AND—
Building Raiser
Concrete Work of all kinds finished in the best shape with the least expense.
Call or write

Oldest in America Strongest in the World
Mutual life
INSURANCE COMPANY of New York
J. C. HULL, Agent
Phone No. 46

Lehman's CLOTHING HOUSE
ESTABLISHED 1887
MENS AND BOYS OUTFITTERS
808-810 CALHOUN STREET
BEN LEHMAN PROP
Fort Wayne, Ind.

MAY

L 908

0161

What
J. N. George
of St. Joe
has to say about cream separators this week.

IN the last ten or fifteen years there have been dozens of cream separators come on the market which claimed to be "world beaters." But they couldn't make good in the hands of the users and one by one they dropped out of sight.

Their owners were willing to take a risk and they lost. If you buy a cream separator from us you run no risk of dissatisfaction or loss.

The De Laval is tested and time proved

Why experiment? What's the use of taking chances with a machine you don't know much about, or an interior machine, when you know that a De Laval is recognized everywhere as the "World's Standard."

More than thirty-five years of experiment and experience have made the De Laval pre-eminently the best machine on the market for the separation of cream.

If you have no separator now, or an inferior one, we can sell you a De Laval on such terms that it will pay for itself while you are using it.

Sooner or later you will buy a DE LAVAL

For EXPERT
Auto Repairing
and Painting
GO TO
CAMPBELL & SON
AUBURN, IND.

Satisfaction guaranteed.

Our Painter and Mechanic are high class workman.

Special attention will be given to your Electrical equipment and Magneto work

We also charge storage batteries.

Get Our Prices.

Sound
Pure Bred
Percheron
Stallion
Right Sort
Enrollment No. 2873

Years past, this horse has been standing at Auburn; but we are now located at St. Joe in the barn just north of the B. & O. tracks near the mill. Will stand for the season at home, 2 miles north of St. Joe on Monday and Tuesday of each week; and on Wednesday, Thursday, Friday and Saturday of each week in the barn at St. Joe

TERMS:
$15 to Insure Living Colt

E. W. BEABER
Owner

Let Us Print Your Sale Bills

SPENCERVILLE
R. F. D. No. 1.

Phillip Chaney raised his barn, Thursday.

August Klenk and family visited relatives at Ft. Wayne, Sunday.

George Horn and wife spent Sunday with Sam Betz and family.

Earl McNabb, of Auburn, spent over Sunday with his parents, John McNabbs'.

Mrs. George Horn and daughter Mary, spent Tuesday afternoon with Mrs. D. K. Horn.

Geary Horn returned to Valparaiso, Sunday evening, after visiting with his parents a month.

Mrs. Frank Horn and daughter Venus, and Jay Mason were Fort Wayne shoppers, Thursday.

The Misses Ethel and Beatrice Dwyer, and Mary and Anna Nellian spent Sunday afternoon with Thelma and Wilma McNabb.

The Misses Mary and Hazel Welch and Messrs. Ervin Souder and Jennings Horn spent Sunday afternoon with August Klenke and family.

A Deporable Condition.

There is no agency that has been so responsible for broken-down constitutions and prolonged illnesses as has been the grip. This disease impairs the functions of the glands of the body. The liver and kidneys cannot remove the impurities, poisonous matter accumulates and the entire system is out of order. If the glands are not restored to their normal condition, the body will be an easy prey for serious maladies. A disordered liver sometimes causes a cough which can easily be mistaken for lung trouble. An inactive liver is often responsible for stomach and bowel trouble GLANDO was prepared to act especially upon the glands of the body; it removes accumulated poisons, and renews glandular activity. If you have no strength or exhaust easily, give GLANDO a test and see what it will do for you. Don't drag around and feel so miserable. You can get a week's treatment of GLANDO for 50 cents. For sale by All Druggists.

SPENCERVILLE R. F. D. NO. 2

The attendance at the Brick Church was 69, collection $1 85.

Ed Billman and wife were Sunday guests of Vernie Morrow and wife.

Mr. Koeppe took W O. Lake and family to LaOtto, Sunday, to spend the day.

Mrs. Wm. Smith and mother, Mrs. Koch, made a business trip to Hicksville, Friday.

Protracted meeting will begin at the Brick church. June 1st. Everybody cordially invited.

Fay Wilmot, Margaret, Ellen and William Lake spent Sunday with C. M. Wearley and family.

Miss Grace Cook left Monday to work for her brother, Charles Cook and wife, at Springfield Center.

Miss Violette Tyndall was at Ft. Wayne, last week, having her tonsils removed. She is getting along nicely.

Mrs. Leona Bowerman and daughter Ruth, of Angola, accompanied by her mother, Mrs. Vol Hay, were Saturday guests of Mrs. Vernie Kelley and husband.

Mrs Schuler returned to her home at Baltimore, O., last week, after a month's visit with her daughter, Mrs. C. M. Wearley and family.

Observe Memorial Day

The Post Office will observe Memorial Day by closing at the following period:

CLOSED.
12:00 noon to 5:30 p. m.
ELGIN CURIE, P. M.

Notice.

The general public is informed that Postal Money Orders will not be issued after 7:30 p. m., each day. This ruling is the same that has prevailed at the local post office and is published to promote the facilities of the Postal system and to obviate unnecessary delay. The Post Office is closed at 8:00 p. m., as usual

ELGIN CURIE, P. M.

WELL MAY NATION HONOR THE LIVING AND DEAD HEROES

MOTIVES of patriotism. Motives of real Americanism. Motives of divine justice and truth actuated the soldier boys of this great Civil war.

Greater motives for the conduct of life no man hath ever known. Because of these things it is well that we celebrate Memorial day. Well that we strew flowers on graves of our heroic, departed dead. Well that we cast blossoms of springtime upon river's wave and ocean's turbulent tide. Well that while honoring the departed we also cherish the living, letting them know that we appreciate the work they did and the united country they have given us as our heritage.

Silently and slowly, slowly and silently, the years are passing. Soon all of the "boys in blue" will be resting on "Fame's eternal camping ground." Twenty years from now, so rapidly are the old soldiers going, that there will be only a few, a very few, of them left. While they still linger with us, let us not be ashamed to tell them that we appreciate their devotion to country and to its ideals. Let us counsel with them, knowing that from them we may learn valuable lessons—lessons that if learned will do us all good and make us of worth to oncoming generations.

To us has the Eternal given a marvelously fertile and wonderful country. A country that can supply the nations of the world with all manner of products, a country that is wonderful in domain, progress and personality. It is our country. Ours in which to live. Ours to make clean and spotless. Ours to die for if need be. From the fathers we received it. To our children we shall give it. As it came to us from the fathers better because of their heroisms, God grant that because of our determination it shall be even better as we pass it on to our children. It will be a better country if, learning anew the meaning of the flag and this Memorial day, we live nobly and more truly each and every day seeking to emulate the spirit of those who gave of their all that there might be a land of Freedom perpetual and Liberty forevermore.

We honor the men who made Memorial day possible when we walk in their footsteps and through a worthful life evermore join in telling the story of Old Glory.

Feared the Confederates.

One of the curious incidents of the first day's battle at Gettysburg was that neither of the commanding officers desired to have the battle take place at Gettysburg. General Meade was anxious to fight at Pipe creek and General Lee desired to meet the Union forces at Cashtown, but the battle focused near Gettysburg. The colored population were in a state of panic, for they had been taught to believe that they would be totally annihilated when "the rebels" arrived, and many of them managed to get farther north, dragging all their earthly belongings with them.

An old resident of the town tells how he saw the negroes moving, and how when the little children did not walk rapidly enough their mothers would say, "Fo' de Lord sake, you chillun come right 'long quick! If dem rebs dun kotch you dey tear you all up!" The warning usually had the desired effect with the thoroughly frightened pickaninnies. However, when the Confederates came it was found that they wanted food, money and horses and that little attention was paid to the colored people who remained in the town.

A COMING DEFENDER

Did Not Die in Vain.

The hundreds of thousands who fell on both sides during the war did not die in vain. The power, the divine power, which made for us a garden of swords, sowing the land broadcast with sorrow, will reap thence for us, and for the ages; a nation truly divine; a nation of free men and of freedom; where tolerance shall walk hand in hand with religion, while civilization points out to patriotism the many open highways to human right and glory.

Church Notes

Christian Church Announcements.
St. Joe:—Bible School at 9 a. m.; Morning Worship, 10:15 a. m.; Christian Church, 6:30 p. m.; Leader, Mrs. Donna Kosht.

Lutheran Church Announcements.
A. K. Mumma, Pastor.
St. Joe:—Sunday School, 9:00 a. m.; Christian Endeavor, 6:30 p. m Preaching services 7:30 p. m; Prayer Meeting, Thursday evening.

M. P. Church Announcements.
J. C. Coons, Pastor.
St. Joe:—Sunday School, 9:00 a. m., with a Memorial service, the first time ever observed in our school. A new idea and one that every member should be interested in. Appropriate decorations for the day. Preaching services, 10:30 a. m.; Christian Endeavor, 6:30 p. m.; Prayer Meeting, Thurs. eve, at 7:30.
Fairview:—Sunday School, 9:00 a. m.; Preaching Services, 7:30 p.
Concord:—Sunday School, 9:00 a. m.

Decoration Services.

Next Tuesday afternoon will be the Annual Decoration Services, at the Widney Opera House, with Harry Hilgemann as the principal speaker of the day. The committees necessary for the success of the day has been appointed and they are busily engaged in doing their part to make this meeting a success. They are as follows:

Music:—Mesdames S. W. Tustison, C. C. Bassett and Lora Leighty.

Children:—Mesdames H. C. Hathaway, Wm. Curie and Wm. Koch.

Flowers:—Mesdames Benj. Hamilton, J. D. Leighty, Emma Woodcox, Mary Buchanan, George Wade and Mary Meek.

Flags:—Benj. Hamilton and C. A. Patterson.

Finances:—Ray Reasoner, B. F. Terman and Rolland Bearss.

HEARD AROUND THE CORNER

Born to Grover Curie and wife May 24 a 7½ lb. girl.

YOU CAN DO BETTER at Barney's on Straw Hats.

Mesdames Belle Barney and Nora Kinsey, and Sol Barney and Ray Herrick were at Indianapolis, last week, attending Grand Lodge.

SCHLOSS' of Auburn are showing a big line of Rugs, Curtains and Materials by the yards at reasonable prices.

The members of the three church choirs of the town, will meet in rehearsal, preparatory to Decoration Day services, Friday evening in the Lutheran Church at 7:30 o'clock. Every member is urged to be present.

See Wallace for Building Material at St. Joe Saw Mill,

Among those from here who attended the funeral of Mrs. John Reinoehl, wife of the telephone manager at this place who passed away at the Lutheran hospital in Fort Wayne, last Tuesday evening were: Mr. and Mrs. F. Benninghoff, Mrs. Bert Leonard, Mrs. Garton, Mrs. Bert Bowman, Mr. and Mrs. Leon Sechler, Miss Lucile Gee, Miss Grace Wiers, Mr. and Mrs. H. M. Widney, Mesdames Ira Bone, Maude Monroe, Alice Copp, Blanche Leighty, Bert Jackson, Hillary Shuff, Lizzie Milliman, Chas. Bayman, J. C. F. Abel, Chas. Jackson, I. M. Woodcox and Donna Kosht, Ray Reasoner and wife, Mel Herrick and wife, and Paul Maxwell. The funeral was held at Pleasant Hill in Fairfield township, Thursday afternoon, that being the former home of the deceased lady. Rev. S. O. Redacre of Bryan, Ohio, preached the funeral sermon.

When purchasing silverware, remember that in silver plate no name stands for higher quality or greater durability than the renowned trade mark

1847 ROGERS BROS.

Ask your dealer to show you the various exquisite patterns in which the "Silver Plate that Wears" can be had. The wide latitude for choice in knives, forks, spoons and fancy serving pieces assures satisfaction to every taste.

Sold by leading dealers everywhere. Send for catalogue "CL," showing all designs.

INTERNATIONAL SILVER CO.
Successor to Meriden Britannia Co.
MERIDEN, CONN.

It is better—Indian Gasoline at Patterson's Garage. No higher in price—but better.

Mrs. Harry Kees, of Marion, was home over Sunday.

Men's Work Shoes, $1.75, $2.50 and $2.75, others at $2.00, $3.00 $3.50. BARNEY'S.

Mrs. Wm H. Dieble and little daughter, Nan Elizabeth, of Detroit, were guests of the former's cousin, Mrs. S. W. Tustison, the first of the week.

"WANTED—Men who desire to earn over $125 per month write us to-day for position as salesman; every opportunity for advancement CENTRAL PETROLEUM CO., CLEVELAND, OHIO."

Vivian Murphy 2-yr. old daughter of Chas. Murphy and wife, was operated on May 23, for Mastoid disease. She had been troubled with a running ear for about 6 or 7 weeks and it developed into a Mastoid.

Mrs. Jane Morr of Concord township is asking for a divorce from her husband after 41 years of married life. She complains of cruel treatment from her husband, etc. She asks for a division of their property valued at $40,000. Things of this nature are bad enough for young folks let alone the fathers and mothers showing off in this way.

PRINTING Of All Kinds
not the cheap kind
but the
good kind done here.

Our Classified Ad Department

FreeColumn

All advertisements in this department are free to subscribers only. —EDITOR NEWS.]

POTATOES for Sale:—$1 00 per bushel. Early Patalka and Good Times varieties. Only a few bushels left.
WM. HALLABAUGH

WANTED:—2 Shoats weight 40 or 60 lbs. Poland China perferred.
W. L. HALLABAUGH

For Sale:—2 yearling draft colts, bay in color. Bay horse weighing 1,300 pounds, Sound, and gentle for ladies to drive. Spencerville. B. W. DWYER.

For Sale:—50 bu. Sir Walter Raleigh potatoes. John Doll.

FOR SALE: Sweet Potato, Celery, Pepper, Cabbage, and Tomato plants for sale.
Mrs. G. W. Woodcox.

100 Per Cent.
INCREASED EARNINGS.

The following is fac-simile of certificate of Bond issued to each Depositor in this Bank.

No. ________ Grabill, Ind., ________ 19___

Mr. ________________

THIS IS TO CERTIFY that your DEPOSITS in this bank are INSURED under a bond of THE AMERICAN GUARANTY COMPANY of Columbus, Ohio.

THE GRABILL STATE BANK.

PRESERVE THIS. By Albert Egly, Cashier.

Postal Savings pay 2 per cent. Interest and the money is placed in banks who have to furnish a Bond to the government to guarantee that the funds are safe in that Bank.

We pay 4 per cent. Interest and give you the same guarantee. An increased earning of 100 per cent.

THIS is the only Bank in this community thus insuring its depositors.

Total Assets, over $175,000

The Grabill State Bank
Established 1906

Joseph Witmer, President
David Klopfenstine, v. pres.
Albert Egly, Cashier
Joseph A. Grabill, Director
Peter W. Amstutz, Director
Julius Gehrig, Director
John B. Haifley, Chairman Board Directors

MAY

L 908

0162

The Dreamer's Idea of His Father: "The shadowing of something enormous and indomitable—and lawless—conquering and irresistible and blindly noble."

THE DOER

The TURMOIL

By BOOTH TARKINGTON

An American Story Of American Life For American Readers By an American

It is you and me and all of us—just we, the people—our town—our country—us. And it's no moral tale, nor tale with a moral—unless you care to look for one.

THE DREAMER

The Doer's Idea of His Son: "You're cracked! Oh, I got a fine layout here! One son died, one quit and one's a loon! Don't let me hear from you again until you've waked up; you poor, pitiful, dandelion-pickin' sleepwalker you!"

In Book Form It Is the Best Selling Novel of the Year

Our Next Serial! That's All!

Daily Jots

Order Saturday Evening Post, 5c.

See Wallace for Building Material at St. Joe Saw Mill.

WANTED, ALL THE MEN to know YOU CAN DO BETTER at Barney's on everything you need and wear.

Mahlon Baker of Auburn, and Mrs. Celia Rainier, of Garrett, were guests in the Warner home, Tuesday.

S. S. Widney
Justice of the Peace
Insurance and Real Estate
Phone No. 10
ST. JOE, - - - IND

Fort Wayne Celebration.

Industrial Exposition Opens Monday.
Pageant Begins Tuesday.

Many of the people of St. Joe will spend a part of next week in Fort Wayne with the great Centennial celebration as the attraction. Postmaster E. C. Miller of Fort Wayne who is the general chairman of the celebration assures the people of St. Joe that they will have the "time of their lives" if they can arrange to take in the celebration. The Industrial Exposition with the thrilling hippodrome acts opens Monday for a six-day and night run. The great Historic Pageant will be given on the evenings of Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday. Ex-President Taft will be there Thursday the day of the floral auto parade. The fraternal parade occurrs Tuesday. It will be the biggest week in Ft. Wayne's history.

NATION QUICK TO ADOPT IDEA OF HONORING DEAD

ABOUT two years after the war between the sections of the country had ended it was observed that a few women of Columbus, Miss., had decorated the graves in that vicinity with the choicest of spring's early blooms. This little act of thoughtfulness included Union as well as Confederate soldiers. A New York newspaper published a notice of this occurrence and made a few remarks commending it.

From that humble beginning has sprung our great holiday of the decoration, which was formally established in 1868. At that time Adjutant General Chipman suggested to Gen. John A. Logan, commander in chief of the G. A. R., that the organization set a regular day on which to decorate the graves of the Union soldiers. May 30 was decided upon by General Logan, who urged the people of the nation to keep the day in every city, village and hamlet churchyard throughout the land. He offered no form of ceremony to be followed, but suggested to his comrades that they carry out such testimonials and services of respect as they deemed fitting and proper. In concluding he set forth the earnest hope that the observance which he inaugurated would be kept up from year to year as long as a survivor of the war remains.

On the first memorial day twenty-seven states joined in the celebration and the heroes' graves were strewn with flowers in 183 burying places.

In the following year, 1869, however, more elaborate preparations had been made and the program carried out at the national cemetery was one of the best in all the history of Decoration day. The bodies of thousands and thousands which were gathered from the battlefields of Virginia and Maryland, together with those whose remains were removed from trenches and pits on battle sites, were interred at the beautiful resting place that the government had set aside, and it seemed justly appropriate that unusual ceremonies should take place there.

Entrance to Arlington.

The decoration of the graves concluded the day's lengthy program. Every mound was ornamented with bouquets, wreaths and flags and several memorials of unique design were erected at various intervals throughout the grounds. A signal gun fired by Dupont's battery announced that the day's work was over and benediction was then pronounced by Rev. B. Swallow, chaplain of the department of the Potomac.

The day was a beautiful one and it is estimated that between 25,000 and 30,000 people attended the services. All the departments of the general and municipal governments, the banks, courts and principal places of business were closed, to give all a chance of participating in the ceremonies. Simple exercises in keeping with the spirit of the day were also held at the Soldiers' Home, Oak Hill, Congressional and Glenwood cemeteries.

The amphitheater at Arlington was built in 1873 for the memorial day ceremonies. It was put up hurriedly after the design of Gen. Montgomery Meigs. Twenty-five carpenters, twelve bricklayers and thirty laborers worked on it and completed the structure in less than a month. Plans have been made for years to erect a finer building for this purpose, but the present one, while lacking in form and style, still retains a characteristic beauty. The slender piers and the overhanging vines have lent an added attractiveness to the original design.

General Sheridan's Grave.

FRENCH GUNNERS FIGHT UNTIL THEIR LAST SHOT, THEN BLOW UP PIECES

Save Last Shell to Disable Their Gun When Germans Are Upon Them and Delay Means Death or Capture—One Hero Stays With His "90" for Forty-Eight Hours and Then Loses His Life.

Paris.—How the French field artillery, and in particular the batteries of the famous "75's," were handled during the opening phases of the Verdun battle is detailed in a letter to the Figaro. The letter, written by an officer of field artillery who was in the thick of the fighting, tells in simple style of the superhuman efforts made by the French gunners to stem the tide of the German advance while they were themselves under the fire of heavy artillery.

"On the twenty-first," he writes, "the Germans commenced their preparations for the attack, with a fury that let us know something serious was on foot.

"Our group (a group of 75's is composed of three batteries of four guns each) was in position to the southeast of the Haumont woods. One battery was split up as flanking pieces in three positions—one with two guns to the east of Haumont woods, one to the south and the third to the north of Samogneux, with one gun each. The other two batteries were to the south of hill No. 312. We were supported by a battery of six 90 mm. guns.

"Naturally we responded at once to the German attack with a barrier fire to stop, so far as possible, the enemy infantry from making its way to our lines. The two guns at the east of the Haumont Woods were pushed into position in the Caures ravine and opened fire at 700 meters.

"But the Germans, despite the sacrifice of great numbers of their men, began to arrive in hordes. They appeared through the Caures Woods along the crests running between the Haumont and Caures woods and established themselves there. The two guns here reduced their range and with sweeping fire cut down entire ranks, but new waves appeared to take the places of the fallen men in front of the blazing guns. Still the gunners kept at their work until just as their ammunition was failing the enemy infantry appeared through the Haumont Woods almost in their rear. The gunners then blew up their guns and retreated, taking their wounded with them.

Thirteen Men Fall.

"A battery of 90 mm. guns established upon the Haumont crest, although enveloped by an infernal fire, kept quietly about its business. Shells of 305 mm. caliber were falling all about it. In less than a minute thirteen of the servants fell and its fire began to slacken. Then appeared a first sergeant of a 58 mm. battery, Pierrard, of the —th Field artillery, who reported to the commandant of our group:

"'Mon commandant,' he said, simply, 'my battery no longer exists; give me something else to do.'

"'Very good,' was the answer, 'report to that battery of 90's.'

"Pierrard rallied the remaining men of his battery, they reported to the 90's and in a moment the battery reopened its fire with terrific vigor. For forty-eight hours Pierrard stuck to the 90's, taking charge as the commissioned officers were killed or wounded. He kept in close touch with the commandant and for a time was able to receive from the combat trains extra supplies of ammunition for his duel—for it was a real duel he was waging—against the 'Boches.' But it was at last impossible to send more ammunition to him.

"'Fire every shot you have,' he was told; then blow up your guns and retire.'

"The Germans redoubled their efforts to take this battery that barred their way. Again and again they came surging to the crest. At last they got so close that Pierrard and his men opened fire with their carbines and drove them back. Then they returned to their guns and reopened fire. But their situation was untenable. With their last shots they destroyed the guns by firing them after disabling the recoil mechanism. Then the brave fellows came back. But, alas, in their retreat, Pierrard, the bravest of the brave, was probably killed. When they arrived in safety he was not with them, and has not been seen since. He was not the only one to die valiantly for his country.

Hail of "305" Shells.

"Here is another proof of the tranquil audacity of our gunners. One battery was under a terrific fire of heavy projectiles. A 305 shell burst in its midst, killing the captain, the first sergeant, a chief of section and five cannoneers. Did the others blench? Not they; they only tore off their blouses, and, working in their shirt sleeves, redoubled their efforts to intensify their fire and avenge their chiefs and their comrades.

"During the day of the 22d we received an incalculable number of 305 shells on the Mormont farm and its vicinity. Our situation was all the more difficult because of the difficulty we experienced in getting more ammunition. Hardly one caisson in three of ammunition reached its destination. The road from Ville to Vacherauville was swept by a hellish fire.

"The gun established at Samogneux under a bombardment of all calibers kept up its work of destruction without cessation, except when, on four occasions, the servants had to cease fire and wash the bore to cool it. Finally, pressed by the enemy, they pulled out the clavettes (keys that bolt the piece to the top carriage and whose withdrawal disables it) and retreated.

"Chagrined at being unable to take their guns with them, the men of the section came back in the night to pull it out by hand. They were driven back and the chief of piece wounded. Once more they returned to the charge, this time carrying bombs to blow it up. They got there only to find it already destroyed; a 210 shell had struck it.

Courage and Devotion.

"The same scenes occurred on the 23d. Our men rivaled themselves in courage and devotion. In the evening, after reciprocal bombardments of awful violence, our batteries were ordered to Cote du Poivre (Pepper Hill), where they arrived, miraculously, without accident. The next day, the 24th, was a great day! What a massacre of Boches! This was when the French and German troops were fighting for Hill No. 344.

"We played our fire on the German masses. Their infantry advanced and receded time and time again, and each time our shrapnel played on them, as we lengthened and shortened the range to follow their movements. How many victims did we make? I do not know. All that I can affirm is that we left them there on the hillsides in heaps without number.

"One regiment, moving from the shelter of the Haumont woods, and another from Samogneux, near les Cotelettes, found itself directly in our line of fire and was literally cut to pieces. I assure you that those of ours whom we left behind were amply avenged.

"All that we wish for are similar occasions when we are advancing. Our field artillery at Verdun has shown that it has kept up its reputation; it will speak as it should when still more decisive hours sound."

DR. MARY WALKER

Her quaint figure in a Prince Albert or a cutaway coat and in men's trousers has for many years been one of the sights of Washington. She expects to be stared at as she makes her way serenely through congressional corridors or about the street. She is a suffragist, of course, and is perfectly at home after she has laid her silk tile on a congressman's desk and has begun to argue the cause. A special act of congress gave her permission to wear trousers.

COLLIE HALTS A MAD BULL

Effort of a Dog Saves the Lives of Two Men on Farm in Illinois.

St. Louis.—Fannie, a Scotch collie, saved the life of John C. Shafer, a farmer and the dog's owner, and John Shafer, father of the dog's owner, on two different occasions last week, when the men were attacked by an infuriated bull, according to a story told in Marine, Ill.

When the father went to the barn to feed, the bull attacked him. In trying to get away he fell several times and was bruised. His granddaughter, Nellie Shafer, arrived home from school at that time, and she sent the collie into the lot. The dog halted the bull and permitted the old man to escape.

The next morning, when the son went to the barn to feed, the bull attacked him. His cries attracted Mrs. Shafer, who went to the lot in her night clothes, taking the dog with her, for the second rescue.

Map of Sky Will Show 100,000,000 Stars

A map of the visible universe, upon which the astronomers of the world have been working for 25 years is almost complete. It will contain every star which can be found by the most powerful telescope. The number will not be less than 100,000,000. Some of the stars which will be represented have never been seen by the eye of man and probably never will be seen. They are caught and recorded by the photographic plate, which is more sensitive to light than the retina of the human eye.

Poultry Pointers.

Well fed is half raised.

Poor feeding kills many chicks.

Give no feed for two days after hatching.

Leg weakness results from lack of bone-making feed.

The first chick feed should be a dry mixture of cracked grains. Cracked corn, wheat, Kafir and pinhead oats are all good.

Feed sour milk or beef scrap to help build muscle, feathers and bone. One per cent of bonemeal should also be included in the ration.

Feed three times a day and no more, but add rolled oats to the chick feed twice a day and stale bread crumbs or corn bread will do if there are no rolled oats on hand.

Feed finely cut lettuce, onion tops, or other green stuff if the chicks cannot be allowed to run on grass, for they must have something of this kind to keep the bowels working properly.

Poor growth and lack of thrift usually indicate something wrong with the feeding. A few grains of sand during the first few days after hatching help to prepare the stomach for food later, though the chick is still living on the yolk drawn into its body just before hatching.

Commercial ground feed may be fed or a coffee grinder may be used in cracking the grains. Never feed wet mixtures until the chicks are at least five weeks old. Use cornmeal that has not heated in sack or bin and place a wire screen over it in the trough to prevent it from being scratched out and wasted.—H. L. Kempster, Missouri College of Agriculture.

A Few Things That You May Not Know

Japan is gaining ground on England in the manufacture and sale of toys.

Statistics show there are fewer suicides among miners than among any other class of workers.

Railroads of the United States now operate 51,400 passenger cars.

There are 3,500,000 acres of land in Spain that are devoted to the culture of olives.

There are about 1,000 different kinds of mosquitoes, but you can't tell the difference when they bite you.

Women and girls now outnumber the men in the British isles by 2,100,000.

The United States government is going to make an attempt to domesticate the mink and to improve the species.

Fifty per cent of the timber cut in this country is wasted, according to the opinion of experts.

If we produced as much corn to the acre as do the farmers of England and Germany, the world's supply of that product would be doubled.

A French scientist is experimenting to prevent fogs by floating small quantities of oil on the surface of rivers to check evaporation, to which he contends fogs are due.

THE OLD SOLDIERS!

Our ranks are growing thinner, every year,
And death is still a winner, every year,
Yet we still must stick together
Like the toughest sort of leather
And in any kind of weather, every year.

Our comrades have departed, every year,
And leave us broken hearted, every year,
But their spirits fondly greet us
And constantly entreat us
To come that they may meet us, every year.

Our steps are growing slower, every year,
Pale death is still a mower, every year,
Yet we faced him in the battle
Amid the muskets' rattle,
Defying showers of metal, every year.

We are growing old and lonely, every year,
We have recollection only, every year,
And we bled for this grand nation
On many a field and station
And with any kind of ration, every year.

Many people may forget us, every year,
And our enemies may fret us, every year,
But while onward we are drifting
Our souls with hopes are lifting
To heavenly scenes still shifting, every year.

The Stars and Stripes grow brighter, every year,
With labor burdens lighter, every year,
By blood of soldier sages
Along the rolling ages
On freemen's holy pages, every year.

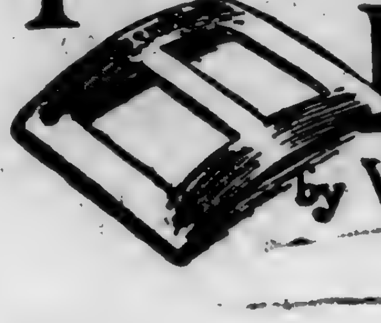
In the May time of the flowers, every year,
We have lived in golden hours, every year,
And our deeds be sung in story
Through the future growing hoary
With a blaze of living glory, every year!

MAY

L 908

0163

THE BLUE BUCKLE



by William Hamilton Osborne

CHAPTER XIX.

A Bolt from the Blue

Craig was no fool. The grass had not grown under his feet. He knew enough of his own trust company to know that the last thing a bank would do with regard to other people's property was to take risks.

He had already seen to it that Cowen, Covington & Brown—and Leclerc also—had served notice on the Peninsula Bank of the fiasco in the delivery of the other buckle. He also took the precaution to write his own registered letter to the Southern bank, notifying them of the claim of Miss Ballantyne.

They went South, Billie and her father—and Craig went too.

In their turn they saw the President of the Peninsula Bank. The President expected them—Craig had notified him.

"Let me introduce," said Craig, "Miss Ballantyne."

Craig produced Billie's credentials. He produced the first buckle. He told the whole story.

"To say the least," the President exclaimed, "this is all very confusing. One Miss Ballantyne was here with ironclad credentials and one buckle. Here are you with ironclad credentials and another buckle"—

"Where is Miss Arany now?" queried Craig.

"You are right," admitted the banker; "that is the name she assumed to escape the very trouble that has arisen. But she has gone back—to New York—or elsewhere. I don't know where. She has brought suit against the bank."

"Just what we'll have to do," said Craig.

"That is the advisable course."

That evening Craig and Billie strolled past the Peninsula Bank—but on the opposite side of the way. The Peninsula Bank was surrounded by trees—it was hidden from the moon—it was shrouded in shadow. It seemed like a sleeping mystery. But it was not altogether mystery. For a bright light shone in one of its windows.

As they watched, this light went out. Another faint light was still discernible, evidently the all night light in front of the safe.

"Let's wait and see," said Craig.

The door of the bank opened. Two men came out upon the steps. One turned and locked the door. Together they descended the stone steps and sauntered along the sidewalk.

"In a moment," said Craig, "they'll be out of the shadow and in the moonlight. Let's wait and see."

They waited—and suddenly Craig caught Billie's hand in his—an act due to his excitement.

"It's Helderman," he exclaimed, whispering; "Helderman and the President of the bank. By George!"

Craig drew her into the moonlight and looked at his watch.

"Nine five," he said. "Let's go back. I want to telegraph."

He telegraphed that night—by cipher prearranged—to Crowder in New York:

> "Saw Helderman at nine five in Miami tonight. Bet you a pair of boots—the twenty dollar kind."
>
> "RUTHERFORD."

He smoked in his hotel till midnight. Then they brought him his answer. It was also in cipher—from Crowder. Translated, it said:

> "You lose. He's here. I'll take the cash. Don't like fifteen dollar hats nor twenty dollar boots."
>
> "CROWDER."

The day after their return to New York Craig called on Miss Ballantyne and found her in a state of joyous excitement.

"Think," she exclaimed, "think what I've got."

Craig shook his head. "I can't think well when you're around," he said. "What have you got?"

"The blue buckle—blue buckle No. 2," she cried.

He stared at it. She was right. This was the genuine article—the open sesame that they'd sought for.

"How did you get it?" he demanded.

"Just came, by mail," she answered. She was exultant.

"You know what this means," he exclaimed. "It means another trip to Florida. Come on."

They went back to Miami by the first express. They walked, side by side, into the Miami bank.

"I'd like to see the President," said Craig. They were ushered into the President's room. A strange man was sitting there.

"I wish to see the President," said Craig.

"I am the President," returned the strange man.

"But—the other man," said Craig.

"The other man has resigned," explained the stranger. "I have been President for two days now."

"At any rate," said Craig, "I'll state our business."

He stated it, laying the two buckles side by side.

"I'm familiar with the matter," said the new man. "My predecessor put me in possession of the facts. Let me go over the papers, if you please."

He went over the papers, scrutinized the blue buckles with a magnifying glass and laid them down. Then he nodded.

"Follow me," he said. They followed him. He stepped to a huge safe and unlocked an inside drawer. He took therefrom a key.

"Follow me," he repeated. They followed him, down a winding staircase, into a stuffy little vault.

"Box 7," he repeated. He handed a key to Billie Ballantyne.

"Insert that key there," he said. He, in his turn, inserted another. The lock yielded. He withdrew the box.

"Perhaps," he commented, "it is more comfortable upstairs in my room."

Billie, clutching the box firmly to her, preceded them They clustered about it as she laid it upon the table of the new President.

"Open it," said Craig.

She opened it.

It contained nothing—except many strips of paper cut the size of folded stocks and bonds.

Billie fell back with an exclamation of alarm.

"I thought so," said Craig to himself. He turned to the new President.

"Mr. President," he said, "may I ask if this bank has recently changed hands?"

The President eyed him coldly.

"Are you a stockholder in this bank, Mr. Rutherford?" he queried.

"I am not, sir."

"Under the circumstances then, sir, no information can be vouchsafed. I can tell you nothing, sir."

He told them nothing. Craig and Billie—the latter weeping hot tears of mortification—went back to New York.

At a glance Craig understood what had happened. Helderman had bought the bank, had exercised dominion over it, had unlocked drawers, procured keys, rifled box number seven, and then, in his exultation, had sent blue buckle number two to Billie Ballantyne. Rutherford could have killed the man with pleasure. But he contained himself.

Craig rang up Crowder immediately on his arrival in New York—and again was both astounded and annoyed to receive assurance that the New York financier was at home—and had been there right along.

"I can't make head or tail of it, Mr. Rutherford," said Crowder. "And that is a fact! It's a great detective game to look wise and pretend to know more than you do; but this job has had my goat ever since I tackled it—and I've run down some very pretty cases in my time! The other night I passed Helderman going away from the house. He was carrying a black traveling bag. It was my chance, I though. I hurried back to put Sims wise—and there he was—Helderman, still in the house!"

With Crowder that night Craig went to Riverside Drive.

They walked up to the corner in front of the Helderman house and stood staring. Helderman presently entered the big white room. They saw him with his restless movements, his strange mannerisms, all the identifying peculiarities which were so impossible to imitate successfully.

"You see, he's at home now," Crowder remarked.

"I don't know about that," replied Craig vaguely.

"What do you mean?" asked Crowder, impatiently.

And before his companion could stop him Craig had clambered over the fence and was dashing across the lawn.

"Look out, the dogs!" yelled Crowder, pulling out his revolver to protect his companion if necessary, and certain that the beasts would leap out at the intruder.

And they did. Before Rutherford had gained the door the savage creatures hurled around the corner of the house, scrambling to resecure the foothold they had lost while turning. Rutherford saw his danger; he was unarmed. He sprang to the door and pounded upon the solid panels with his bare fists.

"Let me in! Help!" he shouted.

The door opened and closed. The detective, watching anxiously with hand on the trigger but afraid to shoot for fear of wounding Craig, saw the young man dragged to safety while the beasts snarled and growled, disappointed at the entrance. Rutherford had played a risky game, but he had won.

The butler recognized Craig, and was very deferential.

"You should have rung, sir," he said. "I'll have the dogs tied up before you venture out again."

"Is Mr. Helderman at home? I would like to see him on a matter of great importance."

"Just a minute; I'll see, sir," the butler said, going to the white room, then turning without opening the door, and going upstairs.

Craig never took his eyes off the door, and listened intently. The sound of furniture being pulled about came to his ears. In two or three minutes the man was back again and threw open the door to the big room, as if looking in there.

"I can't understand it, sir," he said "I thought that Mr. Helderman was at home this evening, but I do not find him. He must have just stepped out. If you will leave any word, sir, I'll ask him to telephone you."

Craig knew that the man was lying, and had gone upstairs only to gain time. Nevertheless, he made the most of his present opportunities, and looked around with close scrutiny.

There was, indeed, only one door, the one by which he had entered. The firelight flirted rosily with itself. The chairs looked as if they had never been disturbed. The little balcony again challenged his curiosity.

"He must have gotten out that way," he thought.

He backed across the room to a point where he could command a good view of the wall back of it, but could see no trace of door or opening giving access to it. Even if it had been used for purposes of exit, one would have had to do some hard climbing to get up to it. Then it ocurred to him that the noise he had heard might have been made by some one dragging a chair or ladder up to the balcony, after using it to reach there, and that a concealed door must be somewhere about it. He reflected, however, that Crowder was outside, watching, and would thus know the secret of the sudden disappearance. He tried to peer out of the big window, but could see nothing; the contrasting darkness was impenetrable to his eyes, used to the light.

He found Sims with Crowder when he returned to the street, and both looked at him doubtfully.

"I was in that room! You saw me?" he asked.

"Yes."

"Then how did Helderman get out?"

"He didn't do anything unusual. He just walked across the room like he was going through a door—only we couldn't see any door—and when he got there he just—went out!"

CHAPTER XX.

The Third Bookkeeper

Out of the depths of discouragement, Rutherford evolved an entirely new plan of attack; and it was in pursuance of this plan that he called on Ferguson, the cashier of the Trinity Trust Company, the bank in which he was heavily interested and expected soon to assume active duties.

"Ferguson," he said, "how does a bank raise funds quickly? Suppose the Trinity Trust needed a million dollars, this morning, how would you raise it?"

"That's a good big question for a starter, Mr. Rutherford; it has often caused financiers to lie awake nights! But if I had some good marketable securities, I could easily turn them into cash."

"At any other bank?"

"At almost any other bank. But there are certain banks which make a specialty of certain bonds, and would therefore take them more readily than others."

Three days after this conversation, the cashier of the Trinity Trust was informed that J. Baron Helderman wished to see him, and would be there in person, within the hour.

It was just thirty-five minutes later, when Helderman came in, carrying a black bag, which he deposited on a table as he took the seat offered him.

"A little matter of business for you, Mr. Ferguson," he said, responding to the cashier's cordial greeting.

"Be glad to do anything for you I can, Mr. Helderman," replied Ferguson.

"Well, there it is, answered Helderman, in his brief and arrogant way which was calculated to impress the hearer with the idea that he was too big a man to waste words.

"A special bond issue?"

"Yes—gilt-edged Bordeline Fives. You can have them at a bargain. I need the money, and I want to turn these over at once. Next week they would cost you a good deal more; but this week I am closing up two or three big things and con use the money to advantage. At the same time, I want as few people as possible to be advised of my affairs."

"I understand," said Ferguson, as he examined the bonds.

Then he pressed a button.

"What's that for?" demanded the financier sharply.

"Some one I must consult," Ferguson answered.

"I told you that I wished to consult as few people as possible," said Helderman, vehemently.

"That isn't the point," responded Ferguson quietly. "We must determine whether or not we are in the market for this particular issue. Send the third bookkeeper here," he added to the boy who had answered his summons.

The cashier rose as the door opened to admit a tall young man, to whom he bowed deferentially.

"Mr. Helderman," said Ferguson, "let me introduce to you our third bookkeeper"—

"Rutherford!" exclaimed Helderman. "What are you doing here? Are you connected with the bank?"

"Mr. Rutherford very largely is the bank, Mr. Helderman," the cashier explained. "He is learning our tricks from the bottom up—and just now the third bookkeeper's desk is taking most of his time. Mr. Rutherford," he continued, addressing Craig directly, "here are some bonds which Mr. Helderman offers us at a very tempting figure."

"What are they?"

"They are Borderline Fives—a million dollars' worth."

"Are these the bonds from Miami?"

"What Miami bonds do you mean, Mr. Rutherford?"

"Why, the bonds belonging to the Ballantyne estate," replied Craig in the most casual manner in the world. "I have been informed that they are now in your possession."

"And [illegible] your informer?"

"That makes no difference, at present. I am simply trying to trace the history of these bonds. Are they the same ones that you brought from Florida"—

"Mr. Rutherford, this is idle! You know—or the public knows—that I have not been out of the city. The Ballantyne bonds are intact; and even if these were they I would have a perfect right to dispose of them, as representing my client's interests."

"You admit that these are the Ballantyne bonds?" persisted Craig, still holding to a quiet tone, void of offense.

"I admit nothing—and—and I deny you the right to cross-examine me! What do you know about the Ballantyne bonds—and the Peninsula bank?"

"It was the Peninsult bank, then? Glad to know it!" said Rutherford.

Helderman looked nettled at his slight slip and took refuge in silence. This self-possessed young man was more than his match today.

"Mr. Ferguson," said Craig after the silence had grown perceptible, "I have reason to believe that these bonds have been offered for sale without the rightful owner's consent. I make no charges against Mr. Helderman here, of course, but I ask you to hold these bonds in our custody until we can investigate them."

"You will do nothing of the kind," said Helderman, clamly. "They are negotiable bonds, payable to bearer. I am that bearer. I came to negotiate a sale. You will give them back to me or buy them from me."

"I may do neither," Rutherford asserted.

"You will do one or the other," Helderman said as positively.

"Mr. Helderman," said Ferguson, "I will give you a receipt for the bonds, and give you an early decision about them, say tomorrow morning."

"Till tomorrow, then," agreed Helderman.

"Ferguson, have you heard—any tales—about Helderman these days?" asked Craig after the visitor departed.

"Why, he is all the time involved in risky financial speculations — things that the rest of us would not dare tackle—but he always manages to win out with them. What do you mean, Mr. Rutherford?"

"I mean just this. Helderman will bear watching; and, mark my words, he won't last long down here. Up like a rocket, down like a stick!"

CHAPTER XXI.

The District Attorney's Office

Rutherford met Miss Ballantyne and her father by appointment at the Criminal Courts Building. It had required persuasion on his part to make Billie consent to come to this awe-inspiring place! not that she feared for herself, but her constant thought was of her father and his safety; and it seemed to her that they would be thrusting their necks into a noose to venture thus into the law's domain. Craig, however, had assured them that their identity would be kept absolutely secret for the present. They were again to be Mr. and Mrs. Talcott. Mr. Talcott, in fact, was the only name by which Ballantyne was known at his hotel.

He took them to the District Attorney's office, introduced Brookfield and told the latter their story and Helderman's.

"Well, what do you think?" asked Craig as he finished; and Bookfield said:

"Not long ago, an old broker, Mr. Braine, was knocked down in the narrow corridor of a building in Broad street. He was carrying an envelope—a big brown one containing negotiable securities worth many thousand dollars. The man who knocked him down helped him to get up, handed him his brown envelope, apologized and dashed on. It was rather dark in the corridor, and the man's face could not be seen. Mr. Braine hurried on to the bank to deposit his securities in the safety vault. The next day he had occasion to take them out and examine them. His big brown envelope contained nothing but blank papers. The man who had knocked him down the day before had changed envelopes with him. That man seems to have been—J. Baron Helderman!"

"What makes you think so?"

"It was late, after dusk. Two men were trailing Helderman on another matter. They saw him, and him only, enter and leave the corridor. The safety vault had been kept open a few minutes overtime to accommodate Mr. Braine; so these two men know exactly the time. They are positive that only Helderman went into the place; and no one else either entered or left it at that time. Braine came staggering by and explained his mishap, about two minutes after Helderman had disappeared."

"Then it's clear that Helderman did it!" cried Rutherford, exultantly. "By George! That's where he got the cash to buy the bank at Miami."

"It's clear to the two men who saw Helderman in Broad street, but its not clear to Crowder and another man who saw Helderman at the same identical time—on Riverside Drive."

The three callers rode uptown in the same cab; but to Craig's surprise Ballantyne refused to go with them to the West Tenth street house.

"Why keep up this elaborate hide-and-seek, sir?" Rutherford questioned.

"Mr. Rutherford," he said stiffly, "I live now, as I have lived ever since I landed, at the Monolith. Good afternoon. Goodbye, little daughter."

Craig and Billie paused at the steps of the West Tenth street house. The girl said impulsively:

"Come in, and I'll show you all the secrets of this wonderfully mysterious house, then maybe you'll be satisfied!"

CHAPTER XXII.

"Straw-Ber-Ries!"

The voice rose shrill and penetrating in the aristocratic air of Riverside Drive near the Helderman house. The strawberry vender was a ragged-looking individual, with a mop of tangled, curly hair, which proclaimed him a former citizen of Italy. His complexion was swarthy, and two large, brassy looking rings ornamented his ears.

As he continued to hawk his wares a young woman, handsomely dressed, passed by him, ignoring the fruit. She was walking somewhat hurriedly, and had presumably come from the subway, after a forenoon's shopping downtown. The merchant, seeing that his berries were disdained, followed the lady quietly and unobtrusively until she had entered the apartment standing opposite the mansion, on the side street. Then he slipped in behind her before she could close the door.

So quietly had she come, that she gave a little scream as she turned and saw him. The door leading to a private elevator was half open, and she evidently ran it by automatic pushbuttons, for no attendant was in sight.

"What do you want?" she asked, annoyed. "I told you that I didn't wish any of the fruit! How dare you follow me in!"

"But eet ees such fine fruit, ladee—and so cheap!"

"Don't bother me!" she snapped, and was just about to enter the elevator, when the man uttered a single word, in a low voice:

"Helderman!"

Miss Arany—for it was she—turned with a start.

"What do you want? Who are you?" she exclaimed.

"I will tell you in a moment. I wish to see you; it concerns Mr. Helderman, and it is important."

The man had dropped his Italian accent and stood quietly while Miss Arany sought to penetrate his disguise.

"How do I know your business is worth listening to?" she asked, doubtfully. "You see, I am here alone in the apartment"—

"No, Mademoiselle! We can go through the secret passage, and you will have all your servants—and the dogs—at your command. You see—I know!"

Miss Arany frowned at his allusion to the secret pasage, and again looked at him sharply. Then deciding that, since the man already knew of the hidden entrance, it would do no harm to grant him an interview, and might possibly be to her advantage, she entered the car without another word and the man, unbidden, followed. He smiled at her with assurance as he entered.

It was a small, square car, luxuriously upholstered. Heavy, bevelled glass on three of its sides gave its occupants abundant opportunity for self-examination. Certainly the mirrors had never reflected a pair affording such contrast as this exquisite woman of fashion and the tall, unkempt merchant with undeniably dirty face. Nevertheless, the woman showed no symptoms of fear, but calmly pressed a button sunk in the panelling.

The elevator, in violation of the name, descended.

It was the same one whose mysterious disappearance had so puzzled Michael Gooley, and its mechanics were very simple. As it descended, a second chamber, or story, built just above it came down and occupied its place. It was this little white closet into which Mike had stuck his bewildered head.

Meanwhile, the car below gave access to an underground passage which led to the banker's luxurious home across the street.

The ragged street merchant had never traveled this route before, and although he betrayed no outward surprise, he metaphorically took off his hat to the genius of the man who had worked it out. He could see how, under the guise of establishing a plumbing and heating system, the banker had been able to connect his mansion and his apartment house without exciting suspicion, and had thus managed to secure a means of exit and entrance to his home without fear of detection. For it was now evident that the mansion and the apartment house had been designed and built by the same hand.

Irene Arany unlocked a second door, and the man following her felt the rich nap of heavy carpet under his feet. He was in a dark back hall or lobby of the marble house. Then they ascended some back stairs, apparently unobserved, and the man was ushered into a small den or alcove jutting off the hall.

For the first time since they had started from the apartment, Miss Arany spoke.

"You have a terribly dirty face, Mr. Craig Rutherford!" she observed.

"I don't doubt it!" the amateur merchant replied with a laugh.

"Why did you watch me, today—and how did you know about the underground passage?" she demanded.

"Which question first?"

"The last one."

"To tell you the sober truth, I didn't know about it; I just deduced it."

"Humph. Adding amateur detective to your other accomplishments, eh? This time, however, I am afraid you have overstepped even your customary rashness. Do you realize that you have placed yourself wholly within my power—and that I am not taking any chances these days?"

"Exactly so!" replied Craig, unmoved.

"State your business then!" cried Miss Arany, irrated by his sangfroid. "But I warn you beforehand, that, when you get through, I shall have something to say—and perhaps also the man who owns this house!"

"The net is closing in around Helderman," answered Craig. "At least three diferent cases are being rounded up against him. This jaunt to Florida, by which he secured by fraud"—

"How by fraud? The papers and evidence were in our possesion—the estate is rightfully mine!" she stormed but a frightened look had come into her eyes.

"It is too late to try to make me believe that, Miss Arany! Let us try to devise other ways and means."

"For what purpose?" she demanded.

"To save yourself. I have some influence with the authorities and Miss Ballantyne"—

"Miss Ballantyne—bah! What do I care for that presumptuous baggage or her father? If I had those papers and they would save his life I wouldn't turn my hand over!"

"Now I think your bitterness is as misplaced as was your loyalty, awhile ago," Craig said, dryly.

"Oh, of course you think so! Miss Ballantyne has but to simper with those big, babyish, brown eyes of hers and crook her little finger, and you immediately dance attendance!"

"That may be," retorted Craig; "but to speak slangily, I am not the only one!"

"Then I pity his taste!"

"Whose—Helderman's?"

"What do you mean? J. Baron Helderman wouldn't look at a girl like that a second time."

"I'm not so sure," mused Rutherford.

"I am!" Miss Arany said emphatically, her eyes flashing.

"Tell me, Miss Arany," he said, looking her straight in the eyes; "what is Mr. Helderman to you?"

"For three years he has been—everything!" she answered defiantly.

"Still, you cannot be married to him. Your husband abroad"—

It was a chance shot, but again it told. She changed color and retored angrily:

"He was poor—commonplace! What could he offer me in comparison with Helderman?"

"But suppose now that Helderman—tires?"

"He will not dare—after all I have done for him—after all I know!"

"Yet I am sure that he is making love—to Miss Ballantyne."

Rutherford said this with a show of bitterness on his own part, which led Miss Arany to believe he was intensely jealous. The girl gave a short, mocking laugh.

"Making love—bah! He makes fun of her to me! I know that he called to see her once, which was for purposes of his own. Now it is no longer necessary."

"Then if he called again?"—

"He will not do so!" The woman said it with the positive assurance by which one seeks to allay one's private fears.

"You are mistaken," returned Craig. Helderman is going again, and he is going as an ardent wooer, even a desperate one."

"Prove it!" she cried, her eyes blazing.

"I shall do so, Miss Arany—with your assistance."

"With my assistance—yes! No one shall say that Irene Arany is a dolt and a fool—a mere plaything to be cast aside!"

"I have not said that, Miss Arany," said Rutherford, the utmost consideration in his tone. "But I will say this—you are being made a tool of, and you don't know it! While you sit at home here looking after that—well, that alibi or double of his—Mr. Helderman is amusing himself elsewhere, and laughing at you for being a dupe!"

"No, NO!" she screamed, in a perfect frency of rage. "He would not dare! I'll give you one chance to prove it, Craig Rutherford; and if you do not make good your words—I'll hunt you out and kill you!"

(Continued Next Week)

ON BEING NATURAL.

The world has established certain standards of etiquette for those who would be recognized as well bred and cultured. The earlier in life these standards are adopted the better for the woman. Fortunate indeed is she who has cultivated early in life a soft voice, poise, grace of carriage and the "pretty" way of doing things. She need have no fear that in a moment of excitement she will forget herself and be guilty of a faux pas.

Absolutely destructive of naturalness in manner is self-consciousness. This affliction amounts at times almost to an obsession. It causes women to shout who wish to speak low; it leads often to an assumption of bravado, causing criticism that may be unjust, but is invited and unavoidable.

It is a gentle art, the art of being natural: one that is essential to every woman who wishes to be regarded as interesting, attractive and popular. No woman with an ounce of brains will allow herself to become the victim of affection if she would get the most that is possible out of life.

EASY TO STOP LEAK.

A leak in a gas or water pipe frequently causes no end of damage before the plumber can be called. Still it can be stopped temporarily with a filling mixture made of yellow kitchen soap and whiting, mixed in a thick paste.

The Publishers Co-Operative Co.
501 S. Dearborn St., Chicago
No. 21

MAY

L 908

U 164

"The Sign Beyond"

By J. Glenn Miller. Auburn, Indiana

PRIZE STORY No. 9

"Feeling that my last heart strings had been severed, I left the office without making further reply.

"I returned home, and related to Mr. Burrows the nature of our interview, and to my great surprise he broke down in tears and begged me to accept father's offer. 'If only for our children's sake,' he pleaded between sobs. This was too much. I had borne the pangs of humiliation, hunger and everything but shame with a brave heart, doing everything in my power to encourage and help regain our former position in society, and to think that he was now ready to give up and quit. For the last week I have spent both days and nights trying to devise some plan, whereby at least, our home could be kept together, but to every suggestion I offered he would only shake his head without speaking.

"So here I am seeking the last means of relief through the divorce court.

"Great God! Who would have thought that I should ever have come to this. But it is not for me. It is only for James and the children," she said, and settled back in her chair crying.

"Your case is certainly a sad one," commented Carl, glancing at his watch in an effort to hide the tears that were rapidly filling his own eyes. "I will be pleased to render you any assistance within my power," and rising from his chair, added, "It will be necessary for me to give your case some thought, and as it is now getting late, if you will call tomorrow at,—say 3 o'clock, I may at that time be able to outline my plans of procedure. I understand you that any other solution will be preferable to a divorce?"

"Yes, indeed, I only pray that our home may be saved and my husband restored."

As they approached the outer door et his last five dollars, a crisp new bill, and placed it in Mrs. Burrows' hand. "Take that to the children," he of the office, Carl drew from his pocksaid, as a present from me, or buy them whatever you think their needs most require."

Under any other circumstances, Mrs. Burrows would have promptly declined his charity, but now, her only thought was for her loved ones, although she too was weak from hunger, and she gladly accepted the money with a hearty, "God bless you."

Closing the door after her, Carl walked slowly and thoughtfully back into his private room. All was now quiet save for the woman's heavy foot steps on the stone floor, echoing against the walls of the vacant corridors. Stopping before the large window that faced the street, he stood there fully twenty minutes in the semi-darkness of the autumn evening, blankly watching the electric signs that were now dotting the street below.

Presently his attention was arrested by a clicking sound at the lock of the other sample of Mr. Penn's business where he could see the door, he recognized the form of Abner from the dim light in the corridor. He had opened the door, and was extracting his key from the lock, and as he stepped aside to close it, he recognized also the portly form of Professor Bank entering.

"Just step into my room," Abner was saying, as he closed and locked the door behind him. "This is another sample of Mr. Penn's business ability, going home at night and leaving the office door unlocked." And he followed the professor into his room.

Carl had stepped lightly back to his former place by the window to avoid their observation, but was undergoing a mental struggle to determine whether or not he should make his presence known.

"If I do," he argued to himself, "I may be throwing away an opportunity to gain information that will be valuable in Mrs. Burrow's case, as well as helping me to determine a definite course for my future relations with Abner." He had already made up his mind as to what his future relations with the professor would be. "And if I don't." He hesitated. "I wonder if it would be stealing the information simply to accept the situation that has been thrown upon me. I certainly have as much right here as they," he reasoned. "But if they should discover me here, I would feel like a thief." Then he thought of turning on the light and pretending to read, if he was discovered, but as there was only a frosted glass partition between their rooms, he knew that would not do. However, he finally decided to remain, regardless of the consequences, and carefully placing a chair near the door that separated them, sat down to listen.

"All of those books and papers that I gave you this afternoon," the professor was saying, "must be kept in absolute concealment."

"Yes, I rented an extra box in the safety deposit vault this afternoon and placed them all in it after leaving your office," Abner returned.

"And as I told you," the professor continued, "I have made arrangements for the other two parties interested to call here this evening and formally assign over to you their respective interests. They are very influential in financial circles, or one of them at least, and to avoid their being suspicioned as having any connection with this deal, in case it should be found out, they desired to have this meeting arranged after regular business hours. Of course," he hastened to assure, "to the world, you shall be known only as our attorney, lawfully retained."

"Maybe I had better unlock the outside door?" inquired Abner.

"Yes, I believe I should," acquiesced the professor, "for they will make no more noise than necessary and we may not hear them."

After unlocking the door Abner had scarcely resumed his seat when the door was quietly opened, and the two men entered. Directed by the only light, which was in Abner's room, they walked to where Abner and the professor were seated.

"Colonel Hosington, this is Lawyer Richards," the professor started to introduce.

"Hello! Hello Abner!" exclaimed the Colonel, indulging in a hearty hand shake. "This is rather a surprise party, isn't it?"

"Well, if you are as much surprised to see me here as I am to see you; it surely is," was the reply.

Then turning to the Professor, "And this is that splendid young lawyer you have been telling me about?"

"It certainly is," assured the Professor.

"Then why in H— didn't you tell me who it was?"

"I did tell you it was Mr. Richards."

"Yes, but there are a thousand Richards in the city and the directory looks as if half of them were practicing law. If you had said Richards & Penn, then I would have known whom you meant, and you would not have steered me to my son-in-law elect, to pull off a deal of this kind."

"But the name of this firm is not Richards & Penn," corrected the Professor.

"Why not?"

"Because Mr. Richards shook Penn loose from the firm only today," answered the Professor, looking to Abner to substantiate his last statement.

"That's right," responded Abner.

The look of the Colonel was appalling. It seemed that every drop of blood had left the surface of his face, and as he staggered to a chair gasped, "I'm ruined."

"How ruined?" asked the Professor, taking hold of his shoulder to keep him from falling to the floor.

"Penn will tell it all," he said, in a tone hardly audible.

"Penn knows nothing about your connection with this deal," the Professor hastened to assure him. "Nor did anybody else outside of us three, before you entered this room five minutes ago. Now straighten up and quit acting the baby," the Professor added when the Colonel showed material signs of relief.

Immediately the color returned to the Colonel's face, and he looked about the room at the others with a silly smile.

"I'm thankful he's out," resumed the Colonel when he was again able to speak, "for I have always looked upon Abner as a man that could be relied on and would make his mark in the world if once unhampered by that indolent Penn."

"Haven't my actions always indicated the friendliest feeling toward you, Abner? And I've done practically all in my power to assist you in your suit for my daughter's hand."

"And I certainly have appreciated your attitude in that respect," assured Abner.

"As soon as I have entirely put an end to her clandestine meetings with that Penn, which will now be in short order, I'm sure you'll have no further trouble in securing her hand in marriage. I would never have permitted that Penn to call on her as long as he did, had it not been that I thought she would soon see that he didn't amount to anything. I've had some experience with such fellows as he in the family, and she knows better than to marry without my consent. Why, I'd make her regret it all the days of her life. You know the kind of a man I am, don't you, Professor?"

"Yes, we all saw a demonstration of your qualities just a moment ago," answered the Professor, with a merry twinkle of the eye.

"But that was not a fair test of ability to revenge," he said, apologizingly.

The Professor knew that most of the Colonel's speech was meant for Abner's benefit, so he let the subject drop.

"By the way, Abner, did you meet Mr. Williams?" asked the Colonel. "He is the last survivor of all the company's stockholders, except the Professor and I. We were unable to freeze him out, so have taken him in as a partner to share a hand in the 'big game.'"

After the introduction the Colonel said: "Now let us get to business. Abner have you got the papers prepared for us to sign?"

"No," said Abner, "but I will call the public stenographer from the Burten House across the street, and it will take me but a few moments to have them ready."

"You had better write them yourself," suggested the Colonel," and then there will be no chance for this matter to get noised around."

Abner now set to work at drawing up the final papers while the others engaged in a friendly chat regarding matters pertaining to the business. Their talk, however, was spoken in an undertone, which was appreciated by Abner but rendered it almost inaudible to Carl. From what the latter could catch of the conversation, it seemed that the Colonel had engaged himself in the affairs of the medical company for the sole purpose of wrecking his vengeance on some person who had at one time displeased him. Learning that that person had invested heavily in the company's stock, he immediately undertook to corner it by picking it up as fast as it appeared on the market. In this way, he was soon voting the majority share and once in control the rest was easy. Special assessments were then in order, and the more assessments the cheaper became the stock until within a short time it was practically valueless. All those who had not sold when the stock was marketable had abandoned it on account of the frequent high assessments, except the one, Mr. Williams. The stock had been cornered, the board of directors had been dispensed with, and the Colonel's wrath was appeased. He had now proposed this plan of winding up the business, after which the profits were to be divided up among the three and Abner was to have a nice large fee for his part in the work. To this the Professor had readily agreed—for promoting was his specialty—and Mr. Williams acquiesced by his silence.

This was an entirely different under standing than Carl had gained from the Professor on his first visit, but it seemed to him like the logical explanation of the affair.

Abner, having completed the article of assignment pushed back from the table and read aloud, as follows:

> "We, the undersigned, William H. Bank, John J. Hosington and Frank C. Williams, each of us and respectively, for value received, do hereby transfer, assign and set over to Abner Richards, a l of our interest, right and title in and to the assets of the Bank Medical Company, together with all the stock of said company now owned or controlled by any or either of us and that which is outstanding, but which, we hereby certify has been forfeited by non-payment of assessments.
>
> "And the said Abner Richards is further, hereby authorized to take upon himself all the former duties of the said William H. Bank, President, and John J. Hosington, Secretary and Treasurer, of said company and make such transfers and entries upon the books of said company as may be necessary to complete this and subsequent transaction of the said company's business.

The reading was followed by a shuffle of feet, a further scratching of the pen, and the meeting was soon adjourned. Abner placed the document in the firm's safe for safe keeping until morning and the four left the office together.

As the footsteps of the departing quartette ceased to echo in the corridors, Carl emerged from his room and went directly to the office safe.

"I guess I had better get a letter press copy of this article," he said to himself as he speculated for the combination in the semi-darkness. Presently there was a click of the lock, and the heavy iron door swung open. Carefully extracting the subject of his quest, he tore open the envelope in which it was enclosed and proceeded to make the copy. After completing the operation he inspected the original paper to see if the letter press had left any tell-tale marks. But by dampening the cloth only slightly all evidences of the operation had been avoided, then he looked at the copy. It was rather dim, but to his great satisfaction was entirely legible, especially the signatures of the Professor and Colonel, which had been written in an extra heavy hand. Returning the document in a new envelope to its place in the safe, he placed the copy in his pocket and left the office feeling quite satisfied with his evening's adventures.

Determined to have a solution of Mrs. Burrow's case before she called on the following afternoon, as well as a solution of his own case with Abner, which he had mentally set for the next morning, he went from the office straight to his room without stopping for his evening meal.

On arriving he was surprised to find that Abner had preceded him there and was apparently sleeping soundly. Quietly as possible Carl prepared for bed and climbed in beside him. In a moment he was apparently sleeping soundly, too.

The business that was transacted there between that and the time they arose the next morning would have been sufficient to fill several large volumes, although there was not a word passed between them, each feigning sleep.

Abner was working out a plan to sever Carl's connection with the firm and without jeopardizing the interests of his new clients, while Carl was working out a plan to sever his own connection without injury to Mrs. Burrow's case, and when they arose the next morning and started out together for breakfast, they both seemed satisfied with their night's work.

They chatted together about various things of interest across the breakfast table, but they were careful not to refer to the subject that was then of most interest to each of them until they reached the office. There they took their respective rooms, and all was quiet save for the frequent sound of footsteps hurrying past the door. It was Abner who finally broke the silence.

"Carl," he said, "will you step in here a moment?"

Carl's heart began to flutter, for he knew well the object of the call. Pushing aside the chair he had occupied the evening before, he opened the door and stepped into Abner's room.

Abner was sitting cocked back in his chair with both feet on his desk and looking through the morning paper.

"Carl, how will you trade your interest in the firm for my interest in Miss Hosington?" he began, with a smile and laying his paper aside.

"Most any way you suggest," answered Carl.

"Well, I would suggest that I have some boot, for you know your interest in the firm is only one-half, while my interest in Miss Hosington is almost fee simple—subject to your small equity."

"Perhaps that is a matter for her to decide," suggested Carl.

"And perhaps it lies entirely with her father," corrected Abner, and continued. "But without jesting, don't you really think it advisable for us to dissolve this partnership business? Our views from a business standpoint are so entirely different that I feel it is impossible for us to continue——,"

"What are your terms?" interrupted Carl.

"Well, I thought we could each retain the furniture that is in our private rooms, that is not a part of the partnership anyway, then I will give you two hundred and fifty dollars for your interest in the library, safe, typewriter and all other things out there and one half of that five hundred dollars the Professor paid me the other day as a retainer.

"Paid us," Carl corrected, and then continuing. "In other words, you will give me your share of that first retainer received from the Professor for my entire interest in the firm, library, furniture and fixtures? Won't that be depriving you, Abner?"

Abner was becoming astonished at Carl's demeanor. He had never known him to exhibit so much self reliance, and had really looked for some opposition to his plans of winding up their partnership relations, but determined not to betray any surprise, he continued:

"That's more than you would get out of it, if I were to go into court and ask for an accounting and a winding up of the firm's business."

"How about the 'Good Will' of the firm? Isn't that worth anything?"

"Good will," echoed Abner. "I will take the Professor's business, which would follow me any way, and you can have those few old 'sisters' you have gathered up from your secret societies and the rest of the good will.

"And me retain the lease on our present quarters?" Carl inquired.

"Yes, I will assign my interest in the lease to you. I prefer new quarters, anyway."

Carl hung his head. A storm was raging within him. He was not angry with his partner and lifelong friend, but his whole spirit was crushed by the position Abner was taking, and the attitude he assumed. When he again raised his head there was an expression visible that Abner had never before seen, and it cast a sense of sadness over him. Then Carl began, slowly at first, but warming to his subject as he talked:

"Abner, I fear you are making a grave mistake in associating yourself with that Medical Company. One that you will deeply regret. I fear that your vision is like their own, obscured by the glitter of gold.

"That they are perpetrating a fraud is no longer supposition. I know that to be a fact from a personal interview with one who was by them defrauded. One whose home was wrecked, whose husband was wrecked, and who with four little children under six years of age, are now suffering from hunger and cold. This woman has one alternative from starvation, and that to divorce a kind and loving husband, now broken in mind and body by his loss, and return, with her children, to her father who has for years disowned her.

"Only last evening I gave this poor mother my last five dollars, and as I stand now, with less than a dollar between me and hunger, under no circumstances would I accept or use one cent of that Professor's gold.

"However, Abner, if you are still determined to break off your relations with me for the gold of the Professor's, I have but one request to make, and that is that you take the money you would pay me and go and give it to this poor family to whom it belongs.

"You talk about prosperity! You talk about success. If the Great God in Heaven will permit such men as those to prosper, then the teachings that I received on my dear old mother's knee were only a myth.

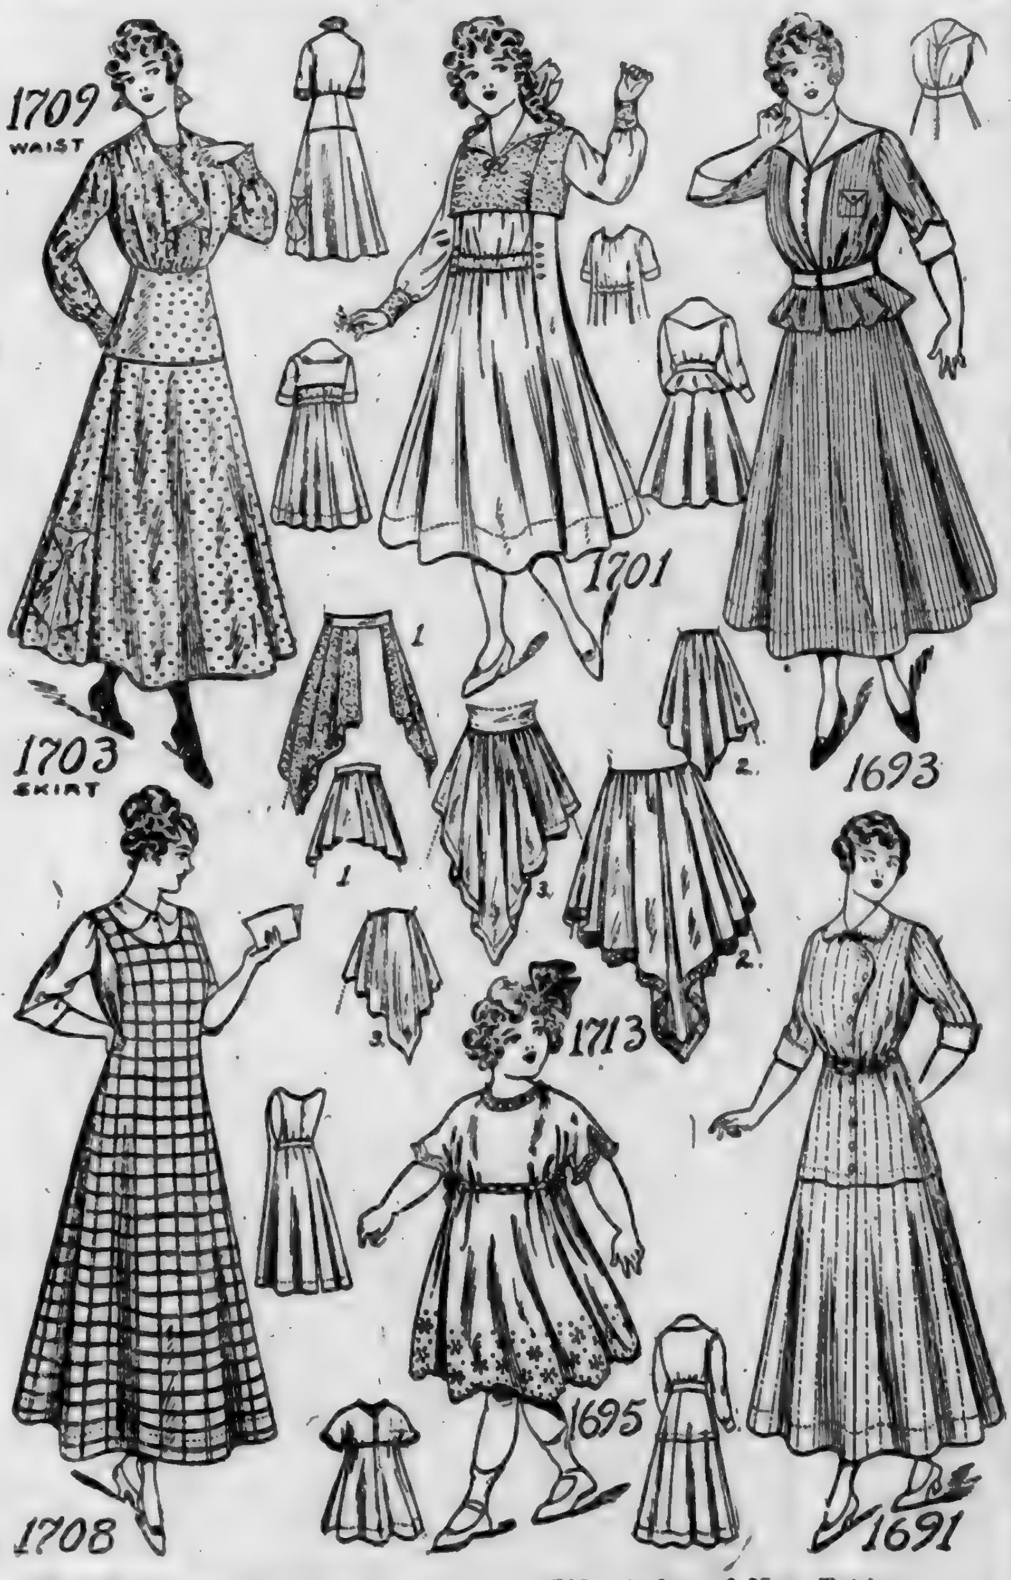
(Continued Next Week)

It's difficult to keep your circle of acquaintances squared.

Our Fashion Department

Prepared Especially for this Paper

Send All Orders Direct to this Paper



1709-1703—Ladies' Costume.

Waist 1709, cut in 6 sizes: 34, 36, 38, 40, 42 and 44 inches bust measure. Skirt 1703, cut in 6 sizes: 22, 24, 26, 28, 30 and 32 inches waist measure. It requires 6½ yards of 44-inch material to make the entire dress, for a medium size. The skirt measures 3¼ yards at the foot.

TWO separate patterns, 10 cents FOR EACH pattern.

1701—Girls' Dress.

Cut in 4 sizes: 10, 12, 14 and 16 years. It requires 5 yards of 36-inch material for a 12-year size, for the dress and 1¼ yards for the Bolero. Price, 10 cents.

1693—Dress for Misses and Small Women. With or Without Peplum.

Cut in 3 sizes: 16, 18 and 20 years. It requires 6½ yards of 36-inch material for an 18-year size. The skirt measures 2¾ yards at the foot. Price, 10 cents.

1713—A Set of New Tunics.

The Pattern includes all styles illustrated cut in 3 sizes: Small, Medium and Large. No. 1 will require 1⅝ yard of 44-inch material, No. 2 will require 3 yards, and No. 3 will require 2⅝ yards for a Medium size. Price, 10 cents.

1708—Ladies' Apron.

Cut in 3 sizes: Small, Medium and Large. It requires 4½ yards of 36-inch material for a Medium size. Price, 10 cents.

1695—Girls' Dress.

Cut in 4 sizes: 2, 3, 4 and 5 years. It requires 2 yards of 36-inch material for a 4-year size. Price, 10 cents.

1691—Ladies' House or Porch Dress.

Cut in 6 sizes: 34, 36, 38, 40, 42 and 44 inches bust measure. It requires 5¾ yards of 44-inch material for a 36-inch size. The skirt measures about 3⅛ yards at the foot. Price, 10 cents.

PATTERN ORDER.

Patterns
No.	Size

I enclose ....for Patterns

Name ....

Town ....

State ....

St. No., R. F. D. ....

Mail Your Order Direct to Publisher.

Story Contest

Opportunity for subscribers of this paper to try their literary talent and gain a reputation.

MANY magazine writers are secured from the rural communities. We want our subscribers to have every advantage to utilize their talent, and have joined with a number of other publishers in a great story contest.

Do you think you can write a story?

Suppose you try anyhow. For the best story received we will pay

$50.00

Stories may run from 2,000 to 15,000 words. Decision will be made by popular vote of the subscribers of this and several other papers. Stories acceptable for entry will be published in this paper and not less than fifty others. This is a chance to gain popularity at once. Send manuscript direct to editor of this paper.

MAY

L 908

U 165

Concord Township Convention

To be held in the Concord M. P. Church, next Sunday Afternoon

1:30—Song Service
1:45—Devotional .... Frank Provines
Remarks by President
Song .... Congregation
2:15—Address, "Some Character Elements of a Good Sunday School Worker" .... Rev. J. C. Coons
Discussion—Round Table
2:45—"How to Conduct a Sunday School" ...... Mrs. Sheffer
Round Table Discussion
3:15—"Why Should We Have Definite Missionary Instruction in the Sunday School" .... Mrs. A. K. Mumma
3:30—Report of Secretary- Treasurer
Song—Announcements.

The St. Joe News

Fred B. Leighty, Editor
Mrs. Iora Leighty, Associate

One Year,	$1.00
Six Months,	.50
Three Months,	.25

Entered at the postoffice at St. Joe, Indiana, as second class matter.

INDIANA ASSOCIATED WEEKLIES
THE CONCERN OF ALL

The Gossip Say-

Send in your news items.

Slide in the $1.00 Do it now.

Land Rollers of all kinds at Curie's Store.

Wm. and Clinton Lucas spent over Sunday at Hoopston, Ill., the guests of E. L. Bowers and wife.

Dr. Farnham is intending to be in Chicago from June 5 to June 11 attending a Post-graduate Course.

Jeff Boyles, and Wm. Boyles and daughter, of Butler, were Sunday guests of Wm. Lucas home.

FOR SALE: Buick roadster in good condition. A bargain if taken at once. GEO. GELHOUSEN, GARRETT, IND.

HATS
and
CAPS

of the latest styles for the summer season, in felts and straws. We invite you to our store to look at our fine display. The prices are reasonable.

Remember
Go to Erick's

Wm. G. ERICK,
SPENCERVILLE

SPENCERVILLE.

Subscribe for this paper.

Mrs. Jennie Chaney is visiting at Ft. Wayne.

Don't put off any longer. Subscribe now.

Rev. A. K. Mumma and family left Monday morning for a two weeks visit, at various points.

See our window for those $2.00 foot stools that we are giving for 98c and $2.00 in trade.

Roy Sebert and family, and John Shilling and family were Sunday guests of Stephen Brown and wife.

Miss Mamie Bair and Gust Heffner spent Sunday evening at Robison Park.

Rev. J. C. Valentine and son Elvin, motored to Winona Lake, Monday, where the latter will take a course at the Normal.

Subscriptions taken for new or renewals of any magazine published, at The News office.

Otis Parkinson and family, Mrs. Effie Squires and Mrs. Sadie Conway, of Ft. Wayne; and Harvey Beam and wife were Sunday guests of Archie Beam and sister, Miss Rille Beam.

Mesdames Maude Henderson and Claudia Heffner, and Mamie Bair attended an all day meeting of the Social Twenty Club held at the home of Mrs. Henry Stalder, of Grabill, last Thursday.

Clarence Steward, who has been teaching school at Monticello, and Miss Efma Store of Garrett, are visiting at the home of the former's mother, Mrs. Nettie Steward and family.

Harry Hilgemann and wife, of Ft. Wayne, and John Horn and wife were entertained at the home of George Hart and wife, to Sunday dinner.

$2.00 in trade and 98c in cash will give you one of our latest foot stools. Ask for a card.

The F. G M. and N. Club met at the beautiful country home of Mrs. John Mason, Friday. At the noon hour the members and guests were invited to the dining room where a four course dinner was served. Games and fancy work were the amusements of the afternoon. The guests were:-Mrs B A. Rhoades, Mrs. Otis Geoltzenleuchtner, Mrs. Anna Boger and Bob Wilks. Late in the evening ice cream and cake was served, after which all departed to their respective homes.

Mrs. Thomas Farner received the sad news of the death of her brother, Thomas Vanzile, of Butler, who died Sunday of tuberculosis. Mr. Vanzile has been in failing health for the past two years. He leaves to mourn his departure a wife, one son, two sisters and three brothers. The funeral was held at Butler, Tuesday.

On Thursday afternoon at the home of Mrs. John Beninghoff the Ladies Guild were entertained by Mrs. Clyde Rectenwal, Mrs David Butler and Miss Effie Palmer. The occasion was a memorial meeting in charge of Mrs. Beulah Vallisu. Refreshments were served to 20 members and two guests, Mrs. W. P. Steward, and Mrs. Francis Chapman, of Garrett.

HEARD AROUND THE CORNER

Read the Free Column.

Dr Farnham, wife and babies spent Sunday in Butler.

Katherine Shull spent a few days last week in the Wm. Lucas home.

Mrs. J. F. Gallier of Bowling Green, O., is the guest of Mrs. F. M. Thornton.

Jay Rickett made the purchase of a new Chevrolete automobile last Saturday. C. A. Patterson, manager of the garage, sold the machine.

Clyde Fredericks, of Spencerville, was seriously injured last Saturday, at the Steward Lumber Yard. He had several contusions and abrasions about the body and also fractured two ribs. Dr. Farnham was attending physician.

Mr. Evans and wife, Mrs. Mahloney and F. H. Langley and wife, of Ft. Wayne; O. Hart, wife and children, Mrs. Dills, Mrs. Mary Hart and daughter Hazel, of Hicksville, were entertained Sunday at the Sam Warner home.

A Summer Cough.

When a cough continues into warm weather, you can feel sure there is a chronic inflammation, which if neglected will develop into serious lung trouble. The best time to doctor a chronic cough is during the warm weather. An external inflammation always receives prompt attention because the condition can be seen, but an inflamation of the delicate mucus surface of the throat and lungs is much more serious. This condition furnishes fertile soil for the developing of the tubercular germ. Be wise and get rid of that cough before cold weather. GLANDO PINE is especially good for summer coughs. Accept no substitute. Use GLANDO PINE and get results. For sale by All Druggists.

PRESIDENTIAL POINTERS

Only one candidate for president died between the election and meeting of the electoral college. Horace Greeley, the Democratic and Liberal candidate, died before the meeting of the electoral college. The Democratic electoral vote was divided among four candidates. B. Grats Brown, the Democratic and Liberal candidate for vice president, received 47 votes, 19 less than the number of Democratic electors.

James S. Sherman, candidate for vice president on the Republican ticket—1912, died on October 30, a few days before the election. No provision was made by the Republican national committee for nominating a successor, and at the meeting of the state electoral colleges the Republican electors chosen in Vermont and Utah—eight in all—voted for Nicholas Murray Butler, of New York.

PRESIDENTIAL POINTERS

The salary of the president of the United States was the cause of discussion in the first congress, in view of the fact that the Constitution declared that the president should receive compensation for his services. Washington had notified his fellow citizens that he desired no salary. The limits suggested in congress ranged from $15,000 to $70,000. The salary was finally placed at $25,000 and this remained the compensation until President Grant's second term (March 3, 1873), when it was increased to $50,000. Chapter 2918 of the laws of the second session of the fifty-ninth congress, approved March 4, 1907, appropriated "for traveling expenses of the president of the United States, to be expended at his discretion and accounted for by his certificate solely, $25,000." In the second session of the sixtieth congress the matter of increasing the president's salary was again considered, and it was decided that the president's salary be fixed at $75,000 a year.

DENTIST
C. R. PRICE
ST. JOE, IND.
Offices first door south of Patterson's Dept. Store.
Bell Phone No. 44.

Do You Want to Save
MONEY?

Then buy your building material at the Spencerville Lumber Yard.

◆ ◆ ◆

We have just received a new supply of Lime, Cement and Plaster, which is strictly fresh and guaranteed the highest grade on the market.

◆ ◆ ◆

Brands We Handle.

Universal and Wabash Cement, Wayne Fibre Prepared Wood-Pulp Plaster, Crystal Rock Hydrated Lime.

STEWARD LUMBER & GRAIN Co.
SPENCERVILLE, IND.
Highest Prices Paid for Grain and Seeds.

For Rent

6 room house with barn on the lot, will be rented for one year or from month to month to suit tenant. Inquire of F. R. Bowman at the bank.

Many People Poisoned.

We often wonder why so few people live out their allotted time, while a small per cent live beyond that mark. Scores of people meet death each year because of a slow process of poisoning that is going on within their bodies. This poisoning is caused by the glands of the body failing to perform their proper function. Poisonous matter accumulates within the system, and health declines. The unsightly liver splotches, billiousness, headache, dizziness bad taste in the mouth, a pain in the back or under the shoulder blade, a tired or achey feeling, are some of the most common evidences of this poisoning. If this poison is not eliminated and the cause removed, the resisting power is finally gone and life pays the penalty. Are you of the heedless class or are you safeguarding your health? GLANDO is what you need to restore glandular activity, and expel the poisons. Keep on the safe side and use a reliable remedy. Accept none but GLANDO, give it a fair trial.

If your druggist hasn't got it, have him get it for you, or send to the Gland-Aid Co., Ft. Wayne, Ind.

Commencement Notes

Below we give a few of the facts as related by Dr. Frank E. Jaynes in his commencement address at Spencerville.

The commencement time is rightly named as it is just the beginning of the responsibilities of life, a time when one must launch out into the world and fight the temptations.

Only 10% of the scholars reach the graduation time, the rest of them fall by the wayside.

Responsibilities gravitate to those who are able to assume them.

Levi Mumma received a year's scholarship to Wittenberg College, for having obtained the highest percentage, that of 97%. The presentation was made by Miss Thornburg

The church was tastefully decorated in the class colors, Nile Green and Pink; and everything showed the neatness and good judgment of the class in arranging for the exercise.

The Sheets orchestra furnished the music.

A Friend in Need.

When Glando Gargle is used for a cold in the head it is surprising to see how quickly the clogged nostrils are opened. Adenoids are caused by a neglected cold. If the mucus which forms is allowed to remain in the nostrils, a diseased condition will result, which causes chronic catarrh and adenoids. Glando Gargle was prepared to meet these special needs. Equally effective for sore mouth or sore throat. Price 50 cents. For sale by All Druggists.

SPENCERVILLE R. F. D. NO. 2

Mrs. Mary Cook and Mrs. Della Smith spent Sunday with Mrs. Daniel Oberholtzer, of Coburntown.

Mrs. Wal Hay and daughter Ruth, and Mrs. Chas. Brattain, of Garrett, spent Sunday with Verna Kelley and wife.

Ray Baker and wife, spent Sunday with Harvey Kimes and Minnie Thompson.

Miss Eva Miller, who has been working at Fremont, Ind., is home on the sick list.

Carl and Gertrude Osteinmeyer spent Sunday with Master Delois Mills.

Wm. Goldsmith, wife and children, of Hurshtown, and Reuben Deitrick and wife, of Coburntown, were Sunday guests in the Milo Beam home.

Local Briefs

Mrs. Sarah Walter of Coburntown is here the guest of her daughter, Mrs. J. C. Hull.

For Sale or Rent, a small house and half-acre of good garden ground. S. S. WIDNEY.

Harry Jenkins and family and Wm. Reed and family of Auburn, were Sunday guests of J. N. George and family.

Mr. and Mrs. H M. Thornton, son and three daughters of Elkhart were guests last Wednesday and Thursday of his nephew, F. M. Thornton and wife.

We have adopted as our slogan, YOU CAN DO BETTER, at Barney's. We have the goods and can prove it.

Ira Forest Moore, of Hicksville and Miss Maud Platter of just east of St. Joe, were married at the Lutheran parsonage, Auburn, on last Wednesday, by Rev. S. E Slater. They will reside at Hicksville.

J. M. Lounsberry of Elkhart, has been the guest of St. Joe friends for a few days the past week. He remained over Decoration day and has been having a fine time visiting old acquaintances. He was born three miles north of St. Joe in 1838 and lived here for a great many years on the farm now known as the Kraft farm.

Norman Wyatt's of Auburn, were over Sunday guests of Mrs. E. F. Bills. Homer Stackhouse and family were there on Sunday and the former went to the country for over Tuesday. Relatives of Hicksville as follows were also guests: Mr. Teagarden and wife and Mrs. Bills brother and wife.

Start Tomorrow and Keep It Up Every Morning

Get in the habit of drinking a glass of hot water before breakfast.

We're not here long, so let's make our stay agreeable. Let us live well, eat well, digest well, work well, sleep well, and look well. what a glorious condition to attain, and yet, how very easy it is if one will only adopt the morning inside bath.

Folks who are accustomed to feel dull and heavy when they arise, splitting headache, stuffy from a cold, foul tongue, nasty breath, acid stomach, can, instead, feel as fresh as a daisy by opening the sluices of the system each morning and flushing out the whole of the internal poisonous stagnant matter.

Everyone, whether ailing, sick or well, should, each morning, before breakfast, drink a glass of real hot water with a teaspoonful of limestone phosphate in it to wash from the stomach, liver and bowels the previous day's indigestible waste, sour bile and poisonous toxins; thus cleansing, sweetening and purifying the entire alimentary canal before putting more food into the stomach. The action of hot water and limestone phosphate on an empty stomach is wonderfully invigorating. It cleans out all the sour fermentations, gases, waste and acidity and gives one a splendid appetite for breakfast. While you are enjoying your breakfast the water and phosphate is quietly extracting a large volume of water from the blood and getting ready for a thorough flushing of all the inside organs.

The millions of people who are bothered with constipation, bilious spells, stomach trouble; others who have sallow skins, blood disorders and sickly complexions are urged to get a quarter pound of limestone phosphate from the drug store. This will cost very little, but is sufficient to make anyone a pronounced crank on the subject of inside-bathing before breakfast.

F BACK HURTS USE SALTS FOR KIDNEYS

at less meat if Kidneys feel like lead or Bladder bothers you—Meat forms uric acid.

Most folks forget that the kidneys, like the bowels, get sluggish and clogged and need a flushing occasionally, else we have backache and dull misery in the kidney region, severe headaches, rheumatic twinges, torpid liver, acid stomach, sleeplessness and all sorts of bladder disorders.

You simply must keep your kidneys active and clean, and the moment you feel an ache or pain in the kidney region, get about four ounces of Jad Salts from any good drug store here, take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys will then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and is harmless to flush clogged kidneys and stimulate them to normal activity. It also neutralizes the acids in the urine so it no longer irritates, thus ending bladder disorders.

Jad Salts is harmless; inexpensive; makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink which everybody should take now and then to keep their kidneys clean, thus avoiding serious complications.

A well-known local druggist says he sells lots of Jad Salts to folks who believe in overcoming kidney trouble while it is only trouble.

DARKEN GRAY HAIR, LOOK YOUNG, PRETTY

Sage Tea and Sulphur Darkens So Naturally that Nobody can tell.

Hair that loses its color and lustre, or when it fades, turns gray, dull and lifeless, is caused by a lack of sulphur in the hair. Our grandmother made up a mixture of Sage Tea and Sulphur to keep her locks dark and beautiful, and thousands of women and men who value that even color, that beautiful dark shade of hair which is so attractive, use only this old-time recipe.

Nowadays we get this famous mixture improved by the addition of other ingredients by asking at any drug store for a 50-cent bottle of "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound," which darkens the hair so naturally, so evenly, that nobody can possibly tell it has been applied. You just dampen a sponge or soft brush with it and draw this through your hair, taking one small strand at a time. By morning the gray hair disappears; but what delights the ladies with Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound, is that, besides beautifully darkening the hair after a few applications, it also brings back the gloss and lustre and gives it an appearance of abundance.

Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound is a delightful toilet requisite to impart color and a youthful appearance to the hair. It is not intended for the cure, mitigation or prevention of disease.

Lecture at the M. P. Church Sunday evening by John M. Life. Don't miss it. Free.

Tom Rickett has sold his farm west of Spencerville to Lester Houck. Consideration $1,000.

JUNE

JUNE

L 908

U 167

Has Your Subscription Expired? Come in and renew it next time you are in town.

ST. JOE NEWS.

NO newspaper can succeed without advertising, therefore we solicit the patronage of our readers for those who by their advertising help to make this paper possible.

VOL. XXX — ST. JOE, DeKALB COUNTY INDIANA, THURSDAY JUNE 1 1916 — NO. 22

Drunks Arrested

AUBURN, Ind., May 28.—John Madden and Frank Simpson, who hail from near Spencerville, in this county, loaded up on fire water in Garrett last evening and then started to this city via the interurban. They were looking for trouble and started to pick a quarrel with fellow passengers. Harry North, a character well known in this city, got mixed up with them, and they had quite a lively fight when the car got to Auburn Junction. They all came on to this city and got off at the Vandalia station, at South Main street, and proceeded uptown, where later they were all locked up on a drunkenness charge. They were hailed before Mayor McClellan this morning and developments in the testimony of North, who claimed that Madden and Simpson, upon alighting from the car at South Main street jumped on him and robbed him of $10 in currency, further testimony seems to bear out his story and his honor ordered them bound over to the circuit court.—Gazette. Madden has been working in St. Joe for W. L. Wallace and last week he was pretty well soaked for a couple of days and laid around on the streets and displayed his ——— ———. Give them both a plenty, we say.

8th Grade Graduates

The final examination of the eighth grade pupils has been held and the list of graduates is large. The total list for the township is 54. Out of this number Concord township has 25, which will make an exceptionally fine class for next year and the high school promises to be better than ever before as trustee Hathaway is putting forth every effort to raise the standard of the township schools and we feel that the pupils will be fortunate next year. The list for Concord township is as follows:—Marguerite Leighty, Pauline Barney, Grace Milliman, Marguerite Milliman, Louise Murphy, Richard Bayman, Fay Hughes, Thelma Cole, Mary Armstrong, Garnett Wyatt, Coral Simanton, Edith Berry, Russell Hathaway, Dorothy Bowman, Dorothy Scholes, Harmon Beck, Claud Freeburn, Floyd Snyder, Geneva Martin, Charlie Curie, Gladys Layman, Paul Carpenter, Ralph Brown, Clara Donley, Beatrice Wilson.

Spencer township—Laura Gongs, Esther Doll, Allene Rhoads, Lucile Rhoads, Ralph R. Baker, Julia K. Baker, George R. Doll, Lois Smith, Margaret E. Lake, Gaylor A. Markle, Mary E. Tyndall, Edwin Harwood, Harry Peterson, Henry C. Beams, Jr., Garth D. Shull, Minnie Walker, Berniece I. Hart, Loula P. Evans, Estella Marie Headley and Roscoe C. Place.

Newville township—Faith Brunson, Donald Davis, Dewey Cole, Garcie Miller, Byron Miller, Carson Merrill Culler, Keneth Roberts, Bula Bilback and Russell Klein.

50 sheets of writing paper and 25 No. 1 rag envelopes for 10 cents at NEWS office.

P. A. Walker
Trustee
Spencer Township

Office Day—
Tuesday of each week at the residence ½ mile east of the Dills River Bridge.
Phone—St. Joe, 21-4
Spencerville, - Indiana

An American Story — By an American Author

The Best Seller of the Season

The TURMOIL

By BOOTH TARKINGTON
is to be OUR NEXT SERIAL and is coming soon.

The Best Story of the Year

For American Readers — Of American Life

Eyes tested ——— Glasses Fitted

At Dr. Farhnam's Office, THURSDAY, JUNE 15

EARL FRISBIE, Opt. BUTLER, INDIANA

THE TRUDGE-AWAY LAD

By JAY B. IDEN.

So weary, so weary of running,
So weary of romping and play,
The Trudge-Away Lad to his mother
Comes home through the brink of the day;
The Trudge-Away Lad from his roaming
Through Trudge-Away meadow's alarms,
By portals of love to discover
A haven in mother's dear arms.

And wonderf'ly sweet is his story
Of Trudge-Away meadows so grand,
Where tower the castles of Fancy,
And wonderful battlements stand.
And patient the mother who listens
While little boy Trudge-Away tells
Of perilous dangers attending
The voyager through Trudge-Away dells.

Then lullabies sound in the evening,
Forgotten are perils I know,
And launched are the Slumberland vessels
That glide where the dream rivers flow;
Where islands are fruited with kisses,
And blossom the lilies of joy—
Oh, wonderful heart of a mother,
Oh, wonderful Trudge-Away Boy!

Sunday School Report.

The following is a true and correct report of the various Sunday Schools in this neighborhood for last Sunday.

M. P	118	$ 4.55
Lutheran	106	3.58
Christian	83	2.07
Concord	129	3.54
Fairview	24	.81
Newville, C.	78	1.64
U. B.	109	4.04
M. E. Spencer	98	3.78
Lutheran	116	2.94

Memorial Services

Tuesday was an ideal day for the Decoration Services and everything went off in fine shape at St. Joe. The meeting was called to order by the President, J. P. Buckingham; Song, America; Prayer, Rev. J. C. Coons; Song by Choir; Address by Harry Hilgeman of Wayne; Song by Children, and then line of march was formed and decoration of graves took place. Old veterans were hauled to cemetery in automobiles, those who were unable to walk. In all, the services were fine and the audience was large and appreciative. 17 old veterans were present as follows:

Chas. Freeburn
J. Y. Davis
Geo. Trautal
Joseph Prosser
Geo. Waite
Madison Baker
J. M. Lounsberry
Samuel Cole
Florence Buchanan
Benj. Hamilton
Joseph Koch
Wm. Purvines
John Grubaugh
Chas. Fosere
Henry Mackie
Walter Abel
J. M. Milliman

The finance committee did excellent and some money is left after paying all the expenses. People about St. Joe always do their part well when it comes to matters of this character.

Myrtle Hallegeten, of Cedarville, was a guest in the Buckingham home from Thursday until Saturday of last week.

SCHLOSS' of Auburn are showing a big line of Rugs, Curtains and Materials by-the yards at reasonable prices.

Death of Mrs. Culbertson

Mrs. Nancy Culbertson died at the home of her son George, Tuesday afternoon, after years of illness. The funeral will be held from the house at 10 o'clock Thursday with burial at Auburn.

Taken to Co. Farm

Ephrim Grubaugh, who at one time lived in St. Joe, but came from Spencerville, Tuesday morning, where he had been staying with Chris Hursh and wife, to St. Joe and here he took sick and Trustee Hathaway was called upon to take care of him. He was immediately taken to the county farm and entered there. He is a man up in years and needs care and by knocking around he has simply broken down.

Thrown from Motorcyle

Howard Jolly had an experience similar to that of Vernie Monroe, on a motorcycle, last Sunday. He struck some new gravel and was thrown some distance making himself unconscious for several hours. It will not result serious.

PUBLIC NOTICE.

August 1 finishes my career in Spencerville as practicing physician, having sold out my business to Dr. J. C. Emme of Harlan. All book accounts and notes due me, should be settled by Aug. 1st., '16.

Dr. B. O. Shook.

PRESIDENTIAL POINTERS

The president of the United States is commander-in-chief of the army and navy and of the militia of the several states when called into actual service of the United States. The oath or affirmation taken by the president is as follows:

"I do solemnly swear (or affirm) that I will faithfully execute the office of president of the United States and will to the best of my ability, preserve, protect and defend the Constitution of the United States." The power of declaring war is not vested in the president, but in congress, which may also grant letters of marque and reprisals and make rules concerning captures on land and water. Most of the appointments made by the president must be confirmed by the senate.

St. Joe Locals

Patronize the advertisers.

For Groceries. YOU CAN DO BETTER at Barney's. Try us and see.

The electric signals are being installed at the B. & O., crossing this week.

Hear that lecture Sunday evening at the M. P. Church, by John M. Life.

Mrs. Cora Smith and two children, of Auburn, are guests in the home of S. S. Widney.

See CURIE for your Check Row Corn Planter—Make the work easier and then you can do more.

Frank Filley, wife and baby, of Huntington, are here the guests of Mrs. Addie Filley.

John George was at Nappanee, Wednesday, on business.

Mrs Mary Garton, of Wayne, is the guest of H. F. Garton and family. John and Emmet Gruber and their families, of Harlan, were there on Sunday.

Shirts, Overalls and Underwear that is right at BARNEY'S.

Kathryn and Louise Metzger, of Wayne, were week end guests of Mrs. J. D. Leighty.

Chas. Koch drove to Hamilton, Wednesday, and took some goods there for Mrs. Mary Bowman, to furnish her cottage for the summer.

WANTED–To buy your Hay. C. E. Frye, Phone 73-31, St. Joe.

Don't go around in darkness when you can get one of the Pearson Flash Lights, all sizes and prices, at CURIE's store.

WOOL!

Dispose of your crop of Wool now and get a good price—and save all that handling and chance for loosing money. We are prepared to handle wool this spring and you will be guaranteed the highest market price.

Call or Phone to

JACK BEAMS,
Spencerville.

EVERY TREASURER

of a Lodge, Sunday School, Church Society or any one who handles funds of any organization should open a checking account and handle the funds through the Bank. Your trouble will be lessened and your money in safe keeping. Begin now. It don't cost anything.

St. Joe Valley Bank--State Bank

4 per cent. paid on certificates if left 1 Year.

ALL KIND OF COAL.

We have running now several cars of genuine Pocahontas lump, several cars of the finest kind of free buring West Virginia Lump and several cars of Genuine Scranton Chesnut Coal. It is very advisable to place orders now for coal off the cars.

Mr. Feeder

try a sack of our BRAN & MIDDLINGS. Don't forget that we handle Barrel Salt also Rock Salt. When in town stop in and pay us a visit.

You are always welcome at,

St. Joe Elevator
The Nathan Grain Co.
OWNERS
Fort Wayne, Indiana
SAMUEL KEESLER, Local Manager.

A Store in Itself

is the expression of those who enter our Ware room and see hundreds of gallons of that good Barn Paint made with Oil instead of Mineral Acids, House paint containing only Lead Zinc and Oil. Varnishes for woodwork, for floors, for buggies, etc. Genuine Polarine Auto Oil at 35c. gallon, no substitute at any price. Tons of Oyster Shells, Chick Feed, and Oil Meal. We have the goods and are here to serve you so you will come again.

Dunkle's Drug Store

JUNE

L 908

U168

Flickerings from Filmland

Interesting to the Movie Fans.

Twinklings From Filmland.

The Essanay company and Charles Chaplin are having a lot of fun these days sueing each other.

Alice Brady will be seen in the film version of Puccini's famous classic, "La Boheme," next month. It was made at the Fort Lee studios since the advent of W. A. Brady, the father of Miss Alice, into the managership of the World Film Company.

Rita Jolivet, the famous actress who was with Charles Frohman when he went to his death on the Lusitania, is now at the Pallas studios in Los Angeles. Miss Jolivet has signed with Oliver Morosco and will be seen in his productions.

Blanche Sweet is completing at the Lasky studios for early presentation a picture entitled, "The Thousand Dollar Husband." James Young is the author and producer. Yes, the Mr. Young who was Clara Young's husband.

Shakespeare's entrance into the movie world seems to have become more evident of late. First we hear that Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne will perpetuate one of the most popular plays of the board of Avon. Then we hear Clara Kimball Young is to be seen in a five-reel production based on "Romeo and Juliet."

The combination of Tom Moore and Alice Nilsson in "Who's Gilty?" is a happy one. This serial from the pen of Mrs. Wilson Woodrow gives these two charming young people an excellent opportunity. Miss Nilsson and Tom Moore are old friends, for they knew each other in the Kalem days, when Tom was courting lovely Alice Joyce. The two Alices were and are close friends. This serial will be Tom Moore's first picture for Pathe.

It is said that Essanay's seven act picturization of "Sherlock Holmes," with William Gillette himself taking the part, is one of the most expensive productions of recent days. Mr. Gillette himself without doubt receiving quite enough money to keep him in peace and comfort for some days. Supporting him are several expensive persons who were with him in the play. It is a private opinion of this special person that Mr. Gillette is worth every red penny he can get.

Interesting gossip that recently was wafted across the ocean was the information that "The Birth of a Nation" was shown to royalty at the Drury Lane Theater at a benefit for the Women's War Worker's Fund. The special matinee arranged was under the auspices of Queen Mary, who sat in a box with Queen Alexandra and the Princesses Mary and Victoria. Seats sold for $15 apiece and the combined receipts exceeded $15,000. The entire box takings were donated by Mr. Mitchell by a previous arrangement made by his representative. After the entertainment Queen Mary sent her congratulations and thanks to the American producer.

Strange Facts of Science

A megaphone and fan have been combined in a recent novelty.

New Zealand has an annual death rate of less than 1 per cent.

Electricity has been adapted to 48 different purposes about a household.

An enamel to glaze pottery without the use of heat is a German invention.

Japanese claim to have invented matches that will light perfectly even when wet.

Included with recently invented sun goggles is a shade to protect a wearer's nose from sunburn.

Quickly adjusted molds for concrete steps have been patented by a Missouri inventor.

Plumbago is the most important mineral product of Ceylon, which has about 1,000 mines.

A wall tie that grips half a dozen bricks instead of two, as customary has been invented by a Scotch builder.

One of the newer vacuum bottles can be taken entirely apart for cleansing.

An air-propelled hydroplane has been built in France for use on shallow rivers in Africa.

Seats which can be hung on automobiles made to carry additional passengers have been invented.

An alcohol lamp provides the heat in apparatus invented by a Frenchman to disinfect with steam.

Bombay averages more than seventy-two inches of rain a year and gets most of it within four or five months.

Leather and canvas covers to be laced over automobile springs to keep them clean and dry have been patented.

A hand-operated machine to knead the stiffness out of leather has been invented by an Oklahoma man.

Sixty miles of thread woven from the fibre of a species of Italian nettle weighs but two and a half pounds.

CONSIDER THE PEANUT.

The boy at the circus does not understand how fortunate he is that he has only a nickel to spend for refreshment, when he will spend it for peanuts in the shell. The young factory sweethearts are equally fortunate that this is all they can afford for their picnic collation. They are really far more fortunate than the young couple who spend many times the price of a bag of peanuts for something that nourishes not at all and harms a good deal.

The chief harm that might come from eating peanuts would be from overeating, because they are such a highly concentrated food. Combined with fruit, they make quite an ideal lunch for those who are accustomed to this type, and almost any one can so accustom himself. They are less expensive, for what they will yield of energy and body building, than is a sandwich. The one kernel contains equivalents of fat and lean meat and bread. It contains from 25 to 30 per cent protein, which is what we eat lean meat to get. It contains about or over 40 per cent of fat, which is highly concentrated food. It is so disguised or blended that it goes down as easily as bread and butter. And it contains 25 per cent of starchy or bread stuff. A wonderful food!

There is one thing I would like to have done to protect those who do not eat peanuts from the shell. No dealer should be permitted to waste salted peanuts by pouring a great window full, where the fat in and on them deteriorates rapidly while they collect dust. A large, flat dish would show off the product just as well. If he would stand the loss we might not complain, but he sells these peanuts.

A SIMPLE MATTER.

shirred headings on skiirts. The nip is not as snappy as it might be, Griselda. It is more suggested than real.

Girls who are clever with their needles might achieve a wonderful things with the aid of a length of furniture brocade and a ball of silver thread or a box of small beads. It is a simple matter to work over the brocaded designs in certain parts, and colored porcelain beads of the smallest size look charming when mingled with silver or gold threads.

WAGES OF FARM LABORERS.

Farm wages advanced slightly during the last year in the principal grain states and remained stationary or declined slightly in the cotton states. The higher grain prices and lower cotton prices influenced such changes. During the last year there was less scarcity of farm labor during a number of preceding years.

For the entire United States day wages of male farm labor increased about 1 cent and averaged about $1.47 without board and $1.13 with board. For labor hired by the month the rate without board increased during the year 27 cents, to $30.15, as compared with $29.88 last year; rates with board, which is the more general method of hiring, increased from $21.05 to $21.26—an increase of 21 cents. Wages have been tending upward almost steadily since 1894. The increase in the last five years is about 10 per cent, and in the last twenty years about 65 per cent.

Farm wages vary widely in different sections of the United States. Thus, monthly wages with board averaged $23.71 in the New England states, $24.78 in the east north central states, $27.38 in the west north central states, $33.50 in the far western states, $15.01 in the south Atlantic states, and $16.16 in the south central states. Generally speaking, the wages tend to increase in going from east to west, and in going from south to north.

These estimates are based upon reports from correspondents of the bureau of crop estimates of the United States department of agriculture.

WASHING WHITE HAIR.

The very best shampoo for white hair is the white of an egg beaten into a pint of soft, cool water. Rub the hair with the egg, making a soft lather, after wetting the hair with cold water, and finish the same as with other shampoo, except in the last rinsing water, which should be cold. A few drops of the best indigo, not ordinary blueing, should be added to tinge the water. This acts exactly as does blueing on white goods, leaving the hair a pure white and not in the least tinged with yellow.

REARING CHICKENS

Poultry Specialists Offer Suggestions For Brooding and Feeding Young Chicks

Brooding with hens is the simplest and easiest way to raise a few chickens and is the method which is used almost exclusively on the average farm. Artificial brooders are necessary where winter or very early chickens are raised, where only Leghorns or other nonsitting breeds of poultry are kept, or where large numbers of chickens are raised commercially. Sitting hens should be confined to slightly darkened nests at hatching time and not disturbed unless they step on or pick their chickens when hatching. The eggshells and any eggs which have not hatched should be removed as soon as the hatching is over. Hens should be fed as soon as possible after the eggs are hatched, as feeding tends to keep them quiet; otherwise many hens will leave the nest. In most cases it is best that the hen remain on the nest and brood the chicks for at least 24 hours after the hatching is over. All the chickens should be toe-punched or otherwise marked before they are transferred to the brooder or brood coop so that their age can be readily determined after they are matured.

The brood coop should be cleaned at least once a week and kept free from mites. If mites are found in the coop, it should be thoroughly cleaned and sprayed with kerosene oil or crude petroleum. From 1 to 2 inches of sand or dry dirt or a thin layer of straw or fine hay should be spread on the floor of the coop. Brood coops should be moved weekly to fresh ground, preferably where there is new grass. Shade is very essential in rearing chickens.

Chicks are usually left in the incubator from 24 to 36 hours after hatching, without feeding, before they are removed to the brooder, which should have been in operation for a day or two at the proper temperature for receiving the chickens. A beginner should try his brooding system carefully before he uses it. After placing the chickens in the brooder they can be given feed and water. Subsequent loss in chickens is frequently due to chilling received while taking them from the incubator to the brooder. They should be moved in a covered basket or receptacle in cool or cold weather.

The capacity of brooders and hovers is often overestimated, and one-half to two-thirds of the number of chickens commonly advised will do much better than a larger number. The danger from fire, due frequently to carelessness and lack of attention, is considerable in cheap brooders and hovers, while there is some risk in the best grades, although proper care will reduce this to a minimum. Individual hovers in colony houses or several in one large house are giving quite general satisfaction on small poultry farms, while the pipe system of brooding is commonly used in large commercial poultry plants and where extensive winter brooding is done. Gasoline brooders, brooder stoves burning engine distillate oil, and a separate individual hover heated by a coal fire are coming into more general use, each with a capacity varying from 200 to 1,5000 chickens. These large individual brooders are used in colony houses, and when the chickens are weaned the colony house is used as a growing coop, which requires a smaller investment than the long piped brooder house and allows one to rear the chicks on range to good advantage.

The best temperature at which to keep a brooder or hover depends upon the position of the thermometer, the style of the hover, the age of the chickens and the weather conditions. Aim to keep the chickens comfortable. As the operator learns by the actions of the chickens the amount of heat they require, he can discard the thermometer if he desires. When too cold they will crowd together and try to get nearer the heat. It is possible to state for each case at what temperature the brooders should be kept to raise young chickens; however, it will run from 90 degrees up to 100 degrees in some cases, as some broods of chickens seem to require more heat than others, an average being 93 to 95 degrees for the first week or 10 days, when the temperature is gradually reduced to 85 degrees for the following 10 days, and then lowered to 70 degrees or 75 degrees for as long as the chickens need heat.

Young chickens should be fed from three to five times daily, depending upon one's experience in feeding. The young chicks may be fed any time after they are 36 to 48 hours old, whether they are with a hen or in a brooder. The first feed may contain either hard boiled eggs, johnnycake, stale bread, pinhead oatmeal, or rolled oats which feeds or combinations may be used with good results. Feed the bread crumbs, rolled oats, or Johnnycake mixtures moistened with water, five times daily for the first week, then gradually substitute for one or two feeds of the mixture finely cracked grains of equal parts by weight of cracked wheat, finely cracked corn, and pinhead oatmeal or hulled oats, to which about 5 per cent of cracked peas or broken rice and 2 per cent of charcoal, millet, or grape seed may be added. Commercial chick feed may be substituted if desired. The above ration can be fed until the chicks are two weeks old, when they should be fed on grain and a dry or wet mash mixture.

WHEN "OLD GLORY" GOES BY.

By La Moilli.

Bright and fresh as that day new-born
Our flag looked that enlisting morn,
Proudly carried down crowded street,
Drumming cadenced the marching feet,
Men and striplings to its side stept,
Women cheered them and women wept,
When "Old Glory" waved by
To live for or to die.

Where the battle-waves broke most red,
Oft its bearers were tumbled dead,
Oft 'twas grabbed from its falling man,
Fiercer fire down gaped lines then ran,
Swifter its foes were charged on then,
Cheers were answered by dying men,
When "Old Glory" waved by
To live for or to die.

Freedom's flag flies world-wide these days—
Keep it stainless and true always!
Where this hallowed old flag appears
Give it homage too deep for tears—
For it symbols the Truth and Right;
Not all reached yet and yet in sight.
When "Old Glory" waved by
To live for or to die.

A RIDDLE WITH A MORAL—CAN YOU GUESS THE ANSWER?

I am more powerful than the combined armies of the world.

I have destroyed more men than all the wars of the nations.

I am more deadly than bullets, and I have wrecked more homes than the mightiest siege guns.

I steal, in the United States alone over $3000,000,000 each year.

I spare no one, and I find my victims among the rich and poor alike, the young and the old, the strong and weak. Widows and orphans know me.

I loom up to such proportions that I cast my shadow over every field of labor, from the turning of the grindstone to the moving of every railroad train.

I massacre thousands upon thousands of wage-earners a year.

I lurk in unseen places and do most of my work silently. You are warned against me, but you heed not.

I am relentless.

I am everywhere—in the house, on the street, in the factory, at railroad crossings and on the sea.

I bring sickness, degradation and death, and yet few seek to avoid me.

I destroy, crush and maim; I give nothing, but take all.

I am your worst enemy.

What is the answer to this riddle which the Toledo Blade propounded to its readers? The answer is not "drink" or "hatred" or "selfishness." The answer is "I am Carelessness."

BURNED POTATOES.

Where is the housekeeper who never has scorched the potatoes and had them stick to the pan?

That one little domestic tragedy has been fatal to the success of more than one meal, whereas if the cook had known of this simple remedy the meat and other vegetables would not have been spoiled by overcooking while they waited on the preparation of more potatoes:

When you discover that the potatoes are burning remove the pan from the fire and set it instantly into a dish of cold water. In a minute or two the potatoes can be removed from the scorched pan without sticking and by boiling for a minute or two longer in a clean pan, with fresh water, most of the scorched taste will be removed.

YOU MIGHT TRY—

When Peony Buds Drop.

Fresh slack lime applied to the ground in the early Spring and stirred in well will counteract the acid in the soil, which often makes peony buds turn black and drop off.

For White Furniture

Use clear turpentine and a soft cloth to clean white enameled woodwork for furniture. It will remove every spot without removing one bit of the gloss, as soap often does.

When Slicing Tomatoes

Use a bread knife with saw teeth to slice your tomatoes with. You can accomplish the work far more quickly than with an ordinary knife and the slices will be much thinner.

For Ailing Plants.

As an antidote for fungus diseases as well as scalicide lime mixed with a little sulphur and stirred into the soil about plants is excellent. This should be used frequently and when the soil is rather dry.

POINTED PARAGRAPHS.

Solitude is better than company—when the company is not congenial.

A promising young man may be all right, but we prefer a paying one.

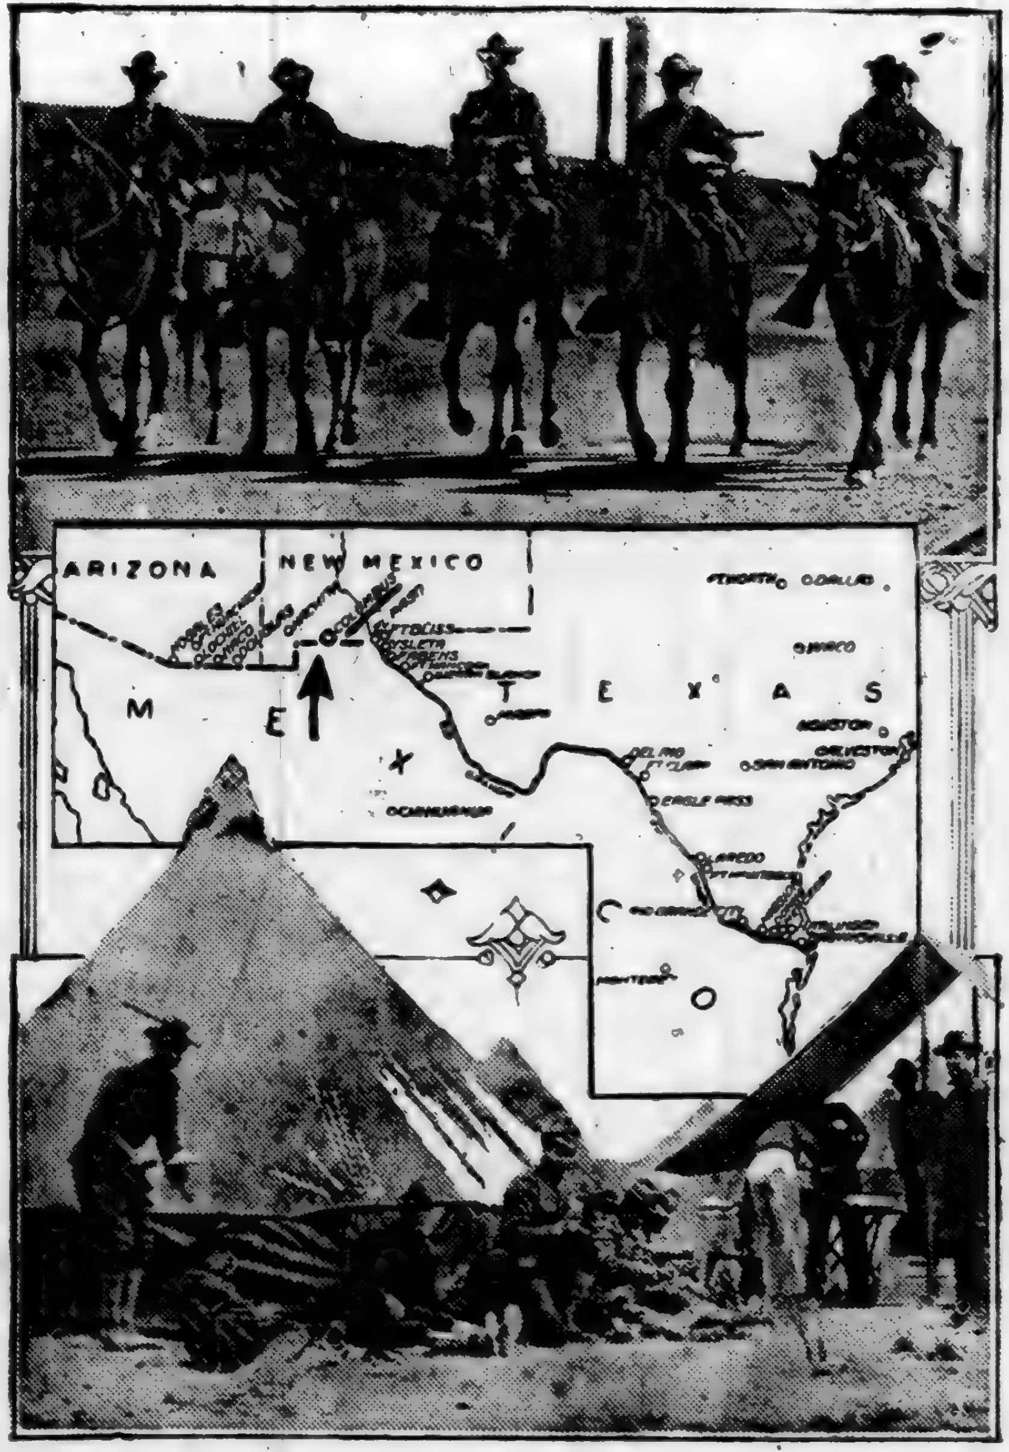
Occasionally a married man goes home early because he knows his wife is away.

A bright orator is one who always uses the right word in the right place at the right time.

A woman never idolizes a man unless she is self-deceived into thinking him much better than he really is.

Even his Satanic majesty has never been able to devise a satisfactory plan for circumventing a woman's curiosity.

VILLA CAUGHT TROOPS OFF GUARD



In seeking to give some explanation of the ease with which Villa and his band attacked the American town of Columbus, N. M., General Scott, chief of staff, says that there had been no trouble at Columbus in three years and that undoubtedly our troops were taken off their guard. They were greatly outnumbered by Villa's men.

Dictates of Fashion

The Peasant Waist, Prim And Fitness, Is Popular.

The peasant waist—a prim, rather fitless thing and almost seamless—prevails with a popularity that is positively stubborn. It is the most appropriate companion piece for the full skirt, and in the soft-surfaced taffetas it drapes very nicely. The double collar is a rather new note, and it is pretty. The under collar is of the taffeta, the upper one is of silk of a lighter shade, or it is of organdie or even of broadcloth. Serge trims some taffeta gowns. Basque frills cannot be resisted, and they are going to remain fast and strong during the summer. Except on evening frocks, the belt amounts to almost nothing. On the tailleur a good belt is really made of narrow ones, which may dissolve into one according to its own sweet wish. There are, also, strange and intricate folded-over effects that cause a ceinture to look not unlike a jigsaw puzzle.

Among the tulle costumes the most whimsical trimmings show up. Funny little florette designs are embroidered on, or painted, and all kinds of artificial blooms transform a gown into a sartorial garden. It is certainly the day of the la-la-la and the fluff-fluff. Enormous ruches of white tulle are worn on frocks of taffeta in pastel tones, and they are decidedly posterlike and stunning. A bizarre model from the Maison Bulloz is of white net, the skirt and bodice made as straight up and down as they can be made, with a huge neck ruchette of black tulle placed about the neck, and a companion ruchette laid about the waist. Does it give bulk? Does it? Well, somewhat, if not more so. But the strangest note of the frock was found in the sleeves that were trimmed to a state of fuss and flutter that made them the most intricate of design. Skirts and sleeves, as a rule, are overtrimmed; bodices are not trimmed at all.

For the tailleur, serge tryko, mohairs and alpacas are coming in strong. And what a joyous thing is the latest tailleur! Soft lines prevail, with basque flares over the hips, and the skirts are of moderate width, the tout ensemble all most smarty and fashionable. Strange to say, in spite of the sprightly talk about the nipped-in waist line, it is almost concealed and hidden by Anyhow, why should we change our shapes? Fashions change every minute, and that is sufficient. And surgeons are not yet willing to slice off our hips, or to graft on flesh to suit the whims of fashionists.

The strongest interest now is given over to sports clothes. Never has any season produced such amazing and beautiful wear for the country club, the tennis court, the golf links, the bridle path and the piazza flirtation.

Sudden Rage For Blue Takes In Every Little Shade.

There is a sudden rage for blue, not only navy and midnight blue that are always good for daytime wear but the other more brilliant blues. Bluette, king's blue, royal blue, Joffre, Nattier and horizon are all excellent. Pink has almost no popularity, but blue, mauve and yellow are going strong.

It is interesting to note that the textile manufacturers have already issued their color card for the approaching winter season. Women seldom realize that such matters are arranged many months ahead, but so it is with the foresighted commercial kings. There are eighteen different shades of blue on the silk card, and fifteen shades each of red and rose. Would you think it possible? And each little color has a name that's all its own.

The three greens that are being exploited are Alsace, Vosges and laurel. These shades are soft and a bit bluish. Apartel is a new green. Among the grays we find Italian gray, Le Ciotat and obscurite, the last being our old friend mole gray and no other. Saloniki yellow is much like our previous acquaintance known as "mustard." The old blues have taken on a metallic tone that is interesting, and there is a new dark blue that is almost black which is known as Fregate.

New Suits Are Of Crepe DeChine In Solid Color.

The stunningest and newest suits are of crepe de chine in solid color—mauve, mist green, orchidee, cowslip, white and cyclamen—combined with striped jersey in fine silk weave. The coats are very long, rather on the lines of the Russian blouse, but with flaring peplums or basque extensions. They have a border of the stripe, which is also used as a deep hem on the skirts. On the jackets are large pockets and belts. Collars and cuffs are usually of the striped fabric. Hats to match are designed for each individual costume; and, if one seeks a very grand affair, it will be found that there is a parasol to go with it. Surely the summer girl will be a creature of great charm, if clothes count for anything.

New little chiffon collars, known as petal throatlets, are attractive. They are wired carefully, and so stay standoutish. Necklaces made of tiny ribbon flowers are worn with dancing frocks and are very Watteaulike in effect.

Newest gloves are of two colors. For instance, white gloves will show the insides of the fingers made of dark blue, beige or even black, with a band at the wrist to match, and the stitching matching the dark kid. There are wonderfully beautiful gloves with insets of real lace, but they are too elegant to be really elegant; such lalas are so expressive of an effort to advertise wealth that they are not in really good taste. There is a limit to display. Because a thing costs a great deal of money is not proof that it is either beautiful or appropriate.

POINTED PARAGRAPHS.

Money also helps the man who tries to help himself.

Dark consequences sometimes result from light remarks.

Only a wide awake author should write a treatise on insomnia.

A woman seldom talks to herself. She just has to rest occasionally.

It's a short honeymoon that lasts till the furniture is paid for.

A woman seldom brags of her good judgment, but men were liars ever.

A married man can always feel sorry for himself when his wife is sick in bed.

Speaking of batters, the buckwheat brand is as popular as the baseball kind.

JUNE

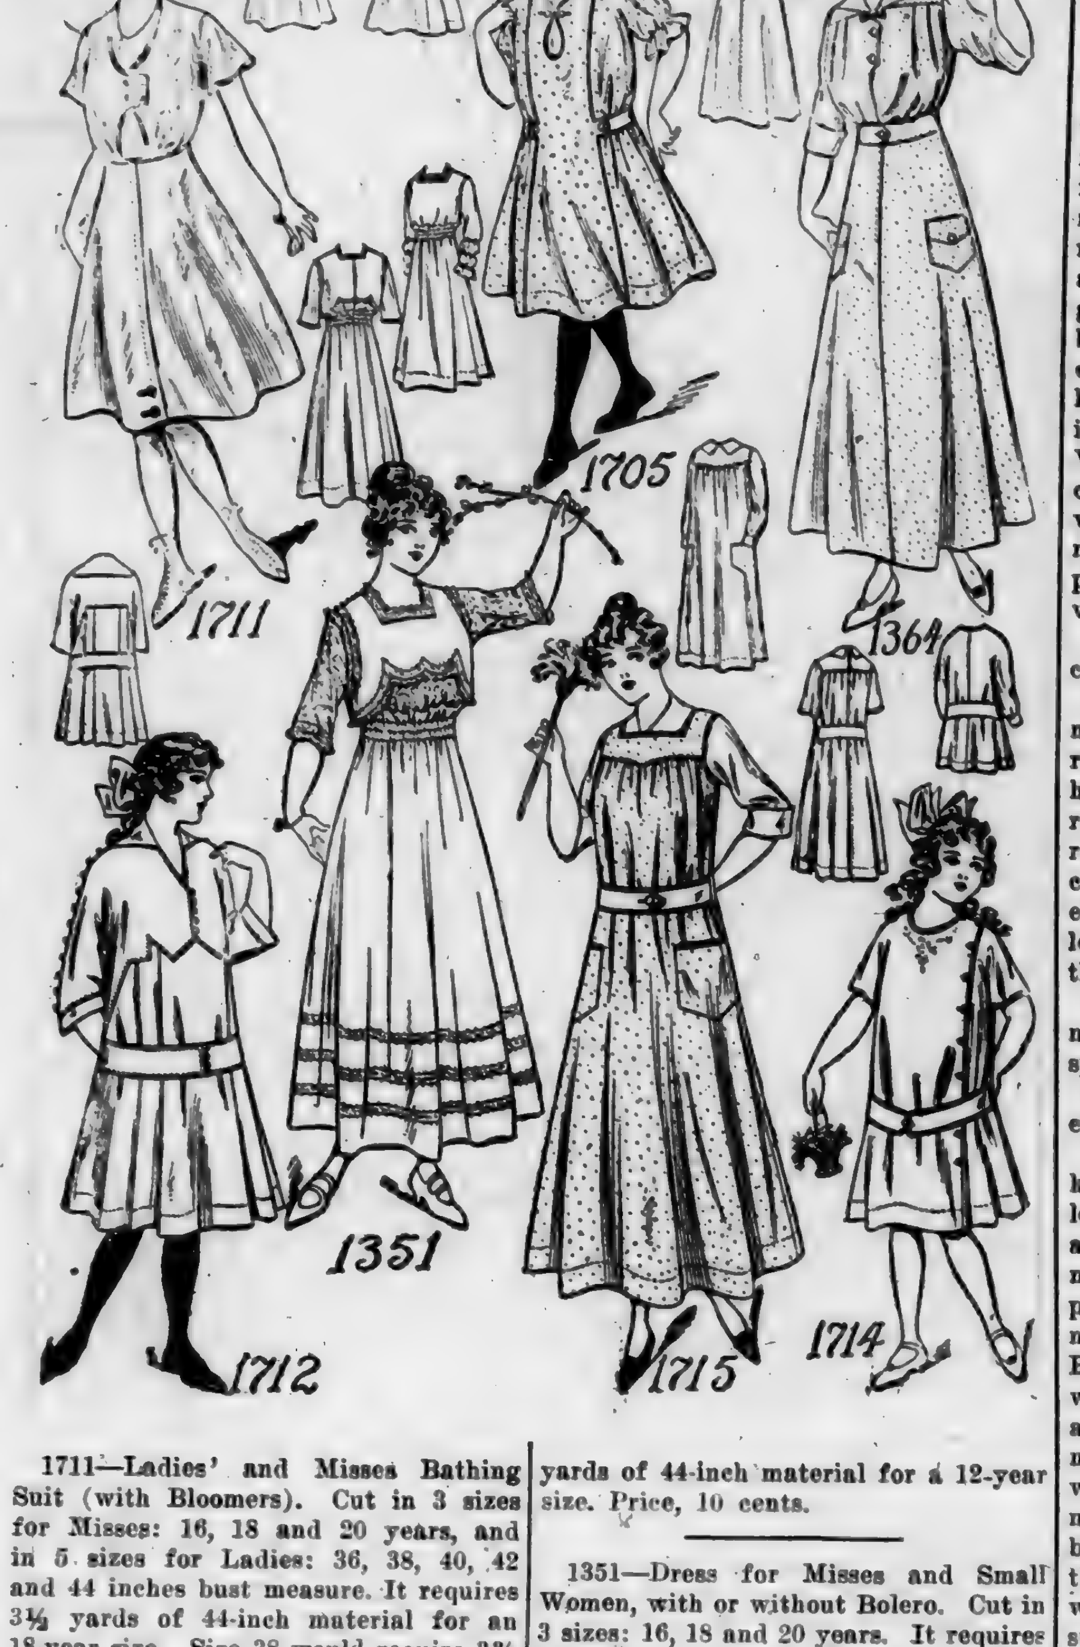
L 908

U 169

Our Fashion Department

Prepared Especially for this Paper

Send All Orders Direct to this Paper



1711—Ladies' and Misses Bathing Suit (with Bloomers). Cut in 3 sizes for Misses: 16, 18 and 20 years, and in 5 sizes for Ladies: 36, 38, 40, 42 and 44 inches bust measure. It requires 3½ yards of 44-inch material for an 18-year size. Size 38 would require 3¾ yards. Price, 10 cents.

1705—Girls' Dress.

Cut in 5 sizes: 4, 6, 8, 10 and 12 years. It requires 3¼ yards of 40-inch material for an 8-year size. Price, 10 cents.

1364—Ladies' House Dress.

Cut in 6 sizes: 34, 36, 38, 40, 42 and 44 inches bust measure. It requires 7 yards of 36-inch material for a 36-inch size. The skirt measures about 3 yards at the foot. Price 10 cents.

1712—Girls' Dress. Cut in 4 sizes: 8, 10, 12 and 14 years. It requires 3⅜ yards of 44-inch material for a 12-year size. Price, 10 cents.

1351—Dress for Misses and Small Women, with or without Bolero. Cut in 3 sizes: 16, 18 and 20 years. It requires 7½ yards of 27 inch material for an 18 year size, with 1 yard for bolero. The skirt measures 2 2/3 yards at the lower edge. Price 10 cents.

1715—Ladies' Apron, with or without Sleeve. Cut in 3 sizes: Small, Medium and Large. It requires 6¾ yards of 36-inch material for a Medium size with Sleeves, without Sleeves, 6 yards. Price, 10 cents.

1714—Girls' One Piece Dress. Cut in 5 sizes: 4, 6, 8, 10 and 12 years. It requires 3½ yards of 27-inch material for a 10-year size. Price, 10 cents.

PATTERN ORDER.

Patterns
No.	Size

I enclose ....for Patterns

Name ....

Town ....

State ....

St. No., R. F. D. ....

Mail Your Order Direct to Publisher.

NEEDLEWORK NOTES

Scarfs and doilies of coarse linen for the dining room have the design stenciled in black, and this is outlined in white outline stitches. French knots in black cotton also have a place in this design, and when completed the set is unique.

An excellent couch pillow can be made from old silk pieces. These should be cut in narrow strips as for carpet rags, sewed together and wrapped in small balls. The silk rags are then braided in ordinary three strand braid, just as the braided rag rugs are made. The braid is then folded back and sewed, either in a circular or oblong form, around and around with overhand stitches, so that the surface is flat and smooth. When a sufficient amount of braiding has been sewed for one side of a pillow, the opposite side is made in the same way. These two sides are then joined with a puffing of silk about three and one-half inches wide, which is gathered and sewed between the two sides.

A GOOD NIGHT SET.

A bedside set which almost any one would like to possess comes in a pretty arts-and crafts cardboard box and contains a small red porcelain candlestick and cushion of sweet smelling pine needles. The cushion is not over five inches square, just large enough to tuck under one's nose to induce sleep.

HONEY POTS.

There have been many honey pots made of china to simulate hives, but the latest has a number of realistic china bees, with wings raised for fight, scattered over it.

POINTED PARAGRAPHS.

Stolen sweets may be hard to digest.

The cloak of charity is inefficient unless elastic.

A horrible example is often better than none at all.

If you would keep your peace of mind do not give advice.

It's easier to get a bad reputation than to keep a good one.

Virtue may be its own reward, but vice gets more free advertising.

A woman always disproves of a new style that is not becoming to her.

Sometimes a man's friends work overtime in attempting to work him.

Many a leap year girl loses her head in trying to win a young man's heart.

You can please the other fellow best by lending a hand instead of giving advice.

In a small boy's ideal heaven he can always have a second piece of pie.

The average woman worries more about her complexion than she does about her prospective harp and crown.

It's you for the other side of the street when you see a man approaching who never fails to inform you that the world is daily growing worse.

Amelia Rives, the authoress, works on an average of seventeen hours a day and usually has a half dozen short stories and two or three novels under way at the same time.

"The Sign Beyond"

By J. Glenn Miller. Auburn, Indiana

PRIZE STORY No. 9

''What is success without honor? What is money without friends? In short, what is life without the hope of a future? Has not the poet well said:

'Without this blessed boon to man,
Our lives would surely be
Most burdensome to each of us
With naught but misery.
And we all would surely hasten
To leave this storm tos't realm
If Hope, our guardian angel
Were not constant at the helm.'

''How little we know the pangs that wreak through the minds of such men as they? What mental suffering fills their days? What grewsome nightmares fill their nights? And as they rapidly pass down the decline of life and look beyond, beyond the glitter of gold, what is it they see at the base in the distance, dazzling their eyes with its intense brightness? A large broad sign on which is inscribed in letters of fire the one word 'LOST.' Without a power to slacken the accelerating speed as they near the end, without courage to turn aside, they make one last desperate struggle and plunge off helpless, hopeless, into the vast Eternity.

''Abner is that the route of your choice?''

All the time Carl was speaking, Abner's attention had apparently been rivetted to his feat on the desk before him. But when Carl had finished, he removed his feat, turned slowly in his revolving chair to a position where he could face his partner and with both elbows on the arm rests of the chair, leaned forward and gazed steadily at the floor.

Carl knew his speech had reached its mark before Abner raised his head to speak.

Then looking squarely into Carl's eyes he replied:

''From our boyhood, Carl, I have known you as a weakling. Brotherly love and pity were the sole consideration for my taking you in as a partner. In school I considered you as a pest, in college as a bore, and in business I have considered you as a blot. But now, thank God, I know you for what you are,—A man,—an honest man and a strong man. You have opened my eyes, you have saved my career and with the help of God you have saved my soul. Why have you never before brought your virtues to the surface and thus demanded the respect of all? Why were you content to be the laughing stock of our boyhood friends, the butt of all jokes in college? Did it require this crisis in our lives to bring out the good that is in you? All last night I lay awake trying to devise some plan to get rid of you, without injury to your feelings. But you were right, the glitter of gold had obscured my sight from the great sight beyond, and now if you will accept my hand as a token of a friendship that will never fail, we will hereafter unite our efforts and utilize our profession for the betterment and uplift of mankind.''

He could say no more. His voice was choked with tears and as the stenographer entered the outer door of the office, both men were struggling to regain their composure. Carl returning to his own room closed the door behind him.

That afternoon found Abner and Carl closeted together, but this time in Carl's room. Carl had related his position of the evening before, much to Abner's surprise, and they were now discussing the best means of restoring to the unfortunate stockholders of the Bank Medical Company the money they had invested and lost. Presently there was a rap at the door and Mrs. Burrows appeared to fill her engagement with Carl. After a formal introduction to Abner, Carl was forced to offer his regrets for not yet being ready to advise her as to his plans.

''As my attention has been diverted to other business to a greater extent than I had anticipated,'' he explained, ''I fear now that it will be impossible for me to give you a direct answer before another week.''

The woman's countenance sank as she turned to leave the room.

''How much did your husband loose?'' inquired Abner.

''Twenty thousand dollars,'' she replied weakly.

''Here, Carl, give her this for a starter,'' said Abner, drawing the bag of gold from his pocket and tossing it on Carl's desk before him.

''Yes, this will tide you over,'' said Carl, ''until we are able to tell you something further.'' He counted out the five hundred dollars to the woman, who watched him in deep amazement until he had finished and then exclaimed: ''Oh! How——.'' But that was as far as she got when she was interrupted by Abner.

''That is all right, Mrs. Burrows. We understand your gratitude perfectly, but we are not prepared to make a further report at this time, so call again in a week please.''

With this firm injunction, she carefully wrapped the bag of gold in an old newspaper, placed the parcel under her shawl and departed.

''It's great to do good for others, isn't it, Carl?'' said Abner, after she was out of hearing. ''I have been fully compensated by the expression of joy on her face as she left the office.''

''This is only a beginner,'' returned his partner. Wait until we get started and you will find that the wealth of joy received from making others happy is the only wealth really worth while.

Midnight found both men in the office working out plans for their campaign against the former officers of the defunct Medical Company and when they finally retired, all was in readiness for the morning.

The first thing in order was an urgent call sent out by Abner for a meeting at noon that day, of all those present at the meeting two nights before. In response they were all there at the appointed time, even Carl, who occupied the same chair of the night before.

After they became settled, Abner explained in detail Carl's position on that night before and also of his interest in their desolution proceedings.

''But he will have only his word against the four of us,'' gasped the Colonel through his white lips.

''Yes, but he has other and better ''he has got a letter press copy of the document signed by all three of you last night. He got it out of the safe after we had left the office.'

At this the Colonel was swooning in his chair and the Professor was unable to speak or assist him when Carl threw open the door of the partition, entered the room and called out: ''Yes, and here is the copy.''

With tiger like quickness the Professor leaped from his chair, grabbed the paper out of Carl's hand and had torn it into shreds before the others were aware of what was happening.

''Save your energy, Professor,'' said Abner coolly, ''the original is locked in the safe and will be used in evidence against you if necessary.''

''What!'' exclaimed the Professor and Colonel in a breath, the latter being aroused by the effort of the Professor to destroy the evidence that Carl had against them.

''I mean just what I say,'' continued Abner. ''Also all the books and papers of the Company which I now have in my possession.''

''And you have turned traitor?'' growled the Professor, glaring at him with a look that had subdued the strongest of men.

''You may term it what you like, Professor,'' answered Abner undaunted as he continued: ''To expedite the affairs of this meeting, I have but one proposition to make, and that is that you gentlemen respectively, jointly and severally, immediately pay unto your humble servant, your duly authorized president, secretary and treasurer, the sum of two hundred thousand dollars, that I can, without delay, take up the outstanding stock of the company at par and pay each of the stockholders ten per cent interest on his investment. I examined the books and Mr. Penn and I figured it all out last night, just how much it would take to settle up the liabilities of the company in full and pay the investors a reasonable percentage on their investments. Now, if you gentlemen haven't enough change with you to cover the entire amount, here is a pen and ink and you may draw checks or other negotiable paper for the balance. Now, hurry, gentlemen, for it is already past my lunch time.''

''But if we don't?'' inquired the Professor.

''Then the penitentiary for you all,'' was Abner's stern reply.

''Well, Colonel,'' said the Professor, ''I guess it is up to you to do something, you were the treasurer.''

''Treasurer!'' exclaimed the Colonel, ''didn't you get all the money?''

''Certainly, but I spent it, too,'' answered the Professor.

''Spent two hundred thousand dollars in the last year?''

''Sure, don't you think it costs anything to promote a deal of this kind?''

''Damnable liar! Damnable thief!'' exclaimed the Colonel.

''Who proposed the winding up o the business in this way, Colonel? You were willing to steal from the stockholders, but when somebody gets a little the best of you, you make an awful fuss. You are a jolly good thief, but a d——n poor looser. Why don't you brace up and take your medicine like a man; it can't be no worse for you than for me.''

''But——''

''Gentlemen, you will have to settle your differences later, interrupted Abner, for unless this amount is paid at once I will have to ring for the police.''

''Well, I guess I can adjust my share,'' said the Colonel, ''but if the Professor has spent all the money, they will have to take the balance in the satisfaction of knowing that he is in a safe place for the probable remainder of his life.''

This said, the Colonel grasped the pen and began writing checks, notes and mortgages for his share of the liabilities and then passed the pen to the Professor who promptly threw it to one side.

''If you have not got any money nor other securities, Professor, how about those diamonds,'' Abner suggested.

''I can put them in,'' he answered, knowing that they would probably be taken from him anyway.

''Very well, we will allow you five hundred dollars for them.

''Now, Mr. Williams, we will receive your contribution,'' said Abner, turning to Mr. Williams, who had remained silent during the entire proceedings.

''You will have to pass me,'' he said, ''I am only one of the stockholders anyway. You know a corporation must be prosecuted through its officers.''

''But I am the officers to this concern, according to the document you signed night before last,'' answered Abner, and I am just making one of your popular special assessments. I think you will be known by the company you keep anyway.'' Then he again turned to the Colonel.

''Well Colonel, I guess I will have to ask you to make up the balance for your partners. You are the only one that seems to have any money. They will probably pay you back as soon as they can promote another medical company.''

''I've gone my limit,'' answered the Colonel mournful, without looking up from the floor where his eyes had rested since he made his first contribution.

''Oh, no you haven't,'' said Abner. ''There are those Market street store rooms and the Crown street property, besides your home on the boulevard, that I know of.''

''My God! are you going to take my home and turn me and my family out on the street?''

''That is no worse than you did to that woman—— What was her name Carl?''

''Mrs. Burrows.''

''My daughter,'' cried the Colonel, and dropping his head in his hands began to cry like a child.

''My life has been nothing but sorrow,'' he wailed, ''and now when I am old, to have the last cent taken from me and to be turned out in the street, is placing the last straw on a ruined life.''

''He sees the sign beyond, Carl,'' said Abner, glancing up at his partner. Then turning again to the Colonel, continued. ''Colonel, you are simply approaching the end of the decline, made slippery by those of your class who have preceeded you. Perhaps the details of your journeys have differed in some respects, but you all reach the same end.''

Abner had started to relate to him the lesson he had so recently learned from Carl, but when he noticed the Colonel's face the color had disappeared and he was again fainting.

While Abner and Carl were bathing his face in cold water in an effort to restore consciousness, Mr. Williams, much to their surprise, had displayed his badge of authority as a United State's Marshal and had placed the Professor under arrest. As soon as the Colonel recovered he was also arrested and the pair were marched away to the city jail to await formal charges.

The securities were soon reduced to money and within a week all of the old stockholders had been paid in full, with interest.

The news of the arrests spread rapidly and the next morning Abner and Carl read their names in the large head lines of the morning papers. It proved a great advertisement for them and they were soon obliged to lease larger and better offices and had all the business they could handle.

At the end of a year the Professor had served nine months of a twenty year sentence in the penitentiary, but the Colonel had been spared by the pleadings of Abner and Carl. He had moved from his fine home on the boulevard and was then living in the home of his daughter, Mrs. Burrows, where he spent the few remaining years of his life trying to atone for his sins of the past.

Mr. Burrows had regained his health and often found the Colonel of great assistance in guiding him past the pitfalls of the business world.

Abner boarded with Mr. and Mrs. Penn, formerly Miss Hosington, until a few years later when he also was married. But in all his after years of happiness and prosperity, never did he forget to keep on the lookout for ''The Sign Beyond.''

THE END

FROM THE CONSULAR REPORTS.

India's rice crop of this year is estimated at 76,792,000 acres, slightly in excess of the acreage of the year before. The total yield is expected to be 21 per cent greater than last year. Estimates for both area and yield are the greatest on record.

Beer has been raised in price in Rio Janeiro. Foreign beers cannot compete because of the high tariff.

War has seriously affected the peanut trade of Madras, India.

HICKORY DICKORY DOCK, SNAKE GETS INTO CLOCK

Query, Did Reptile Shed Skin There, or Should Blame be Laid on Rats

Pittsburg, Pa.—The Perrysville public schoolhouse in Ross township, near the Highland Presbyterian church, made famous by the notorious Biddle boys and Mrs. Kate Soffel spending a night there after having escaped from the Alleghany County jail, has come to the front again with a sensation that is sending thrills up and down the spinal columns of the pupils of that district and causing even older folk of the neighborhood to give the place of learning a wide berth after nightfall.

The schoolhouse clock creates the sensation this time. It is an eight day time piece which ran all right until a few days ago when it stopped and refused to give forth even the faintest tick. (That is characteristic of clocks that stop.) Whereupon the directors of the district, aware of the aforesaid characteristic, sent it to August Lock, a Northside jeweler, for repairs.

The moment a workman at the store took off the face of the clock the reason it refused to chronicle the time was evident. Interwoven among the wheels and springs of the time piece was the hide of a snake nearly a yard in length. Also a lot of litter resembling a rat's nest.

The glass in front of the pendulum of the clock had been broken for some time, and it is supposed that rats may have made a nest in the works of the time piece. But the mystery is: How did the hide of a large snake find its way there? The hide resembles that of a garter snake, and the query is: Did a snake make its home in the clock, devour the rats and leave its hide there at shedding time, or did a rat carry the hide or a live snake into the clock which the rat had appropriated for its domicile?

Somehow a man nearly always gets sick at the wrong time—there is either a party or a dressmaker in the house.

Story Contest

Opportunity for subscribers of this paper to try their literary talent and gain a reputation.

MANY magazine writers are secured from the rural communities. We want our subscribers to have every advantage to utilize their talent, and have joined with a number of other publishers in a great story contest.

Do you think you can write a story?

Suppose you try anyhow. For the best story received we will pay

$50.00

Stories may run from 2,000 to 15,000 words. Decision will be made by popular vote of the subscribers of this and several other papers. Stories acceptable for entry will be published in this paper and not less than fifty others. This is a chance to gain popularity at once. Send manuscript direct to editor of this paper.

JUNE

L 908

0170

SUES FOR $100,000

Copyright Underwood & Underwood

Mrs. Malcom Strauss, handsome wife of the noted artist, has entered suit for separation and has started action for $100,000 against Mrs. Arthur Seligman, alleging alienation of her husband's affections. Mr. Strauss denies any indiscretion. Mrs. Seligman, who until a short time ago was Miss Gladys Snellenberg of Philadelphia, engaged Mr. Strauss to paint her portrait and design certain costumes for her. At the time it is said, Mrs. Strauss seriously objected, but as Mr. Strauss, according to his own words, was in need of funds, he accepted the commission. Mrs. Arthur Seligman is now on her way to Japan with her husband, having been recently married. She is the daughter of K. Snellenberg of Philadelphia, who is many times a millionaire. Mrs. Strauss was Katherine McDonald, one of the most beautiful of the Winter Garden girls before her marriage.

BIBLE IS 332 YEARS OLD

Book Has Been in One Family Since 1584 and Is in German Language.

Ionia, Ind.—A. P. Fleckenstein of Ionia is the possessor of a Bible which as been in his family for 332 years. Most of the time it has been in Germany. It was in Hoerstin, Bavaria, until 1883, when it was brought to America. In 1893 it was exhibited at the world's fair.

The flyleaf at the beginning of the New Testament contains the following tribute to the translator:

"A true translation into the German language according to the old translations used in the Christian church and enlightened with many wholesome annotations by the Rev. Dr. John Dietenberger. To the praise of God and the most gracious pleasure of the Roman imperial majesty and to the good of the common German nation and now embellished with illustrations and put into this grand form. This book was printed at Cologne, Germany, in the year A. D. 1584 by Gerwin Calenium and the heirs of John Quentel. With the grace and liberty of the Roman imperial majesty."

CONVICTS TO PLANT COTTON

They Will Cultivate 1,300 Acres of a Prison Farm in Oklahoma.

McAlester, Okla.—Thirteen hundred acres of the state prison farm will be planted to cotton this year. All work except the overseeing of the labor will be done by prisoners.

The land on which this cotton will be produced was a few years ago merely a rocky waste. Hills, rock-covered and eroded by rains and gullies deeply cut by spring floods, surrounded the concrete walls of the penitentiary. Hard labor and careful management have changed the surface to a rolling, well-drained seed bed.

Rocks were removed from the surface. Gullies were filled up after drains had been laid. Dams and riprap were emplaced to hold back the fine soil carried down by showers.

In the coming year almost the entire acreage will be devoted to cotton. Of the land still rocky and unimproved hog and cattle pastures have been made. Bermuda grass is spreading and before many years at the present rate of development enough beef and dairy supplies will be produced to feed the convicts.

FIVE IN ONE FAMILY IN PEN

Father, Mother, Two Sons and Stepson Convicted of Burglary and Receiving Stolen Goods.

Twin Falls, Idaho.—Five members of one family, including the father, mother, two sons and a stepson, were taken to the penitentiaray to serve serms of six months to fifteen years for burglary and receiving stolen goods.

The prisoners are J. D. Ross and his wife, sentenced to serve from six months to one year for receiving stolen goods. Another son and Ross' stepson, Orville Duncan, were given sentences of from one to fifteen years for burglary.

Three young children of the couple, including a baby three weeks old, were taken to the children's home in Boise.

Not All Dead.

Paterson, N. J.—To pay a Willard-Moran fight bet Larry O'Brien must propel a peanut one mile with a toothpick.

BRIGHT STAR OF FILMDOM

© by George Kleine

Miss Billie Burke.

Star of "Gloria's Romance," the new motion picture novel from the pen of Mr. and Mrs. Rupert Hughes, and reputed to be one of the highest-paid actresses of the day.

A Gift Suggestion

A petticoat ruffle makes a pretty and unusual gift for the birthday of a friend. Now that skirts are so voluminous most girls are reveling in fluffy ruffles to their heart's content. If you do not care to embroider the scalloping, which is really the tedious part of embroidering a petticoat, have rather large shallow scallops piqueted on batiste, nainsook or handkerchief linen.

You can then put a trifle more time on embroidering with a skeleton stitchery a pretty design that will fit partly into the scallops. The ruffle is then mounted on a beading of val lace or fine embroidery and ribbon is run through and tied in a bow at the front side.

The flounce should be made quite wide, at least two yards and a half, so that when it is to be attached to the old petticoat or a new one it will be wide enough to compare favorably with the full skirts now in vogue.

Pointed Paragraphs.

Sometimes the up-to-date maid is merely made up.

Many a wife is a martyr to her husband's dyspepsia.

There's no fool like an old fool who marries a young fool.

The divorce court judge plays shortstop in the matrimonial field.

The homelier a girl is the fewer temptations she has to dodge.

It's easy to be popular if you have money—and are willing to spend it.

Man Must Live in the Present—Not Past.

By Rev. W. H. Barraclough

It is of the utmost importance to the man who would help his fellow man that he live in the present; that he keep in touch with his own age. It is possible for us to live too much in the past.

The ages that are gone have made their contribution to the world's development, to its sum of knowledge; but we are wasting time, if our study of archeology does not assist us in the solving of present day problems.

We belong to today, and if we are to exert any influence upon it we must sympathize with its needs and catch its spirit of progress and throw ourselves into its activities, that we may share its achievements.

Pretty Tea Cloth.

Something new in a cover for the tea table is sure to be welcome. The pretty new cover referred to is made of a loose basket-weave cloth almost like a heavy scrim. Through this cloth at intervals of four inches are drawn threads to make four-inch squares. The squares which border the edge are filled in the corners with a design of a small teapot outlined against a background of solid cross-stitch in delft blue. Along each side cross-stitched letters are used in words inviting one to a cup of tea. The edge is finished with buttonholing, double overcasting or a small picoted crocheted edge in the blue.

Pearl 5,000,000 Years Old Found by Student

A pearl estimated to have been formed 5,000,000 years ago and said to be the oldest specimen of its kind in the world, was found by Stanley C. Herold, a Stanford student, six months ago. The pearl will be presented to the Stanford museum.

According to university authorities, the pearl is of little value as a gem, but the oyster in which it was found originated, they said, probably in the Paleozoic period, but which they have credited to the Eocenech.

"We have no record," said Herold, "of pearls having been formed before the time this one was created. It retains considerable luster, and when thoroughly polished will regain more, but its 5,000,000 years of existence has taken out about 50 per cent of its luster.

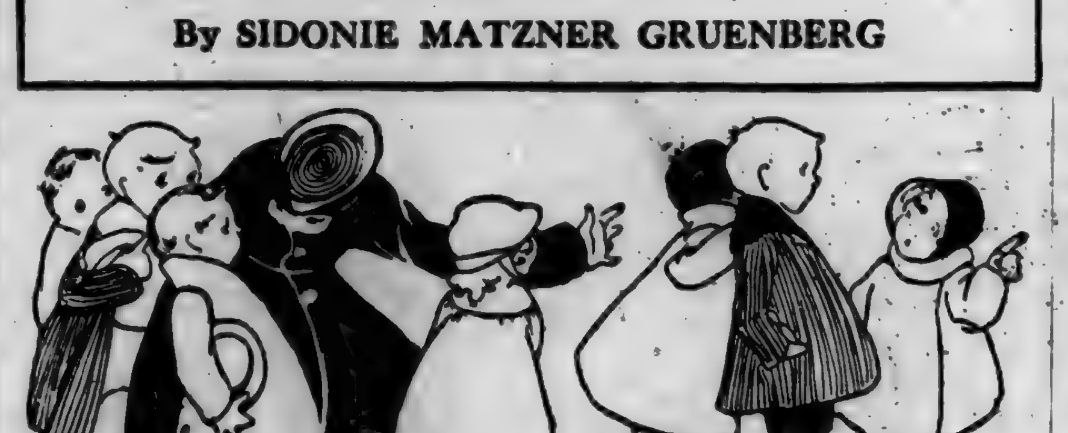
"At the time this pearl was made the dinosaur, mastodon and saber-toothed tiger were in existence."

A Pretty Collar Device.

A pretty collar noted on an afternoon dress was shaped from a strip of soft ribbon or silk, sewed to the waist at the back; it passed then across the bare throat above the open front, and was clasped there under a fancy buckle.

Children's Knowledge of Sources Is Sadly Limited

By SIDONIE MATZNER GRUENBERG



Mothers planned to take turns in conducting the children of the schools through business and industrial plants.

A CITY bred boy of some seven years was taken to the country for the good of his health. During his first breakfast in the new surroundings he was asked whether he wished any milk.

"What kind of milk do you use?" he asked, as he had heard visitors ask his mother at home.

"Why, cow's milk, of course," was the uncomprehending reply of the native dispenser of good things to eat.

"Then I don't want any, thank you," said Jimmie. "We use only Anderson's milk."

This was considered very funny at the time, and the story was told to all who would stay long enough to listen. Incidentally, Jimmie learned a great deal about cows that no one had ever considered it necessary to teach him. And he learned something about the sources of milk, and about how it comes to present itself in bottles at the front step every morning.

As business and industry become better organized, our children seem to have less and less opportunity to become acquainted with the various elements that make up what Charles Edward Russell calls "the heart of the nation"—the activities and processes upon which we depend for the things and materials we use in our daily lives. And in a way this is quite as true of the country child as it is of the city child. The former accumulates a great deal of first hand knowledge about raising garden truck and crops and farm animals, but the dishes and the table ware, the stationery and the hardware, most of the clothing and the house furnishings come to him from nowhere in particular, by way of the parcels post or express, or at best by way of the "general store."

The child in the city needs to know more about the farm than he can learn from books and pictures; and the child in the country needs to know more about factories than he can read in a magazine.

In one western town a group of fathers planned to take turns in conducting the children of the schools through the business and industrial plants. In an eastern city the mothers of the children of a school made a similar arrangement.

There is an opportunity here for parents to do valuable supplementary work for their children in co-operation with the schools and with the other institutions of the community. To learn in the course of a few years all that is involved in a pair of shoes as a product of human labor is a liberalizing experience for any child.

USE SWISS SCHOOL SYSTEM

Mrs. Heinrich Arnold will install the Swiss school system at the new colony in Lower California. This system of public education, admittedly one of the best in the world, will be adopted for the settlers who are soon to arrive in Lower California under the auspices of the Swiss Colonization society.

HEROISM WINS HIM BRIDE

Youth Who Furnished Skin for Grafting Upon Little Girl Weds the Nurse.

Denver.—A romance—like those you read about in novels—culminated recently when Miss Leilah Alma Peck, a nurse at the County hospital, formerly of Madison, Ind., was married to Vincent Brunner, Jr. of Mishawaka, Ind.

Several months ago Brunner read in an Indiana paper that little five-year-old Mary Lena Lewis, who was badly burned in a Colorado forest fire, needed healthy skin grafted on to her seared little body. The appeal touched his heart, and he being a healthy young man, came to Denver and gave a portion of his skin that the child might recover.

During the skin grafting operation he met Miss Peck, and the romance began that ended in their marriage. In the spring the couple will take up a homestead for their future home.

FEEDS APRICOTS TO HOGS

Fruit Market Is Glutted, but Francis Finds Way to Use His.

Pomona, Cal.—Apricot ham is the latest novelty in this community. C. C. Francis, who has a ranch near here, is the producer. Last summer his apricot crop was going to waste because the market was glutted, so he fed the apricots to his hogs.

He butchered two shoats the other day. They each tipped the beam at 245 pounds. He got 15 gallons of lard, seven pounds of sausage, four splendid hams, some spareribs, a quantity of side meat, eight pigs' feet and 100 pounds of soap out of the kill.

The hogs were carried through the summer and fall on waste fruit, and this winter they were finished on oranges and cornmeal slop. Mr. Francis declares that the high cost of living won't worry him for a while at least.

"BETTER LET THEM MARRY"

This Is Advice of Father of Thirteen-Year-Old Missouri Girl Who Would Be a Bride.

Springfield, Mo.—"When they want to get married, you'd better let 'em marry," is the view held by E. D. Davis of Wilson Creek and he showed in a practical way that it was not idle sentiment.

Davis has a daughter thirteen years old, and she let it be known that she desired to become the wife of Edward Salkil, twenty-one years old. Davis accompanied Salkil to the office of the county recorder to obtain the license, and it was in response to the demur by B. H. Langston, a deputy in the office, that the father of the girl expressed himself as stated.

SOLDIERS TO DO FARM WORK

Canadian Government Will Give Militiamen Leave of Absence for One Month.

Winnipeg.—The serious problem of western Canada to find help to put in the crop has been practically solved by an official order from the militia department allowing every non-commissioned officer and man on active service in Canada leave of absence not exceeding one month, to go out on the farms.

The soldiers will receive full pay and allowances as usual, and in addition what they earn from the farmers. The government will provide free transportation for the round trip from camp to farm not exceeding a distance of 300 miles.

Can Any Man of Thirty-Five Be Heart Whole and Fancy Free?

By LAURA JEAN LIBBEY

(Copyright, 1916.)

Do you dream sometimes, with a sudden thrill,
Of one whose pulses stir
At thought of you and your brave, strong will
To bless and comfort her?
Oh, life of my soul, it is better to know
There is one in this wide, wide world,
No matter how far or how free we may go,
Or what fable we may have been told,
That belongs to us, as the earth to the sun,
Or the spirit to God who gave!
And this is as certain that we are one
As life and death and the grave.

I do not feel certain that the man who is old enough to have experienced the tender passion, yet who is heart-whole and fancy-free, is entirely happy or satisfied. It is not natural for a man to go through life holding aloof from women.

Every man has a reverent, tender yearning for woman's companionship, whether he admits it or not. It was implanted in his nature with mother love at birth. Early marriages for young men should not be frowned down because of the belief he would make a wiser choice later on. If he tarries too long under the banner of single blessedness, he will be more than apt to think he is exercising wisdom by not marrying at all.

A remarkable specimen of manhood is he who has reached 35 without one heart affair at least. If a man, who had gone gayly through the world to that age told me calmly, unblushingly that his heart had never yet thrilled under a woman's smile, I would do my best to keep from doubting him. There are some things men never will tell the exact truth about, and their experience in romance is one of them.

Unfortunate is the man who belongs to nobody and has nobody who loves him and belongs to him only. A man may enjoy being a rover—at home wherever he may happen to hang up his hat—yet he has the feeling of always being a stranger, that there is no one to miss him when he goes, no one who would be happy were he to stay. If he is ill or weighed down by grief or care there is no loving companion, no second self, to whisper his hopes or fears to; no one who cares whether he succeeds in life or staggers along under his heavy load and fails; no one who cares whether he has a warm bed or sleeps out under the cold, white light of the stars.

Parents must go from a man in the course of time. Brothers and sisters drift the whole wide world apart, finding other heart ties, friendships run their lengths and lapse, but the wife of his bosom keeps close by his side to the very end. The older he grows the more indispensable she becomes to him.

The man of middle age pays himself a doubtful compliment in declaring himself heart-whole and fancy-free. Should this actually be the case he should hasten to repair the damage at the earliest possible day. He should not be wiser than he who has said: "It is not well for man to live alone."

Nip and Tuck.

The Philosopher.

"Is it easy to become a philosopher?" asked the young man from the tall grass district.

"Easiest thing in the world," answered the home-grown specimen. "All you have to do is utter truths you don't believe yourself and can't induce others to believe."

What It Leads To.

His Wife (reading)—A scientist claims that cryptococcuszanthogeniacus causes yellow fever.

Her Husband—Is that so? I always thought it was something of that kind that caused lockjaw.

Wherein They Differ.

Little Lemuel—Say, paw, what's the difference between a bachelor maid and a spinster?

Paw—A bachelor maid, son, always lives in the city, while a spinster invariably dwells in a small town.

Take Your Choice.

"Who is the greatest man living today?" asked Heiny.

"Well," replied Omar, "that is merely a matter of opinion. There are several of us."

Cause and Effect.

Harker—Your friend Lambley is rather an odd chap, isn't he?

Parker—Yes—result of a plunge in the stock market a few years ago.

Harker—How's that?

Parker—He failed to come out even.

Some Are Acquired.

"They say," remarked the moralizer, "that aggressive and impulsive people usually have black eyes."

"That's right," rejoined the demoralizer. "If they are not born with them they manage to acquire them later."

Wherein They Differ.

"A man," she remarked, "would rather have contentment without love than love without contentment."

"Yes," he rejoined, "and a woman would rather have love without contentment than contentment without love."

What Women Are Doing

Over 100 women in the United States manage dairy farms.

The Pennsylvania woman's division for national preparedness has outlined a plan for feeding troops in time of war or in time of disaster.

Miss Kathleen Burke, daughter of the president of the London & Northwestern railroad, is employed by the English government to do secret mission work.

In the practice of the almost forgotten artcraft of print inlaying, Miss S. F. Shaw, a Maine girl, is at work at the Widener Memorial library at Harvard.

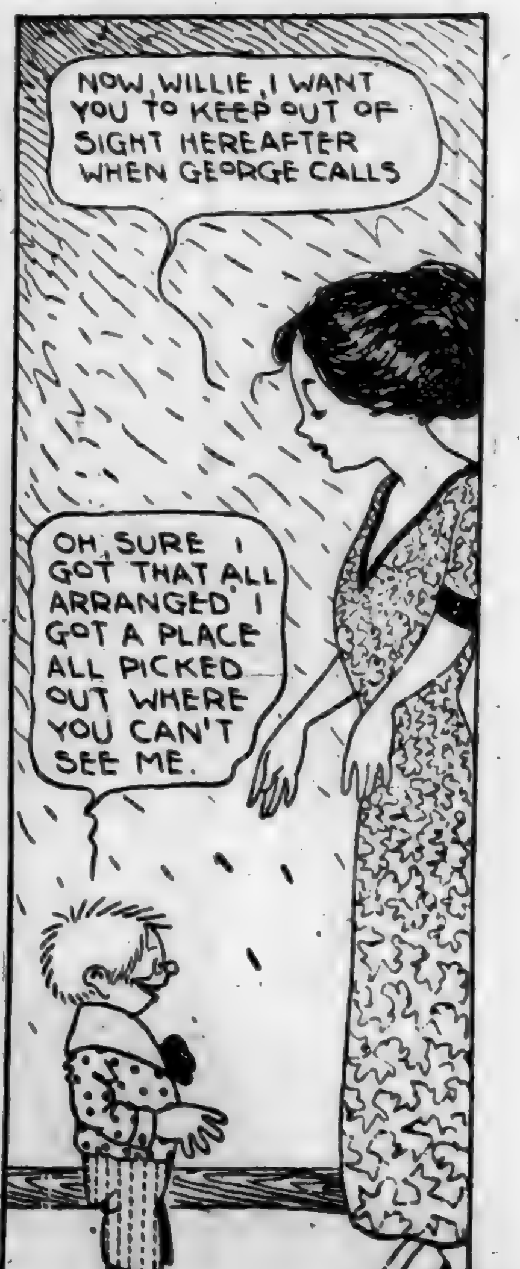
A Pretty Neckpiece

A very pretty neckpiece is fashioned of a wide, soft faille ribbon, edged with a fringe of ostrich fronds curled a little. This is worn rather tightly about the neck and fastened with a large, flat folded shaped pump bow, outlined by the same feather fringe. This bow is worn at the back, the side, or whereever it may be most becoming.

Dry Dyeing.

For laces put a tube of paint into gasoline and stir until dissolved, then test the shade by dipping in a sample. If too dark, add more gasoline, but if the shade is too light, put in more paint. Dip the lace up and down until the tint is obtained, then shake the lace out and let it dry. Press on the wrong side with a warm flatiron. Pull gently, but do not wash first. Ostrich feathers, quills, wings and faded artificial flowers respond to the same treatment. Goods not touching water are almost like new again. Ceylon tea will give lace a pretty cream tint.

HE WAS PREPARED



NOW, WILLIE, I WANT YOU TO KEEP OUT OF SIGHT HEREAFTER WHEN GEORGE CALLS
OH, SURE I GOT THAT ALL ARRANGED I GOT A PLACE ALL PICKED OUT WHERE YOU CAN'T SEE ME.

Couldn't Lose 'Em.

Mrs. Naggs—I understand your husband is unable to meet his creditors.

Mrs. Waggs—Don't you believe it. He meets them much oftener than he cares to.

JUNE

L 908

0171

WE WELCOME
LARGE&SMALL
DEPOSITS

Your Business. Is never too large for us to handle successfully, or too small for us to appreciate. The small depositors receive the same courteous attention as the large depositors.

EVERY CUSTOMER A BOOSTER

That's why we want your account. We want you to tell your friends and neighbors. They need a good BANK also, and all will be benefited.

Farmers & Merchants
State Bank
Capital Stock $25,000.00
Spencerville, - - - Indiana

PRESIDENTIAL POINTERS

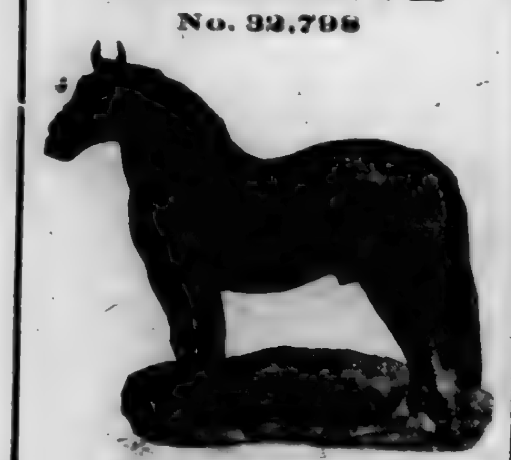
In the second presidential election, 1792, 15 states took part, having 132 electoral votes. As in 1789, Washington received one vote from every elector, the other votes being as follows: John Adams, 77; George Clinton, 50; Thomas Jefferson, 4; Aaron Burr, 1. Washington as president and Adams as vice president were inaugurated in Philadelphia, March 4, 1793. At the end of his term Washington refused to be a candidate for a third term and the unwritten law he laid down has never been overturned.

"TIZ" FOR TIRED SORE, ACHING FEET

Ah! what relief: No more tired feet; no more burning feet, swollen, bad smelling, sweaty feet. No more pain in corns callouses or bunions. No matter what ails your feet or what under the sun you've tried without getting relief, just use "TIZ." "TIZ" draws out all the poisonous exudations which puff up the feet; "TIZ" is magical; "TIZ" is grand; "TIZ" will cure your foot troubles so you'll never limp or draw up your face in pain. Your shoes won't seem tight and your feet will never, never hurt or get sore, swollen or tired.

Get a 25 cent box at any drug or department store, and get relief

The Percheron Horse
LORAINE
No. 32,798



Enrollment No. 2,950
FEES $10
W. H. Moore, Owner-Keeper

The Belgian Horse
CLARENCE
Enrollment No. 4194
FEES $10
A. B. DWYER, Owner.
W. H, MOORE, Keeper.

Care will be taken to avoid accidents but will not be responsible should any occur. These horses will make the season at
Archie Beam Barn,
22 Barn Phone, 950-3
Spencerville.

SPENCERVILLE

A $5 Vacuum and Sweeper for $3.95 at Beams & Co., store.

About a dozen of the young people of the Epworth League and their pastor, Rev. Berkitt and wife of the M. E. Church, of Butler, motored to this place, last Friday evening, and entertained the newly organized league by giving short and interesting talks.

Jason Keyes and wife, of Fort Wayne; John Beninghoff and wife, Mrs. Jennie Chaney, and Mrs. Geo. Gloyd and son Geary, were Sunday guests of Wm. Allen and family.

Transfer paper at NEWS office 2 sheets for 5c. Get some now for that pattern you wish to transfer

R. U. Bowser, wife and children visited Adolph Ehinger and family, of near Ft. Wayne, and Jerome Gloyd and family, of Robinson Chaple, Sunday.

Ed Akey and wife, of Leo; and Mrs. Felix Blaising and son, of New Haven, were Sunday guests of Leavitt Akey and wife.

Mrs. Amos Butler visited her brother, Martin Keesler, last Friday and Saturday. Mr. Keesler remains about the same at this time.

Greatly reduced prices on Shoes and Oxfords. You can't afford to be without, at the prices we are quoting. Beams & Co.

The C C Club was entertained at the home of Mrs. Maude Beams, Friday afternoon. A trip to Boston was planned for entertainment which was entered into by Mrs. Georgia Jenkins and Golden Murray. Miss Murray made the trip in the shortest time, and was presented a prize by the hostess. A dainty luncheon was served. The following guests were present:-Mrs. Henry Beams, Misses Helen Lake and Cleo Bowser, and Mrs. Merwood Rhodes.

An Apron and Bake sale was held last Saturday by the Ladies Guild. Proceeds amounted to $11.

Abe Furnish is improving very slowly. Those that visited at the Furnish home, Sunday, were: Mrs. Cora Markins, Mary Jane Silberg, Mrs. Geo. Jenkins, Frank Horn, wife and daughter Venus, Miss Zona Horn, Scudder Shutt and family and Andrew Shutt and son, of Garrett.

The Sunday School Class composed of the young ladies and the young married ladies of the M. E. Church will hold their class meeting in an all day session at the home of their teacher, Mrs. Melvin Howey, Friday. A Pot luck dinner will be served.

New spring oxfords for Ladies, Misses and Children—Just in at Beams & Co., store, in patent leather and gun metal.

COSTS SNIPER LIFE

Smoke of Extra Shot Reveals His Position.

Shows Ten Waiting British Marksmen Where Troublesome German Sharpshooter Is Hiding—He Troubles No More.

London.—A noncommissioned officer of a snipers' section who has just returned to the front after what he describes as "six glorious days of leave" sends home an interesting account of how a German sniper was put out of action.

"When I arrived," he said, "I found a spirit of great and indignant offensiveness prevailing in the snipers' section. 'What's wrong?' I asked. I was told that a German sniper—a breed we had congratulated ourselves on having thoroughly exterminated, or at least mastered, on our battalion front—had for some days past been making himself very objectionable by his wonderful ability in breaking periscopes. He had also made all our 'overland short cuts' very unhealthy. These short cuts save us both time and trouble, and are very necessary in bad weather when the condition of the trenches is none too good.

"On the seventh day the tragical climax came. He had 'outed' forever an officer. 'You must get on to this sniper and put him out of action. What are your snipers doing?' asked the C. O. of our sergeant.

"Then we decided one and all that 'Goggles,' so called because he wore big spectacles, must and should evacuate the firing line of reality for the reserve trenches of eternity. A specially selected party of ten would carry out a drastic plan of campaign. The odds would hardly be sporting, but then, 'all's fair in love and war,' so 'Goggles' would have to go. The next morning we silently, and with the utmost care, selected our positions.

"Soon he came—at least his first shot did—and it spat viciously against the parapet in front. The noise a bullet makes hitting your parapet is most annoying, especially as this one was none too far from us. This shot immediately roused us to action. Hardly had the report of his rifle died away ere ten telescopes were searching the German parapets, scrutinizing every inch, in an endeavor to pick up the little puff of blue smoke that should give us his position.

"No luck. We waited. It is a slow game this, and essentially one of patience. He might not fire again for another hour or more, or he might fire any minute. Slowly the time passed. Thirty minutes—an hour and a half. Bang! bang! He'd fired twice with only a slight pause between each spot.

"Oh, indiscreet 'Goggles!' That second shot had sealed his fate. For the first time he had shown an ounce of indiscretion.

"Within the next few seconds nine rifles were trained with deadly accuracy on a loophole of small dimensions and insignificant appearance in the trenches opposite. Like one man we all fired and then waited. Nothing further happened.

"Three days passed and no more periscopes were broken. Then, timidly at first, and later with greater confidence, we used the 'overland short cuts.' Never a glimpse or a sign did we see of the bespectacled countenance of 'Goggles.'"

GETS MAIL WITH PULLEY

Farmer Didn't Want to Walk to the Road to Get It There.

Whilesville, Mo.—To C. R. Thompson, a farmer living northeast of here, is given the credit of originating the latest method of having his mail brought directly to his door.

Some time ago Thompson decided that it was a waste of time and shoe leather to make the daily trip to his mail box down by the road, and he set his mind and hand to work on a device which would make said trip unnecessary.

He succeeded, and now, by means of a set of wires and a pulley, the trick is accomplished.

After the mail man's visit, Thompson has only to step to his door and draw in his mail, box and all.

The box is sent back to its post by the roadside in the same manner.

Others in the community are so pleased with Thompson's device that they are going to follow his example, and it will doubtless not be long until "going after the mail," even so far as the gate, will be a thing of the past with progressive farmers of northwest Missouri.

HARD WINTER FOR HAWKS

Unable to Obtain a Living In Winsted, Large Falcon Perishes Miserably.

Winsted, Conn.—Loyal Higley of Canton, on going to his hennery the other morning, found, lying dead in front of the door, one of the largest hawks seen in these parts in years. Aparently the bird had succumbed to starvation due to inability to get food, this hard winter.

Harvey Brown of Farmington saw a brown animal making good time across the fields of snow and gave chase and the animal climbed a tree. He managed to kill it and thought that he had a coon until it was on the ground, and then found that it was a woodchuck.

Frank W. Silberg
Veterinarian
OFFICE and HOSPITAL
—ON—
Main Street
SPENCERVILLE. - IND.
Phones—Office No. 7
(18) Residence No. 101

Dr. H. R. Farnham
MEDICINE AND
GENERAL SURGERY
ST. JOE, INDIANA
Office Hours—Week Day
10:00 to 11:00 a. m.
1:00 to 3:00 p. m.
6:30 to 8:00 p. m.
Sunday—By appointment.
Telephone
Office,...............No. 2

Office at Residence, Second house west of Widney Opera House.

H. C. Hathaway
TRUSTEE
Concord Township
Office Day Thursday's of Each week in Town Hall, St. Joe.

Mrs. Huldah Reasoner very pleasantly entertained the W. C. T. U.; Friday afternoon, at her home, just north of town. The topic was "Sunday School and Missionary Work". After the usual opening exercises, two leaflets were read, the first by Mrs. Ada Bassett, "Temperance and Foreign Missions". The second by Mrs Malvina Nelson, "American Missions and the Liquor Traffic" showing the draw back that the liquor traffic is to Christianizing the heathen nations. Mrs. Elizabeth Mumma then gave a very interesting talk on "The Responsibility of our Government for the Rum Traffic in Heathen Countries" Mrs. Mumma is a very interesting talker and held the closest attention of her hearers. One thing she said was the utter impossibility of expecting to Christianize the heathen if the export of Rum was continued. Mrs. Ray Nelson, of Missouri, was present and favored the ladies with a beautiful vocal solo, which all enjoyed. Mrs. Retta Hathaway then conducted a round table, "How can we engage our young people in temperance work during the summer vacation" which was interesting. Mrs. C. R. Price was also a guest. Twenty-three members were present. The white ribbon was pinned on Mrs. Sarah McCrory by her sister, Mrs. Margaret Swineford. The hostess assisted by Mrs. Kate A. Leighty served dainty refreshments.

Eleven room house on West Main St., for sale or rent. Other well located residence properties and vacant lots for sale on easy terms. S. S. Widney.

NEWVILLE

Mrs. Ann Griest of Hicksville, is spending the week with relatives in Newville.

The U. B. ladies aid met with Mrs. L. W. Yeiser last Wednesday, 45 were present, $6.05 proceeds.

Mrs. Morrow visited her parents Mr. and Mrs. Reese of Milford, last Thursday.

Mrs. Keesey is on the sick list.

John Miller went to St. Joe on business Friday.

Mrs. Mary Mitchel accompanied her daughter, Mrs. Krabill, home Saturday.

Mrs. Mahala Losure is quite ill. Dr. Fanning of Butler is the attending physician, and Mrs. Arville Miller is taking care of her.

Wm. Thomas and wife of Battle Creek, Mich., and Ves Wise and two sons of Auburn, were Sunday guests of Orla Woodring and family.

Lewis Palmer and family were Sunday guests of John Miller and family.

The convention was well attended Sunday evening.

Curie's is the place to get your Pearson Flash Light.

The U B Aid will meet with Mrs. Moore Wednesday of next week on the Moody farm.

Joseph Gillingham, wife and baby, Leonard Gillingham, wife and daughter-in-law and grandson of Lagrange county, were Sunday guests of John Gillingham and wife. The men are brothers and the first mentioned had not seen Newville for forty years, altho the brothers had met once in every few years.

We carry a full line of Dr. Flecks Poultry and Stock Tonic, Louse Spray and Powder, Salmedico, Oil Meal, Chick Feed, Beef Scrap, and Tankage. In fact we carry most everything along this line. Our Chick Feed at $2 Hundred is guaranteed. It contains Corn, Kaffir, Millet, Wheat and Charcoal. Why pay more. St. Joe Mills.

COLETOWN

Mrs J. D Brown called on Mrs. Mildred Kling Friday afternoon.

Wellington Miller and Glen Cole called on W. E. Jacksons', Sunday afternoon.

Lester Piermans' entertained John Newton, of Belvere, Mich; J. E Newton and family, and Wm. Shull, Sunday.

Mrs. Henry Kling and daughter Lillian, called on Mrs. Lester Pierman, Tuesday afternoon.

A. E. Hart, Berniece Sowers and Martha Andrews called on Wm. Sowers and family, Sunday afternoon.

Frank Kling and wife, of Hicksville, Sundayed with Henry Kling and wife.

Joy, Leon and Orin Murphy spent Sunday evening at Lester Piermans'.

Mrs. Charles Voorhees of the New York Fencing club, won the woman's national fencing championship recently at her home club by coming through without the loss of a bout.

Princess Alexander of Teck is acting as a kitchenmaid in the Princess Christian's Red Cross hospital in Englefield, England, where she helps cook the meals, wash dishes and do other odd jobs around the kitchen.

Try the Little Wizzard Washing
Compound
and thus save labor. Washes clothes without rubbing, will not injure the most delicate fabrics, and contains nothing that will harm the hands. This compound is being used by the Ladies of St. Joe and is found very helpful. You can get it at Leighty's Grocery
Regular Price, 15c. —24

Notice.

The book accounts of James Fisher have been left with S. S. Widney for collection. Please call and settle promptly.

$100 Reward, $100

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials.

Address: F. J. CHENEY & CO., Toledo, O.
Sold by all Druggists, 75c.
Take Hall's Family Pills for constipation.

1847 ROGERS BROS.
GUARANTEED 12 DWT.

Triple Plated Knives stamped last longer through harder service than any other because they have a round bolster, which does away with sharp corners (where blade is joined to handle) where wear is constant and hardest. This is but one of many notable features of knives, which give lasting service and satisfaction. Numerous patterns are offered in this famous "Silver Plate that Wears." Sold by leading dealers everywhere. Send for catalogue "CL" showing all designs.

1847 ROGERS BROS.

INTERNATIONAL SILVER CO.
Successor to Meriden Britannia Co.
MERIDEN, CONN.

F. P. HART
"The Expert"
House Mover
—AND—
Building Raiser
Concrete Work of all kinds finished in the best shape with the least expense.
Call or write

Oldest in America Strongest in the World
Mutual life
INSURANCE COMPANY
of New York
J. C. HULL, Agent
Phone No. 46

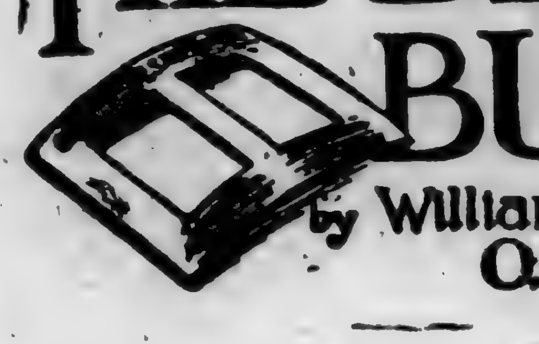
Lehman's CLOTHING HOUSE
ESTABLISHED 1887
MENS AND BOYS OUTFITTERS
808-810 CALHOUN STREET
BEN LEHMAN PROP.
Fort Wayne, Ind.

JUNE

L 908

172

THE BLUE BUCKLE



by William Hamilton Osborne

CHAPTER XXIII.

The Silent Listener

It was 9 o'clock in the evening and Billie Ballantyne had just finished completing a toilet of unusual care. The effect, however, did not altogether satisfy her, and she put two cold, nervous hands into the warm, strong grasp of Miss Olmstead. There was something so sympathetic and motherly about Miss Olmstead that the lonely girl had taken her to her heart at once.

"I wonder why I was such a long time finding you!" she exclaimed impulsively to the older woman.

Miss Olmstead stroked the soft cheek, with a touch that was almost wistful. This was just the sort of girl she would have liked to call "daughter," if she had had the right.

"I wonder why we were such a long time finding each other," she answered.

The front door bell rang; and Billie, already overstrung, grew all of a tremble.

"Oh, I wonder if I can. Will I do? Do I look very nice?" she exclaimed, turning to face her image in the glass and once more making a little grimace at the reflection.

Miss Olmstead made no immediate reply. She was thinking that if she only had her youth back, and looked half so charming as the radiant girl in the glass, she could ask no more. Nevertheless, Billie's discriminating gaze went from one detail to another of the elaborate toilet, and at each inspection she was not altogether pleased.

"Oh, dear! I never wear so much jewelry! I never look so fussy! But, you see, I must dress the part, mustn't I? Do I look like an adventuress? Do I look bold and wicked, and as if I would betray my friends for money?" she asked, anxiously.

"No, not quite that," replied the truthful Miss Olmstead. "I shoud say that you looked like a debutante just on the threshold of some brilliant social success; one whose youth and good looks and ambition might spur her on—to anything!"

Billie clapped her hands like a delighted schoolgirl.

"That's better than looking like an adventuress, isn't it?"

A strange servant girl, an honest looking mulatto, appeared at the door. Sophie had decamped in tears and high dudgeon; and Miss Olmstead had secured a maid-of-all-work to supply the need.

"A gentleman, ma'am," she said, presenting his card.

Billie flashed down the stairs like a creature of light and energy. She swept into the study, as though she eagerly anticipated the visit of its occupant.

Helderman, his eyes glowing as they rested upon her, rose and greeted her with old-school courtesy. None could do this with better grace than he.

"I am obedient, Miss Ballantyne, you see," he said, and bowed again.

A much less observant man than he must have been struck by the elaborate toilet she had made. Helderman read it as an indication that the girl had begun to chafe at her quiet life down in this out-of-the-way corner of town and wished to try her wings for higher flights.

"Were you surprised to get my message—after—the last time?" she asked, faltering and flushing under his intent scrutiny.

"I was delighted," he answered gallantly.

"Why?" She looked at him with the frankness of a child.

"Because I wanted to see you again. I wanted to tell you how you hurt me when you dismissed me — the last time," he said with perfect sincerity.

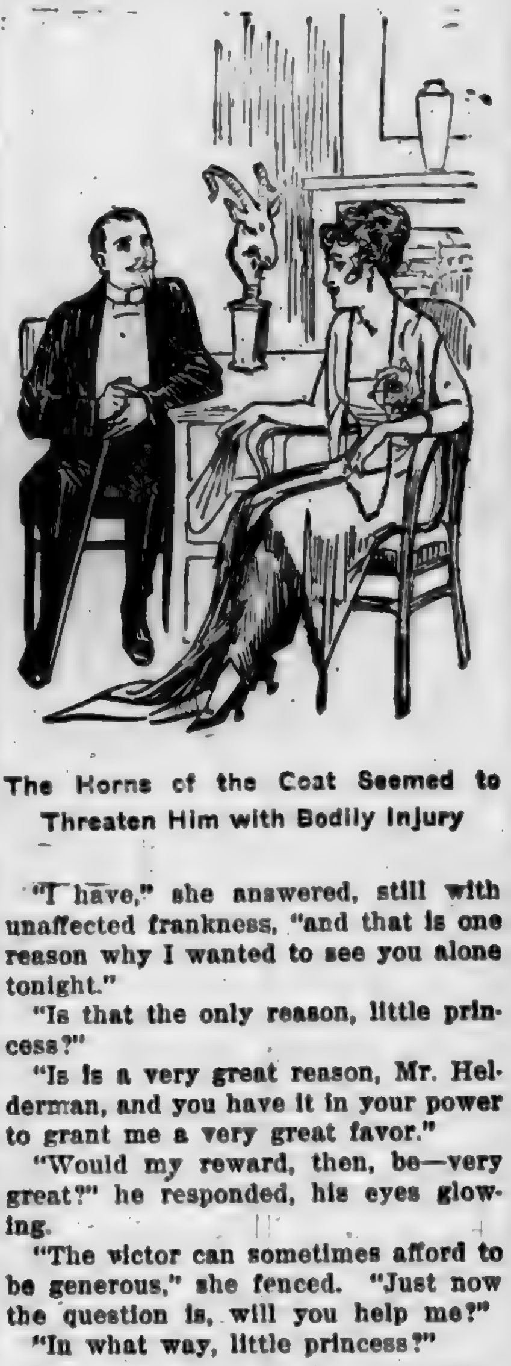
"Will you sit down?" she asked, indicating a chair just opposite the desk. "I must again apologize for utilizing this study as a reception room, but we have found that the other room needed doing over entirely. You know, when one of these old houses begins to fall to pieces it goes in chunks. That is what the ceiling of the room downstairs did!"

He laughed at her naive description and seated himself, while she sat just a few feet away. Then he deliberately drew his chair still closer, so that the horns of the wicked-looking Rocky Mountain goat on top of the desk seemed to threaten him with bodily injury.

Helderman's attitude was arrogant, like that of a conqueror dictating terms. He had pursued this proud, self-possessed woman long, and only he knew the secret of her apparent capitulation now. He assumed an indulgent tone, and never on throughout the interview could his voice have been heard in the adjoining room. It was quiet, persuasive, but domineering, like the man himself.

"Is ability to talk business an admirable trait in a woman?" she asked timidly.

"In some women—when not carried to excess," he replied enigmatically. "I judge, though, that you have had to cultivate the faculty in order to safe guard your own interests—and your father's!"



The Horns of the Coat Seemed to Threaten Him with Bodily Injury

"I have," she answered, still with unaffected frankness, "and that is one reason why I wanted to see you alone tonight."

"Is that the only reason, little princess?"

"Is is a very great reason, Mr. Helderman, and you have it in your power to grant me a very great favor."

"Would my reward, then, be—very great?" he responded, his eyes glowing.

"The victor can sometimes afford to be generous," she fenced. "Just now the question is, will you help me?"

"In what way, little princess?"

"The safe deposit box containing the property and other papers belonging to the Ballantyne estate has been opened, as you know, and I have reason to believe that all its contents are in your possession. Of course I know that possesion is nine points of the law and that there is no way of getting them from you, even"—

Billie paused intentionally and looked directly at Helderman, but his face wore only a look of polite interest.

"—even though they have been secured by fraud. The fraud cannot be proved."

"Indeed?" Helderman questioned.

Billie realized that she must come nearer the bounds of that exnlusive control of herself which made her at once unapproachable and alluring to this man who loved winning the difficult things of life. Helderman was not to be moved so long as she talked in business-like generalties. She must play the coquette; she must woo from him the information that she sought. For a moment she felt sick at heart: then she steeled herself with the thought of how much it meant to her father.

"Mr. Helderman, I have sometimes fancied that you—cared for me—a little!"

The actress slumbers in every beautiful woman. Billie began to awaken her in herself.

"I have risked your displeasure once, to tell you how much I cared for you!" he answered in a voice low but vibrating with passion. "You must believe me, glorious girl. There is none on earth I have ever desired as I desired you—and I mean to have you!"

The girl shuddered slightly at the tempest she had aroused, but did not draw away.

"Then prove your love!" she challenged.

"How?"

"How?"

"In the Ballantyne papers which you have in your possession are some documents going to clear my father's name of a crime, for which he was unjustly accused. Give them to me!"

She stretched out her hands, a world of pleading in her voice; but the banker merely laughed, secure in his advantage.

"You are a good guesser, child. Yes, there were some papers in the box, which your father would give a good deal to see; which you would go down upon your pretty knees to ask me for. But why should I calmly give to you the documents that have been secured at so much risk on my part?"

"And yet you say you love me!" she retorted, bitterly.

"It is precisely because I do love you that I must keep this slight hold upon you. Marry me and the papers are yours; your father can hold up his head again; and you I will surround with every luxury, every consideration. Refuse me and I will destroy these papers—and send your father to a felon's cell!"

As he spoke he drew from his pocket an oblong white envelope and flourished it.

Billie often wondered afterward how she could have retained her self-poise in that supreme moment; how she could sit and smile as she looked at this remorseless man!

"Tell me," she said softly, purposely evading the answer that his last sentence would demand, "when did you first see me? Was it on board the Gethic?"

Helderman looked about him to make sure no one was within earshot before he answered.

"... child! It was weeks before that time! Your precious blue buckle and still more precious Sophie first led me to your feet. I had picked up clues to the Ballantyne estate in Paris when Sophie"—

"Then she was not—good to me!" the girl said, with a little cry.

"Sweetheart, all women are tricksters—and most men!"

"You think that I am one?"

"You could not help it if you tried, child—being a woman! But it was Sophie who first told me that your father had obtained possession of his blue buckle. It was Sophie who planned the attack upon your father in the streets of Paris, hoping to get a reward from me!"

Helderman uttered these confessions as calmly as though he were discussing the weather. He seemed bent upon impressing the girl with his power, his resource. He was not afraid of her. They were alone. If she repeated these confessions to others he had but to deny.

Billie was completely overwhelmed, and in the midst of her depression she remembered with a little pang that she had resented it when Craig had carried his point and had made her dismiss the girl. His intuition had been keener than hers there; but then he could never have known how apparently devoted the girl was, how much she had meant in those days of anxiety and loneliness.

"Sophie was in your employ, then!"

Helderman laughed.

"One cannot take too many precautions!" he said.

"But you did not come over on the same boat with me because you wanted to see me; it was because of the blue buckle! And yet you call that love!"

"It was both; I will be honest. But each time I saw you, it was you alone of whom I thought. The buckle only represented so much money. Money?—bah! I make it by the handful, and fling it into the street again! It is only the means to an end—but it shrinks into nothing beside you, you, you!"

It would be impossible to describe the subtle changes of emphasis with which he uttered the last words. The man was speaking in deadly earnest; and the girl looking at him could not dissemble the fact that he loved her. But with all his passion, Helderman was still the man of craft, who said everything deliberately — even these apparent confessions—with some definite object in view. Just now he wished to demonstrate to her how carefully he had planned to bring her within his power, and how useless it was for her to struggle further.

"You speak to me as though I were the only woman in your life," she said slowly, almost reproachfully. "Yet I know that there has been another—and is at present—who is constantly being mistaken for me, or I for her."

"You mean Miss Arany, I suppose," he said lightly. "Yes, I needed her, just as I needed Sophie; and I took her away from her liege lord in Vienna."

"Oh!" Billie cried aghast. "She—she was the wife of another man—and she loved you! You loved her and took her!"

"That is my way!" Helderman exulted. "I take all I desire. I go straight ahead, where ordinary men falter! Yes, I loved Arany once, and she had been very useful to me. But—no longer! I have loved no other woman since I first saw you. You are a white star; you burn clearly with all the purity and beauty of heaven. I love you alone!"

Helderman's face was white; his hands were clenched. Billie gave one startled look at him, then turned and let her head sink down upon her bare arms. He terrified her. She did not doubt his assertion for an instant.

"You—you cannot love! You do not know what the word means!" she cried.

She started up, one desire possessing her, making her forget for the moment the purpose with which she had asked Helderman to call. She wanted to get away from him; out of the reach of his dangerous, overwhelming passion.

"Little princess, you cannot go! You asked me here! I came determined to win you. I mean to have you!"

He uttered the words without noise or hurry, just with that dreadful, inexorable purpose of his, that had made him feared in the world of business.

He had stepped in front of her, and his hands clasped the soft roundness of her arms. She jerked away from him and retreated to the desk, pressing her hands upon it.

"I'm coming up! I just arrived! Just a minute!" called her father's voice from the hall.

Helderman laughed.

"Little white dove, do you think that I am to be frightened by your childish tricks? Let your friend—your father—keep on arriving; I am already here. Sophie told me all about him. Phonographs—eh? Concealed in niches—eh! Worked by a button. Now Sophie is gone, and you are alone in the house, but for a superannuated old soul who cannot count for much. Yet I do not want to frighten you. I mean to win you, dearest! You must come with me willingly! And remember, your father's honor is in your keeping!"

Helderman's voice had become almost gentle. Even in her fear Billie wondered at the varied phases of this extraordinary man. He was fairly hypnotic in his power to influence a less powerful mind.

"I—I could not love you! I have no faith in you!" she cried, shuddering.

"You should have—now that I have laid bare my heart, even my villainy to you!" he protested.

"You admit, then, that you took the bonds and papers of the Ballantyne estate, when you had no right to them?" she said, her firmness returning.

"I have admitted what you already know; but it was to win you, my princess. Marry me, and it is all yours again!"

"But if I refuse?"

"If you refuse—my clandestine visit to the Peninsula Bank will still not have been in vain. The bonds, Borderline Fives, and for quite a tidy sum—they shall be mine.

"And my father?"

"His vindication is—just so many worthless bits of paper in my eyes!"

"Oh, be generous!" she begged, the tears falying from her eyes. "Be generous! Keep the bonds, if you must, but give me my father's papers!

"Not without my reward!" he exclaimed, catching the hands she had extended and holding them fast in his own. "Say that you will marry me!"

"When you have stolen what is mine? When you are threatening my father with imprisonment!"

"But I love you! I want you! I would do more than steal; I would kill if another man crossed my path to you!"

Nothing could exceed the vehemence of this threat; and the fact that it was uttered in that smouldering, scarcely audible tone he had maintained made it all the more terrifying.

"How dare you say such things—much less do them?" she exclaimed.

"Because no one can prove that it is I who do them! I have told you freely about myself tonight, yet you cannot use a syllable of it all against me. It would be your word against mine, and you would not be believed, for my alibi is faultless! I can go and come—even to Florida—and no man can say certainly that I have left the city!"

"But how?" she suggested, not daring to ask.

"Ah! That is my secret! Not even you shall know, just now, beloved! But once with me—I can command resources in your behalf of which you never dreamed! Why, I intend to sell those Borderline bonds of yours to—whom do you think?—to Rutherford. He will gnaw his finger nails off with vexation, but he will have to buy the bonds from me for you! Ah! That is humorous, for Rutherford loves you—that is, as much as these prosaic Americans can! But I shall brush him aside; I shall take you abroad, where your beauty"—

"I'm tired of hearing about my beauty!" Billie exclaimed. "Tell me about that interesting alibi of yours! I'm crazy to know about it!"

She had purposely assumed a coquetry and flippancy she was very far from feeling as she listened eagerly for his reply.

"Not even you must know now, sweetheart!"

The girl suddenly wrested her hands from his detaining grasp and edged away from him.

"I am more generous with my secrets," she said. "I am going to tell you why I asked you here tonight; it was to get you to incriminate yourself!"

"I had a faint suspicion of that at first," he answered, sardonically, "but you have not succeeded. Even had there been persons concealed in an adjoining room they could not have heard what I said to you!"

"That is true," she said. "But you have incriminated yourself, nevertheless—almost without any prompting—certainly without the necessity of placing persons in the other room to listen."

She spoke quietly—indeed, so quietly that her words beat ominously into Helderman's consciousness.

"What do you mean?" he asked, with his old, quisk glance over his shouldler.

"You laughed at what you called my little trick when the phonograph called up its warning voice! It was one of the things that my father arranged for my protection, when the odd conditions of the will forbade our living under the same roof. Sophie may have told you about that; but she did not tell you, evidently, because she did not know, perhaps, that father has always watched over me, although in another part of the city. He always listens to everything that goes on there. Tonight he has heard all that you said!"

"You do not mean?"—began Helderman, with a violent start.

"Yes, I think you have guessed it. There is a dictophone installed in this room."

The banker's keen eyes traveled searchingly over the room and the desk.

"The broken horn of that Rocky Mountain goat is a receiver," she continued, interpreting his glance. "The magnifier concealed there catches even the faintest whisper—and most of the evening you have been close to it! My father has listened at the other end of the wire, at the Hotel Monolith; and there has been still another auditor—of a different sex—who has probably been keenly interested in your story."

Helderman raised his heavy walking stick and brought it down upon the prong of the broken horn. It severed from the head, and a mass of insulated wire was exposed. For an instant the man stood like a beast at bay; then recovering his amazing composure, he laughed scornfully.

"I guess your father won't hear anything else tonight!" he sneered. "He is away over at the Monolith. It will take him half an hour to realize that something is wrong with his machine and to get here. Much can be done in half an hour! When he gets here he will find an empty cage; his white bird will have flown. And you, my dear, are going with me! I have sworn it! So come!"

He sprang toward her, pinning her arms to her body with a single powerful sweep of one of his long arms. In his other hand he held a handkerchief which, by a dexterous twist of the top of his cane, had become filled with the penetrating odor of chloroform.

"It will not hurt you, sweetheart!" he said, pressing it gently over her terrified face.

"Helderman"

The banker whirled around at sound of the familiar voice. Rutherford seized and jerked the handkerchief from his hand. Helderman swiftly thrust his hand into an inner pocket when another man, who had come up quietly behind him, pinioned the arm with his own. It was Crowder, the secret service man.

"It's up to you now, Mr. Helderman, to prove your alibi!" the latter said, with grim satisfaction.

"Release me!" commanded the banker, without making any physical effort in his own behalf.

"I shall," replied Crowder, suiting the action to the word. But with a swift click he snapped a handcuff on the wrist.

The banker reddened.

"You shall pay dearly for this insult!" he said.

"Perahps," rejoined the detective, "but just now I'm not taking any chances; and you're coming with me."

"Where?" asked the banker.

"Well, first of all, we are going to pay a call on—that alibi of yours, up on Riverside Drive!"

"I will do so," replied the banker quickly. "Home, Adolph!" he ordered; and the three entered the car. The light coat thrown carelessly about the shoulders concealed the handcuffs upon Helderman, and the three men would have given the casual passer-by the impression of being good friends, off for a jaunt. Only, they were very silent for such a party, and all were keenly alert, two with a common object, the man in the middle, and he with a darting gaze for everything great and small within his range of vision.

"You are making a mistake," said Helderman, as the car rolled smoothly away from the curb; "a bad mistake!"

"We are willing to take chances on that," answered Crowder. "But I fancy we have a pretty fair case."

"Upon what counts?"

"Well, the Peninsula Bank fraud for one. Mr. Rutherford here has worked that up, and I must say that he has done a pretty good job, for an amateur."

"A pretty poor job!" retorted Helderman, with a scornful laugh. "Why he cannot even prove that I was out of the city!"

"He thinks he can. And there's a woman thinks so too."

The banker gave a start, and looked around at the silent Rutherford. It was that young man's time to smile.

"What else, Crowder?" asked Helderman, willing to change the subject for the moment.

"Oh, there are several other counts, Mr. Helderman, without taking into consideration the attempted abduction tonight. There was the Braine episode"—

"Sheer rot!" commented the banker.

"I'm not sure about that. The evidence is all tabulated now, and you'll have a mighty hard time to squirm out of it."

"Humph" grunted Helderman.

In spite of his detestation of the man, Rutherford watched his amazing self-possession with secret admiration. Helderman was playing his cards to the end, and even the detective seemed to recognize this fact, for he answered his questions with unusual consideration.

"You still do not seem to realize what a tight box you are in, Mr. Helderman," he said. "But I may add that my own case, the one for the government, on which I have been at work for several months, is practically complete. I expect to round it up tonight."

"And what is that?" snapped the banker.

"The smuggling case. I have traced your operations through several countries and over the past ten years"—

"Piffling!" burst out the man in custody. "Crowder, you seem to forget who I am."

"I know all about that," interrupted Crowder, "and all about you."

"Nevertheless, I have great wealth," rejoined Helderman, apparently undiscouraged by Crowder's knowledge of the deception he had practiced in his high financing. "It will be worth your while to consider what I would be able to do for you—if you found it convenient to be—a bit careless. A hundred thousand for you, Crowder, and a clearance on the Ballantyne estate for you, Rutherford"—

"Not another word!" warned Crowder sharply. "That is what comes of talking to a prisoner! Now you're trying to add bribery to the list—eh?"

Helderman sank back into his corner, and made no further attempt to argue. But his keen, black eyes were never idle, darting from side to side, but the stern, set faces of the two men, however, gave little encouragement.

It was just half-past ten when the limousine drew up in front of the gateway to the mansion on the Drive. A small knot of idle promenaders had halted upon the sidewalk, and stood intently watching what was going on in the big room with the revealing window. It was just such a group of loiterers as might have been found there almost any evening—interested, watching, as the ostentatious financier himself had planned.

Craig glanced out to see the cause of their interest, and gave a shout of amazement. Helderman started, stretched out his neck to see what the others saw, and swore a succession of good, round German oaths. He sprang up; but Crowder's hand gripped his arm, and the muzzle of the detective's revolver insisted upon his getting out more decorously.

"This time the gate is unlocked, and the dogs are not at large!" Rutherford observed.

Helderman's breath came in a savage snarl.

"Shout—make but one effort to attract attention and I'll wound you. I won't kill you; too many people want you alive!" Crowder warned, in a low tone.

Up the broad steps, along the marble walks, tortured by what he gazed at but had no power to prevent, the master of all this wealth and magnificence marched with his captors.

A liveried servant opened the door. Helderman muttered the oath he dared not speak. The other two hurried him toward the mysterious looking door of the big write room. It opened, and the next moment they were inside.

Craig was ahead. For one startled second he stared at the other Helderman, the one he had seen pacing back and forth with characteristic gestures in the room, as he approached the house with the real Helderman beside him.

There on the smooth white wall of the room, opposite the broad window, this other Helderman moved, every detail so like the man who stood chafing under Crowder's grasp, that Craig's eyes turned confusedly from the one to the other, as if to assure his puzzled vision that he actually saw two men.

"By all that's holy!" he burst out at last. "It's a moving picture!"

(Continued Next Week)

Plow the Brains.

The farmer with his auto and his telephone, his rural free delivery and his books, magazines and newspapers, makes a pleasing figure, in startling contrast to the "hey Rube" of the comic papers of a few, a very few, years ago, says New York Post. But in the long days of the oncoming stock season he would do well to think of what he has, chiefly as it opens up vistas of what he has not but ought to have and can have.

He gives entirely too much to the consumer. He deals too exclusively in raw products; he does not think enough about his market—the market that should be his—about the wants of its throngs of consumers, about ways of tempting them to part with larger sums in exchange for wares he has taken the pains to make attractive as well as useful.

The farmer is no longer an isolated person, except as he persists in the old ways and isolates himself. He ought to get into closer touch with his neighboring farmers, and they ought to plan to produce fine products in co-operation.

Plow the brain as well as the soil, and the good years become great and the bad years good.

Italy Guards Art Treasures.

Italy decrees the keeping of its art treasures within its own boundaries and sometimes with rather odd results. A farmer, finding his finances low, yielded to the solicitations of an art dealer and sold him the removable masonry of two ancient windows belonging to the fragment of an ancient abbey, now an outhouse, in his grounds. The government commissioner, hearing of the transaction, visited the farm and officially prohibited the removal of the windows. The farmer was in despair; he had received his 500 francs, and, like the Irishman, had squandered his fortune in paying his debts. The commissioner used comfortable words: "You have sold the windows and he has paid to you money which you have prudently spent. Be content." But the buyer was not equally contented. He sought out the commissioner, who blandly congratulated him on having become the owner of the windows, which, however, he could not remove. Shylock's pound of flesh mildly repeats itself in a ton of masonry.—London Chronicle.

Deadly Trades.

"Tobacco workers are prone to deadly nervous diseases. I have never yet seen a tobacco worker who is not a nervous crank; who is not off his head," complained the owner of large Bowery cigar factory. "I don't know why it is; I used to be a worker myself, and I have never recovered from the effects of the trade. Half the time my men are away sick or dying, they are always ill-tempered and flighty, and a public agitation makes idiots of them. I don't know the reasons, as I said." He was advised to consult a physician and find out.

The foreman in a stone-cutting yard was better informed as to the evils of his trade.

"See those dust clouds all over the yard," he said. "Consumption there! And quick, at that."—Technical World Magazine.

The day of "The Feast of the Dolls" is the one day in the year in Japan when the females rule the household.

The combined membership of the various Young Women's Christian association branches throughout the United States is more than 350,000.

Miss Valentine Thompson with the help of some of the leading women of France, has opened a school for teaching women everything about running a hotel.

The Publishers Co-Operative Co.
501 S. Dearborn St., Chicago
No. 22

JUNE

L 908

0173

NEW WAR SECRETARY AT HIS DESK

Newton Diehl Baker, new secretary of war, whose first official act was to order a punitive expedition after Villa into Mexico after the shooting up of Columbus, N. M.

COWS OCCUPY AN OLD TAVERN

WHICH WAS RENDEZVOUS OF GAY BLOODS OF TOPEKA YEARS AGO

MANY DANCES HELD IN BALL ROOM

Indians also Gathered and Rebelled Because They Could Not Participate—Center for Overlanders

Topeka, Kas.—A rendezvous for the gay bloods of the Topeka of 1856 to 1876 and for the past 40 years in service as a barn, the old Indianola Tavern still stands, sturdy in the strength of its native timber. The flourishing trading post and stage station of which the tavern was the center have been gone for two score years. No trace of the houses or the town are to be found but the tavern, upright through weather beaten, still basks in the sun as it did 50 or more years ago, when the boys and girls of Topeka danced until the morning light broke through the broad east windows.

Five miles north and west of Topeka, on the banks of Soldier Creek, an easy drive from the village of Topeka, Indianola and its famous tavern formed a popular gathering place for the young folks of the early days. Many were the dances held in the broad ballroom of the second floor, while travelers on the way to and from Fort Riley, gamblers, Indians and bad men, lolled about the bar below or ran their fingers through the cards at the plain deal tables.

Col. "Hank" Lindsay, a young man in Topeka in the days before and just after the war, recalls with interest the many pleasure jaunts to the old tavern. Col. Lindsay was proprietor of a livery barn at that time. Frequently he supplied the rig to the village sports and as frequently he took part in the festivities himself.

"We had an old fiddler named Hall," mused the Colonel. "He played for all our dances and called them himself. We danced the quadrille and the minuet and money musk. We didn't have the dances that they have today, but we used to have fully as good a time. And when 12 o'clock came, refreshments were served. Perhaps some of the refreshments aren't found in these days at the dances of the young folks.

"Indianola was an Indian settlement. Very nearly every resident of the place was a Kaw. These Indians used to gather about our dances, envious because they couldn't take part. We had a little troble with them one evening."

Pressed for a description of the trouble Col. Lindsay explained that the Indians tried to take charge and the town boys repelled them. "We finally had to use chairs," the Colonel said. "But, son, we whipped them, and finished the dance."

The tavern is on the farm of Art Johnson. Cows occupy the broad barroom where the half breed proprietor was wont to satisfy the inner being of his pioneer patrons, while chickens stroll about under the eyes where 50 years ago girls in light dresses laughed softly at some pretty remark of a Topeka gallant.

TRIES TO GET A WORKING WIFE

New York Farmer, 62, Believes Women Should Handle Most of Farm Work

Buffalo, N. Y.—Henry M. Scott, 62 years old, who has a farm at Medina, sat in Inspector Girvin's office and dictated a statement about how he married three wives. He is under arrest on a warrant procured by the third wife from Judge Keeler in City Court charging him with bigamy.

In his signed statements the prisoner, according to the police, said he married Amelia Ostrand at Medina on March 12, 1876. On May 17, 1898, he said in his statement, he was married to Anna Victoria Clifton at Niagara Falls, Ontario. Some time in March 1914, he stated he was married in Bridgeport, Conn., to Ada Hood.

Anna Victoria Clifton swore out the warrant, which was given to Detective Sergt. Keuhn, and he went to Medina after the man.

The prisoner shed tears as he recited his woes to Inspector Girvin. He always wanted a wife, he said, who would take care of things on the farm and help him along. They all, however, had a violent dislike to doing farm work, but he could not understand why they were opposed to such labor.

"My mother," said he, "got up at 3 o'clock in the morning and worked until the cows were driven home at sundown. She was never tired. Why shouldn't my wife do the same? She could have a good time. She could go to the church meeting every Sunday night."

The prisoner said he was willing to buy a wife a calico dress once in a while. "What more does a woman want?" he queried. He said that he does not know the whereabouts of two of his wives. One he thinks, married a traveling preacher and is somewhere in Illinois.

WILL LOCKED IN TRUNK SINCE CIVIL WAR DAYS

Maker Disappeared Sixty Years Ago, Leaving Strange Injunction to Nephew

Joplin, Mo.—There is in the possession of Lee W. Peters, who lives in Chitwood, a trunk and a will of Calvin E. Butler, an uncle who has been missing for nearly sixty years.

Butler left for Australia, and his last injunction to his nephew, who lived near U. S. Grant's old home in Galena, Ill., was to keep the trunk and the will, which bestows everything in it on Peters, until he felt sure that he, Butler was dead. When he felt thus sure he was to have the will probated.

Peters does not know what is in the trunk, but as Butler had been a successful "49er" in California, he thinks there is gold inside. He recently told neighbors that he will not present the will for probate until 1925, at which time if Calvin Butler is still alive he will have attained the age of 100 years. Another uncle of Peters, a brother to Butler lived to be that age.

The trunk will have to be broken open, for Butler took the keys with him. There are three locks, and Peters acknowledges that he has often tried to unlock them with various keys, but has invariable failed. He resolved not to force it open until the time limit he had set expires.

TOWN CLOCK TICKS SELF OUT

Old One, With Odd History, Replaced After Years of Service

Lewistown, Pa.—Lewistown will soon have a new town clock. The old clock on the courthouse has ticked itself out after 61 years of service. This clock was bought with money secured when a circus showed in this county without first securing a license, and was fined a substantial sum for such negligence. This was before civil war days.

FIND OPIUM IN FLOWER POTS

Chinaman's Love of Horticulture Proves a Sham

Seattle, Wash.—Love of horticulture and "hop" brought Lio Kwong, Chinese gentleman to grief. Kwong brought two geraniums with him when he landed at Seattle from Victoria. Immigration officials suspected that his love of flowers was not genuine, and began poking around the plants. They unearthed two pounds of opium, worth $150, buried in the flower pots.

In comparatively few years the last full blood Indian will disappear.

Plants may be started in pure sand. When this is done, they should be transplanted in about two weeks after the seeds have germinated.

RICH WOMAN ACTS AS FIRST AID TO CUPID

Chicago Philanthropist Says Greatest Longing of Girls is for Husbands and She Will Help Them

Chicago, Ill.—A woman cannot be happy without a husband.

Conversely, though she be hungry, poorly clad and ill housed, if she be married and loves her mate, contentment and happiness are hers.

Because she believes this and is philanthropically inclined, Mrs. L. Brackett Bishop, who lives at the Chicago Beach Hotel, will aid every girl who applies to remove the obstacle in the way of her happiness—lack of a mate.

"I will pay the cost of the license, the flowers and the minister's fee for every girl and man who want to marry," Mrs. Bishop announced. "Furthermore, I shall provide a church wedding for them.

"It is not my intention to open a matrimonial bureau. But I shall do everything in my power to help working girls find husbands, and I shall pay the necessary expenses of their marriage."

This announcement was made at an 8 cent luncheon to working girls, given by Mrs. Bishop in the parlors of the Swedenborgian Church, Woodlawn avenue and Forty-sixth street.

Mrs. Bishop has left her luxurious apartments at the Chicago Beach Hotel, and set out to live for one week "as working girls live." She promised to restrict her food cost to 33 cents a day.

"Since I announced that a woman could live on 33 cents worth of food a day, and started out to prove my theory, scores of working girls have called me up on the telephone and scores of others have written me letters.

"All of them have been belligerent. They have told me it is impossible for a wealthy woman to put herself in the place of a working girl. Some of their messages have ridiculed me and called me names.

"I want to say now that their attitude is the fruit of misunderstanding. I do not believe that a working girl should lower her standard of living. But I do believe that the working girl and the woman in the palace spend too much on material things.

"Food cannot bring happiness. Neither can clothes, wealth, limousines or a beautiful home. There is only one thing in the world that can buy happiness. And that is love.

"If you could see into the hearts of women, you would learn that what they want more than anything on earth is a home, a little tin dishpan and some one to love. What every woman wants and needs most is a husband.

"Too many women and too many men believe marriage is economically impossible. It is to prove the fallacy of their reasoning that I am trying to show that marriage—minus pride and minus vanity—is within the reach of every man and woman."

STRANGE BEAST IS CAPTURED

It Looks Like a Fox and Climbs to the Top of Trees

Albert Lea, Minn.—A new strange animal was discovered in Bancroft township by Emil Halvorson, who was hunting.

It appeared larger than a fox, and when pursued jumped upon the trunk of a tree and was soon in the topmost branches. Later in the day another of the species was captured.

The animal resembles a fox, has light red fur about the neck and head, but the rest of the fur is light gray, with a jet black stripe down the back. It is thought the animal is a hybrid, or else has stayed here from its native haunts.

The best substitute for wisdom is silence.

MIGHT TRY THIS.

If a shoe pinches in any particular part, a cloth wrung out in hot water and laid over the place while the shoe is on the foot will expand the leather and give relief.

TO MARK SOLDIERS' NEGLECTED GRAVES

IN VARIOUS OKLAHOMA CIVIL WAR BURIAL GROUNDS

EMNITY SHOULD END AT THE GRAVE

Repositories of Hundreds of Men Who Fell in Civil War Unknown

Oktah, Ok.—A movement has been launched with a view to marking various Oklahoma Civil War burial grounds and particularly the burial places of Confederate soldiers who fell in combat within the Indian Territory during the war between the north and the South.

Among these burial grounds is one located in Muskogee County, where nearly 150 Confederate soldiers fell in a civil war battle. Since that time there has been no effort to keep sacred the cemetery other than to refrain from plowing up the sod which covers the remains of the soldiers.

"Enmity should end at the grave. Surely there are none so unforgiving as to hold malice toward the memory of brave men who died the death of soldiers on the field of battle."

Such was the comment of J. B. Thoburn of the department of history of the University of Oklahoma, in discussing that fact that the graves of Confederate soldiers who were killed in battle during the civil war in what is now the state of Oklahoma, are not only unmarked, but even the places where they were buried are almost forgotten. Continuing, Mr. Thoburn said:

"It is nearly 20 years since President McKinley stated in the course of an address to the legislature of a southern State that he thought the time had come when the people of the nation at large would be glad to join with the people of the south in seeing to it that the Confederate cemeteries should have proper care and attention. And who shall say that the spirit which prompted such an utterance on the part of a man who, though he had been a gallant soldier himself, loved the ways of peace more than the glories of war, should not find a ready response in he hearts of the people of Oklahoma today?

"There are in Oklahoma several places wherein the remains of Confederate soldiers (who were killed in action, or who, it may be, died of wounds or of disease in hospital or camp) are buried in considerable numbers. I have personally visited three or four of these burial grounds. In every instance the grounds are neglected and there is nothing to indicate that beneath the sod of such a spot sleeps all that is mortal of men who had sealed their devotion with their lives. It is to be regretted that such small tracts were not even excepted from allotment when the lands were apportioned in the old Indian Territory, 15 years ago.

"One cannot but be impressed by the loving care which is lavished upon the turf covered graves of the national cemeteries at Fort Gibson or Fort Smith. Yet these other men, who were not one whit less brave, nor less devoted and self sacrificing, are left to sleep in graves whose very location will soon be forgotten if something be not done soon to rescue them from oblivion! Something should be done, even at this late date, to have them properly identified and so marked that they will be preserved and given due attention and care in the future.

"Last fall, in company with A. M. Darling of Oktah (a progressive little town which has grown up in recent years near the battlefield of Elk Creek, or Honey Springs, where the forces of the Union Gen. Blunt and the Confederate Gen. Cooper strove for the mastery in July, 1863), I visited a little plot of ground near the edge of a cotton field where, in a space of less than two acres, there are the graves of 140 Confederate soldiers who were killed in action. (The remains of the Federal soldiers who were killed at the battle of Elk Creek or Honey Springs, were removed to a national cemetery several years after the end of the war.) Except for the fact that the ground has never been plowed and is still covered with long grass in which are interspersed a few small oak trees, there is no sign that those who met death in battle are buried there."

In conclusion, Mr. Thoburn, whose own father was an officer in the Union Army, said: "Oklahoma has many places of historic interest, but not so many that the people of the state cannot well afford to see that they are properly identified and saved from an impending forgetfulness. And among the very first places that should be definitely located and authenticated are the several small burial plots in which there have been unmarked graves of confederate soldiers since the days of the great war which ended more than 50 years ago."

Eagle Spurns Liberty

Wenatchee, Wash.—A large goldenheaded eagle owned by Lee Haight was given its freedom recently, After circling about town for a short time it returned and sought entrance to its cage.

There are five persons to each house on an average in Ireland.

ALASKA "SPOOK" STORIES POOH-POOHED BY WOMAN

Having Faced Perils There Before, She Will Defy "Ghost" of Man Who Was Hanged

Kansas City, Mo.—Does the ghost of the first white man hanged in Alaska haunt the icy stretches of that bleak country and howl with the winds on the long, cold winter nights?

It does, says the Esquimaux and the Indians and the more imaginative white people of that region. But Mrs. Mary E. Hart, one of the first women explorers of the North and one of the witnesses of the hanging, pooh-poohs the ghost story.

Mrs. Hart, after a visit in Missouri, is on her way back to the far north to her fox ranch near Steward, to carry on the work and adventues in the country where she endured the hardships of a prospector fifteen years ago.

"Some people have said I was afraid to return to Alaska because of the ghost of that hanged man," said Mrs. Hart. "Well, I have been from one end of Alaska to another in a dog sledge in the dead of winter and I prospected with the first settlers at Nome. It would take more than the ghost of a man to keep me away now."

When Mrs. Hart went to Alaska fifteen years ago she joined the rush to Nome, then a city of tents and covered deep with snow. She staked out a claim, washing out gold dust and picking nuggets from the rocks. She even went on hunts with the natives and brought back ivory tusks as trophies. Later she went into the fur raising business, established a fox ranch and grew wealthy.

One of Mrs. Hart's most intimate friends now is Sinrock Mary, owner of 10,000 reindeer and one of the richest women in Alaska. It was shortly after Sinrock Mary had married Anoak, her second husband and a native twenty years her junior, that Mrs. Hart induced them to pose for their pictures and these she sent with accounts of the wedding to newspapers and magazines.

One day Sinrock Mary saw a copy of a magazine in which the pictures appeared. About the pictures of Mary and her husband the artist had drawn a number of frolicking cupids. Mary, recognizing the pictures rushed to Mrs. Hart.

"What for?" she demanded. "Anoak and me no fat babies. I kill you."

She reached for a knife and Mrs. Hart dodged behind a chair. In Indian jargon and speaking rapidly she sought to appease the irate woman.

"Those are not fat babies, Mary," said she. "Those are little gods of love put there to bring happiness and good luck and many reindeer to you and Anoak."

Mary finally was convinced. Now she wears the clipping in a little leather bag around her neck.

Mrs. Hart does not like to talk about the hanging she saw.

"It was horrible" she says and shudders. It was last spring, shortly before Mrs. Hart began her dog sled journey to Skagway, there to take steamer for San Francisco. A prospector had been murdered and the slayer was quickly captured and hanged.

Since Mrs. Hart left the story of the ghost that walks the north has grown and been spread broadcast until all the natives are afraid. But Mrs. Hart says she is not the least bit frightened.

"I am going back and investigate that ghost," she says.

COTTON BALE 36 YEARS OLD

Price Was So Low Owner's Father Would Not Haul It to Market

Laurel, Miss.—E. T. Wilburn, a farmer living near the county line, has a bale of cotton grown 36 years ago, which he believes to be the oldest in the country.

The cotton was grown by Milburn's father, prior to the building of the New Orleans & Northwestern Railroad and in the days when it was necessary to haul it over poor roads to either Shubuta or Enterprise to find a market. Prices were low that year and for several years afterward, and the senior Wilburn stored it in his barn. Six years ago he died, and the son, having become attached to the bale decided to retain it indefinitely.

AMERICANS BUY FAMOUS ISLAND

Noted for Prehistoric Remains, Ceded By Mexico to United States— Used for Sheep Raising

Helena, Mont.—Lewis Penwell of Helena, president of the Independent Publishing Company, and associates, have bought San Clemente Island, sixty miles southwest of Los Angeles, together with 25,000 head of sheep on the island, for $300,000 cash.

Mr. Penwell will now be known as the duke of San Clemente, the seventeenth of the line. The Penwell companies will operate the island as a sheep raising ranch. Mr. Penwell also has designs on its caves as a winter resort.

San Clemente Island is one of the most famous in the world, chiefly for the many evidences of a high prehistoric civilization which have been found there. Its rugged caves and natural havens have sheltered pirates and smugglers without numbers, one of its bays being even now known as Smuggler's Cove.

Its fishing grounds are regarded as the finest of any about the channel islands. Its lonely rugged character and the glamor of romance cast about it by thousands of years of hard won life on it inhospitable rocks has made it a favorite with writers of fiction and on archeological subjects.

The San Clemente Island sheep ranch is larger than any in California. Sheep have been pastured on it for more than sixty years and with the water system and other improvements made by the San Clemente Wool Company it has been regarded as one of the best ranches in the country. Chas. T. Howland, one of the principle owners of the San Clemente Wool Company, has retained an interest in the new concern and will be on the board of directors.

Mr. Penwell is a prominent sheep and ranch owner of Montana. He is owner or part owner, of twenty-five big ranches in this state, and has conducted operations on a big scale for many years. Last year 105,000 sheep were sheared on his ranches.

San Clemente was ceded to the United States by Mexico with the other channel islands, and is one of the most interesting of the group. Implements and utensils have been unearthed there that indicate the existence of a high type of man in prehistoric times. Not long ago a set of chess men were found in a cave with only two or three pieces missing. The chessmen were carved from soapstone and in formation are practically the same as those commonly in use. Mr. Howland has a curved sword of good workmanship that was unearthed by one of his herders. When found it was in fair state of preservation and still showed evidence of having been stained or painted. It has one sharpened edge.

While the greater portion of the island including the mesas at the top, are fairly level and provide good forage and grain crops, the remainder is extremely rugged. Deep, narrow canyons that are inaccessible to men on horseback and raverns are numerous.

HYPNOTIZES LOWER ANIMALS

Amusing Experiments by a Texas College Professor

Fort Worth, Texas—Prof. Tom Paul Frizzell, of this city, believes in and practices hypnotism on both man and the lower animals. A big silver Wyandotte rooster gave out a "squawk" as the professor placed the chanticleer with both feet squarely on the ground. Then drawing a piece of crayon from his pocket he forced the roosters beak to the floor and drew a line extending straight away from his subject. Then stepping back the professor looked on while the rooster stood hypnotized, gazing steadfastly at the line just drawn. Then, with a loud clap of the hands, the professor broke the spell, and again the rooster squawked and rapidly made his exit.

In quite the same way Professor Frizzell charms horned toads and crawfish, and feels sure that could he speak their language he could force them to obey his commands entirely. He is studying biology and is doing some excellent work.

Ceremony was invented by a wise man to keep fools at a distance.

THE Country Home Weekly Newspaper is eagerly sought, and in passing from hand to hand of the entire family, is reasonably sure to give returns to the advertiser.

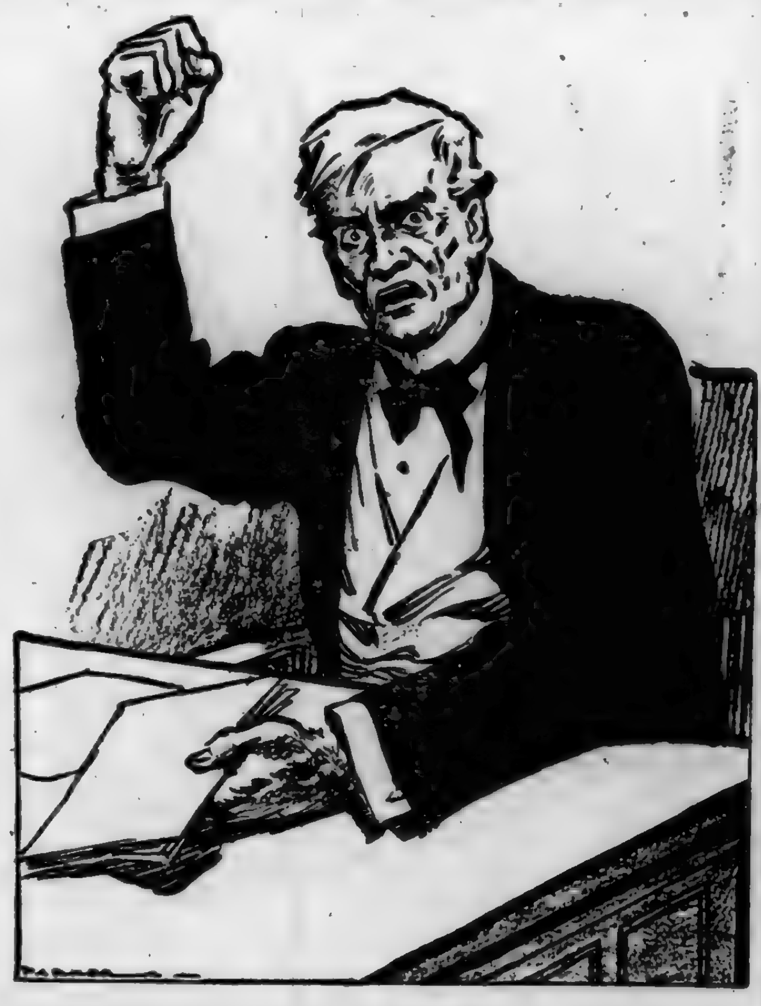
This paper fills the bill—
The bills fill the till:
Get that?

JUNE

L 908

The Dreamer's Idea of His Father: "The shadowing of something enormous and indomitable—and lawless—conquering and irresistible and blindly noble."

THE DOER

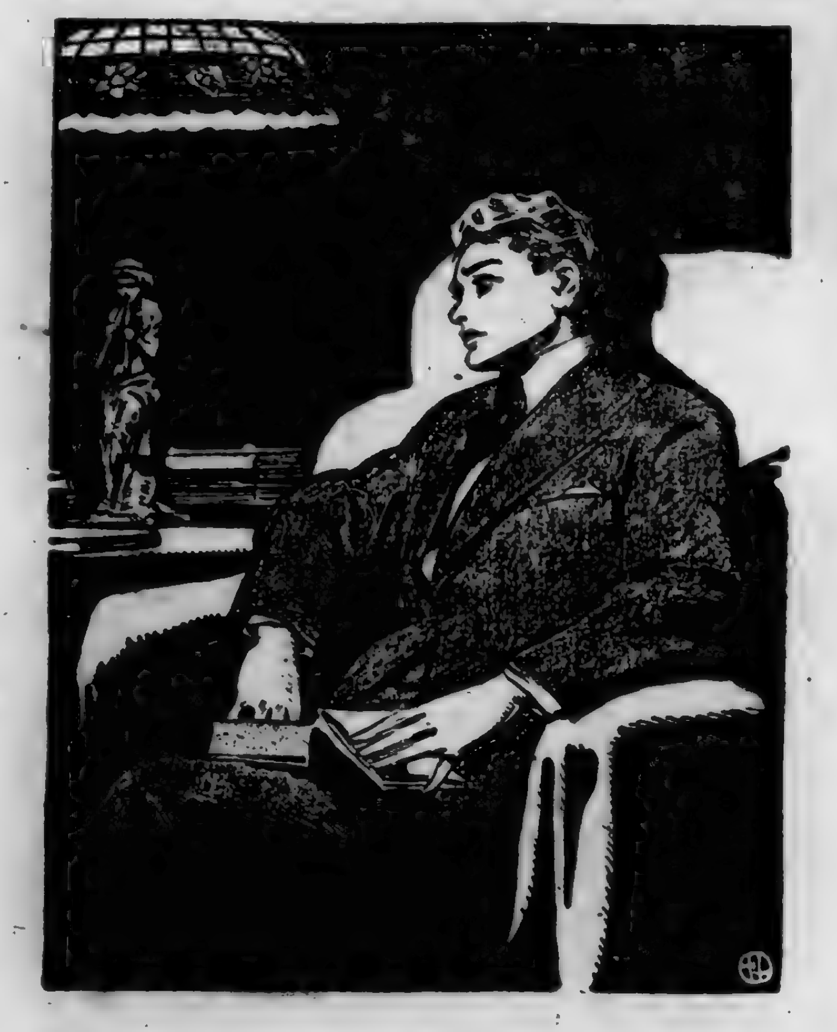


The TURMOIL

By BOOTH TARKINGTON

An American Story Of American Life For American Readers By an American

It is you and me and all of us—just we, the people—our town—our country—us. And it's no moral tale, nor tale with a moral—unless you care to look for one.



THE DREAMER

The Doer's Idea of His Son: "You're cracked! Oh, I got a fine layout here! One son died, one quit and one's a loon! Don't let me hear from you again until you've waked up; you poor, pitiful, dandelion-pickin' sleepwalker you!"

In Book Form It Is the Best Selling Novel of the Year

Our Next Serial! That's All!

Daily Jots

Order Saturday Evening Post, 5c.

See Wallace for Building Material at St. Joe Saw Mill.

WANTED, ALL THE MEN to know YOU CAN DO BETTER at Barney's on everything you need and wear.

Mahlon Baker of Auburn, and Mrs. Celia Rainier, of Garrett, were guests in the Warner home, Tuesday.

S. S. Widney
Justice of the Peace
Insurance and Real Estate
Phone No. 10
ST. JOE IND

Robison Park is now open.

H. M. Widney and family were at Auburn Sunday.

Vernie Monroe returned to his work at Ft. Wayne, Monday.

Francis Lothamer was at Butler Sunday the guest of relatives.

Mrs Bertha Niver of Minneapolis, is here the guest of her parents, F. P. Hart and family.

Genuine Lump Pocahontas $4.00 ton from car. Will have 2 cars about June 10, it is nearly all sold but if you place your order quick we can supply you also. We have several cars of West Virginia Lump White Ash coming along in July for $3.25.

St. JOE MILLS.

Wm. Randall visited his wife Sunday at Ft. Wayne and he reports her being not so well, it was his intention to remove her from the hospital this week but she will remain at least two weeks longer.

WAR-SWEPT VERDUN

Crashing of Shells Only Sound in Deserted Village.

Three Remaining Civilians Boast of Their Courage in Staying in Bombarded Town—Gendarmes Keep Good Watch and Prevent Pillaging.

London.—H. Warner Allen, representative of all the British newspapers with the French armies, sends the following picture of war-battered and deserted Verdun:

Today, Verdun is not crowded. Not a shop is open. It can muster three civilians, and all three of them are rightly proud of their courage in staying in the bombarded town.

I have just been walking down the main street. Everywhere there is silence except for the crashing of the big shells and the sound of splinters falling on the roofs. All the goods the shopkeepers had collected as specially calculated to appeal to the soldier in the trenches have disappeared and now when one walks down the Rue Mazel one's course is frequently interrupted. There comes a rush of wings in the air and instinctively one makes for the nearest doorway, ducking as one goes. Then there is a big explosion and one goes on.

It was in the Rue Mazel that I met one of the three civilians of Verdun. He was contemplating the view from his door with a contented smile and looked at me with supreme contempt when I scuttled for cover at a particularly loud explosion. "You are taking refuge on the wrong side of the road," he remarked mildly. "The left is the side to escape from splinters, since that is the side from which the Boches are firing. Anyhow it is no use ducking, since by the time you've heard the shell the danger is over."

As we went up the steep, lonely streets towards the cathedral our attention was suddenly attracted by a stronge, piercing sound that contrasted quaintly with the continuing roar of exploding shells. It was a kitten mewing plaintively in the first story of a house. It had obviously been forgotten in the haste of evacuation. The owner of the house had closed up the shutters and had never given a thought to the poor beast and it was slowly starving to death.

A rescue party was at once formed, M. Georges Scott, the artist, who is mobilized as a chasseur alpin, mounted on my shoulders and endeavored to pry open the shutter with a stick, but his efforts were unavailing, and eventually the kitten's life was saved by the firemen of Verdun, who, at our request, broke into the house.

Several large shells had fallen near the cathedral. One of them had gutted a girls' school and another had landed fair and square on a shop that sold religious ornaments and emblems. For some unexplained reason there was a cure's hat lying pathetically on the top of the debris, and at the back against a wall that had miraculously escaped destruction stood a stucco statue of Joan of Arc.

The pigeons, which were flying in uneasy circles above the cathedral, seemed to be curiously disturbed by the bombardment. As a general rule, the birds seem to regard bombardment as a natural cataclysm, to be suffered since it cannot be prevented. Anyhow, the pigeons of Verdun have not yet grown accustomed to the noise of the German bombardment.

Despite German shells, the French gendarmes keep a good watch in Verdun. There is no pillaging, and the refugees who in their hurry left their house windows open and doors unlocked can sleep easy as to the contents of their houses, except in so far as an enemy projectile may reduce them to powder. Just near one of the gates there is a house of which the shutters have not been closed and the window is still open. It seems that just before the evacuation the owner of the house had some special occasion to celebrate. Looking through the window one can see a table laid for 16 persons and everything prepared for an excellent meal. There was a beautiful, clean tablecloth with napkins folded miter-shaped for every guest. Decanters of wine, red and white, were standing beside each plate. On the sideboard piles of oranges and apples were waiting for the party which was never to eat them.

The gendarmes in Verdun seem to keep a catalogue of the shells which fall in the town. Those who live in bombarded towns take a definite pride in showing the visitors the holes made by German projectiles and the houses that they had thoroughly destroyed. It was with an expression of the greatest satisfaction that one of the gendarmes asked us to come and see his gate, because, during the previous night he had counted 117 big shells that had fallen into its neighborhood.

M. Scott, the artist, remarked to me: "This war is the end of the battle painter, since, apart from curiously lucky circumstances, there is absolutely nothing to paint. Modern warfare has nothing to do with colors. It is a symphony in sound. It is a subject matter for the musician, not the artist. Perhaps the musician of the future will be able to convert into terms of music the extraordinary contrasts of noise and sullen silence which one may hear in a bombarded town."

The cinematographers have been taking everything they can find in Verdun, and their only grief is that so far no shell has burst near enough to their apparatus to be photographed.

Coburn's Corners

Chas. Hart and little daughter, of Indianapolis, and Wm. Kimes, of Grand Rapids, Mich., came Saturday evening to visit relatives, the latter returned home Monday, but Mr. Hart and daughter remained until Wednesday and visited with his parents, Wesley Hart and wife and other relatives in the vicinity. Sunday, John Hart and family, of St. Joe; Roscoe Conine, wife and son Enzor, and Jay Hart, wife and children spent Sunday under the parental roof. J. M. Milliman and daughter Fanny, spent the afternoon with them.

It has been five years since Chas. Hart had spent any time with his parents, and it proved to be a happy reunion.

Changed Time

Last Sunday the B. & O. change of schedule of passenger trains stopping at St. Joe, went into effect and is as follows:

West
No. 11— 10:38 A. M.
No. 3— 9:05 P. M.
East
No. 12— 4:54 A. M.
No. 4— 10:18 A. M.
No. 6— 10:00 P. M.

It would be well for you to cut this out and save it as it may save you from missing the train.

Mother's Cook Book

Oxtail Stew With Carrots.

Take two jointed oxtails, one quart of sliced carrots and two onions. Brown the meat and onions. Cover with boiling water, add carrots, season well and cook slowly two hours. Thicken the gravy with browned flour.

Beef Chop Suey.

Take 2½ pounds of chopped beef from the round, two small onions, finely minced, three-quarters of a quart of tomatoes, one tablespoonful of chopped suet and a quarter of a pound of macaroni, cooked. Blend well together and bake in the oven 45 minutes.

Beef With String Beans.

Take one and a half pounds of the neck of beef, one onion, one bayleaf and two quarts of string beans, broken small. Cook until the beans are tender. Thicken the gravy with two tablespoonfuls of flour, add a tablespoonful of sugar and two tablespoonfuls of vinegar.

Stuffed Hamburger Steaks.

Put through the meat chopper one pound of round steak, season with salt, pepper, onion and add an egg. Have ready a bread dressing as for poultry. Grease gem pans, add a layer of the hamburger, then a layer of dressing and last a layer of hamburger. Bake in the oven and when done turn out on small plates and garnish with parsley.

Beef en Casserole.

Take a pound and a half of beef from the neck, cut in inch pieces and brown in a little hot fat. Line a casserole with six potatoes cut in cubes, arrange the meat in the center with two chopped onions and two carrots also chopped. Add a quart of boiling water and cook in the oven for three hours.

Pork Chops.

The ordinary way of pan broiling pork chops if well cooked leaves them dry and tasteless. Place the chops in the pan, add just enough water to cover the bottom of the pan, and parboil them without covering. When the water has boiled away the chops will begin to brown and will be juicy and appetizing.

Nellie Maxwell

Here and There.

John H. Bobbitt of Greensburg, Ind., has in his possession the first dollar he ever earned, which was 54 years ago.

One hundred and fifty hosiery and knit-goods mills in Philadelphia produce $15,000,000 worth of material annually.

Minneapolis has a school where boys are taught to bake cakes, pies and bread, and to become accomplished in various other domestic duties.

The czar of Russia's winter palace at Petrograd is probably the most wonderful royal residence in the world. Many of its rooms, of which there are over 700, are of enormous size. The most valuable collection of china known is also kept in the palace.

Detroit aldermen have found that one of the city precincts is entirely uninhabited. This precinct, the Thirteenth of the Twelfth ward, was laid out recently after the enlarging of the city limits, and so far as is known there is no one living there.

Church Notes

M. P. Church Announcements.
J. C. Coons, Pastor.

Concord:—Sunday School, 9:00 a. m.; Preaching Services, 10:00 a. m.

Fairview:—Sunday School, 9 a. m.

St. Joe:—Sunday School, 9:00 a. Christian Endeavor, 6:30 p. m., Preaching, 7:30 p. m.; Prayer Meeting, Thursday, 7:30 p. m.

Christian Church Announcements.

St. Joe:—Bible School at 9 a. m.; Morning Worship, 10:15 a. m.; Christian Endeavor, 6:30 p. m.; Sunshine Hart, leader.

Lutheran Church Announcements.
A. K. Mumma, Pastor.

St. Joe:—Sunday School, 9:00 a. m.; Christian Endeavor, 6:30 p. m. Preaching services 10:30 a. m.; Prayer Meeting, Thursday evening.

Fort Wayne Celebration.

Industrial Exposition Opens Monday. Pageant Begins Tuesday.

Many of the people of St. Joe will spend a part of next week in Fort Wayne with the great Centennial celebration as the attraction. Postmaster E. C. Miller of Fort Wayne who is the general chairman of the celebration assures the people of St. Joe that they will have the "time of their lives" if they can arrange to take in the celebration. The Industrial Exposition with the thrilling hippodrome acts opens Monday for a six-day and night run. The great Historic Pageant will be given on the evenings of Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday. Ex-President Taft will be there Thursday the day of the floral auto parade. The fraternal parade occurrs Tuesday. It will be the biggest week in Ft. Wayne's history.

LOCAL ITEMS.

Forest Dermott is the owner of a new Overland.

YOU CAN DO BETTER at Barney's on Straw Hats.

The supper Friday evening netted about $25 00 to the class.

Men's Work Shoes, $1.75, $2.50 and $2.75, others ask $2.00, $3 $3.50. BARNEY'S.

Sound
Pure Bred
Percheron
Stallion
Right Sort
Enrollment No. 2873

Years past, this horse has been standing at Auburn; but we are now located at St. Joe in the barn just north of the B. & O. tracks near the mill. Will stand for the season at home, 2 miles north of St. Joe on Monday and Tuesday of each week; and on Wednesday, Thursday, Friday and Saturday of each week in the barn at St. Joe

TERMS:
$15 to Insure Living Colt

E. W. BEABER
Owner

Our Classified Ad Department

FreeColumn

All advertisements in this department are free to subscribers only. —EDITOR NEWS.]

For Sale:—50 bu. Sir Walter Raleigh potatoes. John Doll.

FOR SALE: Sweet Potato, Celery, Pepper, Cabbage, and Tomato plants for sale. Mrs. G. W. Woodcox.

FOR SALE:—About 30 gallons of fine salt pickles. Will deliver anywhere in town in 2 dozen lots at 5c. per dozen. W. L. HALLABAUGH.

WANTED:—To buy two shoats. JOE WINEBRENNER, care of H. M. Widney.

We Want You
to keep in mind the fact that in addition to printing this newspaper we do job work of any kind. When in need of anything in this line be sure
To See Us

100 Per Cent.

INCREASED EARNINGS.

The following is fac-simile of certificate of Bond issued to each Depositor in this Bank.

No. ____________ Grabill, Ind., ____________ 19___

Mr. ______________________________

THIS IS TO CERTIFY that your DEPOSITS in this bank are INSURED under a bond of THE AMERICAN GUARANTY COMPANY of Columbus, Ohio.

THE GRABILL STATE BANK.

PRESERVE THIS. By Albert Egly, Cashier.

Postal Savings pay 2 per cent. Interest and the money is placed in banks who have to furnish a Bond to the government to guarantee that the funds are safe in that Bank.

We pay 4 per cent. Interest and give you the same guarantee. An increased earning of 100 per cent.

THIS is the only Bank in this community thus insuring its depositors.

Total Assets, over $175,000

The Grabill State Bank
Established 1906

Joseph Witmer, President
David Klopfenstine, v. pres.
Albert Egly, Cashier
Joseph A. Grabill, Director
Peter W. Amstutz, Director
Julius Gehrig, Director
John B. Haifley, Chairman Board Directors

JUNE

L 908

0175

Has Your Subscription Expired? Come in and renew it next time you are in town.

ST. JOE NEWS.

VOL. XXX — ST. JOE, DeKALB COUNTY INDIANA, THURSDAY JUNE 8 1916 — NO. 23

NO newspaper can succeed without advertising, therefore we solicit the patronage of our readers for those who by their advertising help to make this paper possible.

Binder Twine

Just received a large shipment of Deering Standard binder twine and will be sold as follows:

CASH ....10c Per lb.
SEPT. 1st. Settlement.....10 1-2 c.

◆ ◆ ◆

Fencing.

2 car load of Page and Lion fence just arrived, to be sold at prices ranging from 30 to 57 cents per rod, a full line of all field, hog and poultry fence.

Special prices on 100 Rods or More.

◆ ◆ ◆

Fence Posts.

White Cedar Posts...............12 to 75c
Red Cedar Posts, sawed square or tapered at from..............28c to $2 00

Special price on lot of 100 or more.

STEWARD LUMBER & GRAIN Co

SPENCERVILLE, IND.

Highest Prices Paid for Grain and Seeds.

Notice of Sale of Real Estate

Notice is hereby given that the undersigned, Raymond Rhodes Executor of the will of Rachel Horn, deceased, will offer for sale at private sale on the 10th day of July, 1916, at his residence at the town of Spencerville, DeKalb County, Indiana, the following real estate to-wit:—

The East One Half of the North East Quarter of the South East Quarter of Section number twenty-nine (29) in Township Thirty three (33) North, Range Fourteen (14) East in said DeKalb County, Indiana.

Said sale will be made pursuant to an order of the DeKalb Circuit Court duly made and entered of record.

The terms of sale will be one-third cash, one-third in six months and one-third in one year, the deferred payments to be evidenced by notes drawing six per cent interest and secured by mortgage back on the premises sold and the privilege is given the purchaser to pay all cash at his option.

Said sale will be continued from day to day, until the real estate is sold.

Raymond Rhodes,
Executor

Edgar W. Atkinson, Atty.

New McCormick mower can be seen at Curie's—come in and see it before you buy.

COBURNTOWN.

Ed Shull of Auburn, called on relatives in this vicinity on Tuesday of last week.

Philip Carper and family of near Auburn, were Sunday guests of Mrs. Carper's parents, W. M. Abel and wife.

Mrs. Anna Bachtel and little daughter are spending a few days with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Wilmot.

Virginia and Gaylon Goldsmith smith are spending a few days with their grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. Rhuben Deitrick.

Gladys and Enzor Conine of Coletown, ate Sunday dinner with Miss Fern Walker.

H. A. Coburn, wife and three small children and Lloyd Wade and family, of Spencerville called on George Wade and wife Sunday afternoon.

The Misses Audrey Coburn and Helen Freeze ate Sunday dinner with R. F. Place and family.

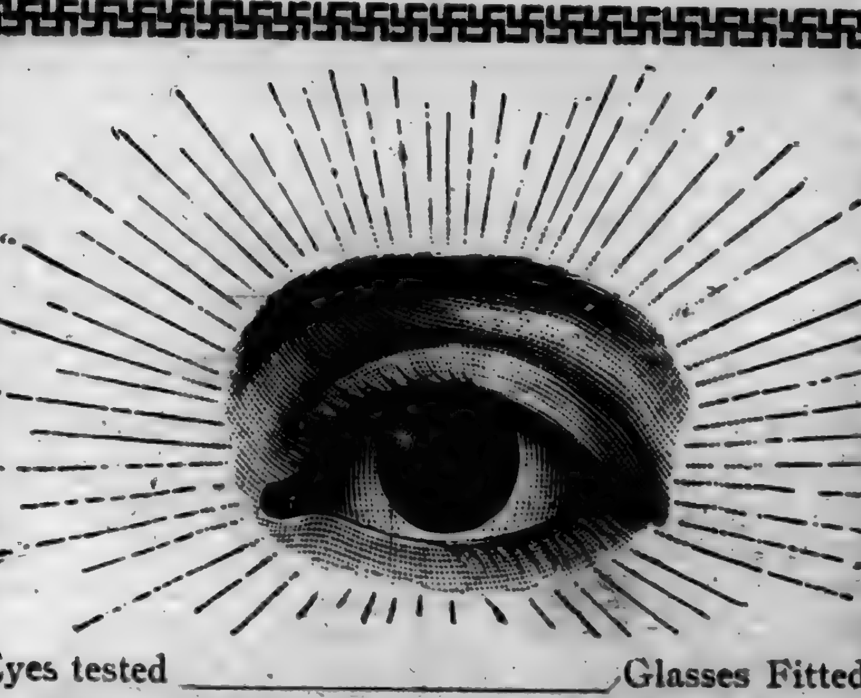
W. P Coburn and wife called on Will Lenhr and wife Sunday afternoon.

Short Notes

John Betz is driving a new Overland car purchased from Beams & Steward at Spencerville.

S. W. Tustison attended the meeting of Group one of the Indiana Bankers Association which was held at the Anthony Hotel in Ft. Wayne, last Friday.

See new way for lighting country homes. Most wonderful light of 20th. Century. See demonstration all this week at 18 Deen Place, Ft. Wayne, Ind. Take Robison Park car.



Eyes tested ______ Glasses Fitted

At Dr. Farhnam's Office, THURSDAY, JUNE 15

EARL FRISBIE, Opt. BUTLER, INDIANA

Obituary

Mary Ellen Pugsley, daughter of W. H. and Ida Olive Pugsley, was born in Lima, Ohio, December 24, 1915, died at the home of her grand-parents, Mr. and Mrs. J C. Bailey in St Joe, Indiana, June 2, 1916. Aged 5 months, 8 days.

But an hour or two after her birth the spirit of her mother had departed leaving her to the care of her grandparents to whom she was especially dear since in the travail of her birth her mother's life was sacrificed and she in part took her place in their affections She was well and tenderly cared for but she seemed to fair for earth and Jesus reached down from Heaven and took her unto himself.

Besides her grand-parents, Mr. and Mrs. J. C. Bailey, and George Pugsley, she leaves her father, her sister and brother, Urshel and Kenneth, 2 uncles, 2 aunts, and other relatives and friends. Precious are the words of Jesus, "Suffer little children, and forbid them not, to come unto me; for of such is the Kingdom of heaven". Funeral was held from the house Sunday afternoon at 2 o'clock, conducted by Rev. J. C. Coons, with E R. Kinsey as funeral director. Burial in Riverside cemetery.

CARD OF THANKS.

We thank our neighbors and friends for their kindness and sympathy during the death of the little one.

Champ Bailey and wife.

Nancy Lawhead Culbertson was born in Green County, Penn., Dec. 4th., 1826, and departed this life May 30th., 1916, aged 89 years, 5 months and 26 days. She was the daughter of James and Martha Lawhead, and came to Wayne Co., Ohio, with her parents in April 1835, and to DeKalb Co., Indiana, in September 1839.

She was united in marriage to Isaac Culbertson, Oct. 7th., 1847, to this union were born eight children. In July 1877 her husband departed this life and with three children were waiting to welcome her to her Heavenly home. She was one of the pioneers of DeKalb County, having lived in this county for 77 years, and having labored so faithfully in building a home in what was then a forest.

The earlier part of her life was spent in the Presbyterian Church as a church home, later she became a member of the Concord M. P., and after making her residence near St. Joe in 1885 she transfered her name to the M. P. Church at that place. Her illness was of long duration, for many years she suffered but never complained; such was her courage. She viewed death as no grim monster. Many times she spoke to her loved ones of her joy and prospect and of her readiness to go. To HER death was a release, a victory.

She was a loving mother and a kind neighbor always ready to help and happy in doing so. She leaves one sister, five children, twelve grandchildren, ten great grandchildren and a large circle of friends to mourn her departure.

Her son George, who so tenderly cared for her during her long illness, and the remaining members of the family wish to extend their sincere gratitude to all the friends and neighbors who so kindly and in so many ways showed their love and sympathy in her sickness and death.

Funeral services were held from the home Thursday at 10 o'clock. Rev. J. C. Coons, officiating. E. R. Kinsey, funeral director. Interment in the Woodlawn cemetery.

Sunday School Report.

The following is a true and correct report of the various Sunday Schools in this neighborhood for last Sunday.

Lutheran	97	$ 3.25
M. P	88	3.38
Christian	60	1.41
Concord	123	3.83
Fairview	25	.90
Coburntown	97	2.30
M. E. Spencer	105	4.43
Lutheran	89	2.21

Sunday school Convention.

The Concord Township Sunday School Convention was held in the Concord M. P. Church, Sunday afternoon, June 4th., and was called to order by the president, B. V. Widney at. 1:35; Song Service; Prayer by Samuel High. The Glory Song was then sung. Devotional was conducted by Frank Provines and consisted of prayers, songs and praise which was very enthusiastic. In the president's remarks which followed he said, "while we were a top-notch township we did not have any top-notch schools and urged strongly for each school to become a top-notch school". The Concord Men's Quartet then sang, "When I Survey the Wondrous Cross". The president then appointed a committee on nomination. Owing to circumstances which could not be overcome it happened that not one of those assigned subjects were present, so they were assigned to others who opened up the topics for discussion. Sol Barney supplied Rev. Coons's place in "Some Character Elements of a Good Sunday School Worker". He said "they should be devoted Christian men and women as officers and teachers. Should be prompt. School should open and close on time". He also said "that while he enjoyed baseball and all other manly sports he did think it very wrong to have these games on Sunday, and that parents should instill in their children that it is wrong to attend Sunday games but to encourage them to attend the week day games instead. An interesting discussion followed. Song, "I Love Him". P. A. Shurts then supplied Mrs. Eva Sheffer's place in, "How to Conduct a Sunday School." He described different Sunday Schools he had attended in the past six months. In the following discussion John George thinks Special Days observed pays. The president also thinks it makes the school grow, also that the music should be lively.

Samuel High supplied for Mrs. A. K. Mumma in "Why Should We Have Definite Missionary Instruction in the Sunday School". He thought Sunday School and Missionary work should go hand in hand. In the discussion that followed the president took vote as to how many were thankful for the Savior, also how many were thankful that someone had told them of the Savior, saying everyone who told anyone else of the Savior was a missionary. It was brought out that 97c. of each $1 00 sent to the foreign missionary was received by them. Children should be taught missions in the Sunday School. Report of last meeting held and township report of schools read by secretary. Nomination committee reported with Frank Provines, President; J. P. Buckingham, Vice-president; and Ada Bassett, Secretary and Treasurer. Motion made and carried that these should serve for the coming year. An offering of $2.07 was taken, after paying F. Leighty $1.35

Continued on Page 8, Column 1

St. Joe Locals

Patronize the advertisers.

McCormick twine at Curie's make up your order now.

Mrs. J. C. Hull and son Merritt, spent the first of this week at Mishawaka, the guest of relatives.

P. A. Shurts made the purchase of a new Ford car, last week, through the new garage at St. Joe.

Twine should be bought now and Curie is prepared to supply your demands with McCormick.

Benjamin Hoyt and two sons, of Detroit, are guests of J. C. F. Abel and wife. They are enroute to their new home in Missouri.

W. C. Patterson and wife, and S. W. Tustison and family were guests of Rev. Dunlap and family, at North Manchester, Ind., Saturday and Sunday, returning in the evening. Rev. and Mrs. Dunlap sends their regards to their many friends at St. Joe and Spencerville.

The electrical storm last Friday morning did considerable damage in different parts of the county and John Weicht, of north of St. Joe, suffered a very heavy loss by fire. His large barn and contents including his machinery were complete loss. 2 fine cows were burned and another badly burned but is thought it will recover. The loss is considerable.

WANTED—To buy your Hay. C. E. Frye, Phone 73-31, St. Joe.

Chas. Carson, of Connelsville, Pa., came Saturday to be a guest of W. E. Peterson and wife, a few days.

WOOL!

Dispose of your crop of Wool now and get a good price—and save all that handling and chance for loosing money. We are prepared to handle wool this spring and you will be guaranteed the highest market price.

Call or Phone to

JACK BEAMS,

Spencerville.

It Costs YOU

nothing to open up a checking account. Pass Books and Check Books are furnished you by the Bank. You will always have the exact change when you have a check book in your pocket and money in the Bank.

Try the Check Way.

St. Joe Valley Bank--State Bank

4 per cent. paid on certificates if left 1 Year.

Safety Deposit Boxes for Rent

ALL KIND OF COAL.

We have running now several cars of genuine Pocahontas lump, several cars of the finest kind of free buring West Virginia Lump and several cars of Genuine Scranton Chesnut Coal. It is very advisable to place orders now for coal off the cars.

Mr. Feeder

try a sack of our BRAN & MIDDLINGS. Don't forget that we handle Barrel Salt also Rock Salt. When in town stop in and pay us a visit.

You are always welcome at,

St. Joe Elevator

The Nathan Grain Co.

OWNERS

Fort Wayne, Indiana

SAMUEL KEESLER, Local Manager.

Don't GET Scared

on account of some dealers advancing paint prices out of decency or else handling substitutes that cost less. We are here to deal in reliable qualities so you will come back again and again. Our aim is to have what you want and do business on business principals.

Dunkle's Drug Store

The Place that is always busy.

JUNE

L 908

0176

Flickerings from Filmland

Interesting to the Movie Fans.

Films of old time flavor used to depend for their picture power on fancy upholstering, but of late directors have taken to finding heart beats under the panoply of powdered wigs, lace ruffles, and silken garments. Players now are actors, not clothers models.

"Sweet Kitty Bellairs" is the second recent instance of an effective costume play, following close upon Morosco's fine picturization of "David Garrick."

James Young derived his story from the play by David Belasco and Egerton Castle, and filmed into it a deal of clever characterization and quaint comedy. In this he was ably assisted by a cast alert to all the possibilities of humor in human frailties.

Mae Murray as Mistress Kitty makes up here for all she fell short in her preceding appearance in "To Have and to Hold." She is a pretty kittenish charmer, on the quivive constantly. And in her great hour, when she stabs her sweetheart by telling him it was all a jest, she wilts like a little flower when it is all over. Her performance is finished and pleasing.

It's all right; we can go right along seeing "Carmen." A wire from New York to George K. Spoor informed him that the Supreme court had denied Chaplin's plea for an injunction restraining Essanay from exhibiting "Carmen," which settles that angle of the row.

But Essanay is not withdrawing its suit $500,000 conducted against Chaplin for a shortage of four pictures claimed due the company by a new contract.

The query, "Would you really take that much money away from Chaplin?" Mr. Spoor countered by querying, "He would take it away from me, wouldn't he. But I'd rather have his pictures than his money."

Maybe Charlie can fix up those four pictures as "outside work."

Paramount is getting at the music problem by providing complete scores of music for all productions which may be rented from the exchanges from which the photoplays are secured. In time, probably the music that fits will be regarded as essential as the "paper" that describes the individual production for those who are passing by.

Henry Otto, maker of Universal's "Undine," who so recently went east to direct King Baggot, is next to go west, but still directing King Baggot, whom he will take along with him.

Alice Joyce has signed a contract with Vitagraph. She will play the leading woman in "The Battle Cry of War," companion picture to "The Battle Cry of Peace."

Los Angeles hurried around and got an ordinance providing for the appointment of a single censor, and now Mayor Sebastian calmly announces that he has no intention of making any such appointment.

Lillian Gish is working under Allan Dwan in a story of Kentucky life. Others in the cast are Mary Alden, Same De Grasse, Spottiswoode Aitken, William De Vaull, and Jennie Lee.

THE HANDLE THAT MAKES CLEANING EASY.

Stop a moment and consider how many tools the housekeeper uses every day! How many of these does she use directly with her hands? How many does she use which are mounted on an artificial "hand" or handle? Very frequently a woman is heard to complain about a certain kind of task, particularly cleaning or scrubbing, and say that it is drudgery. But just as frequently it is drudgery only because the woman used her own hand to exert force and pressure when she might have used a mechanical hand and thus saved herself.

Every tool that can be mounted on a handle is that much more efficient. For instance, take the task of what might be called dusting the floor. If a woman prostrates herself to use the cloth to clean the surface, get under furniture, etc., she is assuming an uncomfortable position which makes her very fatigued. If also, she reaches with a cloth to wipe off the top of the pictures, or dusts down the sairs with a cloth, or worse, scrubs using a brush directly in the palm of the hand, she is straining herself needlessly.

It is far better to mount the cloth, brush, mop, etc., on a piece of wood or handle, and apply the force on to the handle instead. So we find that we can do all kinds of floor cleaning either wet or dry, dusting, mopping and even scrubbing by the use of handled tools.

Many women disagree that it is possible to scrub as well with a brush mounted on a handle as if the worker gets down on her knees. This is only a habit, because it has been proved that a tool mounted on a handle can be used with greater force than a tool held directly in the hand. If we study physics we learn that the longer the handle or "force arm" as it is called, the greater the pressure that can be exerted. For example, no woman would think of trying to pull out a tack from the floor with her finger. She exerts more "pull" on the tack by using a tack puller, or handle. Just so every tool mounted on a handle gives greater force to the work with less effort to the worker. There are on the market a handled scrubbing brush, handled yarn or "boat mops," which are excellent when used dry on polished floors, or which when moistened with oil or good floor polish, remove dust from the floor better than it could possibly be done by hand stooping.

Similarly, dusters or other short mops can be mounted on a handle about one or two feet long which will prevent the hand from becoming dirty. In purchasing any handled tool, however, adequately long handles should be bought, never less than five feet or preferably six feet for a cleaning tool used on the floor. This length will permit the worker to stand upright and without strain. Nothing helps toward easier cleaning than a good handled collection of right tools.

FROM THE CONSULAR REPORTS.

For the eight months ending with last February the overseas trade of Australia showed a gain of $88,145,525 when contrasted with the commonwealth's foreign commerce of the previous year.

Because of the war, chicory is selling high in England—at from $125 to $140 a ton, whereas in normal times it can be bought for $35 to $40 a ton.

American bidders recently lost a big contract in Argentina because of a lack of ships for prompt delivery.

Perhaps adversity may prepare a man for the life beyond the grave, but it curtails his credit while on earth.

SICKROOM HINTS.

T. A. Williams, a Washington neurologist, once delivered an address to a class of trained nurses, pointing out the special requirements for successfully nursing nervous patients. Much of what he had to say bears so directly on nursing in general, and is so applicable by all who have to care for the sick, that I have thought it worth while to condense for ready reference some of his recommendations:

Every nurse should cultivate that fine instinct which puts us in another's place, makes us see with another's eyes, and so prevents us from rudely trampling upon another's feelings.

She should know a great deal about the preparation of food, and especially how to make it appetizing as well as wholesome and to serve it with neatness and taste.

She should avoid such possible sources of annoyance to her patient as wearing squeaky shoes, sitting in a chair that squeaks, slamming doors, whispering, walking on tiptoe.

Many patients have special dislikes. Some of these are very trivial, but the nurse cannot be too alert to observe them and act accordingly.

For instance, the arrangements of the food and dishes on a tray may offend, so that the nurse should carefully observe the patient's expression when the first meals are brought.

Water trickling from a glass may annoy. The window shade may cause an unpleasant glare or make the room too dim.

To such patients the personal questions which often occur during unskilled attempts at conversation are particularly obnoxious.

So also is the handling of the patient's belongings by the nurse. Who knows how many exaggerated sentimental memories may not be associated with the patient's possessions?

Remember that self-assertiveness is most untranquilizing, and the attitude of condescension to one's work is more obnoxious still.

Any appearance of strenuousness must be avoided; unusual incidents should appear to be taken as they come and should not be punctuated by astonishment or perturbation.

For example, a nurse sometimes wishes to see the doctor alone, sometimes she does not. An anxious patient will at once notice a difference in the routine and may conjure up all sorts of terrors in consequence of a nurse's leaving the room to speak to the doctor upon his departure.

Hence the nurse should make a practice of always leaving the room along with the doctor at the conclusion of his visit.

The nurse, too, must think of little comforts, such as a relay of hot towels for which the patient may not think of asking, a pad under the back, the right placing of a light, etc.

What is read aloud to a patient must be selected with great discrimination. Ask the doctor's advice as to books or other reading matter that should be avoided.

Be particularly careful neither by word nor act to intensify the patient's nervousness and anxiety about the outcome of the illness.

These hints by no means embody the whole philosophy of successful nursing. But their observance may mean the difference between success and failure, and will certainly do much to rob the sick-room of its terrors.

Therefore it will not be amiss to clip out this list of recommendations and keep it available for use when illness is in the home.

Happiness is a large part of health, and that is why a new hat makes you feel better.

GOOSE RAISING

Profitable in Small Numbers and in Suitable Locations—Demand and Prices Good in Some Sections

The Toulouse and Embden are the most popular breeds of geese in this country. The Toulouse is the largest breed, the adult gander and goose weighing 25 and 20 pounds, respectively, while the standard weights of the Embden are 20 and 18 pounds.

Geese can be raised in small numbers successfully and at a profit on many farms where there is low, rough, pasture land containing a natural supply of water. The market for geese is not so general as for chickens, but the demand and prices are especially good in sections where goose fattening is conducted.

Geese need only a house during cold or stormy weather, when an open shed should be provided. One gander is mated with from one to three geese, and the matings are not changed from year to year unless they prove unsatisfactory. When mated, they are allowed to run together in flocks. Toulouse and Embden geese will breed when about 2 years old. The females are usually kept until they are from 12 to 14 years old, or as long as they lay well. Sex is difficult to distinguish, especially in young geese. The gander is usually somewhat larger and coarser than the goose, and has a leaner, longer neck and larger head. The sex is sometimes determined by a critical examination or by the action of the geese at mating time.

Large boxes, barrels, or shelters are provided as nests for geese, or they are allowed to make nests on the floor of the house. The eggs should be collected daily and kept in a cool place. The first eggs are usually set under hens, while the last ones which the goose lays may be hatched either under hens or under the goose if she 'goes broody." If the eggs are not removed from the nest where the goose is laying, she will usually stop laying sooner than if they are taken away. The period of incubation of goose eggs varies from 28 to 30 days. Moisture may be added after the first week by sprinkling the eggs or the nests with warm water. Goose eggs hatch slowly, especially under hens, and the goslings are usually removed as soon as hatched and kept in a warm place until the hatching is completed.

Geese are generally raised where they have a good grass range or pasture, as they are good grazers and usually pick up most of their living, except during the winter months and the breeding season. Goslings should be fed a mash of two parts shorts and one part corn meal by weight, changing at the end of three weeks to equal parts shorts and corn meal with 5 per cent each of beef scrap and grit. A fattening ration may be made of a mash of one part shorts and two parts corn meal by weight with 5 per cent of beef scrap, fed in the morning, and a feed of corn at night.

Adult geese should be fed for eggs about February 1, or so that the goslings will be hatched by the time there is good grass pasture. In feeding for eggs give a mash of equal parts by weight of corn meal, bran, and middlings or low grade flour with 10 per cent of beef scrap, in the morning, and a feed of corn at night. A constant supply of drinking water should be provided. If geese need grain when not laying, the beef scrap should be left out and the corn meal increased in this ration to three parts.

Grafting Wax

A good grade of grafting wax may be made as follows: Resin four parts by weight, beeswax two parts by weight, beef tallow one part by weight The ingredients should be melted together but not boiled. As soon as they are all melted stir thoroughly and pour into a tub of tepid water. Grease the hands with tallow and work the mass under water in such a way that it will cool evenly throughout. When tough remove from the water and pull like candy until it becomes a light straw color. Make into sticks about an inch in diameter, wrap in oiled paper and lay aside until wanted.

To use, simply warm by holding in the hands or by working it under tepid water. It will keep indefinitely. If the wax is lumpy it is because it was boiled or because it was cooled too quickly. Lumpy wax may be improved by heating slowly (preferably in a double boiler or glue pot) until it is completely melted and then repeat as before.

A slightly softer wax for use in cool weather is made the same as above but by the following formula: Resin four pounds, beeswax two pounds, linseed oil one pint.

Indigestion

A great many chicks have diarrhea because of being fed too soon after hatching and by cooling too quickly Chicks are provided by nature with sufficient food to nourish them at least 48 hours after they get out of the shells, so it is not necessary to feed them at once just because they pick at whatever is convenient.

Leg Weakness

There is considerable loss from leg weakness in chicks each season, due to improper heating of their brooders, or from improper feeding. Birds showing symptoms of such trouble should be fed plenty of oatmeal moistened with milk, which develops the muscles and improves their vitality.

LARKINITES STILL BEING JAILED IN DUBLIN

Street in Dublin, Ireland, where revolutionary riots took place, and Jim Larkin, agitator, carried by his followers, who were chief among the factions seeking to free Ireland. Arrests of Sinn Feiners and Larkinites are still continuing

Dictates of Fashion

The tailleur, in checked, striped or novelty, calls for a collar of light solid color.

Dark suit fabrics are always improved by such an addition, and a woman does not appear to be correctly dressed unless there is something either light of fluffy about the neck. Pique, linen, broadcloth, satins and even crepe Georgette are used. Favorite colors are flesh, peach, champagne, old gold and cream. A good quality of broadcloth is desirable—with picot edge—and it can be laundered so that it displays no sign of the tubbing.

Frequently the collar extends into a vestee, and in every case it is detachable. It is a rather nice idea to possess collars to match each chapeau. This gives a suggestion of friendly understanding between frock and hat.

Light colored cuffs are a mistake. They soil easily and frequently make the hands look larger and more prominent. To use light tones for pockets is likely to give a patchy appearance to the jacket; wise dressmakers avoid piecemeal effects.

This year allows more freedom in the fashioning of sheer undergarments and petticoats, for breadths and flounces have replaced clinging models of the last few years. So there are fascinating petticoats, both in fine linen or cotton and in taffeta, with flounce upon flounce, with shirrings, bandings, cordings, and frillings, following the mode of the outer skirts, and for sheer summer and evening frocks dainty confections stiffened below the hips with narrow, pliable whalebone and perhaps trailing ribbon loops or dangling roses.

The season of basques and wide skirts is naturally most frequently showing separate petticoats and camisoles, but to suit an individual preference a clever modiste has designed the combination pictured on the full length figure in the illustration. It is of all white, softest taffeta, with tucked bands of sheer organdy, combined with white faille ribbons. The front is quite plain, buttoning with tiny close set pearl buttons from bust to knee. The shoulder straps of ribbon passing over the shoulders are beaded through the bodice and skirt at the back by means of slits in the taffeta, to fall at either side in generous loops weighted by pale pink roses. Two rows of whalebone are sewn to the inside of the skirt at the edges of the organdy band, while frills of the taffeta at the hem scallops give increased flare at the bottom.

In nightgowns puff sleves are once again appearing, and, as if to offset this added bulk of material, they are being cut lower in the already low necks. The mode of wider shoulders is allowing, too, bigger and more trailing caps in charming conceits. One new variety is but a long piece of lace, plaited fine and puckered at its edge to a little rose that makes the back of the crown, greater width being allowed at one side for the lace to trail down over the nape of the neck and the fetching curls with which fashion is once more coquetting.

The nightgown shows a popular version of the puff sleeve attached in a straight section to a huge arm opening and finished with a flourishing frill Parisiennes prefer the fullness in their underwear plaited from bust to hem, giving more elegance to the silhouette.

HEAVY CROCHET LACES.

Crocheted laces are being revived again. A spread that was greatly admired was made of heavy unbleached linen insert with hands of heavy crocheted lace and finished with a scalloped lace of the same pattern.

Making a million dollars looks comparatively easy to the man who has been trying to get a crying baby to sleep.

When a mother begins to tell her children how smart their father is, they look at her as reproachfully as if they thought she was losing her mind.

HIGH HEELS ARE O. K. DECLARES AN EXPERT.

High-heeled shoes give women a graceful carriage, support the body properly and give the poise which produces the natural curves to the spine. Low heels and flat chests go together. Science says so.

At least this is the fiat of Dr. Paul B. Magnuson, whose paper, "Mechanical Kinks of the Back," attracted marked attention before the Illinois State Medical Society at its meeting in Champaign.

"High heels are the proper thing for women," said Dr. Magnuson. "The Cuban heel, while high, is objectionable because all of the support goes to the back part of the foot, leaving a long distance between heel and toe, which overstrains the instep.

"The French heel gives broad support to the foot from heel to instep, but a narrow base to walk upon. Both the French and Cuban heels, used on pumps, put the feet into a toboggan slide and jam the toes into the tip of the shoe, causing callouses on the toes and the ball of the foot. For this reason all low shoes should have a support over the instep to prevent the foot from slipping down into the toe of the shoe.

"The proper heel is one which gives the greatest support to the arch of the foot and is broad enough at the base of the heel to walk upon comfortably without danger of turning the ankle.

"Flat heels make women waddle. High heels gave swing and grace to their walk. A woman must have the spring that comes through throwing the weight of her body on the toes rather than the heels. The arch of the foot is only intended for a spring, and when the arch breaks down it causes a loss of all grace and swing in the walk. Scientific study shows that low heels throw the weight of the body in such a manner as to flatten the curve of the back.

"Flat heels develop flat backs and flat chests.

"Proper corsets are just as essential to a woman's comfort as proper shoes. Front-laced corsets are best because, instead of lacing from the middle up and down, as back laced corsets do, they lace from the bottom up, giving support around the hips, where it is needed, and leaving room around the stomach and chest, where room is needed for proper breathing and a full stomach.

"There is a decided relation between backaches, spinal troubles and improper shoes. The fashionable woman, with her high heels, therefore, is taking scientific measures to insure good health, a good figure and walking and dancing poise."

HEALTH AND BEAUTY.

A well known woman seen the other day was looking years younger and better than previously. Her doctor had told her to drink the juice of one orange and one lemon mixed together, fasting, on waking every morning, advice which she had followed.

A quick mustard plaster may be made from a large slice of bread with edges trimmed, and thickly sprinkled with ground mustard. Over this spread a thin muslin cloth saturated with vinegar and wrung out. The vinegar prevents a blister.

An eminent French doctor has been lately upsetting our notions as to bedmaking. He advocates that our pillows be put under the feet instead of under the head of the sleeper, and declares this method is a sure cure for insomania. Another suggestion is to make up the bed with pillows for both the feet and head, so that the weary sleeper lies in a hollow. This is said to be most restful. Weariness is really the hunger of special organs and should be alleviated by rest in order to permit the feeding of these tired organs by the blood.

Mrs. Leona M. Wells, a clerk in the United States senate, has been in the federal service for fifteen years.

During the last year three states have passed laws putting the wife and husband on an equal footing in property rights.

TOWSER.

I drove a horse for a long, long time; through the summer dust and the winter rime I jogged along in my one-hoss shay, and never dreamed that a better way of locomotion I e'er would find, and Towser trotted along behind. A happy dog was old Towser then; he got acquainted with dogs and men, and found fine bones on the right of way, the while he followed my one hoss shay. But Dobbin, the horse, grew out of date, and I bought a car that can hit a gait of forty miles in a fleeting hour, a thing that throbs with resistless car one day, as I scorched the road power. Old Towser followed the on my townward way; he kept in sight for three parasangs, and then he muttered some bowbow dangs, and sneaked back home with a broken heart, and died the death 'neath a one-hoss cart. Alas, old dog, 'twas a bitter end, for one that long was a faithful friend, but the world moves on, and that dog must fade that is too slow for the great parade; must lay him down 'neath the buttercups—and it's true of men, just as well as pups.

WALT MASON.

EMERGENCY CEMENT.

One of the housekeeper's most besetting annoyances is the sudden leak, which, no matter how much care she takes of pots and pans, springs up in the midst of work to confound her.

In nearly every case it is inconvenient either to buy a new utensil on the spot or to have it soldered immediately.

However, when your wash boiler or any pot or kettle begins to leak at an unexpected moment you can save the day with an emergency cement made by mixing the white of an [illegible] fine coal or wood ashes until it forms a thick paste.

Plaster this over the hole on the outside of the vessel and then hold it over thr fire until the egg is baked and the cement hardens.

PLASTER FOR PAINS.

Pains in the chest due to irritation or of purely muscular origin are relieved by the application of mustard plasters. For adults equal parts of flour and mustard are mixed with hot water. For children and elderly people a little more flour is employed. The amount required is determined by the size of the plaster, which should be of ample size completely to cover the chest. After remaining there for ten minutes or longer, according to the "burning" sensation, remove it to the back, where the lungs are nearer the surface. Plasters should always be applied warm, otherwise a chill is easily induced.

A Mean Man

Six years later he returned. His sweetheart of former years has married. They met at a party. She has changed; between dances the recognition takes place.

"Let me see," she muses, with her fan beating a tattoo on her pretty hand, "was it you or your brother who was my old sweetheart?"

"Really, I don't know; probably my father."

Had Practiced

Vicar (to Mrs. Thatchbay, whose baby had recently been christened)—Ah, Mrs. Thatchbag, I never remember any baby behaving so well in the water.

Mrs. Thatchbag—Lor, sir, that was because me an Jim 'ad been practicing on 'im for about a week afore with a watering can."

Marrying at Leisure

Daughter—Mr. Nicechap has asked for my hand, and I have accepted.

Papa—What nonsense! You are not old enough to marry.

Daughter—That's the beauty of it. I will have plenty of time to look around while I'm engaged."

When Breaking in New Shoes.

Sprinkle your shoes inside with a generous quantity of talcum powder. You will find this the greatest relief to the burning and smarting caused by the drawing of new leather.

JUNE

L 908

U 177

Hopkins' Choice

By Flora Newman La Grange, Indiana

PRIZE STORY No. 10

"Oh dunder Blitz! Why did the old rascal do that! Of all fool tricks."

So said Jack Mason when his uncle's will was read. He was the kind of person who liked plenty of money without having to work hard. Oh no, he was not lazy. He worked hard enough at his kind of work, which consisted of winning foot-ball games in college, and horse races, and golf and tennis games after graduation. He had always had plenty of money, for his uncle had kept him well supplied. Thanks to that same uncle's wise care, Jack had grown into a jolly, well-liked, well-behaved young man with no bad habits.

When old Mr. Mason died, Jack fully expected to inherit all the old man's ducats unconditionally; but when he called on the lawyer, the next day after the funeral, to settle up the estate, he received the surprise of his life. The keen-eyed old lawyer looked at the young man quizzically as he unfolded the will.

"Ahem! I suppose you are familiar with the terms of the will?" he asked.

"Certainly not," the boy stated concisely.

"Exactly. They are rather peculiar. You may not have known it, but your uncle was very eccentric. You will soon see."

After that parting shot, he read the will. After several bequests to employees and distant relation, the gist of it appeared.

"To my nephew, John Mason, I bequeth the rest and residue of my property, on the following conditions: knowing him to be needful of wise guardianship, I have decided that he is to marry one or the other of the Fairfax twins, namely, Esther Fairfax and June Fairfax, of Faxton, N. J. They are both estimable girls, and either is capable of looking after John as he needs. He is to become acquainted with the girls, and marry one of them before one year from the reading of this will. I am leaving further instructions with my lawyer."

After one minute of amazed silence, Jack found relief in the opening sentence.

"Well, I want those further instructions immediately. I must know fully what I am to do," he concluded.

The lawyer extracted a sheet of paper from the litter on his desk, "You are to make their acquaintances as soon as possible. Here are their pictures. I am to invite them here for a month, and you are to choose one of them during that time. Then you will have eleven months to win her and marry her."

"Oh Great Scott. Their pictures are ugly. If they are like their pictures, I don't want either one of them. Anyway they may not want me. Then what shall I do?"

"In that case, you are to kidnap the lady of your choice, and force her to marry you."

"Oh, but that is not being done now-a-days. What could uncle have been thinking about? How did he happen to know them anyway?"

"He wanted to prove that you had a little ambition, and will-power. He has known their parents for years; has had business dealings with the father."

"Oh, Mein Himmel! I am to exercise my will-power. What a joke." And the young fellow doubled up laughing. The lawyer's eyes twinkled.

"I am inviting them here for a month," the lawyer said rising. "The invitation went this morning, and they will be here in less than a week. You are to make yourself agreeable while they are here. They are not to know about that will at all, for they must not be influenced. You will take up your residence with me at once, and will be with me as long as they are visiting here. They are from a small town, and have never been in the city before, even if their father is a millionaire; it will be easy for you to show them a good time, as you are to have all the money you need to conduct the campaign. Your uncle arranged for that; come to me for what you need. I shall expect you over to the house tomorrow sometime prepared to stay. Good afternoon."

The young man left the office in a "blue funk." He made his way to the club, and there acted so dejected that several of the young men present, took it upon themselves to cheer him up. They knew that his uncle had just died, but they knew that it was something else that was bothering him. A half dozen or more crowded around, and begged him to confide in them. At last he told them the whole story, and showed them the pictures.

"Now you fellows must help me. I can't be expected to entertain those two girls alone for a whole month. Think of it; I'll have to entertain one of them as long as we both live. I guess I'll marry one, then commit suicide; or else I'll leave this world of woe at once. In that case I won't need money. Oh dear! Oh dear! What shall I do!"

Everyone laughed at his lugubrious expression, but all promised to help. They threatened to tell the girls that they were victims of a fortune-hunter, but Jack looked so woe-be-gone that they desisted. He declared that if they knew of the will, he would have to marry both of them, and take up his residence with the Mormons.

In the meantime the Fairfax household was in a turmoil over the invitation. They had only a few days, so Mrs. Fairfax said that the girls would have to do some shopping after they reached the city. Her parting instructions to the girls were that they should capture rich husbands; Ester retorted that she would not be bothered with any, while June just laughed. After a day and a night they reached the city early in the forenoon. Mrs. Norris was waiting for them at the station gates. After a glance at their suitcases, she asked if they wanted to do some shopping before they went home. They spent the entire day going from one shop to another. They were tired, but happy when they went to their rooms in the Norris home that evening. In a letter to her parents June told of her experiences that first day in the city. The last part amused Mr. Fairfax greatly.

"And mother, when we came down to dinner, a strange young man was there. They introduced him as John Mason, the nephew of that queer old man who came to see you and papa last summer. For some reason he does not get the uncle's property, so he is staying with Mr. and Mrs. Norris until he decides what to do. Maybe he will go into Mr. Norris' office, and become a lawyer. He won't have to work very hard, as he has a private income from his mother's estate. I have gleaned consilerable news in a short time, haven't I? When we were introduced he looked at us and gasped. He said, 'I thought—' under his breath, then stopped. Some day I shall as him what he thought.

"Mr. Mason seems like a nice young man, even if he did stare at us so funny all the time. Several times I caught him looking at something mysterious. He seemed embarrassed about it. Ether seemed possessed. She laughed and joked until we were laughing all the time. I never knew her to be so jolly with strangers. She was as friendly with Mr. Mason as could be, and he seemed quite pleased with her. Tomorrow we are going sight-seeing over the city, then tomorrow night we are going to an opera. Mr. Norris has a box, and it will be full, so I suppose there will be a crowd of us. It is after twelve and I must stop. Esther is sleeping very soundly, and if I don't hurry, I won't get any sleep myself."

After the girls and Mrs. Norris went to their rooms for the night, Jack and his lawyer talked for a long time. The lawyer seemed delighted with the girls.

"Now there's Esther; she seems like a fine girl. She's just the one for you," he said cheerfully.

"Oh yes, she's very nice. So's Miss June. I rather like her, so far. I expect I can tell you better tomorrow night. Hang it all, if I didn't have to marry one of them, I expect I'd be dead gone on one of them—maybe both, but what a fellow must have, he don't want. Those pictures didn't flatter them any. Mrs. Norris and I are taking them sightseeing tomorrow."

He tried to sleep, but the girls so occupied his mind that he could not get his eyes shut. He kept trying to decide which one he liked best; whenever he thought of Esther's dark, laughing eyes, June's demure face and blue eyes drove her away. He thought of Esther's jolly laugh, and June's quiet smile faded away. At last he decided that he would marry both and immigrate to Mormon land or Turkey.

The next day passed quickly enough. The girls did not try to appear citified, but were frankly sightseers, and very appreciative. Mrs. Norris and Jack were pleased with their air of being delighted with everything. At lunch they met a friend of Jack—one of those who had promised to help entertain the girls. He promptly attached himself to the party, to Mrs. Norris' relief and Jack's chagrin. The former knew it would be easier for her with an extra man along, while Jack feared that he would not have as much of the girls' attention as he wanted. He was rather vain, you know, and it was even worse than he feared. Tom Brant appropriated Esther as his especial charge, leaving Jack to entertain June. Mrs. Norris smiled at the frown on his face. Esther and Tom seemed to be having a fine time, while he was "trailing along with June and Mrs. Norris." That was how he expressed it to himself. June was very quiet for some reason, so Jack had to do most of the talking.

"Plague that Tom Brant! He is always putting himself forward," the gloomy young man said to himself, forgetting that he had asked Tom to help entertain the girls.

That night at the theatre party and the supper, it was even worse. The young men flocked around the girls like bees to a flower. The twins were stunning, too; June seemed to be jollier than usual, so she had her fair share of attentions. Harry Brant was her special cavalier, and that worried Jack not a little.

When he had his talk with the lawyer that night, he surprised the older man by his grumbling. He complained that he was not being given a fair chance, with so many young men trying to cut him out. The lawyer chuckled when he found that Jack hated to be so ignored by Esther. After Tom Brant appeared, she had paid no more attention to him, beyond the barest civilities—so Jack said.

The next day Jack told the girls to secure riding dresses, as he intended to take them horseback riding in the park the next morning.

"We will get out at daylight and get our breakfast down town at a jolly little Dutch restaurant."

The girls and Mrs. Norris promptly decided to spend the day down town while Jack secured the horses. He did not know that the girls had whispered to Mrs. Norris that they could not ride, and that she had promised to take them to a riding-master that afternoon. They quickly found a riding-master who easily taught them the rudiments of riding, both astride and side-saddle. They were very enthusiastic and very stiff and tired when they reached home that evening.

Jack had had his troubles, too. It seemed that Esther's wish for a black, and June's desire for a chestnut ("to match my complexion and hair," as she explained) were to be disappointed. At last Jack found what he wanted and had them sent to his stable to keep his roan racing horse company. There he made arangements with the groom to have the three horses sent to the Norris home the next morning.

Jack was ready for the ride long before the appointed time, watching for the horses. As soon as they came, he sent for the girls; they were a little nervous at first, but they were so pleased with the horses that it was not long before they were enjoying the ride thoroughly. The ride in the fresh morning air gave them an appetite for the excellent German pancakes and coffee at the restaurant Jack had chosen.

(Continued Next Week)

The Poultry Yard

If you use wet mashes let the water be warm.

A corn-sheller is not an essential. The hens will do their own shelling if you throw out the ears in short, broken pieces.

Do not give eggs to an early broody hen until she is surely broody, as hens like the weather at this season of the year, are rather changeable.

The sooner people divest themselves of the idea that they must be always dosing chickens with medicine, the sooner will they be enabled to breed a hardy race of fowls, that are roup and cholera proof.

See that the nest of the early sitter is airtight. This can be accomplished by placing a sheet of heavy paper in the bottom. Sprinkle the paper well with coal-oil to discourage lice, and use plenty of straw.

Don't trust the feeding and watering of the chickens entirely to the children. Keep in touch with the feeding and the condition of the houses as well. A child can not be expected to note the first signs of trouble.

The hen has many useful things,
Including feathers, neck and wings,
And white meat, dark meat, wishbone,
legs,
And stuffing, side-bone, gizzard, eggs.
She does the very best she's able
To make us satisfied at table.

Take a few of your best layers out of the main house and keep them in a place by themselves with the best male bird you can get. The eggs from these hens will be your stock for the chicks that are to be. Get up a little higher this year.

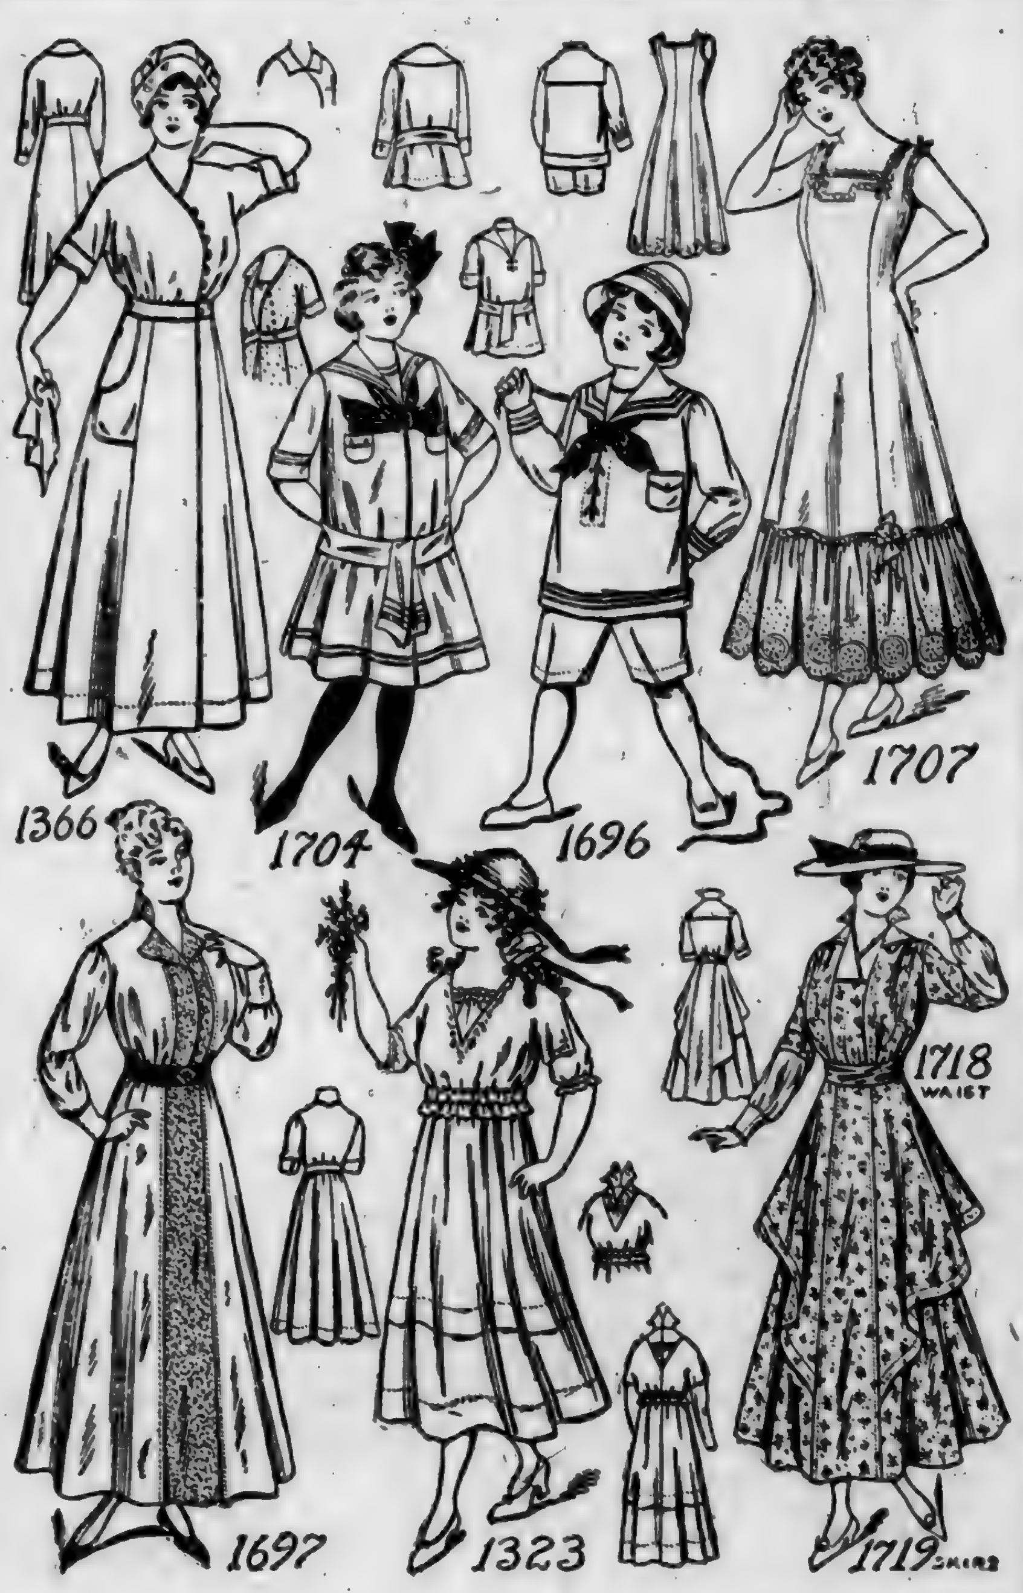
Say, the hens will cackle thanks for those small potatoes. Just boil them and mix with meal or bran. If scraps of meat or soup bones are boiled with the potatoes the biddies will like the flavor better, and there will be money in your pocket.

The rich man is thankful if he has a good digestion and the poor man is thankful if he has anything to digest.

Our Fashion Department

Prepared Especially for this Paper

Send All Orders Direct to this Paper



1366. Ladies' Home Dress. Cut in 6 sizes: 34, 36, 38, 40, 42, and 44 inches bust measure. It requires for the dress 7 yards of 36-inch material for a medium size. The cap is cut in one size-medium and requires ¾ yard of 27-inch material. The skirt measures about 3 yards at the foot. Price 10c.

1704. Girls' Dress. (To be closed in Front or Slipped over Head.) Cut in 4 sizes: 4, 6, 8 and 10 years. It requires 3½ yards of 36-inch material for an 8-year size. Price 10c.

1696. Boys' Blouse Suit with Shield Cut in 4 sizes: 3, 4, 5 and 6 years. It requires 3 yards of 44-inch material for a 4-year size. Price 10c.

1707. Ladies' Princess Slip, with or without Flounce. Cut in 6 sizes: 34, 36, 38, 40, 42 and 44 inches bust measure. It requires 6¾ yards of 36-inch material with 3½ yards of flouncing for a 36-inch size. Price 10c.

1697. Ladies' Dress. Cut in 7 sizes: 34, 36, 38, 40, 42, 44 and 46 inches bust measure. It requires 6⅛ yards of 44-inch material for a 36-inch size. The skirt measures 3 1/3 yards at the foot. Price 10c.

1323. "Junior" Dress, with Under Waist. Cut in 3 sizes: 12, 14 and 16 years. A 16-year size will require 2¼ yards of 27-inch material for the guimpe or under waist, and 4½ yards of 44-inch material for the dress. Price 10c.

1718-1719. Ladies' Costume. Waist 1718, cut in 6 sizes: 34, 36, 38, 40, 42 and 44 inches bust measure. Skirt 1719, cut in 6 sizes: 22, 24, 26, 28, 30 and 32 inches waist measure. The entire dress requires 8¾ yards of 44-inch material for a 36-inch size. The skirt measures about 3 yards at the foot.

Two separate patterns, 10 cents for each pattern.

PATTERN ORDER.

Patterns
No.	Size

I enclose ....for Patterns

Name ....

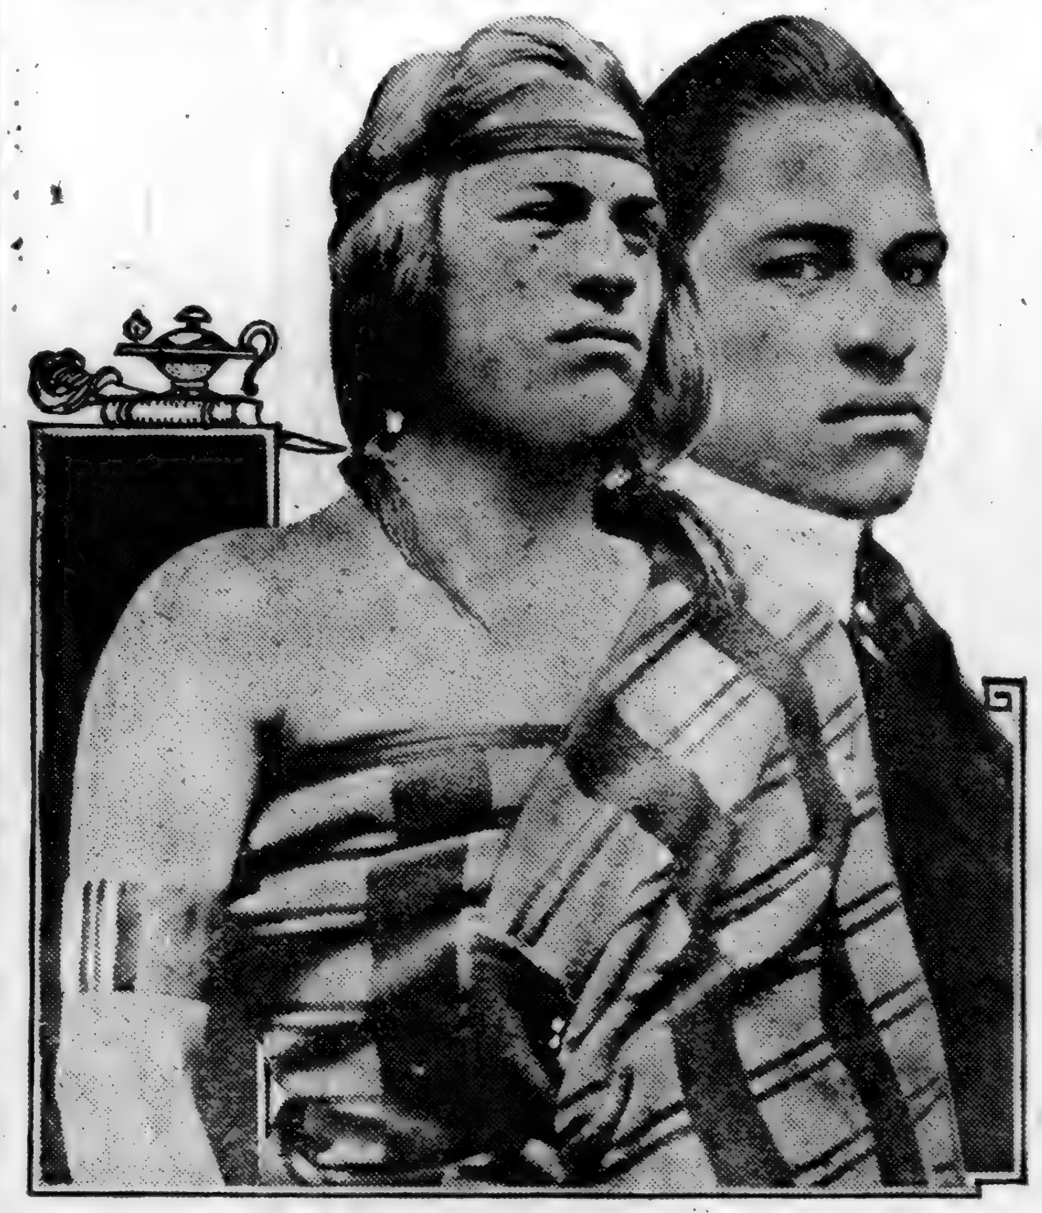
Town ....

State ....

St. No., R. F. D. ....

Mail Your Order Direct to Publisher.

INDIAN APPOINTED TO WEST POINT



Sylvester Chahuska Long-Lance, a full blooded Cherokee Indian, whom President Wilson appointed to West Point Military academy. He is seen in the costume of his tribe and as he is, a graduate of Carlisle.

POINTED PARAGRAPHS.

Some men are chronic mis-fortune tellers.

A fable is a stem winding lie with a moral attachment.

And if the wife is untidy the husband may try to get untied.

Successful men haven't time to go back and cover their footprints.

A respectable cat may look at a king —if there isn't a mouse in sight.

No matter how bad a man's temper may be, his wife can make it worse.

Our opportunities are apt to go by default unless they carry dollar signs.

Probably no person ever got so far behind with his work as the fool killer.

One way to avoid disappointment is to ask for something other people don't want.

Dame Fortune may smile on a man for a day, then her daughter Mis-Fortune gives him the laugh.

One girl doesn't kiss another girl because she likes it; it's merely her method of simplified advertising.

For Burns and Light Scalds.

Coat immediately with mucilage, and the smarting will cease almost instantly. If the burn is deep, keep covered with a paste made of cold water and flour, not allowing the paste to get dry until the smarting ceases.

To Remove Iodine Stains.

Strong ammonia water is excellent for removing iodine stains; and blueberry stains may be removed by washing at once with cold water and white soap.

$50 in Prizes
POPULAR STORY CONTEST

An opportunity for subscribers of this paper to try their literary talent and gain a reputation.

MANY magazine writers are secured from the rural communities. We want our subscribers to have every advantage to utilize their talent, and have joined with from 75 to 100 other publishers in a great story contest.

Do you think you can write a story?

Suppose you try, anyhow. For the best story received, to be decided by vote, we will pay

Three Cash Prizes!

First Choice, $25 Second, $15
Third, - 10.00

THIS is an ideal method for amateur authors to secure recognition. Stories of love, adventure, descriptive ... will be printed in as early edition as possible, if acc... received. If return of manuscript is de... being acceptable, first-class postage ...

Stories may run from Decision will be ma

subscribers of the vari

Manuscript must side of the paper o

Send manus

JUNE

L 908

0178

The St. Joe News

Fred B. Leighty, Editor
Mrs. Jora Leighty, Associate

One Year,	$1.00
Six Months,	.50
Three Months,	.25

Entered at the postoffice at St. Joe, Indiana, as second class matter.

INDIANA ASSOCIATED WEEKLIES
THE CONCERN OF ALL

Personal Items

Send in your news items.

Slide in the $1.00 Do it now.

Buy your next writing tablet and package of envelopes at this office.

Subscriptions taken for new or renewals of any magazine published, at The News office.

Lee O. Tustison, of Columbus, Ind., was home over Sunday, the guest of his family and relatives.

Mrs. Martha Shearer dislocated her ankle Wednesday morning. Dr. Sheffer was called and replaced it.

Dr. C. S. Stewart, of Auburn, takes this method of informing his patients that he will be in Detroit the week beginning June 11th. '16.

Abe Martin says:—"If it didn't rain once in a while farmers wouldn't have any time t' pick out ther new autos. Mrs. Tipton Bud is slowly recoverin' from havin' a bed room papered". The question that bothers the farmers here is how are they going to pay for them.

FOR SALE:-Buick roadster in good condition. A bargain if taken at once. GEO. GELHOUSEN, GARRETT, IND.

Last Saturday afternoon the fire boys were given a hurry-up call and they certainly responded in short order, leaving their work in all directions and coming to their post of duty. The alarm came in from the John Hart residence at the foot of 4th. street, about a block and a half from the fire house, and the fire apparatus was hurriedly taken to the scene and the boys got busy and the blaze was soon extinguished. The roof caught on fire by a spark from the chimney and a good sized hole was burned in the roof. The damages will be adjusted at once. The fire was discovered in good time and was easy to get under control.

HATS

and

CAFs

t styles for the felts and to our dis-
n-

Miss Walter is Bride at Home.

Married to B. M. Mattson of Montana, at Quiet Wedding.

Miss Edna Walter, daughter of Mr. and Mrs B. F. Waltea, W1908 Gardner avenue, became the bride of B. M. Mattson of St. Regis, Mont., at a quiet wedding at the home of the bride's parents Wednesday evening at 6 o'clock.

The couple was unattended and was married beneath an arch of ferns and flowers. The Rev. H. L. Beightol of the Epworth Methodist church performed the ceremony in the presence of relatives and a few invited guests.

Following the wedding a reception was held. The home was prettily decorated for the occasion with daisies and carnations predominating in the dining room.

The bride wore a dress of white crepe de chine and carried bride's roses—Spokane Daily Chronicle, June 1st.

Church Notes

M. P. Church Announcements.

J. C. Coons, Pastor.

St. Joe:—Sunday School, 9:00 a.

A special program has been arranged for Temperance Day commencing at 9 o'clock and will be of interest from start to finish. Many surprises will be worked out for this service. Come and see what is on for the day. The church services will be a continuation of the Sunday School without any intermission. We have something good. Come.

m. Christian Endeavor, 6:30 p. m. Prayer meeting Thursday evening 7:30.

Concord:—Sunday School, 9:00 a. m.

Children's Day Exercises 7:30 p. m.

Fairview:—Sunday School, 9:00 a. m.; Preaching Services, 2 p. m.

Christian Church Announcements.

St. Joe:—Bible School at 9 a. m.; Morning Worship, 10:15 a. m.; Christian Endeavor, 6:30 p. m.

Lutheran Church Announcements.

A. K. Mumma, Pastor.

St. Joe:-Sunday School, 9:00 a. m.; Christian Endeavor, 6:30 p. m. Preaching services 7:30 p. m.; Prayer Meeting, Thursday evening.

Changed Time

Last Sunday the B & O. change o' schedule of passenger trains stopping at St. Joe, went into effect and is as follows:

West
No. 11—10:38 A. M.
No. 3— 9:05 P. M.
East
No. 12— 4:54 A. M.
No. 4—10:18 A. M.
No. 6—10:00 P. M.

It would be well for you to cut this out and save it as it may save you from missing the train.

◆

Many People Poisoned

We often wonder why so few people live out their allotted time, while a small per cent live beyond that mark. Scores of people meet death each year because of a slow process of poisoning that is going on within their bodies. This poisoning is caused by the glands of the body failing to perform their proper function. Poisonous matter accumulates within the system, and health declines. The unsightly liver splotches, billiousness, headachs, dizziness bad taste in the mouth, a pain in the back or under the shoulder blade, a tired or achey feeling, are some of the most common evidences of this poisoning. If this poison is not eliminated and the cause removed, the resisting power is finally gone and life pays the penalty. Are you of the heedless class or are you safeguarding your health? GLANDO is what you need to restore glandular activity, and expel the poisons. Keep on the safe side and e a reliable remedy. Accept none but ANDO, give it a fair trial.

our druggist hasn't got it, have him for you, or send to the Gland-Aid Wayne, Ind.

Local Briefs

Read the Free Column.

Subscribe for this paper.

B. V. Widney and wife were at Ft. Wayne yesterday.

See that new McCormick mower at Curie's before you buy.

Agnes Sechler, Audrey Coburn and Harry Kinsey left St. Joe, Monday for Angola, where they will attend college.

On last Sunday evening, Dr. J. M. Life, of Auburn, delivered his lecture "Who Built the House that Jack Built"? or "Master Builders and Wonder Workers", at the M. P. Church. The lecture was free and a large congregation heard him. Some special music was rendered for the occasion by a quartet composed of H. M. Widney, Chas Koch, Mrs. Hattie Widney and Mrs. Lora Leighty. All who heard the lecture was well pleased, and it proved a real treat for the people of St. Joe to have a man of the calibre of Mr. Life in their midst and talk concerning the great subject which he discussed. It was a plain and practicel message, delivered in a clear and forceful manner and needful for the times. It was a strong argument for the existence of God and against the theory of materialistic evolution.

A fine line of summer ready made wearables for Women and Children. Schloss' of Auburn.

Monday afternoon, Jesse Coons was bit in the leg by the John Milliman dog, as he and some boys were passing the Milliman residence. The animal will be muzzled to prevent further accidents.

R. J. Murtland, wife and daughter, of Connelsville, Pa., arrived in St. Joe, Tuesday, to be the guests of W. E. Peterson and wife. Their arrival was a great surprise as they did not know that they were in the country.

Call on Ten Eyck & Son at Auburn, Indiana, for early and late tomato, sweet potato, cabbage, bedding plants, geraniums, cannas and coleus plants. Excellent lot to select from. Prices reasonable and good plants guaranteed.

Ker Bang! What was that explosion Monday night? Oh, that was John Betz trying to move the Overland storage building. John got in at the front door all right, but the blamed thing would not stop when he said Whoa! He knocked some of the siding loose too and that bumper was badly crippled. That all goes in driving autos. Monday must have been a Jonah for Overlands. Mrs. S. W. Tustison couldn't stop her machine either by talking to it—Well it bumped into another car but no damage was done.

PRODUCTION AND USES OF 'SPUDS' DISCUSSED

DR. HORTON, IN ADDRESS BEFORE MARKETING CONFERENCE, CLASSES IGNORANCE AND MARKETING AS CHIEF OBSTACLES TO PROFITS.

"Ignorance of production and economic uses is the great obstacle to potato growing. Another serious obstacle is the defective marketing system, which is not elastic enough to handle a big crop without demoralization," said Dr. H. E. Horton, agricultural commissioner, American Steel and Wire company, at the marketing conference in Chicago recently. "As far as production is concerned, the drawbacks can be eliminated. The intelligent use of fertilizers will increase the yields and plant selection will raise the quality."

Doctor Horton pointed out the many industrial uses of potatoes which are just being started in the United States, but which are developed in Germany to a high degre. Potato flakes, potato flour and dried potato preparations for food are being used extensively by the European armies.

"There is a common error prevalent that fertilizers are not needed on richest soils. From a wide study of soils and close observations over a number of years, I have never seen anything that would justify that conclusion. Experiments show the opposite, that the richest soils respond quickest to application of available plant food," added Doctor Horton, in his address.

Well-Fed Plants Best Growers.

Make a plant healthy and strong and you increase its powers to withstand unfavorable conditions of weather and insect pests. A well-fed plant is able to heal up injuries rapidly, and to make the necessary growth for maturity within the growing season. Experiments have also been reported that show that certain classes of insects prefer the withered stalks and leaves of plants that are poorly nourished because the sap is concentrated.

DEAN VIVIAN EXPLAINS HOW TO BUILD UP SOIL

HEAD OF OHIO AGRICULTURAL COLLEGE GIVES ESSENTIALS FOR SUCCESS IN DAIRYING, MIXED FARMING AND GARDENING OPERATIONS.

"There is no style of farming which we can hope to carry on indefinitely without the use of some kind of fertilizer."

"In dairy farming, when a large quantity of concentrates are purchased, it seems possible to return all the plant food removed from the soil through the manure. But in so doing we overstock the soil with nitrogen and need acid phosphate to balance it to get best results in grain production."

"In mixed farming, where about half of the grain is sold and the other half of the grain, with the hay and fodder is fed on the farm, it might be possible to maintain a fair yield by the purchase of acid phosphate alone, but the highest returns from the farm demand the use of a complete fertilizer on the wheat at least."

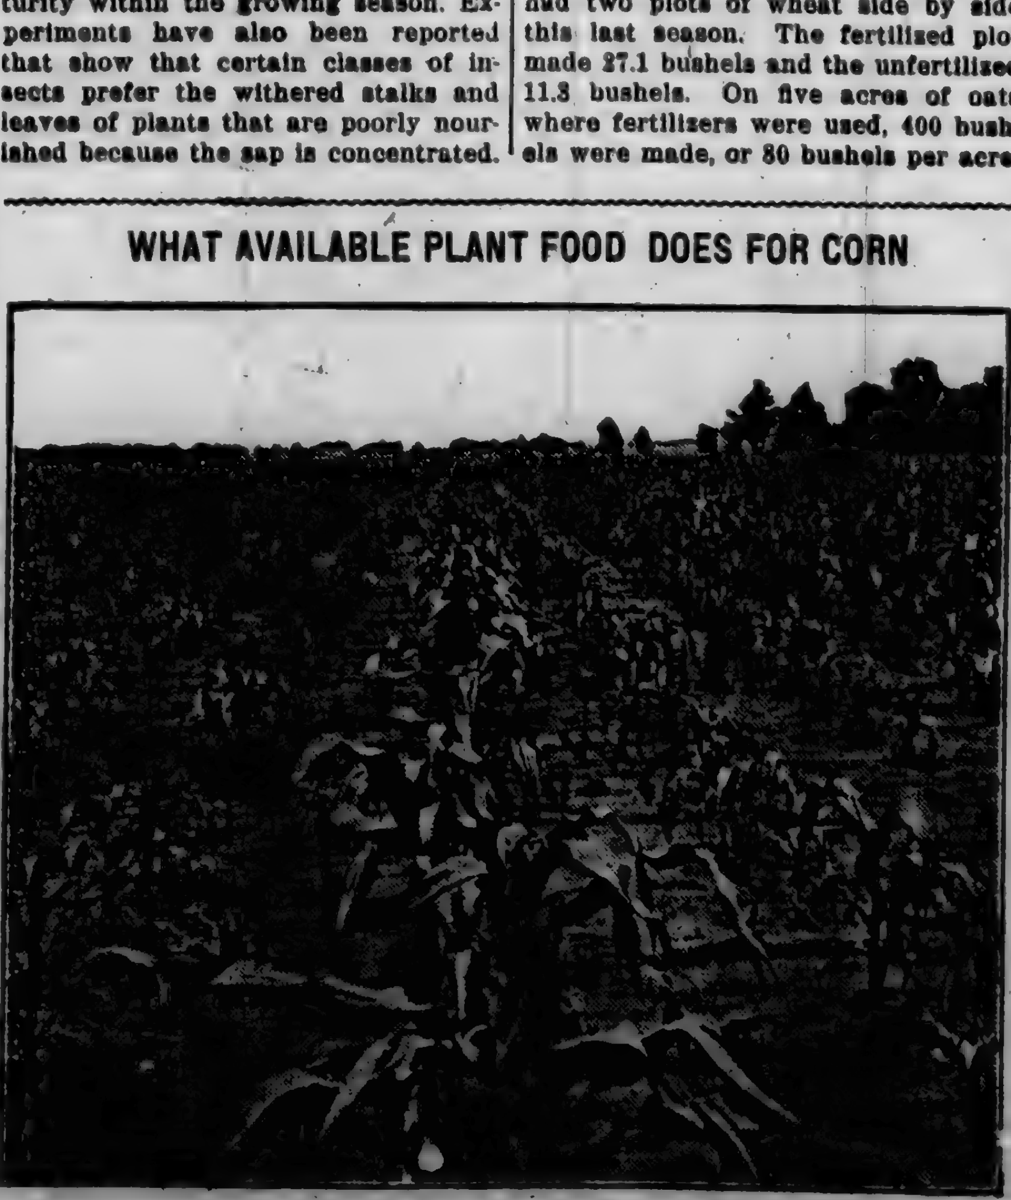
"Any type of farming or gardening where the entire product is sold off the farm demands a liberal use of commercial fertilizer."

Dean Alfred Vivian of the College of Agriculture, Ohio State university, brought out the above five points in a lecture to the institute speakers of Ohio recently. He explained that he was not advocating any new doctrines, but that his statements were old truths dressed up in new clothes.

County Agent Reports Results.

County Agent Harry Gray of Wells county, Indiana, states that one of his members has made a good demonstration of fertilizing wheat and oats. He had two plots of wheat side by side this last season. The fertilized plot made 27.1 bushels and the unfertilized 11.3 bushels. On five acres of oats where fertilizers were used, 400 bushels were made, or 80 bushels per acre.

WHAT AVAILABLE PLANT FOOD DOES FOR CORN



Photograph Shows Striking Difference Between Fertilized and Unfertilized Corn in the Same Field. The Fertilized Row Matured and Yielded a Big Crop of High Quality. The Unfertilized Rows Were Caught by Frost and Yielded "Soft Corn."

A Friend in Need.

When Glando Gargle is used for a cold in the head it is surprising to see how quickly the clogged nostrils are opened. Adenoids are caused by a neglected cold. If the mucus which forms is allowed to remain in the nostrils, a diseased condition will result, which causes chronic catarrh and adenoids. Glando Gargle was prepared to meet these special needs. Equally effective for sore mouth or sore throat. Price 50 cents. For sale by All Druggists.

HEARD AROUND THE CORNER

Order Saturday Evening Post, 5c.

Schloss' of Auburn are showing a fine line of Summer Dress Materials.

Mrs. Bernard is at Wayne, this week, the guest of friends and attending the Centennial.

Henry Dehner and wife, of Decatur, were guests in the Frank Scholes home, last Sunday.

Jesse Loftus and family, of Pleasant Lake, were over Sunday guests of Geo. Bleeks and family.

Chas. Bishop and family, of Garrett, are spending their vacation here the guests of his mother.

McClellan Hart and wife, of east of Spencerville, were callers Sunday afternoon in the F. P. Hart home.

Lloyd Miller has purchased the Meek restaurant and has taken possession. Lessie will continue to look after the barber work

The W. C. T. U. will not meet on June 9 on account of the Centennial at Wayne, but will meet the last Friday of the month instead.

Edgar Huffman, of Wayne, and Lew Ellingham, former secretary of State, have purchased the Journal-Gazette and will assume control at once.

Mr. Worth, general manager of the I H C. of Wayne, brought Wm. Curie home from the St. Joseph hospital, last Friday forenoon. He is feeling good and expects to be able to walk to his store today.

Genuine Lamp Pocahontas $4.00 ton from car. Will have 2 cars about June 10, it is nearly all sold but if you place your order quick we can supply you also. We have seveval cars of West Virginia Lump White Ash coming along in July for $3.25.

St. JOE MILLS.

The first application of road oil was applied to our streets Monday afternoon. Saturday the roads were prepared for oiling and the rain Sunday made them in fine shape for the reception of oil.

Special program at the M. P. Sunday School, next Sunday morning at 9 o'clock. If you are not in school anywhere else come over, you will be well paid for your time. Many surprises awaits the audience. Come at 9, and get the whole program.

The electric bells at the B. & O, crossings will be completed the last of the week, so as to be in operation. The warning will thus eliminate the company's responsibilities in the way of accidents and should be carefully observed by the travelers.

The Moody Bible Institute of Chicago has received a diploma and bronze medal of award by the Panama-Pacific International Exposition, for its exhibit of Religious Education showing the scope and activities of its work. The same exhibit is now being made in many of the principal cities of the country under the auspices of the Travelling Exhibit of National Religious Forces, G. B. St. John, Director.

Painting is all the go in St. Joe at the present time The Bowman residence, Jacob Sechler, S. B. Bernard, Frank Terman, 2 houses; Frank Sechler and the Elevators, are taking on new colors some of which are nearly completed while others are just being commenced.

BEGIN HOT WATER DRINKING IF YOU DON'T FEEL RIGHT

Says glass of hot water with phosphate before breakfast washes out poisons.

If you wake up with a bad taste, bad breath and tongue is coated; if your head is dull or aching; if what you eat sours and forms gas and acid in stomach, or you are bilious, constipated, nervous, sallow and can't get feeling just right, begin inside bathing. Drink before breakfast, a glass of real hot water with a teaspoonful of limestone phosphate in it. This will flush the poisons and toxins from stomach, liver, kidneys and bowels and cleanse, sweeten and purify the entire alimentary tract. Do your inside bathing immediately upon arising in the morning to wash out of the system all the previous day's poisonous waste, gases and sour bile before putting more food into the stomach.

To feel like young folks feel; like you felt before your blood, nerves and muscles became loaded with body impurities, get from your pharmacist a quarter pound of limestone phosphate which is inexpensive and almost tasteless, except for a sourish twinge which is not unpleasant.

Just as soap and hot water act on the skin, cleansing, sweetening and freshening, so hot water and limestone phosphate act on the stomach, liver, kidneys and bowels. Men and women who are usually constipated, bilious, headachy or have any stomach disorder should begin this inside bathing before breakfast. They are assured they will become real cranks on the subject shortly.

LADIES! LOOK YOUNG, DARKEN GRAY HAIR

Use the Old-time Sage Tea and Sulphur and Nobody will Know.

Gray hair, however handsome, denotes advancing age. We all know the advantages of a youthful appearance. Your hair is your charm. It makes or mars the face. When it fades, turns gray and looks streaked, just a few applications of Sage Tea and Sulphur enhances its appearance a hundred-fold.

Don't stay gray! Look young! Either prepare the recipe at home or get from any drug store a 50-cent bottle of "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound," which is merely the old-time recipe improved by the addition of other ingredients. Thousands of folks recommend this ready-to-use preparation, because it darkens the hair beautifully, besides no one can possibly tell, as it darkens so naturally and evenly. You moisten a sponge or soft brush with it, drawing this through the hair, taking one small strand at a time. By morning the gray hair disappears; after another application or two, its natural color is restored and it becomes thick, glossy and lustrous, and you appear years younger.

Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound is a delightful toilet requisite. It is not intended for the cure, mitigation or prevention of disease.

LESS MEAT IF BACK AND KIDNEYS HURT

Take a glass of Salts to flush Kidneys if Bladder bothers you—Drink lots of water.

Eating meat regularly eventually produces kidney trouble in some form or other, says a well-known authority, because the uric acid in meat excites the kidneys, they become overworked; get sluggish; clog up and cause all sorts of distress, particularly backache and misery in the kidney region; rheumatic twinges, severe headaches, acid stomach, constipation, torpid liver, sleeplessness, bladder and urinary irritation.

The moment your back hurts or kidneys aren't acting right, or if bladder bothers you, get about four ounces of Jad Salts from any good pharmacy; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys will then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to flush clogged kidneys and stimulate them to normal activity; also to neutralize the acids in the urine so it no longer irritates, thus ending bladder disorders.

Jad Salts cannot injure anyone; makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink which millions of men and women take now and then to keep the kidneys and urinary organs clean, thus avoiding serious kidney disease.

A Summer Cough.

When a cough continues into warm weather, you can feel sure there is a chronic inflammation, which if neglected will develop into serious lung trouble. The best time to doctor a chronic cough is during the warm weather. An external inflammation always receives prompt attention because the condition can be seen, but an inflamation of the delicate mucus surface of the throat and lungs is much more serious. This condition furnishes fertile soil for the developing of the tubercular germ. Be wise and get rid of that cough before cold weather. GLANDO PINE is especially good for summer coughs. Accept no substitute. Use GLANDO PINE and get results. For sale by All Druggists.

JUNE

L 908

0179

BETTER SERVICE TO YOU.

We don't want you to think of the Farmers and Merchants State Bank just as a place to deposit your money, although of course we are glad to have you keep as large a balance with us as is possible.

It is our desire to render our patrons every service and accommodation that can reasonably be expected to us.

Our Bookkeeping Machine, makes it possible for us to give you better service in the handling of your account than ever before.

By the machine method, your account is kept in balance all the time. If, as sometimes happens, you want a statement of your balance in a hurry, we can give it to you, including to-days checks and deposits, in less than five minutes.

Farmers & Merchants State Bank

Capital Stock $25,000.00

Spencerville, - - - Indiana

SPENCERVILLE

A $5 Vacuum and Sweeper for $3.95 at Beams & Co., store.

The Ladies Guild of the M. E Church will meet at the church, this afternoon (Thursday) in a business meeting

On Saturday evening a number of girls surprised Miss Cleo Bowser to remind her of her 11th. birthday. Those present were the Misses Minnie Wilmot Nellie Scott, Marjorie Hallabaugh, Leatha Baker and Vivian Quasinberry.

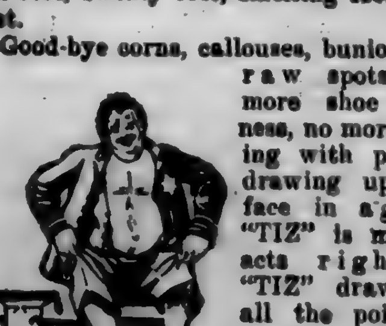
Joel Betz took very sick last week, and on calling Dr. Hull, of Hicksville, he was found to be suffering from Brights' Disease. Among those that visited at the home Sunday, were:-John Betz and family, of St. Joe; Geo. Horn and wife, and Mrs. Ethel Bowser.

R. U. Bowser and Harvey Beam erected lightning rods and spouting on the residence of John Timmerman, last week. Mr. Timmerman has remodeled and built an addition to his house.

..Transfer paper at NEWS office, 2 sheets for 5c. Get some now for that pattern you wish to transfer

The Quarterly Meeting of the M. E. Church will be held here next Sunday evening. The new district superintendent, Rev, W. W. Martin, of Ft. Wayne, will preach and administer the sacrament of the Lord's supper. A special song service will begin at 7:30 p. m., by the choir and young people. The Quarterly Conference will convene on Monday at 10 a. m.

The True Blue Class of young ladies met last week and reorganized with Mrs. Daisy Carnaham as teacher; Miss Mary Tyndall, president; LaVern Rhodes, Secretary and Treasurer. Social Committee—Alein Rhodes, Julia Baker and Ailleen Allen. Welcome Committee—May Barton and Nellie Kelley.



"TIZ" FOR ACHING, SORE, TIRED FEET

Good-bye sore feet, burning feet, swollen feet, sweaty feet, smelling feet, tired feet.

Good-bye corns, callouses, bunions and raw spots. No more shoe tightness, no more limping with pain or drawing up your face in agony. "TIZ" is magical, acts right off. "TIZ" draws out all the poisonous exudations which puff up the feet. Use "TIZ" and forget your foot misery. Ah! how comfortable your feet feel. Get a 25 cent box of "TIZ" now at any druggist or department store. Don't suffer. Have good feet, glad feet, feet that never swell, never hurt, never get tired. A year's foot comfort guaranteed or money refunded.

On Friday the Rayo Class of the M. E. Sunday School met in an all day meeting at the home of their teacher, Mrs. Melvin Howey, west of town. Fourteen ladies and 8 children were present to enjoy the occasion.

Miss Mary Tyndall was a Saturday evening supper guest of Miss Fanny Vallieu.

Edward Dix and family, Mrs. Hardesty, and Mrs. John McNabb and children were Saturday evening guests of J. C. Vallieu and family.

Miss LeAnne Wearley, who has been visiting at Akron, Ohio, the past week, returned home Monday.

Bert Beerbower is the owner of a new Overland six.

Mrs. E E. Provines and son, John Provines and wife, of Covington, are visiting the former's daughter, Mrs. Ella Fischer and family, of Pleasant Lake.

Eleven room house on West Main St., for sale or rent. Other well located residence properties and vacant lots for sale on easy terms. S. S. WIDNEY.

Baltzer Koontz and wife entertained Sunday:-Nan Phillips and wife, and Mrs. Wm. Wise, of Auburn; Ett Walker, wife and daughter Grace, of Hicksville; William Smith and wife, of St. Joe. Mr. Koontz is much improved at this writing.

New spring oxfords for Ladies, Misses and Children—Just in at Beams & Co., store, in patent leather and gun metal.

Harvey Beam and wife left Sunday morning to spend a few days with friends at Ft. Wayne.

Saul Goldsmith and family were Sunday guests of Joseph Goldsmith and family, of near Hopewell.

John Beninghoff and wife are visiting their daughter, Arthur Heyman and family, of Ft. Wayne, this week.

Mrs. Margaret Koch is moving into her property on Mill St., this week.

Call on Ten Eyck & Son at Auburn, Indiana, for early and late tomato, sweet potato, cabbage, bedding plants, geraniums, cannas and coleus plants. Excellent lot to select from. Prices reasonable and good plants guaranteed.

Nineteen young ladies met and surprised Miss Fanny Vallieu at her home, Saturday afternoon, it being her 15th., birthday. The girls were taken to the restaurant and served ice cream and cake. Those present were the Misses Margarite Thornburg, Mary Pervines, Margaret Lake, Doris and Florence Beams, Lucile, Alein and LaVern Rhodes, Mary Tyndall, Julia Baker, Ailleen Allen, Gaylan Markle, Mary and Ester Henderson, Helen Lake, Mae Barton, Cleo Bowser, Lola Smith and Laura Goings.

Frank Smith and daughters, and Mrs. Linsley, of Ft. Wayne, and Vern Wilmot and family were Sunday guests at the home of Frank House and family.

Chas. Krick and family, of Scipio, Mrs. Henry Markle and Mrs. Amanda Bowman were Sunday guests of David Baughman and family.

Saul Bishop and family spent Sunday with Mrs. Mary Bishop.

Wm. Henderson, wife and son Richard, of Auburn, were over Sunday guests of Jack Henderson and family.

The C C Club will be entertained Saturday afternoon at the home of Miss Ethel Metcalf, south of town.

Amos Fredrick and wife, of Dutch Ridge, spent Sunday with Clyde Fredrick and family.

$2.00 in trade and 98c in cash will give you one of our latest foot stools. Ask for a card.

Beams & Co.

On Thursday evening the C C Club met and surprised one of their members, Miss Pearl Goldsmith. Games were enjoyed. Ice cream and cake was served to 20 members and 6 guests, who were the Misses Lucile, Alein and LaVern Rhodes, and Cleo Bowser, Master William Little and Mrs. Merwood Rhodes.

See new way for lighting country homes. Most wonderful light of 20th. Century. See demonstration all this week at 18 Deen Place, Ft. Wayne, Ind. Take Robison Park car.

Mr. and Mrs. Victor Hilgeman and daughter Helen, Mrs. Hilgeman, Harry Hilgeman and wife, all of Ft. Wayne; and Mrs. Leila Hart were entertained on Decoration Day at the home of the latter's parents, John Horn and wife.

George Hallabaugh and wife, and J. S. Hallabaugh and family visited the former's son, Wm. Hallabaugh and family, of Auburn, Sunday. They also called on Jean Hensil and wife.

50 sheets of writing paper and 25 No. 1 rag envelopes for 10 cents at NEWS office.

John Provines and wife, of Covington, Ind., are visiting the former's mother, Mrs. E. E. Provines, and other relatives, this week.

Archie Beam had a horse choke to death, last week.

Dr. Frank Silberg and Mrs. Nettie Steward were called to Garrett, last week, and two children of Frank Steward were operated on. The little girl, Miss Magdalene, had her tonsils and adnoids removed, and the little boy was operated upon for a rupture. Mrs. Steward remained several days.

See our window for those $2.00 foot stools that we are giving for 98c and $2.00 in trade.

Beams & Co.

The Women's Home and Foreign Missionary Society was entertained on Thursday afternoon at the home Mrs Jacob Baltz. Twenty ladies were present. Mrs. Rolla Moffet, of Auburn, gave a reading, "Starless Crown"; also a reading by Miss Pauline Moffet, and a piano solo by Miss Jessie Moffet; after which the regular lesson was studied.

D. M. Kelley and family received the news Tuesday informing him that his youngest son, Corma Kelley, a foreman with the Burrell Construction and Engineering Co., of Chicago, now located at Mesa, Arizona, was married to Miss Mary Kruse, of Salt Lake City, Utah, May 20, at Phoenix, Arizona. Mr. Kelley has been working for this company for over a year. They have began house-keeping as close neighbors of Edward Cupp and wife, who is employed by the same company. His many friends wish them best success in their married life.

For Rent

6 room house with barn on the lot, will be rented for one year or from month to month to suit tenant. Inquire of F. R. Bowman at the bank.

DENTIST

C. R. PRICE

ST. JOE, IND.

Office: first door south of Patterson's Dept. Store.

[illegible] Phone [illegible]

Frank W. Silberg
Veterinarian

OFFICE and HOSPITAL
—ON—
Main Street
SPENCERVILLE. - IND.

Phones—Office No. 7
(18) Residence No. 101

Dr. H. R. Farnham
MEDICINE AND GENERAL SURGERY
ST. JOE, INDIANA

Office Hours—Week Day
10:00 to 11:00 a. m.
1:00 to 3:00 p. m.
6:30 to 8:00 p. m.
Sunday—By appointment.
Telephone
Office,...............No. 2

Office at Residence, Second house west of Widney Opera House.

H. C. Hathaway

TRUSTEE
Concord Township

Office Day, Thursday's of Each week in Town Hall, St. Joe.

COLETOWN

Mrs. Clara Hartle, of Hicksville, and Miss Connie Hartle, of Fort Wayne, were callers at Lester Piermans', Thursday.

Mrs. W. E. Jackson and daughter Olive, spent Thursday afternoon at Charley Coughanours'.

Fred Martin and family Sundayed at W. E. Martins'.

Mabel Bair of Angola, came home with Gladys Conine, Thursday, for a short visit.

Miss Batha Hart, of Lynn Haven, Florida, is visiting with Henry Kling and wife.

W. E. Jackson and family spent Wednesday evening with Edwin Guthrie and wife.

Alvin Walker and family and Mrs. G. W. Palmer spent Sunday with Henry Kling and wife.

Elton Brown and wife, Mrs. F. Brown and Mrs. Edwin Guthrie spent Sunday at Decatur.

Herman Miller, of Ft. Wayne, visited over Sunday with his parents, A. E. Miller and wife.

PRESIDENTIAL POINTERS

In the first four elections for president each elector voted for two candidates, the one receiving the largest number of votes was declared president and the one who received the next largest number of votes was declared vice president. At the election of 1804 a president and vice president were voted for separately and an amendment to the Constitution provided that the president and vice president could not be elected from the same state. To insure an election a candidate for president or vice president must have a majority of all the electoral votes cast, otherwise the election for president would be thrown into the house of representatives by states, each state having one vote, and for vice president into the senate.

Notice.

The book accounts of James Fisher have been left with S. S. Widney for collection Please call and settle promptly.

NEWVILLE

Miss Florence Clark, of Hicksville, was the guest of Mrs. John Miller, Thursday.

Dale McNabb was home from Toledo over Sunday.

A. I. Richmond and Donald Ayers are working on a farm near Hicksville.

J. Glen Miller and family, of Auburn, were the guests of Orlan Hatch and wife, last Tuesday night.

Mrs. Lilly Engle and son Marcelle, of Auburn, and Mrs. Inez Omo, of Harlan, spent Decoration Day with friends in Newville.

We carry a full line of Dr. Flecks Poultry and Stock Tonic, Louse Spray and Powder, Salmedico, Oil Meal, Chick Feed, Beef Scrap, and Tankage. In fact we carry most everything along this line. Our Chick Feed at $2 Hundred is guaranteed. It contains Corn, Kaffir, Millet, Wheat and Charcoal. Why pay more. St. Joe Mills.

Mrs. Minnie Fales and 2 children, of Peoria, Ill., are here visiting relatives.

Mrs. Crum is visiting her sister, Mrs John Deardorff of Hicksville, at this time.

Mesdames Ollie Smith and Belle Miller were guests of Omo Richmond and wife, of Hicksville, last Wednesday.

Kate Richards was a Hicksville visitor, last Wednesday.

Mrs. Belle Crum and daughter, Miss Minnie Hensinger, of Chicago, spent a few days this week with Mrs. Jane Crum.

Stanley Tryon visited friends here last week.

Mrs. Wm. Scoville has bought property in Newville and expects to make it her future home. She purchased the Maggie Nicholas property.

Henry Webster had an attack of heart trouble, Thursday.

John Washler took Elsworth Traxler and wife, and Hugh Traxler, to Ft. Wayne in his machine, Thursday.

The young peoples Sunday School Class met at the S Kain home Friday evening. About 50 were present, and all report a good time.

The Newville Township Commencement will be held on the evening of June 20th.

Mrs. Keesey was the Sunday guest of Mrs. John Miller and family.

A temperance meeting will be held next Sunday afternoon at 2 o'clock on the streets. Rev. J. T. Keesey of Newville, and Elder Strowbridge, of Waterloo, will each give a talk, good singing and speaking will be the program.

Tom Williams and wife, and Will Burkett and wife, of Grover Hill, Ohio, motored to Newville, Sunday, and were guests of Wm. Miller and wife.

Donna Bice was the Sunday guest of Dewey and Byron Miller.

Decoration Day was observed here in a very appropriate manner. The soldiers ranks are growing thinner each year, but those who remain are still proud of the fact that they were soldiers, and entitled to march under the Stars and Stripes. Rev. Keesey made a fine address. The veterans led the march, and the children decorated the graves of the fallen comrades. Mr. George DeLong, who so recently answered to his last roll call, was sadly missed by his comrades, his friends and family on Memorial Day.

Try the Little Wizzard Washing
Compound
and thus save labor. Washes clothes without rubbing, will not injure the most delicate fabrics, and contains nothing that will harm the hands. This compound is being used by the Ladies of St. Joe and is found very helpful. You can get it at Leighty's Grocery
Regular Price, 15c. —24

$100 Reward, $100

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials.

Address: F. J. CHENEY & CO., Toledo, O.
Sold by all Druggists, 75c.
Take Hall's Family Pills for constipation.

P. A. Walker
Trustee
Spencer Township

OFFICE DAY—
Tuesday of each week at the residence ¾ mile east of the Dills River Bridge.
Phone—St. Joe, 21-6
Spencerville, - Indiana

F. P. HART
"The Expert"
House Mover
—AND—
Building Raiser

Concrete Work of all kinds finished in the best shape with the least expense.

Call or write

Oldest in America Strongest in the World
Mutual life
INSURANCE COMPANY of New York
J. C. HULL, Agent
Phone No. [illegible]

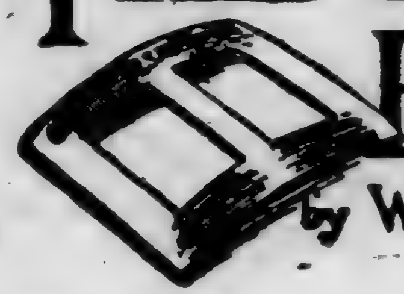
Lehman's CLOTHING HOUSE
ESTABLISHED 1887
MENS AND BOYS OUTFITTERS
808-810 CALHOUN STREET
BEN LEHMAN PROP
Fort Wayne, Ind.

JUNE

L 908

0180

THE BLUE BUCKLE



by William Hamilton Osborne

CHAPTER XXIV.

The Secret of the Big White Room

The three men went down the steps, out of the door and approached the big limousine of the banker, still standing waiting, about half-way down the block.

"Will you give instructions or shall I?" asked Crowder in a low tone.

His words seemed to release Helderman from his thrall of tortured silence.

"Dolt! Idiot! Fool!" he screamed.

Out of the semi-gloom a beautiful face, contorted to a mask of hate, mocked at him from the balcony. It was Irene Arany, taking a cruel revenge for Helderman's change of heart.

"An accomplice of yours, I believe, Helderman!" observed Crowder dryly.

"Yes, she has turned the trick on him for some of his duplicity, with a vengeance!" added Craig.

It was true. Irene looked down on the man she had loved, and whose schemes she had shared, with no shadow of uncertainty in her face. The look of hate bore with it a gleam of satisfaction.

"So you were through with me—quite!" she scoffed. "I was merely a useful tool, like Sophie! Well, I wasn't through with you—yet! I told you once your smuggled diamonds were not safe. I show you now that you were never safe—never safe from me."

And the cruel show of him upon the wall never ceased, nor was interrupted for an instant. Steadily she kept the betraying picture at its fiendish task. Now the simulated Helderman walked — apparently — to the window — but actually upon the bare wall—and looked out. Now it lighted a cigar. Now it sat down and crossed its legs. Now it packed up and down the wall with many a shrug and grimace that its counterpart had assiduously cultivated, for just such a purpose as this!

Helderman, the real, swore until he was out of breath.

"There's where your picture man falls short," commented Crowder, quizzically. "You should have had him trained to swear too! Edison could have fixed you up!"

Enraged and humiliated beyond endurance, Helderman flung his manacled hands wildly around, seeking to do this jeering detective bodily harm. Crowder quickly eluded him, and took advantage of his move to land him in one of the spindle-legged chairs.

He had scarcely touched it when it began its part in the embarrassing revelations. It began to move, with a sliding noise, toward a corner of the room. Its fellows moved also, and the table in the center of the room, as if not wishing to be left behind, accompanied them on the queer journey. Actuated by concealed panels and levers in the floor, they steadily proceeded until they had all taken inconspicuous places along the wall—leaving the stage cleared for the action of the moving picture.

"That's what happened when the lights were off. That's what made the noise!" exclaimed Craig.

"You're a wonder, Helderman!" said Crowder, with genuine admiration. "But wou've over-reached yourself. You wanted the Ballantyne money—heaven only knows when or how you got on the Ballantyne trail—and the Braine money, and the smuggling money, and any money you could lay your hands on, to keep you going; to pull you out of the big hole your last enterprise got you into."

"What enterprise?" asked Rutherford, when Helderman did not deign to reply.

"A colossal moving picture trust. He'd have made it go, too, if we hadn't stopped his little game. But it would have been a tight squeeze, for even a real multi-millionaire. His company had bought up hundreds of shows, and had been running them at a tremendous loss, so far; but he'd have won out in the end, if"—

Crowder did not think it necessary to complete his sentence. Irene Arany laughed—a horrible, mirthless sound, which caused all three of the men to start.

"Chromatic films—nature color process developed to the highest degree—that flickering fire which took up the flicker of the camera; hidden, automatic machinery to move the real furniture out of the way of its counterpart presentment—the black white wall for the moving picture screen—the Great Danes to keep the onlookers from getting too close to the windows—to keep them at the theatrical distance—there was another stroke of genius, to keep us all at the dramatic—the theatrical distance, so we couldn't get too close to tell—it is the mark of true genius, Helderman, but genius turned to crooked ends!" said Craig, as at last the picture faded, leaving the exapnse of white wall bare and innocent of shadow.

Again the woman laughed, and the sound seemed to rouse the betrayed man to superhuman effort. As he had sat there in the shadows his powerful arms had worked silently and irrestibly against their bonds. Now he flung them wide, and the handcuffs fell to the floor with a clang. Before the secret service man could recover his balance from the sudden shove [illegible]eceived Helderman was at the door.

Craig sprang at him as though he were on the football field and tackled low. An instant Helderman writhed to break himself loose, then—

"The dogs! Loose the dogs!" he yelled.

Rutherford felt his flesh grow cold. He knew that nothing human could withstand the combined attack of those two half-starved beasts urged on by their master.

There was a rattling of chains, and the next moment a gaunt, lithe form hurried over the heads of the two struggling men on the floor. A second followed and landed with heavy impact in the middle of the great white room. The two beasts paused a moment, with droping heads, growled inquiringly as though seeking a victim; then they saw Craig clinging to their master, and with a roar they charged upon him.

"Shoot! Shoot! They will kill him!" cried Irene Arany, her voice raised to a shrill shriek of horror.

Just as Craig felt the hot breath of the nearest of the brutes, he gave a sudden upward heave of his arms, still tackling Helderman below the waist, and threw his opponent between himself and their attack. The beasts circled, seeking for an opening.

"Kill them!" besought the girl in the balcony.

Crowder had stood with revolver raised, but still dared not shoot, for fear of hitting Rutherford. He lifted the weapon and fired into the wall.

The dogs whirled at the sound and started toward the new assailant. Craig released his hold and clutched Helderman around the throat.

"Call off your dogs or I'll choke you!" he shouted.

His voice distracted one of the brutes. It turned on him again and tore his coat half off him at the first vicious snap of his jaws. Again he barely saved himself by swinging the banker between himself and the dog.

Crowder also had sprung behind the swaying figures for protection from the other brute. Now he was close to Helderman, and he pointed the revolver, not at the dog, but at the man.

"Speak to them!" he commanded tersely. "Speak!—or, by heaven, I shoot to kill!"

Helderman knew the tone and obeyed.

"Down, Satan! Down, Lucifer!" he cried.

A strange thing happened. The familiar voice stopped them; something in it seemed to hold them still—for a second—then they turned simultaneously and with howls of exultant rage leaped straight at the man they had once cringed before. For now they detected a tone of fear in his words of command. Helderman was no longer their master, and they meant to make him pay dearly for all the hardships they had endured at his hands.

Craig saw them coming and darted to one side. Helderman gave a hoarse cry of despair. The dogs were upon him.

Crowder raised his weapon again. He could do no worse than the beasts would do, if he did not interfere. He fired, and Lucifer rolled over, pierced through the heart. The pistol barked again. Satan turned with a scream of rage and pain and dashed at his throat. A shot caught the dog between the eyes.

Helderman, shaking with a chill of horror, sank back against the wall. There was no arrogant, triumphant financier. Craig saw his weakness and instantly took advantage of it.

"I'll trouble you for those papers of Miss Ballantyne's," he said, extending his hands authoritatively.

Without a word Helderman drew the envelope from his pocket and handed it over. Craig glanced hurriedly inside it to satisfy himself. He did not trust Helderman, even now, but his precaution was unnecessary. Helderman was beaten. He could fight no more.

"Come!" said Crowder, touching the man on the arm, and again presenting the handcuffs, "the curtain has been rung down upon the moving picture trust. There will be no more free shows up on the Drive to keep some of us awake of nights!"

* * * * * *

It was somewhat late in the evening for a call; but Craig Rutherford went up the steps of the West Tenth street house with the assurance of a victor. She was waiting for him.

"How can I ever thank you enough for all you have done?" she asked, timidly.

"Why, don't try to, little girl!" he said, his eyes shining as he looked down into her sweet, upturned face. "Besides, I don't want—just thanks! I want you to like me better."

"Like you! Like you! Like you, Craig! Why, you obstinate, perverse, misunderstanding man! I love you—I always have loved you from away back in some other incarnation! Don't you realize it—yet? There! ——— Do you, now?"

(THE END.)

When two men are talking, each tries to work in his hobby first, so as to head the other off.

Creeks' Medicine Man.

The medicine man of the Creeks will not eat anything scorched in cooking; in treating a gun or arrow shot wound he as well as the patient will fast four days, only drinking a little gruel, says the Indian Journal.

He will not allow a woman to look at his patient until he is well or dead. If his patient dies the medicine man takes a lot of medicine himself in order to cleanse himself from the fumes or odor of the dead. The pallbearers, as we might call those assisting in the burial, also take the same cleansing process.

And again when an Indian committed murder, even in self-defence, he went to the medicine man and took the cleansing remedy, claiming the remedy appeased the crime and the trouble to his mind. The medicine man has a horror of women, keeping out of their company as much as possible. At the full of each moon it was the custom of the bucks to drink medicine made by the medicine man to cleanse their system. In camp the Indian killed nothing which was not eatable.

Salsify for Winter Crop.

Salsify is like parsnip in one respect. It is improved by freezing. The roots intended for winter use should be left out as long as is safe, then stored in sand in the cellar. There is quite a difference between the roots that have been tempered by the frost and those that have not been. Those wanted for spring use are usually left out all winter. Another way of treating the roots is to cords them up in small piles on the ground and cover slightly. The roots will keep moist and freeze and thaw with the weather. If the pile is covered with straw or matting on the approach of severe cold weather, it will be accessible during the winter. Parsnips may be kept in a similar manner and are much improved in quality by holding them until spring.—Field and Farm.

Literally Broken.

No man ever dies of a broken heart in his love affairs, according to both Shakespeare and Thackeray; the heart, however, does physically break, either from sudden shock or from overstrain. A captain on a vessel who had set out to marry a lady, on reaching his destination was abruptly informed that she had married, and the man fell to the ground and expired. The heart was discovered to be literally rent into two pieces. Again, an instance is on record of a boy, very strong and healthy, who, in attempting to raise a sheaf of corn, fell dead in the effort. In this instance the post mortem disclosed a large rent in the blood upon the left ventricle, which is the hardest worked portion of the heart and where the rupture generally takes place, forces the tissues asunder.

Only an Electric Shock.

Everybody has experienced the queer little shiver that comes upon one now and then without apparent cause. It is generally put down as "some one walking over my grave." Actually we are told it is the effect of electricity. This great power is constantly being generated everywhere, and when the positive and negative parts of the power meet, they produce a shock on any living thing. There is a good deal of electricity in the air, and when the human body is made a meeting point the sensation is liable to be felt about the region of the spine. Some people are liable to shocks now and then in special parts of them, in the ankle for instance, or very commonly around the base of the brain. There is no harm in it but it shows a rather highly-strung organization.

Senses of Reptiles.

An Austrian doctor has lately published the results of his observations upon the special senses of animals, especially upon the sense of reptiles. He concludes that these are capable of going directly towards water, which appears to attract them, even at long distances. Light acts upon them independently of heat. Their sight is generally good, and is probably their most acute sense, yet their vision is limited. Crocodiles cannot distinguish a man at distances above ten times their length. Fish see for only short distances. The vision of serpents is poor, the boa constrictor, for example, can see no further than one-third of its own length. Some snakes see no further than one-eighth of their own length. Frogs are better endowed and see twenty times their length.

Performing Lions.

It is often supposed that lions are drugged or surfeited with food prior to going through their performances, though both suggestions are wide of the mark. Drugs are unknown, and from ten to fourteen pounds of food are given once a day.

Large Sale of Razors.

A Sheffield (England) writer, in commenting on the desirability of the American market for razors, declares that more razors are bought in America for each man than in any country of the world.

Thinking One's Self Old.

If at 30 you expect to be an old man or woman, at 55 you will be one, because the mind makes the material correspondence of whatever it sets itself permanently upon.—Health Record.

It takes some politicians about two hours to inform an interviewer that they have nothing to say.

PEOPLE WHO CANNOT WALK.

A Tribe Incapable of Locomotion Discovered in New Guinea.

The administrator of New Guinea has recently reported that a tribe has been found which is virtually incapable of walking, says Leslie's Weekly. These people inhabit a marshy district which is too soft to walk in and too solid to allow of navigation in a canoe. Locomotion of any kind is thus impossible, and they have become a purely sedentary race, leading a stationary existence in the dwellings, which they have built in the trees just above the level of the swamps. It would be natural to expect, under these circumstances, that they would gradually lose the use of the limbs and muscles employed in walking. This result has actually come about. They cannot perambulate on hard ground without causing their feet to bleed with the unusual exercise. Their extremities have shrunk, while the trunk has become bloated. The effect would be to produce a certain resemblance to the figure and gait of apes, but whether the similarity is based on real physical identities is another question.

Clock to Run About 30,000 Years.

A radium clock, which will keep time indefinitely, has been constructed by Harrison Martindale, of England.

The clock comprises a small tube in which is placed a minute quantity of radium supported in an exhausted glass vessel by a quartz rod. To the lower end of the tube, which is colored, an electroscope formed of two long leaves or strips of silver is attached.

A charge of electricity in which there are no beta rays is transmitted through the activity of the radium into the leaves, and the latter thereby expand until they touch the sides of the vessel, connected to earth by wires, which instantly conduct the electric charge, and the leaves fall together.

This simple operation is repeated incessantly every two minutes until the radium is exhausted, which in this instance it is computed will occupy 30,000 years.

The Vastness of London.

There are about 6,000 miles of railway in Greater London, and it is estimated that something like 600,000,000 separate journeys are made by passengers annually. The number of journeys on an average week day is over 1,500,000. An idea of the vehicular traffic in the streets may be gathered from the statement that in twelve hours 16,054 vehicles of all kinds passed a particular spot in Piccadilly, and a full service of 630 'buses pass the Bank of England in an hour. The number of passengers carried by the London trams in a year is over 360,000,000. A census taken of the number of pedestrians who crossed London Bridge on a certain day showed that they totalled 116,902, and in nineteen and a half hours during a day in April last year 248,015 people crossed the roadways at the bank.—London Tit-Bits.

Why Ice Stays on Top.

Water should be the sole exception to the otherwise universal law that all cooling bodies contract and therefore increase in density, writes Henry Martyn Hart in the Outlook.

Water contracts as its temperature falls and therefore becomes heavier and sinks until it reaches 39 degrees. At this temperature water is the heaviest; this is the point of its maximum density. From this point it begins to expand. Therefore, in winter, although the surface may be freezing at a temperature of 32 degrees, the water at the bottom of the pool is six or seven degrees warmer.

Suppose that water, like everything else, had gone on contracting as it cooled until it reached the freezing point; the heaviest water would have sunk to the lowest place and there become ice.

Counted Wealth by Whelks.

Dewarra, a currency of New Britain, is an instance of how the spoils of the chase may be turned to account as the outward and visible sign of wealth. Dewarra is made by stringing the shells of a dog whelk upon the ribs of palm leaves. These strings may be retailed at so much a fathom—usually the price is equivalent to about three shillings a fathom length—or they may be made into various articles of personal adornment to be worn on great occasions. In New Britain the dewarra hoarded up by a rich man is produced at this funeral and divided among his heirs in much the same kind of way as personal property is divided among us.

Wage Workers in Bohemia.

In Bohemia every wage worker, of whatever sex or age, must have a "work book," which contains his personal description and history and his employer's indorsements. Permission to travel in search of work must be indorsed by the local authorities. In changing locations a certificate from oringinal place of residence must be secured and filed at the new location. This work book, therefore, becomes a passport, exhaustive in its way; it must be produced and recorded at each new location and permission to leave the country must be specifically stated.—Philadelphia Ledger.

Uncle Jerry Thinks It's So.

"I shouldn't wonder," said Uncle Jerry Peebles, "if there was something in this idea that the condition of a man's teeth has a whole lot to do with his moral character. The biggest liar I ever knew in my life wore a full set of false teeth."

PHOTOGRAPHING THE STARS.

Cameras Take Pictures of Stars Not Seen Through the Telescope.

It has been well remarked that the introduction of the dry photographic plate in the observatory has marked as great an advance in the practical art of the astronomer as did the invention of the telescope in the state of astronomy which preceded the employment of that wonderful instrument. Every day that passes seems to make this statement more true. We are continually finding that the other methods of investigation are being superseded. The astronomer used formerly to make careful measurements of the distance of the stars from one another by the aid of a delicate measuring appartus at the eye end of his telescope. Now, he not infrequently rejects that measuring apparatus altogether and adjusts a plate-holder on the end of the telescope instead. Into that plate-holder he puts the most sensitive plate that chemical skill can provide.

It is under such circumstances that the great size of the object-glass proves of so much advantage. On its broad surface the rays of light from a small star are collected and converged to a focus on the plate, and in this way they form the image of the star. Even though the light be thus concentrated, it will generally be found that some of the stars are so faint that their pictures will not be secured unless the exposure is continued for many minutes, or sometimes even for several hours. But when the light has been allowed time to act, the astronomer obtains on his photographic plate an absolutely faithful chart of the heavens. Engraved on that chart he finds not only the stars which his naked eye could show him, not only the stars which are discernible when his visal power receives the assistance of the telescope, he finds also innumerable other stars too faint to be perceived even by the greatest instrument.—Cosmopolitan.

Gum Digging in New Zealand.

One of the most profitable industries of North Maoriland is the digging of kauri gum. Whenever a man is dead broke he goes to the gum lands, and gum digging is the last resort of the badly brought up, incompetent Englishman sent to New Zealand to sink or swim. Many are the aristocratic families of the old lands whose sons are "gummies."

The method of digging was formerly to probe with a long pointed iron spear into likely places, and upon striking what seemed a hard, brittle substance to dig with the spade. Of course, the livelihood thus afforded is precarious.

The gum is the deposit of kauri trees, which grew hundreds, perhaps thousands of years ago. Floods and fires brought whole forests of these giant trees to earth and time buried them.

As the gum was squeezed out it hardened into lumps of all sizes from a cubic yard down. Usually it is broken into much smaller pieces.

Two or three kinds of gum exist. The white, clear gum is most sought for. Then there is a medium grade, a dark, treacle-colored lot, called blackjack. Lower again are the tiny nuts, and sugar gum. All are used and of late years the price of blackjack has advanced.

Not long ago a man bought a farm put down in grass 30 years ago for $3,000. He hired a party of Austrians to dig it for gum, and in much less than a year he had more than paid for the farm with the gum taken out of one paddock, and had the rest still to dig. This gum was found at from 6 to 10 feet down.

One man sold for $450 the right to dig over four acres of ground.

Chloroform to Force Flowers.

Experiments have been made recently by several horticulturists in England and on the Continent in the use of ether for forcing flowering plants. According to The Lancet lilies of the valley, azaleas, deutzias and lilac have shown themselves susceptible to ether or chloroform, and M. Leblanc has reported to the Societe Centrale d'Horticulture de Nancy his success in experiments with the latter drug. On February 19 last he chloroformed some plants of azalea mollis, giving them about half the quantity he would have used had it been ether, and exposing them to the action of the vapor about forty-eight hours. They were at once removed to a green house at a temperature of 65 degrees Fahrenheit. From March 5 the flowers began to expand a little, and attained about to their full dimensions on the 8th, where as plants grown for comparison were not expanded until March 21. The chambers in which the vapors are set free should be large and absolutely airtight, and all manipulation must be by day, since the approximation of a light if air has gained access to the interior is liable to be followed by violent explosion, which may occasion great destruction of property, and possibly loss of life. The economy of fuel effected by this method of forcing, which can be done at either a high or low temperature, is considerable, and covers the cost of etherification.

New Deposits of Fuller's Earth.

Steps are being taken to develop valuable deposits of fuller's earth near Buelah, Pueblo County, and near Akron, Washington County, in Colorado. The few deposits of this substance already located in the Centennial State are said to be among the purest found anywhere in the world.

Jap Soldiers in Winter.

No troops are better equipped for a cold campaign than the Japanese.

What Constitutes Good Seed Corn

By far too many consider seed good simply because it will grow. To be first class seed must be—

1. Well adapted to the seasonal and soil conditions where it is to be planted.

2. Grown on productive plants of a productive variety.

3. Well matured, and preserved from ripening time till planting time in a manner that will retain its full vigor.

The importance of the three requirements just enumerated has been demonstrated experimntally by the department's Office of Corn Investigations. The results given briefly as enumerated, are as follows:

1. For a series of five years, 12 well-bred varieties were tested in 10 northern states, equivalent lots of seed being used in each state. Varieties that produced most in some states were among the poorest in others.

2. Seed ears taken from the highest yielding rows of ear-to-row breeding plats have repeatedly produced better than seed ears taken from poorer yielding rows. Seed ears from the best producing stalks found in a general field produced more than seed ears taken without considering the productiveness of the parent stalks.

3. Four bushels of ears were divided into two equal parts, one part being well taken care of and the other placed in a barn as corn is ordinarily cribbed. The well-preserved seed gave a yield on poor soil 12 per cent higher than the poorly preserved and 27 per cent higher on fertile soil, notwithstanding the fact that both lots of seed germinated equally well.

Fish Culture on the Farm

In a paper read before the American Fisheries Society on "Fish Culture on the Farm," recently, J. J. Stranahan said:

"With public water rapidly becoming depleted through excessive fishing, in spite of the good work being done by the hatcheries, where are we to look for the fish to fill the very rapidly growing demand, if not through water farming? Of course, the output of ocean, lake and stream may be held in statu quo or posibly increased to some extent by reasonable restrictive laws and by the work of the fish culturists, but with the rapid increase of our population and the further growth of consumption through improved transportation facilities, the limit has doubtless already been reached and any permanent increase of per capita supply must come through covering what is now unproductive land with water, thus adding to the output of fish beyond what natural water would make it, and making many fins grow where none at all grew before.

There are vast areas in all the states, probably equal in the aggregate to that of the Great Lakes, which now produce virtually nothing, and much of which might be made to furnish abundance of fish with comparatively little expense. Not only would the conversion of this waste land into water areas increase and equalize the rainfall to some extent, but it would measurably decrease the liability of disastrous floods and equalize the flow of streams.

Avoid Mixed Vetch Seed

Some seed dealers are offering a mixture of weed vetches and hairy vetch as "mixed vetch" seed. In Russia, which is one of the principal sources of hairy vetch seed imported into the United States, hairy vetch is not raised as a crop, but is separated from rye in which it occurs as a volunteer. In this way the seed of many kinds of weed vetches occur mixed with hairy vetch seed, but are cleaned out before marketing the hairy vetch. These cleanings, containing a mixture of wild vetches other seeds as well as some hairy vetch seed, are usually sold as pigeon feed, the use to which they should be put. Some lots have been imported into the United States and either used as an adulterant of hairy vetch seed or sold as mixed vetches. These mixtures are of little or no value aside from the hairy vetch seed they contain, and they should not be used for seeding purposes. Hairy vetch seed can be easily distinguished from the seed of other vetches by the difference in color of the interior of the seed. Crushed hairy vetch seed is of a lemon-yellow color, somewhat lighter on the flat than on the rounded surface. The crushed seed of most of the other vetches occuring with the seed of the hairy vetch varies in color from a dark fawn to reddish orange.

Crush a small handful of seed and if there are any fawn, salmon, or reddish orange colored pieces the seed is not pure hairy vetch.

Wouldn't Know the Difference

Cook (7 a. m.)—Please, ma'am, the dog got hold of the steak that was for breakfast. Shall I go out and get another?

Mistress—Is there any news in the morning paper?

Cook—Yes, indeed, ma'am. Big accidents an' horrid murders, an' bomb explosions, an' rumors of another war.

Mistress—Very well. Warm over something left from supper, and place the paper by my husband's side."—Puck.

Its Meaning

"What does it mean to cast your bread upon the waters?" asked the Sunday School teacher.

"It means that the fishes have to be fed," replied small Sadie.

Sometimes a man does a sensible thing by mistake.

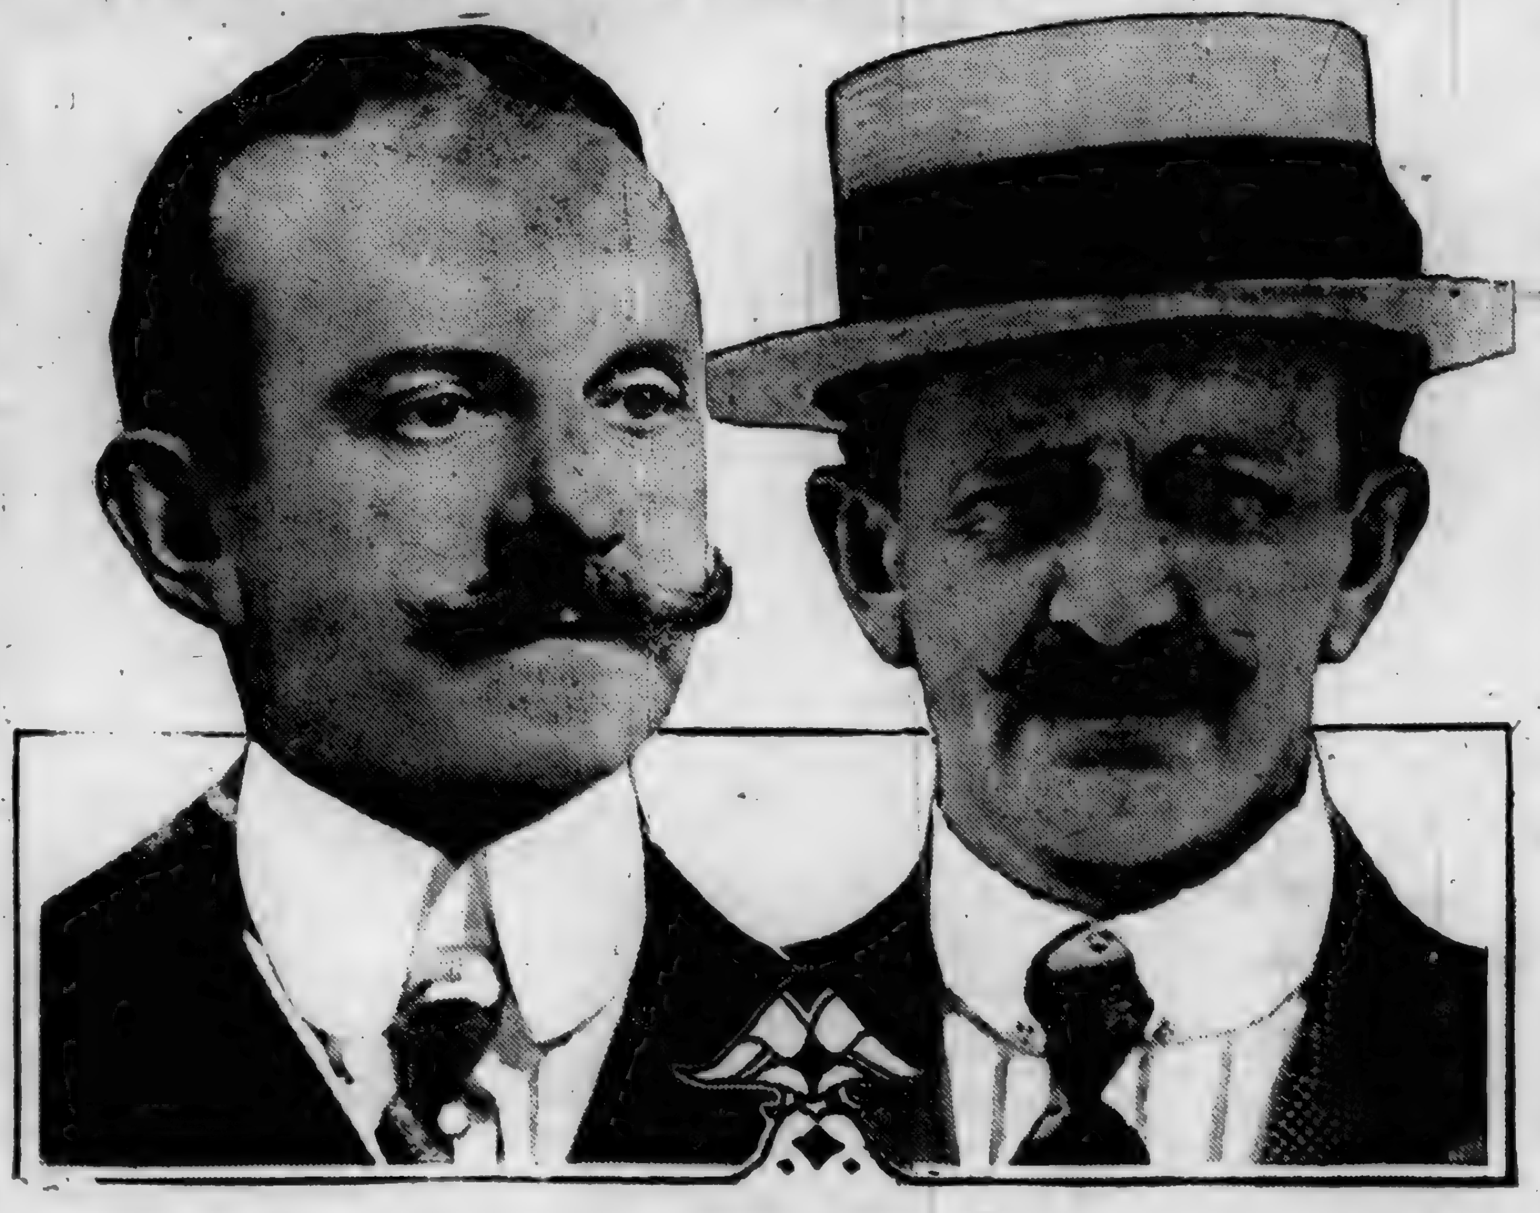
The Publishers Co-Operative Co.
501 S. Dearborn St., Chicago
No. 23

JUNE

L 908

0181

SUBMARINE CRISIS AGES VON BERNSTORFF



The first picture, taken some time before the sinking of the Lusitania, shows Count von Bernstorff with a frank, open, unworried countenance, but the other, taken more recently, tells its own story of what the strain of the war has done to the German ambassador.

PRINTER MAKES FORTUNE IN OIL

MORTGAGED HIS MEAGER BELONGINGS TO INVEST IN THE HEALDTON FIELD IN OKLAHOMA

WELLS NOW PRODUCING $5000 DAY

Aged Man Now in Mad House Confided His Beliefs and Drawings To This Lucky Typo

Ringling, Ok.—The story of how a poor linotype operator who worked on a daily newspaper in Battlecreek Mich made a half million dollars in oil in Oklahoma within two years after he had mortgaged his belongings for the top cent they'd bear, is contained in the experiences of Roy M. Johnson of Ardmore.

The daily income of two producing companies in the Healdton field in which he is a heavy stockholder is over $5,000. Within 12 months from this date these companies—the Crystal Oil Company and the Twin State Oil Company—will have produced about $20,000,000 of wealth for their stockholders. Within that time the royalty income that Johnon receives will have amounted to $100,000. In 10 years should the wells on the property he owns in fee continue their present rate of production, considering the natural gradual increase from more drilling, he will have made $1,000,000, and out of an investment of less than $1,000.

An aged man is in a madhouse somewhere in the north because of the existence of oil in this region of Oklahoma. Before he knew positively it was here his mental tension was growing, and when it was discovered in paying quantities the realization was more than the tension would stand. Roy Johnson profited, for the old man confided to Johnson his beliefs accompanied by drawings and arguments. Johnson had studied the oil industry and the old man's reasons looked plausible.

Johnson had a little printing plant in Ardmore, with which he circulated a weekly newspaper called the Ardmore Statesman, and he mortgaged the plant and some other belongings to get the money necessary to obtain the first oil lease on land near the inland village of Healdton. The land produced oil.

In due time at a United States Government sale of Indian land, Johnson bought seven tracts, ranging in price from $3.25 to $12 an acre, the initial payment totaling $195. These tracts proved to be located in highly productive territory.

"I haven't any hunches," says Johnson. "As a matter of fact, I have no faith in hunches, but I believe that the present proven field about Healdton is not all the producing territory in this part of Southern Oklahoma. I am, therefore, putting part of my earnings into wells in new territory. I may get a few dry wells, but I believe some territory will be opened as good or better than the Healdton field."

Johnson was born in Cashton, Wis. and he is 35 years old. Fifteen years ago he took some stock in an oil company that drilled an unproductive well in the Beaumont, Tex., field. Johnson went to Beaumont and after his oil venture secured a job on a Beaumont newspaper through the influence of H. Spaulding, who afterwards became secretary of the Ardmore Commercial Club. On Spaulding's invitation Johnson came to Ardmore and established The Statesman.

The assistance that Johnson obtained to get his start in the oil game in Oklahoma came through P. C. Dings, president of the Guaranty State Bank of Ardmore, in whose store in a little town in Iowa the company was organized that drilled the dry well in the Beaumont field in which Johnson was interested. Dings helped Johnson borrow the money needed to get the first lease in the Healdton field. Dings later helped to organize the Coline Oil Company, the holdings of which last year sold for $1,000,000 and made 12 Oklahoma men rich.

EXHIBITS RARE HEIRLOOM

Carved Ivory Snuff Box Bearing Date of 1306

Wellsboro, Pa.—Joseph A. Willard of this city, has been exhibiting to friends a rare and valued relic. It is in the shape of a genuine carved ivory snuff box. On the cover is plainly inscribed, "Susanna Willard, 1306."

This heirloom is said to have come over on the Mayflower, and has been handed down in the Willard family these six hundred years. It is much prized by its possessor.

HEARING RESTORED BY FALL

Man is Uninjured by Drop of Three Stories

Port Arthur, Texas—James J. Hagar aged 51 years, fell from the third story of the Holstein building in this city recently and was uninjured. As a matter of fact he regained his hearing from the fall; so state the physicians who have examined him. He had been totally deaf for thirteen years, having lost his hearing when struck on the head with a base ball bat.

MYSTERY OF FREIGHT CAR STUMPS ROAD OFFICIALS

It Arrives and is Relieved of Its Burden—Back Again, Loaded—By Whom?

Webb City, Mo.—About three weeks ago a box car was shoved onto the siding at the Webb City smelter loaded with lead ore to be smelted and turned into pig lead.

It was unloaded and next day sent out again, presumably to its own road—the Union Pacific. Now it is back at the Webb City smelter again with another load of ore, but the officials of the Missouri Pacific, on whose tracks it stands, say they have no record of its ever leaving the smelter on the first trip. They have no data of any kind—they supposed it had never left the smelter. Yet it had been away twenty days.

The first trip it was loaded with 100,000 pounds of lead ore and was worth just $5,000. This time it has the same amount of lead ore and, the price of ore having gone up, is worth $5,500. Yet the railroad officials have no record whatever of this last shipment.

Another unique thing is the number of the car, a straight 7-8-9-10, No. 78910.

PROFESSOR USES 1,000 RATS

He Labors Seven Years to Find Ideal Food for Humans

Madison, Wis.—More than 1,000 rats are being used in the agricultural chemistry department of the University of Wisconsin, in an effort on the part of Prof. F. V. McCollum to discover the ideal food that will make people live the most efficient lives, and grow at the best practical rate.

Altho the experiments are being made upon rats, the results are believed to be the same as if they were made upon human beings. Prof. McCollum has already been at work for seven years on this problem and has had some satisfactory results in prolonging and increasing the general usefulness of the lives of his rats. He still is in search of the chemical parts of two unknown compounds that will make up the ideal food.

HE SPENDS A FORTUNE EDUCATING 18 OTHERS

School Teacher's Kindness Sends Seventeen Boys and One Girl Thru Universities

Everett, Wash.—F. D. Mack, teacher in the Central School has spent about $40,000 in educating eighteen students—seventeen boys and one girl—in the past sixteen years.

Living on his school salary in a modest way, both in Minnesota, his former home, and in Washington, he has earned the money to send students thru universities by writing short stories and magazine articles. He has paid out between $2,000 and $3,000 on each of his "children."

Some of the youngsters were orphans and some had one parent, but all were eager to learn and were handicapped by lack of money.

The thirteen boys who are alive are all actively engaged in the business professions to which Mack educated them. Two are druggists, one being in St. Paul and the other in Los Angeles. Two are instructors in the University of Minnesota, where they were graduated. One teaches mathematics and the other is an instructor in German.

This latter young man plans to be a physician and last year married a girl who wished to go to Germany to get her master's degree, so he and his bride sailed for Germany to continue their studies, only to be turned back by the prevalence of the war. Mack sent him thru normal school, the University of Minnesota and Harvard, where he received his master's degree.

A young man who chose to be a broker received his education at the University of Illinois. He started out to be an architect, but changed his mind and took a commercial course. He was graduated four years ago and is now in Minneapolis engaged in the lumber brokerage business. He is the best money maker of the "family." In his four years out of college he has made $40,000.

A mining engineer who was educated at the University of Minnesota is now working in a mine at Butte, Mont. A banker received a thoro commercial education and then Mack set him up in business in a bank at Elgin, N. D.

Mack, who reluctantly consented to tell something of his unique generosity says that when any of his boys want to start in business he gives them enough money to begin with. He recently bought an eighty acre farm for one of them.

A dentist lives in Chicago. He had four years at the University of Valparaiso. Mack says this boy married a rich nurse.

One boy who started to be a lawyer lost his health after his education from the University of Minnesota Law School, so that he could not practice, and he now is employed as chief of the Minnesota Fish and Game Commission, with headquarters at St. Paul.

His Peculiarity

"You must find that impediment in your speech rather inconvenient at times, Mr. Briggs?"

"Oh, n-no; everybody has his little peculiarity. Stammering is m-m-mine. What is yours?"

"Well, really, I am not aware that I have any?"

"D-do you stir y-your tea with your right hand?"

"Why yes, of course."

"W-well, that is y-your peculiarity. Mose p-people u-use a t-teapsoon."

On the Inside

One morning Jenkins looked over his garden wall and said to his neighbor:

"Hey, what are you burying in that hole?"

"Oh," he said, "I'm just replanting some of my seeds, that's all."

"Seeds!" shouted Jenkins angrily "It looks more like one of my hens."

"That's all right. The seeds are inside."

BUILDING UP ARID STATES

BY RECOVERY OF UNDERGROUND WATER FOR IRRIGATION

VALLEYS HAVE LARGE SUPPLIES

Government Active in its Surveys for Water for Arid and Semi-Arid States

Washington, D. C.—One of the big recent developments in the building up of the arid and semiarid States is the recovery of underground water for irrigation. Formerly nearly all irrigation supplies were derived from surface streams, but two conditions have in recent years directed attention to the valuable supplies of water which are stored in the huge subterranean reservoirs underlying many of the desert areas of the West, and which can be tapped by drilling wells. The first of these conditions is the rapid exhaustion of unappropriated surface supplies and the necessity of finding other supplies if the irrigation of the arid lands is to be extended; the second is the reduction in the cost of pumping due to improvements in pumps, the development of internal-combustion engines, and the installation of large hydroelectric power plants.

When the last federal census was taken more than half a million acres of land was irrigated in the United States with water supplied by wells, about three fourths of which was pumped, the rest rising to the surface by artesian pressure. Since that time progress has been made in the recovery of undergound water. At first ground water irrigation was almost wholly confined to few regions, such as Southern California, the Pecos Valley, and the Arkansas Valley, but now nearly all parts of the west are being prospected for ground water supplies.

Owing to the diversity in geologic conditions, the occurrence of underground water differs greatly from place to place. Many of the desert valleys have large and valuable supplies, but others which appear no less promising to the casual observer have little or no underground water or only water that is too deep to be profitably pumped or too alkaline to be used for irrigation. The uncertainties attending ground water developments are causing great loss to thousands of uninformed and inexperienced settlers and are providing unscrupulous promoters with opportunities for misrepresentation.

Long before the interest in underground water had become as general as it is today the geological survey foresaw the need of a detailed ground water survey of the entire west, and for years it has been engaged upon such a survey. Each year certain areas are selected for systematic investigation, the plan being untimely to cover the entire west. A vast amount of reliable information has thus been obtained on the quantity, depth and quality of the water, the prospects for artesian flows, the best methods of constructing wells, the cost of drilling and pumping, and other matters relating to the recovery and utilization of the underground supplies, and maps are made showing the underground water conditions. The maps and data are published in a series of water supply papers.

The region to be covered is, however so extensive and the funds available for water resources investigations have been comparatively so small that large areas remain in regard to which there is no definite information, and many years will be required at the present rate of progress to cover all of these areas, provided the work is to be done with the thoroughness that is essential to make it useful. Every year many requests for investigations of specific areas are received, some of them in the form of long petitions signed by the settlers. All these requests are given careful consideration, but it is possible to respond favorably to only a few of the most meritorious.

WERE THERE 11 PROPOSALS?

Preacher's Offer to Marry Persons Brings Startling Response.

San Diego, Cal.—Some of the visiting ministers have told some good stories about one another during the Laymen's Missionary Movement Convention here. This is one that was "handed" to Rev. Hugh L Burleson.

A young couple came into his rooms just as he was going to begin service in the church and asked him to marry them. He said if they would wait until after the service he would give them a public wedding.

After the benediction he announced: "Now will those persons wishing to be married please come forward." It is recorded in the story that 11 women and one man answered to the call.

An offset to that story is one told by Dr. Alonzo R. Petty of a woman who was before a Judge asking for a divorce. The judge leaned over the desk and said to the woman:

"Madam, how long did you know this man before you were married?"

"Your Honor," she said, "I was acquainted with him for 18 months, but I never really knew him until I asked him for a dollar."

BEANS SHELVED AS SOLDIER'S DIET

Army Captain in Lecture Says They Have Practically Been Deleted

Spokane, Wash.—To carry food for one day for one army, which in the United States comprises in round numbers 103,014 officers and men, would require 115 army wagons each with four mule teams, Capt. John B. Shuman of the Fourteenth Infantry, Fort Wright, told his hearers at the Chamber of Commerce. Capt. Shuman delivered a lecture on "Army Regulations," one of a series of talks by army officers under the auspices of the Military affair committee.

Captain Shuman exhibited sample menus of meals served to the men in his company to demonstrate that "beans and hardtack" do not comprise the soldier's diet any longer. He explained the regulations pertaining to enlistment, pay, discharge, the rations and the equipment needed in various kinds of service. He distributed a number of books and articles on army matters and asked those who took them away to distribute them among their friends when through with them.

"The pay of the enlisted man ranges from $15 a month for the private in his first enlistment on home station to $108.80 for the chief musician of a band on foreign service," said Capt. Shuman. "For each enlistment the soldier gets an increase of $1, $3 or $4 a month, depending on the grade he is serving in. An increase of pay is also authorized for excellence in marksmanship, $2 for marksman, $3 for sharpshooter and $5 for expert rifleman, paid monthly from the date of qualification to the date of discharge.

"A clothing account is started for the man the day he enlists. The initial allowance amounts to $43.95. Then for each six months' service the man completes he is credited with the semi-annual allowance of $12.63, a total of $144.98 for four years. Overcoats and blankets are not charged to the clothing account. He is simply loaned these while he buys his clothing. The revised statutes prescribe punishment of one year's imprisonment for the soldier who loses or sells any article of his clothing or equipment, and a fine of $1,000 for any person who buys or has in his possession any article of army uniform, clothing or equipment.

"The garrison ration weighs 4.4 pounds for each man each day. The field ration weighs about three pounds and the reserve ration about two pounds. The present field wagon can carry 2,700 pounds, or 600 garrison, 900 field and 1,350 reserve rations."

Capt. Shuman gave the following figures of units in the American army organization:

Infantry company, three officers and 65 enlisted men.

Battalion, 15 officers and 261 enlisted men.

Regiment, 51 officers and 880 enlisted men.

In war there is no increase in the number of officers in an infantry company, battalion or regiment. The company though is increased by two Sergeants, four Corporals and 80 privates, making a total of 150 men to a company and a total of 1,836 men for the regiment.

MAN AT PRAYER DROPS DEAD

"Lord, I Would Like to Go to Your Kingdom from This Very Room,' Says Enthusiast

Indianapolis, Ind.—With the words on his lips as he was kneeling in prayer, "Lord I would like to go to your kingdom from this very room," Thomas Horton, 60 years old, fell dead at the Good Samaritan Mission.

Horton, his friends said was a religious enthusiast, and had attended the services at the workhouse and at the jail. After the jail services the members of the mission were holding services in their East Washington street room. Horton approached the altar and prayed aloud with great fervor.

When the elderly man fell over, his head against the organ, the congregation thought nothing out of the ordinary had happened. Superintendent G. D. Campbell and others who witnessed the man's death said that they thought Horton merely had been overcome by the ardor of his prayer. They said it was a usual thing for persons to fall over on the floor after praying. Many in the room remonstrated against sending for the coroner when the man's body began to grow cold, as they still maintained that he was not dead.

One of the members, however, notified the police, and Bicyclemen Schlangen and Sheehan investigated. After the body was removed to the city morgue, the members of the mission stood about in little groups, commenting on the man's sudden death. One was overheard to say, "It is another one of God's mysteries," and still another, "Brother Horton is with Jesus now." There was no sorrow or mourning. All seemed to think that the elderly man's wish had been fulfilled, that he had foreknowledge of the event.

Horton styled himself, "The Banana King." Superintendent Campbell said that Horton did the largest local fruit business of any native American. He peddled the fruit on the North Side. A widow and two chidren survive.

"Happy as a Girl' at 94.

Millville, N. J.—"I am as happy as a girl of 16," said Mrs. Mary Madden when about 50 of her relatives and friends surprised her by calling at her home here to assist her in celebrating the ninety-fourth anniversary of her birth.

AHA! NEW BREED OF HENS TO LAY TWO EGGS A DAY

Now up to Scientific Breeders to Go Ahead and Propagate the Species

Leesville, Ohio—Can it be considered as being within the realm of future possibilities that we are to have a breed of hens that can be depended upon to lay two eggs a day? That there are hens with a two apartment egg factory within their abnormal interiors would appear to be an indisputable fact from discoveries already made, and which will here be described for the benefit of the progressive scientific breeder and all others interested.

Two months ago when Mr. and Mrs. John T. Timmons, the former being known as the blind author and naturalist, decided to move from Cadiz, Ohio, to Leesville, they decided to sell all their poultry except four hens which they decided to keep to supply the table immediately previous to their moving, and all the hens were disposed of but four. The next morning one of these was killed, and the following day when there were but three hens left in a coop which was closed on account of cold weather, four eggs were found in the nest.

This was looked upon as strange, and close watch was kept by Mr. and Mrs. Timmons, and on three more occasions prior to their moving away from Cadiz one of the remaining hens laid two eggs in one day, and once she had laid two eggs within a few minutes of each other. On the following day she laid one egg.

The hen was taken to the new home in Leesville, where she has on two occasions repeated the performance of depositing two normally sized eggs, very much alike in shape and weight, in the nest within a few minutes. This hen is a cross between Rhode Island Red mother and Barred Rock rooster.

Other chickens were hatched at the same time this hen was brought into the world, and Mrs. Timmons in dressing one of the other hens discovered that the fowl had two distinct, well formed lay pokes, with eggs in each, and this caused them to think that had the fact been known and the hen watched she, too, might have laid two eggs in a day.

It is thought by a number of persons interested in the matter that a breed of fowls might be created that would lay two eggs a day regularly.

One very noticeable feature in connection with the foregoing is the fact the two-a-day hen does not lay as long as other hens before she wants to set, but she deposits about the average number of eggs in a layer before the brooding notion strikes her.

CRIMINALS CLASSIFIED

Every Thief Has Certain Earmarks in Way of Working, Says California Chief

Berkley, Cal.—Studies of criminal methods made by the detectives of the local police department have resulted in a systematizing of findings that will permit an innovation in police work. Cards that are exchaged with other departments containing data regarding arrested men will not only give their Bertillon measurements and finger prints but will contain an accurate description of their methods of operation.

Every criminal has his own way of working, Chief Vollmer has found. In this mode he makes but little variation from crime to crime. If he is accustomed to procuring entrance to a house by jimmying windows he will hardly ever be found to break into places in any other manner. The second story worker is a second story worker for good and all. The sneak thief seldom is anything more accomplished than a sneak thief.

Information of the modus operandi is almost of as much value as data regarding a man's height or weight or copies of his finger tip lines, declares Chief Vollmer. For some time he has been suggesting the advisability of police departments exchanging information of the sort and has now decided to promulgate the system by setting an example himself.

Major L. W. Atcherly, an English criminologist of attainment has studied and written of this system at considerable length. He has been able to formulate regular classifications of criminals merely on the line of their known crimes. He finds some variations, but these are almost always of minor importance.

Berkley has had one criminal who showed distinctly the trait of committing his crimes always in the same way. This was the barefoot burglar, who has been captured, but who has returned to Berkley time after time in successive years. He has always taken off his shoes before entering a dwelling and has never been known to commit a burglary except in that fashion.

At various times when a number of crimes were committed in succession in this city the detectives were able to find one or more special features that characterized each of the series, thus demonstrating that all were committed by one man.

"Maj. Atcherly's observations," said Chief Vollmer, "indicate that criminals generally work at one specific kind of crime and commit their burglaries or other misdemeanors in the same manner always. The knowledge of the way a criminal works is invaluable to a police department. Departments throughout the country already exchange finger prints and measurements, and if these records were expanded to show the method of any particular habitual crime, it would simplify the capture of such men whenever they appear in a city. We shall send out from now on details of this sort regarding local crimes."

JUNE

L 908

0182

The Dreamer's Idea of His Father: "The shadowing of something enormous and indomitable—and lawless—conquering and irresistible and blindly noble."

THE DOER

The TURMOIL

By BOOTH TARKINGTON

An American Story Of American Life For American Readers By an American

It is you and me and all of us—just we, the people—our town—our country—us. And it's no moral tale, nor tale with a moral—unless you care to look for one.

THE DREAMER

The Doer's Idea of His Son: "You're cracked! Oh, I got a fine layout here! One son died, one quit and one's a loon! Don't let me hear from you again until you've waked up; you poor, pitiful, dandelion-pickin' sleepwalker you!"

In Book Form It Is the Best Selling Novel of the Year

Our Next Serial! That's All!

S. S. CONVENTION.

for programs and postage, 72c remained, which added to the $7.26 in the treasury makes a total of $7.98. Song, "Calling the Prodical" Benediction by Chas. Jackson.

Township superintendents as follows have been appointed:—Cradle Roll, Mrs. Ethel Check; Elementary Division, Mrs. Bessie Tustison; Secondary Division, Earl Wyatt; Adult Department, J. R. Shilling; Home Department, Mrs. Eva Sheffer; Teachers' Training, Dr. B. S. Sheffer; Temperance, Samuel Fellers; Missionary, Frank Scholes.

Ada Bassett.

PUBLIC NOTICE.

August 1 finishes my career in Spencerville as practicing physician, having sold out my business to Dr. J. C. Emme of Harlan. All book accounts and notes due me, should be settled by Aug. 1st., '16.

Dr. B. O. Shook.

LOCAL ITEMS.

See Wallace for Building Material at St. Joe Saw Mill.

Printed invitations to your family reunion shows that you have the proper interest and pride in your family gathering. Probably the best way for announcing the family gathering is to have a program printed, showing the date, place, etc. Have The News do it for you. Prices right.

FreeColumn

All advertisements in this department are free to subscribers only. —Editor News.]

For Sale:-- 50 bu. Sir Walter Raleigh potatoes. John Doll.

FOR SALE: Sweet Potato, Celery, Pepper, Cabbage, and Tomato plants for sale. Mrs. G. W. Woodcox.

FOR SALE:-About 30 gallons of fine salt pickles. Will deliver anywhere in town in 2 dozen lots at 5c. per dozen. W. L. HALLABAUGH.

WANTED:-To buy two shoats. JOE WINEBRENNER, care of H. M. Widney.

Why Leave a Good Thing?

Edward B. Clark says the American farmer is taking to scientific methods avidly and that within a decade the farm population problem will have solved itself. Values are growing constantly. Children are showing remarkable interest in raising superior vegetables, fruits, dairy products and live stock. Federal and State action helps the cause.

IN Washington, D. C., the answer to a certain question is made by asking another question. To the query, "Why should the farmers and the boys stay on the farm?" the answer comes, "Why should they want to leave a good thing?"

There is war in Europe, and therefore it may be held by the entirely thoughtless that the farming prosperity in the United States to which attention has just been called by the department of agriculture's statisticians, is merely a thing of the year, and that a slump will come, and that as a consequence there will be simply one bright spot to offset several black spots. There is a good deal of nonsense in this view of the case.

It is not always wise to take what may be called a boom year and to use it either as a basis of comparison or as a towering landmark to which some hole in the ground of the past is to be compared, with the dismal prophecy that other holes in the ground are sure to be dug by fortune in the future. This sort of thing tends to discourage the men who believe that hilltops are to remain the general features of picture landscapes.

Values Grow Constantly.

The year just past has been a great one. The aggregate production of all crops is estimated to be seven per cent larger than the preceding year. The American farmer has profited, but it should not be understood that because attention is called to a particularly marked growth that development and increasing prosperity are only matters of a twelvemonth that is past.

Let us see what has happened in the country in the last few years. Complete government statistics, because the census is taken only once in ten years, are not available for the last two or three years, but the word is that the progress of the preceding decade has been maintained. Here are some figures which mean something:

In the year 1900 the value of farm property in the United States, including land, machinery, houses and all other things pertaining to agricultural production was $20,439,901,164. In ten years these values had more than doubled, reaching in 1910 the astonishing figures of $40,991,449,090.

Farmers Better Off.

Now it might be held by some persons that these figures simply would mean that the farm had multiplied tremendously and that the increased valuation would be spread over an enormous territory occupied by new farms and that therefore the individual farmer was in no wise better off. Well, let us see about this.

In the year 1900 there were in the United States 5,737,372 farms. In the year 1910 there were 6,361,502 farms. A glance at the figures will show that while the farm property values more than doubled, the increase in the number of farms, comparatively speaking of course, were small. To have kept things down at the old basis of values, the number of farms should have doubled, while the values were doubling.

In the year 1900 the average value of all property per farm was $3,563. In 1910 the average value of all property per farm was $6,444. These figures perhaps almost better than anything else can show the advance of prosperity in the agricultural regions of the United States.

Other figures, however, are available. In the year 1900 the average value of farm land per acre was $15.57. In the year 1900 the average value of land per acre was $32.40, more than a doubling up in land wealth.

An 83 Per Cent Increase.

The census bureau of the United states furnishes other figures which have to do with crop values. In the year 1899 the value of all crops in the United States was $2,998,704,412. In the year 1909, that is just a decade later, the value of the crop was $5,487,161,223, an increase of 83 per cent in ten years.

For the same ten years we find an increase of another kind. In 1899 the average value of crops per farm was a trifle more than $500, while in 1909 it reached the value of $863.

A curious thing is noted in Washington concerning the thoughtlessness of some men in gauging the proceeds of industry on the individual farm, or if you will, on farms in the aggregate. Some men who think of farming ignore utterly the actual land value to the man who owns his farm. They say "So and So made so much last year, but the sum is not big." To the amount made must be added about five per cent on the value of the land. A city man who owns his own house deducts the rent that otherwise he would have to pay from his yearly expenses, and so, of course, it must be with the man in the country.

Mortgages Are Disappearing.

The farmer who owns land to the value of $10,000 must add $500 a year to his farming profits. If he did not own the land he would have to pay that amount at least for its use. Into this, of course, must be figured the selling value of the property. If land is valuable it also is valuable when it is turned into cash. It seems ridiculous, but these things frequently are overlooked by the average layman when he is inquiring into prosperity conditions on the farm.

Statistics show that mortgages are disappearing from the farming communities, that outward evidences of prosperity are appearing as mortgages disappear, as the land becomes more productive, as the result of the energies of the state and federal departments of agriculture become more manifest, and as the farmer applies more modern methods to his work. The children at college, the automobiles which are displacing the buggies of the olden time, the improving, slowly improving as yet it is true, conditions in the rural schools, the marked improvement and extension of the country roads and a dozen of other things show not only increasing prosperity in the country, but the means of increased comfort and happiness.

Many Farm Opportunities.

The opportunities on the farm are growing daily in number and attractiveness. Already there have been for a year or two evidences that the leave-the-farm movement has been checked, and there are further evidences that later it will be stopped and that the return movement will set in. There is a reason for the objection of Agricultural department officials to the cry of "Back to the Farm." They have made it "Stay on the Farm." They know that if the young men stay by the land that with things as they are, they will be everlastingly glad of it within a few years, and that as farm life grows more attractive and prosperous the back-to-the-farm movement will take care of itself, for men go where lies the lure of comfort and prosperity.

Under the Smith-Lever act the United States government aids the states in co-operative demonstration work on the farms. The total amount set aside for this work for the years 1915-16 is $4,782,000, of which $1,080,000 is from federal Smith-Lever funds, $925,000 from appropriations to the United States department of agriculture for farmers' co-operative demonstration work, and $110,000 from other bureaus in the department. These amounts make the total from federal sources of $2,115,000.

State and Federal Aid.

Of the funds contributed from sources within the states $600,000 is from state Smith-Lever funds made up mainly of direct appropriations of the state legislatures. In addition to funds used under the Smith-Lever act, $628,000 is appropriated by the state legislature for extension work, $225,000 by colleges from funds under their immediate control, $921,000 by county authorities and $292,000 from miscellaneous sources.

It is said in Washington by the officials that the interest in the co-operative agricultural extension work is nothing short of remarkable. At the outset there was some little objection to the appearance of instructors in the field. The thought in a few cases by individual farmers was that it was presumptuous for the scientific fellows to come along and attempt to teach them their work. This feeling never was widespread, and it has virtually disappeared.

Children Much Interested.

The boys and girls of the country have shown an admiration and a wonderful interest in the instructive work of the agents of the departments. The canning clubs, the corn clubs and other clubs which have been established have added to the prosperous conditions of the farm, but as yet there is only a beginning. The promise is great for the future. The interest that has been aroused in the young and the increasing assurance of success makes the boys and girls desirous of staying where they see success is certain.

In the agricultural colleges the result of federal and state action in the work of increasing prosperity on the farms of the country is manifest. Young men and young women are taking courses, the men as instructors in the actual farm work and the women as instructors in household economics.

Prosperity is increasing on the farms in the United States. Under recently quickened government aid and general interest in the subject, and under the improved conditions of country life, it seems certain that the pace of prosperity is to be greatly accelerated. Stay on the farm.

For Efficient Farming.

Efficiency is as necessary on the farm as in the factory, the shop or the store. To be efficient in farming involves a certain amount of preparedness just as to be efficient in war involves careful and scientific preparation. It behooves every young man who expects to secure his living from the soil to prepare himself for his life work just as thoroughly as his circumstances will permit. He may do this by studying at home and by observing the methods of successful farmers.

NOTICE!

the largest and best line of Shirts and Neckwear ever shown in St. Joe at

BARNEY'S

ALL NEW

SPENCERVILLE R. F. D. NO. 2

Don't put off any longer. Subscribe now.

Mrs. Della Smith left Saturday for Angola to visit for a few weeks

Earl Stiman and wife and Frank Wertman and wife were Sunday guests of Ed Billman and wife.

Mrs. Wm. Smith was a Thursday guest of Mrs. Louisa Vester, of Antwerp, Ohio.

Lillie Wilson, of Ft. Wayne, visited Sunday with Mrs. Wm. Smith.

Firman Miller was a Sunday guest of Will Bush near Georgetown. Chas. Bush was a Sunday night caller of Mr. Miller.

Greatly reduced prices on Shoes and Oxfords. You can't afford to be without, at the prices we are quoting. Beams & Co.

Lloyd Stevens and wife, of Auburn, spent Sunday with the latter's parents, Chas Eesley.

Lewis Markle and wife were Sunday guests of Samuel Markle and wife.

A baby girl came to bless the home of Vern Kelley and wife, Saturday. Mrs. Kelley will be remembered as Miss Theresa Hay.

Mrs. Kyle and son Clede, spent Sunday with Sarah Kyle.

James Stimons, wife and daughter Gladys, of Huntertown, and Clyde Bice, of Milan Center, motored to this place Sunday and spent the day with Harvey Kimes, Sr, and Minnie Thompson. Other callers were Will Brown and wife, and H. Squiers and wife, of this community.

Sound

Pure Bred

Percheron

Stallion

Right Sort

Enrollment No. 2873

Years past, this horse has been standing at Auburn; but we are now located at St. Joe in the barn just north of the B. & O. tracks near the mill. Will stand for the season at home, 2 miles north of St. Joe on Monday and Tuesday of each week; and on Wednesday, Thursday, Friday and Saturday of each week in the barn at St. Joe

TERMS:

$15 to Insure Living Colt

E. W. BEABER

Owner

S. S. Widney

Justice of the Peace

Insurance and Real Estate

Phone No. 10

ST. JOE, - - - IND

100 Per Cent.

INCREASED EARNINGS.

The following is fac-simile of certificate of Bond issued to each Depositor in this Bank.

No. ________ Grabill, Ind., ________ 19___

Mr. ________________

THIS IS TO CERTIFY that your DEPOSITS in this bank are INSURED under a bond of THE AMERICAN GUARANTY COMPANY of Columbus, Ohio.

THE GRABILL STATE BANK.

PRESERVE THIS. By Albert Egly, Cashier.

Postal Savings pay 2 per cent. Interest and the money is placed in banks who have to furnish a Bond to the government to guarantee that the funds are safe in that Bank.

We pay 4 per cent. Interest and give you the same guarantee. An increased earning of 100 per cent.

THIS is the only Bank in this community thus insuring its depositors.

Total Assets, over $175,000

The Grabill State Bank

Established 1906

Joseph Witmer, President
David Klopfenstine, v. pres.
Albert Egly, Cashier
Joseph A. Grabill, Director
Peter W. Amstutz, Director
Julius Gehrig, Director
John B. Haifley, Chairman Board Directors

JUNE

L 908

0183

Has Your Subscription Expired? Come in and renew it next time you are in town.

ST. JOE NEWS.

NO newspaper can succeed without advertising, therefore we solicit the patronage of our readers for those who by their advertising help to make this paper possible.

VOL. XXX | ST. JOE, DeKALB COUNTY INDIANA, THURSDAY JUNE 15 1916 | NO. 24

OUR TWO BIG FEATURES

One Hundred Years of Indiana History--a series of SIX ARTICLES, which will appear in the next six issues of the News--read the first article on page six of this issue.

"THE TURMOIL," by Booth Tarkington, (the biggest story of the day) is worth more than a years subscription--the first installment appears on page three of this issue. : : :

READ ALL THE NEWS, IN THE NEWS, ALL THE TIME

Daily Jots

John Provines and wife, of Covington, were guests of F. R. Bowmans' a part of last week.

Kit Carson was in town Tuesday, stopping off enroute to Bowling Green, Ohio, where he will work in a printing office.

WOOL!

Dispose of you crop of Wool now and get a good price—and save all that handling and, chance for loosing money. We are prepared to handle wool this spring and you will be guaranteed the highest market price.

Call or Phone to

JACK BEAMS,

Spencerville.

WANTED--To buy your Hay. C. E. Frye, Phone 73-31, St. Joe.

Mrs. Beulah Beard, of Waterloo, was an over Sunday guest of W. H. Randall and wife.

Twine should be bought now and Curie is prepared to supply your demands with McCormick.

A. P. Murphy, of Sherwood, O., visited Jacob Sechler and old friends in St. Joe, a few days this week.

John B. May, father of John May, a former resident of St. Joe, died at Ft Wayne, last week, and was buried at Hamilton, last Sunday.

Improvements are continually being made in St. Joe, and Monday morning Mrs. Harriett Bills secured workmen to paint her house, which will add greatly to the appearance.

McCormick twine at Curie's—make up your order now.

Chas. Bishop and Frank Bowman and their families were at Cold Springs, Sunday. This was the opening day for the season at the Springs and the Hart Boy Band of Hicksville, furnished the music.

The County Sunday School Convention was in progress at Corunna, Tuesday and Wednesday of this week. A number from this vicinity represented the different schools.

Emmet C. Carson and daughter Dessa, of Connelsville, Pa., came Tuesday morning as guests of W. E. Peterson and wife. Miss Dessa will remain for the summer, while Mr. Carson returned home Wednesday.

Binder Twine

Just received a large shipment of Deering Standard binder twine and will be sold as follows:

CASH....................10c Per lb.
SEPT. 1st. Settlement.....10 1-2 c.

Fencing.

2 car load of Page and Lion fence just arrived, to be sold at prices ranging from 30 to 57 cents per rod, a full line of all field, hog and poultry fence.

Special prices on 100 Rods or More.

Fence Posts.

White Cedar Posts..............12 to 75c
Red Cedar Posts, sawed square or tapered at from..............28c to $2.00

Special price on lot of 100 or more.

STEWARD LUMBER & GRAIN Co.

SPENCERVILLE, IND.

Highest Prices Paid for Grain and Seeds.

Announcement!

I have purchased the Meek Restaurant and Ice Cream Parlor. A continuance of your patronage is solicited, and we shall always try to serve you with the best of lunch. Ladies welcome! Our Ice Cream is the Best.

L. J. Miller

OPERA HOUSE BLOCK

St. Joe, Ind.

Obituary

Luther J. Crain was born in De-Kalb County, Indiana, on the 1st. day of December, 1874, and died June 10th., 1916. Age 41 years, 6 month and 9 days. He was united in marriage to Emma L. Campbell on the 4th., day of July, 1901. To this union were born three sons, James A., Percy L., and Elza L. Crain, all of whom with the wife, one sister, two half-brothers and a host of friends remain to mourn his early departure.

Mr. Crain and family spent a greater part of their life in and near the place of his birth. He was always ready to administer to needs of his family and recognized no task as a burden. A loving husband, a kind father and a good neighbor won for him the highest respect of all with whom he came in contact, all of whom will greatly miss him but realize that their loss is his gain. Funeral was held from the Big Run Church, 2 miles east of Butler, Monday. Burial at Church cemetery. Rev. McCloe, officiated. E. R. Kinsey, funeral director.

St. Joe Locals

Patronize the advertisers.

Celebrate at St. Joe, the Fourth.

Miss Elva Frederick, of Hicksville, was an over Sunday guest of Miss Pauline Barney.

New McCormick mower can be seen at Curie's—come in and see it before you buy.

Mrs W. H. Randall is improving slowly. She is now able to set up and she would be pleased for her friends to call at her home.

Call on Ten Eyck & Son at Auburn, Indiana, for early and late tomato, sweet potato, cabbage, bedding plants, geraniums, cannas and coleus plants. Excellent lot to select from. Prices reasonable and good plants guaranteed.

Harry Randall has moved his tools from the saw mill and is now doing business in the new Patterson Garage. Anyone wanting work done will find him there ready to make the necessary repairs.

Notice of Sale of Real Estate

Notice is hereby given that the undersigned, Raymond Rhodes Executor of the will of Rachel Horn, deceased, will offer for sale at private sale on the 10th day of July, 1916, at his residence at the town of Spencerville, DeKalb County, Indiana, the following real estate to-wit:—

The East One Half of the North East Quarter of the South East Quarter of Section number twenty-nine (29) in Township Thirty-three (33) North, Range Fourteen (14) East in said DeKalb County, Indiana.

Said sale will be made pursuant to an order of the DeKalb Circuit Court duly made and entered of record.

The terms of sale will be one-third cash, one-third in six months and one-third in one year, the deferred payments to be evidenced by notes drawing six per cent interest and secured by mortgage back on the premises sold and the privilege is given the purchaser to pay all cash at his option.

Said sale will be continued from day to day, until the real estate is sold.

Raymond Rhodes,
Executor

Edgar W. Atkinson, Atty.

Local Briefs

Read the Free Column.

Subscribe for this paper.

Mrs. Fred Draggoo of Concord, is on the sick list.

See that new McCormick mower at Curie's before you buy.

Alfred Reasoner and wife, of west of Concord, were Sunday guests of J. N. George and family.

A fine line of summer ready made wearables for Women and Children. Schloss' of Auburn.

J. G. Shunk, of Westminister, Md., was the guest of his neice, Mrs. F. M. Thornton, several days last week.

Alfred L. Moudy, Waterloo, is the Prohibition candidate for Governor of Indiana, being nominated last week. A. L. is surely a clean cut temperance man and you always know where to find him.

Sunday School Report.

The following is a true and correct report of the various Sunday Schools in this neighborhood for last Sunday.

M. P.	159	$ 4.62
Lutheran	117	4.57
Christian	75	2.67
Concord	127	3.38
Fairview	20	.55
Coburntown	98	3.04
Newville, C.	85	2.40
U. B.	112	4.02
M. E. Spencer	89	4.00
Lutheran	103	2.77

Death of Mrs. Shull

Mrs. Mariah Shull, sister of Mrs. Dr. Sheffer, of Hart, Mich., was stricken with apoplexy, Saturday evening, and Tuesday a telegram was received stating that she had died on Monday evening. She remained unconscious from the time of the attack until death. They will leave Michigan, Thursday morning, and the funeral will be held Saturday afternoon at 2 o'clock at Coburn's Corners Church. Rev. Mahin, officiating.

LOCAL ITEMS.

D. L. Carpenter purchased an Overland car, last week.

Plan for that Big Firemen's celebration at St. Joe the Fourth.

Mrs. Laura Draggoo is the guest of her son, Fred and wife, at Concord.

Mrs. Lute Foote, of Harlen, is the guest of relatives here a few days.

Mrs. G. M. Barney and daughter Pauline, were at Auburn, Tuesday.

Francis A. Lothamer was at Ft. Wayne last week, attending the Centennial.

It Costs YOU

nothing to open up a checking account. Pass Books and Check Books are furnished you by the Bank. You will always have the exact change when you have a check book in your pocket and money in the Bank.

Try the Check Way.

St. Joe Valley Bank--State Bank

4 per cent. paid on certificates if left 1 Year.

Safety Deposit Boxes for Rent

ALL KIND OF COAL.

We have running now several cars of genuine Pocahontas lump, several cars of the finest kind of free buring West Virginia Lump and several cars of Genuine Scranton Chesnut Coal. It is very advisable to place orders now for coal off the cars.

Mr. Feeder

try a sack of our BRAN & MIDDLINGS. Don't forget that we handle Barrel Salt also Rock Salt. When in town stop in and pay us a visit.

You are always welcome at,

St. Joe Elevator

The Nathan Grain Co.

OWNERS

Fort Wayne, Indiana

SAMUEL KEESLER, Local Manager.

Don't GET Scared

on account of some dealers advancing paint prices out of decency or else handling substitutes that cost less. We are here to deal in reliable qualities so you will come back again and again. Our aim is to have what you want and do business on business principals.

Dunkle's Drug Store

The Place that is always busy.

JUNE

L 908

0 1 8 4

INDIANA 100 YEARS A STATE

Centennial Anniversary of Admission to Union to Be Observed This Year—Interesting Incidents in Early History of Territory and State Related—How It Got Its Name.

GIVES NATION SOME OF GREATEST MEN

By ELLIS SEARLES

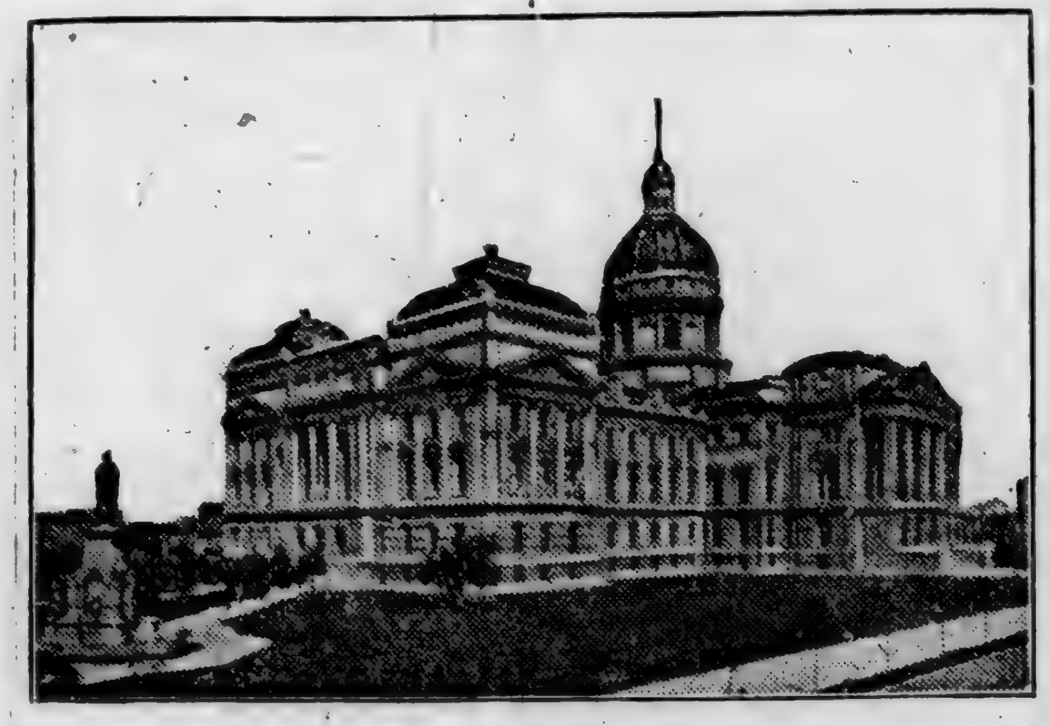
One hundred years ago Indiana became a state and was admitted into the Union. The exact date of this admission into the Union of states was December 11, 1816, but the first state officers qualified on November 7. This was the beginning of what is now one of the great states of the Union, the center of the nation's population and one of the most prosperous and influential of the commonwealths.

The centennial anniversary of Indiana will be observed this year throughout the state with appropriate exercises, although no general plan for the observance has been adopted. Schools, churches, municipalities and civic organizations have arranged for celebrations at various times during the year, each on its own plan. In some places the celebration will take the form of educational exhibits and displays. In other places centennial meetings have been planned. Some have announced pageants for various dates in the spring and summer, the idea in which will be a picture of important and interesting events in the state's history. Some of these pageants will be elaborate affairs, and they will be participated in by hundreds of persons, among them being some of the leading people of the state.

One of these pageants will be made the subject for moving picture films, so that future generations may see in pictures how the first centennial of Indiana was celebrated.

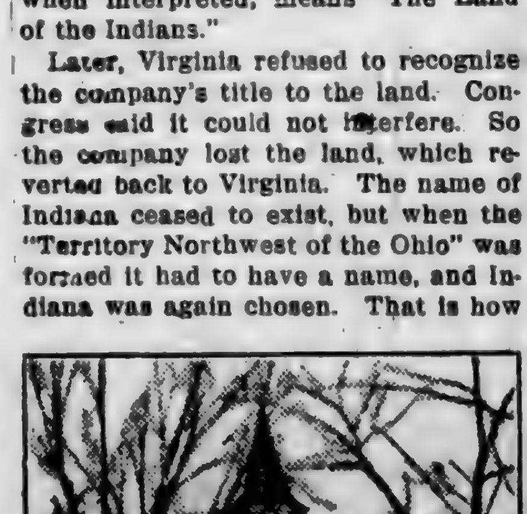
How State Got Its Name.

The Centennial History and Handbook of Indiana, edited by George S. Cottman and Max R. Hyman, and published by Hyman at Indianapolis, is authority for the story of how Indiana got its name. It says that after the French and Indian wars, when the territory had passed into British hands, a trading company was organized in Philadelphia to carry on an extensive fur trade with the Indians of the Ohio valley. A large consignment of the company's goods, valued at half a million dollars, was stolen by a band of Indians. "The Six Nations" had no other way to make settlement with the company than to give it a large tract of land. This was done, and the company called the land Indiana, which, when interpreted, means "The Land of the Indians."



Indiana State Capitol, Indianapolis.

Later, Virginia refused to recognize the company's title to the land. Congress said it could not interfere. So the company lost the land, which reverted back to Virginia. The name of Indiana ceased to exist, but when the "Territory Northwest of the Ohio" was formed it had to have a name, and Indiana was again chosen. That is how it happens that the name is now attached to this state.



Old State House at Corydon.

In 1800, Knox county covered all of the northwest territory that was known as Indiana, and it had a population of 6,550.

Indiana territory was organized and its government began on July 4, 1800, with William Henry Harrison as governor. The capital was at Vincennes.

The first session of the general court of the territory was held at Vincennes on March 3, 1801.

One of the most troublesome problems that confronted the people of Indiana territory at that time was slavery. Governor Harrison leaned toward slavery. He called a convention in 1802 at Vincennes, which sent a memorial to congress asking permission to legalize slavery in Indiana, but the memorial was refused. The antislavery element lined up behind Jonathan Jennings, who led the fight. Jennings became first governor of the state in 1816. The first constitutional convention of the new state firmly fixed antislavery in the constitution.

Government lands were sold in territorial times at $1.50 to $2.00 an acre. The earliest suffrage laws gave the right to vote only to men owning not less than fifty acres of land. Next this was amended so that every man owning a town lot worth $100 might vote.

The first banks were formed in 1814, the "Farmers and Mechanics Bank of Indiana" at Madison, and the "Bank of Vincennes." The latter bank became the State Bank of Indiana. It became so dishonest that its charter was revoked in 1822.

Population in 1810.

A census of Indiana Territory, taken in 1810, showed a population of 24,520. There were 33 grist mills, 14 sawmills, three horse mills, 18 tanneries, 28 distilleries, three powder mills, 1,256 looms and 1,350 spinning wheels. Agriculture was primitive. Farming was the hope of the country. In 1909 the "Vincennes Society for the Encouragement of Useful Arts" was formed. This society was the forerunner of the state board of agriculture.

The first school, of which there is any record, was a private school south of Indianapolis in 1789, attended by Indians and taught by a Frenchman. The first white school was at Vincennes in 1792, taught by Father Rivet. The first institution of higher education was Vincennes university, established in 1807.

The Catholic faith was the first form of Christian religion to be planted in Indiana Territory. St. Xavier's church at Vincennes was the pioneer church. Protestantism was introduced in 1798, when a Baptist church was established near Charlestown.

The first newspaper established was the Indiana Gazette at Vincennes.

In 1816 there were 13 counties; Knox, Clark, Dearborn, Harrison, Jefferson, Franklin, Wayne, Warrick, Gibson, Washington, Posey, Perry and Switzerland. The chief towns were Vincennes, Jeffersonville, Lawrenceburg, Brookville, Corydon, Richmond and a few others.

For several years, the territory had trouble with Indians over land matters, Tecumseh being the Indian leader. However, the battle of Tippecanoe, on November 7, 1811, had a decided effect on the trouble. Gen. William Henry Harrison led the white troops.

There were other campaigns against the Indians, but before Indiana became a state the Indian trouble had ceased.

On the first Monday in August, 1816, the first election for the state of Indiana was held. Jonathan Jennings was elected governor, and William Harrison lieutenant governor. William Hendricks was the first congressman. Hendricks afterward became governor.

The first legislature consisted of ten senators and 29 representatives. The state's first capital was at Corydon.

Locating State Capital.

The population increased from 64,000 in 1816 to 147,178 in 1820. In 1820 a commission appointed by the legislature to find a new location for the state capital went to the present site of Indianapolis and selected that place on the banks of White river as the new seat of government, and the archives of the state were moved there.

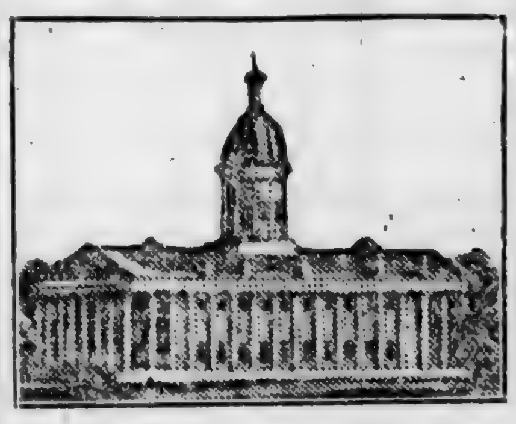
Hard times prevailed in the new state up to 1825, and money was scarce. There was great difficulty in collecting taxes. Land was appraised at from 75 cents to $1.50 an acre. Every horse and mule over three years old was assessed at 37½ cents, and other property in proportion.

The State Bank of Indiana was chartered in 1834, with a capital stock of $1,600,000. It had branches in Indianapolis, Lawrenceburg, Richmond, Madison, New Albany, Evansville, Vincennes, Bedford, Terre Haute, Lafayette, Fort Wayne, South Bend and Michigan City. The bank continued in business until 1859.

In 1850 the population of Indiana had grown to 341,582. Politics was played just as vigorously in those days as it is played today. Everybody wanted a public office. So vicious did partisanship become that Governor Ray, in a message to the legislature in 1831, denounced it as "assailing the vitals of the first principles of the Republic."

For many years industry in Indiana was confined to agriculture and the manufacture of home products, such as fabrics for clothing. Transportation facilities were wretched. The Ohio and Wabash rivers permitted of navigation, and most of the shipping was done that way.

The new constitution made wide provision for education, but development of an educational system was a slow process. Log schoolhouses sprang up everywhere, but the schools were poor. But it was bound to come in time, and in the twenties and thirties a number of important schools had their beginning, including Indiana university, Hanover college and Wabash college.



First State House in Indianapolis.

The Baptist, Methodist, Presbyterian, Christian and Catholic denominations made rapid progress. Newspapers were established in many places.

Early Road Building.

The question of establishing roads so that markets might be reached occupied much of the attention of the early citizens of Indiana. The National road, running from Cumberland, Md., to St. Louis, was established by the government. The Michigan road from Madison, Ind., to Trail Creek, Lake Michigan, was built in the thirties.

Several canals for navigation were constructed in the twenties and thirties, among them being the Whitewater canal and the Wabash and Erie canal.

By 1840 there were 87 counties in the state, and development was rapid. Capital sought investment and business flourished.

New Albany was the largest town, with 4,220 inhabitants. Indianapolis had but 2,692. There were 73 newspapers in the state. Numerous state benevolent institutions were established in the forties.

By 1850 the population had increased to 988,416.

The first railroad between Madison and Edinburg was built in 1839.

Indiana sent 5,000 soldiers into the Mexican war.

A new constitution was adopted at a convention held in 1851. This constitution is still in effect.

Many plank roads were built in the fifties. Railroad building was pushed in the forties, and a network of lines covered the state.

The slavery question split the citizenry of Indiana, and there was great turmoil before the outbreak of the Civil war. Gov. Oliver P. Morton opposed slavery, and offered President Lincoln 10,000 Indiana soldiers. The majority in Indiana was loyal to the Union. Indiana sent more soldiers into the Union army in proportion to its population than any other state except Delaware, the total being 208,367. Of these 24,416 died and 13,779 were unaccounted for.

Three Indiana regiments took part in the first battle of the war, and the first Union soldier killed was an Indianian. The last battle was fought by Indiana troops, the last gun fired at the enemy was by an Indianian, and the last Union soldier killed in battle was John J. Williams, Company B, Thirty-fourth Indiana regiment.

The Morgan raid through southern Indiana was one of the features of the war. There were several treasonable organizations in Indiana during the war but they were broken up.

Goes Forward Rapidly.

Since the close of the Civil war the state of Indiana has gone forward at a rapid pace. The population has increased to more than 2,800,000. Great industries have been developed, railroads now cover the state like a spider web. Cities have grown enormously, and the country has become rich from its products. The state has coal, gas and oil in abundance.

Indiana contributed one president, Benjamin Harrison, and four vice presidents, Schuyler Colfax, Thomas A. Hendricks, Charles W. Fairbanks and Thomas R. Marshall. It has given the nation some of its greatest men in various lines. It has become the center of literature. It sent several thousand brave soldiers to the Spanish American war.

Indiana is a great state at the end of its first one hundred years, and it is justified in celebrating its centennial anniversary.

Hollow Pretense.

How hollow is all our pretension to progress, when we have never devised a punishment for the human trip-hammer who always thinks it is necessary to smite one on the shoulder in greeting, or the human vise who puts forth every ounce of his strength in shaking hands—Judge.

HAS POWER TO CONTROL SPEED

SUPREME COURT HOLDS THAT ORDINANCE AT NEW POINT IS VALID.

BIG FOUR LOSES ITS APPEAL

Declares the Court Has No Right to Interfere With the Power of the City Council, as Delegated to Them by Statute.

Indianapolis.—Although a town may be of small population and a railroad may run through it many trains carrying interstate commerce and United States mail, the town is authorized to regulate the speed of the trains through the town, the supreme court ruled. The ruling affirmed a judgment of the Bartholomew circuit court for $5 against the Big Four railroad and for the town of New Point for the violation of an ordinance limiting the speed of trains through the town to 12 miles an hour.

The judgment of the trial court was made on its rulings on demurrers to answers by the railroad company. One of these answers was that the ordinance was unreasonable, and for that reason void, because New Point had only 341 inhabitants, three-fourths of whom live on the north side of the railroad; that the railroad is a double-track road, and that a train can be seen for 50 rods before entering the town. The answers said there is a subway under the road permitting the inhabitants to cross from one side to the other of the tracks in absolute safety, and that only four streets cross the railroad at grade.

The railroad is an interstate road and carries United States mail, running 14 passenger and 16 freight trains daily, the answer says, and all trains are equipped with whistles and bells to give warning. Four of the passenger trains daily stop at the station, and seven of the trains pass through the town between 10 p. m. and 5 a. m., the answer said.

The supreme court holds that this is not a showing giving the courts a right to interfere with the power of the city council, as delegated to them by the statute, to regulate the operation of trains across the streets of the town. The railroad company in the argument in its brief, presses the question of the need of the traveler on the train for speed and the present arrangements for the control of the trains and their weight and the burdensomeness of ordinances of small towns on the question of the reasonableness of the ordinance.

774,318 School Children.

Indiana has 774,318 children of school age, according to the final totals of the common school enumeration throughout the state, which have just been completed in the office of Charles A. Greathouse, state superintendent of public instruction, by Ernest L. Welborn, an assistant.

The 1916 totals represent a gain of 5,696 over the total enumeration of children last year. The children enumerated are between the ages of six and twenty-one years, and on the enumeration in each school corporation of the state is based the apportionment of state school revenues for the ensuing year. The total enumeration for last year was 768,622.

The school enrollment for last year was 552,927, thus showing that more than 200,000 children of school age are not in the schools. The average daily attendance last year was only 452,765.

The total enumeration (taken in April of this year) for townships, towns and cities was as follows: Townships, 389,152; towns, 47,273, and cities, 237,893. The total number of white boys of school age in the state was 391,437; the total number of white girls was 366,223; the total number of colored boys, 8,467, and the total number of colored girls, 8,191.

Exposition Commission's Report.

The Indiana Panama-Pacific exposition commission, in its long awaited report just filed, shows that $123,000 out of an appropriation of $135,000 was spent.

Among the items of expense was shown an appropriation of $2,600 for the publication of a "memento" of the exposition by Ronald O'Neill, son of Lieutenant Governor O'Neill, chairman of the commission, and a contract by which he received 25 per cent of the advertising receipts. Another item was an appropriation of $1,000 for each of the wives of members of the commission. Governor Ralston returned $400 of his $1,000 appropriation.

New Incorporations.

The Laporte Foundry and Furnace company, Laporte, Ind.; capital, $50,000; to manufacture and sell machinery and furnaces. Directors—George W. Gilderman, William N. Rumely, A. J. Rumely, Charles E. Wolfe, Andrew J. Hicket.

Auburn Auto company, Fort Wayne, Ind.; file final certificate of dissolution.

Hornaday Crawford company, Noblesville, Ind., changed its name to Noblesville Sanitary Milk Products company.

Ruling for Man Who Lost Arm.

The supreme court reversed the appellate court and affirmed the Howard circuit court in giving Frank Loy a judgment for $3,500 against the city of Kokomo for injuries suffered when explosives inside a cannon in a Kokomo park exploded when he was cleaning out the cannon, under the direction of the person acting as superintendent of the park. The appellate court reversed the trial court, holding that the complaint was sufficient in that it showed that Loy was working for the city in assisting in taking care of the park, and that a park is a part of the city, so that the person working for the citi in caring for the park could not recover for any negligence of the city or its foremen or superintendents in giving negligent orders for the performance of dangerous tasks.

The supreme court reverses this holding, and in the opinion shows that there is a conflict in the opinions of other states in regard to the liability of a city for negligence incident to the care of its streets and parks, but that New York adopted the rule making a city liable for injuries caused by its negligence in the care of its streets. The court then says: "In this state scarcely any authority need be cited to show that our courts have accepted the doctrine recognized in New York that our cities are held liable for damages arising from the neglect of such cities in keeping their streets and highways in repair. Such liability is fixed by an unvarying line of decisions and has been stated to arise from the common law principle, that where a power and a duty are imposed, a corresponding liability arises for the proper exercise of that power and the discharge of that duty. (Citation of authority.) Although no case has been decided in this state which determines the liability of a city for neglect in the management of a park, the same reasons which affirm the city's liability in respect to its streets are present in the consideration of a city's liability in respect to the management of a park. . . . The liability of a city in this state for the proper maintenance of a park may thus be consistently placed upon the theory that where a power is given and a duty imposed a corresponding liability arises for the proper exercise thereof."

In this case it was shown that some mischievous persons placed some explosives in an old cannon in the Kokomo city park, and that on July 3, 1911, the person at that time acting as superintendent of the park, a veteran of the Civil war, prepared a long wire with a hook on the end of it and ordered Mr. Loy, who was working as one of the caretakers of the park, to operate the hooked wire to remove the explosives. In answer to Loy's protests he assured Loy there was no danger in so doing, and ordered him to proceed with the work. While he was so engaged the explosives in some way went off, tearing away Loy's right arm and otherwise injuring him. Suit was brought against the city, but the city contended that it was not liable for injuries to its employees, although they were acting in direct compliance to express order, contending that the state is not liable to its employees, and that a city in managing its parks was only an arm of the state, and for that reason not liable for injuries to its employees. This contention was overruled by the trial court, sustained by the appellate court and now overruled by the supreme court, which affirms the judgment in favor of Mr. Loy as against each ground of attack by the city.

Scale Attacking Trees.

The cottony maple scale is attacking maple trees throughout the city of Indianapolis, and probably elsewhere in the state, to a degree that is causing alarm to those who depend for shade on that family of trees. Frank N. Wallace, state entomologist, said that dozens of persons in the city are sending specimens of the work of the scale to his office. The scale at this time is just laying eggs and the tree branches, on which the scale is working, are covered with nests of eggs, which look a great deal like small bolls of cotton.

The scale lays eggs at a tremendously rapid rate, according to Mr. Wallace, and only the costly method of spraying the underside of the branches and leaves with nicotine sulphate will do anything to stop its inroads now, he said. The proper time to spray the trees is in the winter, when lime-sulphur solution should be used.

Each boll from the scale contains some 50,000 eggs, or more. Six years ago the cottony scale attacked Indianapolis shade trees and the ravages were severe, Wallace said. Many maple trees died. Wallace said the reports this year show that the soft maple trees are suffering more.

The annual report from the office of the state entomologist for 1914-1915, prepared by C. H. Baldwin, former entomologist, is just from the press. It contains the names of Indiana nurserymen and much valuable information concerning blights, scales and other types of life which attack fruit and shade trees and other plants.

Commutes Sentence.

Indianapolis. — Governor Ralston commuted the life sentence of William Steel, a murderer of Lake county, to not more than 21 years. Steel murdered his sister-in-law, he said, in 1912, to protect his wife from her evil influence.

Hunter Reappointed.

Gary.—George M. Hunter, a steel corporation official, has been reappointed a member of the Gary school board for another term. Mr. Hunter is president of the Gary school board.

KEEP YOUNG

As well be young at 70 as old at 50.

Many elderly people suffer lame, bent, aching backs, and distressing urinary disorders, when a little help for the kidneys would fix it all up. Don't wait for gravel, or Bright's disease. Use Doan's Kidney Pills. They have helped thousands, young and old, and are recommended by thousands.

An Indiana Case

"Every Picture Tells a Story"

Mrs. H. Homer Walmer, 521 W. Wiley Ave., Bluffton, Ind., says: "My back was weak and lame and mornings when I got up, I was so stiff I could hardly get around. Black spots floated before my eyes and I had bad dizzy spells and headaches. There were puffy sacs under my eyes and my feet were swollen, too. Doan's Kidney Pills completely cured me."

Get Doan's at Any Store, 50c a Box

DOAN'S KIDNEY PILLS

FOSTER-MILBURN CO., BUFFALO, N. Y.

THE HIGH QUALITY SEWING MACHINE

NEW HOME

NOT SOLD UNDER ANY OTHER NAME

Write for free booklet "Points to be considered before purchasing a Sewing Machine." Learn the facts.

THE NEW HOME SEWING MACHINE CO., ORANGE, MASS.

PATENTS Watson E. Coleman, Patent Lawyer, Washington, D. C. Advice and books free. Rates reasonable. Highest references. Best services.

GALLSTONES

Avoid operations. Positive remedy—(No Oil)—Results sure. Write for our big Book of Truth and Facts To-Day. FREE

Gallstone Remedy Co., Dept. C-60, 219 S. Dearborn St., Chicago

W. N. U., FORT WAYNE, NO. 25–1916.

For the benefit of designers London has established a furniture museum.

For genuine comfort and lasting pleasure use Red Cross Ball Blue on wash day. All good grocers. Adv.

Analogous Cases.

"One of the most persuasive men I have ever met," remarked Mr. Jagsby.

"Yes," replied his friend.

"I hadn't been with him two minutes before he persuaded me to take a drink."

"Umph!"

"Why the cynicism?"

"I was just thinking that it doesn't require much coaxing to make a hungry wolf pounce on a piece of raw meat."

Civic Rivalry.

"I hear you had a cyclone out this way last week."

"It was nothing to speak of," answered the Kansas man. "Just blew away a few hencoops."

"But I heard that the county courthouse at Galesburg was blown away."

"Well, sir, we citizens of the enterprising city of Gadsville, the logical place in the country for that courthouse, always refer to Gadsville's makeshift affair as a hencoop."

His Identity.

We met a man with the most astoundingly lugubrious cast of countenance that we had ever seen. Gloom sat on his brow like a brooding condor on her nest and an abysmal sadness seemed devouring him.

"Ah!" said we, "we perceive that you are a celebrated wag, for, in sooth, we have never before in all of woe's appointed ways beheld such a personification of wretchedness."

"No," he replied, "I am not a humorist. I feel as sad as I look. I am a pacifist, and believe that preparedness will inevitably bring on war."

"You do well to mourn your awful condition," we returned. "If you were a humorist you might get over it. But you are a dad-burned fool, and there is no help for you!"

A Man's Worth

depends upon his power to produce what the world recognizes as of value.

And when you skirmish around you'll find that this power—which is just power of mind and body—depends to a remarkable degree on the food one eats.

For highest accomplishment one must have the best values in food—food which builds well-balanced bodies and brains.

Grape-Nuts FOOD

has that kind of value. It contains all the nutriment of whole wheat and barley, including the important mineral elements so often lacking in the usual dietary.

Grape-Nuts comes ready to eat, is easy to digest, nourishing, economical, wonderfully delicious—a help in building men of worth.

"There's a Reason"

No bother to get summer meals with these on hand

Libby's Vienna Style Sausage and Potted Meats

Just open and serve. Excellent for sandwiches.

Insist on Libby's at your grocer's.

Libby, McNeill & Libby, Chicago

Big Sturgeon on Trot Line.

A 400-pound fish was caught in the Sacramento river by Eugene Barion, the "musical fisherman." Barion is called the "musical fisherman" because his 200-foot trot line stretched across the Sacramento at Middle creek is equipped with a chime of twelve Swiss bells—one for each line dangling from the main line with spoon attached.

Barion's catch was a sturgeon, a big fish that measured seven feet without the head. When the sturgeon grabbed the hook every one of the twelve bells rang a clatter that awakened him from his afternoon nap in his cabin ashore.

The "musical fisherman" was unable to land his big catch alone. He had to call in the assistance of two neighbors. Barion's catch netted him $63.—Redding (Cal.) Dispatch to San Francisco Call.

By Compulsion.

"Do you think you will go away for the summer?"

"Yes," replied the meek-looking man. "I expect to be perfectly miserable and spend a great deal more money than I can afford to spend, but I happen to have two marriageable daughters and a strong-minded wife, so I think I will go away for the summer."

It doesn't improve the looks of China to have it Japanned.

FURRED TONGUE NO PROOF

Why It Is Supposed to Indicate Digestive Disturbance Never Has Been Explained.

Just why a furred tongue is supposed to be an indication of a disturbance of the digestive apparatus has never been explained. The Medical Record calls to mind "the respected (and feared) spinster in our community a good many years ago who had her own opinion about doctors. Urged to consult one of their fraternity when a little indisposed, she would repel the suggestion with scorn 'All they do,' she would say, 'is to say, "Let's see your tongue. How's your bowels? Two dollars, please."'"

The editor says he has known physicians of the old school who could diagnose a case by looking at the tongue, just as he has known a physician who could "diagnose" a case of pneumonia in a child he had never seen before when he got ten feet away from the bed. And what is more, he could tell which side it was on and even designate the lobe affected in some cases."

Of course this is sarcasm. The editor is ridiculing the furred tongue as a symptom of trouble in the digestive apparatus.

Consulting a Lawyer.

"That is my opinion. Twenty-five dollars, please."

"I got the same opinion from another lawyer and he charged me $5."

"Uh. You had no confidence in him."

"N-no."

"But you have in me?"

"Y-yes."

"Precisely. Our opinions are the same, but the difference in the cost is $20. And to have confidence in your case is well worth $20. This war in Europe is a terrible affair, is it not?"—Philadelphia Ledger.

Between Two Fires.

The young doctor and his friend, the drug clerk, were sitting at the club window, when a richly dressed woman passed.

"There goes the only woman I ever loved," sighed the young M. D.

"So?" queried the other. "Then why don't you marry her?"

"Can't afford it," replied the pill distributer, "she's my best patient."

Efficiency.

Mrs. Knicker—We can't keep a cook.

Mrs. Bocker—Advertise for a food dictator.

The Delight of Children

The self-developed, inner-flavour of New Post Toasties bear a unique attraction for the kiddies—they even like them dry from the package for their lunches. A box of Toasties provides "eats" that will delight the children.

New Post Toasties are usually served with cream and sugar, in which form the flavour is more pronounced and the flakes more delicious. These New Toasties do not "chaff" or crumble in the package and they don't mush down in cream—both common defects of old-fashioned "corn flakes."

Then, too, notice the tiny bubbles on the flakes, produced by the quick, intense heat of a new patented process of making which imparts delightful crispness and a substantial body to the flakes.

New Post Toasties are a vast improvement over any old-style "corn flakes."

For tomorrow's breakfast—

New Post Toasties

Sold by Grocers everywhere.

INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

(By E. O. SELLERS, Acting Director of the Sunday School Course in the Moody Bible Institute of Chicago.)
(Copyright by Western Newspaper Union.)

LESSON FOR JUNE 18.

THE PHILIPPIAN JAILER.

LESSON TEXT—Acts 16:16-40.
GOLDEN TEXT—Believe on the Lord Jesus and thou shalt be saved, thou and thy house.—Acts 16:31.

Dean Vaughn has said of this lesson that in it "we have an epitome of the whole history of the gospel." The time was A. D. 50 or 52 and the place was Philippi, an important city, as before suggested.

I. The Damsel Delivered of Demons (vv. 16-18). On their way to the praying place where they had met Lydia, the disciples met this maid who "had a spirit, a Python." Greek soothsayers were supposed to be inspired by Apollo, who killed a great snake at Mt. Parnassus and left it to rot. The girl was probably possessed of hysteria and thus spoke strange words, and her condition brought much profit to her masters, who professed to interpret her words. This evidence of evil possession awoke a sympathetic response in Paul's heart. "Her misery and degradation were a symbol of the degradation, as Lydia's sweet and benevolent Christian character was of the transfiguration of womanhood."—Stalker. Her cry after Paul was perhaps that they were the slaves of some god, even as she was the slave of Apollo. The Gadarene (Luke 8:28) used similar language. Paul did not at once stop her (v. 8), perhaps to avoid a controversy, but his deliberation made more profound the final deliverance wrought. Worn out at last with her cries, but taking no credit himself, Paul spoke the name of Power which had foretold just such acts (Mk. 16:17; Lk. 9:1; Lk. 10:17).

II. The Disciples in Prison (vv. 19-24.) Of no further commercial value, the slave drivers sought revenge by inciting a mob to attack Paul and his companions. So today the liquor interests would seek remuneration for the loss of their "business," and anathematize their opponents, while the underworld tries to overthrow all who seek to restrain them. Paul and Silas were accused of "troubling" the city, for the trade has been interfered with. It, indeed, went hard with them thus to be unjustly set upon and finally, through the connivance of the spineless authorities, to be incarcerated in a filthy dungeon. Still, though the majority was against them, yet the mob was not right (compare 17:5; 18:12; 19:28-29), and they had One on their side who was sufficient (Rom 8:28).

III. Deliverance and Salvation (vv 25-35). Christ before Pilate was accused of sedition, and these flogged disciples were likewise innocent sufferers. (1) Prayer and praise (25-26). Note the circumstances—darkness, torn and bleeding, aching backs and a morrow filled with blackness. There was no sleep for the disciples at that midnight hour, but often strength is better gained in prayer than sleep. "Praying, they sang hymns,"—in the midst of that heterogeneous lot of prisoners they did not, could not, keep silent. The result was attentive listening by the other prisoners and by a loving Heavenly Father, who shook the place to evidence his interest (v. 26). (2) The jailed delivered. The place was so shaken that every barred door was opened and the staples of the stocks were so loosened as to liberate every prisoner. (3) The jailer saved. The brutal one is now the anxious inquirer, and becomes a good type for all to follow who are out of Christ. (a) He saw he was lost. He was subject to the same death as his escaped prisoners. "Supposing" (v. 27) has darkened many lives, and our greatest sorrows are often imagined. Face to face with death, the jailer would plunge into an eternity for which he was not prepared. Paul's clarion call brought the jailer to express his anxiety (v. 29), and it was not a trifling nor skeptically indifferent man who appealed to Paul. He was brought face to face with two holy men, with God and with eternity.

Those to whom he came knew the facts, had faith, and could meet the emergencies of life with confidence.

IV. The Humbled Magistrates (vv. 35-40). The jailer evidences joy, hospitality and a changed home, which news must have reached the magistrates. Their early command was to "let these fellows go." Paul here rises to his full dignity. Beaten openly, condemned without trial and verdict, does not allow them to cover their crime and blunder by stealth.

The magistrates were liable to loss of position, goods, and even life, and hence willingly did all that Paul required.

Thus the imprisonment turned out to the honor of the apostle and the glory of God.

Nor did Paul hasten at all in leaving the city.

After recovering strength to travel and encouraging the members of the infant church they departed, taking Timothy (17:14) with them.

Thus God gloriously delivered those who labored amidst sore trials, and there was established in Philippi a church which was dear to Paul and which was especially kind to Paul, and to which is directed one of his most tender epistles.

WOMEN SUFFERERS NEED SWAMP-ROOT

Thousands upon thousands of women have kidney and bladder trouble and never suspect it.

Women's complaints often prove to be nothing else but kidney trouble, or the result of kidney or bladder disease.

If the kidneys are not in a healthy condition, they may cause the other organs to become diseased.

You may suffer a great deal with pain in the back, headache, loss of ambition, nervousness and may be despondent and irritable.

Don't delay starting treatment. Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, a physician's prescription, obtained at any drug store, restores health to the kidneys and is just the remedy needed to overcome such conditions.

Get a fifty cent or one dollar bottle immediately from any drug store.

However, if you wish first to test this great preparation send ten cents to Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y., for a sample bottle. When writing be sure and mention this paper.—Adv.

He Had the Price.

Bill McCabe's Poughkeepsie team was playing the Kingston team one day years ago, in the Atlantic league, and a guy named Fogarty was umpire. In the ninth inning, with the score tied, two of McCabe's men played out, and as Bill had only one man extra, he had to rush the bleacher seats to find a man to fill in. He drew a big hick, who said he couldn't play, but for the fun could fill in. There were two out at the time and the fans were excited.

Our hero, the hick, came to bat. He drew three balls and the next one across he pickled over the left field fence for a homer. Instead of running, the fathead stood there while the crowd howled itself mad. McCabe ran out to him and yelled, "Run, you boob, run!"

The hick turned and faced Bill and in a slow voice drawled: "No, sir, I won't run. I'm no coward. I'll admit I lost your ball, but I got the money right here in my pocket to pay for it."

New Absorbent in Surgery.

One medical outcome of the war is the discovery that sphagnum moss and fine sawdust are excellent substitutes for absorbent cotton as dressings for wounds. The moss is the long-fibered kind commonly found in swampy places in this country that florists and nurserymen use for protecting the roots of plants during shipment. It takes up moisture better than absorbent cotton and does not grow sodden so quickly. Of course both the moss and the sawdust are sterilized before they are used for dressings.—Youth's Companion.

TORTURING SKIN TROUBLES

That Itch, Burn and Disfigure Healed by Cuticura. Trial Free.

Bathe with plenty of Cuticura Soap and hot water to cleanse and purify. Dry lightly and apply Cuticura Ointment to soothe and heal. This stops itching instantly, clears away pimples, removes dandruff and scalp irritations, and heals red, rough, sore hands.

Free sample each by mail with Book. Address postcard, Cuticura, Dept. L, Boston. Sold everywhere.—Adv.

Fooled! He Bit.

"Yes, I told father that white poker chip I dropped was a peppermint tablet."

"Did he swallow it?"—Hobart Herald.

Happy is the home where Red Cross Ball Blue is used. Sure to please. All grocers. Adv.

Life isn't always a joke for the chap who lives by his wits.

ASSOCIATIONS ARE A HABIT

We Even Form Clubs Over Question of Teething Rings Vs. Thumb.

Our passion for getting up associations is a bad symptom of intellectual foolishness. Every trade and profession among us, every interest and prejudice, every aspiration, hypothesis or question about a question has a gang of club members at its back.

The fashionable mothers get up societies to determine what plays their children shall see during the holidays. I know of one woman who was not able to decide whether she should give a rubber ring or a coral to her teething child or should leave him to nature and the thumb. She accordingly formed a society. It is called the Ring and Coral association and meets twice a month. It has recently split into two organizations through the secession of the antiring and coralites. By means of these two societies any mother may today escape the mental anguish of making a decision for herself upon this teething matter.—John J. Chapman, in Atlantic Monthly.

BEAUTY AND HEALTH

Attractive teeth complete a pretty face. Teeth cannot be attractive unless they are kept clean. The best preparation for this purpose is "SPEARMINTO" TOOTH PASTE, the FORMULA of JOHN O. BUTLER, D. D. S. Whitens teeth. Overcomes bad breath. Prevents formation of TARTAR. Use it every day. Does not contain ALCOHOL—SOAP—GRIT—COLORING or other injurious ingredients. At Drug Stores or by mail, prepaid 25c. Liberal sample and "DIRECTIONS FOR PROPER CARE OF THE TEETH" sent prepaid for 4c. Address, THE SPEARMINTO COMPANY, 336 W. 63rd St., Chicago, Ill.—Adv.

Not Available This Year.

The Rev. W. H. Book, pastor of the Tabernacle Christian church of Columbus, is telling a story told him by a schoolteacher in a county not far from Bartholomew. The teacher and the township trustee were talking over plans for the annual school commencement. The question of a speaker for commencement arose.

"Let's get this here Rip Van Winkle to made the speech," suggested the township trustee.

"Who?" asked the surprised teacher.

"Why, this here Rip Van Winkle," the trustee replied. "I've heard a good deal about him and I thought maybe he might make a right smart speech."

The teacher had to tell the trustee that Rip was not available for commencement addresses this year.

Carnation Size.

A society debutante is bemoaning the loss of a perfectly eligible beau. She can't think why. A certain florist to whom she turned back $20 worth of orchids a couple of weeks ago on a refund of $10 might be able to throw a little light on the subject. You see he thought she looked like orchids, but she and her mamma knew she was only carnations. He knows it now, too.

I Didn't Think It of Her.

Mother—Gladys, you stood on the porch quite a while with that young man last night.

Gladys—Why, mother, I only stood there for a second.

Mother—But I'm sure I heard the third and the fourth.

FITS, EPILEPSY, FALLING SICKNESS Stopped Quickly. Fifty years of uninterrupted success of Dr. Kline's Epilepsy Medicine insures lasting results. LARGE TRIAL BOTTLE FREE. DR. KLINE COMPANY, Red Bank, N. J.—Adv.

Two lovers can make a street car full of people awfully seasick.

A REMARKABLE STATEMENT

Mrs. Sheldon Spent $1900 for Treatment Without Benefit. Finally Made Well by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Englewood, Ill.—"While going through the Change of Life I suffered with headaches, nervousness, flashes of heat, and I suffered so much I did not know what I was doing at times. I spent $1900 on doctors and not one did me any good. One day a lady called at my house and said she had been as sick as I was at one time, and Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound made her well, so I took it and now I am just as well as I ever was. I cannot understand why women don't see how much pain and suffering they would escape by taking your medicine. I cannot praise it enough for it saved my life and kept me from the Insane Hospital."—Mrs. E. SHELDON, 5657 S. Halsted St., Englewood, Ill.

Physicians undoubtedly did their best, battled with this case steadily and could do no more, but often the most scientific treatment is surpassed by the medicinal properties of the good old fashioned roots and herbs contained in Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

If any complication exists it pays to write the Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co., Lynn, Mass., for special free advice.

Make the Liver Do its Duty

Nine times in ten when the liver is right the stomach and bowels are right.

CARTER'S LITTLE LIVER PILLS gently but firmly compel a lazy liver to do its duty.

Cures Constipation, Indigestion, Sick Headache, and Distress After Eating.

SMALL PILL, SMALL DOSE, SMALL PRICE.

Genuine must bear Signature

Brent Good

Every Woman Wants

Paxtine

ANTISEPTIC POWDER

FOR PERSONAL HYGIENE

Dissolved in water for douches stops pelvic catarrh, ulceration and inflammation. Recommended by Lydia E. Pinkham Med. Co. for ten years. A healing wonder for nasal catarrh, sore throat and sore eyes. Economical. Has extraordinary cleansing and germicidal power. Sample Free. 50c. all druggists, or postpaid by mail. The Paxton Toilet Company, Boston, Mass.

Kill All Flies! They Spread Disease

Placed anywhere, Daisy Fly Killer attracts and kills all flies. Neat, clean, ornamental, convenient, and cheap.

Lasts all season. Made of metal, can't spill or tip over; will not soil or injure anything. Guaranteed effective. Ask for

Daisy Fly Killer

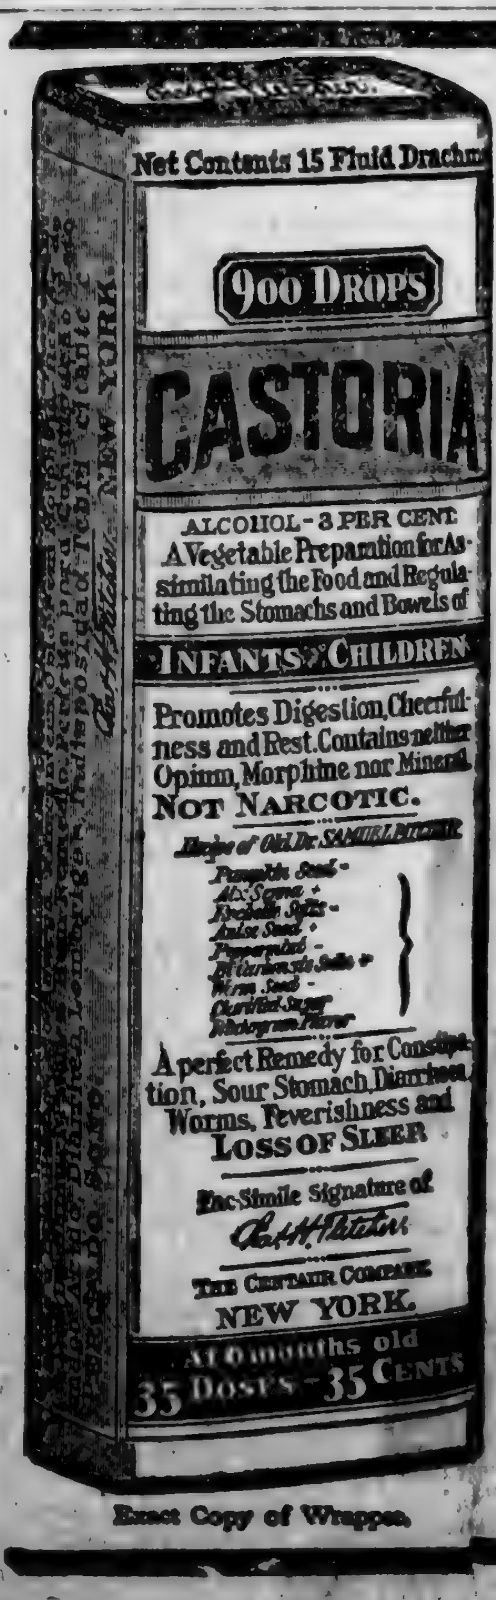
Sold by dealers, or 6 sent by express, prepaid, $1.00.

HAROLD SOMERS, 150 DeKalb Ave., Brooklyn, N. Y.

PARKER'S HAIR BALSAM

A toilet preparation of merit. Helps to eradicate dandruff. For Restoring Color and Beauty to Gray or Faded Hair. 50c. and $1.00 at Druggists.

A 60-TON SILO $75 No Scaffolding Erected One Day Agents Wanted Thousands in use Fully Guaranteed. Bonita Farm, Raymore, Mo.



Net Contents 15 Fluid Drachm
900 DROPS
CASTORIA
ALCOHOL-3 PER CENT.
A Vegetable Preparation for Assimilating the Food and Regulating the Stomachs and Bowels of
INFANTS & CHILDREN
Promotes Digestion, Cheerfulness and Rest. Contains neither Opium, Morphine nor Mineral.
NOT NARCOTIC.
A perfect Remedy for Constipation, Sour Stomach, Diarrhoea, Worms, Feverishness and LOSS OF SLEEP.
Fac-Simile Signature of
THE CENTAUR COMPANY, NEW YORK.
At 6 months old
35 DOSES—35 CENTS

Exact Copy of Wrapper.

Children Cry For

Fletcher's

CASTORIA

What is CASTORIA

Castoria is a harmless substitute for Castor Oil, Paregoric, Drops and Soothing Syrups. It is pleasant. It contains neither Opium, Morphine nor other Narcotic substance. Its age is its guarantee. It destroys Worms and allays Feverishness. For more than thirty years it has been in constant use for the relief of Constipation, Flatulency, Wind Colic, all Teething Troubles and Diarrhœa. It regulates the Stomach and Bowels, assimilates the Food, giving healthy and natural sleep. The Children's Panacea—The Mother's Friend.

GENUINE CASTORIA ALWAYS

Bears the Signature of

Chas. H. Fletcher.

In Use For Over 30 Years

The Kind You Have Always Bought

THE CENTAUR COMPANY, NEW YORK CITY.

JUNE

L 908

0186

The St. Joe News

Fred B. Leighty, Editor

Mrs. Iora Leighty, Associate

One Year, - - -	$1.00
Six Months, - - -	.50
Three Months, - -	.25

Entered at the postoffice at St. Joe, Indiana, as second class matter.

INDIANA ASSOCIATED WEEKLIES

AN INJURY TO ONE IS THE CONCERN OF ALL

Private Opinions Publicly Expressed

Last Thursday morning, a mendicant appeared upon our streets, who to all appearances was suffering from some nervous affliction. Dropping into the editor's office and inquiring if the editor was in, and being told that he was out, he replied: "Thank you, young lady, you are the only person on this side of the street who has given me a civil answer. I see you have several churches and people seem to be hard hearted in towns where there are many churches".

After making this remark he offered a half apology for what he had said, by saying, "Christianity is all right, but there is a difference between religion and Christianity". Is this to be accepted as a true statement of conditions as they exist in church communities? Isn't there something to be said on the other side? Is it not a fact that tax-payers are supporting institutions for the care of all worthy unfortunates? What necessity exists for the practice of "pan-handling?" Even the saying of Christ, "Inasmuch as ye did it not unto the least of these", surely does not place the burden of responsibility upon the shoulder of him who refuses to listen to the wail of every mendicant who solicits ail.

Indeed, promiscuous giving, in many cases, is an encouragement to conscienceless individuals to play the part of th leech, as investigation will show. Surely there is needed a readjustment in a plain sensible application of the Nazarenes teaching to correct this evil which is becoming more and more an annoyance as time rolls on.

OBSERVER.

Personal Items

Send in your news items.

Another application of oil is being applied on the roads this week.

Buy your next writing tablet and package of envelopes at this office.

Schloss' of Auburn are showing a fine line of Summer Dress Materials.

Subscriptions taken for new or renewals of any magazine published, at The News office.

Preparations are being made for building a cement walk along the west side of the M. P. Church property.

Sale of Baked Goods next Saturday, by the M. P. Ladies Aid Society. Sale will open at 10:00 o'clock.

James Harter fell from his dray wagon, last Friday, and he is laid up so as not to do his own work. His right wrist was hurt.

C. R. Brunson, of Chicago, Ohio, visited several days with relatives in this community and Newville, returning home Monday.

A most excellent program was rendered by the children of the Lutheran church at this place, Sunday evening, it being the event of the Annual Children's Day service. A crowded house greeted them.

PUBLIC NOTICE.

August 1 finishes my career in Spencerville as practicing physician, having sold out my business to Dr. J. C. Emme of Harlan. All book accounts and notes due me, should be settled by Aug. 1st., '16.

DR. B. O. SHOOK.

PRESIDENTIAL POINTERS

The sixth president was the son of the second president, and the twenty-third president was the grandson of the ninth president. William Henry Harrison was the eighth and Benjamin Harrison the tenth in descent from Pocahontas and John Rolfe. Lincoln was the first president wearing a full beard, Grant the first wearing a mustache. Buchanan and Cleveland were bachelors when they entered the White House as presidents, but Cleveland surrendered during his first term. Washington, Monroe, Pierce and Hayes were born on Friday. J. Q. Adams, Pierce and Garfield were inaugurated on Friday. Lincoln was assassinated on Friday.

Church Notes

M. P. Church Announcements.

J. C. Coons, Pastor.

St. Joe:—Sunday School, 9:00 a. m.; Christian Endeavor, 6:30 p. m; Prayer Meeting, Thursday evening, 7:30 p. m.

Fairview:—Sunday School, 9 a. m.

Concord:—Sunday School, 9:00 a. m.

The Pastor will be absent from the charge and there will be no preaching service for the next two Sundays.

There will probably be preaching at Concord in the morning and St. Joe in the evening of July 2 of which formal announce will be made later.

Christian Church Announcements.

St. Joe:—Bible School at 9 a. m.; Morning Worship, 10:15 a. m., Rev. Knox, of Converse, Ind.; Christian Endeavor, 6:30 p. m. Walter Keesler, leader; Children's Day exercises, 7:30 p. m.

Lutheran Church Announcements.

A. K. Mumma, Pastor.

St. Joe:—Sunday School, 9:00 a. m.; Christian Endeavor, 6:30 p. m. Preaching services 10:30 a. m.; Prayer Meeting, Thursday evening.

HEARD AROUND THE CORNER

Order Saturday Evening Post, 5c.

The B. & O., is now paying its section laborers $1.80 per day.

S. S. Widney and Mrs. Grace Dilley were at Wayne over Sunday.

L. W. Yeiser and son Morris, were at Avilla, Saturday, the guest of his parents, returning in the evening.

Children's Day services were held at Concord, last Sunday evening, and a packed house saw the exercises.

Ray Nelson and wife, of Columbia, Missouri, came last week to spend a month with his parents, L. D. Nelson and wife.

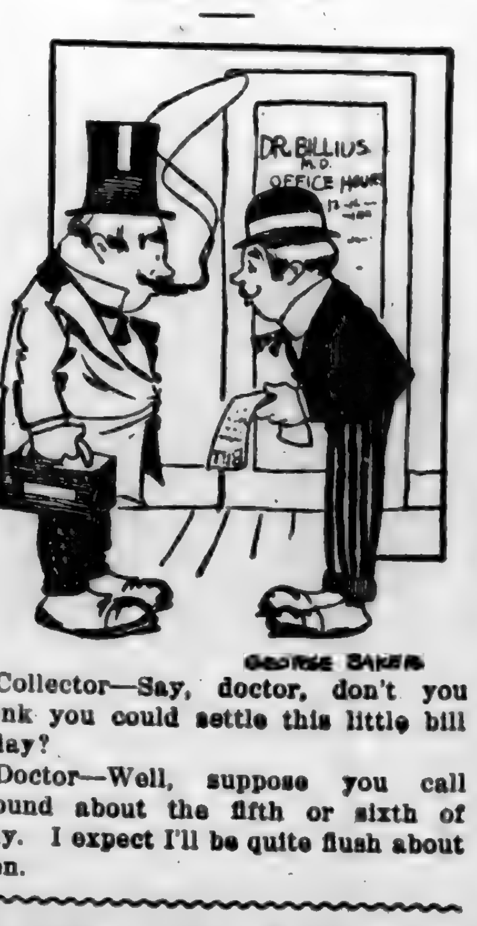
Chas. Horner and son, and his brother Samuel, of Oakwood, Ohio, were over Thursday guests in the home of Leroy McMillan and family, returning home Friday noon.

Many People Poisoned.

We often wonder why so few people live out their allotted time, while a small per cent live beyond that mark. Scores of people meet death each year because of a slow process of poisoning that is going on within their bodies. This poisoning is caused by the glands of the body failing to perform their proper function. Poisonous matter accumulates within the system, and health declines. The unsightly liver splotches, billiousness, headache, dizziness bad taste in the mouth, a pain in the back or under the shoulder blade, a tired or achey feeling, are some of the most common evidences of this poisoning. If this poison is not eliminated and the cause removed, the resisting power is finally gone and life pays the penalty. Are you of the heedless class or are you safeguarding your health? GLANDO is what you need to restore glandular activity, and expel the poisons. Keep on the safe side and use a reliable remedy. Accept none but GLANDO, give it a fair trial.

If your druggist hasn't got it, have him get it for you, or send to the Gland-Aid Co., Ft. Wayne, Ind.

SURE TO BE



DR. BILLIUS M.D. OFFICE HOURS
GEORGE BAKER

Collector—Say, doctor, don't you think you could settle this little bill today?

Doctor—Well, suppose you call around about the fifth or sixth of July. I expect I'll be quite flush about then.

NAMED 'OLD GLORY'

Massachusetts Sailor, Captain Stephen Driver, So Christened the Starry Banner.

"OLD GLORY" was so christened by Capt. Stephen Driver, a very pronounced Union man, who was born in Salem, Mass., March 17, 1803. He was presented by the citizens of Salem with a large American flag when about to sail from his home port as commander of the brig Charles Doggett in 1831. As it was hoisted to the masthead and spread itself to the breeze, in a burst of patriotic ardor he christened it "Old Glory," and that was the name he afterward used for it.

After having been his daily companion and sharer of adventures and perils on the deep for a half century, Capt. Driver took it with him to Tennessee, where he made his home in Nashville, after retiring from a seafaring life, and where he died March 3, 1886.

During the war he was provost marshal of Nashville, and did much active work in the hospitals. He was outspoken in his feelings during these days of civil disagreement, and his southern partisan neighbors felt a special zeal to get possession of his much-vaunted "Old Glory," but they repeatedly searched his home and garden in vain.

The old captain assured them that they would see it again only when it floated over a reunited Union. In order to preserve it until such time the captain, clever, as are most men of the sea, with a needle, quilted it with his own hands into a comforter and made it his bed covering.

Capt. Stephen Driver.

True to his word, when peace had been restored, the captain took "Old Glory" to the Capitol building, where it was unfurled.

It was on a fateful morning in February, 1862, that Nashville was startled by the cry, "Fort Donelson has fallen; the federal troops are advancing." The Sixth Ohio was the first regiment to land, and the bluecoats, to the sound of drum and trumpet, marched to the capitol and tore down the Confederate flag. Captain Driver begged the captain to let him raise his "Old Glory." The plea was granted, and, escorted by Lieutenant Thatcher and a detachment of soldiers, Captain Driver went to his home and ripped the sacred trophy from its hiding place. He was allowed to raise the flag with his own hands. Bareheaded, he climbed to the dome, took down the regimental flag, and replaced it with "Old Glory" amid the tumultuous cheers from the enthusiastic Union sympathisers.

As with dimmed eyes he saw it flaunting its colors proudly, he exclaimed: "Now that 'Old Glory' has come into her own again, I am willing to die."

This historic flag is now in the custody of the Essex institute, in Salem, Mass., where it was deposited by a niece of Captain Driver, to whom he had intrusted it in 1882, four years before his death. So that after its many vicissitudes, both on land and sea, it is resting peacefully and honored today in the very port from which it sailed for the first time 85 years ago.

On June 14, 1777, congress decreed that the flag consist of 13 red and white stripes, and 13 stars on a blue ground.

LOCAL ITEMS.

John Davis is quite poorly at this time.

Ross Abel and wife Sundayed at B. E. Widneys'.

Harvey Hull spent last week with D. J. Baker and wife, of Ft. Wayne.

Mabel Kinsey, of Wayne, is the guest of F. M. Monroe and family, and other relatives.

C. B Leighty is working for the Butler meat market, making St. Joe 3 days a week with the meat wagon. He is working in place of Frank Akins.

Mrs. Nora Kinsey went to Kendallville Wednesday noon to attend the funeral of Mrs. Marvel (Gee) Grimes on Thursday. Frank Kinsey and other relatives will go today on the noon train.

Last Sunday being Temperance Day the Sunday Schools in St. Joe, were all alive to the subject and made special efforts along the temperance line in their programs, by way of talks, black board illustrations, music and posters. At the Methodist Protestant Church a speaker was imported to handle the subject aside from the pastor; Rev. Chas. M. Hollopeter being the gentleman. His address was mighty interesting and he showed the matter of the saloon business up in fine shape, in a spicy and logical way. Special music was another feature of their program, and 159 in attendance was the results of the efforts. Last Sunday in St Joe 351 people were in Sunday School and all were given temperance—surely some good should come from the day's work.

For Rent

6 room house with barn on the lot, will be rented for one year or from month to month to suit tenant. Inquire of F. R. Bowman at the bank.

MAN WHO MADE the FOURTH

LIKE a firecracker that smolders quietly and finally explodes long after the rest of the bunch have banged and sizzed their way into oblivion, comes tardily the story of the man to whom we owe our Fourth of July. Those who have not heard the story and who endeavor to recall some chapter of American history telling of this great man will search their memories in vain. So obscure has he remained in the annals of those times that even his name is unknown; there is only one glimpse of him, as a rider hurrying through the night with a message that was to bring us our Glorious Fourth. The Chicago Post tells the story:

"The friends of a Declaration of Independence were afraid that they might not be in a majority in the great Philadelphia gathering. It is affirmed that they counted noses and were fearful that they would fall short by one or two votes. Then it was that they determined to send a messenger into Delaware to bring back an absent delegate who it was known would vote right if he were present. They looked for a hard rider with the cause at heart, a man who would ride the race for liberty and count fatigue a pleasure. They found him in a man whose name is unknown to posterity, but who deserves well of it.

"The unknown rode on his mission. He tore away, as one of his contemporaries bore witness, as if the devil were at his heels. He broke existing records and sent the absent delegate back in a hot hurry and in time to vote. The Declaration debates and proceedings were secret, but there was a story well believed that the resolution carried by one vote. We have Paul Revere's ride in living verse, but no one has sung the song of the unknown rider, 'The Man Who Made the Fourth.'

"Here's to him!"

PRESIDENTIAL POINTERS

At the sixth presidential election in 1808, 16 states took part, having 175 electoral votes. For president, James Madison received 122, Charles C. Pinckney 47, and George Clinton 6. For vice president, George Clinton received 113, Rufus King 47, John Langdon 9, James Madison 3 and James Monroe 3.

Madison and Clinton were inaugurated March 4, 1809.

Summer Fares

East

The Wabash is the direct line to Detroit, Buffalo and the East. Low Summer fares in effect:—

Round Trip

$15.70 to Toronto
$13.75 to Buffalo, Niagara Falls
$31.70 to New York
$30.50 to Boston

West

The Wabash and its connection now have new and far faster train service to Colorado, California and the West.

Round Trip

Colorado - -	$36.60
California -	$78.75
Yellowstone -	$51.60
Salt Lake City	$51.60
Portland, Seattle	$79.10

WABASH

Find out about these and other summer fares. See the undersigned Wabash Agent or write to W. H. Shorey, Division Passenger Agent, Fort Wayne, Ind. J. D. MILLIMAN, Agent, St. Joe, Ind.

Coburn's Corners

C. E. Fry and wife spent Sunday evening at T. H. Shulls'.

William Maxwell and family entertained Ben Soule, wife and daughter Ethel, and Daniel Oberholtzer and wife, to dinner Sunday.

C. C. Shull, wife and daughter Nellie, called on Guy Platter and wife, of Newville, Wednesday of last week. Miss Nellie remained to visit the remainder of the week.

W. P. Coburn and wife ate Sunday dinner with J. W. Hart and wife. Mrs. J. S. Shull, Mrs. C. C. Shull, Mrs. Fred Hart and children, Doris Shull and Glen Place were callers in the afternoon.

William Hamilton, wife and daughter Margaret, John Coburn and wife, O. E. Cannon, wife and son Maurice, and S. P. Hadsell, wife and son Paul, all called on Fred Hart and family, Sunday afternoon

Benjamin Hoyt and family, of Detroit, are visiting friends in this vicinity. They spent Sunday at H. A. Coburns'. They are on their way to Missouri where they expect to make their future home. Ella Wilmot and family, and Mrs. Amanda Shaffer also visited at H. A. Coburns', Sunday

The young people gave Roy E. Maxwell a surprise Monday evening that he will not soon forget. It did not take him long however to realize that his appearance was very uncouth. After a change of apparel, and after the excitement had subsided the young folks spent a very pleasant evening with games. Strawberries and ice cream were served. Roy expects to leave for Terre Haute the latter part of the week where he will attend school.

A Friend in Need.

When Glando Gargle is used for a cold in the head it is surprising to see how quickly the clogged nostrils are opened. Adenoids are caused by a neglected cold. If the mucus which forms is allowed to remain in the nostrils, a diseased condition will result, which causes chronic catarrh and adenoids. Glando Gargle was prepared to meet these special needs. Equally effective for sore mouth or sore throat. Price 50 cents. For sale by All Druggists.

COLETOWN

Mrs. M. W. Conine and daughter Mamie, and grand-daughter, Helen Conine, spent Monday afternoon at R. H. Conine.

John Hughes and family, of Farmer, O., spent Saturday at Fred Martins'.

Mrs. Jay Hart and children spent Saturday afternoon with R. H. Conine.

Emmet Ginther and family called on Geo. Pierman and family at Antwerp, Sunday afternoon.

Edwin Guthrie and wife visited at Decatur, Saturday and Sunday.

Harry Waltz and family were Sunday guests of R. H. Conine and family,

Mrs. W. E. Jackson, son Homer, and daughter Olive, and Mrs. M. W. Conine were Ft. Wayne visitors, Tuesday.

Short Notes

Mrs. John Hull and son Fred, and Mrs. Alfred Reasoner attended the County Sunday School Convention at Corunna, Tuesday.

Slide in the $1.00 Do it now.

Mrs. Lovina Jackson is seriously ill at this time.

Mrs. Alice Copp and Miss Violet Monroe were at Wayne, Saturday.

Rev. J. C. Coons and family left early Monday morning by auto for a three weeks visit with relatives in Illinois. The last Quarterly Conference of the Circuit voted him the vacation.

Notice

Persons who have bought the Schram Glen Fruit Jars, can get lids for same at Kinsey's.

LADIES! SECRET TO DARKEN GRAY HAIR

Bring Back its Color and Lustre with Grandma's Sage Tea Recipe.

Common garden sage brewed into a heavy tea, with sulphur and alcohol added, will turn gray, streaked and faded hair beautifully dark and luxuriant. Mixing the Sage Tea and Sulphur recipe at home, though, is troublesome. An easier way is to get the ready-to-use preparation improved by the addition of other ingredients, costing about 50 cents a large bottle, at drug stores, known as "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound," thus avoiding a lot of muss.

While gray, faded hair is not sinful, we all desire to retain our youthful appearance and attractiveness. By darkening your hair with Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound, no one can tell, because it does it so naturally, so evenly. You just dampen a sponge or soft brush with it and draw this through your hair, taking one small strand at a time; by morning all gray hairs have disappeared. After another application or two your hair becomes beautifully dark, glossy, soft and luxuriant and you appear years younger. Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound is a delightful toilet requisite. It is not intended for the cure, mitigation or prevention of diesase.

"TIZ" GLADDENS SORE, TIRED FEET

"TIZ" makes sore, burning, tired feet fairly dance with delight. Away go the aches and pains, the corns, callouses, blisters and bunions.

"TIZ" draws out the acids and poisons that puff up your feet. No matter how hard you work, how long you dance, how far you walk, or how long you remain on your feet, "TIZ" brings restful foot comfort. "TIZ" is wonderful for tired, aching, swollen, smarting feet. Your feet just tingle for joy; shoes never hurt or seem tight.

Get a 25 cent box of "TIZ" now from any druggist or department-store. End foot torture forever—wear smaller shoes, keep your feet fresh, sweet and happy.

A Summer Cough.

When a cough continues into warm weather, you can feel sure there is a chronic inflammation, which if neglected will develop into serious lung trouble. The best time to doctor a chronic cough is during the warm weather. An external inflammation always receives prompt attention because the condition can be seen, but an inflamation of the delicate mucus surface of the throat and lungs is much more serious. This condition furnishes fertile soil for the developing of the tubercular germ. Be wise and get rid of that cough before cold weather. GLANDO PINE is especially good for summer coughs. Accept no substitute. Use GLANDO PINE and get results. For sale by All Druggists.

JUNE

L 908

0187

BETTER SERVICE TO YOU.

We don't want you to think of the Farmers and Merchants State Bank just as a place to deposit your money, although of course we are glad to have you keep as large a balance with us as is possible.

It is our desire to render our patrons every service and accommodation that can reasonably be expected to us.

Our Bookkeeping Machine, makes it possible for us to give you better service in the handling of your account than ever before.

By the machine method, your account is kept in balance all the time. If, as sometimes happens, you want a statement of your balance in a hurry, we can give it to you, including to-days checks and deposits, in less than five minutes.

Farmers & Merchants State Bank

Capital Stock $25,000.00

Spencerville, - - - Indiana

SPENCERVILLE

A $5 Vacuum and Sweeper for $3.95 at Beams & Co., store.

Mrs. Frances Chapman and son Richard, of Garrett, are visiting her parents, David Butler and wife, a few days.

Rev. Mumma and family, who have been visiting friends and relatives at Hoagland and other places for the past two weeks, returned home Thursday.

Levi Mumma has accepted a position at Detroit with the Electric Light Works.

New spring oxfords for Ladies, Misses and Children—Just in at Beams & Co., store, in patent leather and gun metal.

On Friday evening the Eighth Grade graduates of Spencer Tp., met at the home of Raymond Rhodes and wife, and organized their class as follows:—Miss Lucile Rhodes, President; Miss Gaylan Markle, Vice-President; Miss Mary Tyndall, Secretary; Roscoe Place, Treasurer. Class flower, pink carnation. Class color—Pink and green. Motto—"We Endeavor to Win". There are twenty in the class, their names were mentioned a few weeks ago.

SAYS HOT WATER WASHES POISONS FROM THE LIVER

Everyone should drink hot water with phosphate in it, before breakfast.

To feel as fine as the proverbial fiddle, we must keep the liver washed clean, almost every morning, to prevent its sponge-like pores from clogging with indigestible material, sour bile and poisonous toxins, says a noted physician.

If you get headaches, it's your liver. If you catch cold easily, it's your liver. If you wake up with a bad taste, furred tongue, nasty breath or stomach becomes rancid, it's your liver. Sallow skin, muddy complexion, watery eyes all denote liver uncleanliness. Your liver is the most important, also the must abused and neglected organ of the body. Few know its function or how to release the dammed-up body waste, bile and toxins. Most folks resort to violent calomel, which is a dangerous, salivating chemical which can only be used occasionally because it accumulates in the tissues, also attacks the bones.

Every man and woman, sick or well, should drink each morning before breakfast, a glass of hot water with a teaspoonful of limestone phosphate in it, to wash from the liver and bowels the previous day's indigestible material, the poisons, sour bile and toxins; thus cleansing, sweetening and freshening the entire alimentary canal before putting more food into the stomach.

Limestone phosphate does not restrict the diet like calomel, because it can not salivate, for it is harmless and you can eat anything afterwards. It is inexpensive and almost tasteless, and any pharmacist will sell you a quarter pound, which is sufficient for a demonstration of how hot water and limestone phosphate cleans, stimulates and freshens the liver, keeping you feeling fit day in and day out.

Eleven room house on West Main St., for sale or rent. Other well located residence properties and vacant lots for sale on easy terms. S. S. WIDNEY.

Aaron Hart is building a porch on the tenant house recently purchased from Clinton Webb.

Benj. Gerig and wife were Saturday guests of Saul Goldsmith and family.

Glenn Betz, wife and son, of New Haven; Edward Billman and wife, Walter Perkins, wife and son Lloyd, of near Harlan; Willis Boston, wife and son, Vonnie Boston and wife, of Burlington, Mich., and Frank House, wife and son John, spent Sunday with Joel Betz and wife. Mr. Betz is improving rapidly at this writing.

Argyle Beams, who has been attending a Medical School at Cleveland, Ohio, returned home Saturday evening.

Mortie Widderfield and family were Sunday dinner guests of Mr. Palmer and family.

J. M. Beams and wife, John Shutt, Charles Henderson and wife, and R. U. Bowser and family spent Sunday at Ft. Wayne.

See our window for those $2.00 foot stools that we are giving for 98c and $2.00 in trade.

Beams & Co.

Miss Golden Murray and mother are spending a few days in Wayne visiting Calvin Brown and family.

Clinton Wearley and wife, and Mrs. Chloe Allen and babes, Emma and Jack, were Sunday callers at Leo and Grabill.

Mrs. Ada Fairfield, of Ft. Wayne, who has been visiting relatives at this place, returned home last week. Her neice, Miss Ailleen Allen, returning with her for a few days visit.

Call on Ten Eyck & Son at Auburn, Indiana, for early and late tomato, sweet potato, cabbage, bedding plants, geraniums, cannas and coleus plants. Excellent lot to select from. Prices reasonable and good plants guaranteed.

Mrs. J. C. Vallieu and son James, and Mrs. Samuel Steward were Friday guests of Mrs. John Notestine and family, of near Robinson Park.

Robert Beams, wife and son Glenn, and Ernest Steward and wife spent Saturday and Sunday at LaPorte, Ind., the guests of Roscoe Walter and wife.

The C C Club was entertained at the home of Miss Ethel Metcalf, Saturday afternoon. In spite of the bad weather 22 were present A dainty luncheon was served by the hostess.

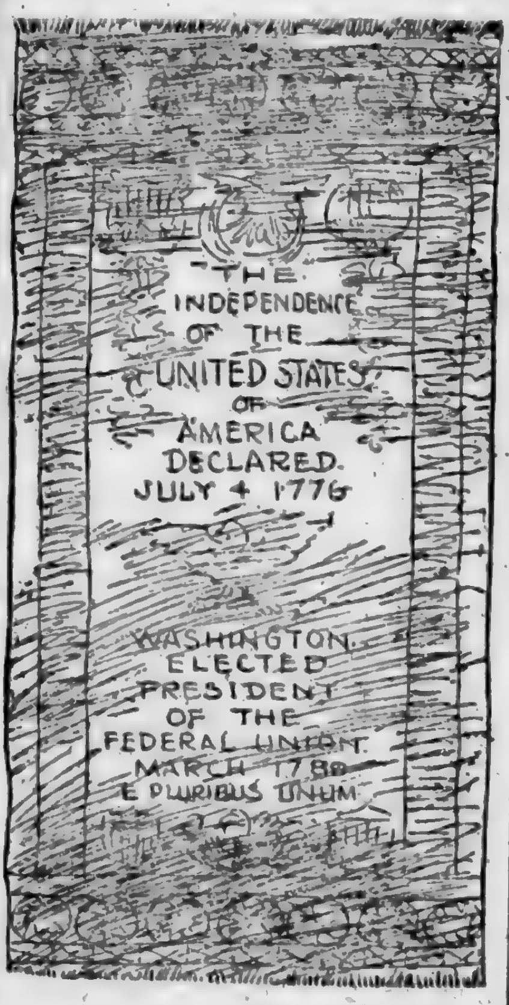
Elvin Valentine came home from Winona Lake, where he is attending the Normal School, to spend Saturday and Sunday with his parents, Rev. and Mrs. J. C. Valentine.

QUEER OLD RELIC

Towel Believed to Belong to Revolutionary Times Brought to Light at Pittsburgh.

GREAT interest has been awakened among members of patriotic societies of Pittsburgh in the unique towel which recently came into the possession of Mrs. Cecelia C. Jones Murdoch of the Hotel Schenley, a pen-and-ink impression of which is reproduced here. The age of the towel, which is made of finest linen and woven most delicately, is problematical and probably can never be definitely established. Its workmanship is wonderful, the elaborate design being skillfully and artistically executed.

Mrs. Murdoch believes her historic towel comes down from a period but a few years after the War of the Revolution, either the last decade of the eighteenth century or the first of the nineteenth. From the inscriptions on the face of the towel, she has formed the opinion that it was one of a number of similar pieces made abroad in commemoration of the establishment of the independence of the United States and the election of George Washington to the presidency, and designed to be sold to the patriotic settlers of the American wilds, possibly by roving peddlers. It is her opinion that this particular towel may have formed a part of a set, possibly consisting of tablecloth, napkins, and other towels, and that it alone, by strange chance, has survived the generations. It came to her through an elderly woman of German extraction, who received it from her parents. It had been in her family as long as she can remember, and no particular value was attached to it, for it was in constant daily use.



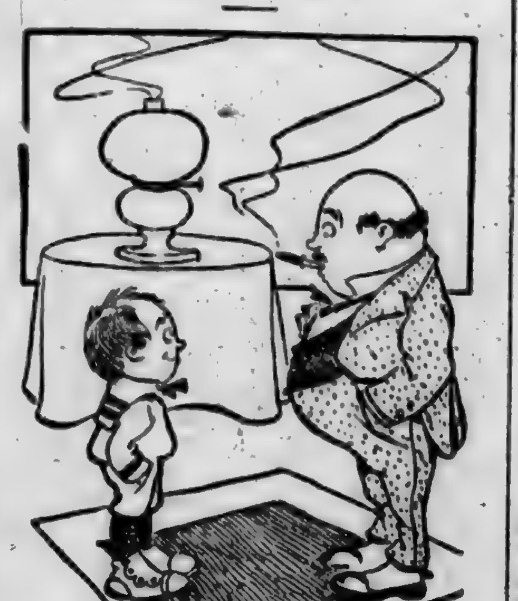
Impression of Newly Found Patriotic Towel of Probable Great Age.

The designing of the towel is most elaborate, and despite its great age, the various elements of the scheme stand out plainly and distinctly. The lettering alone is somewhat faint in some lights, but with care in handling can be clearly deciphered as the light falls at the proper angles. The elements in the design are American eagles, shields of the nation and other devices of patriotic nature cunningly woven together. The length of the towel is 33 inches, and its breadth 19 inches.

The inscription follows:

"The Independence of the United States of America Declared July 4, 1776—Washington Elected President of the Federal Union March, 1789—E Pluribus Unum."

NOT FOR HIM



"Say, pop, ain't Fourth of July the day we gained our independence?"

"No, my son; that's the day your mother and I were married."

Gist of the Declaration.

"These United colonies are, and of right ought to be, free and independent states; that they are absolved from all allegiance to the British crown, and that all political connection between them and the state to Great Britain is and ought to be totally dissolved."

This, shorn of the preamble and the concluding clauses, is the Declaration of Independence which this country celebrates sanely and safely or insanely and unsafely, as the case may be, every Fourth of July.

SPENCERVILLE.

See Wallace for Building Material at St. Joe Saw Mill.

Bernie Rhoades and family, of near Garrett, spent Sunday with C. A. Rhoades and wife.

J. C. Vellieu and family were Sunday guests of the former's mother, Mrs. Priscilla Hardesty.

Wm. Goldsmith and family, and Henry Goldsmith and wife, of Hurshtown, were Saturday afternoon guests of the latter's daughter, Mrs. J. S. Hollabaugh and family.

Following are the M. E. Church announcements:—Sunday School, at 9:30 a. m.; Preaching at 10:30 a. m.; Junior League at 2:30 p. m., Ethel Metcalf, Supt.; Epworth League, Friday night at 7:30 p. m., Melvin Howey, Supt., and Walter Fyndall, Leader.

We carry a full line of Dr. Flecks Poultry and Stock Tonic, Louse Spray and Powder, Salmedico, Oil Meal, Chick Feed, Beef Scrap, and Tankage. In fact we carry most everything along this line. Our Chick Feed at $2 Hundred is guaranteed. It contains Corn, Kaffir, Millet, Wheat and Charcoal. Why pay more. St. Joe Mills

Printed invitations to your family reunion shows that you have the proper interest and pride in your family gathering. Probably the best way for announcing the family gathering is to have a program printed, showing the date, place, etc. Have THE NEWS do it for you. Prices right.

Notice.

The book accounts of James Fisher have been left with S. S. Widney for collection. Please call and settle promptly.

Frank W. Silberg
Veterinarian

OFFICE and HOSPITAL
— ON —
Main Street
SPENCERVILLE. - IND.

Phones—Office No. 7
(18) Residence No. 101

Dr. H. R. Farnham
MEDICINE AND
GENERAL SURGERY
ST. JOE, INDIANA

Office Hours—Week Day
10:00 to 11:00 a. m.
1:00 to 3:00 p. m.
6:30 to 8:00 p. m.
Sunday—By appointment.
Telephone
Office,................No. 2

Office at Residence, Second house west of Widney Opera House.

H. C. Hathaway

TRUSTEE
Concord Township

Office Day Thursday's of Each week in Town Hall, St. Joe.

Firemen's Celebration.

St. Joe will be a Lively Place on the Fourth o July....Everything Free. Staged by Firemen exclusively.

The St. Joe Firemen are planning to celebrate Independence Day in a good old fashioned manner. Everything to be absolutely free to the public. They are preparing a program consisting of a Firemen's Parade which will be the opening number followed by Base Ball, Potato Race, Bicycle Race, Sack Race, Goose Neck Pulling, (by mounted riders) Auto Parade, Fantastic Parade in the evening. Prizes given in all contests, announcement of prizes given later. Any person wishing to enter any contest will please consult Harlow Sechler. Good lemonade absolutely free to all.

SPENCERVILLE R. F. D. NO. 2

Will Smith and wife spent Sunday with Ira Smith and wife, the former's parents

Mr. Marr, John Cook, Earl Stiman and Ray Zimmerman called at Will Smith's Saturday.

Wm. Sketchley, wife and children of VanWert, O., were Sunday visitors of Chas. Esley and wife.

Mrs. Courkney has returned to her home at Auburn after visiting with her mother, Mrs. Chas. Esley.

Mr. and Mrs. Horton, of Ashton, O., were part of last week guests of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Wertman.

John Stafford, wife and children, of Milan Center, Harry Jones and son and Harley Wearley, wife and two children, spent Sunday at the D. M. Kelly home.

Mr. and Mrs. Lee Hollopeter and son, Dr. Dean, of Hicksville, also Mr. and Mrs. Addison Miller of Mudsock, were Sunday guests of W. O. Miller and wife.

Harley Berry, wife and babies, of Ft. Wayne, spent Saturday and Sunday with the former's parents, Henry Berry and wife. Mr. Berry returned Sunday evening and Mrs. Berry remained.

SALTS IF BACKACHY AND KIDNEYS HURT

Drink lots of water and stop eating meat for a while if your Bladder troubles you.

When you wake up with backache and dull misery in the kidney region it generally means you have been eating too much meat, says a well-known authority. Meat forms uric acid which overworks the kidneys in their effort to filter it from the blood and they become sort of paralyzed and loggy. When your kidneys get sluggish and clog you must relieve them, like you relieve your bowels; removing all the body's urinous waste, else you have backache, sick headache, dizzy spells; your stomach sours, tongue is coated, and when the weather is bad you have rheumatic twinges. The urine is cloudy, full of sediment, channels often get sore, water scalds and you are obliged to seek relief two or three times during the night.

Either consult a good, reliable physician at once or get from your pharmacist about four ounces of Jad Salts; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys will then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to clean and stimulate sluggish kidneys, also to neutralize acids in the urine so it no longer irritates, thus ending bladder weakness.

Jad Salts is a life saver for regular meat eaters. It is inexpensive, cannot injure and makes a delightful, effervescent lithia-water drink.

Miss Grace Cook was at Hicksville Thursday.

Elmer Smith and family visited Sunday with John Kock and wife.

Try the
Little Wizzard Washing
Compound

and thus save labor. Washes clothes without rubbing, will not injure the most delicate fabrics, and contains nothing that will harm the hands. This compound is being used by the Ladies of St. Joe and is found very helpful. You can get it at

Leighty's Grocery

Regular Price, 15c. —24

$100 Reward, $100

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials.

Address: F. J. CHENEY & CO., Toledo, O.
Sold by all Druggists. 75c.
Take Hall's Family Pills for constipation.

P. A. Walker
Trustee
Spencer Township

OFFICE DAY—
Tuesday of each week at the residence ¾ mile east of the Dills River Bridge.
Phone—St. Joe, 21-6
Spencerville, - Indiana

F. P. HART
"The Expert"
House Mover
—AND—
Building Raiser

Concrete Work of all kinds finished in the best shape with the least expense.

Call or write

DENTIST
C. R. PRICE
ST. JOE, IND.
Office: first door south of Patterson's Dept. Store.
Bell Phone No. 44.

Oldest In America Strongest In the World

Mutual life
INSURANCE COMPANY
of New York
J. C. HULL, Agent
Phone No. 46

50 sheets of writing paper and 25 No. 1 rag envelopes for 10 cents at NEWS office.

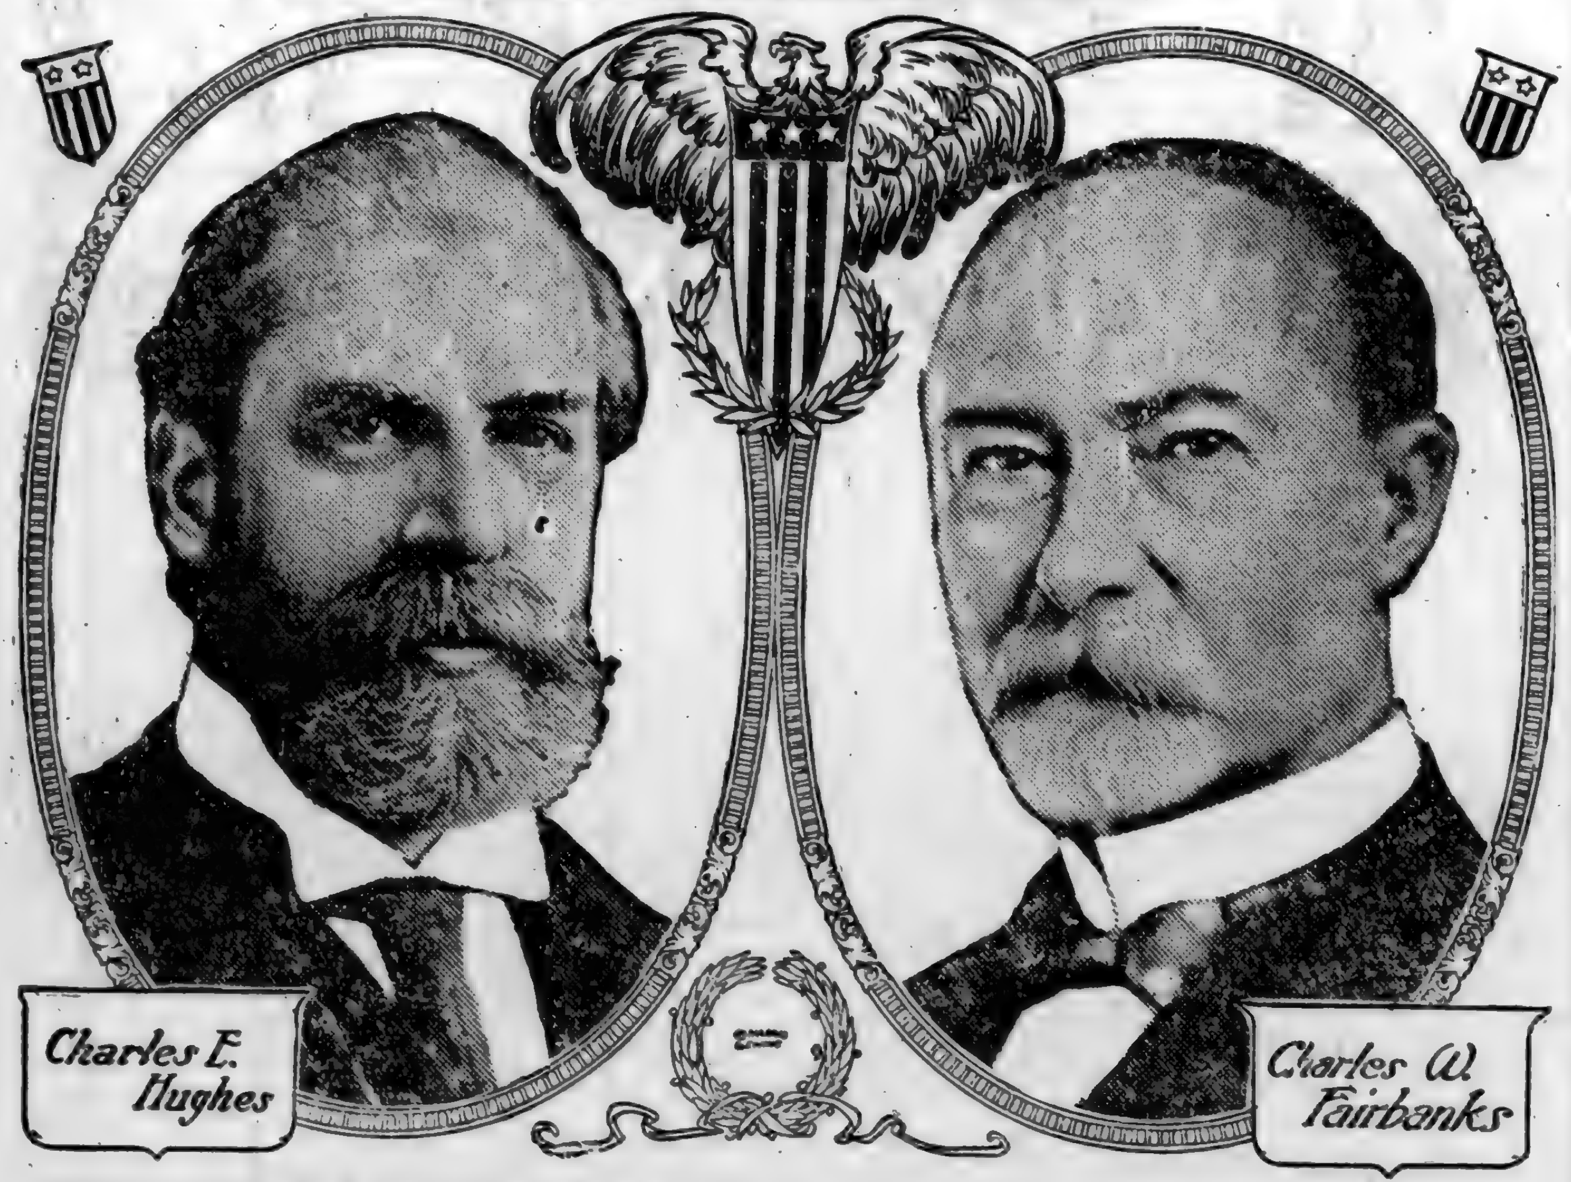
Lehman's
CLOTHING HOUSE
ESTABLISHED 1887
MENS AND BOYS OUTFITTERS
808-810 CALHOUN STREET
BEN LEHMAN PROP.
Fort Wayne, Ind.

JUNE

L 908

U188

REPUBLICAN STANDARD BEARERS



HUGHES IS NAMED BY REPUBLICANS

Associate Justice of Supreme Court Nominated for President of United States.

"MOOSERS" FOR T. R.

Refuse to Accept Senator Lodge of Massachusetts as Compromise Candidate.

IS NAMED BY ACCLAMATION

Fairbanks and Parker of Louisiana Selected as Running Mates—Story of the Two Big Chicago Conventions.

Republican Ticket—

For president: Charles E. Hughes of New York.

For vice president: Charles W. Fairbanks of Indiana.

Progressive Ticket—

For president: Theodore Roosevelt of New York.

For vice president: John M. Parker of Louisiana.

Chicago.—Charles E. Hughes of New York and Charles Warren Fairbanks of Indiana are the nominees of the Republican party according to the verdict of the delegates in convention assembled in this city on Saturday. Hughes was named on the third ballot and the voting was halted to make the nomination unanimous before half of the states had been polled. Fairbanks was selected as the running mate on the first ballot. His name was placed in nomination by John Wanamaker of Philadelphia.

Almost at the same time Theodore Roosevelt was unanimously named as the Progressive candidate for president at the "Bull Moose" convention a few blocks away. For two days George W. Perkins and other Progressive leaders held the delegates in check, hoping that a compromise candidate might be agreed upon by the two parties, but they would no longer be stayed when it was seen that the nomination of Hughes was to be effected by the Republicans. John M. Parker of Louisiana was named as the candidate for vice president.

The naming of the associate justice of the Supreme court of the United States was the signal for a wild outburst of cheering in the Coliseum—the scene of many demonstrations during the convention. Likewise the naming of the "big chief" of the Progressives permitted his followers to let loose their pent-up enthusiasm that fairly rocked the Auditorium.

Named on Third Ballot.

Two unsuccessful ballots were taken by the Republican delegates before they adjourned Friday night. When the convention met at noon Saturday indications pointed to the naming of the New York man and the vote was overhelmingly Hughes from the moment the first state—Alabama—was called upon. He was given 949½; Roosevelt, 18½; DuPont, 5; Weeks, 3; Lodge, 7, and LaFollette, 3. Only 494 votes were necessary for the nomination.

Compromise Candidate Refused.

The nomination of Hughes came after the Republicans turned down the proposal of Col. Theodore Roosevelt that United States Senator Henry Cabot Lodge of Massachusetts be named as a compromise candidate.

The action of the Progressives in tabling the suggestion of their leader was read before the Republican delegates and Chairman Harding announced that the message would be recorded in the proceedings of the convention.

Roosevelt in a telegram to the Progressive convention received in the morning suggested the name of Senator Lodge as a compromise candidate upon whom both Progressives and Republicans could unite.

Mr. Roosevelt said that at about five he was notified by the Progressive conferees that they had come to no conclusion with the Republican conferees and that the Republican conferees had again asked for any suggestion of a name as a candidate from the Progressive conferees.

He then wrote to the Progressive conferees stating that he deeply appreciated their loyalty to him and their efforts to get him nominated, but that he thought the time had come when carrying out the spirit of the statement of the Progressive national committee in January and the statement made by him in Trinidad in February, it was their duty to present an alternative name on which he hoped the Republicans and Progressives could unite. He presented the name of Henry Cabot Lodge. He quoted the three paragraphs of his telegram to W. B. Jackson of Maryland.

He stated that Mr. Lodge had been a member of the lower house of congress and of the senate of the United States for thirty years; that he was a man of the highest integrity, great farsightedness, and of wide vision as to national needs, and qualified in every way for the high office of president.

The Republican convention opened at the Coliseum at 11 a. m., June 7. Senator Warren G. Harding of Ohio was elected temporary chairman, and he delivered a speech, setting forth conservative Republican principles. Following this the regular committees were appointed and organized and routine convention business went forward. There was only moderate expression of enthusiasm at any time.

With the hope of agreeing an a presidential candidate whom both parties might support, the Progressives, in convention at the Auditorium, and the Republicans appointed a joint conference committee Thursday, and this committee met at the Chicago club. Shortly after midnight it was announced that no progress had been made toward fusion of the two parties.

The Republican members of this committee were Senator Reed Smoot of Utah, W. Murray Crane, ex-senator from Massachusetts; Senator William E. Borah of Idaho, Nicholas Murray Butler of New York, president of Columbia university; A. R. Johnson of Ohio, a former congressman. The Progressive members were Gov. Hiram Johnson of California, Horace S. Wilkinson of New York, Charles J. Bonaparte of Maryland, former attorney general, John M. Parker of Louisiana, George W. Perkins of New York.

Nominating speeches began in the Republican convention about three o'clock Friday afternoon, and nominations were closed before eight o'clock. Balloting began at once. Two ballots were taken before adjournment for the night.

The Progressive convention opened at exactly the same time the Republicans started their meeting. Temporary Chairman Raymond Robins delivered the Progressive policy speech. Routine business followed—but it wasn't routine in the same way as the Republican session was. The Progressives, with such men as William Allen White, Victor Murdock and Hiram Johnson, were loudly enthusiastic. This convention was really an explosive affair—cheers, table pounding, radical talk and all that.

It is said that George W. Perkins and some others of the Progressive group had a hard time keeping the radical element from nominating Colonel Roosevelt shortly after the show started. The conservatives lived in the hope of a fusion with the Republicans. The radicals said they didn't care what the Republicans did. They wanted "Teddy," and they wanted him quick. There was no dickering spirit in these fellows.

HOW STATES VOTED ON FIRST BALLOT

	Total delegates	Brumbaugh	Burton	Cummins	DuPont	Fairbanks	Ford	Hughes	Knox	LaFollette	Roosevelt	Root	Sherman	Weeks
‡Alabama	16	..	1	..	..	1	..	8	..	..	1	..	1	3
Arizona	6	..	1	..	..	..	..	4	..	..	1	..	..	..
Arkansas	15	..	3	1	..	2	..	1	..	..	..	3	2	3
California	26	..	1	..	..	3	..	9	..	..	..	8	2	3
Colorado	12	..	..	..	..	1	..	..	..	..	6	5	..	..
Connecticut	14	..	2	..	..	1	..	5	..	..	..	6	..	1
Delaware	6	..	..	..	5	..	..	..	..	..	1	..	..	..
Florida	8	..	..	..	..	..	..	8	..	..	..	..	..	..
Georgia	17	..	2	..	3	..	..	5	..	..	1	..	..	6
Idaho	8	..	..	..	..	..	..	4	..	..	4	..	..	..
Illinois	58	..	..	..	..	..	..	..	..	..	2	..	56	..
Indiana	30	..	..	..	..	30	..	..	..	..	..	..	..	..
Iowa	26	..	..	26	..	..	..	..	..	..	..	..	..	..
Kansas	20	..	1	..	..	2	..	10	..	..	..	3	3	1
Kentucky	26	..	..	..	..	15	..	10	..	..	1	..	..	..
Louisiana	12	..	1½	..	..	1½	..	4	..	..	..	1	1	3
Maine	12	..	..	..	..	..	..	6	..	..	2	1	..	3
Maryland	16	..	..	..	..	..	..	7	..	..	3	1	..	5
Massachusetts	36	..	..	..	..	..	..	4	..	..	4	..	..	28
Michigan	30	..	..	..	..	..	30	..	..	..	..	..	..	..
Minnesota	24	..	..	24	..	..	..	..	..	..	..	..	..	..
Mississippi	12	..	1	..	..	2	..	4	..	..	3½	..	..	1½
*Missouri	35	..	..	..	..	6	..	18	..	..	..	..	..	8
Montana	8	..	..	8	..	..	..	..	..	..	..	..	..	..
Nebraska	16	..	..	14	..	..	2	..	..	..	..	..	..	..
Nevada	6	..	..	..	..	..	..	4	..	..	..	2	..	..
New Hampshire	8	..	..	..	..	..	..	..	..	..	..	..	..	8
New Jersey	28	..	..	..	..	1	..	12	..	..	2	12	..	1
New Mexico	6	..	..	..	..	..	..	3	..	..	1	..	..	2
New York	87	..	..	..	..	..	..	42	..	..	2	43	..	..
N. Carolina	21	..	1	..	..	..	..	6	..	..	9	2	..	3
N. Dakota	10	..	..	..	..	..	..	..	..	..	10	..	..	..
Ohio	48	..	48	..	..	..	..	..	..	..	..	..	..	..
Oklahoma	20	..	3	1	..	2	..	5	..	..	2	1	1	6
Oregon	10	..	..	..	..	..	..	10	..	..	..	..	..	..
†Pennsylvania	76	29	..	..	..	..	..	2	36	..	8	..	..	..
Rhode Island	10	..	..	..	..	..	..	10	..	..	..	..	..	..
S. Carolina	11	..	3	..	..	2	..	2	..	..	1	1	..	2
S. Dakota	10	..	..	10	..	..	..	..	..	..	..	..	..	..
†Tennessee	21	..	1	..	1	1	..	9	..	..	5	..	..	3½
‡Texas	26	..	1	1	1	1	..	1	..	..	1	1	1	1
Utah	8	..	..	..	..	..	..	4	..	..	1	3	..	..
Vermont	8	..	..	..	..	..	..	8	..	..	..	..	..	..
Virginia	15	..	1	..	..	1	..	5½	..	..	1½	3	..	3
Washington	14	..	..	..	..	..	..	5	..	..	1	8	..	..
West Virginia	16	..	7	..	2	1	..	1	..	..	..	..	..	5
Wisconsin	26	..	..	..	..	..	..	11	..	15	..	..	..	..
Wyoming	6	..	..	..	..	..	..	6	..	..	..	..	..	..
Alaska	2	..	..	..	..	..	..	1	..	..	..	..	..	1
Hawaii	2	..	1	..	..	..	..	..	..	..	..	..	..	1
Philippines	2	..	..	..	..	1	..	..	..	..	..	1	..	..
Totals	..	29	77½	85	12	74½	32	253½	36	25	65	103	66	105

*Missouri gave Frank B. Willis 2 votes; one Missouri vote recorded absent.
†One absent for Pennsylvania. Tennessee ½ vote absent.
‡Texas gave McCall 1 vote, Frank B. Willis 1, William H. Taft 14 and Borah 1. Alabama gave Borah 1 vote.

HUGHES ACCEPTS AND LEAVES BENCH

Washington.—Justice Charles Evans Hughes accepted the Republican nomination for the presidency, and resigned from the Supreme court of the United States. He issued the following statement:

"To the President:

"I hereby resign the office of associate justice of the Supreme court of the United States.

"I am, sir, respectfully yours,
"CHARLES E. HUGHES."

Hughes' statement of the acceptance of the Republican nomination follows:

"Hon. Warren G. Harding, Chairman Republican National Committee, Chicago, Ill.

"Mr. Chairman and Delegates: I have not desired the nomination. I have wished to remain on the bench, but in this critical period of our national history I recognize that it is your right to summon and my paramount duty to respond. You speak at a time of national exigency, transcending merely partisan consideration.

"You voice the demand of the dominant, thoroughgoing Americanism, with firm protective upbuilding policies essential to our peace and security; and to that call in this crisis I cannot fail to answer with the pledge of all that is in me to the service of our country. Therefore I accept the nomination.

"I stand for the firm and unflinching maintenance of all the rights of American citizens on land and sea. I neither impugn motives nor underestimate difficulties.

"But it is more regrettably true that in our foreign relations we have suffered incalculably from the weak and vacillating course which has been taken as regards Mexico—a course lamentably wrong with regard to both our rights and our duties.

"We interfered without consistency and while seeking to dictate when we were not concerned, we utterly failed to appreciate and discharge our plain duty to our citizens.

"At the outset of the administration the high responsibilities of our diplomatic intercourse with foreign nations were subordinated to a conception of partisan requirements, and we presented to the world a humiliating spectacle of ineptitude.

The latest efforts have not availed to recover the influence and prestige so unfortunately sacrificed; and brave words have been stripped of their force by indecision.

"I desire to see our diplomacy restored to its best standards, and to have these advanced; to have no sacrifices of national interests to partisan expediency; to have the first ability of the country always at its command, here and abroad, in diplomatic intercourse; to maintain firmly our rights under our laws; insisting steadfastly upon our rights as neutrals and fully performing our international obligations; and by the clear correctness and justice of our position, and our manifest ability and disposition to sustain them, to dignify our place among the nations.

"I stand for an Americanism which knows no ulterior purpose, for a patriotism which is single and complete. Whether native or naturalized, of whatever race or creed, we have but one country, and we do not for an instant tolerate any division of allegiance.

"I believe in making prompt provision to assure absolutely our national security.

"I believe in preparedness, not only entirely adequate for our defense with respect to numbers and equipment in both army and navy, but with all thoroughness to the end that in each branch of the service there may be the utmost efficiency under the most competent administrative heads.

"We are devoted to the ideal of honorable peace. We wish to promote all wise and practicable measures for the just settlement of international disputes. In view of our abiding ideals, there is no danger of militarism in this country.

"We have no policy of aggressiveness; no lust for territory; no zeal for strife. It is in this spirit that we demand adequate provision for national defense, and we condemn the inexcusable neglect that has been shown in this matter of first national importance.

"We must have the strength which self-respect demands, the strength of an efficient nation ready for every emergency."

CAREER OF HUGHES

Born April, 1862

Admitted to bar, 1884.

Elected governor of New York, 1906.

Elected governor for second term, 1908.

Appointed Supreme court justice, 1910.

WHAT HE HAS DONE.

Investigated gas monopoly and aided in legislation for relief in 1905.

Began famous life insurance investigation originating in a quarrel among officers of the Equitable Life and extending to other companies, 1905.

Refused nomination of Republicans for mayor of New York, 1905.

While governor of New York his administration was marked by the public utilities bill, a new insurance code, reorganization of the banking system, registration of lobbyists, an employers' liability law, suppression of race track gambling, the 80-cent gas bill and graduated inheritance tax.

In 1907 two of his remarks became famous. These were:

"Human society cannot be stable unless it is progressive."

"The common welfare must be the supreme law."

Self-Preservation.

A New Yorker tells of a married couple he observed at a country fair in Ohio. They found themselves in the center of quite a crowd near one of the amusement booths, and the husband addressed his wife in this wise:

"I say, dearie, I think you'd better give me the lunch basket. Don't you see we are apt to lose each other in this crowd?"

Physiological Gem.

Recently, in an examination of some school papers the following exhaustive definition was returned in answer to the question, "What is a germ?"

"A germ is a very little thing, smaller than the smallest thing that can't be seen, and the only way to kill it is to hold dioxygen under its nose."

Important News Events of the World Summarized

European War News

King Constantine of Greece signed the order demobilizing 12 classes of the army, amounting to 150,900 men. There is general rejoicing at Athens over the decision of the government for remobilization.

• • •

The official press bureau at Paris states that the allies have notified the Greek government that as a result of its negotiation with Bulgaria and Germany, they would take all measures necessary to enforce the treaties safeguarding Greek unity and the Greek constitution.

• • •

The Austrian left flank and German right flank are turned, the Teuton lines have been driven in 15 miles and 65,000 prisoners are in the hands of the Russians. This is the situation in the tremendous Russian offensive launched five days ago against the southern half of the eastern front. The Vienna war office admits the reverses. The immediate goal of the Russians is the great fort of Lemberg.

• • •

The capture by the Germans of the shattered Fort Vaux was officially admitted by the war office at Paris. Nothing is yet known of the fate of General Raynal and his garrison.

• • •

The capture of Lutsk, in Volhynia, and also of a series of powerfully organized Austrian positions, is announced at Petrograd. Fifty-eight officers and 11,000 men were taken.

• • •

tl is admitted by the German admiralty that the battle cruiser Lutzow and the cruiser Rostock sank from shell wounds received in the battle with the English fleet off Jutland, according to a Central News dispatch, dated Berlin.

• • •

One warrant officer and 11 men, survivors of the cruiser Hampshire, which went down off the Orkney islands with Earl Kitchener and members of his staff, have been washed ashore on a raft, according to an announcement by the British admiralty.

• • •

The French torpedo-boat destroyer Fantassin has been sunk in collision with another ship, says a statement issued at Paris. The crew was saved.

• • •

The total number of prisoners taken by the Russians in their giant offensive against the Austrians on the 250-mile Pripet-Pruth front has now reached 40,000, according to an official statement from Petrograd. In addition 900 officers are prisoners.

• • •

Fort Vaux, one of the main defenses of Verdun, has fallen, according to an official statement issued by the German war office at Berlin, which asserts that the fortress fell into German hands Tuesday night. Seven hundred prisoners were taken.

• • •

The Greek government is preparing to declare martial law throughout the kingdom and arrest ex-Premier Venizelos and his chief supporters, according to a Reuter telegram to London from Petrograd.

• • •

The British cruiser Hampshire, on which Lord Kitchener and his staff were on their way to Russia, has been sunk off the Scottish coast by a mine or a German submarine. Search was made for survivors, but none was found. Official announcement of the destruction of the Hampshire was made by the British admiralty at London.

• • •

The sudden blow struck by the Russians along the entire Galician front of 275 miles from the Pripet to Roumania, is considered in London a brilliant beginning of the long-awaited Russian offensive. The Russians captured 480 officers and 25,000 men.

• • •

Domestic

Telegrams urging the adoption of an "aerial preparedness" plank were sent from New York to the leading delegates of the Republican national convention at Chicago by the Aero Club of America.

• • •

The charges filed by Representative Longworth with the secretary of the treasury at Washington against Internal Revenue Collector Gilligan at Cincinnati have been found by treasury officials to be without foundation.

• • •

Eighty-three lives were lost, hundreds of persons were injured and much property damage was done through a large section of Arkansas, Missouri, Illinois and Mississippi by tornadoes.

• • •

Woman suffrage in Louisiana lost out when the house of representatives at Baton Rouge failed to pass the bill bya two-thirds majority, as required by law. The final vote was: For woman suffrage, 59; against woman suffrage, 50.

Maj. Gen. George W. Goethals, governor of the Panama Canal Zone, denied at Washington that he had resigned. He indicated, however, that he would retire soon.

• • •

William G. Lee of Cleveland was reelected president of the International Brotherhood of Railway Trainmen at the Triennial convention of the order, in session at Detroit, Mich.

• • •

Arthur Warren Waite obtained a stay of execution on an appeal notice filed at New York by Attorney W. R. Duel. Waite was sentenced to die the week of July 10 for the murder of John E. Peck.

• • •

Incomplete returns received at Jacksonville, Fla., indicate that Governor Park Trammell defeated United States Senator N. P. Bryan for renomination in the Democratic primary.

• • •

Three men were killed and three were hurt as a result of an explosion at the plant of the United States Incandescent Lamp company at St. Louis. Two of the dead were R. W. Ferguson, general manager of the company, and Stanley Nogalski, the president of the Laclede Iron works.

• • •

Justice Charles E. Hughes made an effort to prevent the nation from attaching political significance to his address at a local girls' school in which he declared the American flag "means America united, strong and efficient, equal to her task." Lawrence H. Green, Justice Hughes' private secretary, stated at Washington that the address "has no political significance."

• • •

Fifty-nine persons have been reported dead and more than 100 injured in a series of tornadoes that swept Arkansas. Three deaths were reported at Hot Springs.

• • •

Mexican Revolt

Two of the Mexican bandits who rode with Villa in the Columbus massacre paid for the crime with their lives at Deming, N. M. The men—Juan Sanchez and Francisco Alvares—were hanged.

• • •

Gen. George Bell, Jr., military commander at El Paso, Tex., was informed that a mob of Mexican civilians and Carranza soldiers attacked the United States consulate in Durango city. The building was burned.

• • •

Arbitration of differences between the United States and Mexico through an international commission is now a possibility, says a dispatch from El Paso, Tex.

• • •

Anti-American demonstrations which began with an attack on the United States consulate in Chihuahua City are being continued throughout southern Chihuahua and Coahuila.

• • •

A mob of several thousand persons attacked the American consulate at Chihuahua, Mex., tore down the official consulate shield over the door and shattered all the windows. Americans were stormed by the mob.

• • •

Pablo Lopez, Villa's chief lieutenant in the raid upon Columbus, N. M., paid the penalty for his crime, facing a firing squad of constitutionalist soldiers at Santa Rosa, Mex.

• • •

Washington

It was announced at Washington that President Wilson virtually has completed a draft of the platform to be submitted to the Democratic national convention. The principal plank, it is said, will consist of a declaration of the administration's success in guarding the honor and interests of the United States and at the same time keeping the nation at peace.

• • •

American Minister Russell at Santo Domingo reported to the state department at Washington that American marines near Fonds Verrettes, Santo Domingo, on June 4 killed 14 bandits in a battle with the natives. Two of those killed were the bandit chieftains Melelles and Codio.

• • •

In the seclusion of the National Cathedral school lawn at Washington, where he was presenting an American flag to the honor graduates, Justice Charles E. Hughes made his first public address since the opening of the pre-convention campaign. He told the young woman graduates that the flag meant America first, an undivided allegiance and a nation united and equal to its tasks.

• • •

Carrying only slight alterations from the bill as it originally passed the house, the Oregon-California land grant conference report was agreed to in the house at Washington and will now go to the president for his signature.

• • •

Louis D. Brandeis of Boston was sworn in at Washington as associate justice of the Supreme court of the United States, the oath of office being administered by James D. Maher, clerk of the court.

• • •

The federal trade commission at Washington has voted to make Commissioner Edward N. Hurley of Chicago chairman to succeed Joseph E. Davies. He will assume the office July 1.

• • •

Foreign

The body of Gen. O. A. Fitzgerald, military secretary to Lord Kitchener, who was aboard the British cruiser Hampshire when it was destroyed, has been recovered, according to a dispatch to the London Express.

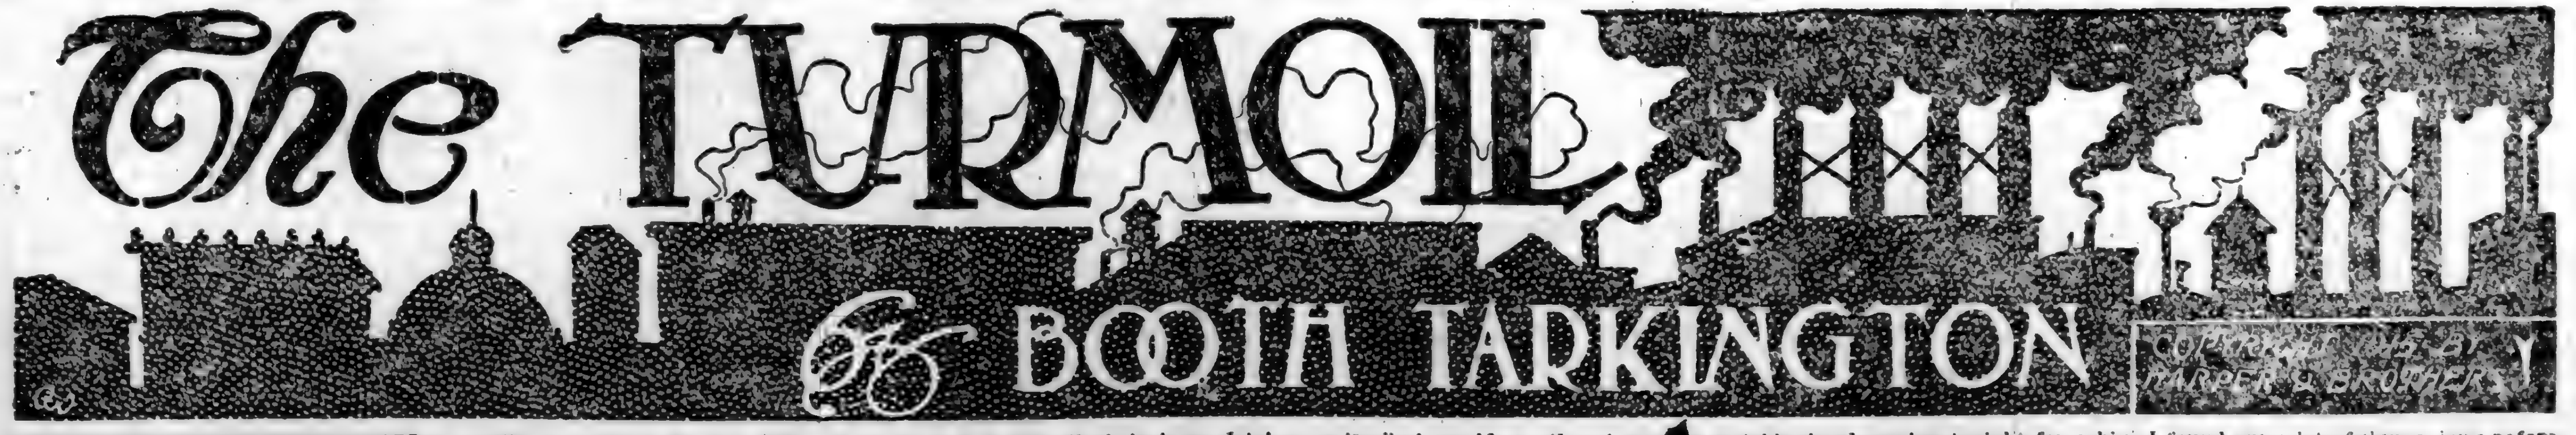
JUNE

L 908

U189

The TURMOIL

By BOOTH TARKINGTON



COPYRIGHT [illegible] BY HARPER & BROTHERS

Eugenic scientists say like produces like, and that while environment has an influence in the development of a child it does not materially alter inherited temperament. Old Man Sheridan and Mrs. Sheridan lived entirely in the material world. Bibbs, their youngest son, is a dreamer.

CHAPTER I.

—1—

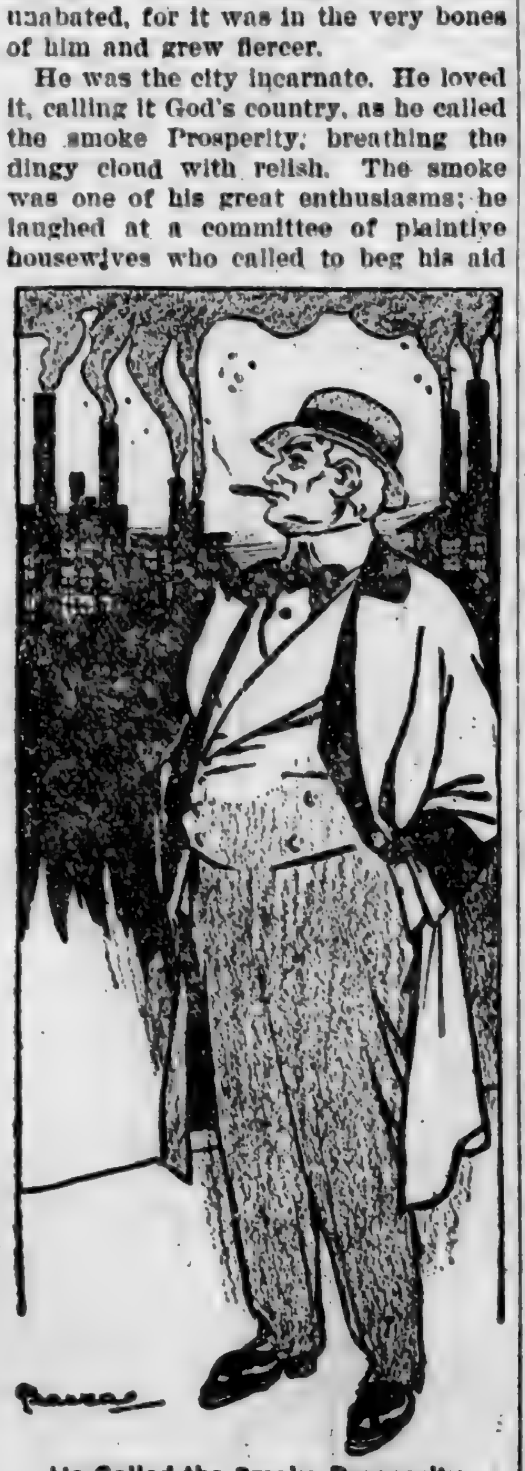
There is a midland city in the heart of fair, open country, a dirty and wonderful city nesting dingily in the fog of its own smoke. The stranger must feel the dirt before he feels the wonder, for the dirt will be upon him instantly. At a breeze he must smother in whirlpools of dust, and if he should decline at any time to inhale the smoke he has the meager alternative of suicide.

Not quite so long ago as a generation there was here no heaving, grimy city; there was but a pleasant big town of neighborly people who had understanding of one another.

But there was a spirit abroad in the land, and it was strong here as elsewhere—a spirit that had moved in the depths of the American soil and labored there, sweating, till it stirred the surface, rove the mountains, and emerged, tangible and monstrous, the god of all good American hearts—Bigness. And so the place grew. And it grew strong.

The Sheridan building was the biggest skyscraper; the Sheridan Trust company was the biggest of its kind, and Sheridan himself had been the biggest builder and breaker and truster and buster under the smoke. He had come from a country crossroads, at the beginning of the growth, and he had gone up and down in the booms and relapses of that period; but each time he went down he rebounded a little higher, until finally, after a year of overwork and anxiety—the latter not decreased by a chance, remote but possible, of recuperation from the former in the penitentiary—he found himself on top, with solid substance under his feet; and thereafter "played it safe." But his hunger to get was unabated, for it was in the very bones of him and grew fiercer.

He was the city incarnate. He loved it, calling it God's country, as he called the smoke Prosperity; breathing the dingy cloud with relish. The smoke was one of his great enthusiasms; he laughed at a committee of plaintive housewives who called to beg his aid against it. "Smoke's what brings your husbands' money home on Saturday night," he told them jovially. "You go home and ask your husbands what smoke puts in their pockets out o' the pay roll—and you'll come around next time to get me to turn out more smoke instead o' chokin' it off!"



He Called the Smoke Prosperity.

It was Narcissism in him to love the city so well; he saw his reflection in it; and, like it, he was grimy, big, careless, rich, strong, and unquenchably optimistic. Just as he profoundly believed his city to be the finest city in the world, so did he believe his family to be—in spite of his son Bibbs—the finest family in the world. As a matter of fact, he knew nothing worth knowing about either.

Bibbs Sheridan was a musing sort of boy, poor in health, and considered the failure—the "odd one"—of the family. Born during that most dangerous and anxious of the early years, he was an ill-nourished baby, and grew meagerly, only lengthwise, through a feeble childhood. At his christening he was committed for life to "Bibbs" mainly through lack of imagination on his mother's part, for though it was her maiden name, she had no strong affection for it. One day when the sickly boy was nine, he requested with unwonted vehemence to be allowed to exchange names with his older brother, Roscoe Conkling Sheridan, or with the oldest, James Sheridan, Jr., and upon being refused went down into the cellar and remained there the rest of that day. And the cook, descending toward dusk, reported that he had vanished; but a search revealed that he was in the coal-pile, completely covered and still burrowing. Removed by force and carried upstairs, he maintained a cryptic demeanor, refusing to utter a syllable of explanation, even under the lash. This obvious thing was wholly a mystery to both parents; the mother was nonplused, failed to trace and connect; and the father regarded his son as a stubborn and mysterious fool, an impression not effaced as the years went by.

At twenty-two Bibbs was physically no more than the outer scaffolding of a man, waiting for the building to begin inside—a long-shanked, long-faced, rickety youth, sallow and hollow and haggard, dark-haired and dark-eyed, with a peculiar expression of countenance; indeed, at first sight of Bibbs Sheridan he seemed upon the point of tears. To a slightly longer gaze, not grief, but mirth, was revealed as his emotion; but Bibbs never, on any occasion in his life, either laughed aloud or wept.

He was a "disappointment" to his father. At least that was the parent's word—a confirmed and established word after his first attempt to make a "business man" of the boy. He sent Bibbs to "begin at the bottom and learn from the ground up" in the machine shop of the Sheridan Automatic Pump works, and at the end of six months the family physician sent Bibbs to begin at the bottom and learn from the ground up in a sanitarium.

"You needn't worry, mamma," Sheridan told his wife. "There's nothin' the matter with Bibbs except he hates work so much it makes him sick. I put him in the machine shop, and I guess I know what I'm doin' about as well as the next man. Ole Doc Gurney always was one o' them nutty alarmists. Does he think I'd do anything 'd be bad for my own flesh and blood? He makes me tired!"

Anything except perfectly definite health or perfectly definite disease was incomprehensible to Sheridan. He had a genuine conviction that lack of physical persistence in any task involving money must be due to some subtle weakness of character itself, to some profound shiftlessness or slyness.

"Look at me," he said. "Look at what I did at his age! Why, when I was twenty years old, wasn't I up every morning at four o'clock choppin' wood—yes! and out in the dark and snow—to build a fire in a country grocery store? And here Bibbs has to go and have a doctor because he can't—Pho! It makes me tired! If he'd gone at it like a man he wouldn't be sick."

He paced the bedroom—the usual setting for such parental discussions—in his night gown, shaking his big, grizzled head and gesticulating to his bedded spouse. "My Lord!" he said. "If the little, teeny bit o' work like this is too much for him, why, he ain't fit for anything! It's nine-tenths imagination, and the rest of it—well, I won't say it's deliberate, but I would like to know just how much of it's put on!"

"Bibbs didn't want the doctor," said Mrs. Sheridan. "It was when he was here to dinner that night, and I noticed how he couldn't eat anything. Honey, you better come to bed."

"Eat!" he snorted. "Eat! It's work that makes men eat! And there's another thing you'll notice about good health, if you'll take the trouble to look around you, Mrs. Sheridan: busy men haven't got time to be sick, and they don't get sick. You just think it over, and you'll find that 99 per cent of the sick people you know are either women or loafers. Yes, ma'am!"

"Honey," she said again, drowsily, "you better come to bed."

"Look at the other boys," her husband bade her. "Look at Jim and Roscoe. Look at how they work. Right now there isn't a harder-workin', brighter business man in this city than Jim. I've pushed him, but he give me something to push against. You can't push 'nervous dyspepsia!' And look at Roscoe; just look at what that boy's done for himself, and barely twenty-seven years old—married, got a fine wife, and ready to build for himself with his own money when I put up the new house for you and Edie."

"Papa, you'll catch cold in your bare feet," she murmured. "You'd better come to bed."

"And I'm just as proud of Edie, for a girl," he continued, emphatically, "as I am of Jim and Roscoe for boys. She'll make some man a mighty good wife when the time comes. She's the prettiest and talentedest girl in the United States! I tell you I'm mighty proud o' them three children! But Bibbs—" He paused, shaking his head. "Honest, mamma, when I talk to men that got all their boys doin' well and worth their salt, why, I have to keep my mind on Jim and Roscoe and forget about Bibbs."

Mrs. Sheridan tossed her head fretfully upon the pillow. "You did the best you could, papa," she said, impatiently, "so come to bed and quit reproachin' yourself for it."

He glared at her indignantly. "Reproachin' myself!" he snorted. "I ain't doin' anything of the kind! What in the name o' goodness would I want to reproach myself for? And it wasn't the 'best I could,' either. It was the best anybody could. I was givin' him a chance to show what was in him and make a man of himself—and here he goes and gets 'nervous dyspepsia' on me!"

He went to the old-fashioned gas fixture, turned out the light, and muttered his way morosely into bed.

"What?" said his wife, crossly, bothered by a subsequent mumbling.

"More like hookworm, I said," he explained, speaking louder. "I don't know what to do with him!"

CHAPTER II.

Beginning at the beginning and learning from the ground up was a long course for Bibbs at the sanitarium, with milk and "zwieback" as the basis of instruction; and the months were many and tiresome before he was considered near enough graduation to go for a walk leaning on a nurse and a cane. These and subsequent months saw the planning, the building and the completion of the new house, and it was to that abode of Bigness that Bibbs was brought when the cane, without the nurse, was found sufficient to his support.

Edith met him at the station. "Well, well, Bibbs!" she said, as he came slowly through the gates, the last of all the travelers from that train. "Do you think they ought to 've let you come? You certainly don't look well!"

"But I certainly do look better," he returned, in a voice as slow as his gait; a drawl that was a necessity, for when Bibbs tried to speak quickly he stammered. "Up to about a month ago it took two people to see me. They had to get me in a line between 'em!"

Edith did not turn her eyes directly toward him again, after her first quick glance; and her expression, in spite of her, showed a faint, troubled distaste. She was nineteen, fair and slim, with small, unequal features, but a prettiness of color and a brilliancy of eyes that created a total impression close upon beauty. There was something about her, as kind old ladies say, that was very sweet; and there was something that was hurried and breathless. Bibbs bent upon her a steady, whimsical scrutiny as they stood at the curb, waiting for an automobile across the street to disengage itself from the traffic.

"That's the new car," she said. "Everything's new. We've got four now, besides Jim's. Roscoe's got two."

"Edith, you look—" he began, and paused.

"Oh, we're all well," she said briskly; and then, as if something in his tone had caught her as significant, "Well, how do I look, Bibbs?"

"You look—" He paused again, taking in the full length of her—trim, brown shoes, scant, rough skirt, coat of brown and green, mad little rough hat in the mad mode—all suited to the October day.

"How do I look?" she insisted.

"You look," he answered, as his examination ended upon an incrusted watch of platinum and enamel at her wrist, "you look—expensive!"

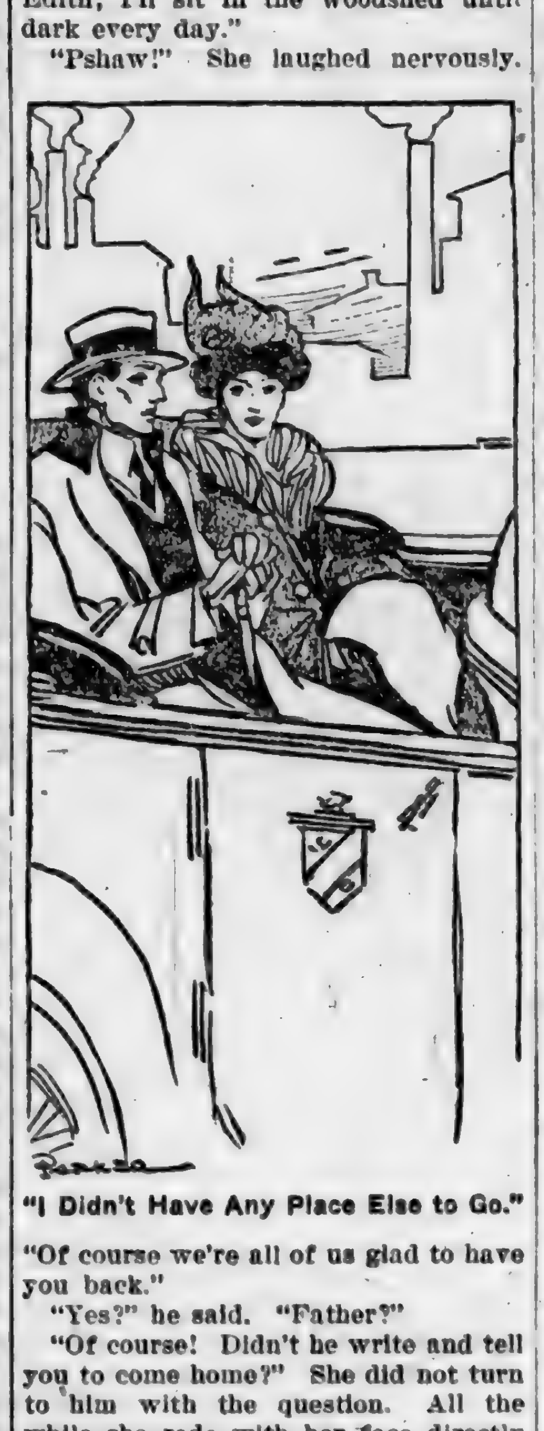
"I expect I am!" she laughed. "Do you want Claus to help you in?"

"Oh, no," said Bibbs. "I'm alive." And after a fit of panting subsequent to his climbing into the car unaided, he added, "Of course, I have to tell people!"

"We only got your telegram this morning," she said, as they began to move rapidly through the "wholesale district" neighboring the station. "Mother said she'd hardly expected you this month."

"They seemed to be through with me up there in the country," he explained, gently. "At least they said they were, and they wouldn't keep me any longer, because so many really sick people wanted to get in. They told me to go home—and I didn't have any place else to go. It'll be all right, Edith; I'll sit in the woodshed until dark every day."

"Pshaw!" She laughed nervously. "Of course we're all of us glad to have you back."



"I Didn't Have Any Place Else to Go."

"Yes?" he said. "Father?"

"Of course! Didn't he write and tell you to come home?" She did not turn to him with the question. All the while she rode with her face directly forward.

"No," he said; "father hasn't written."

She flushed a little. "I expect I ought to 've written something, or one of the boys—"

"Oh, no; that was all right."

"You can't think how busy we've all been this year, Bibbs. Of course we knew mamma was writing often, and—"

"Of course!" he said, readily. "There's a chunk of coal fallen on your glove, Edith. Better flick it off before it smears. My word! I'd almost forgotten how sooty it is here."

"We've been having very bright weather this month—for us." She blew the flake of soot into the air, seeming relieved.

He looked up at the dingy sky, wherein hung the disconsolate sun like a cold tin pan nailed up in a smokehouse by some lunatic, for a decoration. "Yes," said Bibbs. "It's very gay." A few moments later, as they passed a corner, "Aren't we going home?" he asked. "Your new driver is taking us out of the way, isn't he?"

"Good gracious!" she cried. "Didn't you know we'd moved? Didn't you know we were in the new house?"

"Why, no!" said Bibbs. "Are you?"

"We've been there a month! Good gracious! Didn't you know—" She broke off, flushing again, and then went on hastily: "Of course, mamma's never been so busy in her life; we all haven't had time to do anything but keep on the hop. Mamma couldn't even come to the station today. Papa's got some of his business friends and people from around the old-house neighborhood coming tonight for a big dinner and 'house warming'—dreadful kind of people—but mamma's got it all on her hands. She's never sat down a minute; and if she did, papa would have her up again before—"

"Of course," said Bibbs. "Do you like the new place, Edith?"

"I don't like some of the things father would have in it, but it's the finest house in town, and that ought to be good enough for me! Papa bought one thing I like—a view of the Bay of Naples in oil that's perfectly beautiful; it's the first thing you see as you come in the front hall, and it's eleven feet long. But he would have that old fruit picture we had in the Murphy street house hung up in the new dining room. It's horribly out of date to have those things in dining rooms, and I caught Bobby Lamhorn giggling at it; and Sibyl made fun of it, too, with Bobby, and then told papa she agreed with him about its being such a fine thing, and said he did just right to insist on having it where he wanted it. She makes me tired! Sibyl!"

Edith's first constraint with her brother, amounting almost to awkwardness, vanished with this theme, though she still kept her full gaze always to the front, even in the extreme ardor of her denunciation of her sister-in-law.

"Sibyl!" she repeated, with such heat and vigor that the name seemed to strike fire on her lips. "I'd like to know why Roscoe couldn't have married somebody from here that would have done us some good, instead of this Sibyl Rink! I met some awfully nice people from her town when mamma and I were at Atlantic City, last spring, and not one had ever even heard of the Rinks! Not even heard of 'em!"

"I thought you were great friends with Sibyl," Bibbs said.

"Up to the time I found her out!" the sister returned, with continuing vehemence. "I've found out some things about Mrs. Roscoe Sheridan lately—"

"It's only lately?"

"Well—" Edith hesitated, her lips setting primly. "Of course, I always did see that she never cared the snap of her little finger about Roscoe!"

"It seems," said Bibbs, in laconic protest, "that she married him."

The sister emitted a shrill cry, to be interpreted as contemptuous laughter, and, in her emotion, spoke too impulsively: "Why, she'd have married you!"

"No, no," he said; "she couldn't be that bad!"

"I didn't mean—" she began, distressed. "I only meant— I didn't mean—"

"Never mind, Edith," he consoled her. "You see, she couldn't have married me, because I didn't know her; and besides, if she's as mercenary as all that, she'd have been too clever. The head doctor even had to lend me the money for my ticket home."

"I didn't mean anything unpleasant about you," Edith babbled. "I only meant I thought she was the kind of a girl who was so simply crazy to marry somebody she'd have married anybody that asked her."

"Yes, yes," said Bibbs; "it's all straight." And, perceiving that his sister's expression was that of a person whose adroitness has set matters perfectly to rights, he chuckled silently.

"Roscoe's perfectly lovely to her," she continued, a moment later. "Too lovely! If he'd wake up a little and lay down the law, some day, like a man, I guess she'd respect him more and learn to behave herself!"

"'Behave?'"

"Oh, well, I mean she's so insincere," said Edith, characteristically evasive when it came to stating the very point to which she had led, and in this not unique of her sex.

Bibbs contented himself with a noncommittal gesture. "Business is crawling up the old streets," he said, his long, tremulous hand indicating a vasty structure in course of erection. "The boarding houses come first, and then the—"

"That isn't for shops," she informed him. "That's a new investment of papa's—the 'Sheridan apartments.'"

"Well, well," he murmured. "I supposed 'Sheridan' was almost well enough known here already."

"Oh, we're well enough known about!" she said, impatiently. "I guess there isn't a man, woman, child or nigger baby in town that doesn't know who we are. But we aren't in with the right people."

"No!" he exclaimed. "Who's all that?"

"You know what I mean: the best people, the old families—the people that have the real social position in this town and that know they've got it."

Bibbs engaged in his silent chuckle again; he seemed highly amused. "I thought that the people who actually had the real what-do-you-call-it didn't know it," he said. "I've always understood that it was very unsatisfactory, because if you thought about it you didn't have it, and if you had it you didn't know it."

"That's just bosh," she retorted. "They know it in this town, all right! I found out a lot of things, long before we began to think of building out in this direction. The right people in this town aren't always the society-column ones, and they mix around with outsiders, but they're a clan, just the same; and they have the clan feeling. Most of 'em were here long before papa came, and the grandfathers of the girls of my age knew each other, and—"

"I see," Bibbs interrupted, gravely. "Their ancestors fled together from many a stricken field, and crusaders' blood flows in their veins. I always understood the first house was built by an old party of the name of Vertrees, who couldn't get along with Dan'l Boone, and hurried away to these parts because Dan'l wanted him to give back a gun he'd lent him."

Edith gave a little ejaculation of alarm. "You mustn't repeat that story, Bibbs, even if it's true. The Vertreeses are the best family, and of course the very oldest here; they were an old family even before Mary Vertrees' great-great-grandfather came west and founded this settlement. He came from Lynn, Massachusetts, and they have relatives there yet—some of the best people in Lynn!"

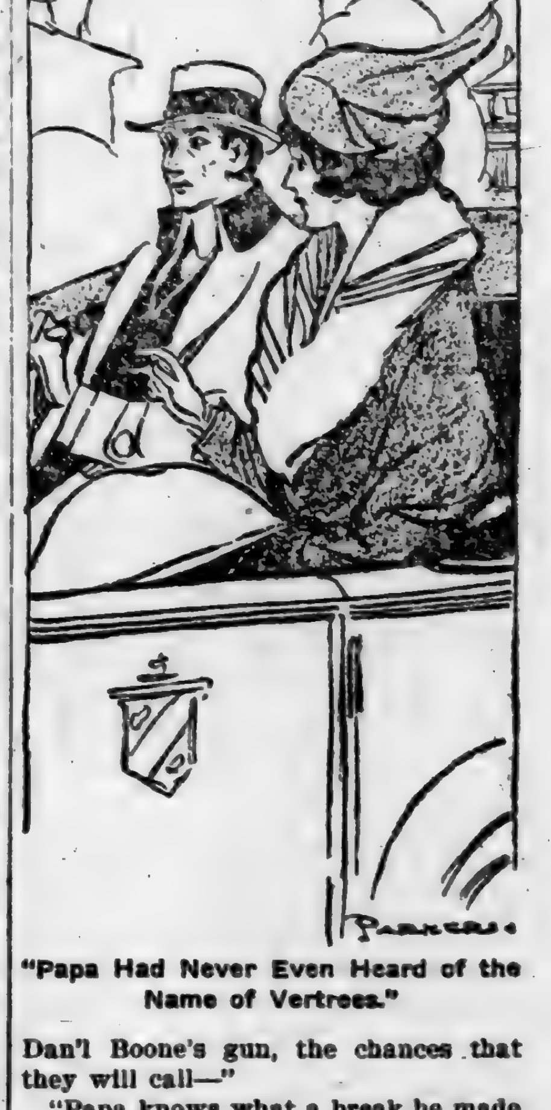
"No!" exclaimed Bibbs, incredulously.

"And there are other old families like the Vertreeses," she went on, not heeding him; "the Lamhorns and the Kittersbys and the J. Palmerston Smiths—"

"Strange names to me," he interrupted. "Poor things! None of them have my acquaintance."

"No, that's just it!" she cried. "And papa had never even heard the name of Vertrees! Mrs. Vertrees went with some antismoke committee to see him, and he told her that smoke was what made her husband bring home his wages from the pay roll on Saturday night! He told us about it, and I thought I just couldn't live through the night, I was so ashamed! Mr. Vertrees has always lived on his income, and papa didn't know him, of course. They're the stiffest, most elegant people in the whole town. And to crown it all, papa went and bought the next lot to the old Vertrees country mansion—it's in the very heart of the best new residence district now, and that's where the new house is, right next door to them—and I must say it makes their place look rather shabby! I met Mary Vertrees when I joined the Mission Service Helpers, but she never did any more than just barely bow to me, and since papa's break I doubt if she'll do that! They haven't called."

"And you think if I spread this gossip about Vertrees the First stealing Dan'l Boone's gun, the chances that they will call—"



"Papa Had Never Even Heard of the Name of Vertrees."

"Papa knows what a break he made with Mrs. Vertrees. I made him understand that," said Edith, demurely, "and he's promised to try and meet Mr. Vertrees and be nice to him. Bobby Lamhorn told Sibyl he was going to bring his mother to call on her and on mamma, but it was weeks ago, and I notice he hasn't done it; and if Mrs. Vertrees decides not to know us, I'm darn sure Mrs. Lamhorn 'll never come. That's one thing Sibyl didn't manage! She said Bobby offered to bring his mother—"

"You say he is a friend of Roscoe's?" Bibbs asked.

AGAINST THE BACKGROUND OF A GREAT CITY BLACK WITH THE SMOKE AND FILLED WITH THE TURMOIL OF MANUFACTURING, MR. TARKINGTON HAS DRAWN FOR US THE PORTRAITS OF A MAN AND HIS SON WHO STAND OUT BOLDLY AS DISTINCT AMERICAN TYPES AND MAKE THIS STORY WHAT IT IS—NOT ONLY A STORY OF BIGNESS, BUT THE BIGGEST STORY OF TODAY.

How will Edith use Bibbs in her efforts to "get thick" with the aristocratic old families? Do you think Bibbs will be drawn into the "social swim?"

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

JUNE

L 908

0190

THE UNIVERSAL FORD

Following is a list of names of Purchases of New Ford Cars since August 1st 1915. I also sold quite a number of Second-hand Ford Cars to purchasers whose names are not listed. More than half of the Motor Car buyers are purchasing FORDS.

Better Get Yours To-Day.

Len Parker
E. L. Dunten
O. D. Baker
P. A. Shurts
Eli Conrad
J. M. Eager
Clyde Boger
A. O. Boger
Harry Erwin
J. C. Stuckey
P. F. Disler
George Fredrick
Fisher & Henderson
Frank Thimlar
Samuel Haas
Wm. Miller
F. G. Mueller
G. A. Eager
Wm. G. Tonkel
George Garman
Albert Roth
M. A. Schreffler
Jack Beams
M. Hensinger
Roland Bearss
David Schlatter
Gerry Bates
Samuel Wann
David Neuhouser
David Hissong
Joseph Bice
LeRoy Blackburn
W. J. Snyder
Rev. Phillips
J. Hollabaugh
F. W. Silberg
James Linn McCombs
John Myers
Chas Zeis
Lorenzo McRider
Frank Wertman
E. C. Preston
Noah Wilks
G. W. McCombs
J. L. Godby
Gust Haffner
Sol Koble
Chas. Fishburn
Dr. M. H. Hostettler
O Braybrook
Chester Loucks
Chas. Konst
Simon Beck
W. C. Stevick
Alvin Keesler
S. C. Dunten
Elmer C. Smith
David Stauffer
Elmer Garman
J. M. Gorrell
L. H. Snyder
E. A. Sordelet
S A. Rickett
Eli Warner
J. R. Gill
J. C. F. Abel
J. C. Valentine
R. G. Hall
C. A Patterson
F. W. McCormick
Dr. J. C. Emme
O. W. Miller
Dick Moss
George Krumbigel
E. J. Maupin
Walter Betz
George Hollopeter
Joe Delegrange
Louis Ulam
Arthur Bailey
Joseph Neuhouser
R. U. Bowser
Clarence Baron
D. W. Akey
Fred Moroff
John R. Stella
Claude Laub
Noah Yoder
Simon Gerig
Perry Warner

For Sale By

JOHN LANTZ, Dealer
LEO, INDIANA

Cars on Display at Sales Room.

Our Gravel Road.

Talk about roads, well just take a drive over our county gravel road from the north end to the south and see what it means to have a gravel road. Fierce, well I should say so. There never has been a time since that road was built that it was in such shape as at the present time, and all due to neglect, perhaps on the part of those in whose charge the road has been given. As a general rule road work is done after all other work is completed and then they can't be put in shape. $300 per year is set aside each year for the maintainance of this road and if properly used will keep it in fine shape. Last Thursday, the editor made a trip to the county seat and had a talk with Mr. Bordner, who is at the present a member of the County Board of Commissioners, and he reports to us that this road has been turned over to Wallace Abel, who is commissioner from this district and he was to appoint the men to care for and do the work on this road. It is a sad fact that this road is in such bad condition and that the money that is appropriated for this work is now all used up on the road. The complaint made will be filed and looked into by the Board.

FreeColumn

All advertisements in this department are free to subscribers only. —EDITOR NEWS.]

For Sale:-- 50 bu. Sir Walter Raleigh potatoes. John Doll.

FOR SALE: Sweet Potato, Celery, Pepper, Cabbage, and Tomato plants for sale. Mrs. G. W. Woodcox.

FOR SALE:-About 30 gallons of fine salt pickles. Will deliver anywhere in town in 2 dozen lots at 5c. per dozen. W. L. HALLABAUGH.

WANTED:-To buy two shoats. JOE WINEBRENNER, care of H. M. Widney.

The Gossip Say-

More rain, more grass.

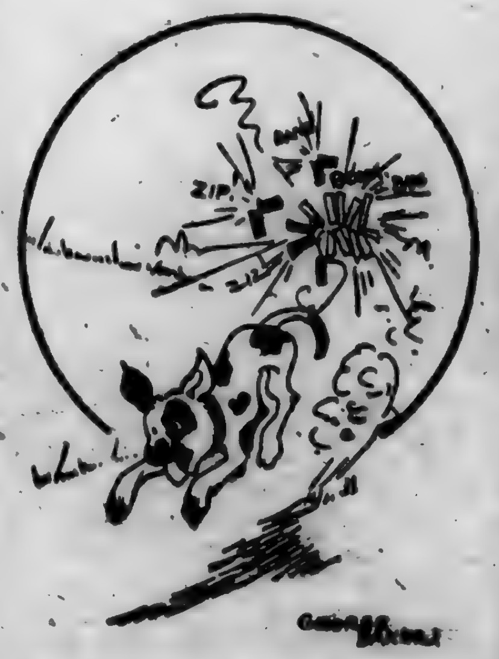
June Cosmopolitan magazines just arrived at News office. If you want one just phone us.

Greatly reduced prices on Shoes and Oxfords. You can't afford to be without, at the prices we are quoting. BEAMS & Co.

Wash Woodcox and Dennis Burley were over Sunday guests of Don Burley and family of Brooks, Ind. Mrs. J. B. Gibford, of Auburn, is staying with Mrs. Burley during his absence.

The B. & O. oiled their tracks last Thursday in fine shape. The train contained three cars of Indian road oil and the spray covered the ground from the grass on both sides. This will make it a more of a pleasure to the passengers on the fast trains.

MEAN TRICK



The Pup—So dis is what dey meant when dey said I was to be on de Fourth of July Fireworks Celebration committee.

EXTRA! EXTRA!

Come to St. Joe on the Glorious Fourth.

We have just received a small consignment of room size Rugs on approval-including 9 by 12 and 11¼ by 15 size—On account of the recent heavy advance on Rugs and the very low price the importers make us on this lot, with the priveledge of keeping them on display in our Carpet Room for two weeks rather than return them, we will give our patrons a special benefit in the way of price concession for two weeks. Not a rug in the lot worth less than $20.00 at present market value—take your choice during the two weeks display for $15.75. A lot of small size rugs at equally low price. Carpet remnants at your own price—40 Men's Summer Weight Suits, Style Plus brand regular $17.00 value—take your choice for two weeks at $12.-50—A lot of Rain Coats at about half regular price.

25 pairs Lace Curtains, just received, special at $1.25 and $1.65 pair, for two weeks—Ball Bearing, 16 inch cut, Lawn Mower, $2.50. Make arrangements to be in St. Joe, July 4th., big doings all along the line—Granulated Sugar, $8.00 per hundred pound sack, this week only—Here is the big bargain, 4 large size cans Hominy for 25 cts.

Bring us your Eggs, and tell everybody about the big doings here two weeks from next Tuesday. Listen for the big guns early in the morning.

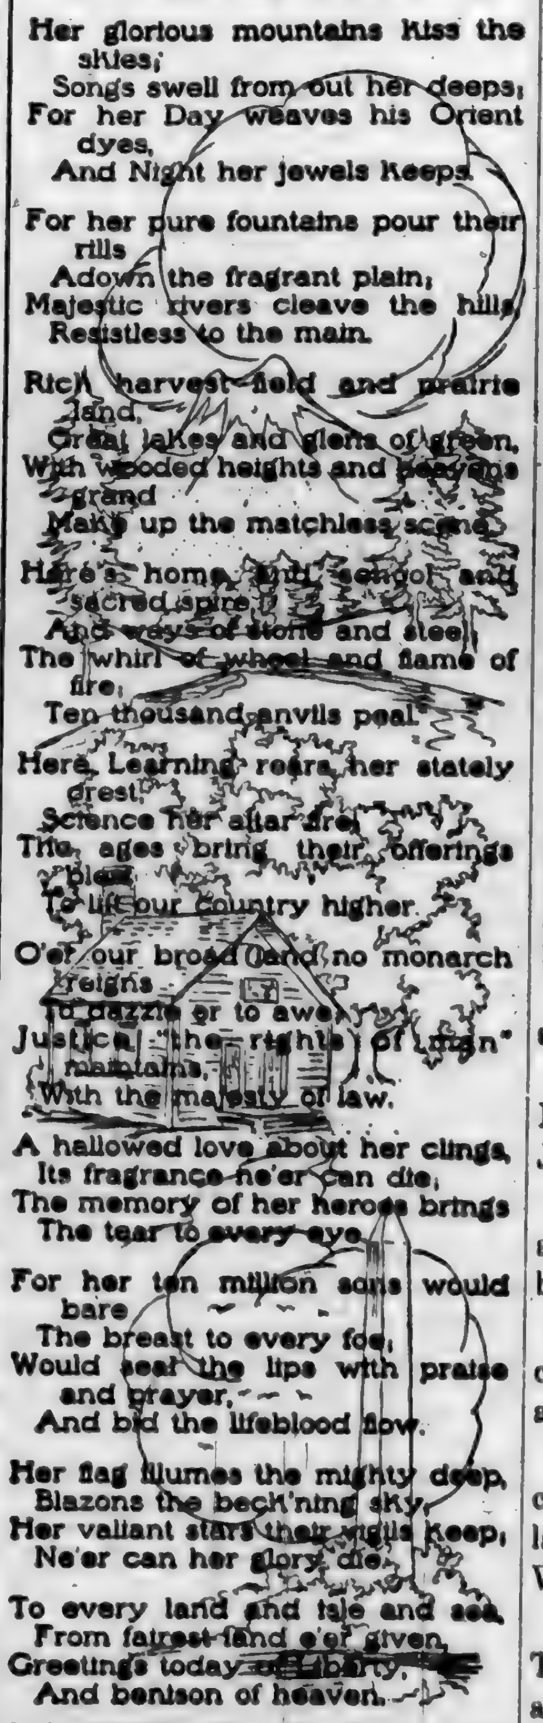
Jones.

Transfer paper at NEWS office, 2 sheets for 5c. Get some now for that pattern you wish to transfer.

OUR COUNTRY'S FOURTH OF JULY

An Indestructible Union of Unquenchable Stars

BY EDWIN HIGGINS



Her glorious mountains kiss the skies;
Songs swell from out her deeps;
For her Day weaves his Orient dyes,
And Night her jewels keeps.

For her pure fountains pour their rills
Adown the fragrant plain;
Majestic rivers cleave the hills,
Resistless to the main.

Rich harvest-field and prairie land,
Great lakes and glens of green,
With wooded heights and heavens grand
Make up the matchless scene.

Here's home and school and sacred spire,
And ways of stone and steel,
The whirl of wheel and flame of fire,
Ten thousand anvils peal.

Here Learning rears her stately crest,
Science her altar fire;
The ages bring their offerings blest
To lift our country higher.

O'er our broad land no monarch reigns
To dazzle or to awe;
Justice "the rights of man" maintains,
With the majesty of law.

A hallowed love about her clings,
Its fragrance ne'er can die;
The memory of her heroes brings
The tear to every eye.

For her ten million sons would bare
The breast to every foe;
Would seal the lips with praise and prayer,
And bid the lifeblood flow.

Her flag illumes the mighty deep,
Blazons the beck'ning sky,
Her valiant stars their vigils keep;
Ne'er can her glory die.

To every land and isle and sea,
From fairest land e'er given,
Greetings today of Liberty,
And benison of heaven.

IN LIBERTY'S NAME

Memorable Scene When Patriots Signed the Declaration of Independence.

By GEORGE LEWIS BAILEY.

ONE hundred and forty years ago occurred the memorable event we celebrate at this season. There were gathered in the old statehouse in Philadelphia half a hundred men, determined upon a course that was destined to affect the history of the world. The Declaration had been written. A committee had been out all night in its preparation. Finally the door of the committee room swung open. Three men appeared. Thomas Jefferson held the parchment in an unsteady hand. He advanced and spread it upon the table. There was one question—the one question in the minds and upon the lips of those who waited: "Shall it be signed or not?" Jefferson spoke a few bold words and sat down. Adams was on his feet in an instant. Ablaze with the inspiration of the hour, he poured out his whole soul. Somebody whispered something about "gibbets." A ripple of uneasiness moved through the crowd. The speaker sensed it, and instinctively knew that the psychological moment was upon them. Towering to his tiptoe height, he lifted his voice in a ringing crescendo: "Sign that parchment! Sign, if the next moment the gibbet's rope is about your necks! Sign, if the next moment this hall rings with the clash of falling axes! With the last sound of my voice, with the last gasp of my breath, I would implore you, men, to sign—sign in the name of fathers, brothers, wives, children, in the name of our children's children . . ."

Already men were hastening to grasp the pen. And now the parchment is signed. From yonder tower the old bell peals forth the news. And now, 140 years after, those tones are echoed and re-echoed around the world, and are known and understood wherever man has learned the name of liberty.

"Perfect and Glorious."

Critics may come and go, but no one of them will be able to improve upon the clear-cut eloquence or the orderly arrangement of the Declaration of Independence—the "absolutely perfect and glorious expression of the Revolution."—Exchange.

NOTICE!

the largest and best line of Shirts and Neckwear ever shown in St. Joe at

BARNEY'S

ALL NEW

NEWVILLE

Don't put off any longer. Subscribe now.

Emery Welker and family, of Ney, Ohio, were Sunday guests of J. H. Benner and family.

Mrs. Josie DeLong is quite ill at this writing with a nervous break down.

Mrs. Lilly Engle and son Marcell, of Auburn, are visiting friends at Newville.

The majority of people in this community spent at least one day last week at the Centennial at Ft. Wayne.

Mrs. Mitchel went to Ft. Wayne, Thursday, and expects to remain an indefinite length of time.

The U. B. Ladies Aid met with Mrs. Moore near Center, Wednesday of last week. Forty were present.

Miss Lucile Whitherst and Wilbur Shroyer were among the Ft. Wayne visitors, Friday.

The Newville Pythian Sisters attended the Convention at Hamilton, last Friday.

Harvey Laurah spent the latter part of the week at Clear Lake the guest of his grandparents.

The Temperance meeting held here Sunday was well attended. Chairs were placed on the porch of the Benner store, and everybody made comfortable. Rev. Keesey, of this place, and J. P. Buckingham were the speakers for the occasion.

Sound
Pure Bred
Percheron
Stallion
Right Sort
Enrollment No. 2873

Years past, this horse has been standing at Auburn; but we are now located at St. Joe in the barn just north of the B. & O. tracks near the mill. Will stand for the season at home, 2 miles east of St. Joe on Monday and Tuesday of each week; and on Wednesday, Thursday, Friday and Saturday of each week in the barn at St. Joe

TERMS:
$15 to Insure Living Colt

E. W. BEABER
Owner

S. S. Widney
Justice of the Peace
Insurance and Real Estate
Phone No. 10
ST. JOE, - - - IND

100 Per Cent.
INCREASED EARNINGS.

The following is fac-simile of certificate of Bond issued to each Depositor in this Bank.

No. ________ Grabill, Ind., ________ 19____

Mr. ____________________

THIS IS TO CERTIFY that your DEPOSITS in this bank are INSURED under a bond of THE AMERICAN GUARANTY COMPANY of Columbus, Ohio.

THE GRABILL STATE BANK.

PRESERVE THIS. By Albert Egly, Cashier.

Postal Savings pay 2 per cent. Interest and the money is placed in banks who have to furnish a Bond to the government to guarantee that the funds are safe in that Bank.

We pay 4 per cent. Interest and give you the same guarantee. An increased earning of 100 per cent.

THIS is the only Bank in this community thus insuring its depositors.

Total Assets, over $175,000

The Grabill State Bank
Established 1906

Joseph Witmer, President
David Klopfenstine, v. pres.
Albert Egly, Cashier
Joseph A. Grabill, Director
Peter W. Amstutz, Director
Julius Gehrig, Director
John B. Haifley, Chairman Board Directors

JUNE

L 908

Has Your Subscription Expired? Come in and renew it next time you are in town.

ST. JOE NEWS.

NO newspaper can succeed without advertising, therefore we solicit the patronage of our readers for those who by their advertising help to make this paper possible.

VOL. XXX ST. JOE, DeKALB COUNTY INDIANA, THURSDAY JUNE 22 1916 NO. 25

LOCAL ITEMS.

Hammocks and Croquet Sets at Dunkle's.

Glen Wineland and wife were at Ft. Wayne yesterday.

Stanley Monroe of Butler, spent Tuesday night under the parental roof.

The infant daughter of Sam Keesler and wife is very low with pneumonia.

Mrs. Ida Woodcox and children, of Woodburn, spent the first of the week with her mother, Mrs. Ella Gill.

Announcement!

I have purchased the Meek Restaurant and Ice Cream Parlor. A continuance of your patronage is solicited, and we shall always try to serve you with the best of lunch. Ladies welcome! Our Ice Cream is the Best.

L. J. Miller
OPERA HOUSE BLOCK
St. Joe, Ind.

WOOL!

Dispose of you crop of Wool now and get a good price—and save all that handling and chance for loosing money. We are prepared to handle wool this spring and you will be guaranteed the highest market price.

Call or Phone to

JACK BEAMS,

Spencerville.

Watches that give service at Dunkle's.

Ray Reasoner, wife and son Floyd, spent Sunday with Nick Funk and family.

Mrs. A. D. Brunson was a Monday evening supper guest of C. C. Bassett and wife.

John Hull, Elgin Curie, Ed Leighty and H. L. Dunkle motored to Ft. Wayne, Thursday.

Floyd Ritter, of Teagarden, came Friday for a few days visit with his aunt, Mrs. William Wallace and family.

Joseph Caw, of Pittsburgh, visited his wife and son, who are at the Rolland Bearss home for an indefinite stay.

Mr. and Mrs. Offett and son Harry, and F. H. Langley and wife all of Ft. Wayne, were at the Sam Warner home, Sunday.

Mrs. C. E. Fifield and Mrs. J. W Kuehl of McCool, Ind., are guests at the home of F. M. Monroe. The two ladies are sisters of Mrs. Monroe.

Mr. and Mrs. Uriah Royer, of Orville, Ohio, is here visiting the former's sister and husband, Mr. and Mrs. C. C. Curie and other relatives.

Mrs. Alice Gee and children visited her brother, Milton Carper and family, going Wednesday. She accompanied them to the Clark reunion which was held at the Miser home near Sedan, Thursday.

There was some little excitement in the Pepple—Kinsey home Monday morning, when the gasoline stove in the summer kitchen caught fire burning floor, ceiling and curtain at the window. Prompt action on the part of the family put out the fire.

Rev. C. W. Mahin, of Auburn; Charles Thayer/ and daughter Mary, Harry Bushong and wife, and James Hadsell and wife, all of Ft. Wayne, who were here in attendance at the funeral of Mrs. Maria Shull were Saturday evening guests of Dr. and Mrs. Sheffer.

On June 17 flour was sold from the car at $6.70 per barrel. On that date wheat was worth 98c. per bu. It required $6.50 worth of wheat to buy it. If $6.50 worth of wheat was exchanged for Daily Bread Flour it would get 240 lbs. of flour and 82 lbs. of feed, or a net saving of $2.41 on each barrel exchanged. Does it pay? Insist on Daily Bread Flour, made in your own home town.

HAY CARS

Ask for and get the best

Ney and Louden

SPECIAL CROSS DRAFT AND TRIP CARS are standards the world over. All others imitate but none excell. We can furnish the above cars with all accessories, installed and guaranteed to give satisfaction. Allow us to figure on your track.

SPECIAL!

As long as they last Slings

AT $2.10

STEWARD LUMBER & GRAIN Co

SPENCERVILLE, IND.

Highest Prices Paid for Grain and Seeds.

Celebrate at St. Joe, the Fourth

Dunkle's Drug Store is the place to get Paint.

Fred Hart went to Avilla, Tuesday, to meet Mrs. Hart's sister.

Frank Baker and family were Sunday guests of Mrs. Anna Dilley.

Mrs Chas Bills and children of Auburn, are visiting with F. P. Hart and family and Mrs. Bills.

Twine should be bought now and Curie is prepared to supply your demands with McCormick.

Miss Edna Jackson spent from Sunday until Tuesday the guest of her uncle, Hollis Jackson and wife.

Henry Sechler and wife, and Mr. Cole, of Butler, were Sunday afternoon guests of Jacob Sechler and wife.

Hollis Jackson and wife, and Thomas Rickett and wife were Sunday guests of Bert Jackson and family.

B. F. Terman and wife spent Sunday with their nephew, Earl Crawford and family, 4 miles north of Defiance.

Earl Pepple and wife, of Auburn, came Monday evening for a visit with the former's parents, William Pepple and wife.

C. J. Foltz, of near Holgate, was the guest of his sister and husband, J. P. Buckingham and wife, Monday and Tuesday.

Miss Agnes Sechler, Harry Kinsey and Darrell Carpenter were at home over Sunday from their school work at Angola.

Jacob Baltz and wife, of Spencerville, and Wm. Sommers and wife, of Coburntown, were at Frank Sechlers', Sunday afternoon.

Mrs. C H. Jackson and daughter Berdina, of near Hicksville, and Mrs Figets of Toledo were Tuesday guests of Dr. and Mrs B S Sheffer.

Lee O. Tustison is home indefinitely on account of having sold out his interests in the Columbus, Ind., Daily. He will seek a location soon.

Mrs. Daisy Woodcox and son left Monday night for Garrett to be near her sister, who underwent an operation Tuesday at the Sacred Heart Hospital.

John Brown and wife, of east of Auburn, were Sunday guests of Iona Woodcox and family. Little Miss Beatrice returned home with them for a week's visit.

C. A. Patterson, and John Simanton and wife went to Garrett, Monday, and the latter couple returned in a new Buick, which they purchased through Mr. Patterson.

John Milliman, wife and children were called to South Milford, Thursday, by the sudden death of Mrs. Milliman's father, Joseph Whitcomb. E. R. Kinsey took them through in his machine.

Will Hamilton, wife and little daughter Margaret, motored to the Northrup farm near Ft. Wayne Sunday. Mrs. Howard Northrup who had been there, returned with them and will visit in their home a few days.

Frank Bowman, wife and daughter Eloise, went to Hamilton Lake, Saturday evening, remaining over night, when Mrs. Mary Bowman and son Ray, returned home with them Sunday morning.

A. Bilger and family, and Mrs. Wm. Culbertson and little daughter, of Garrett, and Mrs. E. Soule and daughter, Miss Orma, of Fostoria, O., autoed over from Garrett, last Thursday afternoon, and enjoyed six o'clock dinner with F. M. Thornton and wife.

Mrs. Pluma Hamilton entertained the R H. Club, Thursday. One guest being present, Mrs. Frank Bachtol of Toledo. Officers were elected to serve the coming six months as follows:—President, Mrs. Gladys Hart; Vice-president, Mrs. Leona Morr; Secretary, Mrs. Josephine Coburn; Treasurer, Mrs. Cora Waltz.

Dunkle will have fire works for the 4th.

Mrs. George Swineford was a Ft. Wayne visitor, Monday.

McCormick twine at Curie's—make up your order now.

Geo. Haifley went to Defiance, Tuesday, to work in the machine shops.

Charles Westgate and family, of near Adrian, Mich., are here visiting friends.

Levi Oberlin and wife, of near Butler, were Sunday guests of D R. Kosht and family.

Ernest Hallabaugh and daughter Mary, of Logansport, spent Monday with St. Joe relatives.

Mrs. Hillary Shuff spent Thursday and Friday with her daughter, Mrs. Frank Milliman and family.

S. N. Brunson, wife and son Robert, of near Butler, were Sunday guests of A D. Brunson and wife.

Little Miss Marie Houk, of Butler, is here visiting the little daughters of George Kinsey and wife this week.

Mr. and Mrs. Earl Pepple of Auburn, spent the first of the week with the former's parents, Wm. Pepple and wife.

Children's Day services will be held Sunday evening at the M. P. Church. A good program has been arranged for this occasion.

Mrs. C. E. Hadsell, daughter Geraldine and son Carlton, of Ft Wayne, were over Sunday guests of Dr. and Mrs. B S. Sheffer.

Mrs. J H. Dibert returned to her home in Garrett, Saturday night, after visiting since Wednesday with her daughter, Mrs. John Woodcox and family.

Martin Merrifield and son, of near Hicksville, were dinner guests and Miss Clara Bash and Tom Brunson were supper guests of C. C. Bassett and wife, Sunday.

John Darr, wife and baby, of Syracuse, Ind., were over Sunday guests of Frank Shaffer and family. Master Leonard Shaffer returned home with them for a few days.

Mrs. Bert Jackson, Mrs. Thomas Rickett, Mrs. F. M. Monroe, Mrs. Ab Copp, Mrs. Fred Leighty, John Hull and wife, and the Misses Violet Monroe and Edna Jackson were Ft. Wayne visitors, Thursday.

The Children's Day service at the Christian Church, Sunday evening, was fine and a full house greeted them. The usual interest was manifested in the Children's program and as an appreciation the collection amounted to $9.05.

John Provines and wife, of Covington; John Goldsmith and wife, of Harlau; the Misses Laura and Jennie Shutt, of Auburn; Frank Bowman and wife, and Mrs. Elson and daughter, Miss Alda, were Sunday dinner guests of Merritt Sechler.

Tuesday evening at the regular session of the Pythian sisters lodge, Mr. and Mrs. E. R. Kinsey, Chas. Frye and wife, Bert and Chas Jackson, were initiated into the mysteries of the degree. Fine refreshments were served and all enjoyed a good sociable evening.

G. W. Milliman and wife, Fanny Beaber, Frank Kinsey and wife, of this place; Will and Argyl Sechler, of Orangeville; Alva Coburn, Mrs. Matie Gee and Jacob Baker, of Coburn's Corners, all attended the funeral of Mrs. Marvel Gee Grimes which was held at Kendallville, last Thursday afternoon.

Frank Scholes, wife and daughter Ima, accompanied Mr. and Mrs. Dehner and baby, of near Monroeville, to the home of Robert Ulm and wife, at Butler, where they were afternoon guests. Archie Erickson and wife, of Garrett, also met with them in the Ulm home. Mrs. Ulm and children accompanied them back for a week's visit with St. Joe relatives.

WANTED—To buy your Hay. C. E. Frye, Phone 73-31, St. Joe.

New McCormick mower can be seen at Curie's—come in and see it before you buy.

Florence Buchanan and wife were guests of Frank Rhoads and family, near Spencerville, Sunday.

Chas. Thayer, wife and baby, of Charlotte, N. C., are here visiting Dr. Sheffer and wife, and other relatives.

Herman Brown and family, of Auburn, were Sunday afternoon guests of H. C. Hathaway and family.

Dr. and Mrs. C. R. Price, C. A. Patterson and wife, and Mrs. H. C. Hathaway were Ft. Wayne visitors, Friday.

Foster Gee and family will move from the Kinsey property, this week, into the Baker property in the east end of town.

Ye Editor, wife and son, John Bennett, and Earl Sherer, the latter of Chicago Ill., were Sunday dinner guests of Otto Ginther and family.

M. T. Bishop returned from the West, Friday evening, due to the fact that he was not improving in health. He lost several pounds in weight in his short stay.

Mrs. Besse Lannigan and little niece, who has been visiting her sister, Mrs. Chas. Bayman, returned to their home in Bluffton, Monday. Mrs. Bayman accompanied them as far as Ft. Wayne returning home in the evening.

Sunday School Report.

The following is a true and correct report of the various Sunday Schools in this neighborhood for last Sunday.

Lutheran	108	3.61
M. P.	95	$ 3.51
Christian	70	2 42
Concord	124	3.28
Fairview	25	.72
U B.	123	4 37
M. E. Spencer	93	3.46
Lutheran	110	2.71

Carson to go to Hospital

D. W. Carson, a printer by trade sixty-one years of age and single, was before an insanity board Monday in Auburn. The unfortunate man at one time was an inmate of the Northern Insane hospital. The medical testimony showed that Carson was a user of morphine and had been treated by physicians for this habit. Dr. U. G. Souder, Dr. W. W. Swartz and Dr. C. R. Clark together with Justice G. A. Mader were the board that passed upon the insanity of the man. He was declared to be dangerous and will be sent to the hospital for the insane.

"Kit," as the unfortunate man was commonly called, was employed in this office for several years, and many of our readers are well acquainted with him. His present sorrowful plight is bringing forth many expressions of sympathy and it is hoped that he will soon regain his mental poise.

Wedded Yesterday

On Wednesday, June 21st., at high noon, at the home of Harry Hursh in Garrett, occurred the marriage of Mr. Jesse Copp of New Haven, to Miss Violet Monroe to St. Joe. The M. P. minister officiating. Charles Koch drove the young couple, who were accompanied by the brother of the bride, Mr. Vernie Monroe, to Garrett, where the ceremony was performed. Mr. and Mrs. Copp are well known to St. Joe people having both been raised in this community. Mr. Copp is inspector at the handle factory in New Haven, where he has been employed for a number of years. The happy couple left Wednesday for their new home in New Haven which is already furnished. THE NEWS joins a host of friends in extending congratulations.

Patronize the advertisers.

You are paying out many dollars a year when you buy the necessities of life. If you paid such bill by check you could save money and besides have a receipt for every payment.

Try the Check way. Start To-day.

St. Joe Valley Bank--State Bank

4 per cent. paid on certificates if left 1 Year.

Safety Deposit Boxes for Rent

Did You See the Coal Come In?

We have more coming. The Chestnut Coal we offer for sale is the Good Old Reliable Scranton. Our Virginia Coal is the highest grade of free burning Virginia Lump on the market and our Pocahontas Coal speaks for itself.

Feeders remember we carry a full line of Bran and Middlings, Barrel and Rock Salt. Highest market prices paid for Grain.

You are always welcome at

St. JOE ELEVATOR

SAMUEL KEESLER, Local Manager.

JUNE

L 908

0192

The Turmoil

By
BOOTH TARKINGTON

The Story of a Big Man in a Big Town

(Copyright 1915, by Harper & Brothers)

SYNOPSIS.

—2—

Sheridan's attempt to make a business man of his son Bibbs by starting him in the machine shop ends in Bibbs going to a sanitarium, a nervous wreck. On his return Bibbs is met at the station by his sister Edith.

One of the near-tragedies of life comes when the poor young man or woman is snubbed by the rich crowd with whom he or she has played at school in childhood. It is then that poverty stings, and pride of family doesn't help much. The situation is quite as interesting, though reversed, when a rich and lovable young man is snubbed by a poor but haughty aristocrat because he belongs to the "new rich."

CHAPTER II—Continued.

"Oh, he's a friend of the whole family," she returned, with a petulance which she made no effort to disguise. "Roscoe and he got acquainted somewhere, and they take him to the theater about every night. Sibyl has him to lunch, too, and keeps—" She broke off with an angry little jerk of the head. "We can see the new house from the second corner ahead. Roscoe has built straight across the street from us, you know. Honestly, Sibyl makes me think of a snake, sometimes—the way she pulls the wool over people's eyes! She honeys up to papa and gets anything in the world she wants out of him, and then makes fun of him behind his back—yes, and to his face, but he can't see it! She got him to give her a twelve-thousand-dollar porch for their house after it was—"

"Good heavens!" said Bibbs, staring ahead as they reached the corner and the car swung to the right, following a bend in the street. "Is that the new house?"

"Yes. What do you think of it?"

"Well," he drawled, "I'm pretty sure the sanitarium's about half a size bigger; I can't be certain till I measure."

And a moment later, as they entered the driveway, he added, seriously:

"But it's beautiful!"

CHAPTER III.

It was gray stone, with long roofs of thick green slate. An architect who loved the milder "Gothic motives" had built what he liked: it was to be seen at once that he had been left unhampered, and he had wrought a picture out of his head into a noble and exultant reality. At the same time a landscape designer had played so good a second, with ready-made accessories of screen, approach and vista, that already whatever look of newness remained upon the place was to its advantage, as showing at least one thing yet clean under the grimy sky.

Altogether, the new house was a success. It was one of those architects' successes which leave the owners veiled in privacy; it revealed nothing of the people who lived in it save that they were rich. In our swelling cities rich families, one after another, take title and occupy such houses as fortunes rise and fall—they mark the high tide. It was impossible to imagine a child's toy wagon left upon a walk or driveway of the new house, and yet it was—as Bibbs rightly called it—"beautiful."

What the architect thought of the "Golfo di Napoli," which hung in its vast gold revel of rococo frame against the gray wood of the hall, is to be conjectured—perhaps he had not seen it.

"Edith, did you say only eleven feet?" Bibbs panted, staring at it, as the white-jacketed twin of a Pullman porter helped him to get out of his overcoat.

"Eleven without the frame," she explained. "It's splendid, don't you think? It lightens things up so. The hall was kind of gloomy before."

"No gloom now!" said Bibbs.

"This statue in the corner is pretty, too," she remarked. "Mamma and I bought that." And Bibbs turned at her direction to behold, amid a grove of tubbed palms, a "life-size," black-bearded Moor, of a plastic composition painted with unappeasable gloss and brilliancy. Upon his chocolate head he wore a gold turban; in his hand he held a gold-tipped spear; and for the rest, he was red and yellow and black and silver.

"Hallelujah!" was the sole comment of the returned wanderer, and Edith, saying she would "find mamma," left him blinking at the Moor. Presently, after she had disappeared, he turned to the colored man who stood waiting, Bibbs' traveling bag in his hand. "What do you think of it?" Bibbs asked, solemnly.

"Gran'!" replied the servitor. "She mighty hard to dus'. Dus' git in all 'em wrinkles. Yessuh, she mighty hard to dus'."

"I expect she must be," said Bibbs, his glance returning reflectively to the black full beard for a moment. "Is there a place anywhere I could lie down?"

"Yessuh. We got one nem spare rooms all fix up fo' you, suh. Right up stairs, suh. Nice room."

He led the way, and Bibbs followed slowly, stopping at intervals to rest, and noting a heavy increase in the staff of service since the exodus from the "old" house. Maid and scrub-women were at work under the patently nominal direction of another Pullman porter, who was profoundly enjoying his own affectation of being harassed with care.

"Ev'ything got look spick an' span fo' the big doin's tonight," Bibbs' guide explained, chuckling. "Yessuh, we got big doin's tonight! Big doin's!"

The room to which he conducted his lagging charge was furnished in every particular like a room in a new hotel; and Bibbs found it pleasant—though, indeed, any room with a good bed would have seemed pleasant to him after his journey. He stretched himself flat immediately, and having replied "Not now" to the attendant's offer to unpack the bag, closed his eyes wearily.

White-jacket, racially sympathetic, lowered the window shades and made an exit on tiptoe, encountering the other white jacket—the harassed overseer—in the hall without. Said the emerging one:

"He mighty shaky, Mist' Jackson. Drop right down an' shet his eyes. Eyelids all black. Rich folks gotta go same as anybody else. Anybody ast me if I change 'ith 'at ole boy—No, suh! Le'm keep 'is money; I keep my black skin an' keep out the ground!"

Mr. Jackson expressed the same preference. "Yessuh, he look tuh me like somebody awready laid out—"

He fell silent at a rustling of skirts in the corridor. It was Mrs. Sheridan hurrying to greet her son.

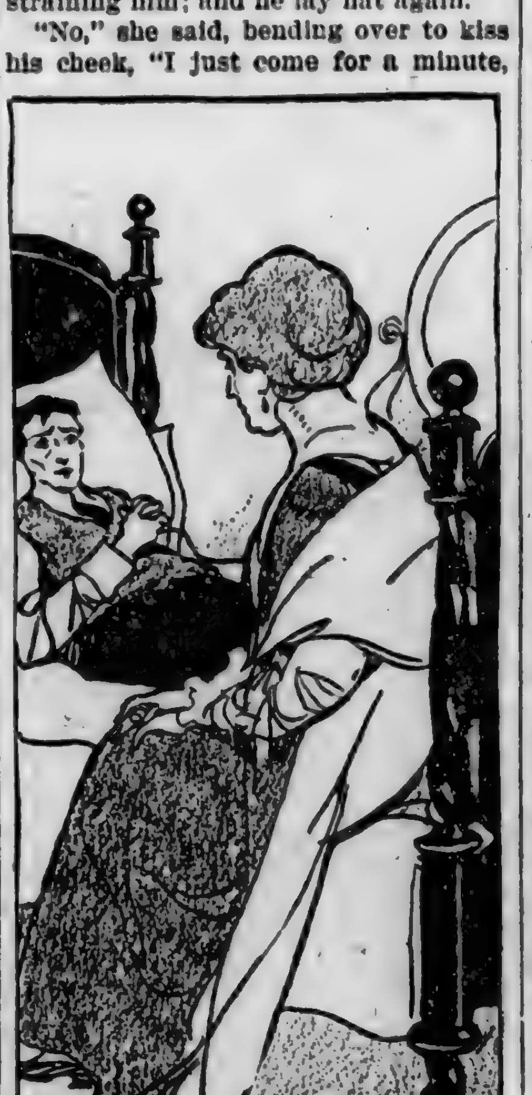
She was one of those fat, pink people who fade and contract with age like drying fruit; and her outside was a true portrait of her. Her husband and her daughter had long ago absorbed her. Edith lived all day with her mother, as daughters do; and Sheridan so held his wife to her unity with him that she had long ago become unconscious of her existence as a thing separate from his.

Mrs. Sheridan's manner was hurried and inconsequent; her clothes rustled more than other women's clothes; she seemed to wear too many at a time and to be vaguely troubled by them, and she was patting a skirt down over some unruly internal dissension at the moment she opened Bibbs' door.

At sight of the recumbent figure she began to close the door softly, withdrawing, but the young man had heard the turning of the knob and the rustling of skirts, and he opened his eyes.

"Don't go, mother," he said. "I'm not asleep." He swung his long legs over the side of the bed to rise, but she set a hand on his shoulder, restraining him; and he lay flat again.

"No," she said, bending over to kiss his cheek, "I just come for a minute, but I want to see how you seem. Edith said—"



"You Look a Great Deal Better Than What I Expected."

"Poor Edith!" he murmured. "She couldn't look at me. She—"

"Nonsense!" Mrs. Sheridan, having let in the light at a window, came back to the bedside. "You look a great deal better than what you did before you went to the sanitarium, anyway. It's done you good; a body can see that right away. You need fatting up, of course, and you haven't got much color—"

"No," he said, "I haven't much color."

"You look a great deal better than what I expected."

"Edith must have a great vocabulary!" he chuckled.

"She's too sensitive," said Mrs. Sheridan, "and it makes her exaggerate a little. What about your diet?"

"That's all right. They told me to eat anything."

"That's good," she said, nodding. "They mean for you just to build up your strength. That's what they told me the last time I went to see you at the sanitarium. You look better than what you did then, and that's only a little time ago. How long was it?"

"Eight months, I think."

"No, it couldn't be. I know it ain't that long, but maybe it was longer'n I thought. And this last month or so I haven't had scarcely even time to write more than just a line to ask how you were gettin' along, but I told Edith to write, the weeks I couldn't, and I asked Jim, too, and they both said they would, so I suppose you've kept up pretty well on the home news."

"Oh, yes."

"What I think you need," said the mother, gravely, "is to liven up a little and take an interest in things. That's what papa was sayin' this morning, after we got your telegram; and that's what'll stimulate your appetite, too. He was talkin' over his plans for you—"

"Plans?" Bibbs, turning on his side, shielded his eyes from the light with his hand, so that he might see her better. "What—" He paused. "What plans is he making for me, mother?"

She turned away, going back to the window to draw down the shade. "Well, you better talk it over with him," she said, with perceptible nervousness. "He better tell you himself. I don't feel as if I had any call, exactly, to go into it; and you better get to sleep now, anyway." She came and stood by the bedside once more. "But you must remember, Bibbs, whatever papa does is for the best. He loves his children and wants to do what's right by all of 'em—and you'll always find he's right in the end."

He made a little gesture of assent, which seemed to content her; and she rustled to the door, turning to speak again after she had opened it. "You get a good nap, now, so as to be all rested up for tonight."

"You—you mean—he—" Bibbs stammered, having begun to speak too quickly. Checking himself, he drew a long breath, then asked, quietly, "Does father expect me to come downstairs this evening?"

"Well, I think he does," she answered. "You see, it's the 'house warming,' as he calls it, and he said he thinks all our children ought to be around us, as well as the old friends and other folks. It's just what he thinks you need—to take an interest and liven up. You don't feel too bad to come down, do you?"

"Mother?"

"Well?"

"Take a good look at me," he said.

"Oh, see here!" she cried with brusk cheerfulness. "You're not so bad off as you think you are, Bibbs. You're on the mend, and it won't do you any harm to please your—"

"It isn't that," he interrupted. "Honestly, I'm only afraid it might spoil somebody's appetite. Edith—"

"I told you the child was too sensitive," she interrupted, in turn. "You're a plenty good-lookin' enough young man for anybody! You look like you been through a long spell and begun to get well, and that's all there is to it."

"All right. I'll come to the party. If the rest of you can stand it, I can!"

"It'll do you good," she returned, rustling into the hall. "Now take a nap, and I'll send one o' the help to wake you in time for you to get dressed up before dinner. You go to sleep right away, now, Bibbs!"

He woke refreshed, stretched himself gingerly—as one might have a care against too quick or too long a pull upon a frayed elastic—and, getting to his feet, went blinking to the window and touched the shade so that it flew up, letting in a pale sunset.

He looked out into the lemon-colored light and smiled wanly at the next house, as Edith's grandiose phrase came to mind, "the old Vertrees country mansion." It stood in a broad lawn which was separated from the Sheridans' by a young hedge; and it was a big, square, plain old box of a house with a giant salt-cellar atop for a cupola. Paint had been spared for a long time, and no one could have put a name to the color of it, but in spite of that the place had no look of being out at heel, and the sward was as neatly trimmed as the Sheridans' own.

Directly opposite the window the Vertrees' lawn had been graded so as to make a little knoll upon which stood a small rustic "summer house." It was almost on a level with Bibbs' window and not thirty feet away. Probably the "summer house" was pleasant and pretty in summer. But now in the thin light it was desolate, the color of dust, and hung with haggard vines which had lost their leaves.

Bibbs looked at it with grave sympathy, probably feeling some kinship with anything so dismantled; then he turned to a cheval glass beside the window and paid himself the dubious tribute of a thorough inspection. Throughout this cryptic seance his manner was profoundly impersonal, but finally he appeared to become pessimistic. He shook his head solemnly; then gazed again and shook his head again, and continued to shake it slowly, in complete disapproval.

"You certainly are one horrible sight!" he said, aloud.

And at that he was instantly aware of an observer. Turning quickly, he was vouchsafed the picture of a charming lady, framed in a rustic aperture of the "summer house" and staring full into his window—straight into his eyes, too, for the infinitesimal fraction of a second before the flashingly censorious withdrawal of her own. Composedly, she pulled several dead twigs from a vine, her action conveying a proclamation to the effect that she was in the summer house for the sole purpose of suchlike pruning and tending.

Having pulled enough twigs to emphasize her unconsciousness—and at the same time her disapproval—of everything in the nature of a Sheridan or belonging to a Sheridan, she descended the knoll with maintained composure, and sauntered toward a side door of the country mansion of the Vertreeses. An elderly lady, bonneted and cloaked, opened the door and came to meet her.

"Are you ready, Mary? I've been looking for you. What were you doing?"

"Nothing. Just looking into one of Sheridans' windows," said Mary Vertrees. "I got caught at it."

"Mary!" cried her mother. "Just as we were going to call! Good heavens!"

"We'll go, just the same," the daughter returned. "I suppose those women would be glad to have us if we'd burned their house to the ground."

"But who saw you?" insisted Mrs. Vertrees.

"One of the sons, I suppose he was. I believe he's insane, or something. At least I hear they keep him in a sanitarium somewhere, and never talk about him. He was staring at himself in a mirror and talking to himself. Then he looked out and caught me."

"How did he look?"

"Like a ghost in a blue suit," said Miss Vertrees, moving toward the street and waving a white-gloved hand in farewell to her father, who was observing them from the window of his library. "Rather tragic and altogether impossible. Do come on, mother, and let's get it over!"

And Mrs. Vertrees, with many misgivings, set forth with her daughter for the gracious assault upon the new house next door.

CHAPTER IV.

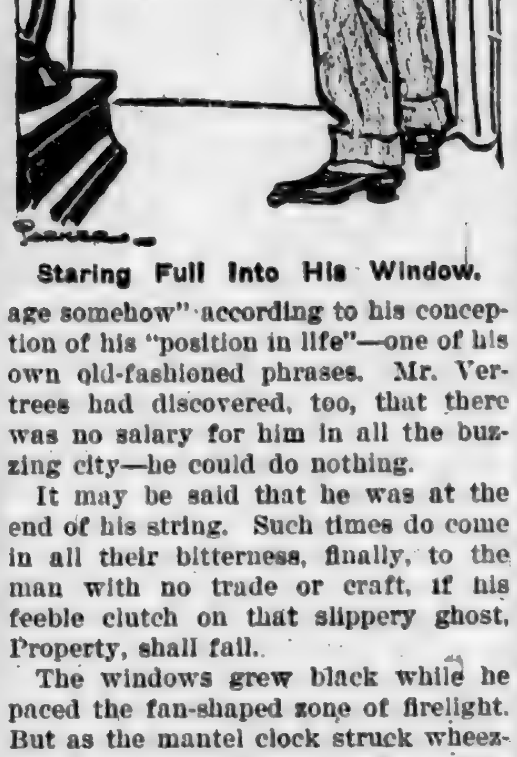
Mr. Vertrees, having watched their departure with the air of a man who had something at hazard upon the expedition, turned from the window and began to pace the library thoughtfully, pending their return. He was about sixty; a small man, withered and dry and fine, a trim little sketch of the elderly dandy. His lambrequin mustache, like his smooth hair, was approaching an equally sheer whiteness; and though his clothes were old, they had shapeliness and a flavor of mode.

The room was cheerful and hideous. Under a mantel of imitation black marble a merry little coal fire beamed forth upon high and narrow "Eastlake" bookcases with long glass doors, comfortable, incongruous furniture, half a dozen Landseer engravings which Mr. and Mrs. Vertrees sometimes mentioned to each other, after thirty years of possession, as "very fine things." They had been the first people in town to possess Landseer engravings, and there, in art, they had rested, but they still had a feeling that in all such matters they were in the van.

The growth of the city, which might easily have made Mr. Vertrees a millionaire, had ruined him because he had failed to understand it. When towns begin to grow they have whims, and the whims of a town always ruin somebody. The dainty little man was one of the first to fall down and worship Bigness. He was a true prophet of the prodigious growth, but he had a fatal gift for selling good and buying bad. He sold his inherited office building and house in town to buy lots; then he sold his farm, except the house and the ground about it, to pay taxes on the lots. But he had to do something to keep himself and his family up, so in despair he sold the lots (which went up beautifully the next year) for "traction stock" that was paying dividends; and disappeared altogether from the commercial surface at about the time James Sheridan came out securely on top.

AGAINST THE BACKGROUND OF A GREAT CITY BLACK WITH THE SMOKE AND FILLED WITH THE TURMOIL OF MANUFACTURING, MR. TARKINGTON HAS DRAWN FOR US THE PORTRAITS OF A MAN AND HIS SON WHO STAND OUT BOLDLY AS DISTINCT AMERICAN TYPES AND MAKE THIS STORY WHAT IT IS—NOT ONLY A STORY OF BIGNESS, BUT THE BIGGEST STORY OF TODAY.

But there came a day when three servitors of Bigness in Philadelphia took greedy counsel with four fellow worshipers from New York, and not long after that there were no more dividends for Mr. Vertrees. In fact, there was nothing for Mr. Vertrees, because the "traction stock" henceforth was no stock at all, and he had mortgaged his house long ago to help "manage somehow" according to his conception of his "position in life"—one of his own old-fashioned phrases. Mr. Vertrees had discovered, too, that there was no salary for him in all the buzzing city—he could do nothing.



Staring Full Into His Window.

It may be said that he was at the end of his string. Such times do come in all their bitterness, finally, to the man with no trade or craft, if his feeble clutch on that slippery ghost, Property, shall fail.

The windows grew black while he paced the fan-shaped zone of firelight. But as the mantel clock struck wheezily six there was the rattle of an outer door, and Mary Vertrees came rushing into the library and threw herself into a deep chair by the hearth, laughing so uncontrollably that tears were in her eyes. Mrs. Vertrees followed decorously, no mirth about her; on the contrary, she looked vaguely disturbed, as if she had eaten something not quite certain to agree with her, and regretted it.

"Papa! Oh, oh!" And Miss Vertrees was fain to apply a handkerchief upon her eyes. "I'm so glad you made us go! I wouldn't have missed it—"

Mrs. Vertrees shook her head. "I suppose I'm very dull," she said, gently. "I didn't see anything amusing. They're most ordinary, and the house is altogether in bad taste, but we anticipated that, and—"

"Papa!" Mary cried, breaking in. "They asked us to dinner!"

"What!"

"And I'm going!" she shouted, and was seized with fresh paroxysms. "Think of it! Never in their house before; never met any of them but the daughter—and just barely met her—"

"What about you?" interrupted Mr. Vertrees, turning sharply upon his wife.

She made a little face as if positive now that what she had eaten would not agree with her. "I couldn't!" she said. "I—"

"Yes, that's just—just the way she—she looked when they asked her!" cried Mary, choking. "And then she—she realized it, and tried to turn it into a cough, and she didn't know how, and it sounded like—like a squeal!"

"I suppose," said Mrs. Vertrees, much injured, "that Mary will have an uproarious time at my funeral. She makes fun of—"

Mary jumped up instantly and kissed her; then she went to the mantel and, leaning an elbow upon it, gazed thoughtfully at the buckle of her shoe, twinkling in the firelight.

"They didn't notice anything," she said. "So far as they were concerned, mamma, it was one of the finest coughs you ever coughed."

"Who were 'they'?" asked her father. "Whom did you see?"

"Only the mother and daughter," Mary answered. "Mrs. Sheridan is dumpy and rusty; and Miss Sheridan is pretty and pushing—dresses by the fashion magazines and talks about New York people that have their pictures in 'em. She tutors the mother, but not very successfully—partly because her own foundation is too flimsy and partly because she began too late. They've got an enormous Moor of painted plaster or something in the hall, and the girl evidently thought it was to her credit that she selected it!"

"They have oil-paintings, too," added Mrs. Vertrees, with a glance of gentle pride at the Landseers. "I've always thought oil-paintings in a private house the worst of taste."

"Oh, if one owned a Raphael or a Titian!" said Mr. Vertrees, finishing the implication, not in words, but with a wave of his hand. "Go on, Mary. None of the rest of them came in? You didn't meet Mr. Sheridan or—" He paused and adjusted a lump of coal in the fire delicately with the poker. "Or one of the sons?"

Mary's glance crossed his, at that, with a flash of utter comprehension. He turned instantly away, but she had begun to laugh again.

"No," she said, "no one except the women, but mamma inquired about the sons thoroughly!"

"Mary!" Mrs. Vertrees protested.

"Oh, most adroitly, too!" laughed the girl. "Only she couldn't help unconsciously turning to look at me—when she did it!"

"Mary Vertrees!"

"Never mind, mamma! Mrs. Sheridan and Miss Sheridan neither of them could help unconsciously turning to look at me—speculatively—at the same time! They all three kept 'ooking at me and talking about the oldest son, Mr. James Sheridan, Jr. Mrs. Sheridan said his father is very anxious 'to get Jim to marry and settle down,' and she assured me that 'Jim is right cultivated.' Another of the sons, youngest one, they didn't seem to consider quite one of themselves, somehow. The other brother is the middle one, Roscoe; he's the one that owns the new house across the street, where that young black sheep of the Lamhorns, Robert, goes so often. Papa—" She stepped nearer to him so that he had to face her, and his eyes were troubled as he did. There may have been a trouble deep within her own, but she kept their surface merry with laughter. "Papa, Bibbs is the youngest one's name, and Bibbs—to the best of our information—is a lunatic. Roscoe is married. Papa, does it have to be Jim?"

"Mary!" Mrs. Vertrees cried, sharply. "You're outrageous! That's a perfectly horrible way of talking!"

"Well, I'm close to twenty-four," said Mary, turning to her. "I haven't been able to like anybody yet that's asked me to marry him, and maybe I never shall. Until a year or so ago I've had everything I ever wanted in my life—you and papa gave it all to me—and it's about time I began to pay back. Unfortunately, I don't know how to do anything—but something's got to be done."

"But you needn't talk of it like that!" insisted the mother, plaintively. "It's not—it's not—'

"No, it's not,' said Mary. "I know that!"

"How did they happen to ask you to dinner?" Mr. Vertrees inquired, uneasily. "Stextrawdn'ry thing!"

"Climbers' hospitality," Mary defined it. "We were so very cordial and easy! It's a sort of house-warming dinner, and they talked about it and talked about it—and then the girl got her courage up and blurted out the invitation. And mamma said that you and she had promised to go to a lecture at the Emerson club tonight, but that her daughter would be delighted to come to the big show! So there I am, and there's Mr. Jim Sheridan—and there's the clock! Dinner's at seven-thirty!"

And she ran out of the room, scooping up her fallen furs with a gesture of flying grace as she sped.

When she came down, at twenty minutes after seven, her father stood in the hall, at the foot of the stairs, waiting to be her escort through the dark.

"At least no one could suspect me tonight," she said. "I look rich, don't I, papa?"

She did. She had a look that worshipful girl friends called "regal." A head taller than her father, she was as straight and jauntily poised as a boy athlete; and her brown hair and her brown eyes were like her mother's, but for the rest she went back to some stronger and livelier ancestor than either of her parents.

"Don't I look too rich to be suspected?" she insisted.

"You look everything beautiful, Mary," he said, huskily.

"And my dress?" She threw open her dark velvet cloak, showing a splendor of white and silver. "Anything better at Nice next winter, do you think?" She laughed, shrouding her glittering figure in the cloak again. "Two years old, and no one would dream it! I did it over."

"You can do anything, Mary."

There was a curious humility in his tone, and something more—a significance not veiled and yet abysmally apologetic. It was as if he suggested something to her and begged her forgiveness in the same breath.

And upon that, for the moment, she became as serious as he. She lifted her hand from his shoulder and then set it back more firmly, so that he should feel the reassurance of its pressure.

"Don't worry," she said, in a low voice and gravely. "I know exactly what you want me to do."

Will Mary be able to infatuate young Jim Sheridan at the dinner, or will she become disgusted with her fortune-hunting plot and throw up the whole business?

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

JUNE

L 908

0193

STRENGTH OF THE NATIONAL GUARD

[illegible]

HOW THE UNITED STATES AND MEXICAN ARMIES LINE UP

ALONG BORDER.		IN MEXICO.
Douglas	2.500	Namiquipa	3.500
Columbus	2.500	Babricora	1.500
El Paso	3.500	San Miguel	500
Rio Grande	1.500	Madera	500
Presidio	1.000	Galena	1.000
Laredo	10.000	Casas Grandes	3.000
Brownsville	9.000	Corralitos	1.500
San Antonio	4.500	Ascension	500
Total	34.500	Total	12.000

These men are stretched along a front of 1,800 miles. This makes the line average nineteen men to the mile.

These men are stretched along a front of 250 miles. This makes the line average forty-eight men to the mile.

Organized National Guard of the United States mobilized	145.000
AGAINST THIS FORCE CARRANZA HAS
In Sonora under Calles	12.000
In Chihuahua facing Pershing's front	40.000
At other points along border	15.000
Total	67.000

EVENTS LEADING TO MEXICAN CRISIS

The following brief chronology summarizes the highlights in the political history of Mexico starting with the Madero revolution against President Porfirio Diaz November 20, 1910, culminating in the present crisis, as follows:

1910.

NOV. 20—Francisco I. Madero proclaims himself provisional president, and [illegible] later Diaz resigns, sailing from the country for Europe May 31.

1912.

OCT. 16—Second revolution started under General Felix Diaz. Two weeks later he is captured by federal troops and uprising apparently crushed.

1913.

FEB. 21—Third revolution takes place and Victoriano Huerta proclaimed provisional president. Gustavo Madero executed.

FEB. 27—Fourth revolution, this time against Huerta, started by Carranza, governor of Coahuila.

OCT. 14—Huerta proclaims himself dictator and abrogates constitution.

1914.

APRIL 9—Paymaster and seven sailors arrested in Tampico by Mexican soldiers. Though released a few hours later, Rear Admiral Mayo demanded an apology, punishment of the Mexican officer in charge and a salute of twenty-one guns. This was the beginning of the series of notes between Huerta and Washington which resulted in the occupation of Vera Cruz.

APRIL 21—United States marines occupy customhouse at Vera Cruz and take charge of city.

JUNE 24—Peace protocol signed by "A B C" mediators at Niagara Falls, Ontario.

JULY 15—General Huerta resigns as provisional president.

AUG. 14—Carranza, by agreement with General Obregon and General Iturbide, named provisional president, to succeed Francesco Carbajal, who held office one month after Huerta's resignation.

NOV. 11—The outbreak of hostilities between Carranza and Villa takes place.

DEC. 31—American troops massed along border to prevent fighting too near boundary line.

1915.

JAN. 1 to MARCH 1—Sporadic fighting between Villa and Carranza forces.

MARCH 9—Secretary of State Bryan warns Americans to leave Mexico. Two days later John B. McManus murdered by Zapatistas in Mexico City.

AUG. 8—First big fight between Mexicans and American ranchers takes place in Cameron County, Texas—[illegible]

SEPT. 17—Six Carranza soldiers killed in fight with American soldiers near Donna, Texas.

OCT. 19—United States formally recognizes Carranza de facto government. Wild jubilation in Mexico City.

NOV. 26—Three American soldiers wounded in fight with marauding Mexican troops near Nogales, Ariz. Forty Mexicans killed.

1916.

JAN. 1—Villa atrocities against Americans become daily.

JAN. 13—Fifty Americans massacred by Villistas near Chihuahua City.

JAN. 15—Fight between American troops and Mexican soldiers near Fort Hancock, fifty-three miles east of El Paso.

JAN. 17—Villa orders his troops to shoot all Americans on sight.

JAN. 23—Eight Americans hanged by Villa's orders at Carnejutla, Mexico.

FEB. 18—Official report made to Secretary of State Lansing disclosed that total American murders in Mexico numbered 146 in three years.

MARCH 1—Sporadic raids by Villistas across border become almost daily.

MARCH 9—Columbus raid by 1,500 Mexican rebels under Villa. Seventeen Americans slain.

MARCH 19—American troops under command of Colonel Dodd enter Mexico as vanguard of General Pershing's punitive expedition.

German Steamers Sunk.

Copenhagen, June 19.—Two big German steamers were sunk in the Baltic on Friday by mines or submarines.

GEN. GAVIRA NOT EXECUTED

El Paso, Tex., June 17.—General Gabriel Gavira, until recently commander of the Carranza garrison at Juarez, has not been executed at Mexico City, according to a message received here today by Andres Garcia, the Mexican consul. The message came from Minister of War Obregon himself, and it not only denied that Gavira had been executed, but also denied that he has yet reached the capital. The message follows:

"Your message received. You can deny emphatically news that El Paso morning papers published relative to execution of General Gavira. The general has not yet reached the capital."

Revolt in Austria.

London, June 17.—A revolution has broken out in the Austro-Hungarian province of Bosnia, a Rome wireless dispatch says. It added that the chief of Austrian headquarters has been suspended.

PRESIDENT CALLS OUT ALL MILITIA TO GUARD BORDER

Troops Ordered to Mexican Line to Protect Americans.

U. S. FORCE QUITS MEXICO

Two Bandits Killed During Fight as the Fourth Expedition Withdraws—Raiders Dispersed—Civilians Threaten Americans.

Washington, June 19.—President Wilson has called out the militia of every state for service on the Mexican border.

Secretary of War Baker issued the following statement: "In view of the disturbed conditions on the Mexican border and in order to assure complete protection for all Americans, the president has called out substantially all the state militia and will send them to the border wherever and as fully as General Funston determines them to be needed for the purpose stated.

"If all are not needed an effort will be made to relieve those on duty there from time to time so as to distribute the duty.

"This call for militia is wholly unrelated to General Pershing's expedition and contemplates no additional entry into Mexico except as may be necessary to pursue bandits who attempt outrages on American soil.

"The militia are being called out so as to leave some troops in the several states. They will be mobilized at their home stations, where necessary recruiting can be done."

Issues Call to State.

Washington, June 19.—President Wilson has called out the militia of every state for service on the Mexican border.

Brig. Gen. Alfred Mills, chief of the division of militia affairs, estimates the maximum militia force to be called out at 145,000 men.

The apportionment of the militia which will be sent to the border has been determined upon by the war department, and a statement now is being prepared that will be issued soon, showing just how many troops from each state will be taken into the federal service.

Brig. Gen. Alfred Mills.

Baker Issues Statement.

The president's decision was announced late Sunday in a statement issued by Secretary of War Baker and addressed to the governors of all the states. The statement is as follows:

"Having in view the possibility of further aggression upon the territory of the United States and the necessity for the proper protection of that frontier, the president has thought proper to exercise the authority vested in him by the Constitution and the laws and call out the organized militia and the National Guard necessary for that purpose.

Call for Troops.

"I am in consequence, instructed by the president to call into the service of the United States through you, the following units of the organized militia and the National Guard of the state of ………… which the president directs shall be assembled at the state mobilization point …….. (or at the place to be designated to you by the commanding general, eastern department), for muster into the service of the United States.

"Organizations to be accepted into the federal service should have the minimum peace strength now prescribed for organized militia. The maximum strength at which organizations will be accepted and to which they should be raised as soon as possible is prescribed in section No. 2, "Tables of Organization," United States Army.

"In case any regiment, battalion or squadron now recognized as such, contains an insufficient number of organizations to enable it to conform at muster to regular army organization tables, the organizations necessary to complete such units may be moved to mobilization camp and there inspected under orders of the department commander to determine fitness for recognition as organized by the war department.

"Circular 19, division of militia affairs, 1914, prescribes the organizations desired from each state as part of the local tactical division, and only these organizations will be accepted into service."

Mexicans Seize Road.

Tucson, Ariz., June 19.—Sonora military authorities have seized the Southern Pacific railroad of the Mexico system and cut all telegraph wires at the border, according to private advices here.

United States Force Withdraws.

Brownsville, Tex., June 19.—Having accomplished its object, the dispersing of Mexican bandits, who Friday night made raids on Texas ranches and attacked a detachment of the Twenty-sixth infantry, east of San Benito, Tex., and upon promises of the Carranza commander at Matamoros that he would run down and punish the outlaws, the fourth American punitive expedition to enter Mexico was withdrawn yesterday. There were no American casualties.

One bandit was killed and two wounded when bandits attacked the American rear guard at Tahunchal ranch, ten miles from Matamoros, just as they commenced their withdrawal to the American side of the river. It was reported to Fort Brown that the dead bandit wore a Carranza soldier's uniform.

The expedition was accomplished without the loss of a single man or horse, though an entire cavalry squadron swam the Rio Grande. Not a Carranza soldier was seen by the expedition.

The retirement began after a series of messages passing between General Alfredo Ricault, Carranza commander at Matamoros, and Gen. James Parker at Fort Brown.

Americans on Guard.

Columbus, N. M., June 19.—Reports reaching here from the Pershing punitive expedition in Mexico indicated there were no serious developments.

Army officers here say that if General Trevino is in earnest General Pershing will not be caught unawares. Preparations have been made for any emergency.

Mexicans Move South.

Douglas, Ariz., June 19.—The garrison at Agua Prieta, forming part of the command of Gen. Arnulfo Gomez, consisting of 3,000 men, was reported to have moved south, carrying eight cannon.

General Gomez was quoted as saying the civil population was becoming unduly excited, and he was doing all in his power to control the situation until the arrival of General Calles, who is hurrying from Hermosillo on a special train to take command of the army of northern Sonora and carry out his pledge of protection to Americans in the event of hostilities or riots.

Americans Threatened.

Cananea, Sonora, 50 miles south of here, experienced exciting scenes Saturday night, according to word received here. Hundreds of Mexicans excited by news of the tense situation at Matamoros, were said to have paraded the streets, shouting threats against Americans and shooting into the air. The demonstration was said to have been led by civil authorities of the town.

Considerable uneasiness exists concerning the safety of 300 Americans in Sonora mining camps. Advices from Nogales, Sonora, say that the military commander there has armed the civilian population, and is holding all railroad equipment in readiness subject to orders of General Calles.

A number of Americans were caught in the town when the Mexican military authorities declared the port closed to traffic. These sought refuge in the American consulate.

Demonstration at Naco.

An anti-American demonstration lasting an hour was reported at Naco, Sonora. Several shots were fired, but no one was injured. The demonstrators were then reported to have joined the military in evacuating the town. The town was reported quiet at noon.

Many civilian Mexicans crossed the border at Nogales, Ariz. A special train, it was said, was ready to transport any desiring to return to Magdalena in the event of hostilities.

El Paso Consul to Leave.

San Antonio, June 19.—General Bell at El Paso reported to General Funston that a Carranza force estimated at 5,000 was at Villa Ahumada on the National railway, south of Juarez, and that 500 Mexican troops were opposite Ysleta, 21 miles from here.

Andres Garcia, Mexican consul at El Paso, is preparing to leave his post, according to General Bell. Garcia was said to have given up his residence and to have planned to send his family into Mexico.

DANIELS INSPECTS ACADEMY

Chicago, June 17.—"The most logical need of the American navy at the present time is dreadnaughts," said Secretary of the Navy Josephus Daniels, here to inspect the Great Lakes Naval Training academy. The Secretary and Mrs. Daniels came to Chicago from St. Louis and continued to Washington after the inspection.

"The recent great battle in the North sea," continued the secretary, "has impressed the people and the senate with the need of more dreadnaughts. They have shown themselves to be the real fighting things, capable of taking and giving blows.

"Our navy should be built up until it is the second in the world in point of strength and it will be."

No Argument Against It.

"Scientists say that kissing is a very insanitary practice."

"Perhaps so, but I never heard of anybody doing it for one's health."—Baltimore American.

Economy.

"You spend entirely too much money on dress," said the man of the house. "That simple little frock Mrs. Smythe wore last night looked a great deal better than that elaborate gown of yours."

"Of course it did, my dear," replied his wife sweetly. "That simple little frock, as you call it, cost three hundred dollars, while mine cost only a hundred and fifty."

"Well, for the love of Mike, go out and buy one about twice as elaborate as the one you've got. Maybe you can get it for nothing."

Get a Trial Tube Now
Prove These Facts Yourself.

That "SPEARMINTO" Tooth Paste is best for teeth. NO ALCOHOL—NO SOAP—NO GRIT—NO COLORING or other injurious ingredients. Contains the only known harmless ingredient that prevents the FORMATION of TARTAR. That is why you clean your teeth as TARTAR is the chief cause of decay. Send your Dentist's and Druggist's name, for free sample of "SPEARMINTO" Tooth Paste. Address The Spearminto Co., 336 West 63d St., Chicago, Ill.—Adv.

Wield Pen and Sword.

The report of the Authors' club of London gives some eloquent figures. Out of 644 members resident in Great Britain, many of whom are far past military age, no less than 171 are in active service in connection with the war. Six have died in action or of wounds and 13 votes of sympathy with members in the death of sons or brothers upon the field of heroism have been adopted. The same hand, it is clear, may wield both pen and sword.

HOW TO TREAT DANDRUFF

Itching Scalp and Falling Hair With Cuticura. Trial Free.

On retiring touch spots of dandruff and itching with Cuticura Ointment. Next morning shampoo with Cuticura Soap and hot water. A clean, healthy scalp means good hair and freedom, in most cases, from dandruff, itching, burning, crustings and scalings.

Free sample each by mail with Book. Address postcard, Cuticura, Dept. L, Boston. Sold everywhere.—Adv.

Judging by Conditions.

"Sin, my dear pupils," said Deacon Barnes to his Sunday school class, "is the legacy of Adam."

And the bright boy in the class remarked that that was probably the first case on record where a will was not broken.

"Yes," said the deacon, "but it should be remembered that there was enough to go around. I don't remember hearing of anybody who didn't receive his share of the inheritance."

FRECKLES

Now Is the Time to Get Rid of These Ugly Spots.

There's no longer the slightest need of feeling ashamed of your freckles, as the prescription othine—double strength—is guaranteed to remove these homely spots.

Simply get an ounce of othine—double strength—from your druggist, and apply a little of it night and morning and you should soon see that even the worst freckles have begun to disappear, while the lighter ones have vanished entirely. It is seldom that more than one ounce is needed to completely clear the skin and gain a beautiful clear complexion.

Be sure to ask for the double strength othine, as this is sold under guarantee of money back if it fails to remove freckles.—Adv.

Very Obliging.

"Miss Oldgirl is an obliging sort of person."

"How so?"

"When that rude old duffer told her he didn't like her face, she changed countenance."

Important to Mothers
Examine carefully every bottle of CASTORIA, a safe and sure remedy for infants and children, and see that it
Bears the Signature of Chas. H. Fletcher
In Use for Over 30 Years.
Children Cry for Fletcher's Castoria

"Believe in the best thoughts and whisperings that visit thy heart."

PAINS IN SIDE AND BACK

How Mrs. Kelly Suffered and How She was Cured.

Burlington, Wis.—"I was very irregular, and had pains in my side and back, but after taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Tablets and using two bottles of the Sanative Wash I am fully convinced that I am entirely cured of these troubles, and feel better all over. I know your remedies have done me worlds of good and I hope every suffering woman will give them a trial."—Mrs. ANNA KELLY, 710 Chestnut Street, Burlington, Wis.

The many convincing testimonials constantly published in the newspapers ought to be proof enough to women who suffer from those distressing ills peculiar to their sex that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is the medicine they need.

This good old root and herb remedy has proved unequalled for these dreadful ills; it contains what is needed to restore woman's health and strength.

If there is any peculiarity in your case requiring special advice, write the Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co. (confidential), Lynn, Mass., for free advice.

SELDOM SEE a big knee like this, but your horse may have a bunch or bruise on his ankle, hock, stifle, knee or throat.
ABSORBINE
TRADE MARK REG.U.S.PAT.OFF.
will clean it off without laying up the horse. No blister, no hair gone. Concentrated—only a few drops required at an application. $2 per bottle delivered. Describe your case for special instructions and Book 8 M free. ABSORBINE, JR., the antiseptic liniment for mankind, reduces Painful Swellings, Enlarged Glands, Wens, Bruises, Varicose Veins; allays Pain and Inflammation. Price $1 and $2 a bottle at druggists or delivered. Made in the U. S. A. by W. F. YOUNG, P. D. F., 310 Temple St., Springfield, Mass.

A Protest.

"I appeal to you as a statesman—"

"Don't dig up that statesman rumor about me just now," interrupted Senator Sorghum. "I'm a statesman most of the time. But with several conventions looming up in the near future and a large following of practical citizens to satisfy, I want to go on record as a politician."

Proper Sign.

"I think instead of tobacco stores having them, cut-rate ticket offices ought to have wooden Indians as signs."

"Why so?"

"To show there is a scalping business going on inside."

Don't Persecute Your Bowels

Cut out cathartics and purgatives. They are brutal, harsh, unnecessary. Try
CARTER'S LITTLE LIVER PILLS
Purely vegetable. Act gently on the liver, eliminate bile, and soothe the delicate membrane of the bowel. Cure Constipation, Biliousness, Sick Headache and Indigestion, as millions know.

CARTER'S ITTLE
IVER PILLS.

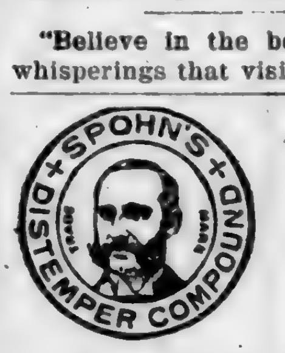
SMALL PILL, SMALL DOSE, SMALL PRICE.
Genuine must bear Signature
Brent Good

WHO IS TO BLAME

Women as well as men are made miserable by kidney and bladder trouble. Thousands recommend Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root the great kidney remedy. At druggists in fifty-cent and dollar sizes. You may receive a sample size bottle by Parcel Post, also pamphlet telling about it. Address Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y., and enclose ten cents, also mention this paper.



Shipping Fever

Influenza, Pink-Eye, Epizootic, Distemper and all nose and throat diseases cured, and all others, no matter how "exposed," kept from having any of these diseases with SPOHN'S DISTEMPER COMPOUND. Three to six doses often cure a case. One 50-cent bottle guaranteed to do so. Best thing for brood mares; acts on the blood. 50c a bottle, $5 dozen bottles. Druggists and harness shops or manufacturers sell it. Agents wanted.

SPOHN MEDICAL CO., Chemists, Goshen, Ind., U. S. A.

Bumper Grain Crops

Good Markets—High Prices

Prizes Awarded to Western Canada for Wheat, Oats, Barley, Alfalfa and Grasses

160 ACRE FARMS IN WESTERN CANADA
FREE

The winnings of Western Canada at the Soil Products Exposition at Denver were easily made. The list comprised Wheat, Oats, Barley and Grasses, the most important being the prizes for Wheat and Oats and sweep stake on Alfalfa.

No less important than the splendid quality of Western Canada's wheat and other grains, is the excellence of the cattle fed and fattened on the grasses of that country. A recent shipment of cattle to Chicago topped the market in that city for quality and price.

Western Canada produced in 1915 one-third as much wheat as all of the United States, or over 300,000,000 bushels.

Canada in proportion to population has a greater exportable surplus of wheat this year than any country in the world, and at present prices you can figure out the revenue for the producer. In Western Canada you will find good markets, splendid schools, exceptional social conditions, perfect climate and other great attractions. There is no war tax on land and no conscription.

Send for illustrated pamphlet and ask for reduced railway rates, information as to best locations, etc. Address Superintendent Immigration, Ottawa, Canada, or

W. S. Nethery, Room 82, Interurban Sta. Bldg., Columbus, O.; C. W. Aird, 215 Traction-Terminal Bldg., Indianapolis, Ind.
Canadian Government Agents

JUNE

L 908

U 1 9 4

The St. Joe News

Fred B. Leighty, Editor
Mrs. Iora Leighty, Associate

One Year,	$1.00
Six Months,	.50
Three Months,	.25

Entered at the postoffice at St. Joe, Indiana, as second class matter.

INDIANA ASSOCIATED WEEKLIES

NEWVILLE

Mrs. Keesey spent last week visiting her daughter in Detroit, Mich.

Elmer Wyatt and wife were Hicksville visitors, Friday of last week.

Hugh Traxler, who has employment in Ft. Wayne, was home over Sunday.

Mr. Gillingham and wife report another grandson at the home of their son Arthur, at OleWean, Iowa.

Miss Clara Christoferson, of Chicago, was the Saturday and Sunday guest of Mrs. Lew Palmer and family.

George Haines and wife, and Mr. Haines, Sr., and wife, of near Auburn, were Sunday guests of Sam Stafford and wife.

Mrs. J. S. Kain recently visited her daughter Stella, and her daughter-in-law, Mrs. Virgil Kain and children, of Kalamazoo, Mich.

The Willing Workers' Sunday School Class will hold their class meeting, next Tuesday afternoon at the home of Mrs. Gillingham.

Mrs. John Gillingham and Mrs. John Miller called on Mrs. Friend, south of town, Friday. Mrs. Friend has been quite poorly for many weeks.

The 10-year old son of Stanley Webster of San Francisco, Cali., came to visit his grand-parents, Henry Webster and wife. The youngster came all alone.

Childrens' Day exercises were observed at the U. B. Church, Sunday evening. The church was was crowded and many could not get in. The program was excellent.

Dr. Frank Fanning, of Butler, was called to see Mrs. DeLong, Thursday, and on Friday a specialist from Detroit arrived. Mrs. DeLong is seriously ill at this writing, and a trained nurse has been got.

Those who attended the Sunday School Convention at Corunna, last week, were:—Mrs. Maude Palmer, Mr. Haas and wife, Mrs Guy Platter, Mr. Kain and wife, Calvin Kain, the Misses Gladys Kain, Blen Kain, Laura Wyatt and Geraldine Rickett and Rev. J. T. Keesey.

While returning from the entertainment Sunday evening, and just as they reached their own dooryard, John Miller and wife were struck by a horse and almost knocked down; at the same time the horse stepped on Mrs. Miller's left foot, which is badly bruised and swollen. Mrs. Gillingham and Claude Tarney helped the afore mentioned couple into their home. Mr. and Mrs. Miller hold no one guilty for the accident as they are both nearly deaf; but they do hold one, who either through accident or design, drives over one and never stops to see the extent of the injury. It looks so inhuman—the driver seemed to be in a hurry.

A Friend in Need.

When Glando Gargle is used for a cold in the head it is surprising to see how quickly the clogged nostrils are opened. Adenoids are caused by a neglected cold. If the mucus which forms is allowed to remain in the nostrils, a diseased condition will result, which causes chronic catarrh and adenoids. Glando Gargle was prepared to meet these special needs. Equally effective for sore mouth or sore throat. Price 50 cents. For sale by All Druggists.

Subscriptions taken for new or renewals of any magazine published, at The News office.

PRESIDENTIAL POINTERS

The Democratic national convention of 1912 was held in Baltimore from June 25 to July 2, Alton B. Parker being temporary, and Ollie M. James, permanent chairman. Forty-six ballots were taken, Champ Clark leading till the thirtieth, when he was passed by Woodrow Wilson. On the tenth and seven following ballots Clark got more than half the votes cast, but as two-thirds are necessary in a Democratic convention, he was finally defeated. Other prominent candidates were Judson Harmon of Ohio, Oscar W. Underwood of Alabama and Thomas R. Marshall of Indiana. Marshall was chosen as the candidate for vice president on the third ballot.

Coburn's Corners

Miss Audrey Coburn was home from Angola College over Sunday.

Miss Dale Shull is on the sick list this week having a severe attack of tonsilitis.

Garnet Headley spent last week in Hicksville the guest of Wayne Hughes and family.

Frank Milliman and family, of north of St. Joe, were visitors at J. Milliman's Sunday.

The Ladies Aid will be entertained by Mrs. Alice Hart Thursday afternoon. Everybody is invited.

Rheuben Dietrick and wife spent Sunday with their daughter and family, Mrs. Will Goldsmith at Leo.

Mrs. Norma James and two children from Michigan, visited their uncle P. A. Walker and family on Wednesday of last week.

C. R. Headley and family entertained the following company to dinner Sunday: R. F. Place and family, Delphia Coburn, Helen Place, Darwin Fry, Estel Coburn and Lee Craul and sister Mabel, of Edgerton.

C. C. Shull, wife and daughter Nellie, Guy Platter and wife, Miss Fern Walker also Carl and Fred Shull of Hart, Mich., ate Sunday dinner at T. H. Shull's. Lloyd Coburn, Celia and Van Hadsell, of Hicksville, were callers in the afternoon.

Call on Ten Eyck & Son at Auburn, Indiana, for early and late tomato, sweet potato, cabbage, bedding plants, geraniums, cannas and coleus plants. Excellent lot to select from. Prices reasonable and good plants guaranteed.

COLETOWN

Wellington Miller called on Homer Jackson Sunday afternoon.

Cora and Jessie Brown called on friends in Spencerville Sunday.

R. H. Conine and son Ensor, called on M. W. Conine's Sunday.

W. E. Jackson and family took dinner Thursday at Geo. Casebeer's of Hicksville.

Clint Anderson and family, of Ney, O., called on Henry Kling and wife Sunday.

George Nathan and family and Lola Ensign of Farmer, visited at Fred Martins Sunday.

W. E. Jackson and family visited Rev. D. A. J. Brown and family at Hudson, Ind., Wednesday.

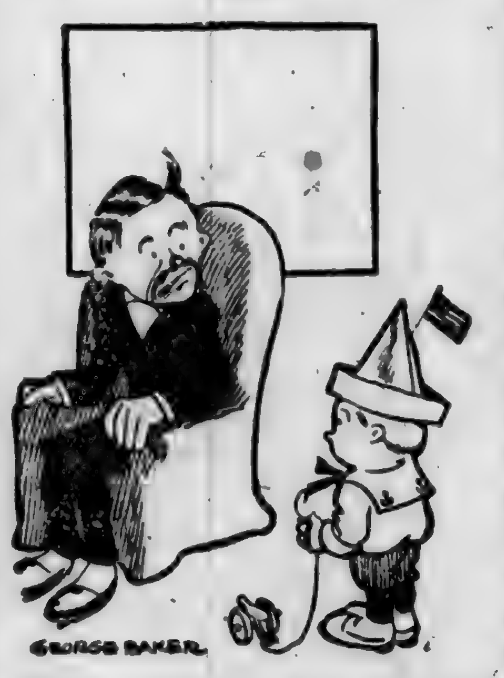
Elton and Frank Brown with their families Sundayed with Edwin Guthrie and wife.

Follow the Directions

On each sack of Daily Bread Flour you will find directions for Baking Bread, follow the directions and you will have a much finer and tastier Loaf of Bread than any Spring Wheat ever baked. Indiana made flour is considered Far Superior to any flour on the market, it is sold by all dealers on a Positive Guarantee at 75c for 1-8 bbl or $5.60 full bbl or on exchange at the Mill at 35 per bu including 12 pounds of feed thus a saving of over $1.00 a bbl.

St. Joe Mills.

DON'T FORGET THE FOURTH



"Papa, I know how many days there are in a year—three hundred and sixty-five and a fourth."

"Is that so? Where does the fourth come in, son?"

"Fourth of July."

IN AMERICAN TRAP

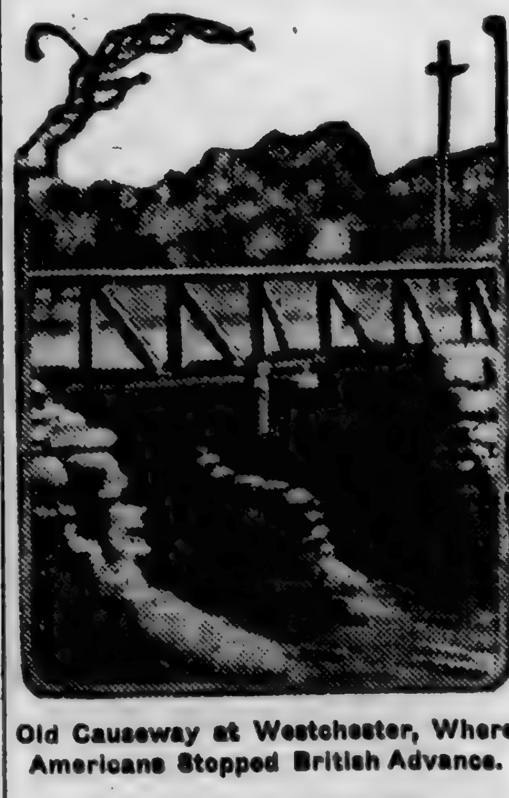
Clever Scheme Which Enabled Patriot Soldiers to Defeat the British General.

THE Ferris property covered vast tracts of land in Westchester county, New York. The grandfather of the first James Ferris was one of the ten promoters of Throgs Neck. He was descended from the house of Feriers, whose first member in England obtained large grants of English land from the Conqueror. Many branches of the family spread through the Westchester region, and another old house once belonging to them can be seen today.

Upon leaving the house once occupied by Lord Howe, go out through the main entrance of the Country club grounds, leading into Country Club avenue. This route will take you through some of the loveliest land anywhere to be found. Delightful homes are scattered over the flawlessly groomed land. Nature here is dressed in her best Sunday-go-to-meeting garb the whole week through.

You arrive at Middletown road. Follow this toward the village, and close to it, on Mayflower avenue, you will find the other Ferris house with large pillars. It is unoccupied and used only by a moving picture firm—a fine background for old-time romances.

And now to the village center and the causeway. Toward it marched Lord Howe, while the picked Americans awaited him—and another group, too, at the head of the creek. At a given signal the planks of the bridge were taken up, and Howe arrived to find himself upon an island.



Old Causeway at Westchester, Where Americans Stopped British Advance.

He raged furiously and moved toward the head of the creek, there to be abruptly checked again. The Americans opened fire upon his troops at the causeway. They were sheltered by the tide-mill, and from this point they poured forth their heavy rifle fire upon the British. Nowhere could the enemy force a way past the determined patriots.

Howe retreated and the day was won. So enraged was the British general that he summoned his guides before a board of officers and charged them with having deceived him, for he believed that they had landed him upon an island. How dared they? he demanded, striking the table a resounding blow with his sword. Although the situation was explained to him, he still raged, and he vowed he would hang every man of them unless they conducted him safely from the trap he was in. At last the British retreat carried the forces on to Pell's Point.

Young Men Set Noble Example.

Young men among Declaration signers were Thomas Lynch of South Carolina and Edward Rutledge of South Carolina. They were both born in 1749, Lynch in August and Rutledge in November. Each was but twenty-seven years old. Other young men were Thomas Heywood of South Carolina, born in 1746; Benjamin Rush, born in 1745; Elbridge Gerry, born in 1744; Thomas Jefferson, born in 1743; Arthur Middleton of South Carolina, born in 1743; Samuel Chase of Maryland, born in 1741, and Benjamin Harrison of Virginia, born in 1740. Each member from South Carolina was a young man—Lynch, Rutledge, Heywood and Middleton.

She Wasted the Eggs.

Auburn Evening Star

"Fred G. Draggoo of Concord township, is the plaintiff in a divorce case filed Thursday against his wife, Rachel Draggoo. They were married September 22, 1914, and separated June 11, 1916.

The aggrieved husband says his wife has a temper that gets away with her and which she does not attempt to control. At times she uses language unfit to mention, he says in his complaint. She hurls missles at him and one day last May she threw eggs at him, he says, and on the day of their separation while the plaintiff was lying down she beat him about the head with a shoe, causing him much pain and discomfort.

By reason of such cruel and inhuman treatment the plaintiff says he cannot live with her and asks for a divorce. There are no children. The Draggoos live in Concord township and not long ago the defendant sued the mother of the plaintiff for $10,000 for the alienation of her husband's affections. The alienation case was finally settled by the mother of Mr. Draggoo moving from their home and letting them live alone. However, this does not seem to have helped matters between the pair. Gatten & Stump are the attorneys who filed the complaint."

That's a great story to put up, but what did Fred do to his wife before this? Fred should have said to his wife, "All right, old gal, we are even now, let us start in new again.

The U. S. Department of Agriculture will send its special egg candling and chilling and demonstration car to Auburn, Ind., on June 27th., '16. Purdue will exhibit its two poultry cars at the same hours. The car will be under the direction of H. A. McAleer and three poultry and egg specialists, who will show local shippers of eggs and poultry the newest systems of testing, candling, grading, packing and chilling eggs for travel to distant markets. Each visitor to the car will be given an opportunity to candle eggs, and the specialist will check up whether the visitor has readily differentiated fresh eggs from "rots," "spots," and "white rots," and has properly graded the eggs by condition of shell.

A little model of a refrigerator car will be loaded with egg cases to help shippers and railroad men to prevent damage in transit. Eggs should be chilled before shipping. If they are not they may rot in transit. The Food and Drugs Act prohibits the inter-state shipment of cases containing substantial percentages of bad eggs, which are held to be adulterated food. A model of a small, inexpensive ice precooling plant will be shown by the specialists, and its construction and use explained. It will chill dressed poultry as well as eggs.

The methods to be demonstrated are those which after long practical tests by the Department have been proved to be effective in preventing deterioration of poultry products and in bringing them to distant markets in prime condition. All interested in shipping poultry and eggs, or preparing them for market, are invited to visit the car and attend the demonstrations, which are free. The car is well worth a visit, as it contains the essentials of a thoroughly modern poultry refrigerating plant.

A Summer Cough.

When a cough continues into warm weather, you can feel sure there is a chronic inflammation, which if neglected will develop into serious lung trouble. The best time to doctor a chronic cough is during the warm weather. An external inflammation always receives prompt attention because the condition can be seen, but an inflamation of the delicate mucous surface of the throat and lungs is much more serious. This condition furnishes fertile soil for the developing of the tubercular germ. Be wise and get rid of that cough before cold weather. GLANDO PINE is especially good for summer coughs. Accept no substitute. Use GLANDO PINE and get results. For sale by All Druggists.

Summer Fares

East

The Wabash is the direct line to Detroit, Buffalo and the East. Low Summer fares in effect:—

Round Trip

$15.70 to Toronto
$13.75 to Buffalo, Niagara Falls
$31.70 to New York
$30.50 to Boston

West

The Wabash and its connection now have new and far faster train service to Colorado, California and the West.

Round Trip

Colorado	$36.60
California	$78.75
Yellowstone	$51.60
Salt Lake City	$51.60
Portland, Seattle	$79.10

WABASH

Find out about these and other summer fares. See the undersigned Wabash Agent or write to W. H. Shorey, Division Passenger Agent, Fort Wayne, Ind.
J. D. MILLIMAN, Agent, St. Joe, Ind.

Short Notes

Read the Free Column.

Order Saturday Evening Post, 5c.

See Wallace for Building Material at St. Joe Saw Mill.

FOR SALE:-Cherries for 75c. a crate if you pick them yourself. Carl Johnston.

See that new McCormick mower at Curie's before you buy.

Schloss' of Auburn are showing a fine line of Summer Dress Materials.

Rev. Johnston, of Columbus, O., was an over Thursday guest of relatives here.

Ira Hadsell, of Ft. Wayne, was a Saturday supper guest of Saxe Hadsell and wife.

Amanda Coburn reports new potatoes as large as hens eggs grown on her premisis, on June 19.

Fred Reeder and family spent over Sunday at Pleasant Lake, the guests of Jesse Loftus and family.

Saxe Hadsell and family spent Saturday night as guests of Cammie Hadsell and wife, at Hicksville

A fine line of summer ready made wearables for Women and Children. Schloss' of Auburn.

Mrs. Ada Berry and children, Miss Ethel and Master George, were over Sunday guests of John Bets and wife.

Geo. Hetrick, wife and son, and J. P. McMillian and wife, of Woodburn, were Sunday guests of Tim Agler and family.

Earl Sherer, of Chicago, came last Thursday evening to visit his parents and other relatives, returning Wednesday of this week.

Eleven room house on West Main St., for sale or rent. Other well located residence properties and vacant lots for sale on easy terms. S. S. Widney

The News is in receipt of a letter from Mrs. John May, stating that Mr. May had bought a stock of hardware goods at Pierceton, Ind., and they are moving from Montpelier, this week. They are all in good health.

Mrs. Howard Borthwick is representing the Christian Sunday School, also John George and Fred Leighty representing the M. P. Sunday School, at the State S. S. Convention, being held at Muncie this week.

Call on Ten Eyck & Son at Auburn, Indiana, for early and late tomato, sweet potato, cabbage, bedding plants, geraniums, cannas and coleus plants. Excellent lot to select from. Prices reasonable and good plants guaranteed

R U Superstitious

Do You Believe In Signs

?

If you do you are a judicious advertiser and a good business man. Judicious advertising Always Pays and especially when you advertise in a paper that is read by everybody in its territory.

This newspaper reaches the eye of everybody who might be a possible buyer in this section.

Don't put off any longer. Subscribe now.

Notice.

To whom it may concern:—

Notice is hereby given that I will not be responsible for any bills made by my wife from this time on.

FRED DRAGGOO.

Nation's Debt to Almighty God.

Any celebration of Independence day which does not give the place of prominence to God is inadequate and unworthy. The words of the poet trace our liberties to the right source and give the honor to him to whom the honor is due.

Hail! Independence, Hail! Heaven's next best gift,
To that of life and the immortal soul!

A GIANT CRACKER

BUD SMITH
GA.

Notice

Persons who have bought the Schram Glen Fruit Jars, can get lids for same at Kinsey's.

HOW "TIZ" HELPS SORE, TIRED FEET

Good-bye sore feet, burning feet, swollen feet, sweaty feet, smelling feet, tired feet.

Good-bye corns, callouses, bunions and raw spots. No more shoe tightness, no more limping with pain or drawing up your face in agony. "TIZ" is magical, acts right off. "TIZ" draws out all the poisonous exudations which puff up the feet. Use "TIZ" and forget your foot misery. Ah! how comfortable your feet feel. Get a 25 cent box of "TIZ" now at any druggist or department store. Don't suffer. Have good feet, glad feet, feet that never swell, never hurt, never get tired. A year's foot comfort guaranteed or money refunded.

GRANDMA NEVER LET HER HAIR GET GRAY

She Kept Her Locks Dark and Glossy, with Sage Tea and Sulphur.

When you darken your hair with Sage Tea and Sulphur, no one can tell, because it's done so naturally, so evenly. Preparing this mixture, though, at home is mussy and troublesome. For 50 cents you can buy at any drug store the ready-to-use preparation, improved by the addition of other ingredients, called "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound." You just dampen a sponge or soft brush with it and draw this through your hair, taking one small strand at a time. By morning all gray hair disappears, and, after another application or two, your hair becomes beautifully darkened, glossy and luxuriant.

Gray, faded hair, though no disgrace, is a sign of old age, and as we all desire a youthful and attractive appearance, get busy at once with Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound and look years younger. This ready-to-use preparation is a delightful toilet requisite and not a medicine. It is not intended for the cure, mitigation or prevention of disease.

JUNE

L 908

0195

BETTER SERVICE TO YOU.

✻ ✻

We don't want you to think of the Farmers and Merchants State Bank just as a place to deposit your money, although of course we are glad to have you keep as large a balance with us as is possible.

It is our desire to render our patrons every service and accommodation that can reasonably be expected to us.

Our Bookkeeping Machine, makes it possible for us to give you better service in the handling of your account than ever before.

By the machine method, your account is kept in balance all the time. If, as sometimes happens, you want a statement of your balance in a hurry, we can give it to you, including to-days checks and deposits, in less than five minutes.

Farmers & Merchants State Bank

Capital Stock $25,000.00

Spencerville, - - - Indiana

SPENCERVILLE

A $5 Vacuum and Sweeper for $3.95 at Beams & Co., store.

Frank Hollabaugh is making extensive improvements on his property.

Mrs. J. B. Summers was a Sunday dinner guest of Samuel Cole and wife.

J. C. Vallieu and family were Sunday guests of Wm. Vallieu and family, of Harlan.

Orla Woodring and family, of Newville, spent Sunday with Baltzer Koontz and wife.

Mrs. Ross McKinley, of Auburn, is visiting her sister, Mrs. James McKinley, for a few days.

The C C Club will be entertained at the home of Mrs. Simeon Maurer, Friday afternoon.

Gust Hafner returned home on Monday morning after spending several days fishing at Lake James.

Miss Edna Cowell, of Perrysville, Ohio, is visiting her uncle, Wm. Pervines and family, a few weeks.

Mort Shutt has retired from carrying the mail, and Charles Markle has taken the route for the present.

New spring oxfords for Ladies, Misses and Children—Just in at Beams & Co., store, in patent leather and gun metal.

The Spencerville Old School Reunion will be held at the Spencerville School House on Thursday, June 29, 1916. All who were once members of that school are invited to be present.

EAT LESS AND TAKE SALTS FOR KIDNEYS

Take a glass of Salts before breakfast if your Back hurts or Bladder bothers you.

The American men and women must guard constantly against Kidney trouble, because we eat too much and all our food is rich. Our blood is filled with uric acid which the kidneys strive to filter out, they weaken from overwork, become sluggish; the eliminative tissues clog and the result is kidney trouble, bladder weakness and a general decline in health.

When your kidneys feel like lumps of lead; your back hurts or the urine is cloudy, full of sediment or you are obliged to seek relief two or three times during the night; if you suffer with sick headache or dizzy, nervous spells, acid stomach, or you have rheumatism when the weather is bad, get from your pharmacist about four ounces of Jad Salts; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys will then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to flush and stimulate clogged kidneys; to neutralize the acids in the urine so it no longer is a source of irritation, thus ending bladder disorders.

Jad Salts is inexpensive; cannot injure, makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water beverage, and belongs in every home, because nobody can make a mistake by having a good kidney flushing any time.

June Cosmopolitan magazines just arrived at News office. If you want one just phone us.

Greatly reduced prices on Shoes and Oxfords. You can't afford to be without, at the prices we are quoting. BEAMS & Co.

Perry Long and wife, of Auburn, came Sunday and took Chas. Scott and family to their home for a few days visit.

Mr. Gorrell, wife and son, of Springfield Center, were Sunday afternoon guests of John Beninghoff and wife.

Otis Geoltzenleuchtner and wife and Mrs. Anna Boger, of Auburn, were Saturday and Sunday guests of Gust Haffners'.

John McNabb lost a valuable cow, Chas. Henderson a colt, and Lee Hollopeter a horse. This all happened last week.

Ben Souls' and William Overholtzer, wife and daughter of Butler were Sunday guests of Daniel Overholtzer of Coburntown.

Clyde Fredrick and family were Sunday visitors of Abner Carnaham and family, and Grandma Fredrick, of Auburn Junction.

Joel Betz and wife spent Saturday and Sunday at the home of their daughter Mrs. Edward Billman and husband of Wises Corners.

Jack Beams, wife and son Argyl Miss Gertrude and John Shutt motored to Ft. Wayne, Sunday, to visit Dr. W. W. Carey and family.

Raymond Nelson, wife and son Marshall, of Columbia, Mo, S. P. Nelson, of Auburn; L. D. Nelson and wife, and Master Kenneth Strong, of Concord, were Saturday dinner guests of Samuel Steward and wife.

B. S. Hoyt, wife and sons, Cecil and Harold, of Detroit, Mich., were guests of Glenn Abel and wife several days last week, and left for their new home at West Plains, Mo., on Tuesday morning. Mr. Hoyt is an uncle of Mr. Abel.

R. U. Bowser and family, Dr. Rebecca Bowkick, of Kansas City; Oran Gaff, wife and daughter Cleo, of Ft. Wayne; Master Harold Owen and Glen Bowser of Waterloo, were Sunday guests of the former's father, Theodore Bowser, of Huntertown.

The Forget-me-not Club were entertained at the home of Mrs. Jack Henderson, Friday evening. The Misses Mary and Esther Henderson and Miss Minnie Fredrick furnished the entertainment for the evening which consisted of games and contests. Mrs. B. A. Rhoads and Mrs. John Mason, of Auburn, were present. Prizes were won by Meedames John Mason, Bert Fischer, Robert Duvall and Frank Butler. A dainty lunch was served by the hostess.

50 sheets of writing paper and 25 No. 1 rag envelopes for 10 cents at NEWS office.

See our window for those $2.00 foot stools that we are giving for 98c and $2.00 in trade.

Beams & Co.

Chas. Henderson and wife, and Carl Edwards and wife, of Auburn, motored to Holgate, Saturday, and visited Geo. Lampman and family. Mrs. Rose Beams, who has been visiting in the Lampman home several weeks, returned home with them. The party also visited at Napoleon while away.

Rev. J. C. Valentine, Melvin Howey, Mary Comesky and Arminta Steward of the M. E. Church and Mrs. A. K. Mumma, Mrs. Henry Beams, Myrtle Beams and Mrs. Minnie Maurer of the Lutheran Church, attended the County Sunday School Convention, last Tuesday, which was held at Corunna.

PUBLIC NOTICE.

August 1 finishes my career in Spencerville as practicing physician, having sold out my business to Dr. J. C. Emme of Harlan. All book accounts and notes due me, should be settled by Aug. 1st., '16.

DR. B. O. SHOOK.

SPENCERVILLE R. F. D. NO. 2

Nora Cook visited friends at Ohio last week.

Geo. Mann was a Sunday guest of Milo Beam.

Elmer Smith has purchased a new Ford touring car.

Galen Markle was a Sunday guest of Margaret Lake.

Alice Zimmerman and Wilda McNabb were Thursday guests of Marjorie Spitler.

Nora Cook and gentleman friend of Harlan, attended baptismal services at Spencerville Sunday.

Robert Duvall and wife of west of Spencerville spent Tuesday evening with Will Smith and wife.

Milliard and David Wells were guests of their brother Henry at the Harvey Kimes home Sunday.

Marjorie Hollabaugh and Lethe Baker were Sunday callers at the home of Rhea and Crystal Wearley.

Mr. Weir of Sturgis, Mich., was visiting around Coburntown Sunday. He was formerly of this place.

Mr. and Mrs. Geo. Bauman of near Leo, Elmer Smith, wife and two children were Sunday guests of Ira Smith and wife.

George Edwards wife and daughter and Mr. and Mrs. Will Bishop, of Roanoke, were Sunday visitors of Mr. Dinus, wife and children.

Eva Mills who has been working at Fremont, Ind., has returned to her home on account of sickness. She was taken to the St. Joseph hospital at Ft. Wayne.

Lewis Markle and wife entertained as follows Sunday: Henry Berry and wife, Mrs. Harley Berry and two sons of Ft. Wayne and Martin Berry and family.

A birthday surprise party was given to Miss Bennie Zimmerman by her mother in honor of her 12th birthday on Thursday afternoon. Those present were as follows: Wilda McNabb, Jessie Cook, Ethel and Beatrice Dryer, Galen Boger, Mary Masaty, Nellie Kelley, Crystal and Rhea Wearley, Marigold Hull, Beatrice Glass, Mrs Earl Stiman and son, Mrs. Pearl Hull, Rosy, Rosette and Ruby Nesbit. Sandwiches, cakes and strawberries were served. At a late hour the friends departed wishing her many returns of the day.

Printed invitations to your family reunion shows that you have the proper interest and pride in your family gathering. Probably the best way for announcing the family gathering is to have a program printed, showing the date, place, etc. Have THE NEWS do it for you. Prices right.

Notice.

The book accounts of James Fisher have been left with S. S. Widney for collection. Please call and settle promptly.

Buy your next writing tablet and package of envelopes at this office.

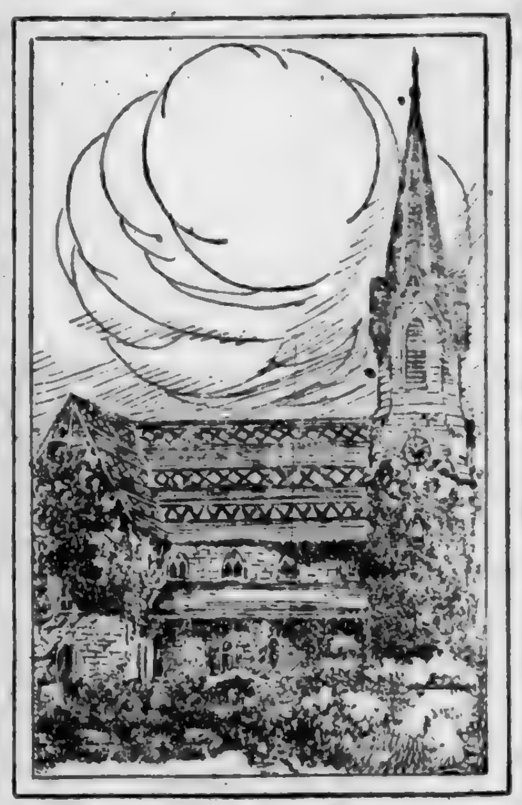
LIVES IN HISTORY

Old Town of Westchester Saw Stirring Times in the Days of the Revolution.

THE visitor to the village of Westchester, N. Y., which, by the way, is the oldest in all Westchester county, should glance at the old village store, just west of the causeway. Across the causeway is a hill occupied by the Presbyterian church, the same spot where the British set up a breastwork to defend themselves in the fight of '76.

For old times' sake a stranger would want to walk out the Pelham road a little way, to see what remains of the famous "Spy Oak." It is a tragedy to see this monarch among trees decapitated now; its wonderful height, gained proudly in its life of centuries, has been hewn, so that its old friends almost weep at the sight. It is said to measure 30 feet in girth at the ground, where its roots spread.

A British spy, caught by vigilant Americans, was hanged to its branches, says tradition; and, furthermore, strange wailings of that British ghost were said to be audible after dusk.



Old St. Peter's Church, Containing Bell Made by Melting Chimes Given In Queen Anne's Time.

Walking west from the village square a short distance one comes to old St. Peter's church, the fourth house of worship erected on this site. In its yard are headstones dating back as far as 1713. Upon the tombstone of Philip Honeywell, who was active during the Revolution, this inscription was placed:

> Look on this stone and you will find
> My journey's o'er, and yours behind;
> Think, then, before you turn away,
> That yours may end before this day.

This was one of the early churches upon which Queen Anne bestowed gifts. In her day its chime of bells was given it. The old bells have since been melted and made into a new one, which rings Sabbath-day pilgrims to service as of old.

Across the street stands the parish house. This building, says Doctor Clendenin, the rector, was the one used for two weeks as the colonial capital of the state of New York when an epidemic of fever prompted a sudden move.

A few blocks farther west is the picturesque rectory, standing quite alone on a green knoll. Its surrounding land was part of the "ancient glebe" given by the town in 1703. Records state that it was found necessary to lay out parsonage lands, and 20 acres was made up by taking "four acres where Edward Collier's old lott was," "the eight-acre division of land in the old lott fronting to the sheep pasture," and so on.

From 1683 to 1759 Westchester was the shire town. The village was settled in 1642 by Throckmorton (for whom Throg's Neck was named), who arrived from Massachusetts with a group driven thence along with Roger Williams. They procured permission to make their homes at Westchester, settling 35 families there. The Dutch had called the spot Vredeland, meaning Land of Peace, and perhaps the name had something to do with attracting these weary worshipers.

Today the spot is one to which the hearts of all true Americans turn in reverent love.

Slide in the $1.00. Do it now.

EMBLEMS MUST NOT FADE

Duty of Americans to Hold High Forever the Glory Handed Down by Their Forefathers.

IT WAS the practice of Americans for many years to observe the Fourth of July patriotically. Their celebrations did not consist of noise alone. Attending all the music, cannonading, bell ringing and marching there was an intellectual feature that heartened the old and inspired the young.

In the uproarious festivities of earlier times the treasured emblems and trophies of liberty were all in sight for one day at least, and by recurring to the principles of the Declaration everybody's knowledge of and faith in the doctrines that gave this continent a measure of freedom and justice were strengthened and renewed, says the New York World. If these emblems are fading the fault is due more to our native-born inhabitants, who think they have learned all the lessons of liberty, than to the millions of newcomers, whose minds are still open and whose eyes are still keen.

What proportion of the rising generation knows or has accepted the "self-evident truths" upon which the republic rests—

"That all men are created equal?

"That they are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable rights?

"That among these are life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness?

"That to secure these rights governments are instituted among men, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed? And

"That whenever any form of government becomes destructive of these ends it is the right of the people to alter or to abolish it, and to institute new government, laying its foundation on such principles and organizing its powers in such form as to them shall seem most likely to affect their safety and happiness."

Interest in these propositions used to be cultivated in various ways, partly as a pleasure, partly as a duty. Today the words are unfamiliar, the flag itself is infrequently seen, and Lexington, Bunker Hill, Saratoga, Valley Forge, Trenton, Savannah, Cowpens, King's Mountain and Yorktown are dimly remembered.

Yet we may be sure that of the multitudes of recent arrivals in the United States there are many whose steps have been guided by the ideals, symbols and names which to us are vague or forgotten. The valuable things that young Europe is learning here are acquired not from young America, but from old America. The landmarks of liberty which young America fails to see or ignores are still plain enough to the young Europe transplanted into America.

There are fading emblems in the case of young Europe also, but they are of crowns and coronets, thrones and scepters, divine right and privilege, a shackled press and stifled speech. To those who hunger and thirst for liberty and opportunity the old American emblems blaze afar. To those who are surfeited with liberty or unappreciative of it they fade and die.

THE FLAG THEY LOVE

Serve the State First.

The revelation of liberty has no validity unless it is a continuing one. Carved into pallid marble and draped with a flag, it is chilled and dead. It must be renewed each day in flesh and blood, in hearts and brains and sinewy hands. The fathers served the state before they served themselves. We must do the same.

Subscribe for this paper.

$100 Reward, $100

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials.

Address: F. J. CHENEY & CO., Toledo, O.
Sold by all Druggists, 75c.
Take Hall's Family Pills for constipation.

H. C. Hathaway

TRUSTEE
Concord Township

Office Day Thursday's of Each week in Town Hall, St. Joe.

Frank W. Silberg
Veterinarian

OFFICE and HOSPITAL
—ON—
Main Street
SPENCERVILLE. - IND.
Phones—Office No. 7
(18) Residence No. 101

P. A. Walker
Trustee
Spencer Township

OFFICE DAY—
Tuesday of each week at the residence ¾ mile east of the Dills River Bridge.
Phone—St. Joe, 21-6
Spencerville, - Indiana

F. P. HART
"The Expert"
House Mover
—AND—
Building Raiser

Concrete Work of all kinds finished in the best shape with the least expense.

Call or write

DENTIST
O. R. PRICE
ST. JOE, IND.
Office: first door south of Patterson's Dept. Store.
Bell Phone No. 44.

Oldest in America — Strongest in the World
Mutual life
INSURANCE COMPANY
of New York
J. C. HULL, Agent
Phone No. 46

Lehman's CLOTHING HOUSE
ESTABLISHED 1887
MENS AND BOYS OUTFITTERS
808-810 CALHOUN STREET
Fort Wayne, Ind.
BEN LEHMAN PROP.

JUNE

L 908

U196

SELECT WILSON AND MARSHALL TO LEAD THEM

Democrats Name Their Candidates at St. Louis Amid Scenes of Wildest Enthusiasm.

AVOID THE FRIDAY "HOODOO"

Nominations Were Made Only Few Minutes Before Midnight on Thursday—President Wilson at Once Notified of the Convention's Choice.

St. Louis.—By strenuous suppression of oratory and rushing proceedings the Democratic national convention dodged Friday as the day on which it renominated President Woodrow Wilson and Vice President Thomas Riley Marshall.

The superstitious party engineers beat the clock by only a few minutes, but it was enough to avoid the hoodoo.

Wilson Named at 11:52 P. M.

Mr. Wilson was nominated by acclamation at 11:52 p. m. Thursday.

Mr. Marshall was only a trifle behind crossing the line at 11:55.

In this lightning sprint Mr. Marshall made a record. Senator Kern was due for a nominating speech. Sensing the approaching midnight he threw his eulogy on the floor and simply said: "I renominate Thomas Riley Marshall." Somebody seconded. Somebody moved to make it by acclamation. And it was done, the whole job of nominating a vice presidential candidate taking up just 180 seconds.

Friday Superstition Averted.

Thus the ancient superstition against Friday nominations was averted, although President Wilson had made it known that he regards Friday as his "lucky day."

Dramatic scenes attended the naming of the ticket. William Jennings Bryan in an impassioned panygeric placed his O. K. upon the president and his administration.

The Nebraskan, who resigned from the cabinet, was not a delegate to the convention, but he was called to the platform by unanimous consent. He lauded Wilson to the skies for keeping the nation out of war, lauded the Wilson Mexican policy and extolled the economic legislation from tariff to currency act.

Bryan at times spoke under the strain of emotion. It was the first convention in 20 years in which he has not been an active figure, but the ovation and the outbursts that punctuated his remarks indicated that he is still a powerful force behind the scenes of the party he once dominated.

Wescott Names Wilson.

The Nebraskan through with his speech, John W. Wescott of New Jersey placed Mr. Wilson in nomination. As the time grew short Wescott, cutting short his peroration, shouted:

"I nominate Woodrow Wilson."

Then followed a great demonstration that lasted 46 minutes. Delegates and galleries were roused to a high pitch of enthusiasm and emotionalism. They yelled and shouted and paraded and sang. Some of them wept in an ecstacy of feeling.

Harmon Seconds Wilson.

Former Governor Judson Harmon of Ohio, who was a candidate for the presidential nomination at Baltimore four years ago, made the first seconding speech for President Wilson.

The next was by Gov. H. C. Stuart of Virginia.

Senator Hughes of New Jersey moved that the rules be suspended and the nomination made by acclamation. The motion was carried with a tremendous roar.

The only objection came from Robert E. Burke of Chicago, the only anti-Wilson delegate in the convention. He shouted "No."

Senator James declared President Wilson nominated at 11:52 p. m.

Kern Names Marshall.

Senator John W. Kern of Indiana then was recognized. He moved that the nomination of Vice President Marshall be made by acclamation. No nominating speech was made.

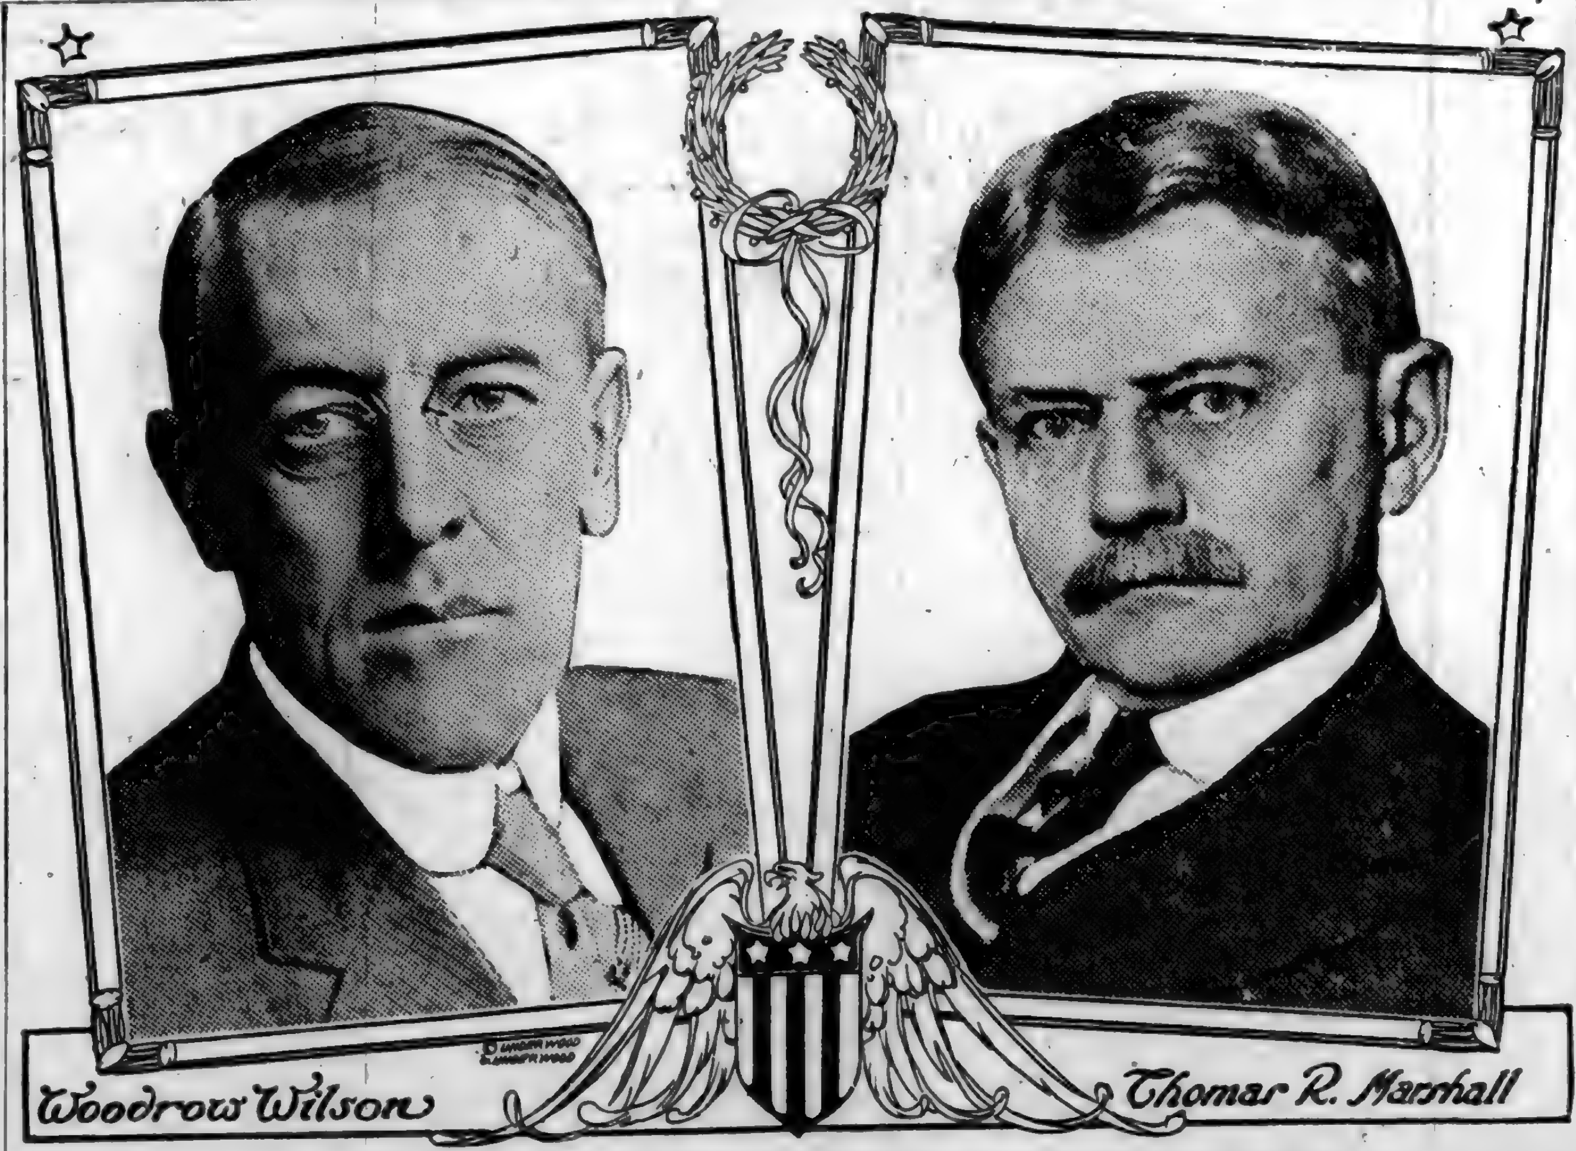
Vice President Marshall was declared nominated four minutes after the nomination of President Wilson.

Numerous seconding speeches which had been prepared were not made.

Former Gov. Martin H. Glynn was made chairman of the committee to notify President Wilson of his nomination.

Roger C. Sullivan presented a resolution expressing thanks to former Governor Glynn, Senator James and other officers of the convention.

A resolution was adopted giving state committees authority to fill vacancies caused by death or resignation on the national committee.



Lewis' Speech His Shortest.

Senator James Hamilton Lewis of Illinois was invited to the platform to make an addess at 12:12 a. m. "I do not like to impose upon your time," said Senator Lewis. "I beg you will excuse me and I express my sincere thanks."

It was the shortest speech of his career.

Senator Hughes reported to the convention that the resolution committee had failed to complete its work on the platform. The convention then adjourned at 12:32 a. m. until eleven o'clock Friday morning.

Forty-six minutes of sheer enthusiasm and emotion followed the naming of President Wilson. The minute Mr. Westcott had yielded to the adjurations of his audience and had spoken the name "Woodrow Wilson," the galleries and the delegates were on their feet.

An immense oil painting of the president was dropped from the gallery back of the speakers' stand. It excited the gathering almost to the point of frenzy. Georgia bore down the aisle a banner—"Wilson: Dixie's gift to the nation."

The band blared and thumped out "America" and "Dixie" while the great pit, a crater of eruptive humanity, let out its collective lungs and throats to capacity.

Lockstep Dance in Hall.

Groups of belated delegates kept outside by "strong arms" placed on the gates broke into the hall and joined their voices to the tumult. In lockstep the delegates danced around the hall.

© HARRIS & EWING

MRS. WOODROW WILSON.

A woman bore the California standard to the platform. Emblems from other states were grouped around it while the brilliant lights of the "movie men" turned the platform into a tableau vivant.

And the singing!

The crowd fairly lifted the roof. They let out their lungs in national hymns, "Suwanee River," "My Old Kentucky Home," "How Dry I Am" and that other old political anthem, "Hail, Hail, the Gang's All Here." Then they burst into "Tipperary" and rendered it at the top of 1,000 voices. It was some chant. It was great congregational singing.

Bryan Lauds Wilson.

Bryan in his laudation of Wilson and his policies dwelt on the possibilities of America as negotiator of peace in Europe.

"I stand with the Democrats of the nation to give Woodrow Wilson a chance to be that man," shouted Bryan, in conclusion, and the hall echoed with cheering.

Details of the Night Session.

St. Louis.—While the convention was assembling for the night session to nominate President Wilson it became known the Nebraska delegation planned to withdraw the vice presidency candidacy of Governor Morehead.

Before the convention was called to order the Coliseum was so full that the fire department took charge of the entrances and permitted no more to come in. William J. Bryan was stopped at the door. Senator James learned of the Nebraskan's plight and rescued him. Then the Nebraskan got his usual uproarious reception.

Chairman James rapped the convention to order.

Rev. W. J. Hardesty, chaplain of the Missouri senate, offered prayer.

Senator Thompson then moved a suspension of the rules to permit Mr. Bryan to speak. When the motion was put there were some "Noes," but the chairman ruled two-thirds had voted in favor.

Senator James introduced Mr. Bryan as "one of the leading citizens of the world and America's greatest Democrat."

In spite of the distracting influence of the mob at the doors and the laughs that rose occasionally when a bedraggled leader finally forced his way into the convention hall Mr. Bryan held his audience.

Applause was frequent and thunderous. He spoke for forty-five minutes, finishing at 10:07.

Glynn Is the Keynoter.

In a hall gay with flags and bunting and with pictures of party leaders, past and present, looking down upon them from medallions around the balcony, the delegates to the Democratic national convention assembled on scheduled time Wednesday. The proceedings were formally started when William F. McCombs, chairman of the national committee, ascended the platform and rapped for order. He incited the first burst of enthusiasm of the convention when, in a short address introducing the temporary chairman, he predicted victory for the party in the fall.

The keynote speech was delivered by former Gov. Martin H. Glynn of New York, the temporary chairman. He was frequently interrupted by applause when some point in his speech stirred the enthusiasm of the delegates. His eulogy of President Wilson started the biggest demonstration of the day. Following Governor Glynn's speech, committees on credentials, permanent organization, rules, and resolutions were announced, and that day's work was done.

The delegates were a little slow in assembling for Thursday's session, and it was almost noon when Temporary Chairman Glynn called the convention to order. Permanent Chairman Ollie James was escorted to the chair and introduced. He immediately launched into his address. He lauded the president and defended his policies, particularly in regard to the controversy with Germany over the submarine warfare and our relations with Mexico. An enthusiastic demonstration greeted his praise of President Wilson, which lasted more than twenty minutes. At the close of Chairman James' speech the convention took a recess until nine o'clock in the evening.

Before the nominating speeches began at the evening session the Democrats indulged in a love feast in which the advent of harmony in their ranks was celebrated. The leader of this demonstration of good will was William Jennings Bryan.

Wilson Praised by Bryan.

Mr. Bryan was cheered enthusiastically as he entered the press section with Mrs. Bryan shortly after nine o'clock. A few minutes later, upon the motion of Senator Thompson of Kansas, the convention suspended the rules amid tumultuous good feeling and invited Mr. Bryan to the rostrum. A committee conducted Mr. Bryan amid wild cheering to the side of Chairman James.

Mr. Bryan launched into a speech lauding the administration of the president.

Following Mr. Bryan's address the convention got down to the real business for which it had been convened and the renomination of President Wilson and Vice President Marshall was quickly put through as related above. The convention took a recess until eleven o'clock Friday morning, when the report of the committee on resolutions was presented and the platform was adopted with little discussion and practically no opposition.

STEPS IN CAREER OF PRESIDENT WILSON

Born December 28, 1856, Staunton, Va.

Went to school Columbia, S. C., 1870.

Entered Davidson (N. C.) college, 1873.

Entered Princeton, 1875.

Graduated A. B., 1879.

Entered law school University of Virginia, 1879.

Began law practice in Atlanta, 1882.

Spoke before tariff commission favoring free trade, 1882.

Entered Johns Hopkins university, 1883.

On Bryn Mawr faculty, 1885.

Received Ph. D., 1886, from Johns Hopkins.

Professor history and political science, Wesleyan university, 1888.

Chair of jurisprudence, Princeton, 1890.

LL. D. from Lake Forest university in 1887; Tulane university, 1898; Johns Hopkins, 1901; Yale, 1901.

Elected president of Princeton, 1902.

Nominated governor of New Jersey, November, 1910.

Elected governor of New Jersey, November, 1910.

Nominated for president of the United States July 2, 1912.

Elected November, 1912.

Inaugurated March 4, 1913.

Renominated, St. Louis, June 15, 1916.

"TOM" TAGGART PROVES TO BE CONVENTION RESCUER.

St. Louis.—Senator "Tom" Taggart, Indiana's popular citizen, was one of the most-sought-after men in the convention. Delegates who wanted "just one more ticket for a friend" went to Tom; newspaper men wanting favors of all kinds sought him out; officials worried about arrangements poured their troubles into his ears, and the marvel of it all is that none went away dissatisfied. The Hoosier solon found time and means to grant every request, or, at least, pour enough oil upon the troubled waters to send his visitors away smiling.

ORIGIN OF POLITICAL "BOOM"

Term First Used in Connection With Movement for Third Term for Grant.

The word "boom," as applied to a political movement, so far as known, was first used by the editor of a Republican newspaper in St. Louis, Mo., pending the return of Gen. U. S. Grant from the trip around the world undertaken by him in 1876, immediately following his retirement from the presidency of the United States. The term was used so persistently and so cleverly that it soon began to lodge in popular thought, and to take on the meaning which the editor intended to convey when he declared that the movement looking to a third term for Grant was "booming," or when he employed the invention as a noun and spoke of "the Grant boom."

The idea had come to him from a common expression used by the people along the Mississippi river. When that stream was at flood tide and sweeping everything before it it was said to be "booming." The St. Louis editor aimed to convey the thought that the movement for the nomination of Grant for the presidency in 1880 was like the onward sweep of a great river under such conditions, and therefore a boom. The term soon came into general use, and has been applied in the United States ever since, like the spontaneous and preconcerted or organized movements looking to the placing of some person in an office of importance, not necessarily, but generally, the presidency.—Christian Science Monitor.

Poor Man!

"And what is that monument in the public square?" asked the young lady from the East.

"That there monument," said the native, "marks the last resting place of Three-fingered Jim Nugent. He was the best sheriff this county ever had and he died with his boots on!"

"Dear me!" exclaimed the visitor. "How very uncomfortable."

MOST IMPORTANT NEWS OF WORLD

BIG HAPPENINGS OF THE WEEK CUT TO LAST ANALYSIS.

DOMESTIC AND FOREIGN ITEMS

Kernels Culled From Events of Moment in All Parts of the World—Of Interest to All the People Everywhere.

European War News

A further withdrawal by the British below Kut-el-Amara on the Tigris after the recent repulse by the Turks of an attempt to advance is reported in a statement issued by the Turkish war office at Constantinople.

* * *

The Paris war office announced the capture of German trenches on the slope south of Le Mort Homme has given the French a new position on a front of nearly three-quarters of a mile. The claims of the French are directly contradicted by the Germans.

* * *

The auxiliary cruiser Hermann was attacked by four Russian destroyers in Norr Koepings bight. The vessel became afire and was blown up by the crew. The commander and most of the crew were saved, says a dispatch from Berlin.

* * *

The German cruiser Koenig von Sachsen (King of Saxony), a destroyer and 12 merchantmen have been sunk in a sea fight in the Baltic, according to a report received by the Exchange Telegraph company at London.

* * *

German troops renewed the attack over the whole section of the Verdun front west of Thiaumont farm. They succeeded in entering some advanced trenches at one point, but were repulsed elsewhere, the French war office announced at Paris.

* * *

The great Russian offensive added nearly 7,000 more captives to the 108,000 already taken, and swept down upon Czernowitz, capital of Bukowina. The Russians are reported to have entered the city. Petrograd officially announces a total of 113,000 men and 1,700 officers captured in the two weeks' drive.

* * *

Domestic

George W. Perkins, Progressive leader, after a series of conferences with Col. Theodore Roosevelt and with Gov. Charles H. Whitman at New York, announced that negotiations were under way looking to a "restoration of the good feeling" between the Progressives and Republicans.

* * *

Capt. Stanley Willis Wood, an officer of the British army, was reported killed in action June 13 last, according to an army message reported by Mrs. R. W. Wood of Kansas City, his mother.

* * *

President Wilson's selection of Vance McCormick of Harisburg, Pa., as chairman of the Democratic national committee was approved by that body by a vote of 47 to 1 at St. Louis.

* * *

Four young men lost their lives when their atuomobile was swept away by a cloudburst at Isabella, Tenn.

* * *

Ten men lost their lives and about a score more were hurt when fire swept a large grain elevator of the Pennsylvania railroad on the harbor front at Canton, Md. The property loss was estimated at $3,000,000.

* * *

Charles Evans Hughes has chosen as his political philosopher and friend in his fight for the presidency, George W. Wickersham. He made the selection at New York.

* * *

Official announcement was made at New York by the National City bank of the closing of a loan of $50,000,000 to the Russian government by a banking group.

* * *

President Wilson, in an address to the cadets at West Point, discussed preparedness, militarism, Americanism, the cause of the war in Europe, peace, the Monroe doctrine, divided allegiance and the ideals of America. He declared it is the present imperative duty of the United States to be prepared, adding: "Mankind is going to know that when America speaks she means what she says."

* * *

Theodore Roosevelt underwent an X-ray examination at New York for what he characterized as "possibly a slight breaking of the muscles" around the rib which was broken when he was thrown from a horse May 24, 1915.

* * *

In the presence of a cheering, songsinging crowd of 12,000 that packed the Coliseum at St. Louis to its capacity, Woodrow Wilson was renominated for president by acclamation. Vice-President Thomas Riley Marshall was also renominated by acclamation.

* * *

The railroads informed the representatives of the four railroad brotherhoods at New York that they could not meet their demands for an eight-hour day and time and a half for overtime work. They proposed instead arbitration. The union men refused the offer

Americanism — "the indivisibility and coherent strength of the nation" —was proclaimed the "supreme issue of this day" by the platform adopted by the Democratic national convention at St. Louis, as a declaration of party faith. Military and naval preparedness to "assert and demonstrate" this Americanism and a violent denunciation of "conspirators for the advancement of the interest of a foreign power" marked the strong planks of the platform. The suffrage plank declared in favor of the enfranchisement of women "by the states."

* * *

The parcels post system as operated today is building up corporations that in a few years will overshadow the largest trusts of the present time, is the opinion of a committee of the National Wholesale Grocers' association which reported as the closing sessions held at Boston.

* * *

Charles E. Hughes, in response to questions put to him by newspaper men at New York in regard to his attitude toward the support offered him by the German-Americans, said it was "one of undiluted Americanism."

* * *

Nursing many bruises, the Kentucky delegation the the Democratic national convention left Owensboro, Ky., for St. Louis after a part of the train on which its members were traveling had been wrecked.

* * *

Mexican Revolt

A letter received at Douglas, Ariz., stated that on June 8 a strong force of Yaqui Indians attacked the town of Bachao, seven miles north of there, killing 22 of the inhabitants before they were driven off.

* * *

Gen. Jacinto Trevino, commanding the Carranzista army of the north, advised General Pershing, American expeditionary commander, that any movement of American troops from their present lines to the south, east or west would be considered a hostile act and a signal to commence warfare. General Trevino acted upon specific instructions from General Carranza.

* * *

American troops captured Pedro Lujan, the Villista lieutenant and one of the leaders in the Columbus raid. The Mexican was taken at Taphaumes hacienda, 5 miles southeast of Namiquipa, by Troop M of the Thirteenth cavalry, under Capt. F. G. Turner.

* * *

Mexican bandits crossed the Rio Grande and attacked an American border patrol near San Ignacio, Tex. Three American troopers were killed and six wounded and eight of the invaders were slain and several wounded.

* * *

The finishing blow was given the largest surviving band of Villa followers in Chihuahua by 20 men of the Thirteenth United States cavalry in a fight north of Santa Clara. No Americans were hurt. The Americans routed 25 Villa bandits, killing three and wounding several.

* * *

United States consuls assigned to stations in Mexico have either left the republic or are preparing to leave. With the spread of the anti-American demonstatfons south of the Rio Grande the United States flag has been taken down and the national shields removed from the consulates all over the country.

* * *

Washington

Every telephone at the White House at Washington was connected with the convention hall in St. Louis and the president and his guests heard the ovation he received when he was placed in nomination.

* * *

In a Flag-day speech at Washington the president charged that there were some foreign-born citizens in the United States who were trying to levy a kind of political blackmail on the American political parties in the interest of foreign governments. This, the president declared, must be stopped.

* * *

A favorable report was ordered by the house military committee at Washington on the annual army appropriation bill, carrying $157,000,000. It makes provision for the increases and changes authorized by the new army reorganization law.

* * *

A constitutional amendment to disqualify federal judges from holding any elective office for at least two years after leaving the bench was introduced in the senate at Washington by Senator Thomas (Dem.) of Colorado.

* * *

E. B. Carson, sales manager Consumers' Refining company of Chicago, charged before the federal trade commission at Washington that "big oil interests" caused the increased prices of gasoline by the "speculating in crude petroleum and manipulating the market." His testimony was part of the investigation of the gasoline price increase.

* * *

It was announced at Washington that President Wilson selected Vance McCormick, former mayor of Harrisburg, Pa., as chairman of the Democratic national committee to succeed William F. McCombs.

* * *

Foreign

A violent earthquake shook the republic of San Marino and the city of Rimini, in the province of Forli. Slight damage was done, but there was a panic among the population, according to a dispatch from Rome.

JUNE

L 908

INDIANA LEADS IN EDUCATION

Wonderful Development in 100 Years Places State in Front Rank—Popular Education on a Democratic Basis Fixed Policy of State—History of Legislation in Interest of Schools.

GROWTH OF PUBLIC SCHOOL SYSTEM

By ELLIS SEARLES

One hundred years of development of the educational system has placed Indiana in the recognized front rank among all of the states as a center of education. The years have witnessed a remarkable advance in that direction. Obstacles that appeared to be insurmountable were scaled and overthrown by the hardy pioneers, until popular education, on a thoroughly Democratic basis, became the fixed policy of Indiana and the real pride of the people of the state.

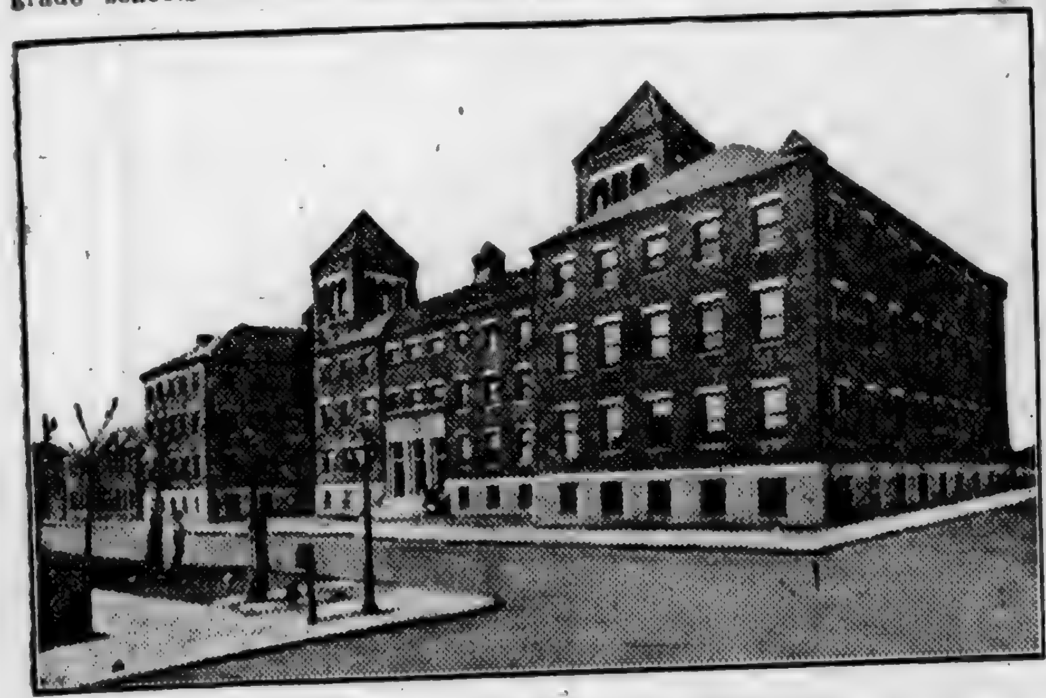
The centennial celebration of the admission of Indiana into the Union, which is held this year throughout the state, will bring forth and show to the world the results of the hundred years of effort to make the schools of Indiana among the best in the country. While no elaborate general plan of celebration of the centennial anniversary has been prepared, yet practically every school of every character in the state will do something in honor of the occasion.

Trials and hardships marked the early establishment of Indiana's educational system. But it was a success in the end, for the report of the state superintendent of public instruction showed that in 1914 there were in the state 766,383 children enumerated for school purposes, and of this number 548,598 were enrolled in the schools. There were 18,449 schoolteachers in the state, of whom 10,762 were in the country, 1,561 in towns and 6,126 in cities. Colored teachers numbered 263.

There were 8,784 schoolhouses, valued at $49,224,882. Of these, 7,817 were township buildings, 238 town buildings and 729 city buildings. In 1914 there were 217 new sanitary buildings constructed at a cost of $2,784,638.04.

There were 803 high schools in the state, with a total enrollment of 59,882. The high schools graduated 9,628 pupils in 1914.

The total cost of instruction in the grade schools for 1914 was $3,763,269.44, and in the high schools it was $2,173,852.



Manual Training High School, Indianapolis.

Some School Statistics.

Statistics show that in 1880 the total school enumeration was 703,558, the total enrollment in the schools 512,283. In 1914 the total enumeration was 766,383, the total enrollment 548,497. The average attendance in 1910 was only 321,659, while in 1914 it had leaped to 441,168. This shows the great development of school attendance in the thirty-year period.

There were nearly one thousand more schoolhouses in Indiana in 1880 than in 1914, but this is due to the fact that a large number of schools have been consolidated, under the consolidated school law. This gives better and more efficient schools. The number of schoolteachers increased nearly five thousand in the thirty years, while the number of schoolhouses was decreasing.

Typical Log Schoolhouse.

All of these figures serve to impress the magnitude of the school system that grew out of the humble beginning of the educational system at the birth of the state of Indiana. It is not necessary to go back of the year 1816, the year Indiana became a state, to trace the growth of the schools. The first state constitution authorized the general assembly to raise funds from the sale of public lands and use the money for school purposes. There was no provision for raising school funds by direct taxation. One of the provisions of the constitution was that "it shall be the duty of the general assembly, as soon as circumstances will permit, to provide by law for a general system of education, ascending in regular gradation from township schools to a state university, wherein tuition shall be gratis and equally open to all." This wise and far-seeing provision was the basis on which the public school system was founded, although the schools did not make much progress under that constitution, because the people were more deeply interested in making a living and developing the resources of the state than in education.

A law was enacted in 1824 by the general assembly to establish a general system of township schools. It provided for the organization of school townships, and this was the beginning of the independent school corporations of the state, a policy that still exists and has been firmly established. Boards of school trustees were formed, and these boards hired teachers and had full control of the schools. The law was badly handled, however, and it was abolished in 1833. Funds were lacking for support of the schools and patrons had to pay tuition.

Indiana University.

The state seminary was organized in 1825. In 1838 it became Indiana university, and had a faculty of three members and 64 students. Hanover academy, afterward Hanover college, was founded in 1827 by the Presbyterians. The Presbyterians also established "The Wabash Manual Labor College and Teachers' Seminary" in 1833. It afterward became Wabash college.

The Catholics established the University of Notre Dame, at South Bend, in 1842, and the Baptists established the school that became Franklin college at Franklin in 1837. Other institutions of higher education that have been established in the state and which still flourish are DePauw university, Greencastle; Purdue university, Lafayette; the State Normal, Terre Haute; Rose Polytechnic, Terre Haute; Butler college, Indianapolis; Earlham college, Richmond; Moores Hill college, Moores Hill, and several others.

From the Centennial History and Handbook of Indiana, edited by George S. Cottman and Max R. Hyman of Indianapolis, and published at the close of 1915 by Max R. Hyman, which, by the way, is a very excellent work, it is learned that at the end of the thirties the percentage of illiteracy in Indiana was still large. Over 72,000 of the population could neither read nor write. The condition did not improve to 1850. Among the free northern states Indiana stood lowest in the scale of literacy.

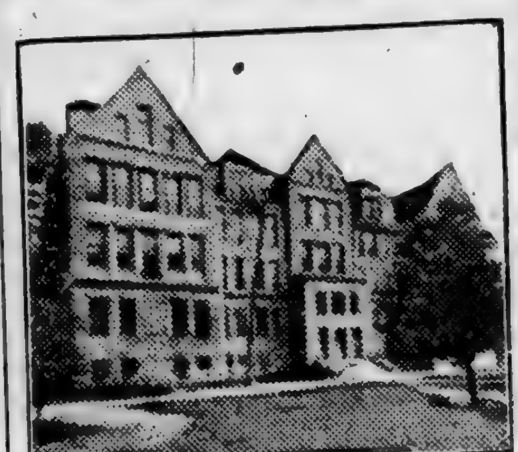
Prof. Caleb Mills came from New Hampshire in 1833 to take charge of Wabash college. He found the conditions in Indiana deplorable, and he began a campaign for educational improvement. He wrote for the papers, made speeches and held meetings, urging better education laws. He said the people of the state were borrowing millions for physical improvements in the state, but were neglecting the minds of the children. Professor Mills conducted such a vigorous campaign that it opened the eyes of the people to the true situation. Governor Whitcomb referred to it in a message to the legislature. The result was an aroused public conscience and a movement for better laws. It caused the legislature in 1849 to enact the first law providing for the maintenance of public schools by direct taxation. It authorized a general tax levy for school purposes. The law introduced system into the schools.

Free Education Established.

The new constitution, adopted in 1851, contained a firmly fixed provision that there should be "a general and uniform system of common schools, wherein tuition shall be without charge and equally open to all." This was the first law that provided for the election by direct vote of a state superintendent of public instruction, as head of the whole educational plan.

The most critical period in the school history of Indiana was 1852 and the few years following. The first legislature under the new constitution, that of 1852, so it is stated in the Centennial History and Handbook of Indiana, passed a law embodying the salient features of the law of 1849, but it also authorized the formation of school corporations in cities and towns, independently of the township corporations, and it authorized local taxation at the option of the people supplemental to the general fund. This provision was the law's undoing. Judge Samuel Perkins of the supreme court declared the law unconstitutional in 1855. This decision gave education a serious setback in the state, and the schools deteriorated woefully. The revenue of the schools was insufficient and schools could not be maintained.

In 1867 another local tax law was enacted, and this time it was held constitutional by Judge Byron K. Elliott of the supreme court. Since that time the school system of Indiana has made progress. It has flourished and grown as, perhaps, no other state system has grown. Once the local tax plan was firmly established so that it could not be rooted out, it was an easy matter to raise sufficient revenues to maintain the schools and develop them as the state and its needs grew.



Science Hall, Indiana University.

Common schools and high schools were planted in every section of the state in the next few years. The standard of education was raised gradually but constantly. Throughout the Civil war period, and since that time, up to the present day, there has been steady progress in education in Indiana.

New laws have been passed from time to time to strengthen the school system and place education at the command of every child in the state. No longer does any citizen complain of the cost of the schools. School taxes are never questioned.

Vocational Education.

One of the longest steps forward in the educational world was taken by the legislature in 1913, when it enacted the vocational education law. This new law places vocational education in every public school of the state, the purpose and aim being to give every child educational help in fitting himself or herself for the practical side of life. Boys are taught agriculture in the country schools. In the town and city schools they are taught manual trades. Girls in all schools get an education in domestic science, the better to fit them for the duties of a home. It is said that Indiana's vocational education law is a model law on that subject, and that it is far in advance of the laws of most other states. While it has been in effect in the schools only two years, yet it has so far proved its worth that any movement to destroy or damage the law would be met with universal opposition.

The legislature of 1915 also enacted a new and wholesome law affecting the educational system. It created a teachers' pension fund, out of which pensions will be paid to teachers that have served a specified number of years as school teachers in Indiana. The fund is maintained by a scale of contributions made by the teachers themselves, but it is under state supervision and is certain to prove a boon to the veterans who have devoted the best years of their useful lives to the training and education of Indiana's children.

If the second hundred years of Indiana's history can show such remarkable improvement in education as the first hundred years have shown it is quite certain that there will be good reason for rejoicing at the next centennial anniversary of the state.

OUTLOOK SEEMS BAD ONE

Texas Poet Lifts His Voice in a Wail as He Thinks of the Coming Fashions.

When people go along the street with aching corns upon their feet, and bunions and ingrowing nails, and they can scarce repress their wails, and they wear straight-front corsets, too, and pull them tight the way they do, until their tongues stick out, and eyes, oh, do not shudder with surprise; I know that fashion sets the pace, and if folks want to "save their face" they've got to go where fashion points, though bunions cluster on their joints and though their inwards are squeezed jam up tight against their diaphragm. When fashion issues a decree you've got to bow down and agree. These girls you see with bare red chests, goose-pimpled, too, it never rests with them, the style of garb they'll wear, or goose pimples would not grow there; and skirts and heels would not grow as high as they do now; I know. But we are sad, and we're knock-kneed, because Dame Fashion has decreed that man's clothes must put on new quips, and "drapery about the hips" is her dictum, and no one knows just how fat men will look in these!—Houston Post.

DADDY'S EVENING FAIRY TALE

By MARY GRAHAM BONNER

COPYRIGHT BY THE AUTHOR

BOBOLINKS HAVE TEA PARTY.

"The other morning," commenced Daddy, "the Bobolinks had an Afternoon Tea."

"Do Birds drink Afternoon Tea?" asked Nancy.

"No, it isn't the Afternoon Tea that your mother and the grown-up ladies have, but they called this Party an Afternoon Tea Party.

"In one way they were right—for they gave the Party in the afternoon—and as for the Tea—well they had something they thought was far, far better.

"The Tea Party was given for the Meadow Larks. The Bobolinks are great friends of the Meadow Larks and they wanted to be the first this season to entertain them. Besides most of the Bobolinks had new summer homes and their colony was near a beautiful stream.

"You know the Bobolinks always build their homes in the meadows—but they build very near a stream and their homes are always deep down in the long grass.

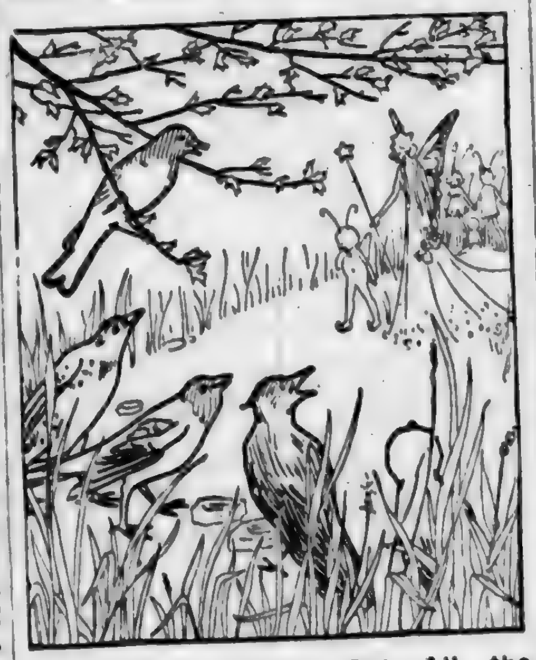
"They had all come to live in Waving Grassland for the summer—that is, all the Bobolinks who always moved about together in the summer and winter—and many of their friends, the Meadow Larks, were all on hand to greet them. A number of others were going to arrive in a few days—before the Tea Party.

"Now Waving Grassland was very beautiful country. The meadows were very large and the grass was so beautiful and so long that it always waved in the soft breezes so that the Bobolinks named their new summer place the Waving Grassland.

"And so the Bobolinks made all their preparations for the Tea Party. All the guests arrived dressed up in their best new summer plumage. And the Meadow Larks came first as they were the guests of honor."

"Who were the other guests?" asked Nancy.

"Well," answered Daddy, "the Red-Breasted Grosbeak family was all there looking too lovely for words. And the Blue Jays, downy Woodpeckers, the Orioles, the Thrush family, the Chipping Sparrows, the Robins, the Indigo Birds—and even the shy Vireos ventured forth. Of course, usually they hate Parties, but they loved the stream nearby and the beautiful country the Bobolinks were living in, and they thought at least once a year they ought to be a little bit sociable and friendly with their neighbors.



Who Should Arrive But All the Fairies!

"You can imagine what a gay reception it was with all the beautiful feathers of the birds looking lovelier than ever as the sun was shining down, and now and again shining through the trees overhanging the stream—which made the feathers have lovely shadows and sparkling lights.

"After they had all chatted together—or to us it would have sounded more like chirping—the Bobolinks began to serve tea.

"They had spring water for their Tea—the water from the cool stream which had a deep spring within it. And this Tea they served in little moss-covered stones. That gave it the most delicious flavor and all the Birds asked the Bobolinks where they had found such good Tea. You know in birdland they don't ask each other where anything is bought, but where it is found! And the Bobolinks told their secret.

"But as they were drinking cup after cup—or stoneful after stoneful of Tea—who should arrive but all the Fairies!

"The Birds greeted the Fairies with their best songs—or their way of saying 'We're so glad to see you,' and the Bobolinks trilled with joy because they had arranged this lovely surprise for their guests."

SOLDIERS AT PA'S FUNERAL

Small Boy Expresses Delight Because Father Had Been Elected G. A. R. Commander.

Small Tommy's father had been elected commander of the G. A. R. post, and the little fellow could not conceal his joy when he heard the news.

"Oh, papa!" he exclaimed; "I'm just awful glad you got elected."

"Thank you, my son; "but why are you so glad?"

"Because now you'll have all the soldiers at your funeral," answered Tommy.

INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

(By E. O. SELLERS, Acting Director of the Sunday School Course in the Moody Bible Institute of Chicago.)
(Copyright by Western Newspaper Union.)

LESSON FOR JUNE 25

REVIEW, SECOND QUARTER.

READING LESSON—Philippians 1:1-11; 4:1-9.

GOLDEN TEXT — Finally, brethren, whatsoever things are honorable, whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are lovely, whatsoever things are of good report; if there be any virtue, and if there be any praise, think on these things. —Phil. 4:8.

The lessons for the past three months extend over a period of perhaps fifteen years, from A. D. 37 or 40 to A. D. 52 or 55. It is the history of an ever expanding church and the ever widening influence of the work which Jesus began and continued to do after his resurrection, through the Holy Spirit. No adequate or proper review can be conducted without the aid of a map. If none is available, take a large sheet of manila paper and let some of the scholars make an outline map showing the strategic centers, Jerusalem, Damascus, Antioch and as far west as Philippi, also the country involved, the coast line of the "Great Sea," etc. It is a good idea not to locate the chief cities, but have pupils attach to the map small, round, red and white stickers on which might be printed the name of each city. Then other pupils might trace on the map the course of Paul's journeys. If all of this work is done in the presence of the entire school it will aid greatly in holding attention as well as placing before the scholars a visible delineation of the lands involved in this portion of sacred history. The most outstanding incidents which have been studied during the past quarter, such as the conversion of Saul, the healing of Aeneas, the raising of Dorcas, Peter's visit to Cornelius, etc., could also be located geographically by means of thumb tacks with tags attached. A most interesting review would be to organize in the school a number of travel clubs. Let each club come prepared to give a "travelogue," or travel talk, describing some of the chief events, such as the Damascus journey, a journey to Joppa, to Cyprus, to Iconium, from Antioch to Jerusalem, etc. Let the pupils write out their accounts and as each is written have some scholar indicate on the map the places involved, and others hang up in plain sight of the entire school a piece of cardboard bearing a single sentence indicative of the leading lesson of the event described. This latter will mean to use a sentence or parts of sentences as: "We are men of like passions as you." The element of contest could be employed by having all the pupils in a given department bring such sentences relating to the lessons on cards, and let that scholar who can bring the greatest number of sentences be declared the winner. The teacher must of course help materially in such a contest by direct suggestion and by encouraging the pupils to undertake the task before them.

For the adult and older 'teen age classes it might be well to assign to different scholars a number of great problems which have been treated in the lessons of the quarter, and let each come to the class prepared to read a brief essay or to discuss the subject assigned, relating it of course to the work of the review. (Lesson I.) "How the Holy Spirit converts men today." (Lesson V) "How can the church be aroused to the great work of missions." (Lesson VIII) "The Perils of Popularity." (Lesson XI) "The conditions of salvation" and so on. Another interesting plan would be to have different members of the class prepare at home a brief synopsis of the chief characters of the quarter's lessons.

Such a use of charts is valuable in that it appeals to the eye, is a real test of knowledge and helps to systematize our information for future use.

The facts of the quarter are about as follows:

Lesson I. The Risen Christ by his overwhelming glory conquers his bitter enemy, Saul.

Lesson II. Men are healed and the dead raised by the power of the Risen Christ.

Lesson III. Peter, the Jew, is prepared and Cornelius, the Gentile, is called to a momentous conference.

Lesson IV. Jew and Gentile alike receive the gospel and are sealed by the Holy Spirit.

Lesson V. The Risen Christ by his angel delivers his servant, Peter.

Lesson VI. The Holy Spirit calls Barnabas and Saul to a world ministry.

Lesson VII. The preaching of Christ causes separation.

Lesson VIII. The Power of the Risen Christ heals the lame and revives Paul.

Lesson IX Christ, who fulfilled the Jewish law, removes its burden.

Lesson X. Lydia's open-hearted response to the gospel.

Lesson XI. The temperance lesson shows our relations to others in the Kingdom.

Lesson XII. The Ever Present Christ delivers his servants and convicts and saves the sin-hardened jailer.

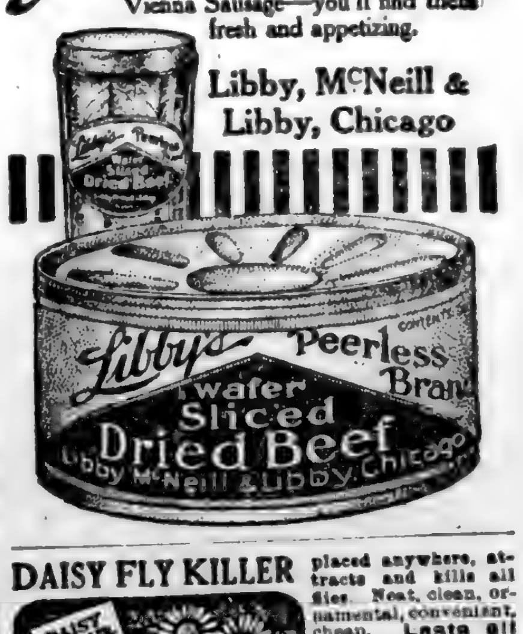
Summer Luncheons in a jiffy

Let Libby's splendid chefs relieve you of hot-weather cooking. Stock the pantry shelf with

Libby's Sliced Dried Beef

and the other good summer meats — including Libby's Vienna Sausage—you'll find them fresh and appetizing.

Libby, McNeill & Libby, Chicago



DAISY FLY KILLER placed anywhere, attracts and kills all flies. Neat, clean, ornamental, convenient, cheap. Lasts all season. Made of metal, can't spill or tip over; will not soil or injure anything. Guaranteed effective. All dealers or 6 sent express paid for $1.00.

Daisy Fly Killer

HAROLD SOMERS, 150 De Kalb Ave., Brooklyn, N. Y.

ANSWER THIS—Women earn $2.00 per day without leaving house or neglecting duties. Send 10c for sample and particulars. Stamp brings interesting circular. Mrs. Laura Morris, Port Clinton, Ohio

Send 50c for "Perfect Christian Divine Science" Book merging Life, Health, Success maxims. Modern Mind Pub. Co., 227 Lane Court, Chicago, Ill.

W. N. U., FORT WAYNE, NO. 26–1916.

Diplomatic.

"I was told that many people think hard of me."

"How can they help it when they know you're a brick?"

RED CROSS BALL BLUE.

That's the idea. A pure blue, true blue, no dope. Gives to clothes a clear white, whiter than snow. Be careful, use the best. Large package, sold by good grocers only, 5 cents. Ask for it today.—Adv.

Flag for Old Vincennes.

The city council of Vincennes, Ind., is considering the adoption of a flag for Vincennes to be used as the city's official emblem during the coming Indiana centennial celebration, says the Indianapolis News.

The suggested design is intended to set forth the British rule of Vincennes by an old English red "V" in the blue center and the French control by a white fleur-de-lis, which was the national emblem of France during the time this territory was under the French government.

Radiating from the center there are 18 white stripes, indicating that Indiana was the 18th state admitted to the Union. There also are 48 small white stripes, indicating the number of states now in the Union.

Hunting Trouble.

When a man just naturally wants trouble it is mighty easy to find an excuse for making it. According to Mike Hogan, Casey and O'Brien were having an argument of their own at Breckinridge street and Barrett avenue. It had progressed to the extent that each had forgotten what it was about originally and they were wholly oblivious of the gathering crowd until an urbane and genteel person in a frock coat put in.

"'Come, come, my man," he said, gently plucking Casey by the sleeve. "You don't want to fight; I can tell it by your looks. Your face is too benign."

"Two be nine! Two be nine, is ut, ye scut?" bellowed Casey. "Me face is two be nine, is ut?"

And there was where the real trouble began.—Louisville Times.

A Sensible Thing To Do

When the drug, caffeine—the active principle in coffee—shows in headache, nervousness, insomnia, biliousness, jumpy heart, and so on, the sensible thing to do is to quit the coffee.

It's easy, having at hand the delicious pure food-drink

Instant Postum

It is made from wheat roasted with a bit of wholesome molasses and is free from any harmful substance.

Thousands who prefer to protect their health, use Postum with comfort and delight.

Made in the cup—instantly—with hot water. Convenient, nourishing, satisfying.

"There's a Reason" for POSTUM

JUNE

L 908

0198

OUR TWO BIG FEATURES

One Hundred Years of Indiana History—a series of SIX ARTICLES, which will appear in the next six issues of the News—read the first article on page six of this issue.

"THE TURMOIL," by Booth Tarkington, (the biggest story of the day) is worth more than a years subscription—the first installment appears on page three of this issue. : : :

READ ALL THE NEWS, IN THE NEWS, ALL THE TIME

NOTICE!

the largest and best line of Shirts and Neckwear ever shown in St. Joe at

BARNEY'S

ALL NEW

NOTICE TO DEFENDANTS.

Cause No. 10529.

In the DeKalb Circuit Court, December Term, 1915.

State of Indiana, DeKalb County, ss:

Iva C. Yeiser, Plaintiff.

vs.

William Rogers et al., Defendants.

Now comes the plaintiff by Charles O. Borst, her attorney, and files her complaint herein, together with the affidavit by a competent person, that the residence upon diligent inquiry is unknown of the defendants: William Rogers; Elizabeth Rogers; William C. Jenkins; Plesy Jenkins; John Goer; Anne Sawyer; Anne Goer; Mariah Coats; Eldah Goer; Maria D. Goer; Anna Goer; Rufus Goer; Harriet Goer; Mariah D. Goer; Asa Sawyer; Sylvester Coats; Isaac Sawyer; Anna Sawyer 2nd; Mariah D. Richmond; Mariah D. Coats; Eldergas Goer; Eldagas Goer; Maria D. Allen; Ira Allen; Minerva C. Dawson; Ora Fusselman; Charles Thomas; Henrietta Andrews; Lydia Wyatt; Elizabeth Warner; Celia Johnson; Samuel Johnson; John Wesley Wyatt; Elizabeth Wyatt; Jennie Wyatt; Clarence Wyatt; Clara Wyatt; Wallace Johnson; John Platter; Ralph Miller; Wilson Miller; Wilson Miller; Winfield Nelson; Thomas Winfield Nelson; Eva Whistler; George Warford; Jennie Hammond; Rebecca Deardorf; John Deardorf; Mary A. Shank.

That the names of the defendants are unknown and they are believed to be non-residents of the State of Indiana, sued in this action by the following names and designations, to-wit: "The unknown husbands and wives respectively, of each of the following named persons, to-wit: William Rogers; Elizabeth Rogers; William C. Jenkins; Plesy Jenkins; John Goer; Anne Sawyer; Anne Goer; Mariah Coats; Elda Goer; Maria D. Goer; Anna Goer; Rufus Goer; Harriet Goer; Mariah D. Goer; Asa Sawyer; Sylvester Coats; Isaac Sawyer; Anna Sawyer 2nd; Mariah D. Richmond; Mariah D. Coats; Eldergas Goer; Eldagas Goer; Maria D. Allen; Ira Allen; Minerva C. Dawson; John Platter; Ralph Miller; William Warford; Eva Whistler; Maggie Warford; George Warford; Jennie Hammond; Wilson Miller; Elizabeth Warner; Jennie Wyatt; Wallace Johnson.

The names of all of whom are unknown to the plaintiff.

That the names of the defendants are unknown and they are believed to be non-residents of the State of Indiana, sued in this action, by the following named and designations, to-wit: "The unknown widowers and widows of each of the following named deceased persons, to-wit: William Rogers; Elizabeth Rogers; William C. Jenkins; Plesy Jenkins; John Goer; Anne Sawyer; Anne Goer; Mariah Coats; Elda Goer; Maria D. Goer; Anna Goer; Rufus Goer; Harriet Goer; Mariah D. Goer; Asa Sawyer; Anna Sawyer 2nd; Mariah D. Richmond; Mariah D. Coats; Eldergas Goer; Eldagas Goer; Maria D. Allen; Minerva C. Dawson; John Platter; Ralph Miller; Wilson Miller; Eva Whistler; Maggie Warford; George Warford; Jennie Hammond; Mary A. Shank; William Warford.

The names of all of whom are unknown to the plaintiff.

That the names of the defendants are unknown and they are believed to be non-residents of the State of Indiana, sued in this action by the following names and designations, to-wit: The unknown children, decendants, heirs, surviving spouses, creditors and administrators of the state, devisees, legatees, trustees and executors of the last will and testament, successors in interest and assigns respectively, of each of the following named and designated deceased persons, to-wit:—William Rogers; Elizabeth Rogers; William C. Jenkins; Plesy Jenkins; John Goer; Anne Sawyer; Anne Goer; Mariah D. Goer; Mariah Coats; Elda Goer; Anna Goer; Rufus Goer; Harriet Goer; Asa Sawyer; Sylvester Coats; Isaac Sawyer; Anna Sawyer; Mariah D. Richmond; Mariah D. Coats; Eldergas Goer; Eldagas Goer; Maria D. Allen; Ira Allen; Samuel Wyatt; Matilda Wyatt; Minerva C. Dawson, Henry Fusselman; Almeda M. Fusselman; Ira L. Fusselman; Sarah Fusselman; Quincy Fusselman; Nathan Wyatt; Mary Ann Wyatt; Joseph Wyatt; William Wyatt; Ellen Wyatt; Alice Carpenter; William Carpenter; Hortense Johnson; Mary May; George May; Harriet Thomas; John Platter; Ralph Miller; Wilson Miller; Eva Whistler; Maggie Warford; George Warford; Jennie Hammond; Mary A. Shank; William DeMaranville; Winfield Nelson; Thomas Winfield Nelson; Rachel Sechler; William Sechler; Lovina Warford; Joe Warford; William Warford.

The names of all of whom are unknown to the plaintiff.

All of the women once known by any of the names and designations above stated who may have changed their names, and who are now known by other names, the names of all of whom are unknown to plaintiff; the spouses of all of the persons above named, described and designated as defendants to this action, who are married, the names of all of whom are unknown to the plaintiff; all persons and corporations who assert or might assert any title through any of the defendants to this action named, described and designated in said complaint, the names of all of whom are unknown to plaintiff.

That the following named defendants are non-residents of the state of Indiana, to-wit: Ora Fusselman; Charley Thomas; Henrietta Andrews; Lydia Wyatt; Elizabeth Warner; Celia Johnson; Samuel Johnson; John Wesley Wyatt; Elizabeth Wyatt; Jennie Wyatt; Clarence Wyatt; Clara Wyatt; Wallace Johnson; Ralph Miller; Wilson Miller; Martha Pressler; Jacob Pressler; George Warford; Jennie Hammond; Rebecca Deardorf; John Deardorf.

That said action is for the purpose of quieting title to real estate in the State of Indiana; that a cause of action exists against all of said defendants; that all of said defendants are necessary parties to said action and that they are believed to be non-residents of the State of Indiana.

The following real estate in DeKalb county, Indiana, is described in said complaint, to-wit:

Part of the West 110 acres of the Northeast quarter of Section one (1), Township Thirty-three (33) North, Range Fourteen (14) East, and being that portion of the West 110 acres, which lies North of the Center of the Hicksville-Auburn Highway."

Also:

A part of the Northwest quarter of Section one (1), Township Thirty-three (33) North, Range Fourteen (14) East, described as follows:

Commencing at the Northeast corner of said Northwest quarter, thence West 13 chains 68 links to a stone; thence South 13 chains 10 links to a stone in the center of the State road; thence Southeastery along the center of said road to the East line of said Northwest quarter; thence North 19 chains 22 links to the place of beginning.

Containing 22 acres.

And other real estate.

Also:

A part of the Northwest quarter of Section one (1), Township Thirty-three (33) North, Range Fourteen (14) East, described as follows:

Commencing at the Southeast corner of said Northwest quarter thence North 21 chains 71 links to an iron pin in the center of the Auburn and Newville road, thence Northwest along the center of said road 18 chains 13 links to an iron pin, thence south along center line of North and South road 29 chains 40 links to a stone on South line of said Northwest quarter; thence East on said South line 15 chains 25 links to the place of beginning.

Containing 40.41 acres.

This action is instituted and prosecuted by said plaintiff for the purpose of quieting its title to the real estate above described as against all demands, claims and claimants whatsoever.

Notice is therefore hereby given said defendants that unless they be and appear on the 80th day of the May Term, 1916, of the DeKalb Circuit Court of Indiana, being the 15th day of August, 1916, to be begun and holden on the 15th day of May, 1916, at the Court house in the town of Auburn, in said County and State, and answer to demur to said complaint, the same will be heard and determined in their absence.

In Witness Whereof, I hereby set my hand and affix the seal of said Court at the office of the Clerk thereof in the town of Auburn, Indiana, this 19th day of June, 1916.

JOHN HEBEL,

Clerk of the DeKalb Circuit Court.

(SEAL)

Chas. O. Borst, Attorney for the Plaintiff.

FreeColumn

All advertisements in this department are free to subscribers only.—EDITOR NEWS.]

WANTED:—2 Shoats.
WM. HALLABAUGH.

FOR SALE:—Good Milwaukee mower with 5-ft. cut. FRANK LOTHAMER.

FOR SALE:—Just a few bushels of Old Time potatoes left. $1.00 per bushel. Good for cooking or planting.
WM. HALLABAUGH.

Notice of Sale of Real Estate

Notice is hereby given that the undersigned, Raymond Rhodes Executor of the will of Rachel Horn, deceased, will offer for sale at private sale on the 10th day of July, 1916, at his residence at the town of Spencerville, DeKalb County, Indiana, the following real estate to-wit:—

The East One Half of the North East Quarter of the South East Quarter of Section number twenty-nine (29) in Township Thirty three (33) North, Range Fourteen (14) East in said DeKalb County, Indiana.

Said sale will be made pursuant to an order of the DeKalb Circuit Court duly made and entered of record.

The terms of sale will be one-third cash, one-third in six months and one-third in one year, the deferred payments to be evidenced by notes drawing six per cent interest and secured by mortgage back on the premises sold and the privilege is given the purchaser to pay all cash at his option.

Said sale will be continued from day to day, until the real estate is sold.

Raymond Rhodes,
Executor

Edgar W. Atkinson, Atty.

Transfer paper at NEWS office, 2 sheets for 5c. Get some now for that pattern you wish to transfer.

Firemen's Celebration.

St. Joe will be a Lively Place on the Fourth of July---Everything Free. Staged by Firemen exclusively.

The St. Joe Firemen are planning to celebrate Independence Day in a good old fashioned manner. Everything to be absolutely free to the public. They are preparing a program consisting of a Firemen's Parade which will be the opening number followed by Base Ball, Potato Race, Bicycle Race, Sack Race, Goose Neck Pulling, (by mounted riders) Auto Parade, Fantastic Parade in the evening. Prizes given in all contests, announcement of prizes given later. Any person wishing to enter any contest will please consult Harlow Sechler. Good lemonade absolutely free to all.

Church Notes

M. P. Church Announcements.
J. C. Coons, Pastor.

St. Joe:—Sunday School, 9:00 a. m.; Christian Endeavor, 6:30 p. m.; Prayer Meeting, Thursday evening, 7:30 p. m.

Fairview:—Sunday School, 9 a. m.

Concord:—Sunday School, 9:00 a. m.

Christian Church Announcements.

St. Joe:—Bible School at 9 a. m.; Morning probably preaching at 10:15 a. m.; Christian Endeavor, 6:30 p. m.; Preaching, 7:30 p. m. by C. W. Mahin.

Lutheran Church Announcements.
A. K. Mumma, Pastor.

St. Joe:—Sunday School, 9:00 a. m.; Christian Endeavor, 6:30 p. m. Preaching services 7:30 p. m.; Prayer Meeting, Thursday evening.

Many People Poisoned.

We often wonder why so few people live out their allotted time, while a small per cent live beyond that mark. Scores of people meet death each year because of a slow process of poisoning that is going on within their bodies. This poisoning is caused by the glands of the body failing to perform their proper function. Poisonous matter accumulates within the system, and health declines. The unsightly liver splotches, billiousness, headache, dizziness bad taste in the mouth, a pain in the back or under the shoulder blade, a tired or achey feeling, are some of the most common evidences of this poisoning. If this poison is not eliminated and the cause removed, the resisting power is finally gone and life pays the penalty. Are you of the heedless class or are you safeguarding your health? GLANDO is what you need to restore glandular activity, and expel the poisons. Keep on the safe side and use a reliable remedy. Accept none but GLANDO, give it a fair trial.

If your druggist hasn't got it, have him get it for you, or send to the Gland-Aid Co., Ft. Wayne, Ind.

We Want You to keep in mind the fact that in addition to printing this newspaper we do job work of any kind. When in need of anything in this line be sure To See Us

Hot Water for Sick Headaches

Tells why everyone should drink hot water with phosphate in it before breakfast.

Headache of any kind, is caused by auto-intoxication—which means self-poisoning. Liver and bowel poisons called toxins, sucked into the blood, through the lymph ducts, excite the heart which pumps the blood so fast that it congests in the smaller arteries and veins of the head producing violent, throbbing pain and distress, called headache. You become nervous, despondent, sick, feverish and miserable, your meals sour and almost nauseate you. Then you resort to acetanilide, aspirin or the bromides which temporarily relieve but do not rid the blood of these irritating toxins.

A glass of hot water with a teaspoonful of limestone phosphate in it, drank before breakfast for awhile, will not only wash these poisons from your system and cure you of headache but will cleanse, purify and freshen the entire alimentary canal.

Ask your pharmacist for a quarter pound of limestone phosphate. It is inexpensive, harmless as sugar, and almost tasteless, except for a sourish twinge which is not unpleasant.

If you aren't feeling your best, if tongue is coated or you wake up with bad taste, foul breath or have colds, indigestion, billiousness, constipation or sour, acid stomach, begin the phosphated hot water cure to rid your system of toxins and poisons.

Results are quick and it is claimed that those who continue to flush out the stomach, liver and bowels every morning never have any headache or know a miserable moment.

Dr. H. R. Farnham
MEDICINE AND GENERAL SURGERY
ST. JOE, INDIANA

Office Hours—Week Day
10:00 to 11:00 a. m.
1:00 to 3:00 p. m.
6:30 to 8:00 p. m.
Sunday—By appointment.
Telephone
Office, ... No. 2

Office at Residence, Second house west of Widney Opera House.

For Rent

6 room house with barn on the lot, will be rented for one year or from month to month to suit tenant. Inquire of F. R. Bowman at the bank.

Sound
Pure Bred
Percheron
Stallion
Right Sort
Enrollment No. 2873

Years past, this horse has been standing at Auburn; but we are now located at St. Joe in the barn just north of the B. & O. tracks near the mill. Will stand for the season at home, 2 miles east of St. Joe on Monday and Tuesday of each week; and on Wednesday, Thursday, Friday and Saturday of each week in the barn at St. Joe

TERMS:
$15 to Insure Living Colt

E. W. BEABER
Owner

S. S. Widney
Justice of the Peace
Insurance and Real Estate
Phone No. 10
ST. JOE, - - - - IND

100 Per Cent.
INCREASED EARNINGS.

The following is fac-simile of certificate of Bond issued to each Depositor in this Bank.

No. ____________ Grabill, Ind., ____________ 19____

Mr. ______________________________

THIS IS TO CERTIFY that your DEPOSITS in this bank are INSURED under a bond of THE AMERICAN GUARANTY COMPANY of Columbus, Ohio.

THE GRABILL STATE BANK.

PRESERVE THIS. By Albert Egly, Cashier.

Postal Savings pay 2 per cent. Interest and the money is placed in banks who have to furnish a Bond to the government to guarantee that the funds are safe in that Bank.

We pay 4 per cent. Interest and give you the same guarantee. An increased earning of 100 per cent.

THIS is the only Bank in this community thus insuring its depositors.

Total Assets, over $175,000

The Grabill State Bank
Established 1906

Joseph Witmer, President
David Klopfenstine, v. pres.
Albert Egly, Cashier
Joseph A. Grabill, Director
Peter W. Amstutz, Director
Julius Gehrig, Director
John B. Haifley, Chairman Board Directors

JUNE

L 908

U199

Has Your Subscription Expired? Come in and renew it next time you are in town.

ST. JOE NEWS.

NO newspaper can succeed without advertising, therefore we solicit the patronage of our readers for those who by their advertising help to make this paper possible.

VOL. XXX — ST. JOE, DeKALB COUNTY INDIANA, THURSDAY JUNE 29 1916 — NO. 267

LOCAL ITEMS.

Patronize the advertisers.

Celebrate at St. Joe, the Fouth.

Samuel Davis is driving a new 6-cylinder Studebaker.

WANTED–To buy your Hay. C. E. Frye, Phone 73-31, St. Joe.

Ora Baker and wife, and B. E. Widney and wife were at Wayne, Tuesday.

Lois Wineland and daughter are at Columbus the guests of Bert Woodcox and family,

A fine line of summer ready made wearables for Women and Children. Schloss' of Auburn.

Last Saturday and Monday the hay barn was a very busy place. Farmers are cleaning up their mows of hay and at one time Saturday six wagon loads were waiting their turn to get to the bailer.

Monday evening the editor landed in the ditch with his Hupmobile, coming down the hill just east of Walter Wilson's. After working in order to get out it was necessary to call on Mr. Wilson to pull us out with his team.

Sunday School Report.

The following is a true and correct report of the various Sunday Schools in this neighborhood for last Sunday.

Lutheran	113	$3.79
M. P	102	4 47
Christian	74	2.64
Concord	108	2.28
Fairview	30	1.05
Coburntown	107	2.55
U. B.	96	3.42
M. E. Spencer	105	3.88
Lutheran	122	3.00

McCormick Mowers at Curie's

Stone hauling has been commenced on the new road.

Morris Curie is making some improvements on his residence.

Bulk spices, Parowax and canning preparations at Dunkle's.

E. D. Nelson purchased a Maxwell auto of C. A. Patterson, Tuesday.

Dan Dickerhoff and wife, of Five Corners, were in town, Sunday, the guests of friends.

Mrs Ernest Steward, of Spencerville, spent from Friday until Sunday evening with her parents, D. F. Brown and family.

A swarm of bees are making their home in the brick wall at the Barney store. They came last week and settled on the fire escape.

Nothing like it—McCormick Binder—Car load just received at Curies. We will have one of them ready for you. How about it for this years crop?

Bud Adams, wife and children, of Toledo, Ohio, and Mrs. Martha McMillen, of Oakwood, Ohio, came Tuesday to be the guests of LeRoy McMillen and family.

This issue of THE NEWS contains some valuable news matter in the matter of World's events, the action of the Hoosier Guard at Fort Harrison, the Mexican situation, 100 years of Indiana, the greatest and latest story "Turmoil", the Sunday School lesson and besides special news features during the year. You get all this in your home paper for $1.00 per year. The story "Turmoil" couldn't be bought at that price and besides you get it in regular installments and you can easily find time to keep up with it. Back numbers can be secured.

His Celebration

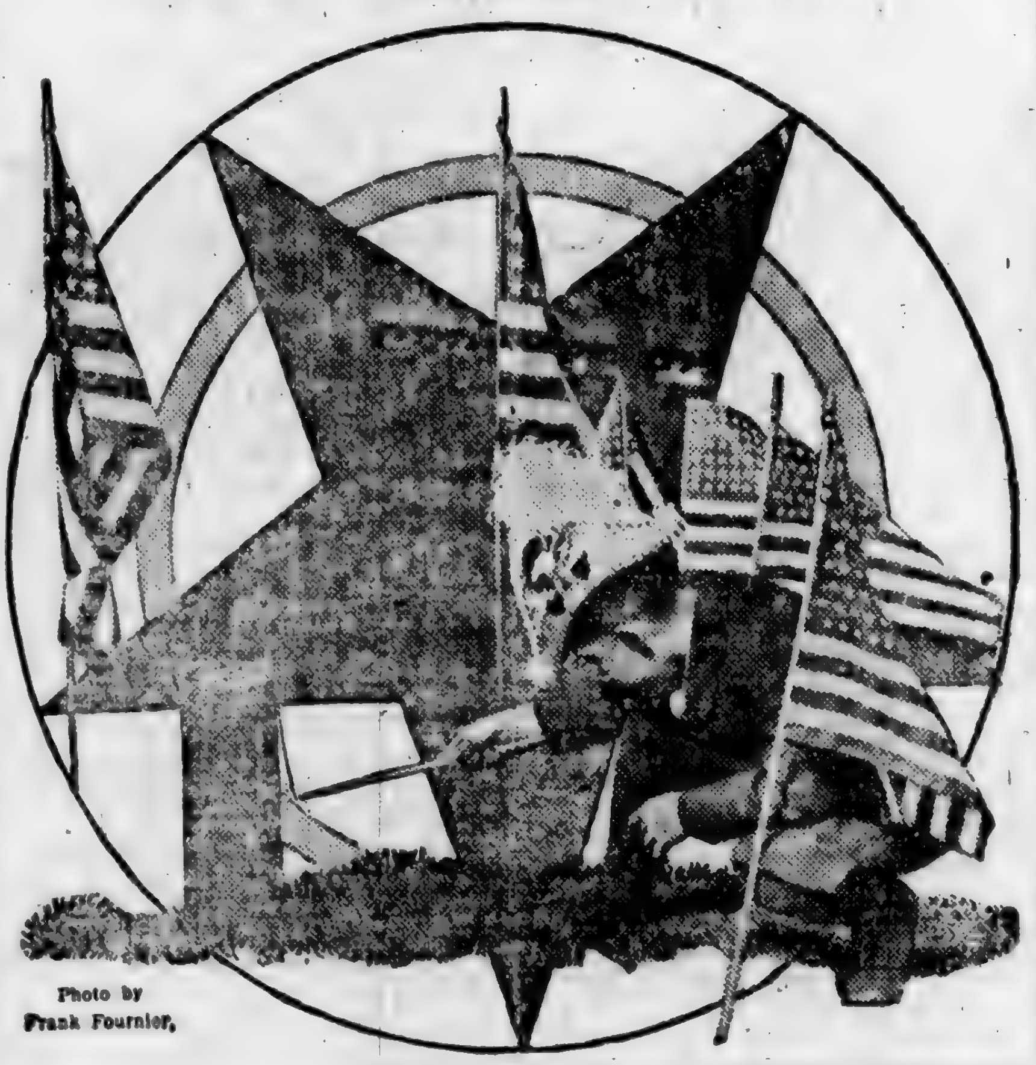

Photo by Frank Fournier,

Send in your news items.

Good quality stationary-Dunkle.

Miss Ruth Perry was home over Sunday.

Mrs. Wilson Sanders was at Garrett, Monday.

Plates, cups and saucers for harvest at Dunkle's.

Chas. Cochran was the guest of relatives here a few days last week, returning to Elgin, Sunday.

Frank Hart moved the C C Bassett barn, last week, to the Claude Mason property in Hamburg.

Miss Thelma Cole, of Napoleon, Ohio, came Monday to attend the Commencement exercises, and visit friends.

Henry Shaffer, wife and granddaughter Josephine, of Butler, were Sunday guests of Frank Terman and wife.

W. C. Patterson and wife, and S. W. Tustison, wife and daughter Margaret, spent Sunday the guests of Chas. Abel and family, of Garrett.

Read the Meat Market ad in this issue. A new market will open this week with Zonker Bros., of Corunna, as proprietors. A new outfit will be installed.

Sam Warner and wife had as Sunday afternoon guests:-Samuel Hart and daughter Hazel, Mrs. Ora Hart and two daughters, and Carl Hart and wife, all of Hicksville.

W. C. Patterson and wife, and S. W. Tustison, wife and daughter Margaret, motored to Ft. Wayne, Tuesday. The latter two will remain for a few days visit with Mrs. F. H. Langley.

On June 17 flour was sold from the car at $6.70 per barrel. On that date wheat was worth 98c. per bu. It required $6.50 worth of wheat to buy it. If 6 bu. and 50lb of wheat was exchanged for Daily Bread Flour it would get 240 lbs. of flour and 82 lbs. of feed, or a net saving of $2,41 on each barrel exchanged. Does it pay? Insist on Daily Bread Flour, made in your own home town.

At noon Saturday occurred the marriage of Miss Lucile Gee, of this place, and Mr. Milo Provines, of near Auburn, by the Rev. Chas. W. Mahin, at the Christian parsonage at Auburn. Miss Gee has been relief girl in the telephone office, and is the daughter of S. D. Gee and wife. Mr. Provines is the son of Frank Provines and wife. Immediately after the ceremony the happy couple left for the home of the groom's grandfather, Mr. Bartles, about two miles south of Auburn, whose farm the groom has rented and where they will reside. The young couple called on Mr. Gee and wife, Sunday evening.

Old Reliable McCormick Mowers at Curie's. Get ready for that warm day.

Jerry Klopfenstine and wife, and Mr. Egly and wife, of Grabill, were Sunday evening guests of Wm. Curie and wife.

D. F. Brown, wife and daughter Norma, spent Tuesday and Wednesday at Auburn, and attended graduation exercises there.

H. L. Dunkle, wife, daughter Rhea, Mrs. Mary Bowman and son Ray, motored to Cold Springs, Sunday, the latter two remaining.

Frank Bowman, wife and daughter Eloise, motored to Ft. Wayne, Sunday, to visit D. J. Baker and wife. The latter two remaining until Tuesday.

John Life and John Markley, of Auburn; Dick Edgerton, of Indianapolis; John Hamilton, of Butler, were Sunday visitors of James and William Hamilton.

J. C. F. Abel and wife motored to Edgerton, Sunday, and spent the day with Mrs. Katherine Sharp. Mrs. Elizabeth Allen returned home with them for a few days visit.

Cut your grain with one of our new McCormick Binders. Curie has just received a large shipment.

Clayton Hathaway left St. Joe, Tuesday noon for Wayne, where he has work with F. H. Langley at one of the Standard Oil Co., filling stations. Mrs. Hathaway accompanied him.

David Poper and wife had as Sunday guests: Ben Woodring and wife, Mrs. Orin Hook and daughter Helen, of Newville, James Malone and wife, Marvin Poper, wife and daughter, Geo. Wilmot, wife and two sons.

Will Hamilton and wife entertained at dinner Sunday:—Benj. Hamilton and wife, Howard Northrup and wife, Lee O. Tustison, wife and baby Kieth, in honor of Mrs. Tustison and little Miss Margaret Eleanor Hamilton's birthdays.

On Sunday, July 2nd., the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad will sell round trip excursion tickets from St. Joe to Cedar Point, Ohio, fare $1.65. Special train will leave St. Joe at 5:24 a. m. Returning, special train leaves Sandusky at 6:15 p. m., same date. Consult nearest Ticket Agent for particulars.

Mrs. R. C. Miller, of Chicago Junction, Ohio, and Mrs. Frank Kriscamp, of Delphos, Ohio, were guests of L. W. Miller and wife, just north of town. On Monday, Mr. Miller left St. Joe for Chicago Junction, where he has secured work with the B. & O., as boiler maker. They will move as soon as a house can be secured.

Fire Works, see Dunkle's window.

Chas. Koch was at Auburn and Wayne, Monday.

J. P. Buckingham has been on the sick list for several days.

Ralph Brown went to Auburn, Saturday, to visit relatives for several days.

Guy Miller, of Findlay, Ohio, is here making demonstrations of the Wear-Ever Aluminium ware and canvassing the territory.

Mr. and Mrs. John Bash and little grandson, also their daughter, Miss Clara, Clark Roberts, wife and children, Gladys and Kenneth, were Sunday guests of A. D. Brunson and wife.

George Swineford and wife motored to Claypool with P A Shurts and daughter Pearl Monday where they visited Mrs. Swineford's sister and husband, C. A. Powsley and wife, for the day.

Kent Stevicks, wife and two daughters, of Cedarville, spent a short time Sunday visiting Mrs. Margaret Swineford and Mrs Sarah McCrory. They also called on W. E. Peterson and wife while here.

To All Spanish War Veterans:—There will be a meeting at the Court House, Thursday night, June 29. In case the Court House is not open on the first floor, entrance may be had at the South door. All veterans of the Spanish war in DeKalb Co., are requested to be present. Philip Holman, Com. of Kuhlman Camp.

Victor Dermott and John Coburn spent Sunday in Toledo.

Lloyd Miller, Paul Maxwell, Harry Shuff, Fred Bearss and Estel Coburn, all of this place, have joined the State Militia, all joining at Hicksville except Mr. Bearss who joined at Auburn.

C. H. Sailer, wife, son Ray, and daughter Lazerne, were Ft. Wayne visitors, Thursday, on their return at New Haven their car refused to go so they returned over the Wabash leaving their machine at that place until Sunday.

Children's Day services were attended Sunday evening at the M. P. Church by a full house. The decorations were excellent and the program was one of extreme interest to the audience. The amount of the Missionary offering was $10.75.

The Martha Society met with Mrs. Mary Meek, Thursday afternoon, and after the Scripture lesson the following officers were elected to serve the coming six months: President, Ada Bassett; Vice-president Elma Brown; Secretary, Nellie Perry; Treasueer, Eva Sheffer; Chaplin, Mrs. Mary Meek.

William Folk and wife, of Muncie, spent the latter part of the week visiting in the families of the latter's brothers, A. D. Brunson, north of town, and Dr. V. C. Brunson and Sidney Brunson, at Newville. They also spent from Saturday night until Monday morning the guests of their niece, Mrs. C. C. Bassett and family.

You are paying out many dollars a year when you buy the necessities of life. If you paid such bill by check you could save money and besides have a receipt for every payment.

Try the Check way. Start To-day.

St. Joe Valley Bank--State Bank

4 per cent. paid on certificates if left 1 Year.

Safety Deposit Boxes for Rent

HAY CARS

Ask for and get the best

Ney and Louden

SPECIAL CROSS DRAFT AND TRIP CARS are standards the world over. All others imitate but none excell. We can furnish the above cars with all accessories, installed and guaranteed to give satisfaction. Allow us to figure on your track.

SPECIAL!

As long as they last Slings

AT $2.10

STEWARD LUMBER & GRAIN Co

SPENCERVILLE, IND.

Highest Prices Paid for Grain and Seeds.

Bran and Middlings in Car load lots is the way we buy them. In this way we give our trade the benefit of Carload price.

We have another car of salt on the way. If you have not tried a barrel of it, do so when you need your next one.

The highest market prices and a hearty welcome awaits you at

St. JOE ELEVATOR

SAMUEL KEESLER, Local Manager.

ZONKER BROS.

ANNOUNCEMENT TO THE PUBLIC.

the opening of a strictly Up-to-Date, clean and sanitary meat market, in the same building as occupied by Mr. J. P. Buckingham.

Our market and refrigerator will be open for inspection at all times.

Strictly fresh and wholesome meats at prices that are right.

◆◆◆◆

Service and Cleanliness-Is our Motto,

ZONKER Brothers

St. Joe, Indiana

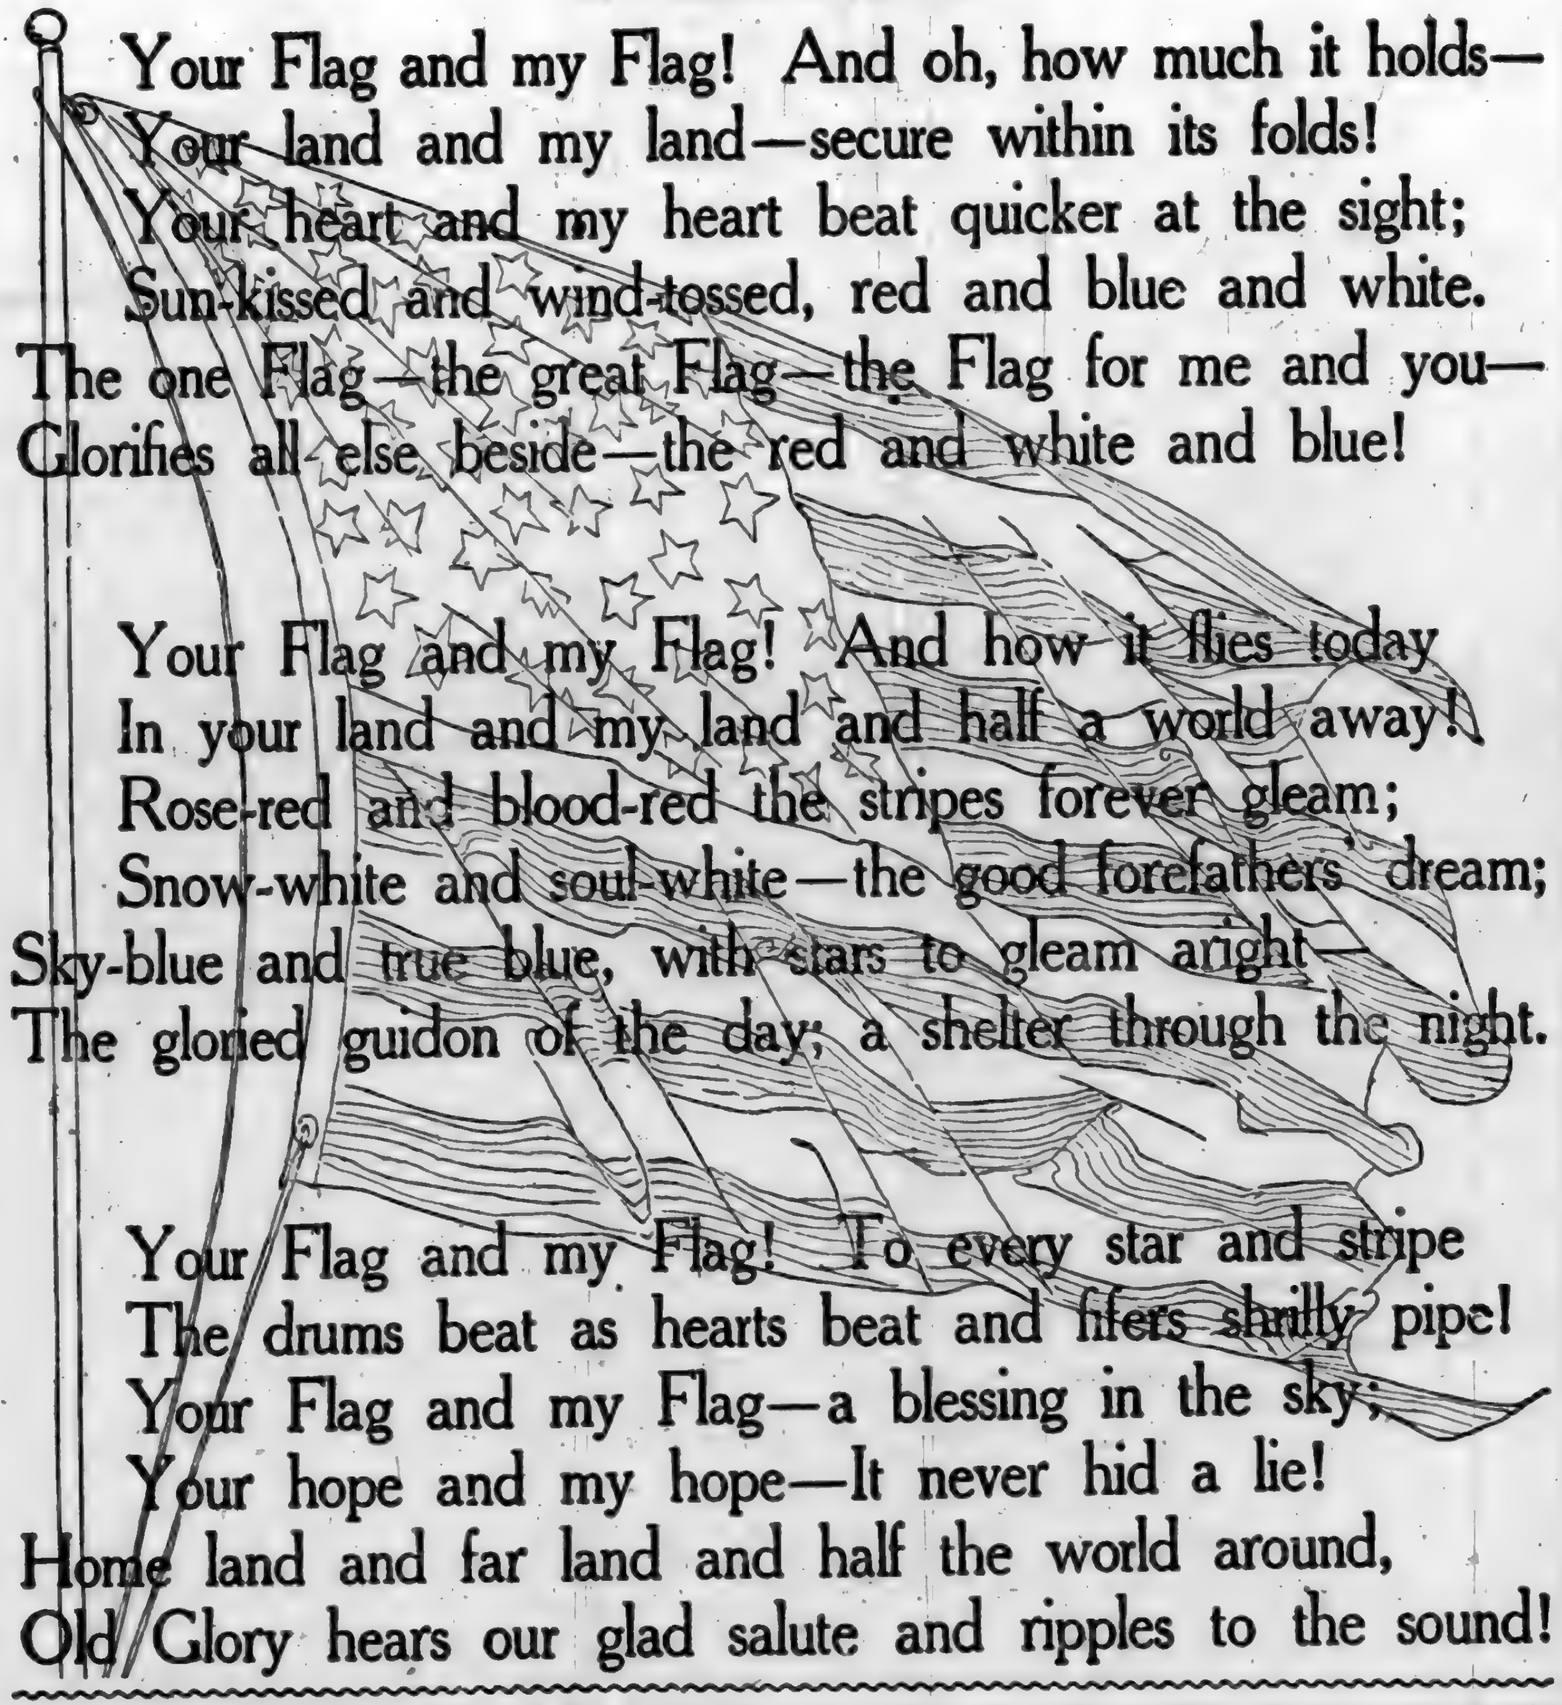
JUNE

L 908

0200

Your Flag and My Flag

By WILBUR D. NESBIT



Your Flag and my Flag! And oh, how much it holds—
Your land and my land—secure within its folds!
Your heart and my heart beat quicker at the sight;
Sun-kissed and wind-tossed, red and blue and white.
The one Flag—the great Flag—the Flag for me and you—
Glorifies all else beside—the red and white and blue!

Your Flag and my Flag! And how it flies today
In your land and my land and half a world away!
Rose-red and blood-red the stripes forever gleam;
Snow-white and soul-white—the good forefathers' dream;
Sky-blue and true blue, with stars to gleam aright—
The gloried guidon of the day; a shelter through the night.

Your Flag and my Flag! To every star and stripe
The drums beat as hearts beat and fifers shrilly pipe!
Your Flag and my Flag—a blessing in the sky;
Your hope and my hope—It never hid a lie!
Home land and far land and half the world around,
Old Glory hears our glad salute and ripples to the sound!

HAD TO WAIT FORTY DAYS

Long Time Before England Got News of the Battle of Lexington

IT SEEMS strange in these days when news of the battles in faraway Europe is cabled to America within a few minutes after they occur—when flying machines equipped with machine guns are fighting each other in the clouds—when advocates of preparedness are arguing that the ocean is no barrier to a foreign foe because of the swiftness of their steam cruisers—to hark back to the battle of Lexington, April 19, 1775, and try to realize the length of time it required for the news of that conflict to reach England.

There were no telegraph wires, no telephone, no dispatch boats or "special correspondents" with each regiment. A steam vessel had not then been dreamed of. There were no cables, no flying machines, no machine guns. Only sailing vessels, of small size, were available to cross the ocean, and as a consequence it took a long, long time for the shot to be "heard around the world."

Dependent on Sailing Ships.

Journalism in America was then in its swaddling clothes. The race of the enterprising journalist to outfoot fleet-footed Time had not then begun. There was not the intense rivalry of today between metropolitan papers with their specials and war extras—t say nothing of baseball extras. Ther was, too, a similar lack of activity on the part of editors in London.

The newspapers in Boston and other nearby towns at that time were published weekly, usually on Monday. News of sanguinary events, if they occurred during the week, was necessarily held for publication until the following Monday. It was not surprising, therefore, that the news of the battles of Lexington and Concord was not printed in Boston until April 25—for the idea of issuing an "extra" in such emergencies was not then in vogue.

In the Essex Gazette.

The Essex Gazette, published at Salem, had by far the best report of the events of the day, with an almost complete list of the killed and wounded. The news of this first encounter between the provincials and his majesty's troops was many hours in reaching the other colonies, although post riders and expresses were started immediately for Hartford, New York, Philadelphia and the South.

In two days nearly all the scattered peoples of the young nation had been informed of the result, and the spirit of the hour had inspired the raising of troops.

To the king, the parliament and the people of Great Britain the days had been filled with anxiety. The main question discussed was "How far dare the colonists carry their resistance?" "Will the provincials stand before the British regulars?" was also a mooted question.

Didn't Anticipate War.

In the face of the steady inpouring of grenadiers, dragoons and infantry from the mother country, and the rapidly increasing fleet of vessels of war, all heavily manned, it was believed that the Americans would be cowed and the whole attention of Great Britain was centered upon her rebellious children across the seas.

Day succeeded day. March became April, and April in turn was left behind in the rush of time. May grew old, with no word of decisive action from the colonists.

Not a single word from the conflict of April 19, 1775, had reached England until the bright, clean page, labeled "June," was about to be brought into view and king and subjects were leaving London to escape the summer heat.

Forty Days to Reach England.

It was on May 29, 1775, when the first sailing vessel to arrive from the colonies after the skirmish at Lexington reached Bristol, England. Even at this early day journalism had shown its superiority over government methods, for the vessel brought copies of the Essex Gazette of April 25, containing the brief account of the engagement.

Post haste, they were carried to London, and on the following day the news was printed in the London Chronicle. Thus, 41 days after the shot was fired, its reverberations were heard in distant Britain.

With but a simple headline—"LONDON"—the Chronicle printed the important news, prefacing it with the statement:

"Tuesday, May 30, 1775.

"Yesterday morning some dispatches arrived at Lord Dartmouth's office from General Gage, at Boston, brought by a ship arrived at Bistol, from that Province. They were forwarded by a messenger to his majesty at Kew."

These dispatches contained no news of the skirmish, being dated several days before it occurred.

Country True to Its Ideals.

How truly the United States has pursued the ideal of human progress set forth in the Declaration of Independence has been shown since the world war began by our steadfast stand for the rights of humanity. Here we stand, drawn from the four corners of the earth, a great people united in a common purpose, leading the world toward a realization of the brotherhood of mankind and pointing out to all nations that man's real and enduring aim should be the conquest of himself and of the vast forces of nature, to the end that all may get the best out of life and ever advance in the pursuit of happiness.

God's Hand Upheld Patriots.

If the struggle for independence teaches anything it is that mysterious and mighty unseen forces co-operate with those who are working out God's plan. Had it not been for the help of such forces the result of that struggle would have been entirely different.—Christian Herald.

Patriotic Hymn

OUR father's God! from out whose hand
The centuries fall like grains of sand,
We meet today, united, free,
And loyal to our land and thee,
To thank thee for the era done,
And trust thee for the opening one.
Here where of old by thy design,
The fathers spake that word of thine,
Whose echo is the glad refrain
Of rended bolt and falling chain,
To grace our festal time, from all
The zones of earth our guests we call.

Be with us while the new world greets
The old world thronging all its streets,
Unveiling all the triumphs won
By art or toil beneath the sun;
And unto common good ordain
This rivalship of hand and brain.

Thou who hast here in Concord furled
The war flags of a gathered world,
Beneath our western skies fulfill
The Orient's mission of good will,
And freighted with love's golden fleece,
Send back its argonauts of peace.

For art and labor met in truce,
For beauty made the bride of use,
We thank thee; but withal we crave
The austere virtues strong to save,
The honor proof to place or gold,
The manhood never bought nor sold.

Oh make thou us, through centuries long,
In peace secure, in justice strong;
Around our gift of freedom draw
The safeguards of thy righteous law;
And cast in some diviner mold,
Let the new cycle shame the old.
—John Greenleaf Whittier.

LONG MAY IT WAVE

INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

(By E. O. SELLERS, Acting Director of the Sunday School Course in the Moody Bible Institute of Chicago.)

(Copyright by Western Newspaper Union.)

LESSON FOR JULY 2

PAUL AT THESSALONICA AND BEREA.

LESSON TEXT—Acts 17:1-15 (cf. 1 Thess. 2:1-12).

GOLDEN TEXT—Him did God exalt with his right hand to be a prince and a Savior.—Acts 5:31.

To place a modern war map by the side of the ancient one will help to make the places Paul visited more real. In both of the events of this lesson reference is made to the reading and use of the Scriptures, and teachers should use that to emphasize the reading of the Bible by both old and young. There is real patriotism as well as safety and a liberal education in Bible study. Paul reached Thessalonica about twenty years after the establishment of the Christian church, remained perhaps five or six months and then went on to Berea. Modern Saloniki has been since the Roman days of Thessalonica an important center, thriving and prosperous of later years till the recent Balkan-Turkish war.

I. At Thessalonica (vv. 1-9) (1) Reasoning (vv. 1-5) (a) The place. On this second journey Silas and Timothy (v. 14) were Paul's companions. Recently driven from Philippi (I Thess. 2:1-2) they at once repaired to the synagogue upon reaching the city, knowing that there they could gain a foothold with both Jew and Gentile. It was Paul's usual means (v. 2 Am. R. V.). Doubtless during the two weeks the disciples used every opportunity for discussion. Paul made use of the Sabbath day of assembly although Christians met on the first day of the week for their own distinctive service (Acts 20:7). He also reasoned from the Scriptures which the Jews so highly revered. The best agent for doing personal work is the word of God (Eph. 6:17; Jer. 23:29; Jas. 1:18; I Pet. 1:23). (2) The method. Paul employed three. (a) He reasoned that Christ must suffer. Why? (See Isa. 53:6; Math. 26:28; Heb. 9:22; John 19:36). Paul had only the Old Testament. We have also the New to bring to our aid. (b) That "Christ must rise from the dead"—like Peter at Pentecost. Paul proved this from the Old Testament. If we will allow the Holy Spirit to "open the Scriptures" to us we will find things new and old and exclaim that whereas "once I was blind now I see." (c) He "alleged and affirmed" (set forth), e. g., gave testimony that "this Jesus whom I proclaim unto you is the Christ." Paul knew that the historical Jesus was the glorified Christ, for he had met him "in the way" to Damascus. Paul's manner of life in the city as he lived and preached Jesus was much that it contributed greatly to his success. His "manner of life was blameless" (Acts 26:4); he supported himself (I Thes. 2:9; II Thes 3:8). (2) Reception (v. 6-10). At first these men were received as from God by large numbers (v. 4. See I Thess. 1:6-10). But the gospel then as now causes divisions. Not all professed followers of God know or accept the gospel. Paul's success aroused the envy of the Jews just as every successful servant is envied by those of lesser light. The charge brought against Paul and Silas (v. 6) was in large measure true, and it was a good testimony and tribute to their effectiveness. It was also in accord with Christ's prophecy. (Math. 10:34; Luke 12:53). It is the business of the gospel to accomplish just such results. We need more of such as shall turn the wrong side down and the right side up. These men were accused of "saying that there is another King, one Jesus."

II. At Berea, (v. 10-15). The disciples' departure by night was an act of prudence (Math. 10:23), and Paul continued his great interest in the converts he had left. See the two letters addressed to that church. Reaching Berea Paul began as usual to preach Jesus first of all to the Jews. The citizens of Berea were "more noble" and have continued to this day as a great inspiration to Bible students (witness the Berean series of lesson helps). (1) They "received the word with readiness of mind." There was a hunger for spiritual food and they partook of it with a relish. Some receive truth under compulsion while others hunger for it. (See I Thess. 1:7; 3:10). (2) "Searched" (examined) the Scriptures daily. (2) Each day they sought the mind of God.

Much of our present day Bible study is interesting and enlightening, but is not energizing nor evangelistic because it looks upon the Bible merely as literature.

We need to study the Bible as did the Bereans to know love and obey Jesus as our Savior and king.

We need to study it as our guide and counsel through life.

Those who "believed" as the result of such preaching and study were well grounded (I Thess. 3:10).

After several weeks of such blessed ministry the Thessalonian Jews interfered, "stirring up and troubling the multitude" (v. 14 Am. R. V.), and Paul again moved on, this time to Athens in Greece while Silas and Timothy remained for a further ministry in Berea.

HONEY'S MANY USES

ARTICLE REALLY IS NOT PROPERLY APPRECIATED.

Healthy and Economical Food Should Be Far More Widely Used Than It Is—Some Ways to Employ It.

Honey is one of the healthiest and most economical foods, and it is not only delicious, but has invaluable medicinal qualities. It cannot, of course, take the place of sugar, as sugar is more convenient, for one thing, but it is better adapted to certain cooking than sugar and its flavor is an aid in securing that variety which all cooks are seeking.

For instance, cream cheese and honey, either liquid or in the comb, makes a delicious and healthful combination.

Two ounces of honey and six ounces of strawberries, with three ounces of cottage cheese, two ounces of bread and two-thirds of an ounce of butter, the latter either spread on the bread or mixed with the cheese, makes a very well-balanced meal.

As a filling for sandwiches, honey may be used with chopped nuts, or the nuts may be added to cheese and honey for the same purpose.

Honey can be used instead of sirup or jam with cereals and pancakes, and if a little hot water is added to it it will be easier to pour. It is more convenient than sugar for sweetening lemonade or other fruit drinks, as it does not have to be dissolved. With charged water it has less of a tendency to expel the gas. Solid honey makes a delicious filling for cake.

It may be substituted for molasses in all forms of bread and cake cookery, and gives a more delicate flavor. It contains less acid than molasses, and so requires less soda in recipes which form when poured into cold water. Beat the white of the egg until stiff, and when the sirup has cooled slightly pour over the egg, beating the mixture constantly until it will hold its shape. This frosting is suitable for use between layers of cakes, but is rather too soft for the top.

Cakes made with honey will keep fresh much longer than when sugar is used. Indeed, if butter is omitted they will keep for months, and even improve in flavor.

Honey can be used in a variety of ways for preserving. A good jelly may be made by combining a cupful of apple juice with a cupful of honey and proceeding as in ordinary jelly making. Other combinations of the sort could probably be worked out.

Cranberries cooked in honey and water are delicious. Take equal weights of each of the ingredients, and after pricking each berry several times to prevent bursting and permit the sirup to penetrate to the interior, cook them slowly until they are soft and boil down the sirup until it just covers them. Pour into glasses and cover like jelly. A good method is to place all the ingredients in a double boiler and heat them very slowly. If this method is followed the boiling down of the sirup is even more necessary than when the berries are cooked more rapidly. Honey is good to use with sugar for candies, because it causes it to remain soft.

To Mend the Screens.

The broken door or window screen is an eyesore all summer if it is left unmended, or the repairing is done clumsily. The neatest way to mend the screen is to cut a piece of wire netting about three inches larger than the hole. Remove the wires around the edge of the patch for half an inch or more, like drawing away the threads from a piece of linen. Bend the resulting prongs at right angles and fit the patch in place with the wire ends sticking through the screen. Press the patch flat against the larger surface, then on the other side press the ends back to their original position. This secures the patch.

Small Baked Mackerel.

After splitting and cleaning fish place in a buttered dripping pan. Sprinkle with salt and pepper and cover with one-half cupful of thin cream. In place of the cream two-thirds of a cupful of milk and a little butter may be used. Bake in a hot oven for 20 minutes.

Asparagus on Toast.

Wash asparagus, cut off the bottom of stalks. Then cut off the rest of the hard part and put these to boil in salted water and boil till tender. Then put in tops and boil till done. Toast bread, butter, and heat milk, put asparagus on toast, pour the milk over, add pepper and salt to taste.

Apple Sauce.

Roast goose, duck or pork should have apple sauce. First pare, core and quarter a pound of apples. Boil them till soft in a saucepan, with half a cupful of water. Add an ounce of sugar and half an ounce of butter and beat them up.

Light and Fluffy Potatoes.

After the potatoes have been mashed and the milk added, add a pinch of baking powder and beat it with an egg-beater. You will find that this will make them light and fluffy.

To Keep Brooms.

Soaking a broom in hot water before using for the first time will make the bristles stronger and add many months to their life.

Druggists Know Best Medicine for Kidney Troubles

During the twenty-five years that I have been selling Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root I have never heard a complaint, as my customers always speak favorably regarding it. Three parties have informed me that they have been restored to health by the use of Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root after suffering from Rheumatism, Liver trouble and Gravel. It is a pleasure to me to sell Swamp-Root as I believe it is the best medicine on the market for kidney, liver and bladder complaints.

Very truly yours,
ED. ROETHLEIN, Druggist,
1104 12th St., Cor. Monroe,
Lynchburg, Va.

Personally appeared before me this 1st day of November, 1915, Ed. Roethlein, who subscribed the above statement and made oath that the same is true in substance and in fact.

W. E. HAWKS,
Notary Public.

Prove What Swamp-Root Will Do For You

Send ten cents to Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y., for a sample size bottle. It will convince anyone. You will also receive a booklet of valuable information, telling about the kidneys and bladder. When writing, be sure and mention this paper. Regular fifty-cent and one-dollar size bottles for sale at all drug stores.—Adv.

Plenty.

"Did you go in for oratory when you were at college?"

"Not much, but I've been let in for a lot of it since I got married."

Her "Dot."

Mrs. Youngwedd (a doctor's daughter)—Did papa say he would do anything for you?

Youngwedd—Yes; he said he would operate upon me at any time free of charge.—Pickings.

His Bluff Called.

Bluffman—I owe you ten dollars, old chap—can you change a fifty-dollar bill?

Banks—Certainly!

Bluffman—Ah—er-since you're so flush, I guess I won't pay you till next week.—Boston Evening Transcript.

Wash day is smile day if you use Red Cross Ball Blue, American made, therefore the best made. Adv.

Its Meanness.

"I don't wonder they give fate a woman's sex, for she's so mean to other women."

"How so?"

"Here it's leap year, and in half the world all the men are off to the war where the women can't get at them to propose."

Browning's Peculiar Eyes.

Browning's eyes were peculiar, one having a long focus, the other very short. He had the unusual accomplishment (try it and prove) of closing either eye without squinting and without any apparent effort, though sometimes on the street in strong sunshine his face would be a bit distorted. He did all his reading and writing with one eye, closing the long one as he sat down at his desk. He could see an immense distance. He never suffered with any pain in his eyes except once when as a boy he was trying to be a vegetarian in imitation of his youthful idol Shelley.—Boston Transcript.

Confidence.

Why does this country tend always to belittle its wealth, its works, its men and its power to meet calamity? It does, and yet we are thought to be a people unembarrassed by modesty. Yankee boastfulness is a proverb in the world, but no Yankee ever told quite all the truth. He never dared, and, besides, he could not make himself believe the whole length and depth and breadth of it. Distrusting their own judgment, the American people lack confidence in their great estate. Their temperament is rich in daring, faith and optimism, but poor in confidence, which is a quality that comes with time. A young people perhaps should not have it. It is not good to have everything.—New York Times.

In this Matter of Health

one is either with the winners or with the losers.

It's largely a question of right eating—right food. For sound health one must cut out rich, indigestible foods and choose those that are known to contain the elements that build sturdy bodies and keen brains.

Grape-Nuts

is a wonderfully balanced food, made from whole wheat and barley. It contains all the nutriment of the grain, including the mineral phosphates, indispensable in Nature's plan for body and brain rebuilding.

Grape-Nuts is a concentrated food, easy to digest. It is economical, has delicious flavor, comes ready to eat, and has helped thousands in the winning class.

"There's a Reason"

JUNE

L.908

WOMAN AVOIDS OPERATION

Medicine Which Made Surgeon's Work Unnecessary.

Astoria, N. Y. — "For two years I was feeling ill and took all kinds of tonics. I was getting worse every day. I had chills, my head would ache, I was always tired. I could not walk straight because of the pain in my back and I had pains in my stomach. I went to a doctor and he said I must go under an operation, but I did not go. I read in the paper about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and told my husband about it. I said 'I know nothing will help me but I will try this.' I found myself improving from the very first bottle, and in two weeks time I was able to sit down and eat a hearty breakfast with my husband, which I had not done for two years. I am now in the best of health and did not have the operation." — Mrs. JOHN A. KOENIG, 502 Flushing Avenue, Astoria, N. Y.

Every one dreads the surgeon's knife and the operating table. Sometimes nothing else will do; but many times doctors say they are necessary when they are not. Letter after letter comes to the Pinkham Laboratory, telling how operations were advised and were not performed; or, if performed, did no good, but Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound was used and good health followed.

If you want advice write to Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co. (confidential), Lynn, Mass.

PARKER'S HAIR BALSAM
A toilet preparation of merit.
Helps to eradicate dandruff.
For Restoring Color and Beauty to Gray or Faded Hair.
50c. and $1.00 at Druggists.

FOR ACUTE ACHES OF THE FEET

Sprinkle one or two Allen's Foot-Ease powders in the Foot Bath and soak and rub the feet. It takes the sting out of Corns and Bunions and smarting, aching feet. Then for lasting comfort, shake Allen's Foot-Ease into your shoes. All dealers sell it, 25c. Sample package FREE. Address, Allen S. Olmsted, Le Roy, N. Y.

Every Woman Wants

Paxtine

ANTISEPTIC POWDER

FOR PERSONAL HYGIENE

Dissolved in water for douches stops pelvic catarrh, ulceration and inflammation. Recommended by Lydia E. Pinkham Med. Co. for ten years. A healing wonder for nasal catarrh, sore throat and sore eyes. Economical. Has extraordinary cleansing and germicidal power. Sample Free. 50c. all druggists, or postpaid by mail. The Paxton Toilet Company, Boston, Mass.

Of a Fighting Race.

"What's the matter with Dubwaite? He looks as if someone had given him a terrible thrashing."

"Poor Dubwaite made the mistake of trying to pick on a man who wore a wrist watch and a soft collar."

"Well! Well!"

"Yes! Well!"

"Yes. Dubwaite called him 'Elizabeth,' but soon found out that his right name was 'Mike.'"

HEAL YOUR SKIN TROUBLES

With Cuticura, the Quick, Sure and Easy Way. Trial Free

Bathe with Cuticura Soap, dry and apply the Ointment. They stop itching instantly, clear away pimples, blackheads, redness and roughness, remove dandruff and scalp irritation, heal red, rough and sore hands as well as most baby skin troubles.

Free sample each by mail with Book. Address postcard, Cuticura, Dept. L, Boston. Sold everywhere.—Adv.

The Proof.

"Some people believe the world is growing honest."

"They must be hearing something about the conscience fund paying off the national debt."

Red Cross Ball Blue, made in America, therefore the best, delights the housewife. All good grocers. Adv.

So Paw Says.

Little Lemuel—Say, paw, what would you call a wealthy neighborhood?

Paw—One in which every family patronizes the iceman, my son.

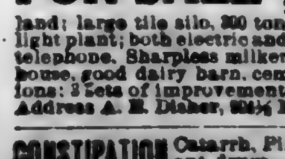
THE HIGH QUALITY SEWING MACHINE

NEW HOME

NOT SOLD UNDER ANY OTHER NAME

Write for free booklet "Points to be considered before purchasing a Sewing Machine." Learn the facts.

THE NEW HOME SEWING MACHINE CO., ORANGE, MASS.



Kill All Flies! They Spread Disease

Placed anywhere, Daisy Fly Killer attracts and kills all flies. Neat, clean, ornamental, convenient, and cheap. Lasts all season. Made of metal, can't spill or tip over; will not soil or injure anything. Guaranteed effective. Ask for

Daisy Fly Killer

Sold by dealers, or 6 sent by express, prepaid, $1.00.

HAROLD SOMERS, 150 DeKalb Ave., Brooklyn, N. Y.

FOR SALE One of the finest farms in the country, 220 acres, 200 level black bottom land; large tile silo, 200 ton capacity; own electric light plant; both electric and gasoline power; private telephone. Sharpless milkers installed, 7 room dairy house, good dairy barn, cemented and steel stanchions; 2 sets of improvements; 3 miles of Richmond. Address A. E. Disher, 804½ Main St., Richmond, Ind.

CONSTIPATION Catarrh, Piles? Relieve them without drugs. Cured my constipation (had it 18 years) with a pleasant drugless method. Particulars free. JOS. HARRIS, 4025 B. 4th, Philadelphia, Pa.

PATENTS Watson E. Coleman, Washington, D.C. Books free. High est references. Best results.

PROMOTE carnivals without licenses. Charge $5.00, $10.00 for privileges. Make your own novelties. He tells you. Spieler. 301 W. 56, N. Y.

AGRICULTURE THE MAINSTAY

Indiana Soil Peculiarly Adapted to the Raising of Great Variety of Crops—Of the State's Total Area of 23,068,800 Acres, 21,542,963 Acres Are in Farms.

MOST IMPORTANT INDUSTRY OF STATE

By ELLIS SEARLES

In the celebration of its one hundredth birthday in 1916, the state of Indiana will show to the world that it is one of the leading agricultural states of the Union. In fact, agriculture has always been the mainstay of Indiana, and it is quite likely that it will forever remain the most important industry of the state. Indiana soil is peculiarly adapted to the raising of a variety of crops. Nearly everything is grown in Indiana that can be produced anywhere in the northern half of the United States. It ranks high in its yield and quality of wheat, corn and other standard crops. It produces a vast amount of fruit. Tobacco is a staple crop in the southern counties. Vegetables of all kinds are produced in the state, which is dotted with canning factories that put the products on the market.

Although Indiana was not admitted into the Union until 1816, the Centennial History and Handbook of Indiana, published by Max R. Hyman, Indianapolis, says that as far back as 1809, when agriculture was in a primitive stage, crops few and farms rude, with farming the hope of the state, the first agricultural society, "The Vincennes Society for the Encouragement of Agriculture and the Useful Arts," was formed. It was the forerunner of the state board of agriculture. In its first year this society distributed $400 in premiums for agricultural products. By 1840 the number of persons engaged in agriculture was 148,806. Agricultural methods were still crude. The wooden mold-board plow and the wooden tooth harrow were in use. Grain was reaped with a sickle. Threshing was done with a flail or by tramping of horses. Hay was cut with a scythe.

Some Crop Statistics.

In 1839 the total crop of corn was 28,155,887 bushels. Oats followed with 5,981,605 bushels, and wheat came next with 4,049,375 bushels, Laporte county being the heaviest wheat producing county.

Compare these figures with those for the year 1914, the latest available figures, and one can begin to realize how agriculture has grown and developed in Indiana. In 1914 the acreage and total yield of the more important crops were as follows:

Crop.	Acres.	Bushels.
Wheat	2,292,735	38,450,121
Corn	4,661,021	184,191,468
Oats	1,671,983	43,113,792
Potatoes	82,749	4,489,961
Fruit (all kinds)	24,845	1,046,495

In the same year 11,209 acres produced 11,197,466 pounds of tobacco. A total acreage of 1,957,665 produced 1,883,356 tons of hay.

The approximate total area of Indiana is 23,068,800 acres, and 21,542,963 acres are in farms. This makes the average farm a little below 100 acres. In the average value of farm lands, according to the Centennial History Handbook of Indiana, Illinois comes first with an average of $95.02 per acre, Iowa follows with $82.58 and Indiana comes third with $62.36. The total valuation of farm lands with all improvements, implements and live stock, was approximately $1,350,000,000.

Not only in agriculture but also in live stock is the state of Indiana great. Figures compiled for 1914 show the number of head and the selling value of live stock to be as follows:

Kind.	Number of Head.	Selling Value.
Horses and colts sold	99,094	$11,567,587
Horses and colts on hand	716,638	72,270,288
Mules sold	29,297	3,223,213
Mules on hand	90,889	9,904,234
Cattle on hand	1,295,300	41,880,873
Cattle sold	489,841	21,040,065
Cattle died of disease	23,017	656,446
Hogs on hand	2,435,613	18,068,940
Hogs sold	3,247,328	41,384,610
Hogs died of disease	352,084	2,377,344
Sheep on hand	423,706	1,969,881
Sheep sold	413,656	2,051,709
Sheep died of disease	22,206	96,536

The wool clip amounted to 2,579,351 pounds, valued at $569,575.

A total of 671,001 dozen of all kinds of poultry was sold in the state in 1914, valued at $3,614,204. There were 888,755 dozen laying hens, and they laid the enormous total of 73,881,964 dozen eggs, valued at $14,809,886.

A total of 593,113 milch cows, worth $27,870,357, gave 256,020,859 gallons of milk, worth $29,488,405. This does not include 28,380,996 pounds of cream, worth $7,387,993. There was produced in the same year 36,875,247 pounds of butter, worth $8,531,952.

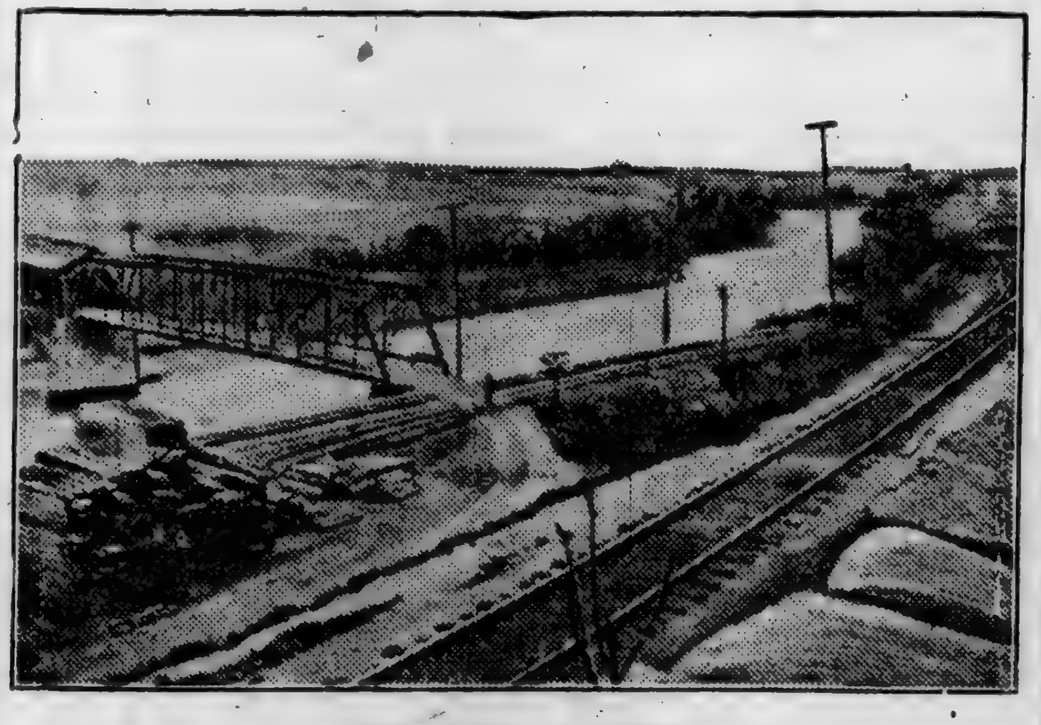
County Fairs Started.

With the growth and development of agriculture in Indiana county fairs were organized all over the state, and the present state board of agriculture was organized in 1852, and has been holding state fairs ever since. The state and county fairs offer many thousands of dollars in prizes and premiums and they have been a very great factor in the encouragement of better agriculture and better live stock.

The legislature of 1889 enacted a law providing for the holding of farmers' institutes in all of the counties to give farmers and others interested in agriculture instructions in agriculture, horticulture, agricultural chemistry and economic entomology. These institutes continue to be a valuable educating and organizing influence among the farmers.

In recent years, however, there has been a shrinkage in the rural population. From 1900 to 1910 there was a sheer loss of 96,732. Much of this was due to drifting from farms to the cities, and to moving to other localities in search of cheaper land. However, more recently there has been a decided "back to the farm" movement in Indiana, due largely to the advent of interurbans and the coming of the automobile as a means of rapid transit.

"Within the easy memory of middle-aged men there has been a marked change in the status of the average, representative farmer," says the Centennial History and Handbook of Indiana. "Not only is the uncouth backwoodsman of whom Eggleston wrote extinct, but the rustic Hoosier whom Riley pictures in his earlier days is, to say the least, vastly modified. Various educational influences—a universal free school system, the ubiquitous newspaper and farm paper and other cheap periodicals, farmers institutes, granges, clubs and other organizations—in fact, influences too numerous to easily trace, have done their work to a degree that is very noticeable to any first-hand observer. The literary copyist who today goes nosing in obscure places in search of the time-honored 'Hoosier characters' is somewhat amusing as a man behind the times who does not yet realize that the present type, while retaining all the old-time shrewdness, humor, raciness and fellowship, has developed new qualities that present a new field for the character delineator. The typical farmer of today is well informed and in intelligent touch with the wider affairs of the world. He is coming to be a conscious part of the great social movement. Financially, he thrives better than he once did, and he lives better. The 'modern' house in the country is not uncommon; the rural-telephone service is all but universal; more automobiles, it is said, are sold to farmers than to any other class. The spread of the interurban service has also been a great modifying factor in rural life in promoting a freer touch with urban life, and the social differences between city and country people are becoming obliterated."



White River at Gosport.

Coal in Indiana.

Coal is the most valuable of the natural resources of Indiana. Coal was first mentioned in this territory in 1763. The first surveyors in 1804 discovered and made note of it. Robert Fulton, who brought his steamboat, the Orleans, down the Ohio river in 1812, found and dug coal at Cannelton. The American Cannel Coal company was chartered in 1837, the first coal company in Indiana. It was located at Cannelton. The first shaft was sunk by John Hutchinson east of Newburg, on the Ohio river, in 1850. Coal was discovered in Clay county in 1851. The total Indiana coal area is estimated at 37,500 square miles in the west and southwest portions. It is estimated to contain 40,000,000,000 tons of coal, enough to last 300 years. The annual output is about 18,000,000 tons and 21,000 persons are employed in the coal industry. Cannel, bituminous and block coal are the kinds mined in Indiana.

Natural gas was discovered in 1886 at Portland, and later it was found in great quantities in various parts of the state. The introduction of natural gas for fuel brought an industrial boom to Indiana that continued for several years, until, through criminal waste, the people deliberately destroyed the supply. Ten million feet a day was wasted in 1889 from uncapped wells. Steel, iron, tin and glass factories sprang up in many places, and Indiana enjoyed unprecedented prosperity. But natural gas has all but disappeared. Numerous former natural gas towns now pipe natural gas from West Virginia.

Building stone, quarried in immense quantities in Lawrence, Monroe and adjacent counties, is another important natural resource. This is the celebrated Bedford stone, used more extensively in the erection of public and other buildings than any other stone in America. The cities of Bedford and Bloomington are "stone cities."

A hard limestone, known as "Niagara," is quarried in Decatur and Franklin counties, for building and bridge purposes.

The manufacture of commercial lime from certain kinds of limestone is another important industry, especially in a few counties. Huntington county is a lime manufacturing center.

Winona College of Agriculture.

Some Other Industries.

Building and paving bricks, clay pipes, tile and other clay products are made from the excellent clays of the state. In 1910 there were 31 pottery, terra-cotta and fire-clay manufactories in the state, employing 2,373 persons and producing products worth $2,965,768.

Sand for the manufacture of glass is another important Indiana natural resource. The best loose sand is found on the shores of Lake Michigan, the dune or hill being practically limitless in quantity.

The manufacture of Portland cement in Indiana has grown wonderfully in the last 15 years. In 1910 the output was valued at $7,022,000. Portland cement was first made at South Bend in 1877. The largest factory is at Mitchell, using limestone with knobstone shale as clay. The largest marl factory is at Syracuse, Kosciusko county.

Iron ore has been found in 32 counties in the state, but it could not compete in quality with ores from other fields. The first plant for smelting Indiana iron ore was erected at Mishawaka in 1834. It long since went out of business.

Peat for fuel "briquettes," mineral paint rocks and clays, medicinal waters, and here and there gold and diamonds are other natural resources that have added to the wealth of Indiana. Gold and diamonds, however, are scarce, and the commercial value has been small. But what the next one hundred years of her life may bring forth for Indiana along that line remains to be seen.

Aeroplanes After the War.

When the war is over, the wings of the wind will have been harnessed so effectively that a splendid profit will be written on the balance sheet of peace. The air dreadnaughts of the day are the prototypes of the aeroplane de luxe of the morrow; the winged wains that carry a ton of explosives will be commandeered by commerce; and the safety devices that stand the gaff of shot and shell will find no very great test in the trade winds of the world, Meryle Crowell writes in the American Magazine.

The highways of the sky know no barriers and no frontiers. Besides being lord of its own element, the new aeroplane, driving through space at 100 miles an hour, will outdistance the fastest ship, and leave in a dilatory smudge of the horizon the smoke of the speediest railway train.

The sky is a universal roadway that never needs repair. Spanning continents and bridging seas, hurdling cities, forests and the waste spaces of the world, the aeroplane, made safe, sound and speedy at the demands of war, will be trained to the minute for the greater service of peace and humanity.

The Worm's Turn.

Billy Sunday gave a backhanded slap at war during a recent Trenton address.

"There are actually fools," he said, "who tell you that war may be a blessing, but even those fools have to admit that it is a blessing in disguise.

"The men who crack up war are the ones who don't have to do any of the fighting. These men really are no fonder of war in their hearts, for all their praise of it, than poor old Peck was fond of his wife.

"'It says here,' said poor old Peck, looking up from the evening paper, 'that our blessings come to us in disguise. Mother, when are you going to unmask?'"

Difference Is In-tense.

Gyer—I'm going to spend my vacation in the Michigan woods this summer.

Myer—Is there much to see up there?

Gyer—No, but there's a lot to saw.

Necessary.

"So you've bought a car at last. I knew you'd come to it sooner or later."

"It wasn't because I wanted it. You see, our cook married a chauffeur, and the only way we could keep from losing her was to give him a job also."

The Effects of Opiates.

THAT INFANTS are peculiarly susceptible to opium and its various preparations, all of which are narcotic, is well known. Even in the smallest doses, if continued, these opiates cause changes in the functions and growth of the cells which are likely to become permanent, causing imbecility, mental perversion, a craving for alcohol or narcotics in later life. Nervous diseases, such as intractable nervous dyspepsia and lack of staying powers are a result of dosing with opiates or narcotics to keep children quiet in their infancy. The rule among physicians is that children should never receive opiates in the smallest doses for more than a day at a time, and only then if unavoidable.

The administration of Anodynes, Drops, Cordials, Soothing Syrups and other narcotics to children by any but a physician cannot be too strongly decried, and the druggist should not be a party to it. Children who are ill need the attention of a physician, and it is nothing less than a crime to dose them willfully with narcotics.

Castoria contains no narcotics if it bears the signature of Chas. H. Fletcher.

Genuine Castoria always bears the signature of Chas. H. Fletcher.

Oh, Mar!

"Have you read the Rubaiyat?"

"Not yet."

"Health is the condition of wisdom and the sign of cheerfulness—an open and noble temper."—Emerson.

There is a limit to everyone's capability, but few have reached their limit.

The orange tree is the only one which bears fruit and blossoms at the same time.

It's a Picnic Getting Ready for a Picnic

If you choose

Spanish Olives Pickles Sweet Relish Ham Loaf Veal Loaf
Chicken Loaf Fruit Preserves Jellies Apple Butter
Luncheon Meats Pork and Beans

Libby's Ready to Serve Food Products

Insist on Libby's at your grocer's

Libby, McNeill & Libby
Chicago

NEVER TO BE FORGOTTEN

Chauffeur Had Overlooked a Matter That Really Was of the Gravest Importance.

As he buttoned up his overcoat before setting off on a motor tour, Jones asked his chauffeur a few questions.

"Car all ready? Have you put the spare inner tubes in the tonneau?"

"Yessir."

"Are the repair tools in the box, and plenty of petrol in the tank?"

"Yessir," replied the man again, patiently.

"Oiled it thoroughly?"

"Yessir." And this time he reeled off a list of places to which he had applied the oil can.

The motorist's face grew black when he finished.

"Why, you fool," he broke in, "you have forgotten the most important place of all!"

The chauffeur stared at him in surprise.

"You've forgotten the number plate at the back," snapped Jones. "Take the can and squirt some oil on it. Then the dust will stick to it. Never forget to oil the number plate!"

'Twas Better Thus.

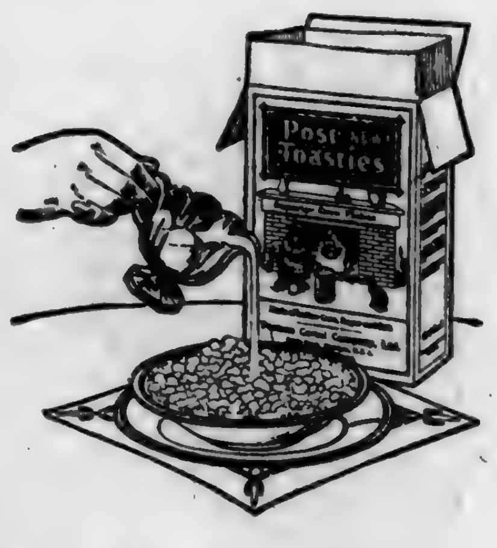
From his couch a deaf mute arose 'tis quite true, and stepped on a tack in the dark; and perhaps it is well the world never knew, of his silent but awful remark.

United States Ahead Again.

While many of the most important electro-chemical and electro-metallurgical industries are of American origin, and [illegible] been developed chiefly in connection with the Niagara Falls power development, electric steel refining started originally in Europe, but at an early date all the noteworthy European electric steel furnaces were introduced into this country, and the work of the American steel man has left its mark on electric steel furnace designs, says the Electrical World. During the last year the increase in the number of American electric steel furnaces was 78 per cent, and as a result the United States is now leading all the countries in the world in the number of electric steel furnaces, while Germany held the leading place up to last year. On January 1, 1916, the United States had 73 electric steel furnaces in operation or under construction, compared with 53 in Germany and 46 in England.

New Woods for Print Paper.

Exhaustive tests show that 11 new woods—that is, woods not hitherto used for this purpose—give promise of being suitable for the production of news print paper in this country. White and red fir are the most prominent species in the national forests in California, although lodgepole and western yellow pine and Douglas fir may sometimes be used, declare the government scientists.



They Stand Up—

Unlike common corn flakes, the New Post Toasties don't mush down when milk or cream is added.

And they have a charming new flavour—delicious, different, the true essence of the corn—not found in corn flakes heretofore.

The intense heat of the new process of manufacture raises tiny bubbles on each delicious brown flake and these little puffs are the identifying feature.

These new flakes are firmer, crisper, and don't crumble in the package—in comparison, ordinary corn flakes are as "chaff."

Your grocer can send you a package of

New Post Toasties

JUNE

L 908

0202

The St. Joe News

Fred B. Leighty, Editor
Mrs. Jora Leighty, Associate

One Year, - - - $1.00
Six Months, - - - .50
Three Months, - - - .25

Entered at the postoffice at St. Joe, Indiana, as second class matter.

INDIANA ASSOCIATED WEEKLIES

Coburn's Corners

Mrs. Ross Abel was an Auburn visitor, Saturday.

Schloss' of Auburn are showing a fine line of Summer Dress Materials.

Frank Bachtol, wife and baby were week end guests of Lee Wilmot and wife at Garrett.

J. E. Killian and wife, of Hicksville, and Clark Parsons and wife, of Pittsburgh, Penn., were Monday afternoon guests of Saxe Hadsell and family.

Miss Violet Dermott had a birthday party on Friday afternoon of last week, and seven little girls had a glorious good time. Miss Violet is 7 years of age.

Saxe Hadsell, wife and children spent a short time Sunday with Mrs. Hadsell's sister, Mrs. Ray Gustin and family, near Scipio Center. They also called on Mr Hadsell's mother at Hicksville.

Sam Snyder and family, of Logansport, spent Saturday with his sister, Mrs. P. A. Walker and family. Sunday morning, Mr Snyder and family together with P. A. Walker and wife went to Springfield Center to visit their parents, Geo. Snyder and wife.

There was a Chautauqua Committee Meeting at the Dell Coburn home Sunday afternoon, Mr. Coburn being vice-president. Those who attended this meeting were:—Al Gengnagle and wife, Guy Platter and wife, H. B. Weaner and and wife, Lewis Palmer and wife, Ben Keller and wife, and Mr. Rymol and wife. Mrs. John Coburn took several pictures of the visitors at the Coburn home during the day.

Mrs. Carl Hadsell, son Carlton, and daughter Geraldine, of Fort Wayne, were guests part of the days Wednesday and Thursday of Saxe Hadsell and wife. Thursday afternoon, Mrs. S Hadsell and children accompanied them to the home of Chas. Jackson and wife, near Hicksville, where they (Mrs Saxe Hadsell and children) spent the rest of the day.

Dell Coburn and wife entertained at dinner Sunday:—the Misses Aleen and Lucile Rhoads, and Mae Burlingame, and the Messrs Darwin Frye, Faye Wilmot and George Wade. Those who called in the afternoon were the Misses Mae Shumaker, Gladys Place, Helen Freece and Lena Kelley, Mrs. Ruby Coburn, Mrs. Josephine Coburn, Messrs. Alva Place, Mervin Place, Dewey Beaber, Willie Quance, Virgil Perry, Walter Coburn, Walter and Lester Gillen, Chas. Benjamin, wife and two sons, Lawrence and Charles. Miss Audrey Coburn was home from her school work at Angola, and also Lloyd Coburn from his work at Hicksville. The gathering was in honor of Estel Coburn, who leaves soon with the Ohio State Militia for Columbus and perhaps for the Mexican Border. Alva Perry and daughter Ruth were also guests at the Coburn home.

A Friend in Need.

When Glando Gargle is used for a cold in the head it is surprising to see how quickly the clogged nostrils are opened. Adenoids are caused by a neglected cold. If the mucus which forms is allowed to remain in the nostrils, a diseased condition will result, which causes chronic catarrh and adenoids. Glando Gargle was prepared to meet these special needs. Equally effective for sore mouth or sore throat. Price 50 cents. For sale by All Druggists.

Ready for the Fourth.

The Bomb is all ready placed and will be exploded without delay. Two performances daily, rain or shine, afternoon and evening, at St. Joe, July 4tn. The Firemen's Celebration will open in full blast at 1:30 p. m., with a parade followed by a Ball Game at the High School grounds. After this the different races as advertised will be pulled off. After supper will be the Auto parade at 7 o'clock followed by fantastic parade. All races are open for participants, see Jack Sechler for entrance. Free lemonade will be served to all. Lay aside your work for a half day and come to St. Joe and enjoy the hospitality of the Fire Boys—They will take care of you.

Mrs. Milo Walker and son Johnnie, called on T. H. Shulls', Friday evening.

Mrs. Melvina Alton, of Nebraska, is here on an extended visit with relatives and friends.

Miss Ruby Coburn, of Hesperia, Mich., is visiting her sister, Mrs. Fred Hart, and other relatives.

J. M. Dermott and wife went to Elkhart, Monday, to visit friends. From there Mr. Dermott will go to South Bend on business.

R. F. Place and family entertained to dinner, Sunday:—Avery Gingery, wife and son Howard, of Milford Tp. Ruby Coburn, Violet and Leatha Dermott, J. M. Dermott and wife, and O. L. Dermott, wife and son Howard, were afternoon callers.

Wm. Gillen, wife and daughter and lady friends, of Paulding, O.; Mrs. John Gillen and two sons, and Cal Auspach and wife, of Payne, O.; Dusta Baker and wife, and Mrs. Mary McConnall, of Ft. Wayne, were the guests of Moris Lothamer and family, Sunday.

Follow the Directions

On each sack of Daily Bread Flour you will find directions for Baking Bread, follow the directions and you will have a much finer and tastier Loaf of Bread than any Spring Wheat ever baked. Indiana made flour is considered Far Superior to any flour on the market, it is sold by all dealers on a Positive Guarantee at 75c for 1-8 bbl or $5.60 full bbl or on exchange at the Mill at 35 per bu including 12 pounds of feed thus a saving of over $1.00 a bbl.

St. Joe Mills.

COLETOWN

Mamie Craig, of Newville, spent part of last week with W. E. Jacksons'.

Bert McCauley, of Colorado, and Nettie Conley, of Hicksville; spent from Monday until Wednesday night with Alvin Walker and family.

Frank Pierman and wife, and Clara Hartle of Hicksville, and Lester Pierman and family Sundayed at E S. Ginthers'.

Emmerson Fouts and wife, of Uhrichsville, Ohio; A. E. Hart and family, and Martha Andress, of Hicksville, spent Thursday at Wm Sowers'.

Elton Brown and wife, and Frank Brown and wife called on Henry Kling and wife, Sunday evening.

Irving Ginther, Paul Furnish, Mamie Craig and Olive Jackson motored to Robison Park, Sunday afternoon.

Henry Kling, wife and daughter Lillian called on Alvin Walker and family, Sunday afternoon.

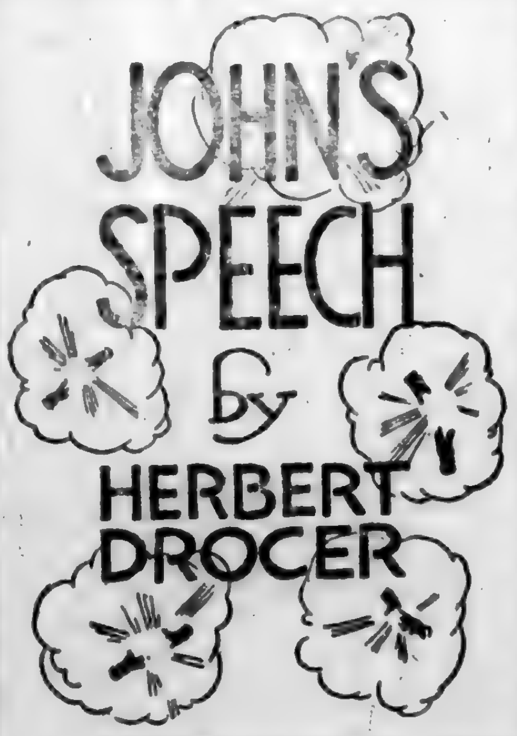
Mrs. W. E. Jackson and daughter Olive, spent Tuesday with Mrs Hulda Boultons'.

Notice.

The Post Office will observe Independence Day by closing at the following hours:

CLOSED
11:00 a. m., to 5:30 p. m.
Rural delivery suspended.

ELGIN CURIE, P. M.



JOHN'S SPEECH

By HERBERT DROCER

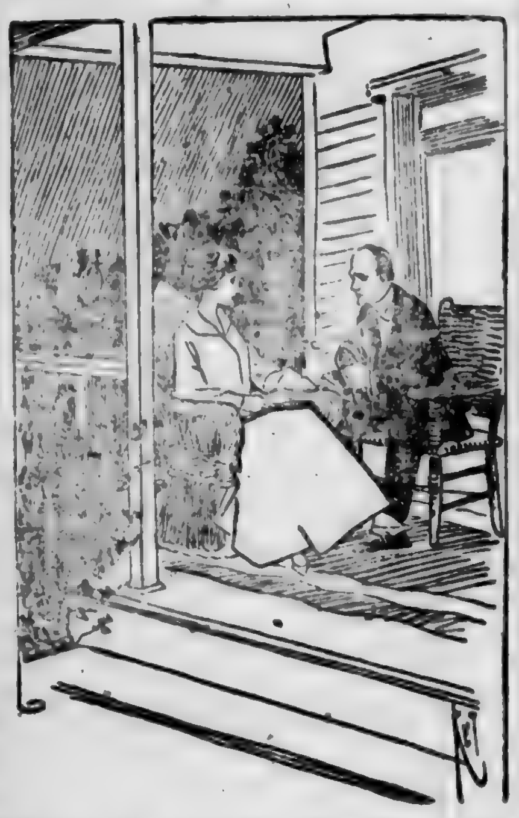
ANYTHING between the ridiculous and the sublime probably would have left John Moran with a very uncertain appreciation of the Fourth of July celebration. Neither the one nor the other, in his opinion, could have been very fruitful of results.

Of the two extremes, the sublime had been deliberately planned; it was premeditated. The ridiculous wasn't.

The former was the result of a clever scheme and weeks of hard work. The latter was the chance of a minute, unforeseen, unexpected, and, some might have said on the spot, unpropitious.

For several years John Moran had wooed Susan Duvau, but so far he seemed to himself no nearer the matrimonial goal than he had been at the beginning. All her people had been assisting him without apparent avail.

He had pleaded with her; he had coaxed and cajoled and even essayed to coerce after a mild fashion, his threats reaching that superlative proportion where he promised to identify himself for life with the sublime order of bachelorhood.



"Show Me that You Can Rise to the Occasion."

But to all this she merely cast down her eyes demurely and asked him to wait awhile.

A score and one-half years had come and gone around the life of Susan. As her 31st birthday approached John, who had schemed until his hair was beginning to fall out, decided on a bold stroke.

That night he sat with her on the front porch, after the family had retired. Over them a dim light shining from the parlor window cast a pale glow. John sat quietly waiting for the silence he depended on for the furtherance of his plan.

After awhile it came, and then, when the stillness had locked the night in its embrace, he began to hum, "Silver Threads Among the Gold." When he had ceased, tears stood in his eyes.

He drew his chair closer to hers, reached out for her hand again and asked her to become his wife. But it was the same old prosaic answer.

"Wait awhile, John," she insisted. "Wait awhile. Do something grand. Show me that you can rise to the occasion."

Rise to the occasion, he would. He resolved that firmly as he stood up forthwith and bade her good-night. He resolved it all the way home. The next morning he still resolved it. But how?

A happy thought struck him. John had a penchant for happy thoughts. He would make a speech at a Fourth of July celebration. It would be so grand and so eloquent, couched in such rich expressions and so laden with noble sentiment that she could not help but feel the appeal. He would show her that he could "rise to the occasion."

John got out his old school dictionary and brushed the dust from its covers. Then he borrowed an immense volume of masterpiece orations from a friend and read every speech he could find that contained any patriotic reference or expression.

For four weeks he labored almost incessantly, night and day, on his effusion, and finally he had it completed.

An obstacle that John had not reckoned on now loomed up. John was a member of the program committee, and he doubted the propriety of having himself included among the list of speakers.

The morning before the celebration he called around to see the chairman of the committee.

"You see—ahem!—Mr. Grubbs," John began, "being one of the committee, I should regret to see any part of the program fall flat."

"Just so," answered the chairman. "I feel the same way."

"Well, as a matter of precaution, Mr. Grubbs, I think I shall prepare a few remarks myself today. Should any of the speakers be tardy, or fail to respond, you might call on me."

"Fine idea, John. I'll do it."

Then John took himself around to the residence of Squire Sloan. He knocked at the door and was admitted.

"Ahem, Squire," began John, after an inquiry concerning his host's health, "we are altering the program for tomorrow slightly."

"So?"

"Yes. You see, on account of your advanced years and the fact that you have been ailing, we thought it might suit you better to speak, say, at 11:30 than at 11 o'clock."

"I believe it would," answered the old man.

About 11 o'clock the next morning Chairman Grubbs scanned the gathering in vain for a glimpse of Squire Sloan. Then he stood up and announced:

"Though not appearing on the program, the Hon. John Moran has been requested to make a few remarks. It is not necessary that I introduce our esteemed fellow-citizen."

As John approached the edge of the platform he looked down into the face of Susan and made a mental note of the surprise expressed in her countenance. He paused a moment, as if improvising a speech, while he chuckled inwardly at the satisfaction the occasion afforded.

And rise to the occasion he undoubtedly did. His was the most eloquent, the most logical and the most impressive speech delivered that day. As he concluded he was greeted by a loud and prolonged applause.

He stepped down from the platform and made his way toward Susan. As he approached, he observed a twinkle in her eyes, but did not trouble himself with an explanation just then. He was too happy.

She arose and took hold of his arm. "Let us go off to some place where we can sit alone," she said.

They made their way toward the outskirts of the crowd. When they had reached a point where they could speak without being overheard, he turned to her questioningly.

"Well," he said. "Did I—"

"You certainly did, John," she interrupted. "Who would have thought it?"

The sublime had been attained.

"Who wrote it for you, John?" she asked.

"Wrote it?" in hurt surprise. "Why nobody."

They walked along in silence.

"How long did it take you to prepare it, John?"

He did not answer.

"Yes, you certainly did rise to the occasion, John. Now, you want to be careful not to fall, lest—"

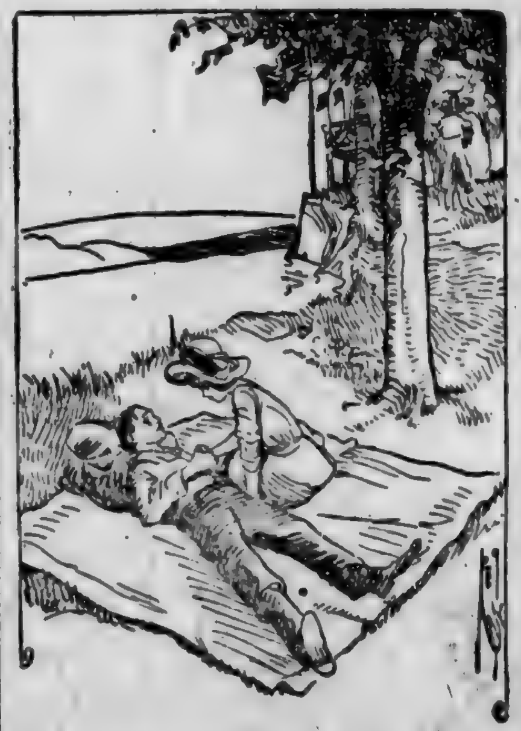
Fate would have it that he fell that instant. Twitted and stung by her raillery, he had been walking perilously near the edge of the high dirt bank that overhung the creek, without thought of danger.

As she spoke, the ground beneath his feet gave way, and he went tumbling through the dirt and sand into eight feet of water below.

Susan shrieked, and the crowd, alarmed by her cry, began to rush to the spot. As the gathering in front of the speakers' stand broke away in large groups, the chairman arose and asked the cause of the commotion. He was answered by a little urchin, who stood up in the seat of a farm wagon.

"Why, Jack Moran's fell in the crick," shouted the lad.

John was dragged out at the ford, a short distance down the creek. About his eyes, mouth, nose and ears, and over a part of his clothing, were black splotches of mud.



"Did I Rise?" He Began.

Resuscitating methods were applied, and as he began to revive, the crowd drew back, leaving him stretched out on a soft lap-robe and attended by Susan.

When he opened his eyes she was kneeling by his side and looking down into his face.

"Did I rise—" he began.

"There—there," soothingly. "Yes, you did. Now, lie quiet."

She gently stroked the hair back from his brow. He grasped her hand in his and she suffered him to hold it.

One night, three months later, after the wedding toasts had been proposed and John had made his response, he made a mental observation to himself, as he took his seat.

"I wonder," he reflected, "whether it was my celebration speech or the tumble I got?"

Summer Fares

East

The Wabash is the direct line to Detroit, Buffalo and the East. Low Summer fares in effect:—

Round Trip
$15.70 to Toronto
$13.75 to Buffalo, Niagara Falls
$31.70 to New York
$30.50 to Boston

West

The Wabash and its connection now have new and far faster train service to Colorado, California and the West.

Round Trip

Colorado - -	$36.60
California -	$78.75
Yellowstone -	$51.60
Salt Lake City	$51.60
Portland, Seattle	$79.10

WABASH

Find out about these and other summer fares. See the undersigned Wabash Agent or write to W. H. Shorey, Division Passenger Agent, Fort Wayne, Ind. J. D. MILLIMAN, Agent, St. Joe, Ind. 9-30

Short Notes

Read the Free Column.

Order Saturday Evening Post, 5c.

See Wallace for Building Material at St. Joe Saw Mill.

Glen Freeburn is proprietor of the Meek restaurant, taking charge Tuesday.

Leaf Bailey and wife, of Auburn, were guests of his parents here, Sunday.

Mrs. Emma Woodcox was at Garrett the first of the week the guest of her son, Cad and family.

Ralph Sechler is home from Terre Haute, where he attended school. He will remain home 3 months and then return to finish the Course.

All correspondents will please have copy to us on Saturday or Monday, for next week's issue, due to the Fourth on Tuesday. Please remember this.

Eleven room house on West Main St., for sale or rent. Other well located residence properties and vacant lots for sale on easy terms. S. S. WIDNEY.

Children's Day services were quite plentiful, last Sunday evening. Fairview Church observed the occasion with a splendid program and a full house greeted the children. $5.63 was the collection.

PRESIDENTIAL POINTERS

The address of the president is simply "The President of the United States." In the first congress there was debate over a title and it was proposed by several members that he be addressed as "his excellency" and by others as "his highness," but a committee reported that it is not proper to annex any style or letter other than that expressed in the Constitution.

In the Constitutional convention the first report fixed the term of office at seven years without eligibility to re-election. In debate various periods from "good behavior" to 20 years were favored. The limit to four years was finally adopted in grand committee and ratified by the Constitution.

A Summer Cough.

When a cough continues into warm weather, you can feel sure there is a chronic inflammation, which if neglected will develop into serious lung trouble. The best time to doctor a chronic cough is during the warm weather. An external inflammation always receives prompt attention because the condition can be seen, but an inflamation of the delicate mucus surface of the throat and lungs is much more serious. This condition furnishes fertile soil for the developing of the tubercular germ. Be wise and get rid of that cough before cold weather. GLANDO PINE is especially good for summer coughs. Accept no substitute. Use GLANDO PINE and get results. For sale by All Druggists.

R U Superstitious

Do You Believe In Signs

?

If you do you are a judicious advertiser and a good business man. Judicious advertising Always Pays and especially when you advertise in a paper that is read by everybody in its territory.

This newspaper reaches the eye of everybody who might be a possible buyer in this section.

"TIZ" FOR TIRED SORE, ACHING FEET

Ah! what relief. No more tired feet; no more burning feet, swollen, bad smelling, sweaty feet. No more pain in corns callouses or bunions. No matter what ails your feet or what under the sun you've tried without getting relief, just use "TIZ."

"TIZ" draws out all the poisonous exudations which puff up the feet; "TIZ" is magical; "TIZ" is grand; "TIZ" will cure your foot troubles so you'll never limp or draw up your face in pain. Your shoes won't seem tight and your feet will never, never hurt or get sore, swollen or tired.

Get a 25 cent box at any drug or department store, and get relief

COMB SAGE TEA IN FADED OR GRAY HAIR

If Mixed with Sulphur it Darkens so Naturally Nobody can Tell.

Grandmother kept her hair beautifully darkened, glossy and attractive with a brew of Sage Tea and Sulphur. Whenever her hair took on that dull, faded or streaked appearance, this simple mixture was applied with wonderful effect. By asking at any drug store for "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound," you will get a large bottle of this old-time recipe, improved by the addition of other ingredients, all ready to use, for about 50 cents. This simple mixture can be depended on to restore natural color and beauty to the hair.

A well-known downtown druggist says everybody uses Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound now because it darkens so naturally and evenly that nobody can tell it has been applied—it's so easy to use, too. You simply dampen a comb or soft brush and draw it through your hair, taking one strand at a time. By morning the gray hair disappears; after another application or two, it is restored to its natural color and looks glossy, soft and beautiful. This preparation is a delightful toilet requisite. It is not intended for the cure, mitigation or prevention of disease.

Not a Bite of Breakfast Until You Drink Water

Says a glass of hot water and phosphate prevents illness and keeps us fit.

Just as coal, when it burns, leaves behind a certain amount of incombustible material in the form of ashes, so the food and drink taken day after day leaves in the alimentary canal a certain amount of indigestible material, which if not completly eliminated from the system each day, becomes food for the millions of bacteria which infest the bowels. From this mass of left-over waste, toxins and ptomain-like poisons are formed and sucked into the blood.

Men and women who can't get feeling right must begin to take inside baths. Before eating breakfast each morning drink a glass of real hot water with a teaspoonful of limestone phosphate in it to wash out of the thirty feet of bowels the previous day's accumulation of poisons and toxins and to keep the entire alimentary canal clean, pure and fresh.

Those who are subject to sick headache, colds, biliousness, constipation, others who wake up with bad taste, foul breath, backache, rheumatic stiffness, or have a sour, gassy stomach after meals, are urged to get a quarter pound of limestone phosphate from the drug store, and begin practicing internal sanitation. This will cost very little, but is sufficient to make anyone an enthusiast on the subject.

Remember inside bathing is more important than outside bathing, because the skin pores do not absorb impurities into the blood, causing poor health, while the bowel pores do. Just as soap and hot water cleanses, sweetens and freshens the skin, so hot water and limestone phosphate act on the stomach, liver, kidneys and bowels.

JUNE

L 908

BETTER SERVICE TO YOU.

✻ ✻

We don't want you to think of the Farmers and Merchants State Bank just as a place to deposit your money, although of course we are glad to have you keep as large a balance with us as is possible.

It is our desire to render our patrons every service and accommodation that can reasonably be expected to us.

Our Bookkeeping Machine, makes it possible for us to give you better service in the handling of your account than ever before.

By the machine method, your account is kept in balance all the time. If, as sometimes happens, you want a statement of your balance in a hurry, we can give it to you, including to-days checks and deposits, in less than five minutes.

Farmers & Merchants State Bank

Capital Stock $25,000.00

Spencerville, - - - Indiana

SPENCERVILLE R. F. D. NO. 2

Henry Beery and wife, Harley Beery, wife and two sons, and Lewis Markle and wife were Sunday guests of Martin Beery and wife.

Arthur Clinesmith made a business trip to Ft. Wayne, Saturday.

Jesse and Roy Schuler, of North Baltimore, were last week guests of their sister, Mrs. C. M. Wearley.

Geo. Stiman and wife were Sunday guests of Earl Stiman and wife. In the afternoon they all motored to New Haven and Fort Wayne.

Greatly reduced prices on Shoes and Oxfords. You can't afford to be without, at the prices we are quoting. BEAMS & Co.

Akron Baker, of Hicksville, called on Wm. Miller and wife, Sunday.

Chas. Essley and wife, spent Wednesday with their daughter, Mrs. Lloyd Stevens, of near Auburn.

Elmer Smith, wife and children spent Sunday with Mrs. Smith's mother, of near Auburn.

Mrs. Arthur Steward and children, of Garrett, visited part of last week with Mrs. Ed Billman.

Mrs. Roscoe Walter and mother, Mrs. Cora Steward, called on Minnie Thompson, Saturday.

Joseph Haifley and family, of St. Joe, visited Sunday with Chas. Haifley and wife.

James Monroe, of Garrett, spent Sunday with his sister, Mrs. Geo. Howey.

New spring oxfords for Ladies, Misses and Children—Just in at Beams & Co., store, in patent leather and gun metal.

Mrs. Eva Mills, who has been a patient at the hospital at Wayne, returned home last week. She is not improving as rapidly as expected.

Joel Betz and wife, Walter Perkins, wife and babe, Lee Hollopeter and Joe Zeis and wife were Sunday callers at the home of W. O. Miller and wife.

Miss Frances Webb has resigned her position as telephone girl.

Frank Cook and sister Grace, visited Thursday night with their brother, Homer Cook and wife, of near Hicksville.

Notice

Persons who have bought the Schram Glen Fruit Jars, can get lids for same at Kinsey's.

SPENCERVILLE

A $5 Vacuum and Sweeper for $3.95 at Beams & Co., store.

Mrs. Roscoe Walter, of LaPorte, Ind., is visiting her mother and other relatives.

June Cosmopolitan magazines just arrived at News office. If you want one just phone us.

John Zimmerman and family, of Auburn, and Albert Schlatter and wife were guests of Samuel Cole and wife, Sunday.

Master Harold Vallieu, while working for Leavitt Akey had the misfortune to run a pitch fork in his foot, last week.

Subscriptions taken for new or renewals of any magazine published, at The News office.

R. U. Bowser and family, of this place; Ivan Bowser and family, of Waterloo; Homer Bowser, wife and daughter Isabella, and Miss Mamie Shoaf, of Huntertown, were Sunday guests of Theodore Bowser and family, of near Huntertown.

The Richerson farm, better known as the Braybrook farm, was sold through the agency of John Beninghoff and son, last week, to Mr. Mills of Harlan,

See our window for those $2.00 foot stools that we are giving for 98c and $2.00 in trade.

Beams & Co.

Fred Deventor and wife and Homer Deventor and wife, of near Robison Park, were Sunday guests of Leavett Akey and family.

Mrs. Kate Rummel, Wm. Lucas and wife, of near St. Joe, and P. A. Shurts of St. Joe, were Sunday guests of Samuel Squires and wife, of near Rehobeth.

Aaron Hart and wife, J. S. Hallabaugh and mother, spent Monday at Ft. Wayne.

Val Hay, wife and daughter Ruth, and Ray Baker and wife were Sunday dinner guests of John Goldsmith and wife.

Clarence Steward and wife are visiting the former's mother, Mrs. Nettie Steward and family. Mr. Steward was married recently to Miss Store of Garrett.

Mr. Weirick and grand-daughter, and A. J. Minich and wife, of Liberty Center, Ohio, spent last week at the home of C. N. Saylor and family.

Rev. A. K. Mumma and son David, spent Monday at Hicksville

Mrs. Vern Wilmot and children, Minnie and George, returned home Saturday after a week's visit with relatives of near Garrett.

Rev. J. C. Valentine preached the funeral sermon of John Dove, of Ft. Wayne, at Meese Chapel on Friday afternoon. Mr. Dove was drowned at Dunton lake on Wednesday.

The Misses Vera Silberg and Bertha Thornburg left Tuesday for Colorado where they will attend school.

Rev. J. C. Valentine and Miss Ethel Metcalf attended the Epworth League District Convention at Decatur, Wednesday and Thursday. Miss Metcalf remaining a few days to visit friends at that place.

LET FAME PASS BY

How It Was Richard Henry Lee Did Not Write Declaration of Independence.

"CHERCHEZ la femme." Wherever and whenever man performs a great, noteworthy action the eternal feminine seems sure to have a hand. Even the Declaration of Independence would not have been written as it is or by the hand that penned it but for a woman.

Thomas Jefferson would not have won eternal fame by writing the famous document whereby the colonies declared themselves free and independent of England if there had not "been a woman in it." But for a woman, a man's love, the devotion of two tender hearts, another man would be credited with the Declaration of Independence, and Thomas Jefferson in all probability would be known to posterity only as one of the signers. There was a woman in the case—but not one connected in any romantic way with Jefferson.

Mrs. Richard Henry Lee, wife of a delegate to the Continental congress from Virginia, was the woman. She was no female political intriguer, such as at different times have helped to sway the destiny of nations. She exerted no influence over Jefferson, or over the first congress. She merely became seriously ill in her Virginia home on June 10, 1776, necessitating the presence of her husband, at her bedside, and thus clearing the way for Jefferson to become famous as the creator of the Declaration of Independence. But for Richard Henry Lee's love for his wife, his would be the name to go ringing down through all time in place of that of Thomas Jefferson.

Lee was the man originally selected by the delegates to introduce in congress a resolution declaring the colonies free and independent. He did this on June 7, 1776. Congress, after much deliberation, agreed to the appointment of a committee of five to draft a Declaration of Independence, and Lee, victor in the fight that had raged against his resolution, was to have been made chairman. As such, and qualified in every way, he would have been the one selected to draft the document. In fact, this arrangement had been made and settled—and then, on the night of June 10, on the eve of the triumph of his career, Lee received word that his wife lay seriously ill at home and begged for him to come to her side.

Had Lee been a less devoted husband, he might have wavered. On one hand were the highest political honors, honors that he long had been striving for; on the other, a loving wife. Lee did not hesitate.

"Many other men may be able to take my place in drafting my country's Declaration of Independence," he said, "but no one else in the world can take my place at the side of my sick wife."

He mounted a horse at once, and turned his back on Philadelphia and one of the most significant crises in the world's history. He went straight to where his wife lay waiting for him, and back in Philadelphia Thomas Jefferson was appointed chairman of the committee, and the rest is history.

Buy your next writing tablet and package of envelopes at this office

50 sheets of writing paper and 25 No. 1 rag envelopes for 10 cents at NEWS office

Cal Gump and family, of Huntertown, were Thursday guest of Eck Vanzile and family.

The Children's Day services at the M. E. Church was well attended Sunday evening. An excellent program was rendered. The collection amounted to $6.64.

Russell Davis, John Shutt, Ray Zimmerman and Charles Hull joined the militia, Company E, Second Ohio, last Wednesday, and left on Thursday for Hicksville, where they will remain until called to go to Columbus for training.

On Sunday, June 25, occurred a very pretty, yet informal dinner at the home of Mr. and Mrs. J. Beninghoff. The dinner was given in the honor of their son, William Nelson and wife, formerly Miss Edith Shiffer, of Wayne. The young couple were united in marriage at the bride's home, June 21, after which they left on a four days motor trip to Toledo and Detroit. The house was decorated in pink and white, and a lovely 2-course dinner was served to the following guests:—Mr. and Mrs. A. F. Heyman and daughter Mary Ellen, Mr. and Mrs. G. M. Shiffer and son Maynard, Mrs. Shiffer and sister, and J. E. Keyes and wife, all of Ft. Wayne; Golden Beninghoff and lady friend, Helen Bowman, Mr. Weippert, of Elkhart, grandfather of Mrs. Wm. Beninghoff.

SAVED BELL FROM BRITISH

Patriotic Philadelphians Carried It to Allentown, Where It Was Buried

NO INCIDENT of Revolutionary times finds a more vivid and dramatic contrast in this day than the first trip of the Liberty Bell from Philadelphia, writes John A. Sheatz, ex-state treasurer of Pennsylvania, in the Philadelphia Press. That trip was to Allentown a year and two months after it became the Liberty Bell, at the time when Howe's army, victorious over the Continental forces at the battle of the Brandywine, was advancing for the capture of the city.

When the bell left for the San Francisco exposition last year it departed with the God-speed of the whole undivided city. It was escorted to the train by the First city troop and by the great assemblage gathered for the Fourth of July exercises on Independence square. It passed through streets thronged with venerating people. On the train it was under the escort of a large body delegated by the constituted municipal authorities. Its passage across the continent was a triumphal progress. A hundred cities along the route poured out their citizens to do it reverence as it passed and it was received at the other rim of the continent in reverential awe by a countless multitude.

Contrast With First Trip.

That is how the Bell travels today. It was very different in September, 1777. On that first trip to Allentown it went, not in daylight, but in the dead of night. Not with the music of bands and escorted in honor by multitudes, but in silence and under the guard of only one man. It went not in a special train but in a creaking old farm wagon loaded with manure, the better to conceal it.

For at that time there were many Tories in Philadelphia. These included families then counted among the foremost citizens. When the city was evacuated by the Continentals, these Tories came out of the obscurity in which they had been prudently lying and began preparing a welcome for Howe and his army. The following winter was a time of rare festivity for the British officers.

The British were expected by the city authorities, upon taking possession, to confiscate the church bells as spoils of war for the purpose of molding them into cannon. That was recognized as one of their rights as captors. It was to prevent this seizure that the executive council ordered the removal of the state house bell and the bells of Christ church and of nine other churches to Allentown by way of Bethlehem. I don't know why Allentown was selected unless it be that it was far enough away to keep the bells safe from the British.

Had Small Escort.

John Jacob Mickley, a soldier of the Continental army, was one of those detailed for the removal of the bells. To him the state house bell was intrusted. John Jacob Mickley was the son of Johann Jacob Muéckli (the German version of the name), and arrived in Philadelphia on the sailing vessel "Hope" in the early part of 1733. On August 27, 1733, he took the oath of allegiance to his adopted country. He was a farmer at Whitehall, Lehigh county, when the War of the Revolution broke out.

At Bethlehem Mickley's wagon broke down and the state house bell was transferred to the wagon of Jacob Lester, upon which it was hauled the remaining four miles. In the records of the Moravian church at Bethlehem is the following entry, under date of September 23, 1777: "The bells from Philadelphia brought in wagons, the wagon of the state house bell broke down here, so it had to be unloaded, the other bells went on."

Buried Under Church Floor.

The state house bell and the chimes of Christ church were buried beneath the floor of Zion Reformed church, Allentown. This church was built in 1762 of logs, rebuilt in stone in 1770, and again rebuilt later. The Rev. Abraham Blummer was pastor of the church at the time and assisted in the work of burying the bells. A tablet commemorating the event has been placed upon the church front and also a stained glass window with like purpose in the church.

After the evacuation of Philadelphia by the British, the bells were brought back and put in their respective places in the latter part of the year 1778.

Country Honored Lafayette.

It is said that "republics are ungrateful." That was not the case concerning Lafayette. Congress voted him the sum of $200,000 and a township of land; and, with the progressive development of the United States, the grateful American people named after him many cities, towns and counties, and erected monuments and statues to his memory enough for any measure of ambition.

The Flag at Lexington

By the rude bridge that spans the flood,
Their flag to April's airs unfurled.
Here once the embattled farmers stood
And fired the shot heard 'round the world.

The farmers of Lexington carried the cornet or standard of the Three County Troop. This banner was devised in the counties of Essex, Suffolk and Middlesex, Massachusetts, in 1659. The office of color bearer of this troop was a sort of inheritance in the Page family. The standard was carried in King Philip's war in 1676. When the Minute Men were organized Nathaniel Page III of Bedford took the old flag for use at drill. At the midnight alarm Captain Page snatched up the standard and carried it with him to Concord, where it "waved above the smoke of that battle."

The flag is now preserved under glass in a fireproof safe of the public library at Bedford, Mass., and can be seen by arrangement with the librarian, according to Peleg D. Harrison, in whose volume, "The Stars and Stripes and Other American Flags," the history of the banner is related.

The ground is maroon or crimson colored satin damask emblazoned with an outstretched arm, in the hand of which is an uplifted sword. This representation is the color of silver, as are three circular figures that are probably intended to represent cannon balls. Upon a gold colored scroll are the words "Vince aut Moriture" (Conquer or Die). The flag is about two feet by one foot six inches. The original fringe appears to have been taken by a Bedford girl to trim a dress for a military ball. That was, of course, before the standard was borne by the embattled farmers.

PRESIDENTIAL POINTERS

Of our 28 presidents, 18 have been college men, and yet Washington, Jackson, Lincoln and McKinley are among those who had no college education. William and Mary and Harvard lead with three representatives each. Princeton follows with two and Yale with one. Grant, was, of course, a West Pointer.

Slide in the $1.00. Do it now.

PRESIDENTIAL POINTERS

Two presidential elections have taken place during war time. Madison was re-elected during the war of 1812, and President Lincoln during the Civil war in 1864. Polk and McKinley were presidents during wars which began and terminated during their terms. Washington, Taylor and Grant were made presidents because of their war records in the field.

$100 Reward, $100

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials.

Address: F. J. CHENEY & CO., Toledo, O.
Sold by all Druggists, 75c.
Take Hall's Family Pills for constipation.

H. C. Hathaway

TRUSTEE
Concord Township

Office Day Thursday's of Each week in Town Hall, St. Joe.

Frank W. Silberg
Veterinarian

OFFICE and HOSPITAL
— ON —
Main Street
SPENCERVILLE. - IND.

Phones—Office No. 7
(18) Residence No. 101

P. A. Walker
Trustee
Spencer Township

OFFICE DAY—
Tuesday of each week at the residence ¼ mile east of the Dills River Bridge.
Phone—St. Joe, 21-6
Spencerville, - Indiana

F. P. HART
"The Expert"
House Mover
— AND —
Building Raiser

Concrete Work of all kinds finished in the best shape with the least expense.

Call or write

DENTIST
O. R. PRICE
ST. JOE, IND.
Office: first door south of Patterson's Dept. Store.
Bell Phone No. 44.

Oldest in America Strongest in the World

Mutual life
INSURANCE COMPANY
of New York
J. C. HULL, Agent
Phone No. 46

Lehman's CLOTHING HOUSE

ESTABLISHED 1887

MENS AND BOYS OUTFITTERS

808-810 CALHOUN STREET

BEN LEHMAN PROP.

Fort Wayne, Ind.

JUNE

L 908

0204

WORLD'S EVENTS IN SHORT FORM

BEST OF THE NEWS BOILED DOWN TO LIMIT.

ARRANGED FOR BUSY PEOPLE

Notes Covering Most Important Happenings of the World Compiled in Briefest and Most Succinct Form for Quick Consumption.

Mexican Revolt

With all available information adding to the fear that practically the entire command of Captain Boyd was wiped out by a treacherous attack by Carranzista troops in overwhelming numbers at Carrizal, the United States is close to a declaration of war on Mexico, according to a dispatch from Washington.

* * *

Full responsibility for the attack upon American soldiers at Carrizal is assumed by Minister of War Obregon in an official statement issued at the war department at Mexico City. This says that the Americans were trying to occupy the railway station at Carrizal.

* * *

The state department at Washington was officially notified that the 17 prisoners taken by the Mexicans in the Carrizal engagement were being sent from Chihuahua to Juarez, where they will be turned over to the American authorities.

* * *

Frederick Griese, German banker of Mexico City, detained at El Paso, Tex., by department of justice agents on the suspicion that he had violated American neutrality, was released on receipt of orders from Washington.

* * *

It was announced at Washington that strong pressure is being brought to bear upon Carranza by representatives of European powers to prevent him from forcing a break with the United States.

* * *

Gen. John J. Pershing, commander of the expeditionary forces, seized the Mexican towns of Nueva Casas Grandes and Casas Grandes. This information has been received by both military and state department officials at El Paso, Tex.

* * *

The administration's indictment of Carranza is on its way and the armed forces of the United States on land and sea are rushing plans to meet any eventuality. War or peace rests with Carranza. The position of the United States government is pointedly set forth in its review of the apparent inability of Carranza to prevent border raids.

* * *

An admission that the Mexicans who fired upon the American expedition retiring from Mexico near Matamoros were Carranzistas, not bandits, was contained in a message received at the Mexican consulate at El Paso, Tex., from H. Perez Albreu, director of the de facto consular service.

* * *

The American flag flying over the hotel in which was located the office of American Consul W. A. Julian at Cananea, Mex., was made the target of hundreds of Mexican bullets during the anti-American demonstration, according to American refugees arriving at Douglas, Ariz.

Domestic

The Detroit battalions, comprising eight companies of the Thirty-first regiment, M. N. G., with cavalry Troop B, an ambulance company and other members of the volunteer force to the number of 1,657 arrived at Grayling, Mich.

* * *

Philadelphia was selected for the meeting of the thirty-fourth triennal conclave of the Knights Templar in 1919.

* * *

Missionaries from Turkey arriving at New York on the Scandinavian-American liner Oscar II stated that all of the American mission schools in Marsivan and Sivas, in Asiatic Turkey, valued at $1,000,000, have been taken over by the Turkish government for military purposes.

* * *

Three United States cruisers and three destroyers are steaming under forced draft for the coast of Mexico to pick up Americans in the republic.

* * *

A movement to call a conference of American and Mexican citizens at El Paso in an effort to avert war with Mexico was announced at New York by the American Union Against Militarism.

* * *

Robert D. Hoxie, professor of political economy at the University of Chicago, and a well-known educator, killed himself in his home by cutting his throat. Continued illness caused Professor Hoxie's act.

* * *

One man was killed and two wounded in a fight at Virginia, Minn., between a squad of special police and a crowd of I. W. W. strikers who were on their way to picket the Alpena mine of the Oliver Mining company.

* * *

News of the attack by Carranzistas on an American cavalry detachment at Carrizal struck Washington like a thunderbolt. Everywhere, among officials and on the streets, it was taken to mean that Carranza had attempted to make good his threat to drive the American forces out of Mexico.

* * *

The latest news General Funston has received of the Carrizal battle is that the Mexicans lost 14 dead and the Americans 12. The news was forwarded from General Bell at El Paso.

* * *

Commander Kavanagh's report on the Mazatlan affair, transmitted by Admiral Winslow from San Diego to Washington, declares the attack was unprovoked.

* * *

The two troops of the Tenth cavalry under Capt. Charles T. Boyd practically were wiped out by the attack of Mexican forces under General Gomez at Carrizal, according to indications given in a fragmentary report received by General Funston at San Antonio, Tex., from General Pershing. Seven survivors have reached the main column.

* * *

Report of Carrizal fight to Washington brings war peril much nearer. Wilson may issue call for 500,000 volunteers.

* * *

American refugees from Mexico City and interior points have arrived at Vera Cruz and are anxiously awaiting ship home.

* * *

Seven more American troopers were brought to Chihuahua City as prisoners by Mexican military authorities.

* * *

Washington

Naval militia may get call, Assistant Secretary Roosevelt announced at Washington, adding 200,000 men are needed.

* * *

Secretary Baker at Washington ordered all available militia to the border without waiting for complete mobilization.

* * *

The house at Washington grants use of all state troops as federal soldiers and provides $1,000,000 to care for families of guardsmen.

* * *

Secretary Lansing at Washington sent a memorandum to the diplomatic representatives of South and Central American nations reviewing the situation existing between the United States and Mexico and announcing that if hostilities should eventuate the purpose of the United States would be to defend itself against further invasion and not to intervene in Mexican affairs.

* * *

Discussion of the Mexican situation was precipitated in the senate at Washington by Senator Works of California, who called up his resolution to authorize intervention, had it read and gave notice that unless the foreign relations committee acted soon he would move to take the matter out of its hands.

* * *

The house at Washington voted an increase of $2,000,000 in the appropriation for aviation in the army appropriation bill. The vote was 87 to 81.

* * *

It was announced at the White House in Washington that the nomination of Attorney General Thomas Watt Gregory of Austin, Tex., to be a justice of the Supreme court to succeed Charles Evans Hughes, resigned, will be sent to the senate in the near future.

* * *

The house at Washington by a vote of 208 to 85 found District Attorney H. Snowden Marshall of New York guilty of contempt of the house of representatives because of Marshall's criticism of a subcommittee of the judiciary committee appointed to investigate impeachment proceedings against him.

* * *

European War News

The Germans have fought their way to Fleury, three miles northwest of Verdun. Paris concedes the German drive has reached Fleury, but contends that here it was stayed.

* * *

The German submarine U-35, which arrived in Cartagena, Spain, sank the French liner Provence in the Mediterranean a few months ago, with a loss of more than 3,000 lives, Commander Arnault said. Besides the Provence, 50 other Anglo-French ships have been sunk by the U-35 in the Mediterranean.

* * *

The Russian drive westward from Volhynia and northward from Czernowitz swept the Austrians farther back opposite the Sereth river at several points. Gliboka, Zadova and Stroginetz fell before the Russian hosts, but northward from Lutsk the Russians suffered the first serious setback of the present offensive. The defeat of the Russ came at the hands of the Germans.

* * *

A Berlin dispatch to the Copenhagen correspondent of the London Telegraph states that Lieutenant Immelmann, the daring aviator who on the 17th of May brought down his fifteenth aeroplane, was killed on the western front.

* * *

Six German divisions—120,000 men—have been hurried eastward to check the Russian offensive, bearing down upon Lemberg, Geneva dispatches reported. Two German divisions are en route to the Lutsk-Kovel front.

HOOSIER GUARD ASSEMBLES AT FORT HARRISON

Stiff Training Before Border Service, Say the Officers.

SUPPLIES MADE READY

Much Equipment Collected in Brief Time for Use of "Boys in Khaki."

SOME RECRUITING NECESSARY

Several Companies on Probation by Government Soon Able to Muster Full Peace Strength at Home Stations and Go Forward.

Indianapolis.—The Hoosier state's boys in khaki—nearly 2,800 of them—have pretty nearly all assembled at Fort Benjamin Harrison to harden up for service against Mexico. They probably will not be called to "the front" in less than sixty days. At present the various company organizations of infantry, artillery, signal corps, ambulance squads and hospital units are being shaken down by the guard officers preparatory to formation into a compact body and turned over to United States army officers.

Governor Ralston received orders from the war department late Sunday night or early Monday to mobilize the state guard. By noon Monday every company in the state had been notified and assembly had begun. Immediate concentration at Fort Harrison was found impossible because the war department would not accept companies not recruited up to full peace strength at least. This meant hurried recruiting at home stations. But in every case it has been accomplished in record time.

The quartermaster's department has been working under forced effort to provide enough camp necessities for the entire membership at the fort.

Gets Bids on Supplies.

Bids were received by the quartermaster on thousands of pounds of meats, vegetables, flour and other subsistence requirements. Bids on great quantities of canned goods from wholesale houses also were received, and subsistence for the troops has been completely arranged.

Meanwhile hundreds of shipments of uniforms, parts of uniforms, intrenching tools and similar camp necessities were forwarded by the quartermaster's headquarters to companies throughout the state, which had not received their full allotment heretofore. Included in the material sent to the company commanders were numerous war forms and blanks and orders, setting out the detail of mobilization to be followed by each company.

The quartermaster general's office force was increased and additional men were detailed to that branch of the service as needed. The complete equipment for camp service of the guard, including such items as tentage, cooking utensils, sanitary equipment, etc., has been sent to Fort Benjamin Harrison.

Field Equipment on Hand.

Officials in the quartermaster's department said that at present the state has from the federal government practically complete field equipment for the entire Guard of the state, recruited to full peace strength. Additional equipment, if the Guard is recruited beyond that point, will be necessary. The camp equipment was moved from the statehouse to the fort within half a day after the order came.

Kuhlman Ranking Officer.

Col. Aubrey L. Kuhlman of Auburn, commanding the Third infantry, is the ranking officer in command of the Indiana Guard in the field. General Bridges said he did not know who would command the Indiana troops when they are sent to the border, but that a brigade would be organized, and a brigade commander appointed by the president or by the governor. Colonel Kuhlman will be ranking officer in the field until the troops are placed under the command of a federal army officer.

Capt. J. J. Toffey of the United States army, inspector general of the Indiana Guard, said that under the tentative scheme which has been prepared by the war department for eventualities in case of mobilization of the state militia, Indiana troops would form the Third brigade of the Eleventh division.

The printed orders calling the Indiana Guard to mobilize for active service have been in the basement of the statehouse for about two years, ready to be sent out at any time. These were sent out by mail Monday.

Probably 2,800 Men Assemble.

The headquarters of the Guard at the statehouse took on the aspects of a martial camp. From the time the statehouse doors swung open Monday the activities began, and before the sun had reached its quarter mark great shipments of supplies were being loaded on express and other wagons and rushed to the outgoing trains.

The call to arms in Indiana meant that 2,800 men would assemble at Fort Benjamin Harrison. The actual number of men and officers of the Indiana National Guard, now enlisted, is 2,737, according to estimates prepared by General Bridges. Of these 2,567 are enlisted men and 170 are officers. The full war strength of the Guard is about 4,500 men.

For the last two years the Indiana National Guard has been the object at various times of adverse reports from the war department, and several infantry companies have been ordered mustered out and more have been placed on probation, because of their inability to make ratings, under the federal list of requirements, that would entitle them to participate further in federal aid.

Not Fully Equipped.

While Guard officers announced Monday that equipment for the Guardsmen for field service was ready, some days ago such a statement was doubted by those in a position to know. Efforts recently have been made to provide complete equipment for the Guard of the state, and whether these have been successful is known only to officers of the Guard.

The cities in the state from which the war department has called Indiana Guardsmen to Fort Benjamin Harrison include Indianapolis, Martinsville, Gary, Lafayette, Michigan City, Laporte, Knox, Winamac, Fort Wayne, Bloomington, Frankfort, Angola, Auburn, Kendallville, Portland, Albion, Elkhart, South Bend, Warsaw, Monticello, Rensselaer, Plymouth, Valparaiso, Terre Haute, Mount Vernon, Seymour, Spencer, Muncie, Winchester, Lebanon, Tell City and Crawfordsville.

Until Completely Mobilized.

It was announced that Governor Ralston would remain in complete control and responsibility for the Indiana Guard until it is turned over as a unit to the federal army officer in command of Fort Benjamin Harrison.

The order from the governor calling out the Guard commanded that each company report to its regimental commander when it had its minimum peace strength. The peace strength of a federal army company is 65 and three commissioned officers, and the Guard companies are required to reach the same standard. The war strength of the Guard companies is 150 enlisted men and three commissioned officers for each company. The governor asked that the companies be recruited to war strength.

First Time Since Car Strike.

The present emergency is the first time the Indiana National Guard has been called out for service of any kind since the Indianapolis street car strike, in 1913, when Governor Ralston massed a large number of the troops in Indianapolis over night, stationing them in the basement of the statehouse and elsewhere to prevent the possibility of recurring disorders, which had marked the progress of the strike. The troops, at that time, did not see active service. The guardsmen had not been called out for foreign service prior to that time, since the Spanish-American war, and then those who went served as volunteers, for under the guard laws National Guardsmen could not be called out for foreign service, unless they volunteered. Under the new army law which has been signed by President Wilson, but does not become effective until July 1, the governor of a state, acting on the orders of the president and the secretary of war, will have power to call out guardsmen for foreign service.

The Guard Organization.

The Indiana guard at present consists of the Second and Third regiments of infantry, First and Second separate battalions of infantry, a battalion of field artillery, including three batteries, a signal company at Indianapolis, a field hospital at Indianapolis and an ambulance company at Frankfort.

Governor Ralston's order to the commanders of the Indiana National Guard throughout the state to mobilize the militia in compliance with the call of President Wilson, on the state military forces of the country for service on the Mexican border, found many Indiana companies practically assembled. News dispatches telling of the coming order had been received with such enthusiasm in practically every city where a company of the National Guard is maintained that the officers unofficially began their work at once.

New Incorporations.

Habig-Roberts Realty company, Indianapolis; capital, $25,000; real estate directors; Samuel T. Roberts, Charles W. Habig, Clara T. Habig.

Western Electric company, a New York corporation, qualified to transact business in Indiana; $92,000 of its capital stock is represented in this state; H. L. Nash, Indianapolis, is named as agent.

Bloomington-Bedford Stone company, Bloomington, filed decree of dissolution.

SHORT STATE ITEMS.

Lafayette.—Benjamin Moyer is lying at the point of death in a hospital here, and his wife and three children are suffering from serious injuries sustained when the automobile in which they were riding plunged over a 45-foot embankment near here.

Indianapolis.—Carl Fisher, the speedway magnate, has offered to allow aviators of the Indiana National Guard to use the speedway for an aero camp if companies are formed.

State Happenings

Indiana Militia on Move.

Indianapolis.—Three thousand members of the Indiana National Guard will move to the concentration camp at Fort Benjamin Harrison Friday or Saturday of this week, according to Adjt. Gen. Frank L. Bridges. Most companies, it was said, have been recruited up to peace strength and are still increasing their size. Six recruiting offices have been opened in the downtown district here and the business section has taken on a martial aspect.

Mexicans Are Starving.

Richmond.—Sarah H. Charles, one of several Friends missionaries who have returned here from Matamoras mission and other points in Mexico on advice of American consular agents, declared that poor Mexicans are starving in great numbers in the interior and that the failure of the punitive expedition to capture Villa has resulted in the Mexican people adopting a sneering and hostile attitude toward the Americans. She predicted a long-drawn-out campaign if hostilities result.

Woman Found Guilty.

Laporte.—After an all night's session the jury in the case of Mrs. Mattie Hauckin, self-confessed slayer of her husband, John Houckin, returned a verdict of guilty of manslaughter, imposing a sentence of two to twenty-one years. She pleaded self-defense while the state demanded the death penalty. Mrs. Houckin killed her husband when she found he had an engagement to take another woman to a dance.

Storm Does Great Damage.

Columbus.—Immense damage was done by a violent windstorm which swept Bartholomew county. The wheat crop, which is nearly ready to harvest, was ruined in places. A wooden bridge over White river was blown down and many farm buildings were demolished. The Eagles' home here was badly damaged when struck by lightning. It is believed no lives were lost.

Woman Dies of Injuries.

Kentland.—Miss Greta Thompson, twenty-two, who with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. A. J. Thompson of this city, was seriously injured May 20 in an automobile accident near Bedford, died in Mercy hospital in Chicago. Mrs. Thompson has been taken from Bedford to Martinsville, and Mr. Thompson has about recovered.

Leagues Won't Unite.

Indianapolis.—Mrs. Carrie Chapman Catt, nationally known suffrage leader, departed from Indianapolis after having failed in her purpose of uniting the Equal Suffrage association and the Woman's Franchise league, the two largest Indiana suffrage bodies, for a fall campaign.

Old Church to Celebrate.

Tipton.—The Christian church at Petersburg, which was organized June 26, 1844, five months before Tipton county was organized, will hold a homecoming celebration June 25. Leonard Shoemaker established the church, which was known at first as the Indian Prairie Christian church.

Find Man's Body.

Evansville.—The body of John R. Ehman, fifty, a contractor, was found by two small boys in the eastern part of the city. He left his home telling his wife and daughters he was going out for a walk. A revolver was clutched in his right hand and there was a bullet hole in the temple.

Discuss Plans.

Monticello.—Members of every woman's club in the county will be guests at a centennial tea at the public library here by the White county centennial committee. Plans for Woman's day at the county centennial celebration in October will be discussed.

Plan Big Celebration.

Lafayette.—Citizens of Tippecanoe county, at a mass meeting, decided to hold a big centennial celebration here early in October. Judge H. H. Vinton was elected president of the citizens' association which will have charge of the observance.

Kicked by Mule.

Newcastle.—Ulysses Denton, driver for the S. P. Jennings Lumber company, suffered a compound fracture of his right leg when he was kicked by a mule.

Dies of Injuries.

Lafayette—Bertram Sempill, seventeen, a school boy, died from injuries received in the Wabash wreck at Attica. He was stealing a ride on the "blind" baggage.

Car Kills Laborer.

Anderson.—Claude Hatton, thirty-eight, laborer of Alexandria, was killed by a passenger car on the Union traction line between Alexandria and Elwood. Hatton was walking on the tracks.

Carpenters Strike.

Kokomo.—Union carpenters here went on strike after the failure of negotiations with the contractors for an advance in wages. The negotiations had been carried on since June 1. The union has 185 members.

GRAPHIC STORY OF AMBUSHED TROOPS

Surviving Trooper Tells of Fight of Tenth Cavalry.

WERE OUTNUMBERED 5 TO 1

Caught by Mexican Machine Guns Which Opened Fire at Signal From Gomez—Horses Were Shot Down or Broke Away.

El Paso, Tex.—One of the most graphic stories in the history of the American army is that told by one of the four couriers sent by the commanding officer of the ambushed troops of the Tenth cavalry when he reached General Pershing's headquarters with his appeal for relief for his comrades. The following is the story he tells:

"We had been marching since early Wednesday morning when we reached the neighborhood of Carrizal. Capt. Charles T. Boyd was riding ahead of the column. Just behind him was Capt. Lewis S. Morey, Lieut. Henry R. Adair was further back with the column. There were 65 men in the troop.

Outnumbered 5 to 1.

"From our position we could see some Mexican soldiers in the village. Captain Boyd sent forward a messenger under a flag of truce to ask permission to enter the town in search of the bandits that we were hunting. Gen. Felix Gomez sent back word giving permission to enter.

"Gomez himself rode out to meet Captain Boyd. Captain Boyd gave the word for the column to advance. We were just starting forward when we noticed Mexican troops pouring out from behind different kinds of shelter—adobe houses and the like—and deploying to the right and left. It was battle formation. From the first glance we saw that they outnumbered us at least five to one.

"Captain Boyd noticed their movement. To any soldier that sort of thing can mean only that an attack is about to be made. I saw Captain Boyd motion to the Mexicans and make some remark about it to Gomez. Gomez wheeled his mount around and signaled with his hands. Then he made a dash for his own lines.

"At the same time a couple of machine guns, one at each end of the Mexican line, opened up on us. We were caught in our saddles in easy range, and we were good targets. I saw Captain Boyd fall. A moment later Captain Morey was wounded in the shoulder.

"Lieutenant Adair gave us the order to dismount. We got out of our saddles in a hurry. Then he told us to throw ourselves on our faces and return the fire. Someone got Gomez just as he was reaching his line. The next minute Lieutenant Adair was hit. Both he and Captain Boyd are dead, I believe.

Horses Going Down.

"The machine guns were still going. I could hear the bullets whizzing over us. Because of Lieutenant Adair's order we saved a lot of men. But the horses did not have the same luck. The bullets started to hit them, and they were going down as if their legs were suddenly cut out from under them.

"The others, stung by the bullets and kicked by the dying horses, began to rear and plunge. The men in charge tried their best to hold them, but they broke away. Some of the men were killed trying to save their mounts.

"When the horses got away we were marooned. We fought back and prevented the Mexicans from advancing in spite of their advantage in numbers and the machine guns. We began to fall back toward the hills as well as we could.

"We recovered four horses and then the four of us were sent here to report. We left the rest of the troops in the hils. The retreat was slow because of the wounded. The Mexicans kept firing, but were kept away by the accurate rifle fire of our men."

Nervous Apprehension.

"They are not going to cut me up if I go to the hospital, are they?"

"Of course not, when you're going just for a rest. What makes you think they are?"

"Because when I called up the hospital a voice said 'Operator.'"—Boston Transcript.

Frightful Prospect.

Miss Fadde—I'm sure you'll sign this petition we're getting up to end the war.

Reggie—Bah Jove, I'll go you! They say that if it lasts much longer we'll have 50-cent gasoline.—Life.

Very Serious View.

"Do you consider it proper to bet on an election?"

"Certainly not. An election compels you to take chances enough on your prospects of prosperity without risking ready money on it."

Wrong Position.

"You've gone and put the prize-fighter's picture at the bottom of the page."

"Well, what of it?"

"If you have any regard for the fitness of things make it an upper cut."

Chip Off the Old Block.

Mrs. Howells—Your baby resembles his father very much, don't you think?

Mrs. Growells—Yes, in both looks and actions. Why, he even cries for the moon in the daytime instead of at night, just to be contrary.

JUNE

L 908

0205

The Turmoil

By

BOOTH TARKINGTON

(Copyright 1915, by Harper & Brothers)

SYNOPSIS.

—3—

Sheridan's attempt to make a business man of his son Bibbs by starting him in the machine shop ends in Bibbs going to a sanitarium, a nervous wreck. On his return Bibbs is met at the station by his sister Edith. He finds himself an inconsiderable and unconsidered figure in the "New House" of the Sheridans. He sees Mary Vertrees looking at him from a summer house next door. The Vertreeses, old town family and impoverished, call on the Sheridans, newly-rich, and afterward discuss them. Mary puts into words her parents' unspoken wish that she marry one of the Sheridan boys.

Here is a young woman, one of the poor aristocrats, deliberately setting forth to capture a rich husband. Perhaps Mary will honestly fall in love with Jim Sheridan and be happy in her marriage. Do you think she is waging her "warfare" in a manner that will bring her success?

CHAPTER V.

It was a brave and lustrous banquet; and a noisy one, too, because there was an orchestra among some plants at one end of the long dining room, and after a preliminary stiffness the guests were impelled to converse—necessarily at the tops of their voices. The whole company of fifty sat at a great oblong table, a continent of damask and lace, with shores of crystal and silver running up to spreading groves of orchids and lilies and white roses—an inhabited continent, evidently, for there were three marvelous, gleaming buildings; one in the center and one at each end, white miracles wrought by some inspired craftsman in sculptural icing. They were models in miniature, and they represented the Sheridan building, the Sheridan apartments, and the pump works. Nearly all the guests recognized them without having to be told what they were, and pronounced the likenesses superb.

The arrangement of the table was visibly baronial. At the head sat the great Thane, with the flower of his family and of the guests about him; then on each side came the neighbors of the "old" house, grading down to vassals and retainers—superintendents, cashiers, heads of departments, and the like—at the foot, where the Thane's lady took her place as a consolation for the less important. Here, too, among the thralls and bondmen, sat Bibbs Sheridan, a meek Banquo, wondering how anybody could look at him and eat.

Nevertheless, there was a vast, continuous eating and the talk went on with the eating, incessantly. It rose over the throbbing of the orchestra and the clatter and clinking of silver and china and glass, and there was a mighty babble.

And through the interstices of this clamoring Bibbs could hear the continual booming of his father's heavy voice, and once he caught the sentence, "Yes, young lady, that's just what did it for me, and that's just what 'll do it for my boys—they got to make two blades o' grass grow where one grew before!" It was his familiar flourish, an old story to Bibbs, and now jovially declaimed for the edification of Mary Vertrees.

It was a great night for Sheridan—the very crest of his wave. His big, smooth, red face grew more and more radiant with good will and with the simplest, happiest, most boyish vanity. He was the picture of health, of good cheer, and of power on a holiday.

He dominated the table, shouting jocular questions and railleries at everyone. His idea was that when people were having a good time they were noisy; and his own additions to the hubbub increased his pleasure, and, of course, met the warmest encouragement from his guests. He kept time to the music continually—with his feet, or pounding on the table with his fist, and sometimes with spoon or knife upon his plate or a glass, without permitting these side-products to interfere with the real business of eating and shouting.

"Tell 'em to play 'Nancy Lee'!" he would bellow down the length of the table to his wife, while the musicians were in the midst of the "Toreador" song, perhaps. "Ask that fellow if they don't know 'Nancy Lee'!" And when the leader would shake his head apologetically in answer to an obedient shriek from Mrs. Sheridan, the "Toreador" continuing vehemently, Sheridan would roar half-remembered fragments of "Nancy Lee," naturally mingling some Bizet with the air of that uxorious tribute.

No external bubbling contributed to this effervescence; the Sheridan's table had never borne wine, and, more because of timidity about it than conviction, it bore none now. And certainly no wine could have inspired more turbulent good spirits in the host. Not even Bibbs was an alloy in this night's happiness, for, as Mrs. Sheridan had said, he had "plans for Bibbs"—plans which were going to straighten out some things that had gone wrong.

So he pounded the table and boomed his echoes of old songs, and then, forgetting these, would renew his friendly railleries, or perhaps, turning to Mary Vertrees, who sat near him, round the corner of the table at his right, he would become autobiographical. Gentlemen less naive than he had paid her that tribute, for she was a girl who inspired the autobiographical impulse in every man who met her—it needed but the sight of her.

The dinner seemed, somehow, to center about Mary Vertrees and the jocund host as a play centers about its hero and heroine; they were the rubicund king and the starry princess of this spectacle—they paid court to each other, and everybody paid court to them. Down near the sugar pump works, where Bibbs sat, there was audible speculation and admiration. "Wonder who that lady is—makin' such a hit with the old man." "Must be some heiress." "Heiress? Golly, I guess I could stand it to marry rich, then!"

Edith and Sibyl were radiant; at first they had watched Miss Vertrees with an almost haggard anxiety, wondering what disastrous effect Sheridan's pastoral gayeties—and other things—would have upon her, but she seemed delighted with everything, and with him most of all. She treated him as if he were some delicious, foolish old joke that she understood perfectly, laughing at him almost violently when he bragged—probably his first experience of that kind in his life. It enchanted him.

As he proclaimed to the table, she had "a way with her." She had, indeed, as Roscoe Sheridan, upon her right, discovered just after the feast began. Since his marriage three years before, no lady had bestowed upon him so protracted a full view of brilliant eyes; and, with the look, his lovely neighbor said—and it was her first speech to him—

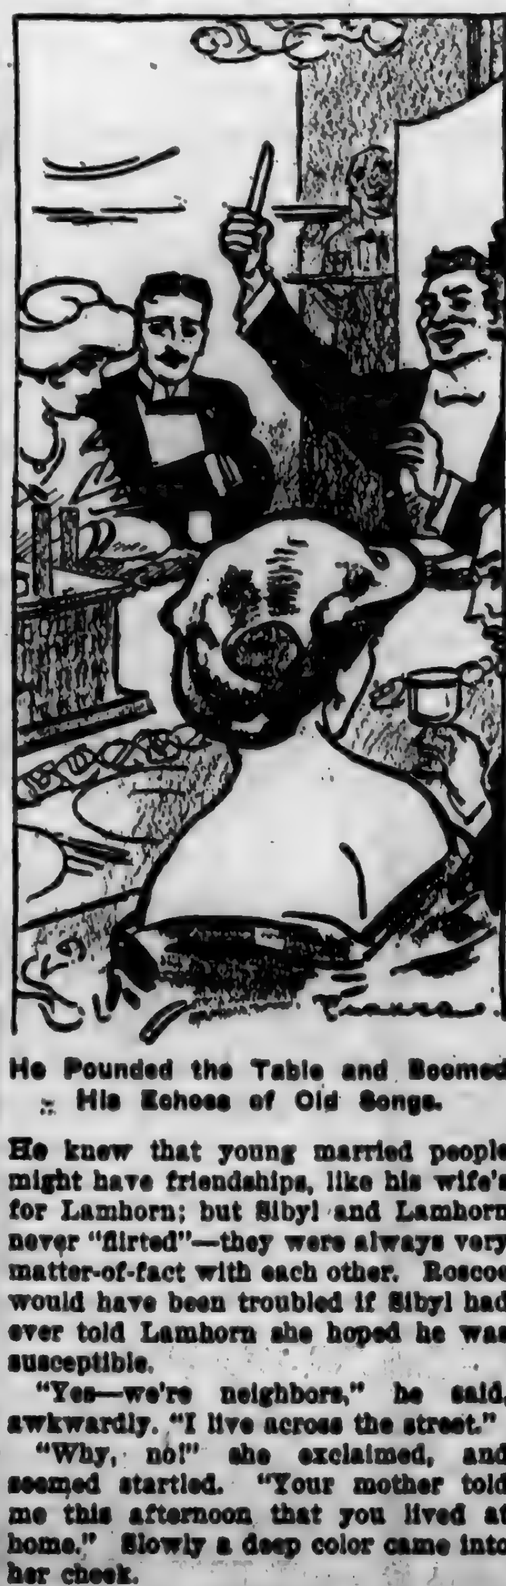
"I hope you're very susceptible, Mr. Sheridan!"

Honest Roscoe was taken aback, and, "Why?" was all he managed to say.

She repeated the look deliberately, which was noted, with a mystification equal to his own, by his sister across the table. No one, reflected Edith, could imagine Mary Vertrees the sort of girl who would "really flirt" with married men—she was obviously the "opposite of all that." Edith defined her as "thoroughbred," a "nice girl;" and the look given to Roscoe was astounding. Roscoe's wife saw it, too, and she was another whom it puzzled—though not because its recipient was married.

"Because!" said Mary Vertrees, replying to Roscoe's monosyllable. "And also because we're next-door neighbors at table, and it's dull times ahead for both of us if we don't get along."

Roscoe was a literal young man, all stocks and bonds, and he had been brought up to believe that when a man married he "married and settled down."



He Pounded the Table and Boomed His Echoes of Old Songs.

He knew that young married people might have friendships, like his wife's for Lamhorn; but Sibyl and Lamhorn never "flirted"—they were always very matter-of-fact with each other. Roscoe would have been troubled if Sibyl had ever told Lamhorn she hoped he was susceptible.

"Yes—we're neighbors," he said, awkwardly. "I live across the street."

"Why, no!" she exclaimed, and seemed startled. "Your mother told me this afternoon that you lived at home." Slowly a deep color came into her cheek.

"No," he said; "my wife and I lived with the old folks the first year, but that's all. Edith and Jim live with them, of course."

"I—I see," she said, the deep color still deepening as she turned from him and saw, written upon a card before the gentleman at her left, the name, "Mr. James Sheridan, Jr." And from that moment Roscoe had little enough cause for wondering what he ought to reply to her disturbing coquetries.

Mr. James Sheridan had been anxiously waiting for the dazzling visitor to "get through with old Roscoe" and give a bachelor a chance. "Old Roscoe" was the younger, but he had always been the steady wheel-horse of the family. As their father habitually boasted, both brothers were "capable, hard-working, young business men." Physically neither was of the height, breadth or depth of the father. Both wore young business men's mustaches, and either could have sat for the tailor-shop lithographs of young business men wearing "rich suitings in dark mixtures."

Jim, approving warmly of his neighbor's profile, perceived her access of color, which increased his approbation. "What's that old Roscoe saying to you, Miss Vertrees?" he asked. "These young married men are mighty forward nowadays, but you mustn't let 'em make you blush."

"Am I blushing?" she said. "Are you sure?" And with that she gave him ample opportunity to make sure, repeating with interest the look wasted upon Roscoe. "I think you must be mistaken," she continued. "I think it's your brother who is blushing. I've thrown him into confusion."

"How?"

She laughed, and then, leaning to him a little, said in a tone as confidential as she could make it, under cover of the uproar, "By trying to begin with him a courtship I meant for you!"

This might well be a style new to Jim; and it was. He supposed it a nonsensical form of badinage, and yet it took his breath. He realized that he wished what she said to be the literal truth, and he was instantly snared by that realization.

"By George!" he said. "I guess you're the kind of girl that can say anything—yes, and get away with it, too!"

She laughed again—in her way, so that he could not tell whether she was laughing at him or at herself or at the nonsense she was talking; and she said:

"But you see I don't care whether I get away with it or not. I wish you'd tell me frankly if you think I've got a chance to get away with you?"

"More like if you've got a chance to get away from me!" Jim was inspired to reply. "Not one in the world, especially after beginning by making fun of me like that."

"I mightn't be so much in fun as you think," she said, regarding him with sudden gravity.

"Well," said Jim, in simple honesty, "you're a funny girl!"

Her gravity continued an instant longer. "I may not turn out to be funny for you."

"So long as you turn out to be anything at all for me, I expect I can manage to be satisfied." And with that, to his own surprise, it was his turn to blush, whereupon she laughed again.

"Yes," he said, plaintively, not wholly lacking intuition, "I can see you're the sort of girl that would laugh the minute you see a man really means anything!"

"'Laugh'!" she cried, gayly. "Why, it might be a matter of life and death! But if you want tragedy, I'd better put the question at once, considering the mistake I made with your brother."

Jim was dazed. She seemed to be playing a little game of mockery and nonsense with him, but he had glimpses of a flashing danger in it; he was but too sensible of being outclassed, and had somewhere a consciousness that he could never quite know this giddy and alluring lady, no matter how long it pleased her to play with him. But he mightily wanted her to keep on playing with him.

"Put what question?" he said, breathlessly.

"As you are a new neighbor of mine and of my family," she returned, speaking slowly and with a cross-examiner's severity, "I think it would be well for me to know at once whether you are already walking out with any young lady or not. Mr. Sheridan, think well! Are you spoken for?"

"Not yet," he gasped. "Are you?"

"No!" she cried, and with that they both laughed again; and the pastime proceeded, increasing both in its gayety and in its gravity.

Observing its continuance, Mr. Robert Lamhorn, opposite, turned from a lively conversation with Edith and remarked covertly to Sibyl that Miss Vertrees was "starting rather picturesquely with Jim." And he added, languidly, "Do you suppose she would?"

For the moment Sibyl gave no sign of having heard him, but seemed interested in the clasp of a long "rope" of pearls, a loop of which she was allowing to swing from her fingers, resting her elbow upon the table and following with her eyes the twinkle of diamonds and platinum in the clasp at the end of the loop. She wore many jewels. She was pretty, but hers was not the kind of prettiness to be loaded with too sumptuous accessories, and jeweled head-dresses are dangerous—they may emphasize the wrongness of the wrong wearer.

"I said Miss Vertrees seems to be starting pretty strong with Jim," repeated Mr. Lamhorn.

"I heard you." There was a latent discontent always somewhere in her eyes, no matter what she threw upon the surface to cover it, and just now she did not care to cover it; she looked sullen. "Starting any stronger than you did with Edith?" she inquired.

"Oh, keep the peace!" he said, crossly. "That's off, of course."

"You haven't been making her see it this evening—precisely," said Sibyl, looking at him steadily. "You've to her for—"

"For heaven's sake," he
"keep the peace!"

"Well, what have you just b ing?"

"Sh!" he said. "Listen to y ther-in-law."

Sheridan was booming and louder than ever, the orchestra begun to play "The Rosary," vast content.

"I count them over, la-la-dum," he roared, beating the m with his fork. "Each hour each pearl tee-dum-tum-dum—
the matter of all you folks?
you sing? Miss Vertrees, I bet sand dollars you sing! Why'n'

"Mr. Sheridan," she said, cheerfully from the ardent Ji don't know what you inte
Your son isn't used to my roug and my soldier's wooing fright but I think he was about to sa thing important."

"I'll say something important if he doesn't!" the father thre more delighted with her than ev gosh! if I was his age—or a right now—"

"Oh, wait!" cried Mary. "If only make less noise! I wa
Sheridan to hear."

"She'd say the same," he s
"She'd tell me I was mighty sl couldn't get ahead o' Jim. Why
I was his age—"

"You must listen to your
Mary interrupted, turning to Ji had grown red again. "He's g tell us how, when he was your made those two blades of gras out of a teacup—and you could yourself he didn't get them ou sleeve!"

At that Sheridan pounded th till it jumped. "Look here, youn he roared. "Some o' these d either goin' to slap you—or I' to kiss you!"

Edith looked aghast; she was this was indeed "too awful," bu
Vertrees burst into ringing lau

"Both!" she cried. "Both! T to make me forget the other!"

"But which—" he began, a suddenly gave forth such ste trumpetings of mirth that for c whole table stopped to listen.
he roared, "if you don't propose girl tonight I'll send you back machine shop with Bibbs!"

And Bibbs—down among the ers by the sugar pump wor watching Mary Vertrees as a boy in the street might watch little girl in a garden—Bibbs
He heard—and he knew what ther's plans were now.

CHAPTER VI.

Mrs. Vertrees "sat up" for her ter, Mr. Vertrees having retired restless evening, not much soo the society of his Landseers. B
Vertrees had a long vigil of it.

She sat through the slow nigh in a stiff little chair under the in her own room, which was over the "front hall." There, hand, she employed the time
own reminiscences, though it v belief that she was reading Mad Remusat's.

Her thoughts went backwa
her life and into her husband the deeper into the past they w brighter the pictures they brou
—and there is tragedy. Like h band, she thought backward she did not dare think forward d
ly. What thinking forward th bled couple ventured took the f
a slender hope which neither o could have borne to hear put in and yet they had talked it ove after day, from the very hour they heard Sheridan was to bu new house next door. For—so ly does any ideal of human b become an antique—their youth the innocent old days, so de
"breeding" and "gentility," a craft had been more straitly upon them than that of talking things without mentioning them.
in was marked the most vital ence between Mr. and Mrs. V and their big new neighbor. Sh though his youth was of the epoch, knew nothing of such m
He had been chopping wood morning fire in the country while they were still dancing.

It was after one o'clock whe
Vertrees heard steps and the d clinking of the key in the loc then, with the opening of the Mary's laugh and, "Yes—if you afraid—tomorrow!"

The door closed, and she rush stairs, bringing with her a bre cold and bracing air into her m room. "Yes," she said, befor
Vertrees could speak, "he broug home!"

She let her cloak fall upon th and, drawing an old red-velvet chair forward, sat beside her after giving her a light pat up shoulder and a hearty kiss up cheek.

"Mamma!" Mary exclaimed,
Mrs. Vertrees had expressed that she had enjoyed the eveni had not caught cold. "Why do ask me?"

This inquiry obviously mad mother uncomfortable. "I don'tfaltered. "Ask you what, Mary?

"How I got along and wha like."

"Mary!"

"Oh, it isn't distressing!" said
"And I got along so fast—" She off to laugh; continuing then, that's the way I went at it, of
We are in a hurry, aren't we?"

"My dear, I don't know what

"What to make of anything!"
finished for her. "So that's all
Now I'll tell you all about it.

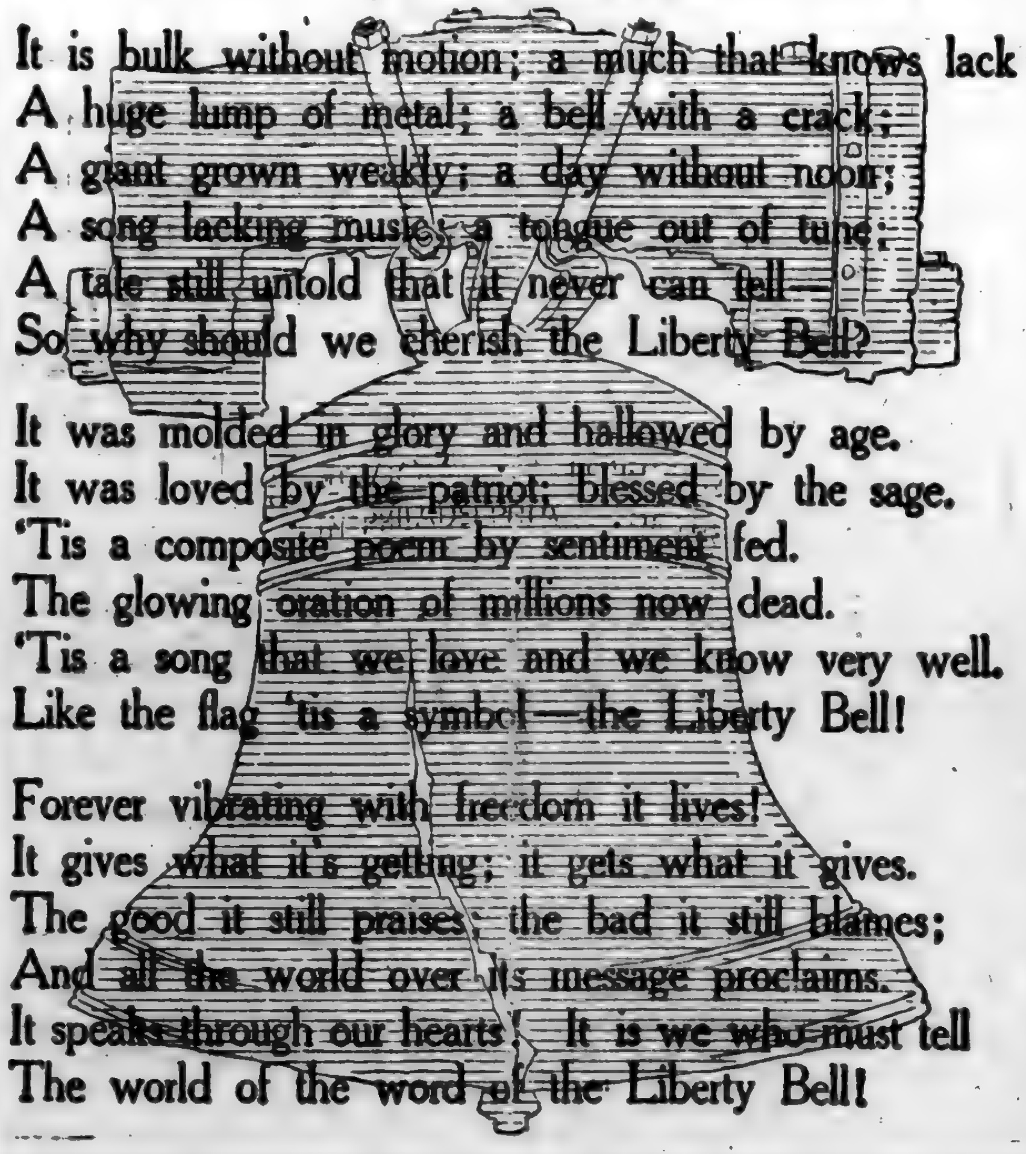
JUNE

L 908

0206

The Liberty Bell

By GRIF ALEXANDER



It is bulk without motion; a much that knows lack;
A huge lump of metal; a bell with a crack;
A giant grown weakly; a day without noon;
A song lacking music; a tongue out of tune;
A tale still untold that it never can tell—
So why should we cherish the Liberty Bell?

It was molded in glory and hallowed by age.
It was loved by the patriot; blessed by the sage.
'Tis a composite poem by sentiment fed.
The glowing oration of millions now dead.
'Tis a song that we love and we know very well.
Like the flag 'tis a symbol—the Liberty Bell!

Forever vibrating with freedom it lives!
It gives what it's getting; it gets what it gives.
The good it still praises; the bad it still blames;
And all the world over its message proclaims.
It speaks through our hearts! It is we who must tell
The world of the word of the Liberty Bell!

Obituary

Maria M. Hadsell, daughter of James and Mary (Abel) Hadsell, was born in the state of Ohio, Aug. 28th., 1845. Her parents were pioneer settlers of DeKalb County, Indiana. Her father was the second minister of the Christian Church in the County. He was a member of the Legislature at one time, and for forty years traveled over DeKalb and adjacent counties in the cause of Christianity.

In early girlhood she was baptized and united with the Church of Christ at Coburn's Corners in which organization she held her membership until her death. Dec. 25th., 1862, she was united in marriage to Jonathan Shull. To this union was born seven children:—Clara, wife of L. N. Lake who died Aug. 4, 1903; Cadmus, Thurman, Rosy, who died in infancy; Henry, Carl and Fred.

Her husband died 14 years ago and since that time she has lived with her son, Carl. Several years ago they moved to Walkerville, Mich., removing from there to a farm in Elbridge township, Michigan, six years ago. While at Walkerville, she joined the W. C. T. U. and she expressed her regrets that she was unable to meet with the society. For many weeks she was not able to attend Sunday School and church services which she enjoyed so much. She loved the beautiful hymns of God and never was tired of hearing them. Much of her time not needed for housework was spent in reading, especially her Bible and "The Christian Herald".

She suffered a stroke of apoplexy Saturday evening, June 10, from which she never rallied and at midnight the next Monday slept peacefully away. Age 70 years, 9 mos. and 15 days. She leaves to mourn her departure five sons, 2 brothers, 1 sister, 17 grandchildren and four great grandchildren besides a host of friends. Simple funeral services were held at her home under the beautiful trees where in life she so loved to sit and rest. Rev. and Mrs. VanCamp conducted the services. Her body was borne to Hart from which accompanied by her sons Carl and Fred, was taken back to her old home community where on Saturday afternoon, June 17, funeral services were conducted by Rev. Mahin, pastor of the Christian Church of Auburn, Ind., and her body lovingly laid at rest beside her husband in the Alton Cemetery.

Many People Poisoned.

We often wonder why so few people live out their allotted time, while a small per cent live beyond that mark. Scores of people meet death each year because of a slow process of poisoning that is going on within their bodies. This poisoning is caused by the glands of the body failing to perform their proper function. Poisonous matter accumulates within the system, and health declines. The unsightly liver splotches, billiousness, headache, dizziness bad taste in the mouth, a pain in the back or under the shoulder blade, a tired or achey feeling, are some of the most common evidences of this poisoning. If this poison is not eliminated and the cause removed, the resisting power is finally gone and life pays the penalty. Are you of the heedless class or are you safeguarding your health? GLANDO is what you need to restore glandular activity, and expel the poisons. Keep on the safe side and use a reliable remedy. Accept none but GLANDO, give it a fair trial.

If your druggist hasn't got it, have him get it for you, or send to the Gland-Aid Co., Ft. Wayne, Ind.

NEWVILLE

Mrs. Yeiser and children visited friends at Avilla, Sunday.

Mrs. G. F. DeLong remains about the same with no improvement so far.

Wm. Bowles and wife, and lady friend, all of Garrett, were Sunday guests of Mrs. Whitherst.

Grandma Dean is bedfast owing to the infirmities of old age.

Mrs. John Nelson and daughter-in-law, of Hicksville, were Thursday guests of Mrs. Jane Crum.

Mrs. Jennie Harter and daughter Mabel, went to Farmer Center, Saturday, to visit over Sunday with Mrs. Howard Worthington and family.

Elmer and Sam Wyatt and their wives motored to Ft. Wayne, Friday.

The W. C. T. U., met with Mrs. Rupe of Orangeville, last Friday afternoon.

Mrs. Nella McDonald, of Butler, was the guest of relatives here, Sunday.

Levon McDonald was the guest of his Grandma Miller, last week.

The item concerning the accident that occurred Sunday evening, June 18, was misprinted. Mr. Miller was not in the mix-up at all. We used the word (we) and (us) as all correspondents do, but it was only I, the better half was asleep in bed and had to be aroused to care for (us) me. I am recovering nicely from my injuries.

Dewey Miller, aged 18, son of John Miller and wife, enlisted with the Militia at Hicksville, Ohio, Sunday evening. Chas. Anderson, aged 17, adopted son of Mrs. Forest Morrow, also enlisted a few days ago. Lewis Harter, who enlisted a year or more ago, is driving the Red Cross ambulance.

Patronize
the merchants who advertise in this paper.
They [illegible] set you right.

The Gossips Say-

John Neiswander was a Sunday guest of Will Smith and wife.

Patriotic Services, next Sunday at the M. P. Sunday School—Come.

N. D. Thomas and wife returned Monday from their visit at Reading, Mich.

Madge Hart, of Wayne, was an over Sunday visitor in the home of F. P. Hart and family.

Mrs. Emma Abel returned home Wednesday after several weeks spent in the home of her daughter, Mrs. Arthur Woodcox, at Auburn.

Miss Lucile Gee was the guest of her brother, Howard Gee and family, at Hicksville, over night Thursday returning home Friday noon.

Mrs. Ethel Cheek returned Monday noon from a visit at Sherwood, the guest of S. Openlander and wife, and her grandma, Mrs. Wm. Leighty.

Rev C. W. Mahin, of Auburn, preached at the Christian Church, Sunday evening, on account of his appointment being changed at Auburn. Three auto loads accompanied him.

Lewis Smith, wife and two sons, of Lucas, Ohio, spent the past week the guests of Spencerville relatives. They also visited the former's uncle, W. A. G. Smith and wife, and Florence Buchanan and wife at this place.

Friday afternoon at 2:00 o'clock will be held the W. C. T. U., meeting at the home of Mrs. Kate Leighty. "Flower Mission and Relief Work" being the topic. All members are urged to be present. Special program will be the feature of the meeting.

Dr. H. R. Farnham
MEDICINE AND
GENERAL SURGERY
ST. JOE, INDIANA

Office Hours—Week Day
10:00 to 11:00 a. m.
1:00 to 3:00 p. m.
6:30 to 8:00 p. m.
Sunday—By appointment.
Telephone
Office,................No. 2

Office at Residence, Second house west of Widney Opera House.

Church Notes

M. P. Church Announcements.
J. C. Coons, Pastor.

St. Joe:—Sunday School, 9:00 a. m.; Christian Endeavor, 6:30 p. m.; Prayer Meeting, Thursday evening, 7:30 p. m.
Fairview:—Sunday School, 9 a. m.
Concord:—Sunday School, 9:00 a. m.

Christian Church Announcements.
St. Joe:—Bible School at 9 a. m.; Morning Worship at 10:15 a. m.; Christian Endeavor, 6:30 p. m.

Lutheran Church Announcements
A. K. Mumma, Pastor.
St. Joe:—Sunday School, 9:00 a. m
Christian Endeavor, 6:30 p. m
Communion services 10:30 a. m
Prayer Meeting, Thursday evening.

DRUGS EXCITE YOUR KIDNEYS, USE SALTS

If your Back is aching or Bladder bothers, drink lots of water and eat less meat.

When your kidneys hurt and your back feels sore, don't get scared and proceed to load your stomach with a lot of drugs that excite the kidneys and irritate the entire urinary tract. Keep your kidneys clean like you keep your bowels clean, by flushing them with a mild, harmless salts which removes the body's urinous waste and stimulates them to their normal activity. The function of the kidneys is to filter the blood. In 24 hours they strain from it 500 grains of acid and waste, so we can readily understand the vital importance of keeping the kidneys active.

Drink lots of water—you can't drink too much; also get from any pharmacist about four ounces of Jad Salts; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast each morning for a few days and your kidneys will act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to clean and stimulate clogged kidneys; also to neutralize the acids in urine so it no longer is a source of irritation, thus ending bladder weakness.

Jad Salts is inexpensive; cannot injure; makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink which everyone should take now and then to keep their kidneys clean and active. Try this, also keep up the water drinking, and no doubt you will wonder what became of your kidney trouble and backache.

S. S. Widney
Justice of the Peace
Insurance and Real Estate
Phone No. 10
ST. JOE, ... IND

100 Per Cent.

INCREASED EARNINGS.

The following is fac-simile of certificate of Bond issued to each Depositor in this Bank.

No. ____________ Grabill, Ind., ____________ 19____
Mr. ______________________________
THIS IS TO CERTIFY that your DEPOSITS in this bank are INSURED under a bond of THE AMERICAN GUARANTY COMPANY of Columbus, Ohio.
THE GRABILL STATE BANK.
PRESERVE THIS. By Albert Egly, Cashier.

Postal Savings pay 2 per cent. Interest and the money is placed in banks who have to furnish a Bond to the government to guarantee that the funds are safe in that Bank.

We pay 4 per cent. Interest and give you the same guarantee. An increased earning of 100 per cent.

THIS is the only Bank in this community thus insuring its depositors.

Total Assets, over $175,000

The Grabill State Bank
Established 1906

Joseph Witmer, President
David Klopfenstine, v. pres.
Albert Egly, Cashier
Joseph A. Grabill, Director
Peter W. Amstutz, Director
Julius Gehrig, Director
John B. Haifley, Chairman Board Directors

JULY

JULY

L 908

0208

Has Your Subscription Expired? Come in and renew it next time you are in town.

ST. JOE NEWS.

No newspaper can succeed without advertising, therefore we solicit the patronage of our readers for those who by their advertising help to make this paper possible.

VOL. XXX ST. JOE, DeKALB COUNTY INDIANA, THURSDAY JULY 6 1916 NO. 28

LOCAL ITEMS.

Patronize the advertisers.

WANTED–To buy your Hay. C. E. Frye, Phone 73-31, St. Joe.

LOST:-Purse containing nearly $5.00. Finder return to News office.

Dr. and Mrs. C. R. Price were Sunday afternoon guests of Geo. Price.

Wilbur Collins and wife, of near Butler, were guests of Ray Reasoner, Tuesday.

FOUND:—Good single tree. Owner call at News office, pay for ad and prove property.

Glen Abel and wife, of Spencerville, were guests of his parents, J. C, F. Abel and family, Tuesday.

A fine line of summer ready made wearables for Women and Children. Schloss' of Auburn.

Mrs. Viola Erick and daughter, of Wayne, visited Friday and Saturday with her mother, Mrs. Yarnell.

Dr. Farnham and Merritt Hull visited friends Sunday afternoon and attended the ball game. They were at Hamilton Lake, Wednesday.

Nothing like it—McCormick Binder—Car load just received at Curies. We will have one of them ready for you. How about it for this years crop?

M. T. Bishop and wife had as dinner guests Monday:—H. C Hathaway, wife and son Russell, Mrs. Minnie Kagey, of Auburn; Mrs. Charles Bishop and children, of Garrett; J. R. Bishop, wife and son Fredrick, and daughter Florence, of Bluffton; Mr. and Mrs. Paul Collins who are but recently married and who will leave in about a week for the groom's home home at Bonner's Ferry, Idaho.

Sunday School Report.

The following is a true and correct report of the various Sunday Schools in this neighborhood for last Sunday.

Lutheran	108	$3.41
M. P	90	4 53
Christian	80	2.56
Concord	102
Fairview	20	1.05
Coburntown	115	3.04
M. E. Spencer	105	4.45
Lutheran	112	2.77

McCormick Mowers at Curie's

Gusta Baker and friend, of Ft. Wayne, visited Morris Lothamers', Tuesday.

Chas. Benjamin and family, of Grabill, were guests of St. Joe relatives, Tuesday.

Ernest Hass, of Angola, came home with Harry Kinsey and was his guest here over Sunday.

Cut your grain with one of our new McCormick Binders. Curie has just received a large shipment.

Edith Berry visited her sister, Mrs. Hazel Steward and family, of Spencerville, from Wednesday until Friday.

Almon Burns, of Auburn; R. J. Hilligass and wife, Miss Eva Smith and Miss Ruth Heber, all of Huntertown, were Tuesday guests of J. P. Buckingham and wife.

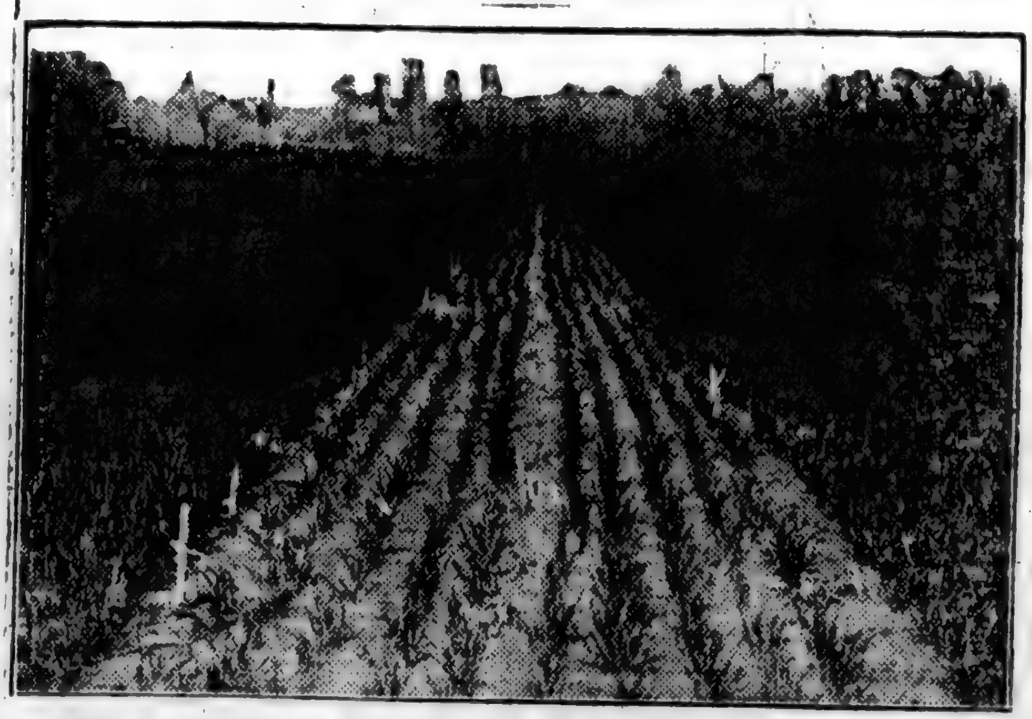
Mrs. Hillary Shuff and granddaughter, Miss Marguerite Milliman spent Wednesday night and Thursday the guests of the former's brother, Frank Hull, at Auburn.

Neff Culler and wife had as Sunday guests:—Samuel Smith and wife, Perry Smith, and Miss Minerva Brooks, all of Harlan; Harvey Kimes, sr., of Spencerville; James Simoh, Lewis Cutshall and two gentlemen friends, of Huntertown.

H. A. Bowman and family entertained:-John Beninghoff, wife and son Golden, A. F. Heyman, wife and daughter Mary Ellen, of Fort Wayne; Miss Ruth DeLong, of Chicago; Cecile Miller, of Newville; and Mary Jane Silberg, of Spencerville, at their home the Fourth.

The Women's Home and Foreign Missionary Society of the Lutheran Church held a very profitable as well as pleasant meeting, Saturday afternoon at the church. The July Committee, Mrs. A. K. Mumma and Mrs. Hollis Dilley planned the program and invited all the ladies of the church and also the society from Spencerville Lutheran Church, who at the close of the arranged program gave a splendid missionary drama. A most appetizing supper "pot luck" was participated in between five and six o'clock by all the ladies with their husbands and families to the number of seventy-five in the basement of the church. A free will offering was taken amounting to $3.75.

CROP FEEDING PAYS



This is a picture of an Indiana wheat field. It shows the rows the farmer didn't fertilize. A comparison with the ones on either side is a convincing argument that fertilizers pay. More fertilizers are used intelligently each year with not a single disappointed farmer among the users.

Simon Hendricks, of Auburn, spent the Fourth in St. Joe.

Old Reliable McCormick Mowers at Curie's. Get ready for that warm day.

W. H. Grimes, of Kendallville, spent from Sunday until Tuesday the guest of Frank Kinsey and family.

A. D. Brunson, Tom Brunson, Miss Clara Bash and Mrs. Mary Rowe were Tuesday evening supper guests of C. C. Bassett and wife.

L. M. Gee and wife, of Kendallville; Chas. Cook, wife, son Claud, and daughter Gladys, of Butler, were Tuesday guests of F. Kinsey and wife.

Dr. W. H. Cook, wife, daughter Gladys, and son Doland, of Hicksville, Ohio, and Aaron Schidler, of Cambridge City, Ind., were Monday guests of Dr. and Mrs. C. R. Price.

C. A. Patterson and wife accompanied by W. C. Stevicks and wife, of Cedarville, motored to Hoagland, Sunday, and spent the day with C. H. Hubler and wife, on their way home they called on D. J. Baker and wife, of Ft. Wayne.

On June 17 flour was sold from the car at $6.70 per barrel. On that date wheat was worth 98c. per bu. It required $6.50 worth of wheat to buy it. If 6 bu. and 50lb of wheat was exchanged for Daily Bread Flour it would get 240 lbs. of flour and 82 lbs. of feed, or a net saving of $2.41 on each barrel exchanged. Does it pay? Insist on Daily Bread Flour, made in your own home town.

When we see a man whose family is subsisting on the bare necessities of life, and he goes about crying hard times, and then see him come out of a grocery store with a plug of tobacco a foot long in one hand; a bag of smoking tobacco in the other, our compassion for him drops 40 degrees below the point of sympathy. That man needs to learn life's lesson over. When the wife markets the butter and eggs, an order is left for a quarters worth of "Scrap" regardless of the grocery needs. There is a true saying: "Live within your means, and you have means with which to live".

A daughter was born to John D. Milliman and wife, last Thursday.

Mrs. Ben Wasson, of Wayne, was in St. Joe, Friday, on business.

Billy Leighty, of Chicago, is here the guest of relatives for a few days.

The electric signals at the B. & O. crossings have not been completed yet.

Hannah Ulm and grand-daughter left last Thursday for Perrysville, Ohio, where she will be the guest of Judson Harrod for several days.

Mrs. Ida Walker, of Compton, Ill., and Mrs. Guy Walker and two children, of Mishawaka, are here the guests of relatives, J. C. Hull and family. They also visited relatives at Hicksville and Coburntown, last week.

Indiana is now for the fifth time mobilizing troops to go to war. The record is as follows:-Spring of 1832—Black Hawk war, 300 men. June 1846—Mexican war, 4,595 men. Spring of 1861—Civil war, 210,497 men. May, 1898—Spanish-American war 7,421 men. June, 1916—Mexican border service.

George Moore, of Auburn Junction, died at the Hope hospital in Wayne on Monday evening of last week, with bladder trouble. He was a man past 40 years of age, and leaves a wife and several children. George was well known here. He was engaged in the trucking business and his family run a grocery at the Junction.

The clerk of the court received word Wednesday from the Eastern hospital for the insane that the institution was ready to receive Burr Imhoff and DeLoyne W. Carson. These two patients are in jail in the charge of the sheriff and will be taken to the hospital some time this week.—Dispatch of June 30th.

One of the most beautiful spots in the community is Riverside. If you have not visited it lately just make a trip to St. Joe and see how beautiful the lawn is kept and the great improvements that are being made each week in the erection of grave stones. Seats are afforded those who desire to spend a few hours in the quiet city of the dead.

Geo. Ridgway, of Chicago Jc., was home the first of the week.

Rev. J. C. Coons and family will return from their vacation trip, this week.

E. R. Kinsey and family drove to Auburn, Sunday afternoon, after W. H. Pepple and wife. Foster Gee and family accompanied them as far as Eugene Carpers'.

On June 30, the St. Joe W. C. T. U. had an excellent meeting with Mrs. Kate A. Leighty, hostess. The session was opened by all singing "America". Mrs. Alice Warner led the devotional. The scripture lesson being "Charity". She also offered prayer. Mrs. Lora Leighty sang a solo, "Scatter Seeds of Kindness". As it was Flower Mission Day each lady responded with her favorite flower twenty-one members responding, and also the following guests:—Rev. A. K. Mumma and daughter, Miss Jean, and son David, Mrs. Esther Bowman and little daughter Eloise, Jessie Engle, Doratha Milliman, Mrs. Margaret Ulm, Mrs. Nina Kees of Marion, and Mrs. Cora Price, who became a new member. Mrs. Nina Kees, of Marion, gave a short talk of the Union of which she is a member in Grant county. Mrs. Addie Patterson read a selection from the Flower Mission number of the Union Signal which was very good. Bible reading by Mrs. Anna Baker from Mathews 25: 31-40. Rev. A. K. Mumma gave a very interesting talk. Miss Flossie Sechler gave a reading "When I Have Time". Mrs. Etta Hull dismissed the session with the White Ribbon benediction. Boquets were then made up with Scripture texts tied to each with white ribbon bows and were sent out as the messages of cheer from the Union. About thirty boqnets were sent out. Before the guests seperated to go to their various homes. The hostess served an elegant luncheon assisted by several of those present. All went home feeling that the afternoon had been profitably spent.

Send in your news items.

Meat market opened Saturday morning.

Oscar Burnier and family, of Auburn, spent the Fourth here.

Ray Reasoner and family were near Butler, Friday evening, the guests of her brother.

Miss Fairy Cole, of Garrett, came Monday noon to spend the Fourth with her uncle, John Wineland and family.

Mrs. Mary Buchanan left Monday noon for Mahsfield, Ohio, to visit her daughter, Mrs. J. Sturgis and family.

Archie Erickson and wife, of Garrett, spent Tuesday the guests of the latter's parents, F. Scholes and family.

Ernest Steward and wife, and Clarence Steward and wife, of Spencerville, were Tuesday dinner guests of DeForest Brown and wife.

Mrs. Howard Gee and little daughter Lucile, of Hicksville, spent from Tuesday noon until Wednesday noon the guests of S. D. Gee and wife.

Harry Kees and family, of Marion, were guests of Mrs. Addie Filley, from Friday until Monday. Clarence Woodcox and family, of Adrian, were here Sunday.

Newspapers in different Indiana towns are having a hard time of it as some of their force has responded to the call for volunteers. The Bee came very near not buzzing last week, due to the fact that two of its force left, besides having other difficulties. Kendallville is suffering also and hand composition is their only remedy for the situation.

Look Here!

If you are interested in building a home at this time, be sure to read the "Home Building" department in this issue of The News. You will get some really valualbe suggestions from one of the best architects in the country.

You are paying out many dollars a year when you buy the necessities of life. If you paid such bill by check you could save money and besides have a receipt for every payment.

Try the Check way. Start To-day.

St. Joe Valley Bank--State Bank

4 per cent. paid on certificates if left 1 Year.

Safety Deposit Boxes for Rent

Bran and Middlings in Car load lots is the way we buy them. In this way we give our trade the benefit of Carload price.

We have another car of salt on the way. If you have not tried a barrel of it, do so when you need your next one.

The highest market prices and a hearty welcome awaits you at

St. JOE ELEVATOR

SAMUEL KEESLER, Local Manager.

POULTRY WANTED!

Highest market prices will be paid for your old and young hens. If you can't bring them in to me just phone and I will call and get them. We have got to have the poultry and are willing to pay you the best price for it.

J. Beams

SPENCERVILLE, IND.

JULY

L 908

0209

TRANSPORTATION IN INDIANA

First Railroad Went Into Operation in 1839 and Nothing in Development of Indiana Has Been More Remarkable Than Expansion of Railroad Facilities—The Interurban System.

INDUSTRY ALSO MAKES GREAT STRIDES

By ELLIS SEARLES

From a wilderness one hundred years ago to one of the leading states of the Union in industry and transportation is a long step, but it is a record to which Indiana may point with much pride when she is celebrating her centennial anniversary in 1916. When Indiana became a state, in 1816, it was in reality a wilderness from the Ohio river to Lake Michigan. Numerous tribes of Indians and a few hardy pioneer families scattered here and there in small groups and communities constituted the population, and neither industry nor transportation had advanced beyond the most primitive types. Indiana was one grand forest, with the exception of the swampy prairies of the north part of the state, and before industry could be established the forests must be cleared away and the swamp land reclaimed. And until this was done there was no necessity for anything beyond primitive modes of transportation.

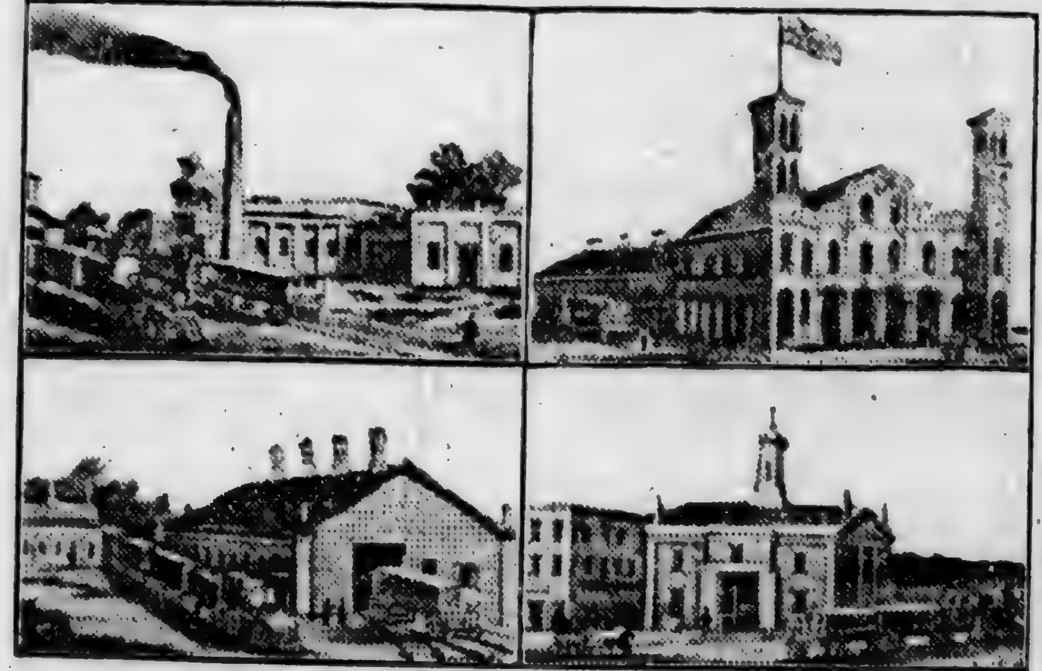
But Indiana was destined, from the nature of her soil, her ideal location geographically and the very spirit of her early people to become a great state. So, as the years passed, the state improved and assumed its rightful place among the states. Nothing, however, in the development of Indiana was more remarkable than the growth and expansion of her transportation facilities. The first railroad in Indiana was the Madison and Indianapolis road, which went into operation in 1839 and was completed to Indianapolis in 1847. Its total receipts in 1843 amounted to $22,110. This grew to $235,000 in 1849, and the daily travel increased from 25 to 200 passengers. The construction of this railroad from Madison to Indianapolis brought new capital and by the latter part of 1850 six more new roads were under way, with 142 miles of track built, in addition to the 86 miles of the M. & I. By the end of 1853 a score of railroads ran in all directions through Indiana, seven of them centering at Indianapolis.

Railroads Grow Fast.

From that time forward railroad building took rapid strides. New lines were built all over the state, and Indiana acquired exceptional transportation facilities. The report of the state tax board for 1915 showed that there were 13,828.99 miles of railroad track in the state, of which 7,232.37 miles was first main track. The total valuation of these steam railroads was $212,121,242.

Only two counties, Ohio and Switzerland, remain untouched by railroads

Besides the steam railroads, Indiana now has a wonderful network of electric interurban lines, one of the greatest in the country. The first electric street car system in the country was operated in Richmond Va., in 1889. Soon afterward the street railway at Lafayette, Ind., became the second. Then the Fairview park line at Indianapolis was electrified and others followed quickly.



Belle Fountain and Indiana Depot. Lafayette Depot. Cincinnati, Lawrenceburg and Indiana Depot. Madison and Indiana Depot.

First Railroad Depots in Indianapolis, 1854.

The first person to take up electric interurban building in Indiana was Charles L. Henry of Anderson, former member of congress, according to the "Centennial History and Handbook of Indiana," published recently by Max R. Hyman of Indianapolis. George R. Cottman, who wrote the book, says Henry conceived the idea in 1893. Mr. Henry invented the word "interurban" for this class of railroads. He built a line from Anderson to Alexandria, and on January 1, 1898, the first car ran between the two towns, a distance of 11 miles. From this humble beginning there grew, under the guidance of Henry, George F. McCollough of Muncie and Hugh J. McGowan of Indianapolis, the extensive network of interurbans in Indiana which now reach out from Indianapolis in every direction and also run in many other parts of the state. The Indianapolis, Greenwood and Franklin Railroad company ran the first interurban car into Indianapolis on January 1, 1900.

The electric railroad mileage in Indiana in 1915 amounted to 2,343.46 miles. Of this amount 2,036.67 miles was main track. The value of the electric railroads of the state, including street railroad, was $26 965,732. More than nine thousand persons are employed by the electric lines.

Interurban Transportation.

The advent of the interurban, like the advent of the steam railroad, worked wonders for Indiana. The interurbans give frequent passenger service, trains running at least every hour on all of them. This brings cities and country into close touch, opens better local markets, brings the rural population closer to the city and the city population nearer to the country. It has caused many persons to move from the cities to residences out in the open country and has enhanced the value of suburban lands. Indianapolis has the finest interurban union station in the country, erected at a cost of $1,500,000.

Prior to the coming of the railroads, Indiana's transportation facilities consisted of the ox team, the horse-drawn wagon, the Wabash & Erie canal and the Whitewater canal. The canals had done much to aid in the development of the state.

Indiana was the birthplace of the first automobile. In 1893 Elwood Haynes, Kokomo machinist, began experimenting on what he designated a "horseless carriage." In 1894 he made his first trip with the machine on the streets of Kokomo, at eight miles an hour. This was the first automobile ever made and operated. This machine is now in the Smithsonian institution at Washington as a government relic. The stupendous growth of the automobile industry is well known to all. The automobile has taken the place of all other methods of transportation for many purposes. The number of automobiles and motorcycles owned and in use in Indiana in 1915, as shown by the licenses issued by the secretary of state, was above 93 000. This represents an investment of perhaps $90,000,000 in these machines by Indiana people, which does not spell hard times. The increase in the number in 1915 over 1914 was about 20,000.

Speaking of the growth of industry and manufacturing in Indiana, the Centennial History and Handbook of Indiana says: "The manufacturing industries of Indiana are almost negligible during the earlier decades, the general conditions being a fatal handicap. By 1850 these conditions began to change, and with that change the manufacturing era set in. In 1849 the total value of the manufacturing output was $18,725,000. By 1869 it had increased to $100,000,000, and by 1909 to $579,075,000.

Growth in Industries.

"Within those years the state advanced from fourteenth to ninth place in the Union, and from the employment of 14,440 wage earners, representing 1.5 per cent of the total population, as estimated in 1850, we have for the 1910 estimate 186,984 employees, amounting to 6.9 per cent of the population. This growth is attributed by a census writer to the various natural resources of the state, but, as a matter of fact, the greatest of all factors, perhaps, has been improved transportation service which has made possible the development of natural resources. Practically the impetus begins with the incoming of the railroad, and the growth of the railroad system and the general industrial movement have gone abreast.

"By the census returns of 1910, $508,717,000 were invested in manufacturing industries in Indiana. There were 7,187 establishments, classified under 55 separate industries, besides 772 that were unclassified.

"The most important of these, as estimated by the capital invested, were in the order named, the iron industries, foundry and machine shop products, carriages and wagons, artificial gas, agricultural implements, lumber and timber products, automobiles, furniture and flour and grist mill products. These leading industries represent investments ranging from $47,781,000 for iron industries, to $15,857,000 for flour and grist mills. Of the total capital involved, about one-third is invested in the five leading cities, Indianapolis, South Bend, Fort Wayne, Evansville and Terre Haute, in the order named. Indianapolis is far in the lead with $76,497,000. Its largest industry is that of foundry and machine products. South Bend leads in the manufacture of carriages and wagons, with a capital of $17,442,000, which is far in excess of any other one local investment. Evansville leads in furniture.

"The ten leading manufacturing cities, other than the five already named, are, in the order of their investments: Hammond, Mishawaka, Richmond, Anderson, Michigan City, Muncie, Laporte, Elkhart, East Chicago and Elwood.

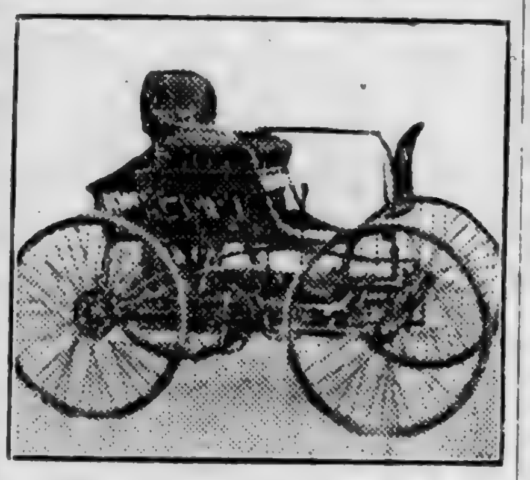
"Out of the state's total population of 2,700,873 in 1910, the manufactures gave employment to 208,263 persons, including wage earners and employers."

Gary is another great manufacturing center for iron and steel products, but the amount of investment and value of output has not been learned.

Other Public Utilities.

In connection with the manufacturing and the transportation development of Indiana, the express companies, the telegraph and telephone companies have played an important part. The first express company to do business in Indiana was the Adams, which opened in Indianapolis in 1847. There are now six express companies operating in the state, over 8,510.80 miles of railroad, and they are assessed for taxation at $1,002,480.

The first telegraph company was incorporated in 1848, and the first line was built in that year from Indianapolis to Dayton, O. There are now in the state 63,684.86 miles of telegraph lines, assessed at $3,495,568.



First Automobile Ever Built.

The telephone was introduced in Indianapolis in 1877, when three firms constructed short lines connecting the various departments of their plants. The first fire alarm system was installed in 1879. The telephone service has expanded until Indiana today is fairly netted with wires. In 1914 there were 429 telephone companies in the state. The total mileage was 375,471.28, and the assessed valuation in 1914 was $15,840,115.

In view of the remarkable showing of the figures quoted in the above brief recital of the history of Indiana's industrial, manufacturing and transportation development it is not strange that these elements will enter so largely into the celebration of the state's one hundredth birthday in 1916. A complete history of the growth of these features of Indiana's greatness in her one hundred years of statehood would read almost like a magic tale from the pages of a mystic romance. But it would all be true and it would prove what was said in the beginning—that Indiana is one of the greatest states of the Union.

The Bible in India.

The Bible has been translated in whole or in part, into more than a hundred Indian dialects, and it is estimated that 250,000,000, or more than three-fourths, of the people of India have some portion of the Scripture in their own language.

It is regarded not only by British but by many Hindu officials as one of the most important aids to the English nation in the government, education, and betterment of the people; is studied as a text book in a great number of schools and colleges; is bringing together the conglomerate races into a human fellowship, and by imbuing them with a spirit of humanity is gradually undermining the caste barriers, which have hitherto been one of the greatest obstacles in the way of true human civilization in India.

Cutting Them Short.

American slang has enriched the English vocabulary with many terse, vivid and indispensable additions. We are indebted to slang for "boom" and "slump" and "boss" and many other irresistible monosyllables.

There is originality, too, in American abbreviations. The shortened forms of the names of the States—Fla., Ga., Pa., Me., Ky.—may be somewhat lacking in dignity, but the space saving occasionally produces engaging results.

The preface of the American "Who's Who" contains a long list of these abbreviations, among which may be noted "Pros. Atty." for prosecuting attorney, "Prog." for Progressive, "Spity." for specialty, and strangest of all, "Conglist." for Congregationalist.

War Restores School Slate.

The shortage of paper in England caused by the war may lead to the reintroduction of the banished school slate or a specially prepared board substitute. The hygienic objection is met by the assertion that with proper safeguards, such as the insistence upon the use of the sponge and the retention by each child of its own slate, the likelihood of infection is reduced to a minimum. The trouble has always been that sponges are regarded by the average child in the light of a superfluity.

ADVANTAGES IN SQUARE DESIGN

Sensible Way to Build, Since for One Thing It Solves the Heating Problem.

MANY OTHER GOOD POINTS

Construction of House Shown in Illustration Allows a Large Airy Basement—Inside Arrangements Have All Been Carefully Planned.

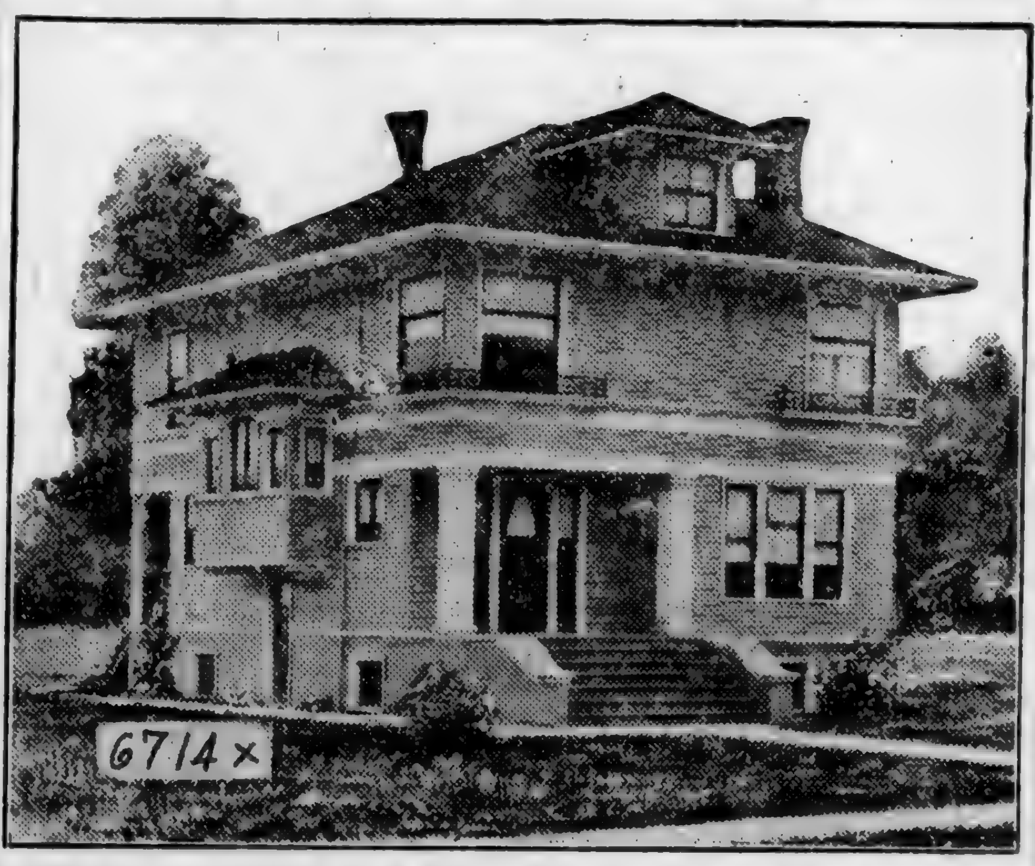
Mr. William A. Radford will answer questions and give advice FREE OF COST on all subjects pertaining to the subject of building, for the readers of this paper. On account of his wide experience as Editor, Author and Manufacturer, he is, without doubt, the highest authority on all these subjects. Address all inquiries to William A. Radford, No. 1827 Prairie avenue, Chicago, Ill., and only enclose two-cent stamp for reply.

By WILLIAM A. RADFORD.

Probably the most economical house design for the northern sections of the country is a square-built two-story house with a good basement. It is a good, sensible way to build, and it solves the heating problem in winter with greater satisfaction than any other style of house known to the American builder.

The principle of the circulation of warm air applies splendidly in a compact two-story house. The tendency of hot air is to rise, because hot air is lighter than cold air. In applying this principle the cold air is taken in from outside through the cold-air boxes and is sent through the furnace to the rooms on the first floor during the whole twenty-four hours. The upstairs registers usually are closed during the daytime in cold weather because the surplus heat from the first floor finds its way to the upper rooms through the stairway. The upper rooms are also warmed to a certain degree through the floors. This is written with a warm-air furnace in mind. The same principle applies to a certain extent when the hot-water system of heating is employed.

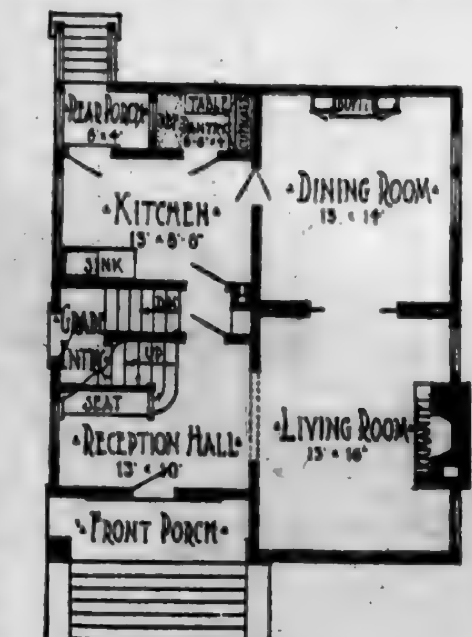
The house shown in this design is set well up on a concrete wall, in a way to make a splendid basement that is light and airy because of the large basement windows.



6714 x

The front porch and front entrance show moderately massive construction which taken together with the general clean-cut appearance gives the house a rather prosperous look as seen from the street.

The tendency the last few years has been to make wider front walks and wider steps, as though house owners were growing broader in their views of life and more generous in hospitality. The front steps here shown are ten feet wide in the clear between the ramps, and the front door is built in proportion. The door is four feet six in width and is flanked on both sides with the old-fashioned front door side lights. Such front entrance doors used to be plentiful, but they went out of fashion 20 or 30 years ago. They are now coming back into use because of real merit.

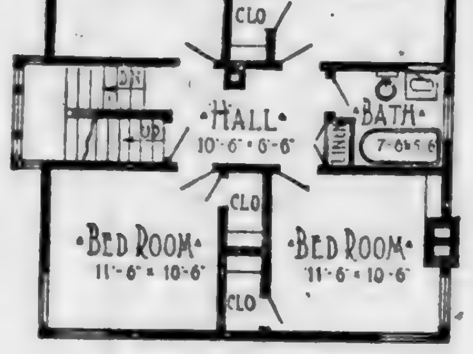


First Floor Plan.

The floor plans of this house are just as interesting as the perspective. There are three living rooms and a reception hall on the first floor and there are four good square bedrooms and a bathroom on the second floor. The large living room and dining room are connected by an archway wide enough so that the two rooms may be made into one by opening both doors clear back.

For this reason the buffet sideboard is built against the back of the dining room to avoid any unnecessary obstruction in the main part of the room. The living room and dining room are both made especially light and airy by two triple windows and three single windows. The present fashion is to have plenty of light in the living rooms, and it is a good fashion that should remain in vogue for the next thousand years. The history of house windows reads wider with each century.

An interesting feature of this house is the manner in which the stairway is built. To commence with, there is a grade entrance at the side of the house which leads down into the cellar and up into the kitchen, a combination that is used in a great many modern houses. The same economy of space and travel is employed in the stairway to the second floor and to the attic. It doubles back from a landing half way between floors. The landing is provided for by an extension built as a space saver to give plenty of length of stair run with wide treads and easy risers



Second Floor Plan.

The extension also contains windows to light the stairway, and as it is artistically designed it adds to the general appearance of this side of the house.

A study of the second floor plan will show that every square foot of floor space works to advantage. There are four bedrooms and four clothes closets all arranged on straight lines without shutting the light from any window and without any useless corners. Such a splendid arrangement of rooms is considered quite a triumph of skill on the part of an architect.

There is practically no wall space in the upper hallway. It is all taken up by the necessary doors. Even the linen closet is filched from the bathroom, although the two small linen closet doors open into the hallway.

The attic is of use only for storage purposes and for the drying of clothes on stormy washdays. For this reason there is a sensible stairway leading up to the attic and a door at the foot which closes it off from the rest of the house.

It is necessary to have a good wide lot for a house built after this design to show it to advantage. On general principles a full two-story square house may be put on a smaller lot than a wide spreading or squatty building, but any good dwelling deserves room enough to look right. When buying a lot for a home or planning a house for a lot already purchased it is well to keep in mind that any house looks best when it fits the lot.

The lawn around a good full two-story house requires different treatment from a low dwelling with an overhanging roof. Shrubbery and vines are needed for the proper finish of any dwelling, and room for these should be provided for when the plans are being drawn and the lot purchased.

New Facts About Moses.

Bible questions were put to 60 pupils in the Sedgwick county rural schools, says a Kansas City correspondent of the New York Sun. Describing the funeral of Moses one boy wrote:

"It was on a still night when the rush of a train broke the silence and at daybreak he was buried at the foot of a mountain and let the dirt roll down on him."

Two of the answers to a Prodigal Son question were:

"The Prodigal Son went away from home and after a while he came back and said, 'Father, thou art a sinner.'"

"While he was yet a great way off his father came to meet him and fell on his dirty neck and kissed him."

Not an Essential One.

"Pa, what's the difference between the Wall street bulls and bears?"

"All the difference between a toss-up and a tight squeeze."

Look For This Name

Libby's

On Packages of

Olives and Pickles

—it's a quality mark for exceptionally good table dainties.
Our Manzanilla and Queen Olives, plain or stuffed, are from the famous olive groves in Spain.

Libby's Sweet, Sour and Dill Pickles are piquant and firm. Your summer meals and picnic baskets are not complete without them.

Insist on Libby's at your grocer's.

Libby, McNeill & Libby
Chicago

Just Suited the Manager.

He was a comedian in a fifth-rate touring company, and even in that he hadn't been a success.

One evening, just before his first cue, he approached the manager.

"I say, I'm afraid I sha'n't be able to appear tonight," he said.

"Why not?" was the angry question.

"Dunno what's the matter, but I feel so funny."

"Then for goodness' sake go on now!" yelled the manager. "It'll be the first time you've been funny since you joined this gang."

CARE FOR YOUR HAIR

Frequent Shampoos With Cuticura Soap Will Help You. Trial Free.

Precede shampoo by touches of Cuticura Ointment if needed to spots of dandruff, itching and irritation of the scalp. Nothing better for the complexion, hair, hands or skin than these super-creamy emollients. Also as preparations for the toilet.

Free sample each by mail with Book. Address postcard, Cuticura, Dept. L, Boston. Sold everywhere.—Adv.

To Save Meteorites.

The South African Journal of Science records the steps that have been thus far taken as the suggestion of the South African Association for the Advancement of Science, to obtain legislation in various countries relative to the preservation of meteorites in the interests of science. The committee of sections A and C of the British association adopted the following resolution at the Australia meeting: "That in view of the fact that meteorites which convey information of worldwide importance are sometimes disposed of privately in such a way as to deprive the public of this information, the council be requested to take such steps as may initiate international legislation to the matter."

Human Nature.

"Nobody—hod-durn him!—can stay in my hotel and sneer at our progressive little city!" snarled the landlord of the Petunia tavern after he had kicked a guest out and hurled his gripsack after him—"He said that about all of the energy displayed by our citizens was in running for office!"

"But," we objected, "we have often heard you declare that this town was the habitat of more crooks, deadbeats, hypocrites, fools and gossips to the square inch than any other hamlet on the face of the earth."

"Yes, and it's so, too!" he returned. "But, by gosh, I live here and am privileged to find as much fault as I like with everything in town, but no stranger has a right to criticize anything!"—Kansas City Star.

For Pure Goodness and delicious, snappy flavor no other food-drink equals

POSTUM

Made of wheat and a bit of wholesome molasses, it has the rich snap and tang of high-grade Java coffee, yet contains no harmful elements.

This hot table drink is ideal for children and particularly satisfying to all with whom coffee disagrees.

Postum comes in two forms; The original Postum Cereal requires boiling; Instant Postum is made in the cup instantly, by adding boiling water.

For a good time at table and better health all 'round, Postum tells its own story.

"There's a Reason"

Sold by Grocers everywhere.

JULY

L 908

0210

WHY WOMEN WRITE LETTERS

To Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co.

Women who are well often ask "Are the letters which the Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co. are continually publishing, genuine?" "Are they truthful?" "Why do women write such letters?"

In answer we say that never have we published a fictitious letter or name. Never, knowingly, have we published an untruthful letter, or one without the full and written consent of the woman who wrote it.

The reason that thousands of women from all parts of the country write such grateful letters to the Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co. is that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has brought health and happiness into their lives, once burdened with pain and suffering.

It has relieved women from some of the worst forms of female ills, from displacements, inflammation, ulceration, irregularities, nervousness, weakness, stomach troubles and from the blues.

LYDIA E. PINKHAM

It is impossible for any woman who is well and who has never suffered to realize how these poor, suffering women feel when restored to health; their keen desire to help other women who are suffering as they did.

Genuine Eloquence.

There are no people in the world with whom eloquence is so universal as with the Irish. When Leigh Ritchie was traveling in Ireland, he passed a man who was a painful spectacle of pallor, squalor and raggedness. His heart smote him and he turned back.

"If you are in want," said Ritchie, "why don't you beg?"

"Surely it's beggin' I am, yer honor."

"You didn't say a word."

"Of course not, yer honor, but see how the skin in sp'aking through me trousers! and the bones cryin' out through me skin! Look at me sunken cheeks, and the famin' that's starin' in me eyes! Man alive, isn't it beggin' I am with a thousand tongues!"

RED CROSS BALL BLUE

Insures snowy white beautiful clothes on washday. Buy Red Cross Blue, not just cheap liquid blue which makes your clothes greenish yellow. Red Cross Ball Blue large packages cost only 5 cents. All good grocers sell it.—Adv.

The average lazy man gets along so well in this old world that he encourages idleness in others.

The letter P, like selfish friends, is first in pity and last in help.

Achy Joints Give Warning

A creaky joint often predicts rain. It may also mean that the kidneys are not filtering the poisonous uric acid from the blood. Bad backs, rheumatic pains, sore, aching joints, headaches, dizziness, and urinary disorders are all effects of weak kidneys and if nothing is done, there's danger of more serious trouble. Use Doan's Kidney Pills, the best recommended kidney remedy.

An Indiana Case

"Every Picture Tells a Story"

Wm. R. Hamilton, Jones Ave., Warren, Ind., says: "For years I had kidney trouble and at times there was a complete retention of the kidney secretions. My whole system was affected and I had dizzy spells and sharp pains in my loins. I couldn't sleep well, and mornings was tired and worn out. It was hard for me to work. Nothing helped me until I used Doan's Kidney Pills. They restored me to better health than I had enjoyed for years."

Get Doan's at Any Store, 50c a Box

DOAN'S KIDNEY PILLS

FOSTER-MILBURN CO., BUFFALO, N. Y.

ABSORBINE STOPS LAMENESS from a Bone Spavin, Ring Bone, Splint, Curb, Side Bone, or similar trouble and gets horse going sound. It acts mildly but quickly and good results are lasting. Does not blister or remove the hair and horse can be worked. Page 17 in pamphlet with each bottle tells how. $2.00 a bottle delivered. Horse Book 9 M free.

ABSORBINE, JR., the antiseptic liniment for mankind, reduces Painful Swellings, Enlarged Glands, Wens, Bruises, Varicose Veins; heals Sores. Allays Pain. Will tell you more if you write. $1 and $2 a bottle at dealers or delivered. Liberal trial bottle for 10c stamps.

W. F. YOUNG, P. D. F., 310 Temple St., Springfield, Mass.

DAISY FLY KILLER

DAISY FLY KILLER

placed anywhere, attracts and kills all flies. Neat, clean, ornamental, convenient, cheap. Lasts all season. Made of metal, can't spill or tip over; will not soil or injure anything. Guaranteed effective. All dealers or 6 sent express paid for $1.00

HAROLD SOMERS, 150 De Kalb Ave., Brooklyn, N. Y.

KIDNEY TROUBLE Is a deceptive disease—thousands have it and don't know it. If you want good results you can make no mistake by using Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, the great kidney remedy. At druggists in fifty cent and dollar sizes. Sample size bottle by Parcel Post, also pamphlet telling you about it. Address Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y., and enclose ten cents, also mention this paper.

GALLSTONES FREE

Avoid operations. Positive remedy—(No Oil)—Results sure. Write for our big Book of Truth and Facts To-Day

Gallstone Remedy Co., Dept. C-60, 2103 Dearborn St., Chicago

W. N. U., FORT WAYNE, NO. 28—1916

INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

(By E. O. SELLERS, Acting Director of the Sunday School Course in the Moody Bible Institute of Chicago.)

(Copyright by Western Newspaper Union.)

LESSON FOR JULY 9

THE THESSALONIAN CHRISTIANS.

LESSON TEXT—I Thess. 2:17-20; 4:13-18; 5:14-24.

GOLDEN TEXT—If we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so them also that are fallen asleep in Jesus will God bring with him.—I Thess. 4:14 R. V.

This epistle is probably one of the earliest of Paul's letters (A. D. 50-53?). It links itself closely with the seventeenth chapter of the Book of Acts. Driven from Berea, Paul goes to Athens and later to Corinth, while Timothy returns to Thessalonica and carries a report to Paul at Corinth. Whereupon, perhaps within six months, Paul writes his epistle. A study of the two letters addressed to this church teaches us how Paul advised and instructed his Gentile converts. The first is a particularly cheerful, positive and helpful exhortation.

I. Thanksgiving and Testimony (1:1-90; 2:17-20). (1) Salutation (1:1) The phrase, "the church of the Thessalonians which is in God" is nowhere else used. Some think it to be unique because Paul had so little to condemn or to criticize. The deity of Jesus Christ and that grace and peace proceed from God is clearly set forth. (2) Thanksgiving (vv. 2 and 3) (a) For works of faith; (b) for their "labor of love," and (c) their "patience" (endurance). That these works were "in the sight of God" is evidence of their genuineness, and such spiritual fruitage awakened (3) Knowledge in Paul's mind (v. 4). They were "elected" to salvation, holiness and likeness to Jesus (vv. 5-9; I Pet 1:2; Eph. 1:4, 5; Rom. 8:29). (4) Testimony (vv. 6-10). Paul could appeal to the known conduct of himself and his friends to substantiate, to prove, the standing of those candidates for holiness who had been "elected." His words had not come to them in mere exhortation and eloquence but "also in power," which governed their conduct. This was not to win applause, but in his own case he labored for their sakes (v. 5) and in their case they had received the word "with joy" in the midst of affliction to the end that they became examples (patterns or types; literally, like the far echoing notes of a trumpet) (v. 7) to all that dwelt in the regions thereabout. Their obedience, consistency and missionary spirit (vv. 8-10) sounded forth everywhere and all that needed to be done was to say, "Behold the church of Thessalonica!" (5) Paul's glory and joy (2:17-20). Paul sets forth his character as a Christian worker (2:1-16). (a) His physical boldness (vv. 1, 2); (b) his faithful, impartial teaching (vv. 3-6), affectionately kind (7,8), unselfish, working for his own support (v. 9), holy and consistent (13-16). No one "had anything on him," and such a life dares to be bold, though it is not free from persecution (v. 15). (6) Paul's desire (2:17-20). He here sets forth why this letter was written. Separated from them by persecution, he desires to return and supply the things they were yet lacking and to see face to face those whom he loved. Satan prevented (v. 18) doubtless using the bitter persecution stirred up against him. He had therefore sent Timothy from Berea to comfort them (3:15), who had made such a good report (3:1-10) that it urged Paul to greater prayer (vv. 11-13) on their behalf.

II. Ignorance Illumined (4:13-18). Paul rebukes certain sins (4:1-12), exhorting them to godliness and to love one another. He then touches upon a doctrine which was one of his strongest reasons for writing to these Thessalonians. The imminent return of Christ had been strongly emphasized, but in the months of Paul's absence some of their number had died, died without seeing Christ's promised glory. Would those who remained have any advantage over the dead saints when Christ should come? It is to set their thinking aright that Paul writes. This he does by outlining the great and blessed hope of the church in its "rapture" at Christ's coming. This is more clearly set forth here than anywhere else in the New Testament. Those who mourned over departed loved ones are not to "sorrow as those who had no hope." Jesus the risen, everlasting Savior and king, is certainly coming again in his kingdom of glory, "with a shout, with the voice of the archangel." Their sorrow is not that of the world, for those departed are but "sleeping" and will come back with Jesus when he comes. Together they who sleep and we who are alive shall be caught up "to meet the Lord in the air," all to dwell together forevermore with the Lord, in one glorious company when his kingdom is fully come and his will is completely done on earth as well as in heaven. Their bodies, risen from the grave and reunited to their souls in a glorified condition, and we who remain, the whole church or body of Christ caught up like Enoch of old (Heb. 11) or Elijah—a glorious hope! This is not alone Paul's word upon this question, but this he says "by (or in) the Word of God" (v. 15). No wonder, then, that we should comfort one another "with these words" (v. 18).

The Lord, who is now in heaven (Acts 1:9; Eph. 1:20), shall himself descend from heaven; not his spirit, not a great revival, army of angels, or social reconstruction of society, but descend himself, personally, visibly and bodily (Acts 1:11; Jno. 14:3; Heb 9:28; Phil. 3:20, 21).

Paul's description of the events of this second coming, this rapture of the church, has not yet been fulfilled, but he and the disciples were not mistaken as to its nearness, its imminence.

III. The Hope of Church and State (5:14-24). The letter closes with moral exhortations with reference to spiritual leaders, care of one another, the spirit of prayer; and he exhorts them not to "quench the Spirit" by despising prophesying, that preaching and testifying which can be exercised by the weakest, feeblest member of the church if he be Spirit-endued.

To meet error they are to "prove all things, holding fast that which is good but abstaining from every form of error."

NO TIME FOR FAINT HEART

God's Service Today Demands the Best That His Servants Are Able to Produce.

The things that you and I need most for this day of testing, are the things that our religion ought to give us. There never was a time in our whole history when our religion needed more to be the fine, solid, assured thing that it ought to be than it does today. This is the day for courage, and faith, and hopefulness; never a day that needed them more. We ought to have them, both for our own sake and for the sake of the world about us. If we haven't them, then it must be that we have left the finest and most Christian things out of our religion. If we haven't them, then surely our religious faith does not go down deeply enough, and does not take a strong enough grip of the great eternal and enduring truth. As God's children, in God's world, with his program for its redemption before us, there is no room for faint-heartedness or fear even in days like these. This is a fine time for optimism, real Christian optimism: there certainly never was a bette—Christian Guardian

SMALL THINGS THAT COUNT

Good Supply of Adjustable and Washable Collars and Cuffs Makes for Appearance.

Like Phoebe Snow, of travel fame, the girl who is well supplied with adjustable collars and cuffs of washable and cleansible materials will always be smart and good to look upon. These are requisites of the wardroge one can hardly do without, if we are to be presentable with a limited wardrobe at home or traveling abroad. Widely different in design and fabric they are, yet excellent in style and easily obtained, for shops generally are supplied with very good assortments of these essential accessories of dress.

The severely tailored set is to be had in crash, linen and woolen fabrics that are easily cleaned. Machine stitching and covered button molds give the snappy trimming touch. Daintier and more feminine is the crisp white organdie set with ruffles of accordion-plaited net. Organdie-covered buttons set out in trim rows, and well-spaced tucks give distinction to this set.

Quilt Protector.

Quilt or blanket protectors, stamped for embroidery, cost 35 cents. They are strips of sheer lawn to tack over the end of the quilt or blanket that comes at the head of the bed, in contact with the face. They can be simply hemmed or edged with a narrow val lace, fulled on. The patterns for embroidery are simple and can be done in white cotton or in colored cotton to match the stripe in the blanket or the figure in the comforter.

Shades of 1830.

A quaint dress of brown satin attracted much notice on Fifth avenue the other day. The skirt was ruffled to the hips with scant bias frills two inches wide. The front was slit to the waist and rippled back over a white organdie petticoat, trimmed with innumerable rows of ruffled black moire ribbon. The coat waist was short and tight fitting and fastened in the front by two frogs of gold braid.

SOME NEW FACTS

Two Wisconsin inventors have patented a device to count persons entering street cars by electrical mechanism connected with the steps.

A new globular life preserver to be strapped upon the shoulders of two persons can be packed flat and opened for use by revolving a crank.

Massachusetts students of wireless have had good success with experiments in sending and receiving messages with aerials laid on the ground.

One Man for Lofty Position.

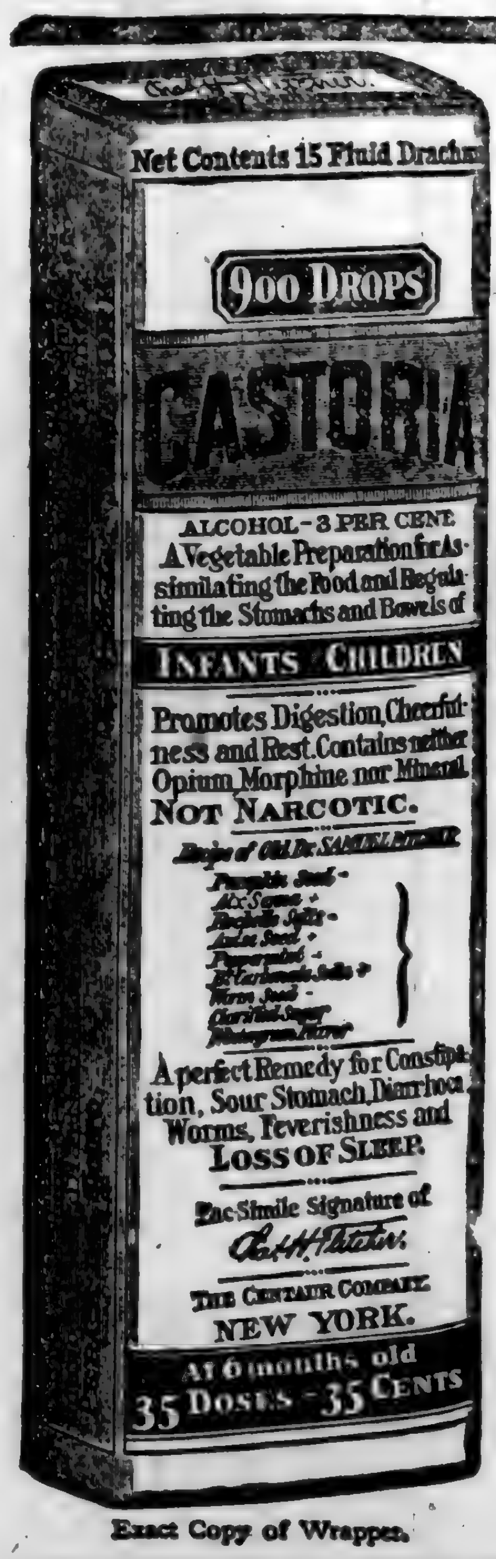
At the recent call for window cleaners for New York's municipal building of 34 stories, one candidate appeared before the municipal civil service examination committee. The city hired him in a hurry.

Cruel of Her.

"I knew what you were going to say before you said it."

"Why, you must be a mind reader."

"Oh, that wouldn't help me any in your case."



Net Contents 15 Fluid Drachm
900 DROPS
CASTORIA
ALCOHOL—3 PER CENT
A Vegetable Preparation for Assimilating the Food and Regulating the Stomachs and Bowels of
INFANTS CHILDREN
Promotes Digestion, Cheerfulness and Rest. Contains neither Opium, Morphine nor Mineral.
NOT NARCOTIC.
A perfect Remedy for Constipation, Sour Stomach, Diarrhoea, Worms, Feverishness and LOSS OF SLEEP.
Fac-Simile Signature of
THE CENTAUR COMPANY, NEW YORK.
At 6 months old
35 DOSES—35 CENTS

Exact Copy of Wrapper.

Children Cry For

Fletcher's CASTORIA

What is CASTORIA

Castoria is a harmless substitute for Castor Oil, Paregoric, Drops and Soothing Syrups. It is pleasant. It contains neither Opium, Morphine nor other Narcotic substance. Its age is its guarantee. It destroys Worms and allays Feverishness. For more than thirty years it has been in constant use for the relief of Constipation, Flatulency, Wind Colic, all Teething Troubles and Diarrhœa. It regulates the Stomach and Bowels, assimilates the Food, giving healthy and natural sleep. The Children's Panacea—The Mother's Friend.

GENUINE CASTORIA ALWAYS

Bears the Signature of

Chas. H. Fletcher.

In Use For Over 30 Years

The Kind You Have Always Bought

THE CENTAUR COMPANY, NEW YORK CITY.

Lost.

The late Gilman Marston of New Hampshire was arguing a complicated case, and looked up authorities back to Julius Caesar. At the end of an hour and a half, in the most intricate part of his plea, he was pained to see what looked like inattention. It was as he had feared. The judge was unable to appreciate the nice points of his argument.

"Your honor," he said, "I beg your pardon; but do you follow me?"

"I have so far," answered the judge, shifting wearily about in his chair, "but I'll say frankly that if I thought I could find my way back, I'd quit right here."—Christian Register.

Get a Trial Tube Now Prove These Facts Yourself.

That "SPEARMINTO" Tooth Paste is best for teeth. NO ALCOHOL—NO SOAP—NO GRIT—NO COLORING or other injurious ingredients. Contains the only known harmless ingredient that prevents the FORMATION of TARTAR. That is why you clean your teeth as TARTAR is the chief cause of decay. Send your Dentist's and Druggist's name, for free sample of "SPEARMINTO" Tooth Paste. Address The Spearminto Co., 336 West 33d St., Chicago, Ill.—Adv.

Accounting for It.

"I know a man who had a hundred curtain calls in a week."

"I suppose he is a matinee idol."

"No; he was a house furnisher."

SPOHN'S
DISTEMPER COMPOUND

COLT DISTEMPER

You can prevent this loathsome disease from running through your stable and cure all the colts suffering with it when you begin the treatment. No matter how young, SPOHN'S is safe to use on any colt. It is wonderful how it prevents all distempers, no matter how colts or horses at any age are "exposed." All good druggists and turf goods houses and manufacturers sell SPOHN'S at 50 cents and $1 a bottle; $5 and $10 a dozen. SPOHN MEDICAL CO., Chemists and Bacteriologists, Goshen, Ind., U. S. A.

The Wheat Yield Tells the Story of Western Canada's Rapid Progress

160 ACRE FARMS IN WESTERN CANADA FREE

The heavy crops in Western Canada have caused new records to be made in the handling of grains by railroads. For, while the movement of these heavy shipments has been wonderfully rapid, the resources of the different roads, despite enlarged equipments and increased facilities, have been strained as never before, and previous records have thus been broken in all directions.

The largest Canadian wheat shipments through New York ever known are reported for the period up to October 15th, upwards of four and a quarter million bushels being exported in less than six weeks, and this was but the overflow of shipments to Montreal, through which point shipments were much larger than to New York.

Yields as high as 60 bushels of wheat per acre are reported from all parts of the country; while yields of 45 bushels per acre are common.

Thousands of American farmers have taken part in this wonderful production. Land prices are still low and free homestead lands are easily secured in good localities, convenient to churches, schools, markets, railways, etc.

There is no war tax on land and no conscription.

Write for illustrated pamphlet, reduced railroad rates and other information to Superintendent Immigration, Ottawa, Canada, or

W. S. NETHERY, Room 82, Interurban Station Bldg., Columbus, Ohio;
G. W. AIRD, 215 Traction-Terminal Building, Indianapolis, Indiana
Canadian Government Agent

Typewriter Service in Rural Communities

The typewriter is coming into more extended use in rural communities because of the assistance it renders to all classes of people. Here are a few examples of the possibilities of service:

The Farmer: Think of the possibilities of selling produce by the means of typewritten letters sent out to customers? Typewritten letters give the sender a business standing with the people who receive them and also enable the keeping of carbon copies of the correspondence, which many times does away with misunderstandings and lawsuits.

The General Store Merchant: More prompt and courteous treatment is likely to be accorded his orders and correspondence with the City jobber and manufacturer if his letters are typewritten.

In The Home: The boy or girl who is intending to follow a business career can secure no better start than a knowledge of typewriter operating. Children who learn to use the typewriter learn spelling at the same time. The housewife finds it a great convenience in writing recipes and for general correspondence.

The Minister: No Clergyman should be without a typewriter. It is of great assistance in preparing sermons and writing the many letters that a pastor has to write.

Mail us the Coupon to-day

L. C. Smith & Bros.

L. C. SMITH & BROS. TYPEWRITER CO.
SYRACUSE, NEW YORK

Please send me information as checked below:

( ) Send me free catalog.
( ) How can I get a Factory Rebuilt L. C. Smith & Bros. typewriter?
( ) What about trading in my old machine?

Name ______
Street or P. O. ______
State ______

JULY

L 908

The St. Joe News

Fred B. Leighty, Editor
Mrs. Iora Leighty, Associate

One Year, - - - $1.00
Six Months, - - - .50
Three Months, - - - .25

Entered at the postoffice at St. Joe, Indiana, as second class matter.

Follow the Directions

On each sack of Daily Bread Flour you will find directions for Baking Bread, follow the directions and you will have a much finer and tastier Loaf of Bread than any Spring Wheat ever baked. Indiana made flour is considered Far Superior to any flour on the market, it is sold by all dealers on a Positive Guarantee at 75c for 1-8 bbl or $5.60 full bbl or on exchange at the Mill at 35 per bu including 12 pounds of feed thus a saving of over $1.00 a bbl.

St. Joe Mills.

Local Briefs

Theron Reasoner came Wednesday to visit John George and family.

Ray Herrick, wife and son Russell, spent Sunday afternoon with Alva Perry and family.

Mrs. John Geisinger, of Auburn, spent from Friday until Monday the guest of her father, Joseph Koch.

Chelma Miser, of Auburn, was a Tuesday and Wednesday guest of M. H. Andress and F. M. Monroe and families.

Read the Free Column.

Mrs. Chas. Anthony spent the past week with her brother near Hicksville.

Ella Wilmot and wife were Sunday guests of their son, George and family.

George Milner and wife, of South Bend, were guests of Mrs. Harriett Bills, the first of the week.

Norman Wyatts' of Auburn, were over Sunday guests of Mrs. E. F. Bills and Homer Stackhouse.

Vernie Monroe and Agnes Sechler were over Sunday guests of Jesse Copp and wife, at New Haven.

G. M. Barney was at Defiance, Saturday, and attended the initiation of six candidates at the Masonic Royal Arch.

Mort Milliman and daughter, Mrs. Fanny Beaber, were Sunday afternoon guests of George and John Milliman and their families.

Eleven room house on West Main St., for sale or rent. Other well located residence properties and vacant lots for sale on easy terms. S. S. WIDNEY

LaFayette Bailey and wife, of Auburn, spent Sunday the guests of the former's parents, Champ Bailey and wife, and also G M. Barney and wife.

Mrs. Henry Sechler and daughter Thelma, and Theodore Cole, all of Butler, and Mrs. Ella Keesbury of Ft Wayne, were Monday afternoon guests of Jacob Sechler and family.

Henry Hathaway and Frank Bowman, as delegates, were accompanied to the State Firemens' Association Meeting at Berne, Thursday, by Charles Koch and Elza Kinsey.

Wm. Sommers and wife, of Coburntown, Jacob Baltz and wife, of Spencerville, Mrs. B. E. Widney and wife, of north of town, Orange Herrick and wife and Miss Jessie Moffett were Sunday guests of Susan Sechler.

Order Saturday Evening Post, 5c.

Agnes Sechler was home over the Fourth.

See Wallace for Building Material at St. Joe Saw Mill.

Miss Mary Philpott, of McClure, is the guest of Mrs. Thornton for a week.

Howard Northrup and wife were Sunday dinner guests of Will Hamilton and wife.

Schloss' of Auburn are showing a fine line of Summer Dress Materials.

Charles Kinsey, wife and son, of Auburn, were Sunday guests of George Kinsey and family.

Mrs F. M. Hoffman and daughters, Margaret and Ruth, of Hicksville, were guests of F. M. Thornton and wife, last Wednesday.

Saxe Hadsell and wife, Mrs Frank Bachtol and baby, and Mrs. John Coburn motored to Auburn, Sunday afternoon, and called on friends.

Miss Pauline Barney returned home Monday evening from a few days visit with Hicksville friends Miss Elva Fredricks returned with her for a weeks visit.

Philip Carper and wife, of near Auburn, were Sunday dinner guests of R. H. Abel and wife. Walter Abel and wife were afternoon, and Will Hamilton, wife and daughter Margaret Eleanor, were evening guests also of the Abel home.

At home, Sunday, July 2nd, the family of Mr. and Mrs. S. S. Davis enjoyed the day under the parental roof where a bounteous dinner was spread. Those present were Judson Davis and wife, and Arthur Flynn and wife, of Chicago, Ill.; Lee Thompson, wife and son; Ray Davis and wife, of Auburn; H. M. Widney, wife and daughter Doris, and B V. Widney and wife. The only absent ones were Lee Smith and wife, of Portsmouth, Ohio, which was unavoidable at this time May such gatherings be many without a broken link in the chain

Federal Inquiry or Railroad Strike?

Faced by demands from the conductors, engineers, firemen and brakemen that would impose on the country an additional burden in transportation costs of $100,000,000 a year, the railroads propose that this wage problem be settled by reference to an impartial Federal tribunal.

With these employes, whose efficient service is acknowledged, the railroads have no differences that could not be considered fairly and decided justly by such a public body.

Railroads Urge Public Inquiry and Arbitration

The formal proposal of the railroads to the employes for the settlement of the controversy is as follows:

> "Our conferences have demonstrated that we cannot harmonize our differences of opinion and that eventually the matters in controversy must be passed upon by other and disinterested agencies. Therefore, we propose that your proposals and the proposition of the railways be disposed of by one or the other of the following methods:
>
> 1. Preferably by submission to the Interstate Commerce Commission, the only tribunal which, by reason of its accumulated information bearing on railway conditions and its control of the revenue of the railways, is in a position to consider and protect the rights and equities of all the interests affected, and to provide additional revenue necessary to meet the added cost of operation in case your proposals are found by the Commission to be just and reasonable; or, in the event the Interstate Commerce Commission cannot, under existing laws, act in the premises, that we jointly request Congress to take such action as may be necessary to enable the Commission to consider and promptly dispose of the questions involved; or
>
> 2. By arbitration in accordance with the provisions of the Federal law" (The Newlands Act).

Leaders Refuse Offer and Take Strike Vote

Leaders of the train service brotherhoods, at the joint conference held in New York, June 1-15, refused the offer of the railroads to submit the issue to arbitration or Federal review, and the employes are now voting on the question whether authority shall be given these leaders to declare a nation-wide strike.

The Interstate Commerce Commission is proposed by the railroads as the public body to which this issue ought to be referred for these reasons:

No other body with such an intimate knowledge of railroad conditions has such an unquestioned position in the public confidence.

The rates the railroads may charge the public for transportation are now largely fixed by this Government board.

Out of every dollar received by the railroads from the public nearly one-half is paid directly to the employes as wages; and the money to pay increased wages can come from no other source than the rates paid by the public.

The Interstate Commerce Commission, with its control over rates, is in a position to make a complete investigation and render such decision as would protect the interests of the railroad employes, the owners of the railroads, and the public.

A Question For the Public to Decide

The railroads feel that they have no right to grant a wage preferment of $100,000,000 a year to these employes, now highly paid and constituting only one-fifth of all the employes, without a clear mandate from a public tribunal that shall determine the merits of the case after a review of all the facts.

The single issue before the country is whether this controversy is to be settled by an impartial Government inquiry or by industrial warfare.

National Conference Committee of the Railways

ELISHA LEE, Chairman

P. R. ALBRIGHT, Gen'l Manager, Atlantic Coast Line Railroad.
L. W. BALDWIN, Gen'l Manager, Central of Georgia Railway.
C. L. BARDO, Gen'l Manager, New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad.
E. H. COAPMAN, Vice-President, Southern Railway.
S. E. COTTER, Gen'l Manager, Wabash Railway.
F. R. CROWLEY, Asst. Vice-President, New York Central Railway.
G. H. EMERSON, Gen'l Manager, Great Northern Railway.
C. H. EWING, Gen'l Manager, Philadelphia & Reading Railway.
E. W. GRICE, Gen'l Supt. Transp., Chesapeake & Ohio Railway.
A. S. GREIG, Asst. to Receivers, St. Louis & San Francisco Railroad.
C. W. KOUNS, Gen'l Manager, Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railway.
H. W. McMASTER, Gen'l Manager, Wheeling & Lake Erie Railroad.
N. D. MAHER, Vice-President, Norfolk & Western Railway.
JAMES RUSSELL, Gen'l Manager, Denver & Rio Grande Railroad.
A. M. SCHOYER, Resident Vice-Pres., Pennsylvania Lines West.
W. L. SEDDON, Vice-Pres., Seaboard Air Line Railway.
A. J. STONE, Vice-President, Erie Railroad.
G. S. WAID, Vice-Pres. & Gen'l Mgr., Sunset Central Lines.

NEEDS OF INDIANA WHEAT CROP VITAL

Leaving Undone Any One of Four Necessary Steps Means Partial Failure.

If there are four essential and necessary steps in growing a crop, and we follow three and neglect one, often we might just as well have omitted the three since a poor crop is certain to follow. Whoever uses good seed, prepares a fine firm seed bed, uses lime, but neglects to supply wheat with available plant food in sufficient quantities will not harvest the largest number of bushels of best quality wheat.

Helping Baby Plants.

You cannot grow strong, sturdy wheat plants from a sluggish start. The tiny plants need assistance from germination to maturity. The roots take up in solution ammonia, phosphoric acid and potash. These plant-food elements are found in the soil, being gradually available to the crop; the deficiency of plant food is supplied through fertilizers. They are carried to the growing leaves, and under the action of sunlight, are manufactured into plant cell material that makes plant growth. Ammonia is the food that helps baby plants by giving them a dark green color and producing stalk growth. Plenty of available ammonia in the fertilizer gives the young plants a running start.

Harris in Cornell University Bulletin 352 states:

"The number of kernels of wheat per pot increased with the fertilizer."

Filling the Kernels.

Wheat is grown primarily for the grain. Phosphoric acid is the plant food that is most intimately concerned with forming and filling the kernels. Late in June or early in July, the tiny wheat flowers open and become fertile and the new wheat berries begin to develop. The time between the flowers becoming fertile and the complete filling of the kernels is very short—not over ten days or two weeks in most cases. As the kernel contains 75 per cent of the phosphoric acid of the plant, this plant food ingredient plays a very important part in filling the kernel and making the crop.

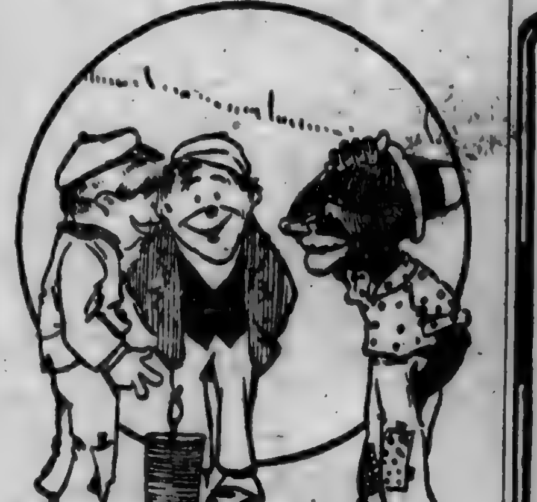
Thatcher holds that the relative protein content of grain is determined chiefly, if not wholly, by the rapidity of ripening of the kernel. Thus it is easily seen that the amount of phosphoric acid available for plant food at this time may determine the quality and yield of the crop. The ground may have been in good physical condition, the seed of excellent quality, the season favorable, but if there is a scarcity of available phosphoric acid when filling and ripening, the wheat is not only poorly filled, but its quality is inferior, for phosphoric acid makes quality wheat that grades high on the market.

Strengthening Straw.

The third essential plant food, potash, gives strength to the straw, assists in the transportation and laying down of the starch in the kernel and along with phosphoric acid plumps the grain. If the kernels are shriveled or small, the straw weak and inclined to lodge, more potash should be applied in the fertilizer. Available ammonia, phosphoric acid and potash are the three plant foods applied in fertilizers. They cause plant or stalk growth, form heavy, plump kernels, hasten maturity and make strong straw, insure good clover catches and quality wheat. Fertilizers should be selected of such an analysis as will make up for the deficiencies of the available plant food in the soil and supply the special needs of the wheat under various farm conditions. Best results will be secured by using 200 to 400 pounds of fertilizer on loam or clay soils analyzing 2 to 4 per cent ammonia, 8 to 12 per cent phosphoric acid and 2 to 4 per cent potash. On sandy or poor soils more ammonia should be used. Owing to the war conditions making potash scarce and high priced, a much smaller percentage of potash is advisable until these abnormal conditions adjust themselves.

Fertilizers give crops a quick start, strengthen straw, hasten maturity, better the quality and increase yields and profits.

HIS JOB



Eph—Kin I play wif you all?
Kids—Sure, if youse will promise to play fair. We'll let you be de one wot sees if de firecracker we light and don't go off is really out or not.

Summer Fares

East

The Wabash is the direct line to Detroit, Buffalo and the East. Low Summerfares in effect:—

Round Trip
$15.70 to Toronto
$13.75 to Buffalo, Niagara Falls
$31.70 to New York
$30.50 to Boston

West

The Wabash and its connection now have new and far faster train service to Colorado, California and the West.

Round Trip

Colorado	$36.60
California	$78.75
Yellowstone	$51.60
Salt Lake City	$51.60
Portland, Seattle	$79.10

WABASH

Find out about these and other summer fares. See the undersigned Wabash Agent or write to W. H. Shorey, Division Passenger Agent, Fort Wayne, Ind. J. D. MILLIMAN, Agent, St. Joe, Ind. 9-30

Personal Items

Frank Terman and wife were Auburn visitors, Saturday.

Mrs Earl McNabb was the guest of Mrs. John Betz, one day recently.

Faye Green, of north of Hicksville, was a Sunday forenoon and dinner guest of Howard Borthwick and family.

J. C. F. Abel and wife, and Mrs Elizabeth Allen, were guests of Glen Abel and wife at Spencerville, Sunday afternoon.

Frank Bowman motored to Cold Springs, Sunday, and brought his mother, Mrs Mary Bowman and son Ray, home.

Mrs. Charles Bishop and children came Monday noon to spend the Fourth. Mr. Bishop came Monday evening.

Dr. W. Bryson and family, of Everitt, Michigan, were Wednesday dinner guests of John Betz and wife, and Mrs. Martha Shearer.

Chas. Bayman, wife and mother Mrs. Hale, and Mrs. Rolland Bearse, and Ray Sailer, as driver, motored to Auburn, Saturday evening.

Avis Sechler, Inez Hart, Ethel Wallace, Mrs. Bertha Niver and Chas. Anthony and wife were the pleasure seekers at Cedar Point, Sunday.

Mrs. H. C. Hathaway spent Sunday with Rev and Mrs. A. K. Mumma, at Spencerville. She remained for the Children's Day Exercises in the evening.

Ed Leighty and wife, and Tel Elson and wife motored to Sherwood, Sunday, and were guests of Sam Openlander and wife, and Mrs. Elizabeth Leighty, for the day.

Mrs. Arthur Woodcox and children, of Auburn, came Saturday noon to remain over the Fourth with St. Joe relatives. Mr. Woodcox came Saturday night and also remained over.

A Sad Mistake.

A neglected cough has undoubtedly caused more deaths than any other agency. A lingering cough should be promptly treated. If allowed to continue until cold weather the tissues of the lungs will be weakened and the power to resist epidemics of cold and grip is lessened. By getting three ounces of GLANDO PINE you can make one pint of excellent cough syrup. Keep it on hands and use it freely. Stop that cough before it has too firm a grip upon you. Don't be careless and make a mistake that may cost you your life. If you can not get GLANDO PINE of your druggist send 50 cents to the The Gland-Aid Co., Ft. Wayne, Ind., and it will be sent you.

R U Superstitious

Do You Believe In Signs ?

If you do you are a judicious advertiser and a good business man. Judicious advertising Always Pays and especially when you advertise in a paper that is read by everybody in its territory.

This newspaper reaches the eye of everybody who might be a possible buyer in this section.

SAGE AND SULPHUR DARKENS GRAY HAIR

It's Grandmother's Recipe to Restore Color, Gloss and Attractiveness.

Almost everyone knows that Sage Tea and Sulphur, properly compounded, brings back the natural color and lustre to the hair when faded, streaked or gray. Years ago the only way to get this mixture was to make it at home, which is mussy and troublesome. Nowadays, by asking at any drug store for "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound," you will get a large bottle of this famous old recipe, improved by the addition of other ingredients, for about 50 cents.

Don't stay gray! Try it! No one can possibly tell that you darkened your hair, as it does it so naturally and evenly. You dampen a sponge or soft brush with it and draw this through your hair, taking one small strand at a time; by morning the gray hair disappears, and after another application or two, your hair becomes beautifully dark, glossy and attractive.

Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound is a delightful toilet requisite for those who desire dark hair and a youthful appearance. It is not intended for the cure, mitigation or prevention of disease.

An Inside Bath Makes You Look and Feel Fresh

Says a glass of hot water with phosphate before breakfast keeps illness away.

This excellent, common-sense health measure being adopted by millions.

Physicians the world over recommend the inside bath, claiming this is of vastly more importance than outside cleanliness, because the skin pores do not absorb impurities into the blood, causing ill health, while the pores in the ten yards of bowels do.

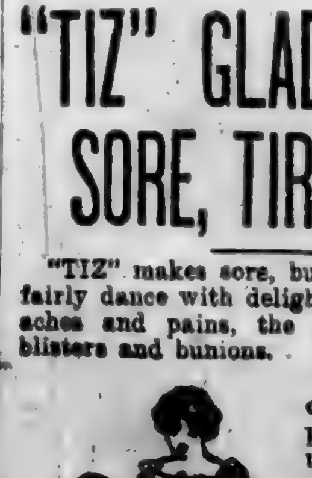
Men and women are urged to drink each morning, before breakfast a glass of hot water with a teaspoonful of limestone phosphate in it, as a harmless means of helping to wash from the stomach, liver, kidneys and bowels the previous day's indigestible material, poisons, sour bile and toxins; thus cleansing, sweetening and purifying the entire alimentary canal before putting more food into the stomach.

Just as soap and hot water cleanse and freshen the skin, so hot water and limestone phosphate act on the eliminative organs.

Those who wake up with bad breath, coated tongue, nasty taste or have a dull, aching head, sallow complexion, acid stomach; others who are subject to bilious attacks or constipation, should obtain a quarter pound of limestone phosphate at the drug store. This will cost very little but is sufficient to demonstrate the value of inside bathing. Those who continue it each morning are assured of pronounced results, both in regard to health and appearance.

"TIZ" GLADDENS SORE, TIRED FEET

"TIZ" makes sore, burning, tired feet fairly dance with delight. Away go the aches and pains, the corns, callouses, blisters and bunions.



"TIZ" draws out the acids and poisons that puff up your feet. No matter how hard you work, how long you dance, how far you walk, or how long you remain on your feet, "TIZ" brings restful foot comfort. "TIZ" is wonderful for tired, aching, swollen, smarting feet. Your feet just tingle for joy; shoes never hurt or seem tight.

Get a 25 cent box of "TIZ" now from any druggist or department store. End foot torture forever—wear smaller shoes, keep your feet fresh, sweet and happy.

Transfer paper at NEWS office, 2 sheets for 5c. Get some now for that pattern you wish to transfer.

JULY

L 908

0212

BETTER SERVICE TO YOU.

We don't want you to think of the Farmers and Merchants State Bank just as a place to deposit your money, although of course we are glad to have you keep as large a balance with us as is possible.

It is our desire to render our patrons every service and accommodation that can reasonably be expected to us.

Our Bookkeeping Machine, makes it possible for us to give you better service in the handling of your account than ever before.

By the machine method, your account is kept in balance all the time. If, as sometimes happens, you want a statement of your balance in a hurry, we can give it to you, including to-days checks and deposits, in less than five minutes.

Farmers & Merchants State Bank

Capital Stock $25,000.00

Spencerville, - - - Indiana

SPENCERVILLE

A $5 Vacuum and Sweeper for $3.95 at Beams & Co., store.

Miss Edna Dennis is acting as relief girl at the telephone office.

Mrs. Clyde Sharp, of Hamilton, is visiting her daughter, Mrs. Bert Fischer and family.

Roscoe Walter and wife returned home Monday morning after visiting relatives here.

Mrs. Anna Baker was the lucky person at the Jack Beams drawing, last Saturday evening.

The C C Club will be entertained at the home of Mrs. George Gloyd, Friday afternoon.

Jack Beams pays the highest market price for old or young chickens.

The J. A. G. Club was very pleasantly entertained Thursday evening at the home of Mrs. W. P. Steward.

The social meeting of the Ladies Guild will be held on Thursday afternoon at the home of Mrs. Samuel Steward.

Greatly reduced prices on Shoes and Oxfords. You can't afford to be without, at the prices we are quoting. Beams & Co.

Mrs. Granville Erick, Frank Baltz and wife, and Rolla Moffett and wife, of Auburn, were Thursday guests of Jacob Baltz and wife.

On next Friday evening at 7:00 o'clock the Epworth League of the M. E. Church will be held under the leadership of Miss Gladys Watson. All young people interested are asked to be present.

Mrs Lydia Kressler and son Henry, of Auburn, spent Wednesday night and Thursday the guests of Milton Chaney and wife, and attended the Old School Reunion.

See our window for those $2.00 foot stools that we are giving for 98c and $2.00 in trade.

Beams & Co.

Rev. D L Berry, pastor of one of the M. E. Churches of Grand Rapids, Mich., will hold a series of religious conferences at the M E Church here, beginning Monday evening, July 3, and continuing throughout the week. He will give an address each evening beginning at 7:45 p. m. Admission free. Everybody invited.

The Loyal Workers Class of the Lutheran Church met at the home of John McNabb and wife, Saturday evening, going from there to the home of Frank Horn and wife, south of town, and surprised Jay Mason and wife, and Earl McNabb and wife, who were recently married. The ladies were the Misses Venus and Mary Horn. Twenty members and four guests partook of the dainty refreshments served by the hostess. A miscellaneous shower was given the brides.

Phone Jack Beams if you have any Chickens for sale.

Buy your next writing tablet and package of envelopes at this office

Orla Woodring and wife, of Newville, were Spencerville visitors, Sunday.

Frank Boger spent several days last week at the home of C. A. Rhoades and wife.

Clyde Fredrick and family spent Sunday the guests of Geo. Fredrick and family, of Grabill.

Jane Dixson and family, of Waterloo, spent Sunday with Mrs. George Gloyd and family.

Mesdames Frank Wertman and Edward Billman were Saturday guests of Joel Betz and wife.

Sell your Chickens to Jack Beams.

Jack Beams and wife, George Shutt and daughters, Ethel and Gertrude, spent Sunday with Dr. Carey and family, of Ft. Wayne.

Mrs. Samuel Steward entertained the F G M N Club, Friday evening. A dainty lunch was served to the members and two guests.

Mrs. Arthur Heyman and daughter Mary Ellen, of Ft. Wayne, came Saturday evening to spend a few days with John Beninghoffs'.

New spring oxfords for Ladies, Misses and Children—Just in at Beams & Co., store, in patent leather and gun metal.

W. P. Steward and wife entertained at six o'clock supper Thursday evening:—Mrs. Nina Krohn, of Haysville, Ohio; Miss Ruth Guthrie, of Ashland, O.; Mrs. Roscoe Walters, of Laporte, Ind., and Mrs. Cora Steward and family, of this place.

URIC ACID IN MEAT CLOGS THE KIDNEYS

Take a glass of Salts if your Back hurts or Bladder bothers you—Drink more water.

If you must have your meat every day, eat it, but flush your kidneys with salts occasionally, says a noted authority who tells us that meat forms uric acid which almost paralyzes the kidneys in their efforts to expel it from the blood. They become sluggish and weaken, then you suffer with a dull misery in the kidney region, sharp pains in the back or sick headache, dizziness, your stomach sours, tongue is coated and when the weather is bad you have rheumatic twinges. The urine gets cloudy, full of sediment, the channels often get sore and irritated, obliging you to seek relief two or three time during the night.

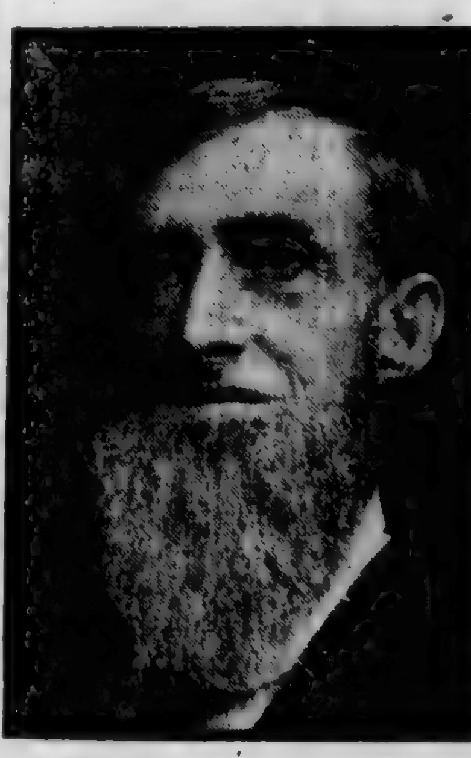
To neutralize these irritating acids, to cleanse the kidneys and flush off the body's urinous waste get four ounces of Jad Salts from any pharmacy here; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys will then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to flush and stimulate sluggish kidneys, also to neutralize the acids in urine, so it no longer irritates, thus ending bladder weakness.

Jad Salts is inexpensive; cannot injure, and makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink.

Old School Reunion

The Fourth Annual Old School Reunion of Spencerville, was held on last Thursday, June 29, at the present school building. Each successive meeting is growing in numbers and the interest is increasing. Many new faces were present at this gathering and it affords a time for the calling of childhood recollections that can't be brought about in any other way than by the mingling with the old time friends. 106 members and 36 friends sat down to the feast at the noon hour in the Domestic Science room After the dinner the program was given in the Assembly room.

Leone Widdifield and Jean Mumma sang a duet followed by song, America, by the audience. The welcome was given by Rev. Valentine and Dr Carey, of Wayne, responded in behalf of the audience. Evangeline Fisher gave a reading, "The Old School House". The first talk of the good old school days was made by Sol Barney, of St. Joe, who was the only one present of the early school days in Concord township. He, in his most eloquent way, made a thorough survey of the early days, telling of the many experience of those early pioneer days. Following Frank Butler, Robert Beams and Mesdames Rectenwal, Wade and Rhoades sang a song. A number of the children had recitations, namely:—Garnett Beams, Nellie Scott and Dorothy Fisher. Dialogue, Jean and David Mumma, followed by quintette. Other talks were given at this time by J. E. Dermott, of Coldwater, Michigan; Dr. Carey, of Wayne; Mr Olds, of LaGrange; M. T. Bishop, of St. Joe; and John Provines, of Covington. Officers were elected as follows:—



SOLOMON BARNEY

President, Frank E. Rhodes
Secretary, Golden Murray.
Treasurer, John Horn.

A number of the High School Annuals were sold during the day to assist the piano fund.

Notice

Persons who have bought the Schram Glen Fruit Jars, can get lids for same at Kinsey's.

HEARD AROUND THE CORNER

Slide in the $1.00. Do it now.

W. E. Peterson, wife and Miss Dessa Carson, were Saturday and Sunday guests of relatives at Kendallville.

Mrs. A. D. Brunson left Saturday morning for Muncie for an indefinite visit with her sister, Mrs. Malissia Powell and other relatives. Mr. Brunson accompanied her as far as Ft. Wayne.

George Walter made the purchase of a Maxwell automobile last week. C. A. Patterson made the sale. Business is quite prosperous for just starting up, says Mr. Patterson. Just drop in and see that garage when you are in town.

A Friend in Need.

When Glando Gargle is used for a cold in the head it is surprising to see how quickly the clogged nostrils are opened. Adenoids are caused by a neglected cold. If the mucus which forms is allowed to remain in the nostrils, a diseased condition will result, which causes chronic catarrh and adenoids. Glando Gargle was prepared to meet these special needs. Equally effective for sore mouth or sore throat. Price 50 cents. For sale by All Druggists.

St. Joe Locals

Subscriptions taken for new or renewals of any magazine published, at The News office.

Howard Borthwick and family and the former's mother, Mrs. E. Borthwick, were Sunday afternoon guests in the Green home, north of Hicksville.

Charley Bassett left Sunday evening for his uncle's, S. N. Brunson, near Butler, to help him for the coming month.

Henry Hathaway, Rolland Bearss, Russell Hathaway and Herman Brown and 2 son, of Auburn, drove to Ft. Harrison near Indianapolis, Saturday afternoon, to see Fred Bearss and the Auburn boys.

The Fourth is over and everyone had a good time. Large crowd was in town for the evening to enjoy the hospitality of the firemen. The afternoon was full of races for the amusement of the splendid crowd that came. The auto parade at 7:00 in the evening was a dandy with six fine decorated cars in line. The fantastic parade was amusing and pleased the crowd. Prizes were awarded in every contest. Lemonade and peanuts were given away to the vast crowd by the firemen. No accidents were had during the day to spoil the fun of those who were enjoying the sports.

PRESIDENTIAL POINTERS

Washington during his two terms had only five cabinet officers, secretaries of state, treasury and war, postmaster-general and attorney-general. Adams had in addition a secretary of the navy; Taylor, a secretary of the interior; Cleveland, in first term, a secretary of agriculture; Roosevelt, second term, a secretary of commerce and labor; and Wilson, a secretary of labor as well as a secretary of commerce.

James Wilson, secretary of agriculture, held under four administrations, 16 full years, which is the record. Under Roosevelt there were more cabinet changes than under any other president, there being 28 different appointments. Jefferson, Madison, Monroe, John Quincy Adams, Van Buren and Buchanan had all been secretary of state. Monroe, Grant and Taft had been secretary of war.

Slipped Back Ten Years!

When asked the secret of her youthful and healthful appearance, a well known woman of Paulding county, Ohio, said: "For several years I was in poor health, I felt tired and achy, was nervous and irritable, my digestion was poor, I had dizzy spells, was troubled considerable with constipation, and had an ugly, splotchy complexion. A friend persuaded me to use GLANDO Tonic. One box helped me so I tried another, and some weeks later I took the third box. Now my liver and kidneys are working nicely and I feel like a new person. My complexion has cleared wonderfully. I can heartily recommend GLANDO to others, as I am sure it can do as much for them as it has for me." By writing to The Gland-Aid Co., Ft. Wayne, Ind., names and addresses of persons who have been helped by GLANDO will be given. GLANDO is sold by druggists. A 50c. package contains a week's treatment.

THE HESSIAN FLY DOOMED

If Every Member of the Community Aids in Fighting This Pest.

Two years ago a farmer in central Missouri lost his wheat by the ravages of the Hessian fly. It set him thinking, and if losing a wheat crop won't make a man think, you and I are wondering what will. And his thoughts run along this line: "If I give the wheat a good start to make it vigorous and strong, it may outgrow the fly, for it is mostly the weaker stalks which the fly attacks. Hence I'll feed my crop and keep it healthy, just as I would my hogs to help them ward off infection from cholera."

So this man set to work and plowed deep and early. He harrowed every few weeks to conserve the moisture and kill the weeds and planted about the usual time for that locality. At this place he decided to make an experiment, fertilizing one-half of his field and letting the other go as he had before.

The following spring there was a sight to make the most skeptical a believer that feeding the crop pays. We examined both the unfertilized and the fertilized, in the former the stalks being filled with "flaxseed," while in the latter few flies were found, and the damage was so slight that it was scarcely noticeable.

This does not mean that fertilizer will keep the fly out or kill it, but it does mean that the plants made strong, vigorous and early maturing will resist the ravages to such an extent that the loss will be comparatively small. The result?—more wheat, better prices and a prosperous and contented grower.

LIEBIG'S FOUR LAWS

Announced by the Noted German Chemist Fifty Years Ago.

1. A soil can be termed fertile only when it contains all the materials necessary for the nutrition of plants, in the required quantity, in the proper form.

2. With every crop, a portion of these ingredients is removed. A part of this is again added from the inexhaustible store of the atmosphere; another part, however, is lost if not replaced by man.

3. The fertility of the soil remains unchanged if all the ingredients of the crop are given back to the soil. Such a restitution is effected by manure and fertilizers.

4. The manure produced in the course of farming is not sufficient to maintain permanently the fertility of a farm; it lacks the constituents which are annually sold in the shape of grain, hay, milk, and live stock.

SOW MORE SEED

The quantity of seed wheat to sow to the acre should be varied according to size of kernel, condition and fertility of seedbed and time of seeding. From six to eight pecks per acre gave the best results in experiments totaling 33 years at the Ohio, Kentucky, Indiana, Illinois, Kansas and Oklahoma experiment stations. The tendency among most growers is to use too little rather than too much seed.

The Ohio Experiment Station says: "We have commonly found the better quality of grain where the amount of seed required to produce the maximum crop had been used; and where land was not occupied with wheat to its full capacity of production, the product has been of inferior quality. Similar results were reached, whether the wheat was grown upon rich, gravelly, alluvial soil or upon a clay soil inferior in natural productiveness."

Whole Country Participates.

No holiday is more widely observed in this country than the Fourth of July—Independence day. It is the one occasion when the people of all sections manifest in some form their patriotic sentiments.

$100 Reward, $100

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials.

Address: F. J. CHENEY & CO., Toledo, O.
Sold by all Druggists, 75c.
Take Hall's Family Pills for constipation.

H. C. Hathaway

TRUSTEE
Concord Township

Office Day Thursday's of Each week in Town Hall, St. Joe.

Frank W. Silberg
Veterinarian

OFFICE and HOSPITAL
—ON—
Main Street
SPENCERVILLE. - IND.
Phones—Office No. 7
(18) Residence No. 101

P. A. Walker
Trustee
Spencer Township

Office Day—
Tuesday of each week at the residence ½ mile east of the Dills River Bridge.
Phone—St. Joe, 21-6
Spencerville, - Indiana

F. P. HART
"The Expert"
House Mover
—AND—
Building Raiser

Concrete Work of all kinds finished in the best shape with the least expense.

Call or write

DENTIST
C. R. PRICE
ST. JOE, IND.
Office: first door south of Patterson's Dept. Store.
Bell Phone No. 44.

Oldest In America
Strongest In the World
Mutual life
INSURANCE COMPANY
of New York
J. C. HULL, Agent
Phone No. [illegible]

Lehman's
CLOTHING HOUSE
ESTABLISHED 1887
MENS AND BOYS OUTFITTERS
808-810 CALHOUN STREET
BEN LEHMAN PROP.
Fort Wayne, Ind.

JULY

L 908

0213

MOST IMPORTANT NEWS OF WORLD

BIG HAPPENINGS OF THE WEEK CUT TO LAST ANALYSIS.

DOMESTIC AND FOREIGN ITEMS

Kernels Culled From Events of Moment in All Parts of the World—Of Interest to All the People Everywhere.

Mexican War News

The 23 troopers of the Tenth cavalry and Lem. H. Spillsbury, Mormon scout, were brought to the international bridge at El Paso and delivered to General Bell.

* * *

General Trevino, commanding the de facto government forces in Chihuahua, informed the war department at Mexico City by telegraph that the American troops had commenced a retirement northward and had abandoned several towns.

* * *

Minister of War Obregon at Mexico City said no impediment would be placed in the way of the American authorities if they desired to remove the bodies of the American troopers killed at Carrizal to American territory for burial.

* * *

Supplies have been provided along the Mexican border for an army of 200,000 men for the next 30 days, according to an announcement at New York by the quartermaster's department of the United States.

* * *

Gen. Jacinto Trevino, commander of the army in the north, received an order at Chihuahua, Mex., from "First Chief" Carranza directing him to immediately release the American prisoners of war. The prisoners were placed on a special train and sent to Juarez.

* * *

Carranza's reply to the American ultimatum demanding the release of the troopers captured at Carrizal is a counter-demand for the release of 30 Mexicans arrested on the American side since the battle, according to state department officials at Washington.

* * *

An American who arrived at El Paso, Tex., from Colonia Dublan says 40 Mexican prisoners were brought into the headquarters of the American troops there on Sunday. These prisoners were captured by the armed force which went to succor the United States troops who fought at Carrizal.

* * *

General Trevino, in a report to the war department at Mexico City, says the American forces have retreated northward, leaving the towns of Bachiniva and San Geronimo in the hands of the Constitutionalist forces.

* * *

General Medinaveita, former chief of staff of Pancho Villa, and Gen. Jose Ysabel Robles, another former Villa chieftain, arrived in Juarez with 600 Carranzista cavalrymen.

* * *

The United States consulate at Torreon, Mexico, was demolished June 18 by a mob of 3,000 civilians led by the mayor of the city and a Carranza army band, according to American refugees arriving at Eagle Pass, Tex.

* * *

Capt. Lewis S. Morey of Troop K, Tenth cavalry, was brought to Pershing's headquarters by automobiles which were sent to the vicinity of the Carrizal fight to search for him and any of his command who might be with him.

* * *

Domestic

John L. Duncan of Spencer, Ind., state legislator, who came to Terre Haute, Ind., to attend the wedding of his son, died there suddenly. The wedding was held in the evening.

* * *

Automobile manufacturers of the United States are prepared to furnish to the government on short notice 900 motor trucks and 1,000 passenger automobiles a day, says Alfred Reeves, general manager of the National Automobile chamber of commerce, at New York.

* * *

It was learned at New York that Colonel Roosevelt is going to ask the government for permission to raise a division of volunteer soldiers for service in Mexico the minute that war is declared and a call for volunteers sent out. He will ask for a commission as major general.

* * *

William R. Willcox, former postmaster of New York and later public service commissioner, was appointed at New York chairman of the Republican national committee. Mr. Willcox was the choice of Charles E. Hughes.

* * *

James G. Harty and Charles Marcelle, who left New York a year ago on a 10,000-mile canoe trip, perished in Lake Huron, according to information received by Henry Clews & Co., bankers.

* * *

John Bryan, thirty-five, who was said to have insulted members of the Minnesota National Guard who were entraining at Duluth, Minn., died of injuries sustained when he was shoved away from the guardsmen.

"America first, translated into what you do," was the new patriotic rallying cry sounded by President Wilson in an address to the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World in Independence square at Philadelphia. "America first means nothing," he said, "until you translate it into what you do."

* * *

Mrs. Katherine Vance Harrison, child wife of Charles Harrison, son of James Harrison and nephew of United States Senator Culberson, was found guilty of the murder of W. L. Warren, hotel proprietor, and sentenced to five years in the state prison by a jury at Fort Worth, Tex.

* * *

After a day of wrangling the Progressive national committee voted at Chicago to indorse Charles Evans Hughes for president. Thirty-two members of the committee supported the indorsement resolution offered by James R. Garfield of Ohio. Six voted against it and nine declined to vote.

* * *

The East's militia is on the way to the border. The first train left from the Framingham camp, in Massachusetts, in 13 sections. Connecticut's eight trains followed.

* * *

Company L of the First Iowa infantry from Keokuk refused to take the new oath required of guardsmen entering the federal service. There are 80 men in the company.

* * *

European War News

The admiralty announced at Vienna that the Italian coast near Giulcanuova has been bombarded by a flotilla of Austro-Hungarian torpedo boats.

* * *

The Rusisans claim a great victory in East Galicia and have resumed their tally of prisoners. Petrograd announces the Russians have broken through and are well on their way to Kolomea.

* * *

Russian positions have been penetrated by the German armies of both Field Marshal von Hindenburg and General von Linsingen, the war office announced at Berlin.

* * *

Two Austrian transports have been sunk in the harbor of Durazzo by the Italians. The transports were loaded with troops, arms and ammunition.

* * *

The Japanese ship Dai Yestu Maru is reported at Madrid to have been torpedoed and sunk near Barcelona. Forty-one of her crew were rescued.

* * *

Foreign

A demonstration in favor of Dr. Karl Liebknecht, the socialist leader who was sentenced to 30 months in prison for attempted high treason, was held at Berlin despite the police precautions.

* * *

Sir Roger Casement was found guilty of high treason in the high court of justice at London. The jury was out only 50 minutes. Immediately after the verdict was returned Casement was sentenced to death.

* * *

As a result of a trial on charges of high treason, gross insubordination and resistance to authorities, Karl Liebknecht, the Socialist leader, got 30 months and was dismissed from the army, says a dispatch from Berlin.

* * *

Washington

The state department at Washington received official confirmation of the looting by Carranza soldiers of the American consulate at Nogales, Sonora.

* * *

Those who have sons, husbands or sweethearts called to the colors with the National Guard are promised in a statement issued by the army medical department at Washington that there will be no repetition of Spanish war health conditions among the troops and that the men will have every precaution afforded by science, thought and money.

* * *

The war department, it was learned at New York, has been able to obtain for immediate delivery through the courtesy of the British government, 250 Lewis machine guns made by the Driggs-Seabury Ordnance company for use in Europe.

* * *

The senate at Washington passed the urgent deficiency bill carrying approximately $25,500,000, most of it to meet military expenses of the Mexican crisis. The bill now goes to the president for his signature.

* * *

The urgent deficiency bill, providing $27,500,000, most of it for military expenses growing out of the Mexican situation, was passed by the senate at Washington without objection.

* * *

One American soldier was killed and another wounded in an engagement reported to Washington by Rear Admiral Caperton between United States marines and Santo Domingo rebels.

* * *

The post office appropriation bill carrying approximately $322,000,000 was passed by the senate at Washington.

* * *

The American rejoinder to Austria regarding the Austrian submarine attack on the American steamer Petrolite, made public at Washington by the state department, describes the act as "a deliberate insult to the flag of the United States and requests an apology, punishment of the submarine commander and payment of indemnity.

INDIANA MILITIA IS NOW REORGANIZED

Old Hoosier War Spirit Aflame in the Regiments.

MEN TRAIN FOR HEAVY WORK

4,000 Home Boys Inspired Onlookers When They Took Oath to Serve Uncle Sam—College Youth Sang "Old Indiana."

Indianapolis.—The famous Hoosier war spirit sprang to life once more with the incorporation of more than 4,000 Indiana Guardsmen into Uncle Sam's service. Mustering in and medical examinations are now things of the past. The State Guard as one organization has been rehabilitated under Governor Ralston's direction, and it is far more efficient today—ready for whatever may come—then ever in its history.

It was a sight to make any man thrill, the mustering in of the men. This was especially true of the State University regiment of infantry and the artillery battery from Purdue university. When the Bloomington boys had taken their oath they broke into the college song, "Old Indiana." And the Purdue boys gave vent to their feelings with several volleys of college yells. "Great stuff," everybody said; "great stuff."

Governor Ralston has completed the thorough reorganization of the Indiana National Guard's infantry including the officers for each regiment.

New Regimental Numbers.

The new provisional regiment, known as the First regiment, has become the One-hundred-and-sixty fourth regiment in the federal army.

The old Second regiment has become the One-hundred-and-sixty-third regiment, and the Third regiment is now known as the One-hundred-and-sixty-second regiment.

New hope dawned in many youthful hearts at the concentration camp when Captain Toffey received instructions that young men not yet eighteen years old, if meeting all physical requirements, and if they had the consent of their parents or guardians, would be acceptable for enlistment in the state's quota of troops. The order also permits the enlistment of men between eighteen and twenty-one years without parental consent. This news brought particular delight to several young men of Indianapolis, who are in Battery A and who are not yet eighteen.

Much Haste Everywhere.

Haste marked every move made by the mustering and medical officers at the fort. The war department sent Captain Toffey a telegram ordering that all physicians attached to the medical reserve corps proceed with examinations without waiting for United States army surgeons to give approval.

The medical staff in charge of the physical examinations for mustering the Indiana National Guardsmen into the United States army worked 16 hours a day at the fort hospital.

The filling out of a complete identification sheet was an important part of the examination. Prints of all fingers of both hands are taken on one side of the sheet. On the other side are two charts of a human body, front and back view, and on these are marked, with descriptions, any scars or peculiarities for aid in identification.

The soldier signs the sheet, the date of birth and enlistment are filled in, with the rank and organization, and the sheet is forwarded to the adjutant general of the United States army, after the candidate passes his examination.

Lieut. Col. William Bannister, assistant chief surgeon of the central department, Chicago, was ordered here to complete the medical examination of officers and men examined by medical reserve corps officers. No rejections of men was made until after Lieutenant Colonel Bannister arrived.

Everything Is Invoiced.

Maj. Robert H. Tyndall, commanding the artillery battalion, who is now in the service of the United States through an oath administered by Lieutenant Kirkwood, worked with George Lyons, of the Indiana quartermaster's office, in taking over from the state all property of the battalion. Everything had to be invoiced, from a field piece down to a harness buckle, the entire equipment being valued at about $75,000. This estimate does not include animal equipment.

John Heddy, a private in Company A of Vincennes, died at the fort, it being the first death in the camp since it has been established. He had been in the field hospital for some time, suffering from a nervous breakdown. The medical officers had ordered him sent tor the city hospital, and he died in the ambulance shortly after he was taken from the field hospital.

Representative business men of Indianapolis have organized the Indiana auxiliary to the Indiana National Guard. The object of the auxiliary will be to co-operate with the government of the United States and of the state of Indiana in supplying the needs of the Indianapolis members of the guard, and in providing such financial assistance as may be found necessary to their families while the guardsmen are under mobilization orders or in active service. J. K. Lilly was elected president and Stoughton A. Fletcher treasurer. From $15,000 to $25,000 a month will be needed.

Asks for Capt. Herron.

Governor Ralston has named Capt. Charles D. Herron of the Tenth infantry, U. S. A., now in service in the Panama Canal Zone, as brigadier general of the new Indiana infantry brigade, and he is expecting word from the war department saying that Captain Herron would be permitted to take command of the Indiana troops. The recommendation was favorably received almost everywhere among guard and army officers in this city.

Governor Ralston met Captain Herron when the governor's party was returning last summer from the Panama-Pacific exposition at San Francisco, via the Panama canal. The impression made on the governor at that time by the Indiana army officer, who had previously been an instructor inspector of the Indiana National Guard, was extremely favorable.

While preparations for entrainment of the Indiana troops went forward at the concentration camp at Fort Benjamin Harrison, the headquarters of the Indiana National Guard at the statehouse was shorn of its former interest and activities. Scarcely an officer in uniform has passed through the doors of the offices of Adjt. Gen. Frank L. Bridges the last few days.

General Bridges has prepared an official order from his office, setting out the new roster of the Indiana National Guard.

Wives of Guard Officers Here.

Wives of several officers of the Indiana National Guard came to Indianapolis to be here until the troops entrained for the Mexican border. Some of these women had planned to make the trip to the border after the troops left, in case there was any way for them to obtain accommodations on the border. A group of wives of present and former officers from Warsaw discussed the possibility of traveling as a party to the border, for the purpose of being near their husbands.

General Bridge's office has announced that Dr. Charles W. Stolzer of New Albany has been named first lieutenant in the medical corps of the guard. He arrived in Indianapolis and was ordered to report to Maj. Frank W. Foxworthy, medical officer attached to the First regiment of the guard.

Governor Ralston has forwarded to the war department a request that Capt. Horace M. Hickam, a former resident of Spencer, who now is in the regular army, having served with the Eleventh and Eighth cavalry, be transferred to command a battalion in the Indiana National Guard, with the rank of senior major in the Second infantry regiment. Capt. Hickam was graduated from West Point in 1908, at the same time as Lieut. Robert E. O'Brien, also an Indiana regular army officer, who was elevated to a majorship by the governor.

Spanish War Veterans.

A volunteer regiment, composed largely of men who have seen service either in the Spanish-American war or in the Indiana National Guard, will be ready to report to Governor Ralston within the next few days, in case the president calls for volunteers.

One company is ready at Greencastle, one at Hammond and four in territory embracing Monticello, Delphi, Kentland and Rensselaer. Four companies are being raised in and about Anderson.

Everett Gardner of Monticello, who has been a captain in the National Guard, is assisting in recruiting for the regiment in the northern part of the state. P. H. Doyle, formerly a major in the National Guard, is at work at Anderson. C. F. Donahue of Greencastle, who saw service with the artillery corps of the regular army, is organizing the company at Greencastle. Charles E. Wood of Hammond has organized the company which is to come from Hammond.

Two companies are expected from Evansville, where Charles W. Bellamy, who saw service in the Spanish-American war, is recruiting for the regiment. Another company is to be organized at Princeton.

Capt. A. G. Chittick, commanding the Frankfort ambulance company, has been asked by Adjt. Gen. Franklin L. Bridges to recruit two additional ambulance companies at once. The recruiting will be done under the direction of Capt. A. C. Arnett and Capt. J. W. Hadley, attached to the ambulance company now in camp.

The military affairs committee of the Commercial club at Seymour is soliciting subscriptions to aid the families of the militiamen who are in service.

Captain Toffey has drilled the Kendallville and Portland companies to see whether they were in condition to warrant readmission to the Indiana Guard. These companies, with Monticello and South Bend, recently were placed on probation by the war department because of their failure to meet requirements. The four companies now are recruited up to full strength and it is probable that Captain Toffey will recommend their reinstatement to the Guard. The arrival in camp of the Newcastle and Kokomo companies made possible the reorganization of the Indiana brigade.

NEW COLONELS OF REGIMENTS.

First Regiment—Col. Leslie R. Naftzger, Indianapolis.

Second Regiment—Col. Thomas B. Coulter of Vincennes.

Third Regiment—Col. Aubrey L. Kuhlman of Auburn.

The three lieutenant colonels are:

First Regiment—Capt. John J. Toffey, Jr.

Second Regiment—Maj. Emmett F. Branch, Martinsville.

Third Regiment—Lieut. Col. George W. Freyermuth, South Bend.

INDIANA BREVITIES

Evansville.—Daniel Upton, saloonkeeper, was fined $25 and costs in the city court here on the charge of violating the Sunday closing law.

Greenfield.—Wayne B. Wheeler, general counsel for the National Antisaloon league, spoke here on "The Progress of the Campaign for National Prohibition."

Huntington.—The third floor of the H. H. Arnold & Son retail dry goods store was damaged by fire and smoke. A large amount of seasonable merchandise was destroyed.

Fort Harrison.—James Hoddy, a private in Company A, Vincennes, died from a nervous breakdown as he was being taken from the field hospital to a city hospital in an ambulance.

Terre Haute.—A case in the circuit court against Dr. V. A. Shanklin of West Terre Haute in which he was accused of an illegal operation, has been dismissed by the state for lack of sufficient evidence.

Veedersburg.—Perry D. Poynter of Advance has been elected superintendent of the city schools to succeed B. Floyd Stalcup, who goes to Paulding, O.

Shelbyville.—Mrs. Harry Romack, eighty-three, fell while walking in the yard of her home at Morristown. Mrs. Romack was carrying water to the house, when she slipped on the wet grass. Her right hip was broken.

Greencastle.—Mrs. Nell Warner, retiring secretary of the Greencastle chapter of the Order of the Eastern Star, will soon leave for Indianapolis to live. Her friends presented her with an Eastern Star ring.

Paoli.—The Ladies. Aid of the M. E. church here gave an heirloom exhibition. Many articles 100 years old were shown. The oldest woman present was Mrs. Anna Wood, age ninety-nine, who is hale and hearty.

Columbia.—Two hundred people attended the twenty-first annual meeting of the Whitley County Sunday School convention, held here. The new officers are W. E. Moudy, president; A. R. Fleck, vice-president, and S. A. Krider, secretary-treasurer.

Valparaiso.—A difference of opinion may cause the abandonment of the Bible institute proposed for Valparaiso university. President Brown wishes the institute to be of Campbellite affiliation, while others, it is reported, desire the institute to be undenominational.

Covington.—Through the efforts of James Yerkes the Golden Rod Oil company has been organized in this county and Wicks Holleran, a veteran oil man, is superintending the erection of a large derrick on the Sherman Yerkes farm, four miles south of this city. About 10,000 acres of land have been leased.

Shoals.—A dog thought to be rabid ran amuck in the business part of town. It attacked several other dogs. Its sudden appearance in a large crowd gathered at a free street show caused excitement. John Cutsinger, proprietor of the Cutsinger hotel, was attacked by the dog and one hand was severely lacerated. The dog escaped.

Hammond.—Many northern Indiana baseball teams have been depleted by the enlistment of members in various militia units and some teams have been forced to disband. The crack Rensselaer has disbanded and canceled its games in the semiprofessional Chicago league because of the volunteers. Indiana is sending 4,000 of her very finest young men and athletes to the Mexican border.

Hammond.—Mrs. Peter Lindquist of Plymouth was drowned when an automobile driven by her husband left the road near Bourbon, turned over and pinned her in a ditch containing water. She suffered almost no injury when the car turned over, but was held a prisoner with her head in the water. Her husband, who is seventy years old, was so dazed by his fall he was powerless to assist her.

Indianapolis. — Grand Chancellor Charles Remy of the Knights of Pythias of Indiana prepared to send out a circular letter to every lodge in the state, urging them to recruit men for a Knights of Pythias regiment, to be transferred to the war department as a volunteer regiment if war comes. This action was decided upon at a meeting of high officers of the uniform rank of the lodge with Remy.

Columbus.—Rev. William Chapple, formerly of this city and widely known throughout the states as an evangelist for the Christian church, sailed from Falmouth, England, for New York and will go to Chicago to visit his son, Garfield Chapple, after which he will return to this city. He preached in Indiana for many years, but returned to his old home in England, a few years ago, intending to remain there. He never has been satisfied and arranged to return to America.

Clinton.—Dr. F. H. Beeler, city health officer, has caused the arrest of W. D. Vanness, chief of police here, on a charge of illegally interfering with a quarantine. A smallpox victim in a tent said rain dampened the tent and that he was without sufficient food. The health officer could not be found, and the chief told the patient and his nurse to go home.

Indianapolis.—Adjt. Gen. Frank L. Bridges ordered companies in Logansport, Martinsville, Marion, Fort Wayne and Hammond to proceed to Fort Harrison, even if peace strength had not been reached.

CANADA'S EXCELLENT FINANCIAL STANDING

Bank Clearings Increase—Agriculture Is a Paying Industry—Manufactures Doing Well.

"Business experts assert that Canada is on the threshold of perhaps the most prosperous era in her history. The unprecedented value of the farm products of 1915, together with the very large output of factories working on munitions of war has suddenly brought the country into a position, financially, scarcely hoped for as a nation for years to come. Export surplus of $50,000,000 a month is making Canada very strong in cash." —Extract from official bulletin of February 11, 1916.

The response by the farmers of Canada to the call for increased production in 1915 was a total net output exceeding one billion dollars, an increase over normal years of at least three hundred millions. The three Prairie Provinces contributed probably nearly one-half of the total product.

The wheat crop was worth $310,000,000, and accounted for about 30 per cent of the total agricultural product. Other things counted also. Look at dairying. In Ontario the dairy production was increased 20 per cent, and prices were over 10 per cent ahead of 1914. Other provinces shared in the increase, especially Alberta, Saskatchewan, Quebec and Nova Scotia. The dairy cow was "on the job" in 1915. So also were the beef cattle, the pigs and the hens.

It is not fair to the farmers of the Prairies to call the wheat crop of 1915 a "miracle" crop. The farmers cultivated more land and gave attention to their seed. Providence gave them favorable weather. Then they toiled early and late in the harvesting and threshing. Good cultivation gave bigger yields than careless work, 45 bushels as against 25.

The wealth of Western Canada is by no means all in its wheat crop. If the country had no wheat at all it would still be famous as a land of successful farmers on account of its stock production. From one shipping point (High River, Alberta,) over $75,000.00 worth of horses have been sold in the last two months. The average price to the farmer has been about $175.00 per head. According to Government returns there are a million and a half horses in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, worth probably $150,000,000.

The investments which farmers of Western Canada are making in livestock and farm improvements are good evidence of the fact that they have money for these purposes. It is apparent, however, that they are also spending some of their profits on those things which will bring greater comfort and enjoyment to themselves, their wives and their families. The automobile trade all through the country is particularly active and farmers are the biggest buyers. A recent report of the Saskatoon district shows that in two months a million dollars' worth of automobiles have been sold, largely to farmers. Nor are all of these cars of the cheaper makes; some high-priced machines are in demand.

Bank clearings throughout the Western Provinces show greater commercial activity than at the same season in 1915 or 1914, the increase for the last week of February being $8,000,000 and almost $9,000,000, respectively, for the first week of March $15,000,000 over 1915 and $18,000,000 over 1914. The same excellent story comes from Moose Jaw, Sask., where they showed from 40 to 100 per cent over the previous year. Calgary, Alta., bank clearings continue to reflect the greatly improved business conditions as compared with a year ago. Canada's bank clearings for the month of February, 1916, were the greatest for any February in the country's history. The totals amounted to $664,222,000.00, as compared with $487,296,000.00 for the same months a year ago. An increase of $177,000,000.00 in bank clearings for the month tells its own story of the country's prosperity.—Advertisement.

Playing Safe.

O'Toole—Phwat's the matter that ye didn't spake to Mulligan just now? Have ye quarreled?

O'Brien—That we have not. That's the insurance av our friendship.

O'Toole—Phwat do ye mane?

O'Brien—Sure, it's this way. Mulligan an' I are that devoted to wan another that we can't bear the idea of a quarrel; an' as we are both moighty quick-tempered we've resolved not to spake to wan another at all, for fear we break the friendship.

FRECKLES

Now Is the Time to Get Rid of These Ugly Spots.

There's no longer the slightest need of feeling ashamed of your freckles, as the prescription othine—double strength—is guaranteed to remove these homely spots.

Simply get an ounce of othine—double strength—from your druggist, and apply a little of it night and morning and you should soon see that even the worst freckles have begun to disappear, while the lighter ones have vanished entirely. It is seldom that more than one ounce is needed to completely clear the skin and gain a beautiful clear complexion.

Be sure to ask for the double strength othine, as this is sold under guarantee of money back if it fails to remove freckles.—Adv.

A man who lacks faith in his ability never accomplishes anything.

JULY

L 908

0214

The TURMOIL

A NOVEL

By BOOTH TARKINGTON

AUTHOR OF—
"MONSIEUR BEAUCAIRE"
"THE CONQUEST OF CANAAN"
"PENROD" ETC.

COPYRIGHT 1915 BY HARPER & BROTHERS.

SYNOPSIS.

Sheridan's attempt to make a business man of his son Bibbs by starting him in the machine shop ends in Bibbs going to a sanitarium, a nervous wreck. On his return Bibbs is met at the station by his sister Edith. He finds himself an inconsiderable and unconsidered figure in the "New House" of the Sheridans. He sees Mary Vertrees looking at him from a summer house next door. The Vertreeses, old town family and impoverished, call on the Sheridans, newly-rich, and afterward discuss them. Mary puts into words her parents' unspoken wish that she marry one of the Sheridan boys. At the Sheridan housewarming banquet Sheridan spreads himself. Mary frankly encourages Jim Sheridan's attentions, and Bibbs hears he is to be sent back to the machine shop.

Lacking sympathy and understanding of a fine nature, isn't it possible that a slave-driving father could practically force his frail, dreaming son to suicide by making him do work which he is fitted to do neither mentally nor physically? Would the father likely feel guilty of murder in such circumstances?

CHAPTER VII —Continued.

"Bibbs!" Edith's voice was angry, and her color deepened suddenly as she came into the room, preceded by a scent of violets much more powerful than that warranted by the actual bunch of them upon the lapel of her coat.

Bibbs did not turn his head, but wagged it solemnly, seeming depressed by the poem. "Pretty young, isn't it?" he said. "There must have been something about your looks that got the prize, Edith; I can't believe the poem did it."

She glanced hurriedly over her shoulder and spoke sharply, but in a low voice: "I don't think it's very nice of you to bring it up at all, Bibbs. I didn't want them to frame it, and I wish to goodness papa'd quit talking about it; but here, that night, after the dinner, didn't he go and read it aloud to the whole crowd of 'em! I thought I'd die of shame!"

Bibbs looked grieved. "The poem isn't that bad, Edith. You see, you were only seventeen when you wrote it."

"Oh, hush up!" she snapped. "I wish it had burnt my fingers the first time I touched it. Then I might have had sense enough to leave it where it was. I had no business to take it, and I've been ashamed—"

"No, no," he said, comfortingly. "It was the very most flattering thing ever happened to me. It was almost my last flight before I went to the machine shop, and it's pleasant to think somebody liked it enough to—"

"But I don't like it!" she exclaimed. "I don't even understand it—and papa made so much fuss over its getting the prize, I just hate it! The truth is I never dreamed it 'd get the prize."

"You have to live it down, Edith. Perhaps abroad and under another name you might find—"

"Oh, hush up! I'll hire someone to steal it and burn it the first chance I get." She turned away petulantly, moving to the door. "I'd like to think I could hope to hear the last of it before I die!"

"Edith!" he called, as she went into the hall.

"What's the matter?"

"I want to ask you: Do I really look better, or have you just got used to me?"

"What on earth do you mean?" she said, coming back as far as the threshold.

"When I first came you couldn't look at me," Bibbs explained, in his impersonal way. "But I've noticed you look at me lately. I wondered if I'd—"

"It's because you look so much better," she told him, cheerfully. "This month you've been here's done you no end of good. Anybody could look at you now, Bibbs, and not—not get—"

"Sick?"

"Well—almost that!" she laughed. "And you're getting a better color every day, Bibbs; you really are. You're really getting along splendidly."

"I—I'm afraid so," he said, ruefully.

"Afraid so! Well, if you aren't the queerest! I suppose you mean father might send you back to the machine shop if you get well enough. I heard him say something about it the night of the—" The jingle of a distant bell interrupted her, and she glanced at her watch. "Bobby Lamhorn! I'm going to motor him out to look at a place in the country. Afternoon, Bibbs!"

When she had gone, Bibbs mooned pessimistically from shelf to shelf, his eye wandering among the titles of the books. The library consisted almost entirely of handsome "uniform editions." They made an effective decoration for the room, all these big, expensive books, with a glossy binding here and there twinkling a reflection of the flames that crackled in the splendid Gothic fireplace.

There came a chime of bells from a clock in another part of the house, and white-jacket appeared beamingly in the doorway, bearing furs. "Awready, Mist' Bibbs," he announced. "You' ma say wrap up wawm f' you' ride, an' she cain' go with you today, an' not f'git go see you' pa at fo' 'clock. Aw ready, suh."

He equipped Bibbs for the daily drive Doctor Gurney had commanded; and in the manner of master of ceremonies unctuously led the way. In the hall they passed the Moor, and Bibbs paused before it while white-jacket opened the door with a flourish and waved condescendingly to the chauffeur in the car which stood waiting in the driveway.

"It seems to me I asked you what you thought about this 'statue' when I first came home, George," said Bibbs, thoughtfully. "What did you tell me?"

"Yessuh!" George chuckled, perfectly understanding that for some unknown reason Bibbs enjoyed hearing him repeat his opinion of the Moor. "You ast me when you firs' come home, an' you ast me nex' day, an' mighty near ev'y day all time you been here; an' las' Sunday you ast me twicet." He shook his head solemnly. "Look to me mus' be somep'm mighty lamidal 'bout 'at statue!"

"Mighty what?"

"Mighty lamidal!" George burst out laughing. "What do 'at word mean, Mist' Bibbs?"

"It's exactly the word for the statue," said Bibbs, with conviction, as he climbed into the car. "It's a lamidal statue."

"Hiyi!" George exulted. "Man! Man! Listen! Well, suh, she mighty lamidal statue, but lamidal statue heap o' trouble to dus'!"

"I expect she is!" said Bibbs, as the engine began to churn; and a moment later he was swept from sight.

George turned to Mist' Jackson, who had been listening benevolently in the hallway. "Same he aw-ways say, Mist' Jackson—'I expec' she is!' Ev'y day he try t' git me talk 'bout 'at lamidal statue, an' aw-ways, las' thing he say, 'I expec' she is.' You know, Mist' Jackson, if he git well, 'at young man go' be pride o' the family, Mist' Jackson. Yes suh, right now I pick 'im fo' firs' money!"

"Look out with all 'at money, George!" Jackson warned the enthusiast. "White folks 'n 'is house know 'im heap longer 'n you. You the on'y man bettin' on 'im!"

"I risk it!" cried George, merrily. "I put her all on now—ev'y cent! 'At boy's go' be flower o' the flock!"

This singular prophecy, founded somewhat recklessly upon gratitude for the meaning of "lamidal," differed radically from another prediction concerning Bibbs, set forth for the benefit of a fair auditor some twenty minutes later. Jim Sheridan, skirting the edges of the town with Mary Vertrees beside him, in his own swift machine, encountered the invalid upon the highroad. The two cars were going in opposite directions, and the occupants of Jim's had only a swaying glimpse of Bibbs sitting alone on the back seat—his white face startlingly white against cap and collar of black fur—but he flashed into recognition as Mary bowed to him.

Jim waved his left hand carelessly. "It's Bibbs, taking his constitutional," he explained.

"Yes, I know," said Mary. "I bowed to him, too, though I've never met him. In fact, I've only seen him once—no, twice. I hope he won't think I'm very bold, bowing to him."

"I doubt if he noticed it," said honest Jim.

"Oh, oh!" she cried.

"What's the trouble?"

"I'm almost sure people notice it when I bow to them."

"Oh, I see!" said Jim. "Of course they would ordinarily, but Bibbs is funny."

"Is he? How?" she asked. "He strikes me as anything but funny."

"Well, I'm his brother," Jim said, deprecatingly, "but I don't know what he's like, and, to tell the truth, I've never felt exactly like I was his brother, the way I do Roscoe. Nobody could ever get him to do anything; you can't get him to do anything now. He never had any life in him; and honestly, if he is my brother, I must say I believe Bibbs Sheridan is the laziest man God ever made! I hate to say it, but Bibbs Sheridan 'll never amount to anything as long as he lives."

Mary looked thoughtful. "Is there any particular reason why he should?" she asked.

"Good gracious!" he exclaimed. "You don't mean that, do you? Don't you believe in a man's knowing how to earn his salt, no matter how much money his father's got? Hasn't the business of this world got to be carried on by everybody in it? Are we going to lay back on what we've got and see other fellows get ahead of us? If we've got big things already, isn't it every man's business to go ahead and make 'em bigger? Isn't it his duty? Don't we always want to get bigger and bigger?"

"Ye-es—I don't know. But I feel rather sorry for your brother. He looked so lonely—and sick."

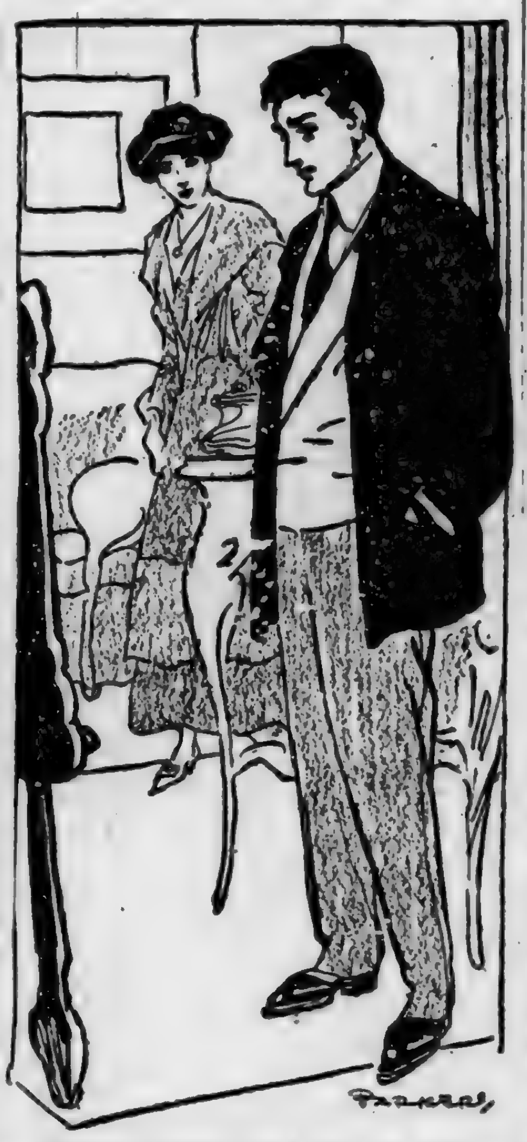
"He's gettin' better every day," Jim said. "Doctor Gurney says so. There's nothing much the matter with him, really—it's nine-tenths imaginary. 'Nerves'! People that are willing to be busy don't have nervous diseases, because they don't have time to imagine 'em."

"You mean his trouble is really mental?"

"Oh, he's not a lunatic," said Jim. "He's just queer. Sometimes he'll say something right bright, but half the time what he says is 'way off the subject, or else there isn't any sense to it at all. For instance, the other day I heard him talkin' to one of the darkies in the hall. The darky asked him what time he wanted the car for his drive, and anybody else in the world would have just said what time they did want it, and that would have been all there was to it; but here's what Bibbs says, and I heard him with my own ears. 'What time do I want the car?' he says. 'Well, now, that depends—that depends,' he says. He talks slow like that, you know. 'I'll tell you what time I want the car, George,' he says, 'if you'll tell me what you think of this statue!' That's exactly his words! Asked the darky what he thought of that Arab Edith and mother bought for the hall!"

Mary pondered upon this. "He might have been in fun, perhaps," she suggested.

"Askin' a darky what he thought of a piece of statuary—of a work of art! Where on earth would be the fun of that? No, you're just kind-hearted—and that's the way you ought to be, of course—"



"Pretty Young, Isn't It?" He Said.

"Thank you, Mr. Sheridan!" she laughed.

"See here!" he cried. "Isn't there any way for us to get over this Mister and Miss thing? A month's got thirty-one days in it; I've managed to be with you a part of pretty near all the thirty-one, and I think you know how I feel by this time—"

She looked panic-stricken immediately. "Oh no," she protested, quickly. "No, I don't, and—"

"Yes, you do," he said, and his voice shook a little. "You couldn't help knowing."

"But I do!" she denied, hurriedly. "I do help knowing. I mean— Oh, wait!"

"What for? You do know how I feel, and you—well, you've certainly wanted me to feel that way—or else pretended—"

"Now, now!" she lamented. "You're spoiling such a cheerful afternoon!"

"'Spoiling' it!" He slowed down the car and turned his face to her squarely. "See here, Miss Vertrees, haven't you—"

"Stop! Stop the car a minute." And when he had complied she faced him as squarely as he evidently desired her to face him. "Listen. I don't want you to go on, today."

"Why not?" he asked, sharply.

"I don't know."

"You mean it's just a whim?"

"I don't know," she repeated. Her voice was low and troubled and honest, and she kept her clear eyes upon his.

"Will you tell me something?"

"Almost anything."

"Have you ever told any man you loved him?"

And at that, though she laughed, she looked a little contemptuous. "No," she said. "And I don't think I ever shall tell any man that—or ever know what it means. I'm in earnest, Mr. Sheridan."

"Then you—you've just been flirting with me!" Poor Jim looked both furious and crestfallen.

"Not one bit!" she cried. "Not one word! Not one syllable! I've meant every single thing!"

"I don't—"

"Of course you don't!" she said. "Now, Mr. Sheridan, I want you to start the car. Now! Thank you. Slowly, till I finish what I want to say. I have not flirted with you. I have deliberately courted you. One thing more, and then I want you to take me straight home, talking about the weather all the way. I said that I do not believe I shall ever 'care' for any man, and that is true. I doubt the existence of the kind of 'caring' we hear about in poems and plays and novels. I think it must be just a kind of emotional talk—most of it. At all events, I don't feel it. Now, we can go faster, please."

"Just where does that let me out?" he demanded. "How does that excuse you for—"

"It isn't an excuse," she said, gently, and gave him one final look, wholly desolate. "I haven't said I should never marry."

"What?" Jim gasped.

She inclined her head in a broken sort of acquiescence, very humble, unfathomably sorrowful.

"I promise nothing," she said, faintly.

"You needn't!" shouted Jim, radiant and exultant. "You needn't! By George! I know you're square; that's enough for me! You wait and promise whenever you're ready!"

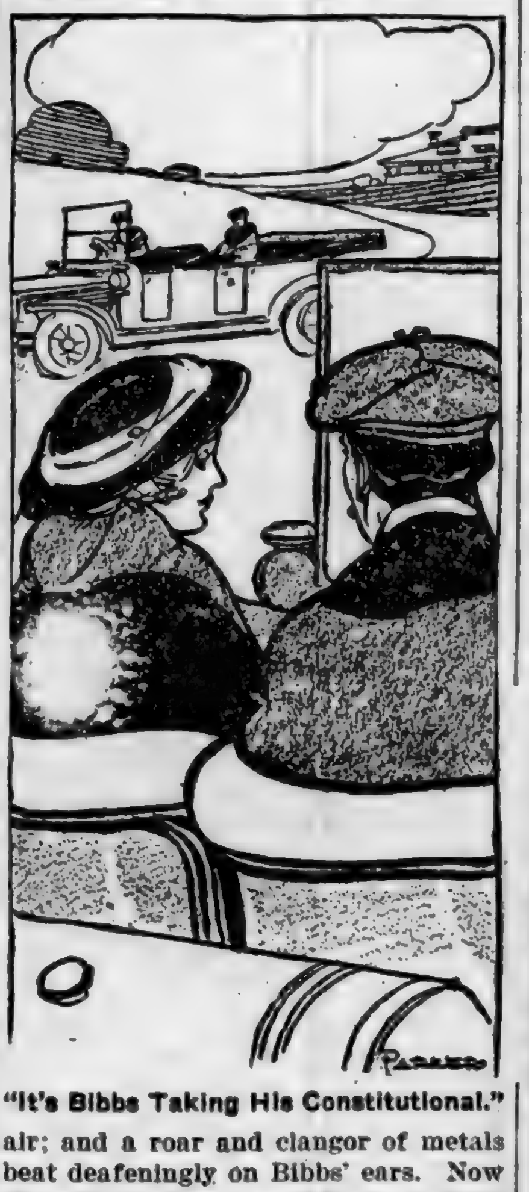
"Don't forget what I asked," she begged him.

"Talk about the weather? I will! God bless the old weather!" cried the happy Jim.

CHAPTER VIII.

Through the open country Bibbs was borne flying between brown fields and sun-flecked groves of gray trees, to breathe the rushing, clean air beneath a glorious sky. Upon Bibbs' cheeks there was a hint of actual color, but undeniably its phantom. This apparition may have been partly the result of a lady's bowing to him upon no more formal introduction than the circumstance of his having caught her looking into his window a month before. It seemed to Bibbs that she must have meant to convey her forgiveness. Nor did he lack the impression that he would long remember her as he had just seen her; her veil tumultuously blowing back, her face glowing in the wind—and that look of gay friendliness tossed to him like a fresh rose in carnival.

By and by, upon a rising ground, the driver halted the car, then backed and tacked, and sent it forward again with its nose to the south and the smoke. They passed from the farm lands, and came, in the amber light of November late afternoon, to the farthermost outskirts of the city. The sky had become only a dingy thickening of the soiled air; and a roar and clangor of metals beat deafeningly on Bibbs' ears. Now the car passed two great blocks of long brick buildings, hideous in all ways possible to make them hideous. And big as these shops were, they were growing bigger, spreading over a third block, where two new structures were mushrooming to completion in some hasty cement process of a stability not over-reassuring. Bibbs pulled the rug closer about him, and not even the phantom of color was left upon his cheeks as he passed this place, for he knew it too well. Across the face of one of the buildings there was an enormous sign: "Sheridan Automatic Pump company, Inc."



"It's Bibbs Taking His Constitutional."

Thence they went through streets of wooden houses, all grimed, and adding their own grime from many a sooty chimney; flimsy wooden houses of a thousand flimsy whimsies in the fashioning, built on narrow lots and nudging one another crossly. Along these streets there were skinny shade trees, and here and there a forest elm or walnut had been left; but these were dying. Some people said it was the scale; some said it was the smoke; and some were sure that asphalt and "improving" the streets did it; but Bigness was in too big a hurry to bother much about trees.

Onward the car bore Bibbs through the older parts of the town where the few solid old houses not already demolished were in transition; some were being made into apartment buildings; others had gone uproariously into trade; one or two peeped humorously over the tops of office buildings of one story in the old front yards. Altogether, the town here was like a boarding-house hash the Sunday after Thanksgiving; the old ingredients were discernible.

This was the fringe of Bigness' own sanctuary, and now Bibbs reached the roaring holy of holies itself. Magnificent new buildings, already dingy, loomed hundreds of feet above him; newer ones, more magnificent, were rising beside them, rising higher; the streets were laid open to their entrails and men worked underground between palisades, and overhead in metal cobwebs like spiders in the sky. Trolley cars clanged and shrieked their way round swarming corners; motor cars of every kind and shape known to man babbled frightful warnings and frantic demands; hospital ambulances clamored wildly for passage; steam whistles signaled the swinging of titanic tentacle and claw; riveters rattled like machine guns; the ground shook to the thunder of gigantic trucks; and the conglomerate sound of it all was the sound of earthquake playing accompaniments for battle and sudden death.

And in the hurrying crowds, swirling and sifting through the brobdingnagian camp of iron and steel, one saw the camp followers and the pagan women—there would be work today and dancing tonight. For the Puritan's dry voice is but the crackling of a leaf underfoot in the rush and roar of the coming of the new Egypt.

Bibbs was on time. He knew it must be "to the minute" or his father would consider it an outrage; and the big chronometer in Sheridan's office marked four precisely when Bibbs walked in. Coincidentally with his entrance five people who had been at work in the office, under Sheridan's direction, walked out. They departed upon no visible or audible suggestion, and with a promptness that seemed ominous to the newcomer. As the massive door clicked softly behind the elderly stenographer, the last of the procession, Bibbs had a feeling that they all understood that he was a failure as a great man's son, a disappointment, the "queer one" of the family, and that he had been summoned to judgment—a well-founded impression, for that was exactly what they understood.

"Sit down," said Sheridan.

It is frequently an advantage for deans, schoolmasters and worried fathers to place delinquents in the sitting posture. Bibbs sat.

Sheridan, standing, gazed enigmatically upon his son for a period of silence, then walked slowly to a window and stood looking out of it, his big hands, loosely hooked together by the thumbs, behind his back. They were soiled, as were all other hands down town, except such as might be still damp from a basin.

"Well, Bibbs," he said at last, not altering his attitude, "do you know what I'm goin' to do with you?"

Bibbs, leaning back in his chair, fixed his eyes contemplatively upon the ceiling. "I heard you tell Jim," he began, in his slow way. "You said you'd send him to the machine shop with me if he didn't propose to Miss Vertrees. So I suppose that must be your plan for me. But—"

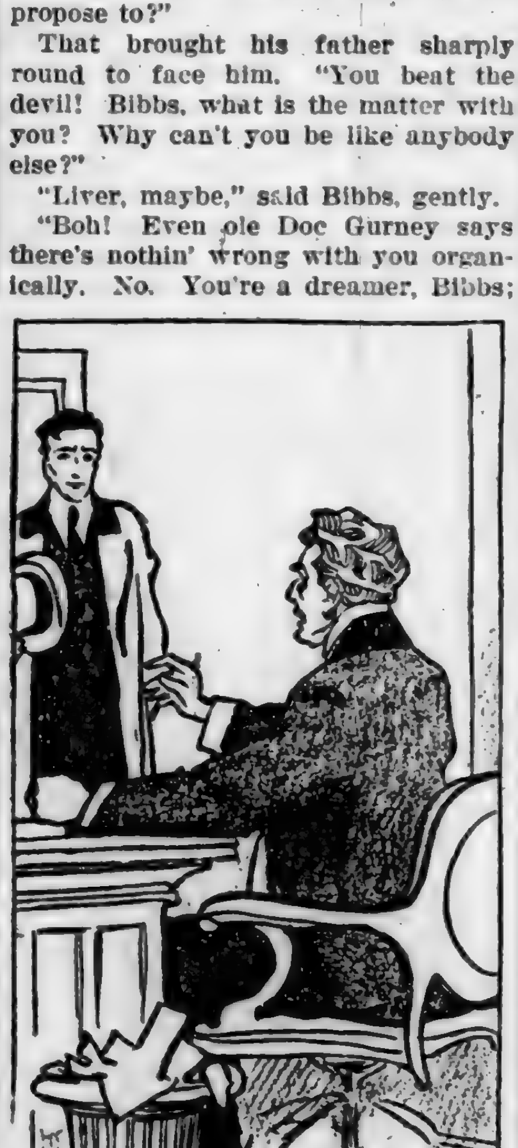
"But what?" said Sheridan, irritably, as the son paused.

"Isn't there somebody you'd let me propose to?"

That brought his father sharply round to face him. "You beat the devil! Bibbs, what is the matter with you? Why can't you be like anybody else?"

"Liver, maybe," said Bibbs, gently.

"Boh! Even ole Doc Gurney says there's nothin' wrong with you organically. No. You're a dreamer, Bibbs; that's what's the matter, and that's all the matter. Oh, not one o' these big dreamers that put through the big deals! No, sir! You're the kind o' dreamer that just sets out on the back fence and thinks about how much trouble there must be in the world! That ain't the kind that builds the bridges, Bibbs; it's the kind that borrows fifteen cents from his wife's uncle's brother-in-law to get ten cent's worth o' plug tobacco and a nickel's worth o' quinine!"



"Sit Down," Said Sheridan.

He put the finishing touch to this etching with a snort, and turned again to the window.

"Look out there!" he bade his son. "Look out o' that window! Look at the life and energy down there! Look at the big things young men are doin' in this town!" He swung about, coming to the mahogany desk in the middle of the room. "Look at what your own brothers are doin'! Look at Roscoe! Yes, and look at Jim! I made Jim president o' the Sheridan Realty company last new year's, and it's an example to any young man—or ole man, either—the way he took ahold of it. Last July we found out we wanted two more big warehouses at the pump works—wanted 'em quick. Contractors said it couldn't be done; said nine or ten months at the soonest; couldn't see it any other way. What 'd Jim do? Took the contract himself; found a fellow with a new cement and concrete process; kept men on the job night and day, and stayed on it night and day himself—and, by George! we begin to use them warehouses next week! Four months and a half, and every inch fireproof! I tell you Jim's one o' these fellers that make miracles happen! I tell you these young business men I watch just do my heart good! They don't set around on the back fence—no, sir! They're puttin' their life-blood into it, I tell you, and that's why we're gettin' bigger every minute, and why they're gettin' bigger, and why it's all goin' to keep on gettin' bigger!"

He slapped the desk resoundingly with his open palm, and then, observing that Bibbs remained in the same impassive attitude, with his eyes still fixed upon the ceiling in a contemplation somewhat plaintive, Sheridan was impelled to groan. "Oh, Lord!" he said. "This is the way you always were. I don't believe you understand a darn word I been sayin'! You don't look as if you did. By George! it's discouraging!"

"I don't understand about getting—about getting bigger," said Bibbs, bringing his gaze down to look at his father placatively. "I don't see just why—"

"What?" Sheridan leaned forward, resting his hands upon the desk and staring across it incredulously at his son.

"I don't understand—exactly—what you want it all bigger for?"

"Great God!" shouted Sheridan, and struck the desk a blow with his clenched fist. "A son of mine asks me that! You go out and ask the poorest day laborer you can find! Ask him that question—"

"I did once," Bibbs interrupted; "when I was in the machine shop. I—"

"What'd he say?"

"He said, 'Oh, hell!'" answered Bibbs, mildly.

"Yes, I reckon he would!" Sheridan swung away from the desk. "I reckon he certainly would! And I got plenty sympathy with him right now, myself!"

"It's the same answer, then?" Bibbs' voice was serious, almost tremulous.

"Damnation!" Sheridan roared. "Did you ever hear the word prosperity, you ninny? Did you ever hear the word ambition? Did you ever hear the word progress?"

He flung himself into a chair after the outburst, his big chest surging, his throat tumultuous with guttural incoherences. "Now then," he said, huskily, when the anguish had somewhat abated, "what do you want to do?"

Taken by surprise, Bibbs stammered "What-what do-I—what—"

"If I'd let you do exactly what you had the whim for, what would you do?"

Bibbs looked startled; then timidity overwhelmed him—a profound shyness. He bent his head and fixed his lowered eyes upon the toe of his shoe which he moved to and fro upon the rug, like a culprit called to the desk in school.

"What would you do? Loaf?"

"No, sir." Bibbs' voice was almost inaudible, and what little sound it made was unquestionably a guilty sound. "I suppose I'd—I'd try to—to write."

"Write what?"

"Nothing important—just poems and essays, perhaps."

"I see," said his father, breathing quickly with the restraint he was putting upon himself. "That is, you want to write, but you don't want to write anything of any account."

"You think—"

Sheridan got up again. "I take my hat off to the man that can write a good ad," he said, emphatically. "The best writin' talent in this country is right spang in the ad business today. You buy a magazine for good writin'—look on the back of it! Let me tell you I pay money for that kind o' writin'. Maybe you think it's easy. Just try it! I've tried it, and I can't do it. I tell you an ad's got to be written so it makes people do the hardest thing in this world to get 'em to do: it's got to make 'em give up their money! You talk about 'poems and essays.' I tell you when it comes to the actual skill o' puttin' words together so as to make things happen, R. T. Bloss, right here in this city, knows more in a minute than George Waldo Emerson ever knew in his whole life!"

"You—you may be—" Bibbs said indistinctly, the last word smothered in a cough.

"Of course I'm right! And if it ain't just like you to want to take up with the most out-o'-date kind o' writin' there is! 'Poems and essays'! My Lord, Bibbs, that's women's work! Why, look at Edith! I expect that poem o' hers would set a pretty high-water mark for you, young man, and it's the only one she's ever managed to write in her whole life! And Edith's a smart girl; she's got more energy in her little finger than you ever give me a chance to see in your whole body, Bibbs. I'm not sayin' a word against poetry. I wouldn't take ten thousand dollars right now for that poem of Edith's; and poetry's all right enough in its place—but you leave it to the girls. A man's got to do a man's work in this world."

Can't you see the serious effect of such parental tactics in dealing with the melancholy Bibbs as Old Sheridan pursues? Isn't it easy to imagine the lonely young fellow's going down to the river and making an end of his misery?

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

JULY

L 908

0215

NOTICE TO DEFENDANTS.

Cause No. 10529.

In the DeKalb Circuit Court, December Term, 1915.

State of Indiana, DeKalb County, ss:

Iva C. Yeiser, Plaintiff.

vs.

William Rogers et al., Defendants.

Now comes the plaintiff by Charles O. Borst, her attorney, and files her complaint herein, together with the affidavit by a competent person, that the residence upon diligent inquiry is unknown of the defendants: William Rogers; Elizabeth Rogers; William C. Jenkins; Plesy Jenkins; John Goer; Anne Sawyer; Anne Goer; Mariah Coats; Eldah Goer; Maria D. Goer; Anna Goer; Rufus Goer; Harriet Goer; Mariah D. Goer; Asa Sawyer; Sylvester Coats; Isaac Sawyer; Anna Sawyer 2nd; Mariah D. Richmond; Mariah D. Coats; Eldergas Goer; Eldagas Goer; Maria D. Allen; Ira Allen; Minerva C. Dawson; Ora Fusselman; Charles Thomas; Henrietta Andrews; Lydia Wyatt; Elizabeth Warner; Celia Johnson; Samuel Johnson; John Wesley Wyatt; Elizabeth Wyatt; Jennie Wyatt; Clarence Wyatt; Clara Wyatt; Wallace Johnson; John Platter; Ralph Miller; Wilson Miller; Wilson Miller; Winfield Nelson; Thomas Winfield Nelson; Eva Whistler; George Warford; Jennie Hammond; Rebecca Deardorf; John Deardorf; Mary A. Shank.

That the names of the defendants are unknown and they are believed to be non-residents of the State of Indiana, sued in this action by the following names and designations, to-wit: "The unknown husbands and wives respectively, of each of the following named persons, to-wit: William Rogers; Elizabeth Rogers; William C. Jenkins; Plesy Jenkins; John Goer; Anne Sawyer; Anne Goer; Mariah Coats; Elda Goer; Maria D. Goer; Anna Goer; Rufus Goer; Harriet Goer; Mariah D. Goer; Asa Sawyer; Sylvester Coats; Isaac Sawyer; Anna Sawyer 2nd; Mariah D. Richmond; Mariar D. Coats; Eldergas Goer; Eldagas Goer; Maria D. Allen; Ira Allen; Minerva C. Dawson; John Platter; Ralph Miller; William Warford; Eva Whistler; Maggie Warford; George Warford; Jennie Hammond; Wilson Miller; Elizabeth Warner; Jennie Wyatt; Wallace Johnson.

The names of all of whom are unknown to the plaintiff.

That the names of the defendants are unknown and they are believed to be non-residents of the State of Indiana, sued in this action, by the following named and designations, to-wit: "The unknown widowers and widows of each of the following named deceased persons, to-wit: William Rogers; Elizabeth Rogers; William C. Jenkins; Plesy Jenkins; John Goer; Anne Sawyer; Anne Goer; Mariah Coats; Elda Goer; Maria D. Goer; Anna Goer; Rufus Goer; Harriet Goer; Mariah D. Goer; Asa Sawyer; Anna Sawyer 2nd; Mariah D. Richmond; Mariah D. Coats; Eldergas Goer; Eldagas Goer; Maria D. Allen; Minerva C. Dawson; John Platter; Ralph Miller; Wilson Miller; Eva Whistler; Maggie Warford; George Warford; Jennie Hammond; Mary A. Shank; William Warford.

The names of all of whom are unknown to the plaintiff.

That the names of the defendants are unknown and they are believed to be non-residents of the State of Indiana, sued in this action by the following names and designations, to-wit: The unknown children, decendants, heirs, surviving spouses, creditors and administrators of the state, devisees, legatees, trustees and executors of the last will and testament, successors in interest and assigns respectively, of each of the following named and designated deceased persons, to-wit:— William Rogers; Elizabeth Rogers; William C. Jenkins; Plesy Jenkins; John Goer; Anne Sawyer; Anne Goer; Mariah D. Goer; Mariah Coats; Elda Goer; Anna Goer; Rufus Goer; Harriet Goer; Asa Sawyer; Sylvester Coats; Isaac Sawyer; Anna Sawyer; Mariah D. Richmond; Mariah D. Coats; Eldergas Goer; Eldagas Goer; Maria D. Allen; Ira Allen; Samuel Wyatt; Matilda Wyatt; Minerva C. Dawson, Henry Fusselman; Almeda M. Fusselman; Ira L. Fusselman; Sarah Fusselman; Quincy Fusselman; Nathan Wyatt; Mary Ann Wyatt; Joseph Wyatt; William Wyatt; Ellen Wyatt; Alice Carpenter; William Carpenter; Hortense Johnson; Mary May; George May; Harriet Thomas; John Platter; Ralph Miller; Wilson Miller; Eva Whistler; Maggie Warford; George Warford; Jennie Hammond; Mary A. Shank; William DeMaranville; Winfield Nelson; Thomas Winfield Nelson; Rachel Sechler; William Sechler; Lovina Warford; Joe Warford; William Warford.

The names of all of whom are unknown to the plaintiff.

All of the women once known by any of the names and designations above stated who may have changed their names, and who are now known by other names, the names of all of whom are unknown to plaintiff; the spouses of all of the persons above named, described and designated as defendants to this action, who are married, the names of all of whom are unknown to the plaintiff; all persons and corporations who assert or might assert any title through any of the defendants to this action named, described and designated in said complaint, the names of all of whom are unknown to plaintiff.

That the following named defendants are non-residents of the state of Indiana, to-wit: Ora Fusselman; Charley Thomas; Henrietta Andrews; Lydia Wyatt; Elizabeth Warner; Celia Johnson; Samuel Johnson; John Wesley Wyatt; Elizabeth Wyatt; Jennie Wyatt; Clarence Wyatt; Clara Wyatt; Wallace Johnson; Ralph Miller; Wilson Miller; Martha Pressler; Jacob Pressler; George Warford; Jennie Hammond; Rebecca Deardorf; John Deardorf.

That said action is for the purpose of quieting title to real estate in the State of Indiana; that a cause of action exists against all of said defendants; that all of said defendants are necessary parties to said action and that they are believed to be non-residents of the State of Indiana.

The following real estate in DeKalb county, Indiana, is described in said complaint, to-wit:

Part of the West 110 acres of the Northeast quarter of Section one (1), Township Thirty-three (33) North, Range Fourteen (14) East, and being that portion of the West 110 acres, which lies North of the Center of the Hicksville-Auburn Highway."

Also:

A part of the Northwest quarter of Section one (1), Township Thirty-three (33) North, Range Fourteen (14) East, described as follows:

Commencing at the Northeast corner of said Northwest quarter, thence West 13 chains 68 links to a stone; thence South 13 chains 10 links to a stone in the center of the State road; thence Southeastery along the center of said road to the East line of said Northwest quarter; thence North 19 chains 22 links to the place of beginning.

Containing 22 acres.

And other real estate.

Also:

A part of the Northwest quarter of Section one (1), Township Thirty-three (33) North, Range Fourteen (14) East, described as follows:

Commencing at the Southeast corner of said Northwest quarter thence North 21 chains 71 links to an iron pin in the center of the Auburn and Newville road, thence Northwest along the center of said road 18 chains 13 links to an iron pin, thence south along center line of North and South road 29 chains 40 links to a stone on South line of said Northwest quarter; thence East on said South line 15 chains 25 links to the place of beginning.

Containing 40.41 acres.

This action is instituted and prosecuted by said plaintiff for the purpose of quieting its title to the real estate above described as against all demands, claims and claimants whatsoever.

Notice is therefore hereby given said defendants that unless they be and appear on the 80th day of the May Term, 1916, of the DeKalb Circuit Court of Indiana, being the 15th day of August, 1916, to be begun and holden on the 15th day of May, 1916, at the Court house in the town of Auburn, in said County and State, and answer to demur to said complaint, the same will be heard and determined in their absence.

In Witness Whereof, I hereby set my hand and affix the seal of said Court at the office of the Clerk thereof in the town of Auburn, Indiana, this 19th day of June, 1916.

JOHN HEBEL,
Clerk of the DeKalb Circuit Court.
(SEAL)
Chas. O. Borst, Attorney for the Plaintiff.

FreeColumn

All advertisements in this department are free to subscribers only. —EDITOR NEWS.]

FOR SALE:-One Iron Harrow.
Francis Lothamer.

FOR SALE:-Cherries for 75c. a crate if you pick them yourself. Carl Johnston.

Church Notes

M. P. Church Announcements.

J. C. Coons, Pastor.

St. Joe:—Sunday School, 9:00 a. m.; Preaching service, 10:30 p. m.; Christian Endeavor, 6:30 p. m; Prayer Meeting, Thursday evening, 7:30 p. m.

Fairview:—Sunday School, 9 a. m.

Concord:—Sunday School, 9:00 a. m.

Christian Church Announcements.

St. Joe:—Bible School at 9 a. m.; Morning Worship at 10:15 a. m.; Christian Endeavor, 6:30 p. m.; Preaching 7:30 p. m., by M. O. Johuston, late of New Zeland.

Lutheran Church Announcements.

A. K. Mumma, Pastor.

St. Joe:—Sunday School, 9:00 a. m.; Christian Endeavor, 6:30 p. m. Preaching services, 7:30 p. m.; Prayer Meeting, Thursday evening.

JOT IT DOWN

That we do the very best line of Commercial Printing and at reasonable prices. Give us your next order and let us prove our assertion.

Bear in mind, we want your business, and we propose making ourselves deserving. Are you with us?

THANK YOU

Keep up the Roads.

The farmer who permits the road along his farm to become a quagmire during rainy weather and a series of ruts and chug holes after the rains cease is exercising poor business judgment, declares The Farmer's Guide. Of course, it might be considered that it is the duty of the road officials to prevent such conditions but when they fail to make the necessary improvements the farmer could well afford to go to the time and trouble to put the road in good condition. It would be a good advertisement for his farm. Passersby would compliment his aggressiveness and should he wish to sell, the good road would add several dollars per acre to the value of the place. An occasional use of the road drag or a load or two of gravel or crushed stone to fill up the low places would keep the road good, if used in time. If the road superintendent does not look after your road do it yourself. It is to your advantage to do so. A bad road is always a poor advertisement.

Coburn's Corners

Paul Shultz, of Binghamton, N. Y., is making an extended visit in the families of R. F., and G. W. Place.

J. M. Dermott and family entertained to dinner, Sunday:—J. E. Dermott and wife, of Coldwater, Mich.; R. F. Place and family, and the Misses Helen Place and Lena Kelley.

Miss Grace Williams, of Garrett is visiting relatives in this vicinity.

The Misses Audrey Coburn, Ruth Hurni and Grace Williams ate Sunday dinner at T. H. Shulls'.

W. M. Abel has purchased a new Overland.

Mrs. Wm. Allen is on the sick list.

Miss Fern Walker went to Logansport, Monday, to visit with her uncle, Sam Snyder and family.

Hear M. O. Johnson at the church, next Sunday.

The Gossip Say-

Zay Sailer was home from Wayne over the Fourth.

Frank Fogal, of Churubusco, was in town Monday, on business.

Mrs. Anna Baker transacted business in Auburn and Garrett, Monday.

Miss Sarah Bartlett, of Waterloo, is the guest of her sister, Mrs. Addie Filley.

Fred Jenkins and wife spent the day Sunday with Ed Krafft and wife, and Mrs. Eliza Krafft, four miles north of town.

Mrs. Ruth McCoy, of Compton, Iowa, was the guest of Craig Sheffer and wife, from Friday until Tuesday. Miss Ma[illegible] George was also a Sunday guest.

Dr. H. R. Farnham
MEDICINE AND
GENERAL SURGERY
ST. JOE, INDIANA

Office Hours—Week Day
10:00 to 11:00 a. m.
1:00 to 3:00 p. m.
6:30 to 8:00 p. m.
Sunday—By appointment.
Telephone
Office,..................No. 2

Office at Residence. Second house west of Widney Opera House.

S. S. Widney
Justice of the Peace
Insurance and Real Estate
Phone No. 10
ST. JOE, . . . IND

BANK STATEMENT.

Emilius Case, President; W. C. Patterson, Vice-president; S. W. Tustison, Cashier; F. R. Bowman, Ass't. Cashier. Report of the condition of the St Joe Valley Bank, a State bank, at St. Joe, in the State of Indiana, at the close of its business on June 30th., 1916.

RESOURCES
Loans and Discounts	$82,666 18
Overdrafts, secured	251 19
Other Bonds and Securities	6,060 00
Furniture and Fixtures	967 50
Due from Banks and Trust Companies	22,402 05
Cash on Hand	3,244 89
Current Expenses	1,986 96
Taxes Paid	551 19
Interest Paid	1,309 28
Total Resources	119,439 24
LIABILITIES
Capital Stock—paid in	$25,000 00
Surplus	1,000 00
Undivided Profits	173 76
Exchange, Discounts and Interest	6,063 07
Demand Deposits	29,422 44
Demand Certificates	57,779 97
Total Liabilities	119,439 24

State of Indiana,
County of DeKalb, ss:

I, S. W. Tustison, cashier, of the St. Joe Valley Bank, State Bank, do solemnly swear that the above statement is true.

S. W. TUSTISON, Cash.

Subscribed and sworn to before me, this 6th. day of July 1916.

[L. S.] FRED B. LEIGHTY, N. P
My commission expires Feb. 14, '20

A Double Header

Rev. Anderson, of Altona, filled the M. P. Pulpit, last Sunday morning, and Rev. Chas. Heininger, of China, occupied the pulpit in the evening, giving a rather detailed talk on the work at Kalgan and other points where the M. P. church is at work. A nice audience greeted him.

JOE WING'S WORK STILL LIVES

Ohio's Alfalfa Authority Leaves Valuable Experience to Other Growers.

The late Joe Wing of Mechanicsburg, Ohio, was undoubtedly America's best-known Alfalfa Authority and enthusiast. Joe Wing made the almost unknown alfalfa plant a by-word in every nook and hamlet of our land He first studied this wonder-working plant in the far West and then demonstrated on his own farm in Ohio the great possibilities of alfalfa for the American farmer. In his book, "Alfalfa in America," Joe Wing says, "Sow almost any sort of alfalfa seed, sow at any time of moon or in almost any sort of way and you will succeed, if—here is the fatal "if" —your soil is right. . . . Alfalfa growing is a soil question. Get the soil right and it is difficult to fail."

Drainage is the first and fundamental factor in getting the soil right Alfalfa will not stand for wet feet any more than the most delicate child will grow strong if its feet are always wet and cold. The soil must be well supplied with organic matter and be sweet. If alfalfa is to be seeded on land where it has never grown before either the seed, soil, or both, positively must be inoculated with alfalfa bacteria. Finally, though all this be done, profitable alfalfa cannot be grown unless the soil has an abundance of readily available plantfood. The young alfalfa plants need a little ammonia to give them a quick start and keep them going until the bacteria on the roots become established. After that they need potash and a large proportion of phosphoric acid.

For the average loam or clay loam soils, 300 to 500 pounds to the acre of a fertilizer analyzing 1 to 3 per cent ammonia, 8 to 12 per cent phosphoric acid and 2 to 4 per cent potash will give good results. Owing to the present war conditions making potash scarce and high priced, a smaller percentage of potash is advisable until conditions adjust themselves. On sandy or exceptionally thin land use a fertilizer running higher in ammonia and put it on heavier.

Regarding fertilizer distribution, "Alfalfa in America" has the following.

"On Woodbine Farm we own a wide and large fertilizer distributor. This machine sows a strip 8 feet wide and the box holds 1,000 pounds of fertilizer. It simply sows the stuff broadcast on the surface. With such a machine a man can go rapidly over his old meadow, or sow his phosphorus over his land preparatory to seeding his alfalfa. No one should hesitate to buy the fertilizer, since a dollar so invested will usually return three or four in the crop of hay."

CARL HAGENBECK-WALLACE CIRCUS
THE WONDER SHOW
THE LIKE OF WHICH YOU NEVER SAW BEFORE
ALL NEW AGAIN! ALL RIGHT AGAIN!
A CIRCUS GATHERED FROM 18 NATIONS.
6 ARENAS USED FOR ITS 1,001 WONDERS.
CAPITAL INVESTED $3,000,000
3 RAILROAD TRAINS—3.
22 TENTS—22.
8 BANDS—8.
400 PERFORMERS.
YOU HAVE NEVER WITNESSED A CIRCUS LIKE THIS.
60 RIDERS—60.
60 AERIALISTS—60.
500 HORSES—500.
200 ACTS—200.
3 HERDS OF ELEPHANTS 3
400 WILD ANIMALS
CARL HAGENBECK'S ZOOLOGICAL PARADISE
World's Greatest Trained Beasts
Performing in a Massive Steel-Girded Arena. The Wide World, Civilized and Uncivilized, Ransacked to Augment and Complete what is now the Biggest Zoo On Earth
THE GREAT WALLACE CIRCUS DE LUXE
50 CLOWNS 50
INCLUDING PIRO THE KING'S JESTER
Only Circus With Trained Wild Animals
Biggest and Best Holiday in All the Year
WONDERS, NOVELTIES, FEATURES FROM EVERY LAND
OSCAR LOWANDE
First person in history of the world turning a somersault from one running horse to another.
FLYING WARDS
Daring and sensational aerial artists. Performing in dome of world's biggest tent.
SIX CEVENES
Most dextrous performers on lofty double aerial wire in earth's history.
3-MILE GALA, GOLDEN STREET PARADE 10 A. M.
All tents illuminated by electricity at night.
DOORS OPEN AT 1 AND 7 P. M. PERFORMANCES BEGIN AT 2 AND 8 P. M. ONE 50c TICKET ADMITS TO ALL. CHILDREN UNDER 10, 25c.

Will Exhibit
AT AUBURN
-On-
SATURDAY, JULY 22

SEVEN DAYS OF GOSPEL MISSION..

Methodist Episcopal Church, Spencerville, Indiana
Beginning July 3rd. at 7:45 p. m.
REV. DELPHOS LOHR BERRY, EVANGELIST

Thursday, July 6th.—"The Law of Compensation."
Friday, July 7th.—"The Fathers Call."
Saturday, July 8th.—"A Pertinent Question." One the Farmer Must Answer.
Sunday, July 9th.—"Pillar and Ground of the Truth". This lecture-sermon should not be missed.

Dr. Berry is a "DeKalb County boy" lawyer, soldier and for eight years has successfully served influential communions. He returns to Grand Rapids, Mich., in a few weeks where he will be engaged in aggressive religious work.

Silver Offering Only— Do not miss one of these meetings.

100 Per Cent.
INCREASED EARNINGS.

The following is fac-simile of certificate of Bond issued to each Depositor in this Bank.

No. ______ Grabill, Ind., ______ 19__
Mr. ______

THIS IS TO CERTIFY that your DEPOSITS in this bank are INSURED under a bond of THE AMERICAN GUARANTY COMPANY of Columbus, Ohio.

THE GRABILL STATE BANK.

PRESERVE THIS. By Albert Egly, Cashier.

Postal Savings pay 2 per cent. Interest and the money is placed in banks who have to furnish a Bond to the government to guarantee that the funds are safe in that Bank.

We pay 4 per cent. Interest and give you the same guarantee. An increased earning of 100 per cent.

THIS is the only Bank in this community thus insuring its depositors.

Total Assets, over $175,000

The Grabill State Bank
Established 1906

Joseph Witmer, President
David Klopfenstine, v. pres.
Albert Egly, Cashier
Joseph A. Grabill, Director
Peter W. Amstutz, Director
Julius Gehrig, Director
John B. Haifley, Chairman Board Directors

JULY

L 908

0216

Has Your Subscription Expired? Come in and renew it next time you are in town.

ST. JOE NEWS.

NO newspaper can succeed without advertising, therefore we solicit the patronage of our readers for those who by their advertising help to make this paper possible.

VOL. XXX — ST. JOE, DeKALB COUNTY INDIANA, THURSDAY JULY 13 1916 — NO. 29

LOCAL ITEMS.

Patronize the advertisers.

Social Sat Eve. at St. Joe.

WANTED—To buy your Hay. C. E. Frye, Phone 73-31, St. Joe.

A baby daughter was born to Mr. and Mrs. O. K. Shull, early Monday morning.

Merritt Hull and B. F. Terman spent Monday and Tuesday at Hamilton Lake, fishing.

A fine line of summer ready made wearables for Women and Children. Schloss' of Auburn.

S. H. Platner and Frank Sebert are driving the new Maxwell cars that Mr. Patterson secured at Detroit.

Nothing like it—McCormick Binder—Car load just received at Curies. We will have one of them ready for you. How about it for this years crop?

The poker game still continues and Saturday there was a couple fellows missed their supper, all right. Wonder what they told the wife, because they were detained?

Mrs. Jane Pepple, of Auburn, Wm. Pepple and wife, E. R. Kinsey, wife and son, and Geo. Swineford and wife motored to Sherwood, Sunday, and visited friends.

Rolland Bearss and wife, Mrs. Joseph Caw and little son Frank, H. C. Hathaway, wife and son Russell, James and Wm. Hamilton picniced in Hamilton's Grove, Sunday. They were joined by Frank Seiler and wife, John Life and John Markley, of Auburn.

J. P. Buckingham and wife entertained from Saturday until Monday the latter's sister and husband, John Rose, wife and children, Lillian and Paul, and Miss Geraldine Miller, of Dundee, Mich. Sunday the Buckinghams and their guests motored to Blue Cast Springs.

Sunday School Report.

The following is a true and correct report of the various Sunday Schools in this neighborhood for last Sunday.

Lutheran	105	$3.58
M. P	103	3.68
Christian	63	2.13
Concord	108
Fairview	24	.85
Coburntown	102
M. E. Spencer	87	3.47

George Milliman visited at Corunna and Kendallville, Sunday.

Ice cream and Cake Saturday evening at St. Joe by the F.B.C.

Roscoe Conine is the owner of an Overland car. Beams & Steward, Agents.

J. C. F. Abel is having Henry Krabill fit his house and barn with lightning rods.

Sam Keesler and family were guests of Mr. Furnish and wife, at Spencerville, Sunday.

George Packer, wife and son Waldo, of Butler, were Friday guests of Mrs. Foster Gee.

Cut your grain with one of our new McCormick Binders. Curie has just received a large shipment.

Miss Pauline Andress and Miss Olive Ridgway and gentlemen friends spent Sunday at Robison Park.

The ladies of the Christian Church will give a Bake Sale Saturday morning in the building, just east of the Opera Block.

Jacob Perkins, wife and children Little Harold Reinoehl, Gabe Snyder and family, all of Fairfield Tp., were Sunday guests of John Reinoehl and children.

W. C. Patterson and wife, Mrs. S. W. Tustison, Mrs. Chas. Bayman and Mrs. Mary Hale motored to Hicksville, Thursday afternoon, and visited with F. A. Patterson and wife.

St. Joe Mills have a good supply of Daily Bread Flour, if you need some before your new crop is ready, we are at your service.

Mr. Baughman, wife and daughter and friend, of near Avilla; W. C. Patterson and wife, and S. W. Tustison, wife and daughter Margaret, were Sunday afternoon guests of L. W. Yeiser and family, northeast of town.

The illustrated lecture given at the Christian Church, Monday evening, by Rev. M. O. Johnston on "Life in New Zealand" was extremely interesting. Mr. Johnston tells his story from personal observation as he and his wife were residents of New Zealand for a number of years.

Threshing.

We have a car of good coal on tracks at $3.40 per ton. Come early. St. Joe Mills.

"SON, I'M PROUD OF YOU"

(Copyright.)

Mrs. John Coburn left last Thursday for a few days visit with friends and relatives in Toledo.

Bert Bachtol and family, of near Waterloo, were Sunday guests of Mrs. R. Wiers and Rolla Wiers and family.

C. A. Patterson made a trip to Detroit and purchased a couple new Maxwell cars. The machines were sold however.

Messrs. Justice and Henry Winslow and their families, of near Auburn, were Sunday guests of Nelson Thomas and wife.

Mrs. John Hart, son Albert, and the two smaller children were over Sunday guests of Daniel Myers and family, at Syracuse.

Mrs. Geo. Howey, of Spencerville, and Mrs. Geo. Milner, 811 N. Main St., South Bend, Ind., are new subscribers to THE NEWS.

P. A. Shurts and daughter, Miss Pearl, Mrs. Josie VanFliet, of Garrett, and Mrs. Rebecca Smith were Sunday afternoon guests of Will Lucas and wife, and L. D. Nelson and wife.

Mrs. C. E. Carson, of Connellsville, Pa., came Saturday for a few days visit with her husband's parents, Walter Peterson and wife. Her little daughter Dessa, who has been here visiting them for a few weeks, will return home with her.

Home Coming Week in Butler.

Keep your eyes on the newspapers from now on until the opening of the big Homecoming Week in Butler, announced for the last week in July, the 25th., to 28th., Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday and Friday, inclusive. You should come and get to see and hear some of the famous men and women of the country who are making history. You will see Broadway filled from end to end with the most popular concession attractions and entertainments now on the road. You and your neighbors are wanted in Butler that week; and Butler will be disappointed if you are not there.

Jesse Copp and wife, of New Haven, were home over Sunday.

J. C. F. Abel and wife took their guest of the past two weeks, Mrs. Elizabeth Allen, home to Edgerton, Sunday.

Milo Provines and wife, of near Auburn, and Foster Gee and family were Sunday guests of S. D. Gee and wife.

Mr. and Mrs. Frank Steffins, of Butler Center, and John Metzfelt and wife, of Auburn, were guests of Mell Herricks', Sunday.

Winners on the Fourth.

We want to thank the people of St. Joe and vicinity for their presence and co-operation which made it a success.

Below you will find prizes and winners:—The Firemen's Parade was shown to the people what equipment the company has for fighting fire. The Base Ball game was some fast game ending in score 33 to 7 in favor of Engine Crew. Bicycle Race: Lester Coburn, 1st.; Geo. Tustison, 2nd. After several pulls the goose's neck was extracted by Stanley Koch. Sack Race: Several were in race, did not learn the names of winners. Foot Race: Harry Kinsey, 1st.; Estel Coburn, 2nd.

Auto Parade consisted of several nice and neat decorated machines. Mrs. C. R. Price winning prize. Top of Greased Pole was reached by Hull boy. Children's Race: Boys' race won by Floyd Hull, Girls' by Melba Andress. Fantastic Parade was sure fantastic and a success. W. H. Pepple winning 1, Otto Ginther, 2nd., and Stanley Koch, 3rd. Fantastic Individual was very well made up. Katherine Bayman–1st., prize, Mrs. Buckingham–2nd., and Russell Hathaway, 3rd.

Again thanking you for your co-operation and attendance. Hope for another Big 4th., July.

St. Joe Fire Dept.,
E. R. Kinsey, Secy.

Subscribe for this paper.

Clarence and Walter Zonker spent Sunday at Corunna visiting friends.

Schloss' of Auburn are showing a fine line of Summer Dress Materials.

Mrs. Mary Scholes had as a Sunday guest her brother, Mr. Swaidner, of Ft. Wayne.

H. L. Dunkle, wife and daughter Rhea, accompanied by Miss Ella Rabe of Ft. Wayne, are enjoying a two weeks outing at Hamilton Lake

Mrs. Mattie Drake and daughter Mary, of Marion, are guests of J. L. Rhodenbaugh and wife. The whole party motored to Hamilton Lake and spent a short time Sunday.

Try that ice cream and cake Saturday served by the Friendly Bible Class of the M. P. Sunday school on SATURDAY EVE. of this week, at the Frank Shaffer home on west Main street.

Ray Reasoner, wife and son Floyd and Grady Woodcox, wife and daughter Beatrice, motored to Woodburn, Sunday afternoon, and spent a short time with Charles Woodcox and family. They were also supper guests of relatives at New Haven.

Nelson Thomas fell from the roof of the Filley kitchen on which he was doing some carpenter work to the ground below a distance of about ten feet, hurting his back and rendering him unconscious for a time. The Kinsey Ambulance was called to take him to his home. Nelson is getting up in years and is not able to do climbing any more. He does not really know how it came that he fell from the porch roof, but in falling he struck the ladder he had been using, which checked his fall considerable. He landed on his head and shoulders. Mrs. C. A. Patterson heard him groaning and found him laying on his face in the grass. She summoned help at once. No bones were broken, but he was mighty sore for several days.

Send in your news items.

McCormick Mowers at Curie's

Miss Avis Sechler was a Fort Wayne visitor, Thursday.

Mrs. L. W. Yeiser attended the funeral of an aunt at Elkhart, Monday.

Old Reliable McCormick Mowers at Curie's. Get ready for that warm day.

Joseph Piler and family, of Mooresville, were Sunday guests of Frank Sechler and wife.

Dr. and Mrs. B. S. Sheffer entertained Rev. M. O. Johnston, Sunday night and Monday.

Saxe Hadsell and family and Mrs. Eva Sheffer motored to Hicksville, Sunday afternoon, and visited relatives.

Ab Copp and wife had as Sunday afternoon and supper guests Jesse Copp and wife, of New Haven, and Dale Widney and wife.

Dr. and Mrs. C. R. Price spent Sunday afternoon at Ft. Wayne where they called on W. L. Hart and wife and Guy Kilpatrick and wife.

The Ladies Literary Club were very pleasantly entertained at the home of Mrs. Fred Thornton at a Thimble party, Saturday afternoon.

F. A. Patterson and wife, of Hicksville, stopped here Wednesday on their way home from a visit at LaGrange and spent the afternoon with W. C. Patterson and wife.

Frank Terman and wife had as Wednesday guests: Del Crawford and wife, and Mrs. Nora Hendricks, of Kunkle, Ohio, and A. A. Cronenwett, of Gallion, Ohio. The latter remaining until Thursday.

The program committee of the Ladies' Culture Club met with Mrs. Blanche Leighty, all day Thursday, and made out the program for the coming year. They were entertained at dinner at Mrs. Addie Filley's. The study for the coming year is to be "Contagion of Character."

Still After You.

We are still awaiting for you who have not opened up that checking account you were intending to open up with us. The many advantages it gives you in handling your funds, cannot be appreciated until tried out. New accounts are started nearly every day. Join the thrifty.

St. Joe Valley Bank--State Bank

4 per cent. paid on certificates if left 1 Year.

Safety Deposit Boxes for Rent

Feed Headquarters.

We want you to know that we are putting in a full line of Feeds, at the lowest possible prices for the BEST FEEDS.

SALT in carload lots is the only way we buy it, just got in another car. Get your supply now as salt is advancing and will be higher.

COAL for threshing. We have what you want and will be pleased to have your patronage. Highest market prices paid for grain.

Always Welcome at St. JOE ELEVATOR

SAMUEL KEESLER, Local Manager.

POULTRY WANTED!

Highest market prices will be paid for your old and young hens. If you can't bring them in to me just phone and I will call and get them. We have got to have the poultry and are willing to pay you the best price for it.

J. Beams
SPENCERVILLE, IND.

JULY

L 908

U217

HOW INDIANA IS GOVERNED

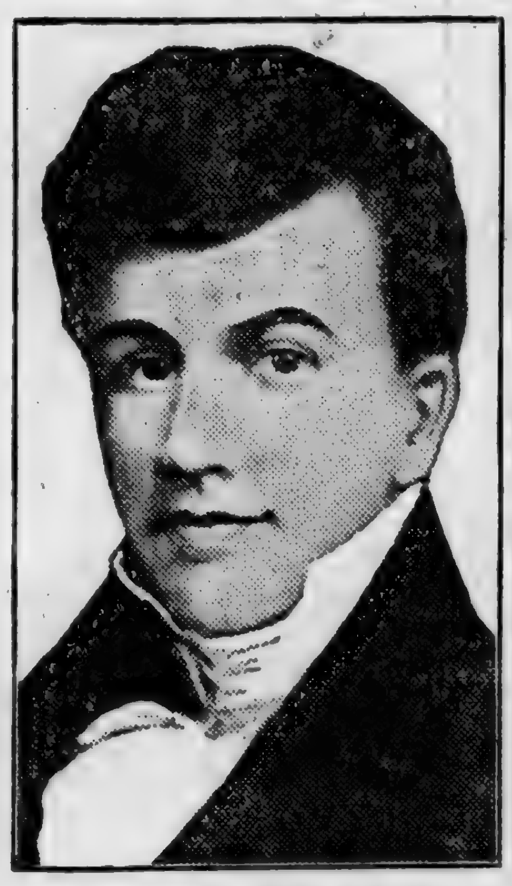
Constitution Adopted in 1851 Is Still the Basic Law of the State—Important Work Done by Various Bureaus and Boards—Jonathan Jennings the First Governor.

MILLIONS FOR STATE INSTITUTIONS

By ELLIS SEARLES

One hundred years of state government — that is what Indiana has reached this year. It has been one hundred years of government wholly in the hands of the people, and they are responsible only to themselves for the kind of government they give to themselves. The result is that the people of Indiana have created a government with protecting arms that reach out in all directions to shield the state and the public from danger and harm, and which also has long and strong arms for the punishment of those who transgress the written and moral laws.

Indiana became a state in 1816, and Jonathan Jennings of Wayne county was the first governor. Samuel M. Ralston is the present governor. The first state constitution was adopted in 1816. This constitution was replaced by a new one adopted in 1851, which is still the basic law of the state. Corydon was the first capital of the state of Indiana. The capital was moved to Indianapolis in 1825.



Jonathan Jennings, First Governor.

The constitution divides the state government into three co-ordinate branches, the executive, the legislative and the judicial. The three branches are independent of each other and one cannot interfere with either of the others. The legislative branch makes the laws, the executive branch administers the laws and the judicial branch interprets and enforces the laws. The constitution of 1816 and the one of 1851 created two houses of the general assembly, one the state senate and the other the house of representatives. Senators are elected for four years and representatives for two years. The general assembly meets every two years for sixty-one days. All measures for the raising of revenue and all taxation measures can originate only in the house. There are fifty senators and one hundred representatives.

The Executive Branch.

The governor is the head of the executive department of the state. The governor has the power to veto measures passed by the general assembly, but vetoed measures may be passed over his head. The governor makes all appointments of officials who are not elective, and of all members of public boards and commissions. He is the commander in chief of the military forces of the state. Four years is the length of the governor's term, and no governor can serve more than one term in succession. His salary is $8,000 a year.

The lieutenant governor is president of the senate and becomes governor when there is a vacancy in that office.

Other elective state officials in Indiana are as follows: Secretary of state, treasurer of state, attorney general, auditor of state, state superintendent of public instruction, state geologist, state statistician, clerk of the supreme court and reporter of the supreme court.

The judicial system of Indiana begins with the justice of the peace. Next in order of their importance and jurisdiction come juvenile, probate, superior and circuit courts, the appellate court and the supreme court, the latter being the court of last resort. In addition, each city has a city court, presided over either by the mayor or by an elected city judge. The supreme court consists of five judges and the appellate court has six judges, all elected from various judicial districts of the state.

Bureaus in the state government are as follows: Free employment bureau, fish and game bureau, for the protection of fish and game; bureau of oil inspection; bureau of inspection, for buildings and factories, boilers, mines and mining; state entomologist; state library; bureau of legislative information; state fire marshal, for investigation of fires and prosecution of incendiaries.

The state board of accounts examines the books and accounts of every state office, institution and department, including courts and all county, township, city, and town officers. The state board of agriculture has charge of the state fair and general supervision of agricultural exhibitions. There is a state board of dental examiners who pass on applicants for licenses to practice dentistry. There are similar boards for examination of physicians, druggists, veterinarians, undertakers, nurses and optometrists.

Work of State Boards.

The state board of education has control of the educational system of the state. A board of pardons makes recommendations to the governor in regard to applications for pardons and paroles. The board of charities has general supervision of all penal, benevolent and charitable institutions. There is a state board of tax commissioners that fixes the appraisement of all property in the state for taxation purposes.

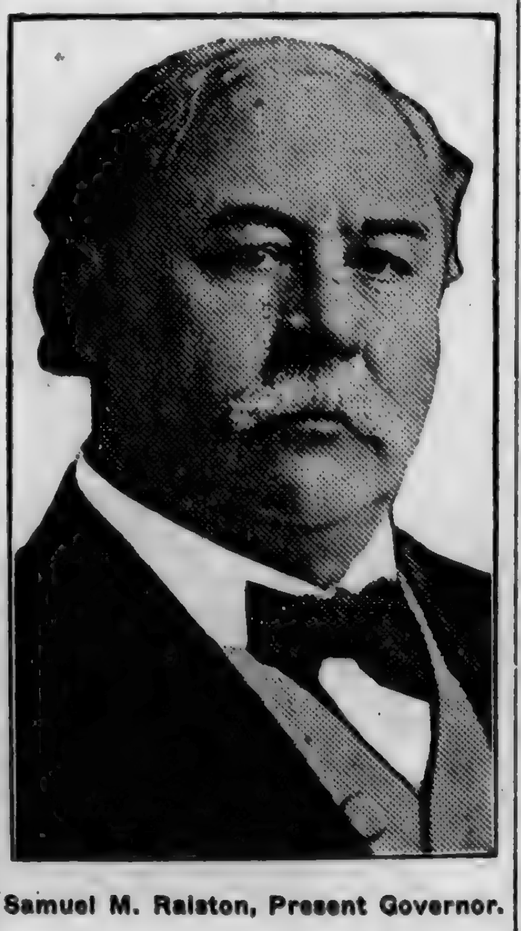
One of the newest of the more important commissions is the public service commission, which has jurisdiction for the regulation of all public utilities within the state, including railroads, water, gas, electric and other similar companies.

The public service commission is vested with rate-making power.

The Indiana industrial board is another of the new and important state boards. It has full jurisdiction for the enforcement of the workmen's compensation law, under which injured employees are compensated for their injuries and for time lost thereby.

The first county asylum was established in 1821 in Knox county. The first state institution was the State School for the Deaf, Indianapolis, founded in 1844. Next came the State School for the Blind, Indianapolis, 1847; then the Central Hospital for Insane, Indianapolis, 1848; Soldiers' and Sailors' Orphans' home, Knightstown, 1867; School for Feeble-Minded Youths, Fort Wayne, 1879; Northern Hospital for Insane, Logansport, 1888; the Eastern and Southern Hospitals for the Insane, Richmond and Evansville, respectively, 1890; the State Soldiers' home, Lafayette, 1896; the Village for Epileptics, Newcastle, 1907; the Southeastern Hospital for the Insane, Madison, 1910; the Hospital for the Treatment of Tuberculosis, Rockville, 1911.

In the early days, the guardhouses of forts were used as places of detention. In 1792 the territorial legislature directed the establishment of jails, pillories, stocks and whipping posts, all to be under the charge of the sheriffs in the different counties. The jails remain, but all of the other forms of punishment have disappeared.



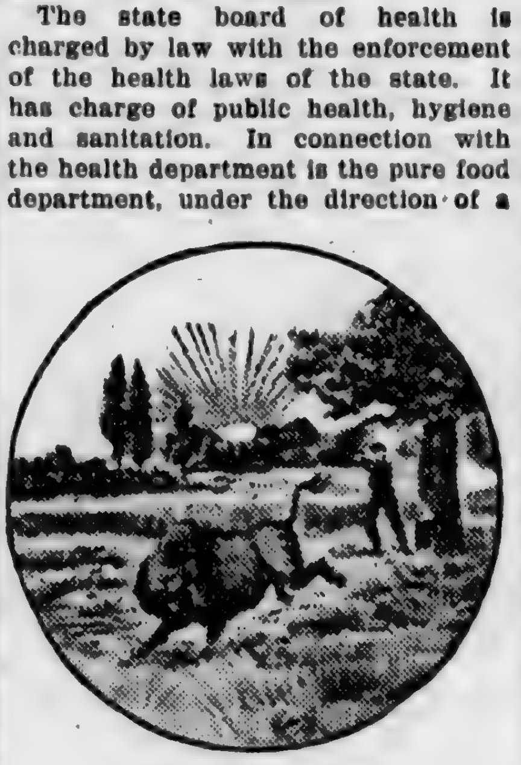
Samuel M. Ralston, Present Governor.

The first state prison was established at Jeffersonville in 1821; the one at Michigan City in 1860. In 1868, the House of Refuge, now the Indiana Boys' school, was opened at Plainfield; in 1873, the Indiana Reformatory Institution for Women and Girls, at Indianapolis, was established. The last-named institution was divided in 1907. The girls were removed to the Indiana Girls' school, at Clermont, and the old institution was called the Woman's prison. The Woman's prison and the Girls' school are managed by boards composed entirely of women.

Care of Public Charges.

Millions of dollars are spent annually in the support and maintenance of all of these institutions. In the last few years Indiana has taken many advanced steps in laws for the proper care of its dependents and the inmates of its public institutions. Some of its laws on this subject are regarded as models. The latest and newest of the public institutions is the state penal farm, which was opened only about a year ago, near Greencastle. Short term prisoners are sent to this farm, in the discretion of the trial judge, instead of to county jails.

The state board of health is charged by law with the enforcement of the health laws of the state. It has charge of public health, hygiene and sanitation. In connection with the health department is the pure food department, under the direction of a state food and drug commissioner. It is the business of this department to protect the public against spurious adulterated and harmful food stuffs. The department has wide powers in that direction and has done wonderful good.



Indiana State Seal.

Most of the primitive forests of Indiana have disappeared, due to the necessities of the people, the requirements of commerce and industry and largely due, also, to wastefulness on the part of the people. The state of Indiana has a state forestry board whose duty is to educate the people in the value of forestry and to adopt means to encourage the reforestation of the state. The state forestry board has a forestry reservation of several hundred acres in Scott county, on which experimentation is carried on for the education of the public.

The state maintains three large educational institutions, Indiana university, at Bloomington; Purdue university, at Lafayette, and the State Normal, at Terre Haute. Tuition in all of these institutions is free to residents of Indiana. Applicants for admission are required to pass an entrance examination or establish their qualification for the work they do, and the doors are open to all, up to the limit of their capacity. Indiana university has an extensive medical school, a law school, a dental school and other special courses, in addition to regular college courses. Purdue is a technical and vocational school with special attention to agriculture, live stock, engineering and the manual trades for boys, and domestic science and home economics for girls. The State Normal trains teachers for the schools of the state.

Plans for Centennial.

As the year of Indiana's one hundredth birthday approached there arose a demand among the people of Indiana for a celebration or observance of the event. The legislature of 1911 created a commission to outline a plan. This commission was succeeded in 1913 by a commission created by the legislature to carry a plan into effect in 1916. This commission consists of Gov. Samuel M. Ralston; Prof. James A. Woodburn, Indiana university, Bloomington; Dr. Frank B. Wynn, Indianapolis; Lew M. O'Bannon, Corydon; Rev. John Cavanaugh, president Notre Dame university, South Bend; Miss Charity Dye, Indianapolis; Charles W. Moores, Indianapolis; Prof. Harlow Lindley, Earlham college, Richmond. This commission has encouraged the people throughout the state to celebrate the centennial of the state. The following is a list of the celebrations thus far scheduled in the state:

COUNTY.	TOWN.	DATE.
Allen	Fort Wayne	June 6, 7, 8, 9
Bartholomew	Columbus	July 24
Boone	Lebanon	September 14, 15, 16
Carroll	Delphi	September 26, 27, 28
Clark	Jeffersonville	August
Decatur	Greensburg	October 18 to 21
Dubois	Huntingburg	September 21, 22
Fayette	Connersville	July 3, 4, 5
Floyd	New Albany	September 14
Franklin	Brookville	June 1, 2, 3, 4
Harrison	Corydon	May 13
Howard	Kokomo	September 4 to 10
Huntington	Huntington	May 2 to 6
Lake	Gary	June 4 to 9
Miami	Peru	August 14 to 19
Montgomery	Crawfordsville	June 11, 12, 13
Parke	Rockville	August 12, 13
Perry	Cannelton	September
Porter	Valparaiso	September 28, 29, 30
Posey	Mt. Vernon	October 16
St. Joseph	South Bend	June 11 to 18
Tippecanoe	Lafayette	May 21 to 26
Union	Liberty	June 3
Wayne	Richmond	June 19 to 24
White	Monticello	October 5, 6, 7

Some Difference.

"How is it that Smith seems to be rolling in money? I understood from friends of his that he had got into a hole."

"So he did, but it was an oil well."

Could He Swim?

Tessie—Too bad about Chollie.

Jessie—What's the trouble?

Tessie—He fell in love with a girl he met on an ocean steamer, but she threw him over.

HOOSIER SOLDIERS SENT TO BORDER

War Department Order to Go Came After Long Wait at Fort Harrison.

INCIDENTS OF ENCAMPMENT

Fourth of July Celebration Marked by Impressive Ceremonies—Review of Entire Guard Before Governor Ralston.

Fort Harrison, Indianapolis.—On the plains of Texas there is now encamped a part of Indiana's National Guard brigade. The remainder is enroute to border points. The first units left Indianapolis Thursday night, July 6, following long-awaited orders from the war department. Lieut. Col. John J. Toffey of the First infantry supervised entrainment and departure.

News that the boys were going to the front stirred great enthusiasm among the four thousand odd men in camp, and created much excitement in the city. All day long street cars to the fort were filled with mothers, wives, sisters and sweethearts, bound to make their final farewells.

Officers and men on leave in various parts of the state were ordered by wire to report at camp immediately. And recruiting officers engaged in filling company ranks depleted by physical examination rejections were told to hasten their work.

Want Better Cars.

Maj. Frank W. Foxworthy, acting chief surgeon of the Indiana brigade, sent a telegram to Acting Chief Surgeon Birmingham of the United States medical department, urging that the Indiana troops be provided with tourist sleepers or with steel-frame boxcars in which bunks could be built. Maj. Robert H. Tyndall of the artillery battalion has asked for the latter type of car for his men if tourist sleepers cannot be provided for the long trip south.

"These old wooden day coaches are not fit for the long travel that would be required of the men," said Major Foxworthy. "They would be thoroughly unsanitary, and the effect of traveling in them for so long a period would be extremely bad for the men. Imagine traveling three or four days sleeping upright, three men to a double seat. I would rather see Indiana's soldiers wait a few days longer and provide them with better transportation facilities. They would be better men when they reached the border."

Fresh From European War.

Heroes of the European war, two members of the Fort Wayne company, First regiment, are now ready for a scrap with Mexicans or any other possible enemy of Uncle Sam. They are Corp. Martin Stacy, who was one of nine survivors of the famous Princess Patricia regiment of Canada after its engagements in the early stages of the war, first at Neuwechappelle and then Ypres, and Corp. Raymond Brennan, who as a member of the headquarters staff of the Third brigade, Canadian field artillery, saw service both in northern France and in the Dardanelles.

Stacy is a "Soldier of Fortune." In 1907 he fought with the revolutionists of Nicaragua, having been employed by revolutionary leaders who visited New York looking for fighters. He fought with the revolutionists until United States marines arrived and then, to use his language, he "beat it" because he did not want to be in the attitude of opposing his own country to which he always has been devoted. With the outbreak of the European war he went to Ottawa, Canada, and in August, 1914, enlisted in a regiment which, five months later, was all but wiped out in one of the fiercest engagements of the present war. The regiment, however, captured several thousand Germans before it finally met its fate. Stacy had a narrow escape from death when he was buried in a dugout, an underground place for the soldiers to rest after duty in the first-line trenches. A German shell destroyed the dugout and Stacy was buried beneath earth and timbers. He received injuries which placed him in the hospital and which made it possible later to obtain a discharge and return to the United States. He has been back about two months.

Brennan received a flesh wound in the leg from a rifle ball and also suffered from fever, but he is now in fine physical trim and ready for another scrap. Both Stacy and Brennan, however, were glad to be released from further participation in the European war and they say that luck alone allowed them to survive. Both men, because of their experience, are valuable men for Captain Miller's company. They have done much to train the new recruits in their work.

Becoming Real Soldiers.

Without a murmur about the discomforts of sleeping on damp ground after a flooding storm the other night, the soldiers piled out of their tents the following morning at 5:30 o'clock, the hour for the first call, and prepared for another day of drilling. Tents were "tied up" to permit the sun to dry the ground and all bed ticks and blankets were placed in the sun to remove the moisture. No one would ever have learned from the boys that the weather man had almost spoiled all the joys of camp life.

Big Fourth of July Doings.

The Fourth of July celebration at the camp was something that the folks who saw it will remember for a long time because it was an impressive and beautiful thing—something that ought to make pleasant memories.

The occasion was made noteworthy especially by the participation of 4,500 khaki-clad soldiers, by the firing of a national salute of 48 guns, by a formal review of the Indiana troops before Governor Ralston and by a brilliant display of fireworks.

Governor and Mrs. Ralston arrived at 6:30 from Turkey Run, where the governor had made an address. Their car was placed at a convenient point and Franklin L. Bridges, the adjutant general, and Maj. Pearle A. Davis, quartermaster, joined them. Colonel Aubrey L. Kuhlman, commanding the brigade, then came down the field at the head of the column, attended by his staff. When the commanding officer reached the governor's car he withdrew from the line and joined the commander in chief.

The Second regiment, Col. Thomas B. Coulter, commanding, was first in the line. The Second infantry band of Bloomington played an inspiring march, and the regiment drew a big cheer as it swept along. Then came the Third regiment, Lieutenant Colonel Freyermuth commanding, followed by the First regiment and its band, with Colonel Naftzger at the head.

The artillery battalion, afoot, passed next with Major Tyndall in command. Capt. Norman Nicolai and his Indianapolis company of signal corps followed the artillery, and then came the hospital corps under Maj. Larue Carter. The final column brought up the Franklin ambulance company under command of Capt. A. G. Chittick.

The review was the first of the unmounted type ever held at Fort Harrison. The custom is becoming common in the United States army and the spectacle did not lose its color through the absence of the horses, although many wished to see the artillery battalion mounted and with field pieces. No horses have been provided for the use of the wheeled units in camp. Governor Ralston expressed a wish to see the brigade equipped with horses in order that a complete review might be had.

Following the review there were concerts of the First Regiment band of Marion, and the Second regiment band of Bloomington. Battery B of Purdue university fired the national salute, one gun for each state, and torches of red fire were ignited in the company streets, making a striking Fourth of July spectacle.

The men, waving red torches above their heads, did snake dances and the night was made merry with songs and frivolity until taps sounded at ten o'clock. The band concert closed with the playing of "The Star-Spangled Banner." Soldiers and civilians stood with bared heads and a great shout went up that was carried through the camp.

Those College Boys.

The members of the Second Regiment band, composed almost entirely of Indiana university students, hail from several parts of Indiana. They are a lively lot and about one each day they find time to give a yell for "Old I. U." The personal of the band is as follows:

Chief musician, Carl F. Brand; principal musician, Archibald Warner; drum major, Charles H. Steinberg; sergeants, Maurice Kahler, John H. Keck and Roy E. Whitehead; quartermaster sergeant, Hugh W. Norman; cook, James Jackson; corporals, Harold S. Baker, Edward J. Boleman, Ivan D. Carson, John A. Danglade, Harry V. Duzan, Homer Hargrave, Benjamin F. Scribner and Dale F. Stansbury; privates, Robert F. Brewster, Harry W. Garton, Arthur L. Glaze, Lertie M. Hylton, Paul M. Jerrell, Paul M. Meloy, Carl D. Middlestat, George T. Poince, Lloyd A. Rust, Claude Turman and Harold B. Wegmiller.

Letters From Home.

Letters—the most welcome literature, and some are truly gems of literature—are pouring both good cheer and sadness into Camp Ralston.

Letters, though they be stained with the tears of a wife or mother left lonely and sad at home, are treasured, of course, but the ones most prized are those which, figuratively speaking, pat the soldier boy on the back and help him to keep up his spirits.

Buried in Blanket Rolls.

Those letters which tend to give the boys the "blues" are buried deep in blanket rolls, to be saved but not read again, while those filled with cheerfulness and praise, even though hiding the real feeling of a fond parent or loving wife, are passed from hand to hand to be read by all.

Those good-cheer letters are the kind most needed by the soldiers—they help the boys, struggling with themselves to fight off a touch of homesickness which naturally haunts them at times when they think of dear ones left behind, to keep up their courage and be brave.

Wife Writes Bravely.

One of he company commanders is happy because his wife, whom he left in tears when he said good-by at home, has written that she has reconciled herself to his going and intends to be "as brave as a soldier's wife should be."

One soldier was much distressed by a letter which told of notice being given to his family to vacate the house in which they live because of unpaid rent, and another was saddened by a letter from his young son which told of hardships which face the family.

WESTERN CANADA AND THE LAND-HUNGRY

It Is Essentially an Agricultural Country.

Western Canada is the Mecca of the land-hungry man who wishes to earn a good living from the soil and save up money to take care of him in his old age without paying a fancy price for the privilege.

Western Canada is the great wheat producing section of the North American continent, with an average production of more than 30 bushels to the acre as compared with an average of 17 bushels to the acre in the States.

Wheat raising can hardly be made profitable on land that costs from $50 an acre up unless such land will produce a much higher than a 17 bushel average, or unless the price of the cereal reaches an excessive figure.

The initial investment of $50 an acre is more than the average man can afford to make if he expects to raise wheat and to make a success of it.

A good homestead of 160 acres can still be secured free in Western Canada and additional land admirably suited to the raising of wheat can be secured at so low a cost per acre that it can be made extremely profitable.

No other part of the world offers such tremendous opportunities at the present time to the ambitious young farmer as the three great provinces of Western Canada.

It is worth the while of the land-hungry man to cease his depressing search for local cheap land or for land that is not entirely worked out by long cropping and to look outside his own district. Western Canada is a country that should receive the consideration of all such men. The Western Provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta are essentially agricultural territory.

Out of 478 million acres there are 180 million acres of first-class agricultural land actually available for development—a block three and a half times as large as the total land area of Minnesota, and equal to the combined land areas of Minnesota, Iowa, Wisconsin, Illinois and Indiana.

But whereas the population of the five states mentioned is fifteen million people, the population of Western Canada is only about one and three-quarter millions.

It has been said that the average yield per acre of wheat in the United States last year was 17 bushels. This average does not, of course, represent the efficiency which may have been reached by individual farmers or by individual states. However, place against this figure the fact that the 1915 Western Canadian average—the average from nearly twelve million acres—was over 30 bushels. In the case of the Province of Alberta, the average reached 32.84 bushels per acre.

There are already a large number of American farmers in Western Canada, so that the newcomer could never—overlooking the fact that the same language is spoken—feel himself in an alien country. There seems, in fact, a tendency to establish little colonies composed of those coming from the same sections. The characteristics of the country, and the climate and season, are very much the same as in Minnesota or North Dakota. Social conditions bear a family resemblance. Education is free, and is good; its cost being defrayed partly by taxation, partly by grants from the Canadian Government, from the sales of school lands, of which, when the country was first surveyed, two sections in every township were allocated. Taxation in every rural district, in many towns and cities, is based practically on land values alone, improvements of all kinds being exempted.—Advertisement.

Sounded Ominous.

"He insists that he is not worthy of me."

"I don't like the sound of that. Better look up his financial rating again girlie."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

Men and Women

Women as well as men are made miserable by kidney and bladder trouble. Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, the great kidney remedy, is highly recommended by thousands.

Swamp-Root stands the highest for the reason that so many people say it has proved to be just the remedy needed in thousands of even the most distressing cases.

At druggists in 50c. and $1.00 sizes. You may receive a sample size bottle of Swamp-Root by Parcel Post, also a pamphlet telling you about it. Address Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y., and enclose ten cents, also mention this paper.

Every Woman Wants

Paxtine

ANTISEPTIC POWDER

FOR PERSONAL HYGIENE

Dissolved in water for douches stops pelvic catarrh, ulceration and inflammation. Recommended by Lydia E. Pinkham Med. Co. for ten years. A healing wonder for nasal catarrh, sore throat and sore eyes. Economical. Has extraordinary cleansing and germicidal power. Sample Free. 50c. all druggists, or postpaid by mail. The Paxton Toilet Company, Boston, Mass.

PARKER'S HAIR BALSAM

A toilet preparation of merit. Helps to eradicate dandruff. For Restoring Color and Beauty to Gray or Faded Hair. 50c. and $1.00 at Druggists.

W. N. U., FORT WAYNE, NO. 29--1916.

JULY

L 908

0218

The Turmoil

By

BOOTH TARKINGTON

(Copyright 1915, by Harper & Brothers)

SYNOPSIS.

—5—

Sheridan's attempt to make a business man of his son Bibbs by starting him in the machine shop ends in Bibbs going to a sanitarium, a nervous wreck. On his return Bibbs is met at the station by his sister Edith. He finds himself an inconsiderable and unconsidered figure in the "New House" of the Sheridans. He sees Mary Vertrees looking at him from a summer house next door. The Vertreeses, old town family and impoverished, call on the Sheridans, newly-rich, and afterward discuss them. Mary puts into words her parents' unspoken wish that she marry one of the Sheridan boys. At the Sheridan housewarming banquet Sheridan spreads himself. Mary frankly encourages Jim Sheridan's attentions, and Bibbs hears he is to be sent back to the machine shop. Mary tells her mother about the banquet and shocks her mother by talking of Jim as a matrimonial possibility. Jim tells Mary Bibbs is not a lunatic—"just queer." He proposes to Mary, who half accepts him.

Will Old Man Sheridan be able to inspire Bibbs with his own belief in Bigness and win the young man to the business standard? Or will Bibbs prove to his practical father that there is a place in the world for poetry and music and persuade the elder to let him devote his life to poetry and writing?

CHAPTER VIII—Continued.

He seated himself in a chair at his son's side and, leaning over, tapped Bibbs confidentially on the knee. "This city's got the greatest future in America, and if my sons behave right by me and by themselves they're goin' to have a mighty fair share of it—a mighty fair share. I love this town. I love it like I do my own business, and I'd fight for it as quick as I'd fight for my own family. It's a beautiful town. Look at our wholesale district; look at any district you want to; look at the park system we're puttin' through, and the boulevards and the public statuary. And she grows. God! how she grows!"

He had become intensely grave; he spoke with solemnity. "Now, Bibbs, I can't take any of it—nor any gold or silver nor buildings nor bonds—away with me in my shroud when I have to go. But I want to leave my share in it to my boys. I've worked for it; I've been a builder and a maker; and two blades of grass have grown where one grew before, whenever I laid my hand on the ground and willed 'em to grow. I've built big, and I want the buildin' to go on. And when my last hour comes I want to know that my boys are ready to take charge. Bibbs, when I'm up above I want to know that the big share I've made mine, here below, is growin' bigger and bigger in the charge of my boys."

He leaned back, deeply moved. "There!" he said, huskily. "I've never spoken more what was in my heart in my life. I do it because I want you to understand—and not think me a mean father. I never had to talk that way to Jim and Roscoe. They understood without any talk, Bibbs."

"I see," said Bibbs. "At least I think I do. But—"

"Wait a minute!" Sheridan raised his hand. "If you see the least bit in the world, then you understand what it meant to start one o' my boys and have him come back on me the way you did, and have to be sent to a sanitarium because he couldn't stand work. Now, let's get right down to it, Bibbs. I've had a whole lot o' talk with ole Doc Gurney about you, one time and another, and I reckon I understand your case just about as well as he does, anyway.

"Now, why did work make you sick instead of brace you up and make a man of you the way it ought of done? I pinned ole Gurney down to it. I says, 'Look here, ain't it really because he just plain hated it?' 'Yes,' he says, 'that's it. If he'd enjoyed it, it wouldn't 'a' hurt him.' And that's about the way it is."

"Yes," said Bibbs, "that's about the way it is."

"Well, then, I reckon it's up to me not only to make you do it, but to make you like it!"

Bibbs shivered. And he turned upon his father a look that was almost ghostly. "I can't," he said, in a low voice. "I can't."

"Can't go back to the shop?"

"No. Can't like it. I can't."

Sheridan jumped up, his patience gone. To his own view, he had reasoned exhaustively, had explained fully and had pleaded more than a father should, only to be met in the end with the unreasoning and mysterious stubbornness which had been Bibbs' baffling characteristic from childhood. "By George, you will!" he cried. "You'll go back there and you'll like it! Gurney says it won't hurt you if you like it, and he says it 'll kill you if you go back and hate it; so it looks as if it was about up to you not to hate it. Well, Gurney's a fool! Hatin' work doesn't kill anybody; and this isn't goin' to kill you, whether you hate it or not. I've never made a mistake in a serious matter in my life, and it wasn't a mistake my sendin' you there in the first place. And I'm goin' to prove it—I'm goin' to send you back there and vindicate my judgment. Gurney says it's all 'mental attitude.' Well, you're goin' to learn the right one! He says in a couple of more months this fool thing that's been the matter with you'll be disappeared completely and you'll be back in as good or better condition than you were before you ever went into the shop. And right then is when you begin over—right in that same shop! Nobody can call me a hard man or a mean father. I do the best I can for my children, and I take the full responsibility for bringin' my sons up to be men. Now, so far, I've failed with you. But I'm not goin' to keep on failin'. I never tackled a job yet I didn't put through, and I'm not goin' to begin with my own son. I'm goin' to make a man of you. By God! I am!"

Bibbs rose and went slowly to the door, where he turned. "You say you give me a couple of months?" he said.

Sheridan pushed a bell-button on his desk. "Gurney said two months more would put you back where you were. You go home and begin to get yourself in the right 'mental attitude' before those two months are up! Good-by!"

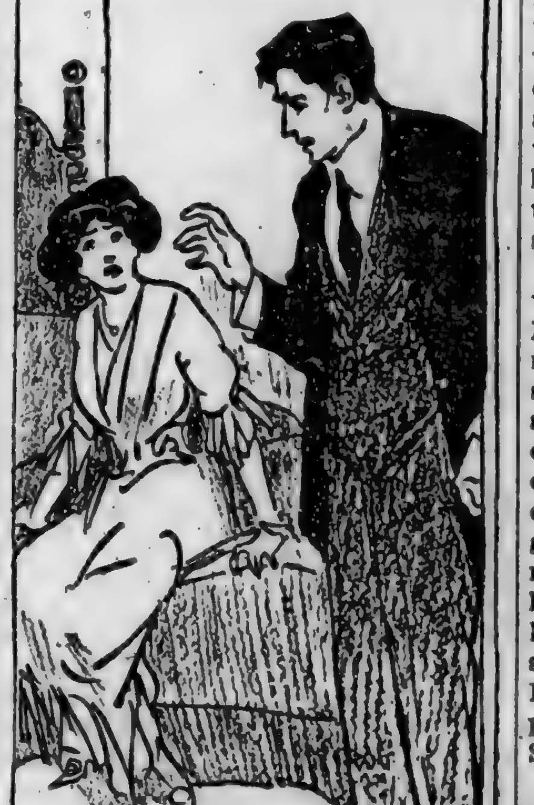
"Good-by, sir," said Bibbs, meekly.

CHAPTER IX.

Bibbs' room, that neat apartment for transients to which the "lamidal" George had shown him upon his return, still bore the appearance of temporary quarters, possibly because Bibbs had no clear conception of himself as a permanent incumbent. However, he had set upon the mantelpiece the two photographs that he owned; one, a "group" twenty years old—his father and mother, with Jim and Roscoe as boys—and the other a "cabinet" of Edith at sixteen. And upon a table were the books he had taken from his trunk: Sartor Resartus, Virginibus Puerisque, Huckleberry Finn, and Afterwhiles. There were some other books in the trunk—a large one, which remained unremoved at the foot of the bed, adding to the general impression of transiency. It contained nearly all the possessions as well as the secret life of Bibbs Sheridan, and Bibbs sat beside it, the day after his interview with his father, raking over a small collection of manuscripts in the top tray. Some of these he glanced through dubiously, finding little comfort in them; but one made him smile. Then he shook his head ruefully indeed, and ruefully began to read it. It was written on paper stamped "Hood Sanitarium," and it bore the title, "Leisure."

> . . . For a profession adapted solely to the pursuit of happiness in thinking, I would choose that of an invalid; his money is time and he may spend it on Olympus. . . . The world must be on the other side of the wall, and the wall must be so thick and so high that he cannot hear the roaring of the furnace fires and the screaming of the whistles. Peace—

Having read so far as the word "peace," Bibbs suffered an interruption interesting as a coincidence of contrast. High voices sounded in the hall just outside his door; and it became evident that a woman's quarrel was in progress, the parties to it having begun it in Edith's room, and continuing it vehemently as they came out into the hall.



"I'm Going Out."

"Yes, you better go home!" Bibbs heard his sister vociferating, shrilly. "You better go home and keep your mind a little more on your husband!"

"Edie, Edie!" he heard his mother remonstrating, as peacemaker.

"You see here!" This was Sibyl, and her voice was both acrid and tremulous. "Don't you talk to me that way! I came here to tell Mother Sheridan what I'd heard, and to let her tell Father Sheridan if she thought she ought to, and I did it for your own good."

"Yes, you did!" And Edith's gibing laughter tooted loudly. "Yes, you did! You didn't have any other reason! Oh no! You don't want to break it up between Bobby Lamborn and me because—"

"Edie, Edie! Now, now!"

"Oh, hush up, mamma! I'd like to know if he oughtn't to come here, what about his not going to her house. How—"

"I've explained that to Mother Sheridan." Sibyl's voice indicated that she was descending the stairs. "Married people are not the same. Some things that should be shielded from a young girl—"

This seemed to have no very soothing effect upon Edith. "'Shielded from a young girl'!" she shrilled. "You seem pretty willing to be the shield! You look out Roscoe doesn't notice what kind of a shield you are!"

Sibyl's answer was inaudible, but Mrs. Sheridan's flurried attempts at pacification were renewed.

"Oh, hush up, mamma, and let me alone! If you dare tell papa—"

"Well, we'll see. You just come back in your own room, and we'll—"

"No! I won't 'talk it over!' Stop pulling me! Let me alone!" And Edith, flinging herself violently upon Bibbs' door, jerked it open, swung round it into the room, slammed the door behind her, and threw herself, face down, upon the bed in such a riot of emotion that she had no perception of Bibbs' presence in the room. Gasping and sobbing in a passion of tears, she beat the coverlet and pillows with her clenched fists. "Sneak!" she babbled aloud. "Sneak! Snake-in-the-grass! Cat!"

Bibbs saw that she did not know he was there, and he went softly toward the door, hoping to get away before she became aware of him; but some sound of his movement reached her, and she sat up, startled, facing him.

"Bibbs! I thought I saw you go out a while ago."

"Yes. I came back, though. I'm sorry—"

"Did you hear me quarreling with Sibyl?"

"Only what you said in the hall. You lie down again, Edith. I'm going out."

"No; don't go." She applied a handkerchief to her eyes, emitted a sob, and repeated her request. "Don't go. I don't mind you; you're quiet, anyhow. Mamma's so fussy, and never gets anywhere. I don't mind you at all, but I wish you'd sit down."

"All right." And he returned to his chair beside the trunk. "Go ahead and cry all you want, Edith," he said. "No harm in that!"

"Sibyl told mamma—oh!" she began, choking. "Mary Vertrees had mamma and Sibyl and I to tea, one afternoon two weeks or so ago, and she had some women there that Sibyl's been crazy to get in with, and she just laid herself out to make a hit with 'em, and she's been running after 'em ever since, and now she comes over here and says they say Bobby Lamborn is so bad that, even though they like his family, none of the nice people in town would let him in their houses. In the first place, it's a falsehood, and I don't believe a word of it; and in the second place I know the reason she did it, and, what's more, she knows I know it! I won't say what it is—not yet—because papa and all of you would think I'm as crazy as she is snaky; and Roscoe's such a fool he'd probably quit speaking to me. But it's true! Just you watch her; that's all I ask. Just you watch that woman. You'll see!"

As it happened, Bibbs was literally watching "that woman." Glancing from the window, he saw Sibyl pause upon the pavement in front of the old house next door. She stood a moment, in deep thought, then walked quickly up the path to the door, undoubtedly with the intention of calling. But he did not mention this to his sister, who, after delivering herself of a rather vague jeremiad upon the subject of her sister-in-law's treacheries, departed to her own chamber, leaving him to his speculations.

Mary Vertrees was at that moment wondering what internal excitement Mrs. Roscoe Sheridan was striving to master. But Sibyl had no idea that she was allowing herself to exhibit anything except the gayety which she conceived proper to the manner of a casual caller. She was no more self-conscious than she was finely intelligent. Sibyl followed her impulses with no reflection or question—it was like a hound on the gallop after a master on horseback. She had not even the instinct to stop and consider her effect. If she wished to make a certain impression she believed that she made it. She believed that she was believed.

"My mother asked me to say that she was sorry she couldn't come down," Mary said, when they were seated.

Sibyl ran the scale of a cooing simulance of laughter, which she had been brought up to consider the polite thing to do after a remark addressed to her by any person with whom she was not on familiar terms. It was intended partly as a courtesy and partly as the foundation for an impression of sweetness.

"Just thought I'd fly in a minute," she said, continuing the cooing to relieve the last doubt of her geniality. "I wanted to tell you how much I enjoyed meeting those nice people at tea that afternoon. You see, coming here a bride, I've had to depend on my husband's friends almost entirely. Mr. Sheridan has been so engrossed in business ever since he was a mere boy, why, of course—"

She paused, with the air of having completed an explanation.

"Of course," said Mary, sympathetically accepting it.

"Yes. I've been seeing quite a lot of the Kittersbys since that afternoon," Sibyl went on. "They're really delightful people. Indeed they are! Yes—"

She stopped with unconscious abruptness, her mind plainly wandering to another matter; and Mary perceived that she had come upon a definite errand.

"Mrs. Kittersby and her daughter were chatting about some of the people here in town the other day," said Sibyl, repeating the cooing and protracting it. "They said something that took me by surprise! We were talking about our mutual friend, Mr. Robert Lamborn—"

Mary interrupted her promptly. "We shouldn't consider Mr. Robert Lamborn a friend of ours."

To her surprise, Sibyl nodded eagerly, as if greatly pleased. "That's just the way Mrs. Kittersby talked!" she cried, with a vehemence that made Mary stare. "Yes, and I hear that's the way all you old families here speak of him!"

Mary looked aside, but otherwise she was able to maintain her composure. "I had the impression he was a friend of yours," she said, adding, hastily, "and your husband's."

"Oh, yes," said the caller, absently. "He is, certainly. A man's reputation for a little gayety oughtn't to make a great difference to married people, of course. It's where young girls are in question. Then it may be very, very dangerous. There are a great many things safe and proper for married people that might be awf'ly imprudent for a young girl. Don't you agree, Miss Vertrees?"

"I don't know," returned the frank Mary. "Do you mean that you intend to remain a friend of Mr. Lamborn's, but disapprove of Miss Sheridan's doing so?"

"That's it exactly!" was the naive and ardent response of Sibyl. "What I feel about it is that a man with his reputation isn't at all suitable for Edith, and the family ought to be made to understand it. I tell you," she cried, with a sudden access of vehemence, "her father ought to put his foot down!"

Her eyes flashed with a green spark; something seemed to leap out and then retreat, but not before Mary had caught a glimpse of it, as one might catch a glimpse of a thing darting forth and then scuttling back into hiding under a bush.

"Of course," said Sibyl, much more composedly, "I hardly need say that it's entirely on Edith's account that I'm worried about this. I'm as fond of Edith as if she was really my sister, and I can't help fretting about it. It would break my heart to have Edith's life spoiled."

This tune was off the key, to Mary's ear. Sibyl tried to sing with pathos, but she flatted.

"And Edith's life would be spoiled," Sibyl continued. "It would be a dreadful thing for the whole family. She's the very apple of Father Sheridan's eye, and it would be a horrible thing for him to have her marry a man like Robert Lamborn; but he doesn't know anything about him, and if somebody doesn't tell him, what I'm most afraid of is that Edith might get his consent and hurry on the wedding before he finds out, and then it would be too late. You see, Miss Vertrees, it's very difficult for me to decide just what it's my duty to do."

"I see," said Mary, looking at her thoughtfully. "Does Miss Sheridan seem to—to care very much about him?"

"He's deliberately fascinated her," returned the visitor, beginning to breathe quickly and heavily. She was launched now; her eyes were furious and her voice shook. "He went after her deliberately, the way he does everything; he's as cold-blooded as a fish. All he cares about is his own pleasure, and lately he's decided it would be pleasant to get hold of a piece of real money—and there was Edith! And he'll marry her! He told me so last night. He said he was going to marry her the first minute he could persuade her to it—and little Edith's all ready to be persuaded!" Sibyl's eyes flashed green again. "And he swore he'd do it," she panted. "He swore he'd marry Edith Sheridan, and nothing on earth could stop him!"

And then Mary understood. Her lips parted and she stared at the babbling creature incredulously, a sudden vivid picture in her mind, a canvas of unconscious Sibyl's painting. Mary beheld it with pity and horror; she saw Sibyl clinging to Robert Lamborn, raging, in a whisper, perhaps—for Roscoe might have been in the house, or servants might have heard. She saw Sibyl entreating, beseeching, threatening despairingly, and Lamborn—tired of her—first evasive, then brutally letting her have the truth; and at last, infuriated, "swearing" to marry her rival. If Sibyl had not babbled out the word "swore" it might have been less plain.

The poor woman blundered on, wholly unaware of what she had confessed. "You see," she said, more quietly, "whatever's going to be done ought to be done right away. I went over and told Mother Sheridan what I'd heard about Lamborn, but Mother Sheridan's under Edith's thumb, and she's afraid to ever come right out with anything. Father Sheridan'd never in the world let Lamborn come near the house again if he knew his reputation. So, you see, somebody's got to tell him. It isn't a very easy position for me, is it, Miss Vertrees?"

"No," said Mary gravely.

"Well, to be frank," said Sibly, smiling, "that's why I've come to you."

"To me!" Mary frowned.

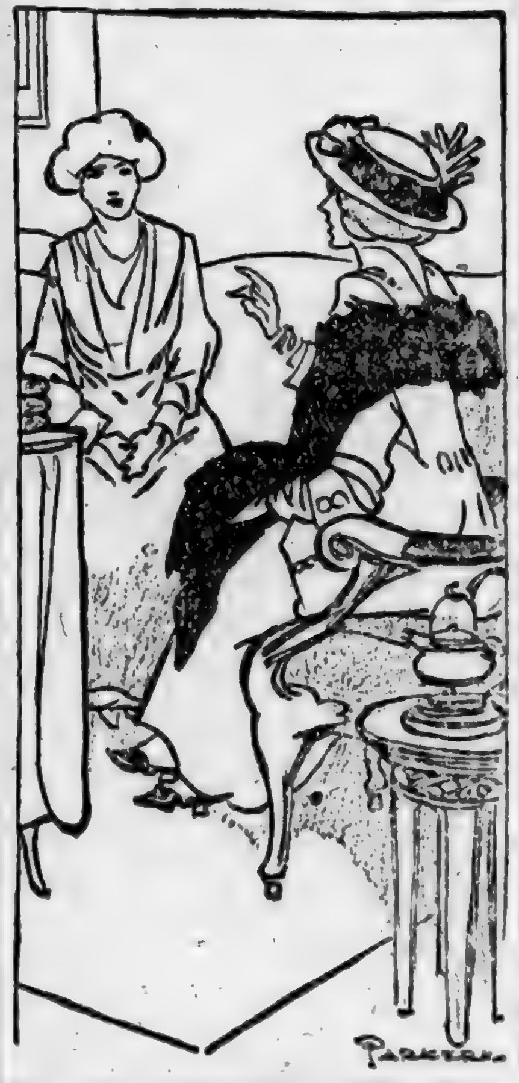
Sibyl rippled and cooed again. "There isn't anybody ever made such a hit with Father Sheridan in his life as you have. And of course we all hope you're not going to be exactly an outsider in the affairs of the family!" (This sally with another and louder effect of laughter.) "And if it's my duty, why, in a way, I think it might be thought yours, too."

"No, no!" exclaimed Mary, sharply.

"Listen," said Sibyl. "Now suppose I go to Father Sheridan with this story, and Edith says it's not true; but suppose I could say: 'All right, if you want proof, ask Miss Vertrees. She came with me, and she's waiting in the next room right now, to—"

"No, no," said Mary quickly. "You mustn't—"

"Listen just a minute more," Sibyl urged, confidingly. She was on easy ground now, to her own mind, and had no doubt of her success. "Miss Vertrees, listen! Don't you see we ought to do it, you and I? Do you suppose Robert Lamborn cares the snap of his finger for her? Do you suppose a man like him would look at Edith Sheridan if it wasn't for the money?" And again Sibyl's emotion rose to the surface. "I tell you he's after nothing on earth but to get his finger in that old man's money-pile, over there, next door! He'd marry anybody to do it. Marry Edith?" she cried. "I tell you he'd marry their nigger cook for that!"



"He Swore He'd Marry Edith Sheridan."

She stopped, afraid—at the wrong time—that she had been too vehement, but a glance at Mary reassured her, and Sibyl decided that she had produced the effect she wished. Mary was not looking at her; she was staring straight before her at the wall, her eyes wide and shining. She became visibly a little paler as Sibyl looked at her.

"After nothing on earth but to get his finger in that old man's money-pile, over there next door!" The voice was vulgar, the words were vulgar—and the plain truth was vulgar! How it rang in Mary Vertrees' ears! The clear mirror had caught its own image clearly in the flawed one at last.

Sibyl put forth her best bid to clench the matter. She offered her bargain. "Now, don't you worry," she said, sunnily, "about this setting Edith against you. She'll get over it after a while. And another thing—I guess you won't mind Jim's own sister-in-law speaking of it. Of course, I don't know just how matters stand between you and Jim, but sisters-in-law can do lots of things to help matters on like that. There's lots of little things can be said, and lots—"

She stopped, puzzled. Mary Vertrees had gone from pale to scarlet, and now, still scarlet indeed, she rose, without a word of explanation, or any other kind of word, and walked slowly to the open door and out of the room.

Sibyl was a little taken aback. She supposed Mary had remembered something neglected and would return in a moment; but it was rather a rude excess of absent-mindedness not to have excused herself, especially as her guest was talking. And, Mary's return being delayed, Sibyl looked at her watch and frowned; went to a window and stood looking out upon the brown lawn, then came back to the chair she had abandoned, and sat again. There was no sound in the house.

A strange expression began imperceptibly to alter the planes of her face, and slowly she grew as scarlet as Mary—scarlet to the ears. She went into the hall, glanced over her shoulder oddly; then she let herself softly out of the front door, and went across the street to her own house.

Roscoe met her upon the threshold, gloomily. "Saw you from the window," he explained. "You must find a lot to say to that old lady."

"What old lady?"

"Mrs. Vertrees. I been waiting for you a long time, and I saw the daughter come out, fifteen minutes ago and post a letter, and then walk on up the street. Don't stand out on the porch," he said, crossly. "Come in here. There's something it's come time I'll have to talk to you about. Come in!"

But as she was moving to obey he glanced across at his father's house and started. He lifted his hand to shield his eyes from the setting sun, staring fixedly. "Something's the matter over there," he muttered, and then, more loudly, as alarm came into his voice, he said, "What's the matter over there?"

Bibbs dashed out of the gate in an automobile set at its highest speed, and as he saw Roscoe he made a gesture singularly eloquent of calamity, and was lost at once in a cloud of dust down the street. Edith had followed part of the way down the drive, and it could be seen that she was crying bitterly. She lifted both arms to Roscoe, summoning him.

"By George!" gasped Roscoe. "I believe somebody's dead!"

And he started for the new house at a run.

CHAPTER X.

Sheridan had decided to conclude his day's work early that afternoon, and at about two o'clock he left his office with a man of affairs from foreign parts, who had traveled far for a business conference with Sheridan and his colleagues. Herr Favre, in spite of his French name, was a gentleman of Bavaria. It was his first visit to our country, and Sheridan took pleasure in showing him the sights of the country's finest city.

They arrived at the Pump Works, and for an hour Herr Favre was personally conducted and personally instructed by the founder and president, the buzzing queen bee of those buzzing hives.

"Now I'll take you for a spin in the country," said Sheridan, when at last they came out to the car again. "We'll take a breezer." But, with his foot on the step he paused to hail a neat young man who came out of the office smiling a greeting. "Hello, young fellow!" Sheridan said, heartily. "On the job, are you, Jimmie? Ha! They don't catch you off of it very often, I guess, though I do hear you go automobile ridin' in the country sometimes with a mighty fine-lookin' girl settin' up beside you!" He roared with laughter, clapping his son upon the shoulder. "That's all right with me—if it is with her! So, Jimmie? Well, when we goin' to move into your new warehouses? Monday?"

"Sunday, if you want to," said Jim.

"No!" cried his father, delighted. "Don't tell me you're goin' to keep your word about dates! That's no way to do contractin'! Never heard of a contractor yet didn't want more time."

"They'll be all ready for you on the minute," said Jim. "I'm going over both of 'em now, with Links and Sherman, from foundation to roof. I guess they'll pass inspection, too!"

"Well, then, when you get through with that," said his father, "you go and take your girl out ridin'. By George! you've earned it! You tell her you stand high with me!" He stepped into the car, waving a waggish farewell, and, when the wheels were in motion again, he turned upon his companion a broad face literally shining with pride. "That's my boy Jimmie!" he said.

"Fine young man, yes," said Herr Favre.

"I got two o' the finest boys," said Sheridan, "I got two o' the finest boys God ever made, and that's a fact, Mr Farver! Jim's the oldest, and I tell you they got to get up the day before if they expect to catch him in bed! My other boy, Roscoe, he's always to the good, too, but Jim's a wizard. You saw them two new-process warehouses, just about finished? Well, Jim built 'em. I'll tell you about that, Mr. Farver." And he recited this history, describing the new process at length; in fact, he had such pride in Jim's achievement that he told Herr Favre all about it more than once.

"Fine young man, yes," repeated the good Muenchener, three-quarters of an hour later. They were many miles out in the open country by this time.

"He is that!" said Sheridan, adding, as if confidentially: "I got a fine family, Mr. Farver—fine children. I got a daughter now; you take her and put her anywhere you please, and she'll shine up with any of 'em. There's culture and refinement and society in this town by the carload, and here lately she's been gettin' right in the thick of it—her and my daughter-in-law, both. I got a mighty fine daughter-in-law, Mr. Farver. I'm goin' to get you up for a meal with us before you leave town, and you'll see—and, well, sir, from all I hear the two of 'em been holdin' their own with the best. Myself, I and the wife, never had time for much o' that kind o' doin's, but it's all right and good for the children; and my daughter she's always kind of taken to it. I'll read you a poem she wrote when I get you up at the house. She wrote it in school and took the first prize for poetry with it. I tell you they don't make 'em any smarter 'n that girl, Mr. Farver. Yes, sir; take us all round, we're a pretty happy family; yes, sir. Roscoe hasn't got any children yet, and I haven't ever spoke to him and his wife about it—it's kind of a delicate matter—but it's about time the wife and I saw some gran'children growin' up around us. I certainly do hanker for about four or five little curly-headed rascals to take on my knee. Boys, I hope, o' course; that's only natural. Jim's got his eye on a mighty splendid-lookin' girl; lives right next door to us. I expect you heard me joshin' him about it back yonder. She's one the ole blue-bloods here, and I guess it was a mighty good stock—to raise her! She's one these girls that stand right up and look at you! And pretty! She's the prettiest thing you ever saw! Good size, too; good health and good sense. Jim'll be just right if he gets her. I must say it tickles me to think o' the way that boy took ahold o' that job back yonder. Four months and a half! Yes, sir—"

And then, at that instant there came into Big Jim Sheridan's life a great tragedy. Will this man, who had the courage to fight for power and wealth, be brave enough to withstand a frightful jolt?

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

JULY

L 908

0219

Deepening the Farm For Bigger Crops

The Third Dimension of the Farm an Important Factor to Greater Crops and Bigger Dividends.

WISE farmers are beginning to realize that a farm goes farther than length and breadth. Depth is a vital factor, and incidentally this third dimension has a clearly identified influence upon the producing value of the earth's surface.

Thus "vertical farming," a newer method of agriculture, is rapidly developing. Merely to scrape the bristles from a hog's hide is not enough. Deeper cutting is essential in order to reach the bacon. And experience has shown that to simply plow or turn the top soil is very often only the scratching of the surface when it comes to bumper crops.

Often the productivity of a farm is limited by the tight clay or hard pan underlying the top soil. Costly implements for tilling this upper soil and taking care of increased horizontal or surface acreage are all right in their way, but to go deeper into the farm, to increase its fertility and productiveness by increasing its depth, is a matter that the practice of vertical farming accomplishes quickly and economically, and very often a single cartridge of explosive will convert several yards of otherwise useless subsoil into half an acre of new root feeding surface. Thus, instead of spreading out and embracing more territory, vertical farming enables the farmer to really concentrate and by intensive methods conserves in both labor and expense. At the same time the resulting increase in crops emphasizes the profitable features of the process.

And there is a practical reason for this. By breaking up the subsoil oxygen is admitted into the ground, and the pent up natural fertilizing elements of the lower soils are released and utilized. A reservoir for the storage of water is created, and a good home for the roots is produced. Good roots are essential to good plants. Men who look below the surface realize these facts. They know also that a plant produces only in proportion to the extent of air, water and nourishment given its roots. Thus is the newer method of vertical farming both logical and profitable.

This method of farming vertically is in itself easy, simple and labor saving. A half cartridge charge of farm powder placed well down into the tight subsoil at intervals of about a rod, tamped properly and fired carefully will do the work quickly and economically. Subsoil blasting, however, can be done successfully only when the subsoil is dry.

Few tools are required for the work.

The St. Joe News

Fred B. Leighty, Editor
Mrs. Jora Leighty, Associate

One Year, - - -	$1.00
Six Months, - - - -	.50
Three Months, - - -	.25

Entered at the postoffice at St. Joe, Indiana, as second class matter.

INDIANA ASSOCIATED WEEKLIES

Infantile Paralysis

On account of the widespread prevalence of Poliomyelitis (Infantile Paralysis) in many cities and states, the State Board of Health has sent out a Bulletin on the subject, parts of which will follow herewith with a few additions from literature by myself.

Poliomyelitis in Indiana

Last year in Indiana we estimate no less than 300 cases occurred in many sections of the State, with 60 reported deaths and at least 150 cripples. With the advent of warm weather this year the disease will probably appear in many parts of the State with a rapid increase in the number of cases. Already this year a number of cases have been reported, with three deaths in April, and seven in May.

CAUSE: The great majority of cases occur before the tenth year, and fully three-fifths under four years of age, with especial frequency in the latter half of the first year Mild cases, so-called, are just as infectious as the more severe cases; in fact, are often a greater source of danger to others because of not being considered serious The exact nature of the infective agent or virus is yet to be learned, nor do we know how the infection is carried from one person to another. There are some reasons for believing that it may be dust-borne, since sprinkling has seemed to check the spread of an epidemic in a given neighborhood There is also evidence that the disease can be carried by a healthy person from an infected center and given to another in a region far removed. Experiments have shown that the secretions from the nose and throat are infectious, and infection probably takes place through the mucous membrane of the digestive and respiratory tracts Some authorities have thought it to be carried by fleas and hence urge importance of controlling household pets. It also has been said to be carried by the barn-fly and for that reason it pays to keep an eye on that manure pile and keep down flies.

SYMPTOMS: Among the more common early symptoms of the disease may be noted: Anorexia (loss of appetite), vomiting and diarrhea; fever, sometimes reaching as high as 105 degrees; in some cases angina (sore throat), tonsilitis, bronchitis or even bronchopneumonia. In other cases, nervous symptoms predominate–torpor, somnolence; pain, which may be severe, in the joints, limbs, head, neck, etc. Fever, pain and sweating are symptons common in the majority of cases.

Usually without apparent definite provocation the child is found to be feverish and ill. A temperature is noted and in a few hours or several days later a PARALYSIS and FLACCIDITY of one or more limbs are detected. The fever may be attended by vomiting and diarrhea or a sore throat. The virus attacks what is called the ganglion-cells and nerve cells in the anterior horn of the spinal cord and depending on what part of the spinal cord is involved we find the resulting paralysis. The lower extremities are affected about three times as frequently as the upper, and the left leg twice as often as the right. Certain muscles are affected more than others and hence along with the paralysis and flaccidity we find contractures and the foot, hand, leg or arm drawn out of shape. The muscles atrophy and the limb becomes deformed and the child becomes a cripple for life. In the early stages of the fever (first few hours or days) before paralysis has appeared, diagnosis usually fails except under rare epidemic conditions.

If there are any questions you would like to ask and I can answer them will do so through the local paper. I trust the above will prove of interest to everyone.

DR. H. R. FARNHAM,
Health Officer.

A Few Smiles.

The Exception.

"Ability to make friends easily is a great help to a man who is running for office."

"That depends on the office he's after."

"Yes?"

"The presidential nomination seems to fight shy of a man who's a good mixer."

Painful Discovery.

"I've just been studying one of those tests to prove whether or not a person is feeble-minded."

"You look disturbed."

"Why shouldn't I be, when according to that chart I've been a moron all my life and didn't know it?"

Roughing It.

"Those young women are evidently taking their military training seriously."

"No doubt of that."

"Yes?"

"Why, there isn't a hair-dressing parlor in thirty miles of their camp."

His Opinion.

"Do you think the average girl will accept a man as soon as he proposes?"

"As soon as he proposes? Great Scott, man, she'll accept him as soon as he begins to propose."

Brilliant Success.

"Was the charity ball a success?"

"I should say so. The debutantes had about ten thousand dollars worth of fun and two hundred dollars was raised for the poor."

Appropriate.

"What is the name of your dog?"

" 'Macbeth.' "

"That's a curious name for a dog."

"He howls a great deal at night. I got the idea from that quotation 'Macbeth does murder sleep.' "

A Real Friend.

"Dodge volunteered to lend me some money."

"Did you take it?"

"No. That sort of friendship is too good to lose."

A Flight Every Day.

"Do you think Patrice will marry that young aviator?"

"Can't say. However, she seems much taken up with him."

George Walters, wife and children and John Koch and wife motored to Cold Springs and spent Sunday afternoon.

Summer Time
----IS---- Picnic Time

and you will want Paper Napkins, Cups and Plates to take along for the days outing.

Junket Tablets and Extracts.

You will also need some Creams, Lotions and Powders for the SUNBURN.

Your horses and cattle need some special attention this hot weather—Dr. Hess Fly Chaser is the relief.

GOLDEN MURRAY,
Spencerville

FINE, FIRM, AND FERTILE

Should Be the Condition of the Wheat Seedbed to Insure Maximum Yields.

A fine, firm, fertile, early prepared seedbed insures the largest crop of best quality wheat. When wheat follows oats, barley or other early harvested crop, plow the land from 4 to 6 inches deep as soon as the preceding crop is removed and work down each half day's plowing before leaving the field. Harrow or disk the field after every rain or as often as crust forms, until seeding time to kill weeds and to retain the soil moisture.

Ideal seedbeed preparation consists in disking, plowing, again disking and harrowing. Up-to-date farmers are following this system especially when there is considerable organic matter to be plowed under. Always cut up coarse material before turning it in the furrow, otherwise it interrupts the movement of moisture upward, making an air space which allows drying out. By plowing early and maintaining a soil mulch, moisture is retained which favors quick germination. From one to several weeks will be gained in the sprouting and growth by a thorough soil preparation. The Kansas experiment station found a gain of as much as 21 bushels of wheat when grown on land plowed seven inches deep July 15 and then kept well worked until seeding time, over land that was plowed the same depth September 15. Perhaps there would not be such a great difference in favor of early plowing in the more humid climate of the eastern states, yet even there is pays to prepare the seed bed thoroughly and early.

A WHEAT SEED PLOT

The live stock man uses his strongest and best animals for breeding purposes and sends the weak, inferior and off-type individuals to the block First-class, prize-winners of approved type are secured only by breeding to the very best animals the farmer can secure. This same principle applies to seed wheat. You cannot harvest No. 1 or 2 wheat by sowing No. 6 or No. 7 seed. Use only plump, heavy sound berries of one variety and discard all off-type seed just as you do with the poor, weak, delicate and off type live stock. A pure variety of wheat can be secured and kept most easily by maintaining a seed wheat plot, since it offers an ideal way of testing and keeping the seed pure The seed plot should be just large enough to furnish seed for the main crop. It is best on account of diseases to have the plot removed some distance from the main field, and treat the wheat on the seed plot for smut, have it free from disease, and thus save treating the seed for the main crop. Rye, cockle, and other weeds are more easily kept out of the seed plot than out of the main field. Just a little extra care in handling the seed plot will give you pure wheat that yields more bushels per acre, grades high on the market, and sells at a premium when marketed for seed.

WHEAT A HARD DRINKER

Every pound of wheat requires an average of 450 to 500 pounds of water to carry it from planting to maturity. Early plowing and frequent working of the seedbed helps to retain soil moisture. A light harrowing or disking early in the spring cultivates the wheat and forms a soil mulch that prevents the escape of winter rains so needed by the wheat when filling and ripening. Experiment stations have found that wheat, well supplied with available plant food or growing on rich soils, can produce a bigger crop with less moisture than it can on a poor soil or on one not well supplied with available plant food. Wheat on rich soils continues to grow even if the supply of moisture is scanty. Supplying available plantfood to wheat enables it to produce larger yields on the same amount of water. This is especially important when the rainfall is below normal.

Organic matter holds water like a sponge and releases it to the wheat for germination. In the spring it holds the winter's rains until the wheat needs them for final growth and ripening. A supply of sufficient moisture at filling time often makes a crop. The farmer cannot make it rain at this critical stage, but he can keep up the organic matter that will hold the season's rain until needed.

PRESIDENTIAL POINTERS

The Republican national convention of 1912 was held in Chicago, June 18 to 22, Elihu Root being both temporary and permanent chairman. The total vote was 1,078—540 being necessary to a choice. Wm. H. Taft received 561 votes on the first ballot. The actual vote cast was 728, as 344 delegates withheld their vote and six were absent. On this ballot 107 votes were cast for Theodore Roosevelt, 41 for Robert M. LaFollette, 17 for Albert B. Cummings, and 2 for Charles E. Hughes. James S. Sherman was nominated for vice president on the first ballot.

Summer Fares

East

The Wabash is the direct line to Detroit, Buffalo and the East. Low Summerfares in effect:—

Round Trip
$15 70 to Toronto
$13.75 to Buffalo, Niagara Falls
$31.70 to New York
$30.50 to Boston

West

The Wabash and its connection now have new and far faster train service to Colorado, California and the West.

Round Trip

Colorado - -	$36.60
California -	$78.75
Yellowstone -	$51.60
Salt Lake City	$51.60
Portland, Seattle	$79.10

WABASH

Find out about these and other summer fares. See the undersigned Wabash Agent or write to W. H. Shorey, Division Passenger Agent, Fort Wayne, Ind. J. D MILLIMAN, Agent, St. Joe, Ind. 9-30

Local Briefs

Read the Free Column

Order Saturday Evening Post,5c.

See Wallace for Building Material at St. Joe Saw Mill.

C. B. Leighty left Wednesday morning for Xenia, Ohio, where he has work.

Mrs. John Gill and grandson, Homer Woodcox, were Ft. Wayne visitors, Sunday.

Frank Terman and wife called on Mrs Harriett Sechler, of Orangeville, Sunday afternoon.

Transfer paper at NEWS office 2 sheets for 5c. Get some now for that pattern you wish to transfer

Mrs. Frank Tustison had as Thursday guests:-Mrs. John Baker and Miss Laura Keeran, of Auburn.

Mrs. Frank Bowman and daughter Eloise, were guests of Mrs. B. O. Shook at Spencerville, Wednesday.

Frank Benninghoff and wife, and Roy Kinsey and family motored to Robison Park and spent Sunday afternoon.

Ice cream social on Saturday evening at St. Joe on the Frank Shaffer lawn on west main street given by the FBC of the MPSS.

Mrs. John Provines, of Covington, Ind., was the guest of Frank Bowman and wife, the latter part of last week.

Florence Buchanan and wife are spending two weeks with their daughter, Mrs. John Sturgis and family at Mansfield, Ohio.

For the benefit of our customers through the busy harvest,we will keep open exchange.

St. Joe Mills.

Mrs. Thomas Elliott and three children, of Grand Rapids, Mich., spent the past week with Fred Reeder and family. They left Tuesday for Auburn.

Sylvester Widney was at Auburn from Thursday until Saturday Miss Princess Foote, of Harlan, accompanied him remaining for a visit with friends.

A Sad Mistake.

A neglected cough has undoubtedly caused more deaths than any other agency. A lingering cough should be promptly treated. If allowed to continue until cold weather the tissues of the lungs will be weakened and the power to resist epidemics of cold and grip is lessened. By getting three ounces of GLANDO PINE you can make one pint of excellent cough syrup. Keep it on hands and use it freely. Stop that cough before it has too firm a grip upon you. Don't be careless and make a mistake that may cost you your life. If you can not get GLANDO PINE of your druggist send 50 cents to the The Gland-Aid Co., Ft. Wayne, Ind., and it will be sent you.

R U Superstitious

Do You Believe In Signs
?

If you do you are a judicious advertiser and a good business man. Judicious advertising Always Pays and especially when you advertise in a paper that is read by everybody in its territory.

This newspaper reaches the eye of everybody who might be a possible buyer in this section.

SAGE TEA BEAUTIFIES AND DARKENS HAIR

Don't Stay Gray! It Darkens So Naturally that Nobody can Tell.

You can turn gray, faded hair beautifully dark and lustrous almost over night if you'll get a 50-cent bottle of "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound" at any drug store. Millions of bottles of this old famous Sage Tea Recipe, improved by the addition of other ingredients, are sold annually, says a well-known druggist here, because it darkens the hair so naturally and evenly that no one can tell it has been applied.

Those whose hair is turning gray or becoming faded have a surprise awaiting them, because after one or two applications the gray hair vanishes and your locks become luxuriantly dark and beautiful.

This is the age of youth. Gray-haired, unattractive folks aren't wanted around, so get busy with Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound to-night and you'll be delighted with your dark, handsome hair and your youthful appearance within a few days.

This preparation is a toilet requisite and is not intended for the cure, mitigation or prevention of disease.

HAVE ROSY CHEEKS AND FEEL FRESH AS A DAISY—TRY THIS!

Says glass of hot water with phosphate before breakfast washes out poisons.

To see the tinge of healthy bloom in your face, to see your skin get clearer and clearer, to wake up without a headache, backache, coated tongue or a nasty breath, in fact to feel your best, day in and day out, just try inside-bathing every morning for one week.

Before breakfast each day, drink a glass of real hot water with a teaspoonful of limestone phosphate in it as a harmless means of washing from the stomach, liver, kidneys and bowels the previous day's indigestible waste, sour bile and toxins; thus cleansing, sweetening and purifying the entire alimentary canal before putting more food into the stomach. The action of hot water and limestone phosphate on an empty stomach is wonderfully invigorating. It cleans out all the sour fermentations, gases and acidity and gives one a splendid appetite for breakfast.

A quarter pound of limestone phosphate will cost very little at the drug store but is sufficient to demonstrate that just as soap and hot water cleanses, sweetens and freshens the skin, so hot water and limestone phosphate act on the blood and internal organs. Those who are subject to constipation, bilious attacks, acid stomach, rheumatic twinges, also those whose skin is sallow and complexion pallid, are assured that one week of inside-bathing will have them both looking and feeling better in every way.

HOW "TIZ" HELPS SORE, TIRED FEET

Good-bye sore feet, burning feet, swollen feet, sweaty feet, smelling feet, tired feet.

Good-bye corns, callouses, bunions and raw spots. No more shoe tightness, no more limping with pain or drawing up your face in agony. "TIZ" is magical, acts right off. "TIZ" draws out all the poisonous exudations which puff up the feet. Use "TIZ" and forget your foot misery. Ah! how comfortable your feet feel. Get a 25 cent box of "TIZ" now at any druggist or department store. Don't suffer. Have good feet, glad feet, feet that never swell, never hurt, never get tired. A year's foot comfort guaranteed or money refunded.

The Misses Avis Sechler, Deveta Bayman, Ethel and Lela Wallace accompanied Agnes Sechler as far as Auburn, Sunday, on her way back to her school work at Angola.

JULY

L 908

0220

BETTER SERVICE TO YOU.

* *

We don't want you to think of the Farmers and Merchants State Bank just as a place to deposit your money, although of course we are glad to have you keep as large a balance with us as is possible.

It is our desire to render our patrons every service and accommodation that can reasonably be expected to us.

Our Bookkeeping Machine, makes it possible for us to give you better service in the handling of your account than ever before.

By the machine method, your account is kept in balance all the time. If, as sometimes happens, you want a statement of your balance in a hurry, we can give it to you, including to-days checks and deposits, in less than five minutes.

Farmers & Merchants State Bank

Capital Stock $25,000.00

Spencerville, - - - Indiana

BANK STATEMENT.

F. E. Rhodes, President; L. B. Fisher, Vice-president; C. G. Rectenwall, Cashier. Report of the condition of the Farmers & Merchants State Bank, a State, private bank at Spencerville, in the State of Indiana, at the close of its business on June 30th. '16,

RESOURCES
Loans and Discounts	$68,199 42
Overdrafts	45 01
Banking House	3,598 86
Furniture and fixtures	1,611 33
Due from Banks and Trust companies	8,633 71
Cash on Hand	2,461 46
Current Expenses	778 08
Taxes Paid	196 23
Interest Paid	378 57
Total Resources	85,902 67

LIABILITIES
Capital Stock, paid in	$25,000 00
Surplus	300 00
Un ivided Profits	86 17
Exchange, discounts and interest	1,966 73
Demand deposits	21,026 23
Demand certificates	37,523 54
Total Liabilities	85,902 67

State of Indiana,
County of DeKalb, ss:

I, C. G. Rectenwall, cashier, of the Farmer & Merchant State Bank, do solemnly swear that the above statement is true.

C. G. Rectenwall, Cash.

Subscribed and sworn to before me, this 8th. day of July 1916.

[L. S.] L. O. Wade J. P.

Dog Hero of the Trenches.

"We had a French soldier brought in frightfully wounded," says Dr. Mary Crawford, a Cornell graduate, who served in a French hospital, in the Cornell Women's Review. "One leg had to be amputated, and, besides that, he had a half-dozen other wounds. His dog came with him, a hunting dog of some kind. This dog had saved his master's life. They were in the trenches together when a shell burst in such a way as to collapse the whole trench. Every man in it was killed or buried in the collapse, and this dog dug until he got his master's face free so that he could breathe, and then he sat by him until some re-enforcements came and dug them all out. Everyone was dead but this man. Isn't that a beautiful little story? We have both dog and man with us. The dog has a little house all to himself in the court, and he has blankets and food and lots of petting. and every day he is allowed to be with his master for a little while."

An Original Club.

There exists in one of our great western cities a unique secret club—called by the members Get-Out and Get-On club. It was organized 17 years ago by 10 ambitious men who looked upon themselves as not yet having won success. Membership for 12 years has been limited to 50. The rules are what makes this club different. No member may call himself a success until the club votes him one, and when the club votes any member a success he is expelled and his place is filled by another. But before a success is expelled a dinner is given in his honor and to welcome the new member. At this dinner the success must read a paper explaining to his fellows how and why he won. These papers are preserved.—American Magazine.

SPENCERVILLE

Grandma Zahner is very sick at this writing.

Phone Jack Beams if you have any Chickens for sale.

Dr. Carey and family of Wayne were Sunday guests of J. Beams's.

Buy your next writing tablet and package of envelopes at this office.

Mr. Ren Nelson and wife were Sunday evening guests of Samuel Steward and wife.

J. C. Vallieu and family spent a part of Sunday with Orla Woodring and family at Newville.

Mrs. Mary Letter and Miss Violette Chapman of Garrett spent Friday in the Sam Cole home.

Mrs. Eben Chapman and daughter Gladys of Garrett were Saturday guests of Sam Cole and wife.

Finish up the week by attending the Ice Cream Social at St. Joe Saturday evening, on Frank Shaffer's Lawn.

Mr. and Mrs. John Mason of Auburn and Mr. and Mrs. Frank Butler, were Sunday guests at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Gust Haffner.

Floyd Branson and wife, Neta Branson, Myrtle Uhlick and Arden Branson of Mansfield, Ohio, visited Rev. A. K. Mumma and family on last Friday.

The river bridge is so far completed as to allow buggies and automobiles to cross. New abutments were put in and a general repairing was given it.

Rev. T. A. Estell and wife, Mr. Hofer, wife and baby Arthur, and Mrs. Knepper, of Butler, spent Sunday afternoon with Rev. Mumma and family.

Mrs. Gust Haffner and Irene Webb were Friday and Saturday guests at the home of the former's sister, Mrs. Otis Goeltzenleuchtner and husband, of Auburn.

Take a little drive Saturday evening and go to St. Joe and attend the Ice Cream Social given by the F. B. C. of the M. P. S. S. Your presence will be appreciated.

Mr. and Mrs. Frank Webb of Harlan, Mrs. Alice Beech of Edon and Mr. and Mrs. C C. Webb were Sunday guests of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Webb.

On Thursday afternoon the Missionary society of the Lutheran church were entertained at the home of Mrs. Frank Horn. A good number were present in spite of the busy time of the year.

Joel Betz and wife, Mrs. Clauda Haffner and Irene Webb, Mrs. Della Scott, Mary Pervines, Mrs. Arminta Rhodes, Nellie Scott, Aillen Allen, and Mrs. Milton Chaney were entertained on Thursday afternoon and evening at the home of Mrs. R. U. Bowser.

Slide in the $1.00. Do it now.

Sell your Chickens to Jack Beams.

Born on Tuesday morning to Wm. Daum and wife, a daughter.

-Subscriptions taken for new or renewals of any magazine published, at The News office.

Clyde Fredrick and children visited Theron Fultz and wife of the County Line on Sunday.

Alvin Valentine, who has been attending school at Winona, came home Friday to visit his parents.

R. U. Bowser motored to Huntertown and got his father, Theo. Bowser, Mrs. Molly Hyndman, and Homer Bowser and wife, and they then visited Ivan Bowser and family, of Waterloo, Sunday

At the home of Mrs. Samuel Steward the Ladies Guild of the M. E. Church met Wednesday afternoon. Lunch was served by the hostess assisted by Mrs. Nancy Kennedy and Mrs. Isabelle Webb. An excellent program was rendered.

On Monday evening the members of the C C Club met at the home of their retiring president, Mrs. Fanny Vallieu, and elected the following officers for the ensuing 6 months:-Mrs. Arminta Rhodes, President; Mrs. Ethel Bowser, Vice-president; Miss Clara Keesler, Secretary-Treasurer.

The Betz family reunion was held on Sunday, July 9th., at the home of Samuel Betz, of Springfield Center. Those who were present were:-Joel Betzs and wife, and Geo. Horn and family, of this place; Olen Helf, wife and daughter Dorothy, of Edgerton; John Betz and wife, Mrs. Martha Shearer, and Edith Berry, of St. Joe; Earl McNabb and wife, of Auburn; Glen Betz, wife and son Forest, of New Haven; Walter Perkins, wife and son Lloyd, of Harlan; Fred Reicheldfer, wife and son Dale, and Faye Reichelderfer and wife, of Payne, O.; Glenn Steward, of Garrett; Mrs. Libbie Knapp, of Harlan; Frank Betz, of Ft. Wayne; Edward Billman and wife, of Wise's Corners, and Robert Betz and family, of Springfield Center.

A Friend in Need.

When Glando Gargle is used for a cold in the head it is surprising to see how quickly the clogged nostrils are opened. Adenoids are caused by a neglected cold. If the mucus which forms is allowed to remain in the nostrils, a diseased condition will result, which causes chronic catarrh and adenoids. Glando Gargle was prepared to meet these special needs. Equally effective for sore mouth or sore throat. Price 50 cents. For sale by All Druggists.

Notice

Persons who have bought the Schram Glen Fruit Jars, can get lids for same at Kinsey's.

SALTS IS FINE FOR KIDNEYS, QUIT MEAT

Flush the Kidneys at once when Back hurts or Bladder bothers—Meat forms uric acid.

No man or woman who eats meat regularly can make a mistake by flushing the kidneys occasionally, says a well-known authority. Meat forms uric acid which clogs the kidney pores so they sluggishly filter or strain only part of the waste and poisons from the blood, then you get sick. Nearly all rheumatism, headaches, liver trouble, nervousness, constipation, dizziness, sleeplessness, bladder disorders come from sluggish kidneys.

The moment you feel a dull ache in the kidneys or your back hurts, or if the urine is cloudy, offensive, full of sediment, irregular of passage or attended by a sensation of scalding, get about four ounces of Jad Salts from any reliable pharmacy and take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys will then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia and has been used for generations to flush clogged kidneys and stimulate them to activity, also to neutralize the acids in urine so it no longer causes irritation, thus ending bladder disorders.

Jad Salts is inexpensive and cannot injure; makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink which all regular meat eaters should take now and then to keep the kidneys clean and the blood pure, thereby avoiding serious kidney complications.

On Friday afternoon the C. C. club was entertained at the home of Mrs. Geo. Gloyd. A dainty lunch was served to 18 ladies. The new officers were installed at this meeting.

On Sunday, July 9th, the Baltz family reunion was held at Robinson park. There were 53 relatives and 12 visitors present as follows: Jacob Baltz and wife, Wm. Sommers and wife, George Henderson and family of this place, J. R. Culbertson, wife and Joseph Prosser of Orangeville, Wm. Ytz and sisters Effie and Addie of Tiffin, Mrs. S. Rogers and Mrs. Leslie Hathaway and daughters of Garrett, Raleigh Moffetr and wife, Frank Baltz and wife and Mrs. Granville Erick of Auburn, Mr. Barrett and wife of Wayne, Clifford Webb and family of Montpelier, Mrs. Addie Campbell and family of Toledo, Carrie Pinkerton and family of Ohio, Miss Frankie and Grant Baltz of St. Joe, John Shiffler and family, Thomas Dunkle and family of Grabill. The visitors were Glen Henderson and family and Lee Chapman of this place, Mrs. Barrett of Wayne and James Draggoo of Garrett and a few others.

Use for Old Magazines.

Magazines are often thrown away because of the rapidity with which they accumulate. Since most readers care to save only certain articles, a good plan is to tear the magazines apart, removing the desired articles and binding them in a separate volume. If this is carefully and systematically done, and an index prepared, the volume will be of value and interest.

IS YOUR SOIL SICK?

No one would think of working a sick horse, yet there are farmers in almost every community who are continuing to work their sick soils, and with the usual result of poor crops.

Do you know that the trouble with the average soil is that it is sour? By this is meant that it is acid. In other words it has a trouble akin to colic or sour stomach in man or green apple colic so common among the younger generation in the early summer.

None of our crops will grow to any success on sour soil. It works bad, breaks up cloddy and the clods cannot be mashed with anything less than a maul.

Fertilizing will help some, and lime is the corrective agent, but for the best results both should be used. With wheat, when limestone and fertilizer are used on the same land the yield is larger than when either one of these is used alone.

To test your soil for acidity, get a nickel's worth of blue litmus paper from the drug store. Get a ball of the soil while it is moist and break it in halves. Place a strip of the paper on the one half then cover it with the other, pressing them down tightly and leave it this way for about five minutes. Then break the ball and look at the paper. If it has turned red your soil is sour, and it is high time that the use of lime be made a practice.

Slipped Back Ten Years!

When asked the secret of her youthful and healthful appearance, a well known woman of Paulding county, Ohio, said: "For several years I was in poor health, I felt tired and achy, was nervous and irritable, my digestion was poor, I had dizzy spells, was troubled considerable with constipation, and had an ugly, splotchy complexion. A friend persuaded me to use GLANDO Tonic. One box helped me so I tried another, and some weeks later I took the third box. Now my liver and kidneys are working nicely and I feel like a new person. My complexion has cleared wonderfully. I can heartily recommend GLANDO to others, as I am sure it can do as much for them as it has for me." By writing to The Gland-Aid Co., Ft. Wayne, Ind., names and addresses of persons who have been helped by GLANDO will be given. GLANDO is sold by druggists. A 50c. package contains a week's treatment.

WASHINGTON PLAYERS ALL SWEAR BY WALTER JOHNSON

Star Hurler's Disposition Is as Valuable an Asset to Him as His Wonderful Pitching Arm.

With few exceptions star ball players bring about a condition on a team which proves detrimental to its success. Walter Johnson, however, is a player who differs from most stars in this respect. Were it left to a vote of the players he would be unanimously chosen as the most popular man on the team, and it's all because of the ideal disposition of the young man who holds the distinction of being the greatest pitcher in the game today.

Johnson's success has never affected his head. He is wearing the same sized hat today that he wore the evening he reported from Weiser, Ind. He does not consider himself above obeying orders and never objects to anything he is told to do. But, best of all, Walter is loyal to his team and his teammates. He roots hard for the other pitchers, and has never been known to complain when errors have lost him a ball game.

C HARRIS & EWING

Walter Johnson.

Johnson's disposition is as valuble to him as that wonderful pitching arm, and there is never a time when every man on the team with him is not trying to do everything possible to help him win.

Taking Nitric Acid From Air.

All the explosives used in this world-war are formed from such apparently harmless bodies as cotton, glycerin, and tar products, by treating them with nitric acid, the strength of which has to be maintained by admixture with sulphuric acid. Until quite lately the nitric acid essential for the production of the explosives now in use could be made only by distilling such nitrates as those of potassium and sodium with sulphuric acid, and if we had still been dependent on this source, all the powers engaged in the present war would have been stalemated by want of explosives, so enormous has been the amount of acid used. During the last few years, however, methods have been discovered for making nitric acid from the air, and at the present time, wherever cheap water power can be obtained for the generating of electricity, the acid is being produced in sufficient quantities to make up the necessary amount.

PRESIDENTIAL POINTERS

At the seventh presidential election, in 1812, 18 states took part and the total electoral vote was 217. President Madison, Republican, was renominated, with Elbridge Gerry for vice president. The Federalist ticket was DeWitt Clinton and Jared Ingersoll. Madison and Gerry received 128 electoral votes and were inaugurated March 4, 1813. It was the first presidential election at which there were only two candidates.

$100 Reward, $100

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials.

Address: F. J. CHENEY & CO., Toledo, O.
Sold by all Druggists, 75c.
Take Hall's Family Pills for constipation.

H. C. Hathaway

TRUSTEE
Concord Township

Office Day Thursday's of Each week in Town Hall, St. Joe.

Frank W. Silberg
Veterinarian

OFFICE and HOSPITAL
—ON—
Main Street
SPENCERVILLE. - IND.

Phones—Office No. 7
(31) Residence No. 101

P. A. Walker
Trustee
Spencer Township

Office Day—
Tuesday of each week at the residence ½ mile east of the Dills River Bridge.
Phone—St. Joe, 21-6
Spencerville, - Indiana

F. P. HART
"The Expert"
House Mover
—AND—
Building Raiser

Concrete Work of all kinds finished in the best shape with the least expense.

Call or write

DENTIST
C. R. PRICE,
ST. JOE, IND.
Office: first door south of Patterson's Dept. Store.
Bell Phone No. 44.

Oldest in America
Strongest in the World
Mutual life
INSURANCE COMPANY
of New York
J. C. HULL, Agent
Phone No. 48

Lehman's
CLOTHING HOUSE
ESTABLISHED 1887
MENS AND BOYS OUTFITTERS
808-810 CALHOUN STREET
BEN LEHMAN PROP.
Fort Wayne, Ind.

JULY

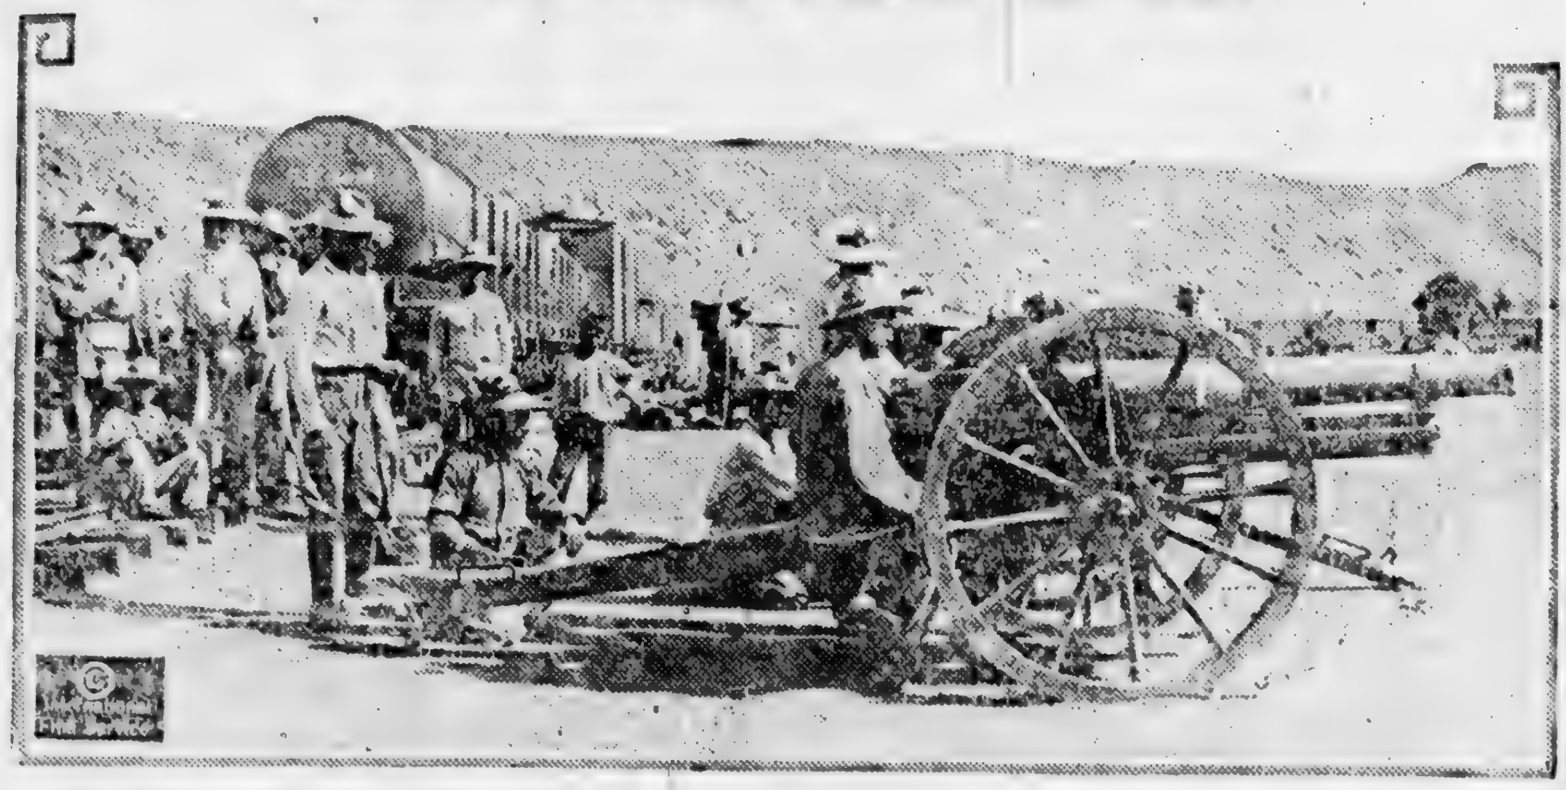
L 908

0221

AMERICAN TROOPS BREAKING CAMP IN MEXICO

A view of one of the American camps in Mexico showing the soldiers packing up equipment, taking down tents, and loading transports. All would appear bustle and confusion, but within a comparatively short time the site is cleared, wagons ready, and the troopers lined up for the command to march.

MEXICAN 75 MM. GUN READY FOR ACTION



The Mexican army has a number of these 75 mm guns, which are of the same type as the famous French field cannon.

LIEUT. COL. J. Q. TILSON

Lieut. Col. John Q. Tilson, congressman from Connecticut, decided to leave his seat in the house and go to the Mexican border with his regiment of the Connecticut National Guard.

A Substitute.

"Can you give me something to eat?" asked the tramp at the back door.

"No, I cannot," replied the lady with the working apron; "but if you come in I'll let you lie down on an electric wire. You know a theory has been advanced by a French scientist that electric currents can be made to take the place of food in sustaining life to a considerable degree."

Precisely.

The Lawyer—Where did this affair happen?

The Witness—I don't remember.

"Was it this year?"

"I don't remember."

"Was it last year?"

"I don't remember."

"How do you happen to forget everything?"

"I don't remember."

Then the Ice Formed.

Her—No doubt you think I am older than I really am.

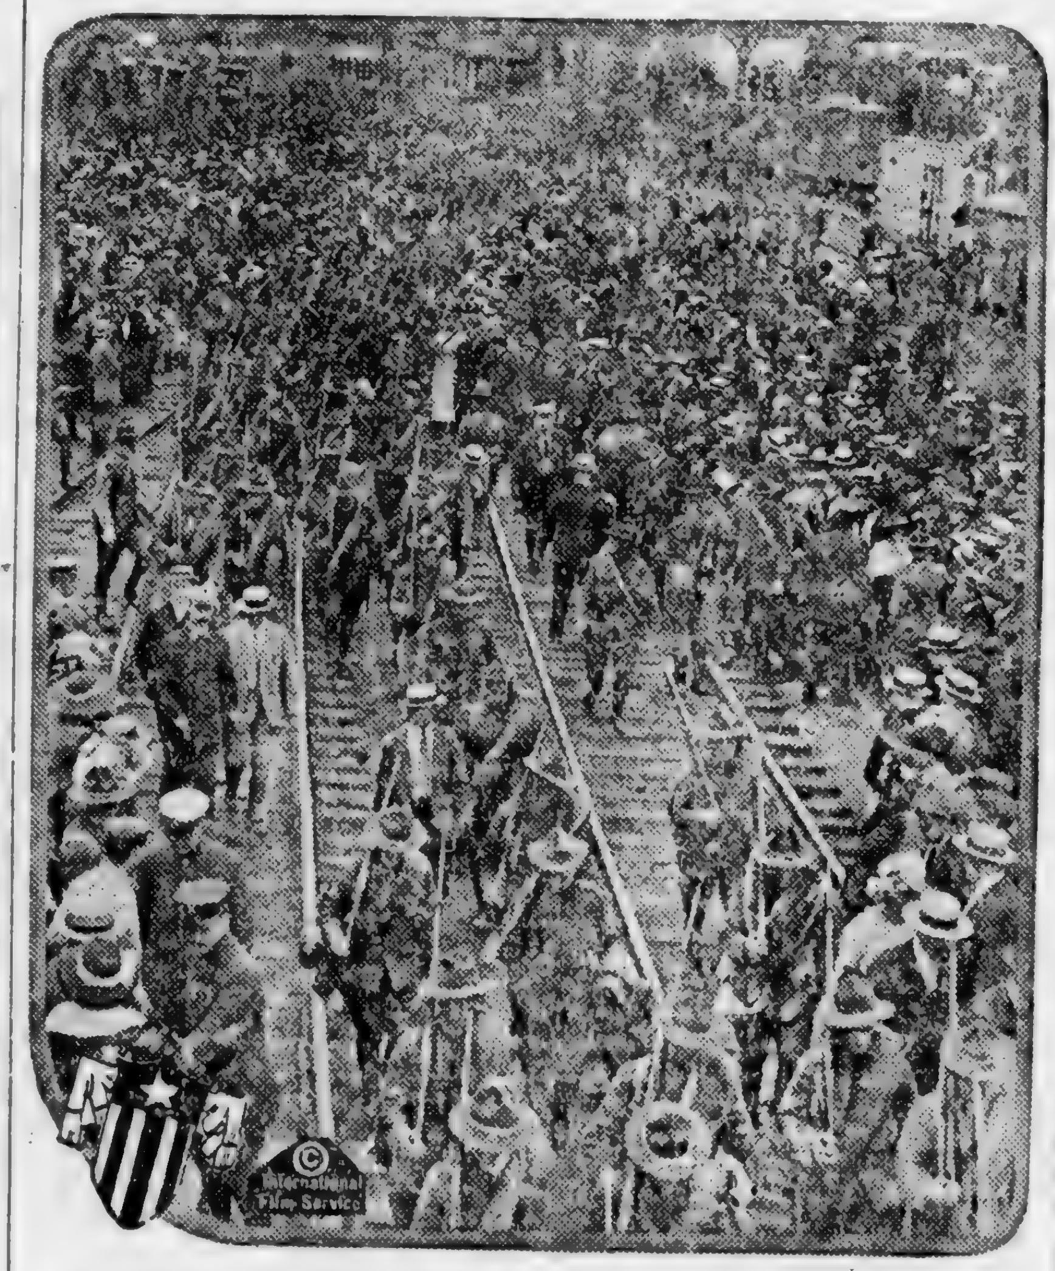
Him—Not at all. I'm sure you are not as old as you look.—Indianapolis Star.

The Only Law.

"Professor, I want to take up international law. What course of study would you recommend?"

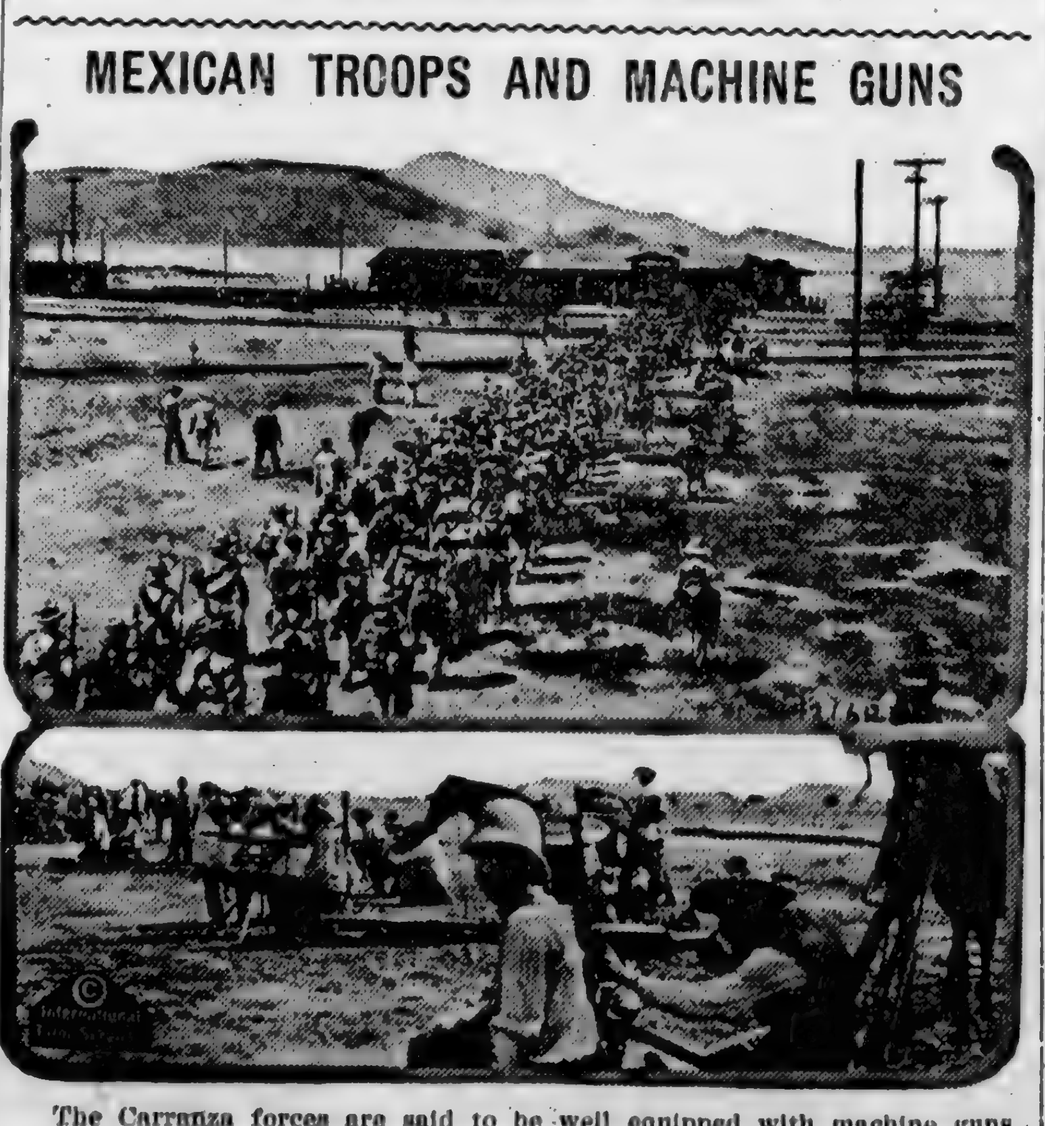
"Constant target practice."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

"FIGHTING SIXTY-NINTH" GETTING AWAY



A scene at the railroad siding showing the crowd of spectators, among whom were the wives, mothers and sweethearts of the "Fighting Sixty-ninth," the first infantry outfit of the National Guard of New York to leave for the mobilization camp at Camp Whitman, Beekman, N. Y.

MEXICAN TROOPS AND MACHINE GUNS



The Carranza forces are said to be well equipped with machine guns, some of which are shown in the lower picture. Above is a typical Mexican army scene, showing troops arriving at a railway station to entrain.

WORLD'S EVENTS IN SHORT FORM

BEST OF THE NEWS BOILED DOWN TO LIMIT.

ARRANGED FOR BUSY PEOPLE

Notes Covering Most Important Happenings of the World Compiled in Briefest and Most Succinct Form for Quick Consumption.

Mexican War News

The note of Secretary Lansing accepting the proposals of General Carranza to resort to diplomacy was received with jubilation at Mexico City.

* * *

Word was received at Webster City, Ia., that Prof. D. A. Kent, formerly a professor at the state agriculture college at Ames and later owner of the Lake Cairo farm, south of the city, had been killed in Texas by Mexican border raiders, with two of his ranch hands.

* * *

Word reached Brownsville, Tex., from reliable sources that General Ricault, commanding Matamoros, had issued positive orders that under no circumstances were American troops to be fired upon unless they actually landed on Mexican soil.

* * *

The Ward line steamer Monterey arrived at Havana from Vera Cruz with 251 passengers, mostly American refugees. The ship passed through a cyclone.

* * *

The immediate danger of the Mexican crisis was eliminated by the delivery of Carranza's friendly and conciliatory note to Secretary of State Lansing at Washington, which promises co-operation against border raids and paves the way for the settlement of the entire controversy by diplomatic means. Carranza, in effect, withdraws all threats against the American expeditionary force in Mexico.

* * *

Gen. Ignacio Ramos, a Carranza commander, was killed in a fierce and bloody battle that raged all day at Corral ranch, near Jiminez, Mex., between de facto troops and Villistas. Both sides suffered heavy losses.

* * *

Domestic

Arrival of the Third Pennsylvania infantry completed the concentration at El Paso, Tex., of the First Pennsylvania infantry brigade.

* * *

To dispute numerous statements to the contrary the Canadian government officially announced that American travelers in Canada would not need passports to travel in the country, or would not suffer any inconvenience or annoyance of any kind. There is no difference between traveling in Canada now and before the beginning of the European war.

* * *

The net result of summary activity by the Boston police after they learned that an automobile had been driven up to the house of Police Sergeant Duffee of Salem with the body of Duffee's sister-in-law in the tonneau, was ten persons arrested and held as having some connection with a case of illegal operation.

* * *

Joseph Ramsey, former president of the Wabash railroad, died at East Orange, N. J., following a stroke of apoplexy. He was fifty-six years of age and at the time of his death was president of the Lorraine, Ashland & Southern railroad.

* * *

Twenty-six children have died from the epidemic of infantile paralysis in the five boroughs of New York within the last twenty-four hours.

* * *

While F. Studebaker Fish, Jr., member of the millionaire Studebaker family of South Bend, Ind., was on his way to San Francisco to claim his fiancee, Miss Kathleen Coleman, she eloped with Hugh Porter, son of the late William Porter, vice president of the Associated Oil company. They were married in California.

* * *

The treasury of the city of Nashville, Tenn., was looted of $71,187.79 by former city officials from 1909 to 1914, according to the final report to the city commission by James Cameron, an expert accountant.

* * *

Edward B. McLean began suit in the District of Columbia Supreme court at Washington to break the will of his father, the late John R. McLean, publisher. McLean is the sole heir, but the property, estimated at $20,000,000, was held in trust for him.

* * *

Property valued at approximately $2,800,000 is disposed of in the will of the late John V. Steger, piano manufacturer, which was filed at Steger, Ill., for probate. The bulk of the estate goes to the two sons, Chris G. Steger and George F. Steger.

* * *

Joseph Irwin, thirty-one, son of W. G. Irwin of Peoria, Ill., and nephew of E. M. Woodruff, mayor of Peoria, Ill., and his bride of two weeks, a nurse, attempted to commit suicide at the Hotel Macatawa, at Holland, Mich., by cutting the arteries in their wrists.

European War News

Food riots have broken out in Liege and many persons have been hurt, according to information received at Amsterdam.

* * *

The British troops in their new advance have gained several important successes, among which are the capture of the Leipzig redoubt, according to the official statement issued by the London war office. East of La Boisselle the British have captured German trenches on a front of nearly 2,000 yards, to a depth of 500 yards.

* * *

Official announcement was made at Berlin that the British steamship Lestris was held up by German warships near the English coast and seized as a prize.

* * *

Germany, in its official report at Berlin, admits a retreat on the eastern front, and Petrograd adds the details, which show great advances by the Russians after fighting on a long front, in which the czar's troops captured the Manevitchi station, on the railway line between Sarny and Kovel, and the villages of Komarow and Grady. The official statement given out in Petrograd tells of tremendous captures of men and munitions by Russians in Galicia and Volhynia and general gains at other points.

* * *

Northwest of Kolomea the Russians are within ten miles of Nadworna, well to the rear of the Austrian right flank, facing Tarnopol. On the extreme right flank of General Brussiloff's front the Russians are viciously attacking the Germans at Czartorysk and Kolki, according to a dispatch from Petrograd.

* * *

A defeat for the Austrians, in which they were driven back nearly five miles on the Delatyn-Kolomea road, is officially admitted in the statement issued by the Austrian war office at Vienna.

* * *

Dispatches to London from Scotchy say the former German cruiser Breslau, now renamed the Midullu, in the Turkish naval service, torpedoed a transport loaded with supplies and sank a sailing vessel.

* * *

The French have carried by assault the second German lines on a front of two kilometers from the Clery-Maricourt road to the River Somme. They have also captured the village Hom, according to the official statement issued by the French war office at Paris. The French have captured all the German second positions south of the Somme on a front of seven miles.

* * *

Washington

Naval officials at Washington were certain that American marines under Col. Joseph H. Pendleton had entered Santiago, Santo Domingo without opposition and are now patrolling the city.

* * *

President Wilson's note formally accepting Carranza's proposal that differences between the United States and the de facto government of Mexico be settled by direct negotiations was handed to Eliseo Arredondo, the Mexican ambassador designate at Washington.

* * *

Rear Admiral W. B. Caperton was designated by Secretary Daniels at Washington as commanding officer of the Pacific fleet, with rank of admiral, to succeed Admiral Cameron McRae Winslow, who will retire.

* * *

All of the resources of the federal public health service at Washington will be utilized in an effort immediately to stamp out the epidemic of infantile paralysis now central in New York city.

* * *

Orders for retirement July 29 of Admiral Cameron McRae Winslow, commander of the Pacific fleet, who will then reach the age limit, were issued by the navy department at Washington.

* * *

President Wilson dedicated "To Common Counsel and a Common Understanding" a labor temple erected at Washington as the new home of the American Federation of Labor. He said at the dedicatory exercises that the greatest barrier to industrial peace had been the difficulty of insuring candid and dispassionate conference, and that "getting our fighting blood up" was "the long way and not the short way" of securing rights.

* * *

Foreign

David Lloyd-George, minister of munitions of Great Britain, was appointed secretary of state for war, succeeding the late Lord Kitchener, who was drowned when a British cruiser bearing him to Russia was sunk. Sir Edward Grey, the foreign secretary, has been raised to the peerage.

* * *

The American steamship Jacob Luckenbach was sunk in collision with an unidentified ship off Dover. Its crew of 31 men was rescued.

* * *

A violent earthquake at Caltanissetta, Sicily, causing the death of nearly 300 persons is reported in an Exchange Telegraph dispatch from Rome. It is said the victims were in three sulphur mines.

* * *

Personal

Mrs. Hetty Green, believed to be the world's richest woman, is dead at New York. She was eighty-one years old. With a fortune estimated at about $100,000,000, about $90,000,000 of it was created by her own efforts.

HEAT FLASHES, DIZZY, NERVOUS

Mrs. Wynn Tells How Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Helped Her During Change of Life.

